My Honolulu correspondent writes: "A wedding which has attracted much interest and was largely attended took place at St. Andrew's Cathedral on the evening of December 8th. The bride was Miss Ethelinda Schaefer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Schaefer, and the groom was Mr. Alfred Lowery Castle, son of Mr. and Mrs. William R. Castle. The Castles are one of the best known missionary families in the islands. Alfred L. Castle is a recent graduate of Harvard and now a practicing attorney with his father, being a junior member of the law firm of Castle and Withington. He is a crack baseball player, having been on the Harvard Varsity team for more than one season. The Schaefers are another old family though not of missionary origin. Mr. F. A. Schaefer has been in business in Honolulu for more than fifty years, and F. A. Schaefer & Company are agents for a number of the best known sugar plantations. Miss Schaefer herself is decidedly literary, and though very young has written a number of plays which are exceedingly creditable, and which have been produced locally with much success. * * * The engagement of Miss Smith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. O. Smith, to Mr. B. D. Baldwin of Maui, has just been announced. The Baldwins and the Smiths are both missionary families. W. O. Smith was attorney-general under the Republic of Hawaii, and the Baldwins are the sugar kings of Maui."

In the Spotlight

Invitations to the tea to be given by Mrs. Horace G. Hellmann for Sunday last were recalled on account of the serious illness of Mr. Charles Page, who is at the German Hospital suffering from appendicitis.

When last heard from the Misses Laura and Alexandra Hamilton were in Florence, where they purposed making a prolonged visit.

The marriage of Miss Ida Price and Rev. Percival J. Turner is announced to take place during the first week in January. Miss Price is the youngest daughter of Thomas Price, the well-known assayer.

Mrs. Prentis C. Hale was hostess at a dinner party on December 12th, it being Mr. Hale's birthday anniversary. The dinner guests numbered fourteen but later in the evening a large party of young people assembled.

Mr. Frederick Hellmann, the well-known mining engineer, accompanied by Mrs. Hellmann, made a flying visit to San Francisco during the week, when they were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Horace Hellmann of Gough street. Their stay was of the briefest as Mr. Hellmann's business engagements commanded his immediate return. He was the consulting engineer and manager of the famous Rand mines of South Africa for many years and only recently resigned to form a partnership with Thomas Leggett of New York. The two little ten-year-old Redfield girls, nieces of Mrs. Fred Hellmann and Katherine Hellmann, daughter of the George H. Hellmanns, accompanied their relatives to the east, where they will pass the next six months.

The Fairmont has established itself as the home of the afternoon tea in San Francisco. Every day there are a dozen or more of these informal affairs held in the Laurel Court, so that it is becoming quite the proper thing for society people to drop in to see which of their friends are out for the afternoon. There are always a number of more formal affairs likewise. During the past week Miss Angellotti entertained in honor of Miss Emily Du Bois, one of the charming buds of the season. Amongst her guests were nearly all of the winter debutantes also. Mr. Edward Barron gave a luncheon, as also did Mrs. George Cameron. There were Mrs. Harry Umbsen's dinner for twelve, Mrs. J. C. Campbell's dinner in honor of Mrs. Arthur Brown of Honolulu and an informal tea for ten given by Mrs. J. B. Coryell. The first of a series of luncheons to be given by Mrs. William Tevis took place on Tuesday last in the Gray room, which was especially decorated for the occasion. The

ROBERTSON'S
A BOOK STORE
1539 VAN NESS AVE. NEXT TO THE "WHITE HOUSE"
CARD PLATES ∴ MONOGRAMS
WEDDING INVITATIONS
A. M. ROBERTSON

Something Dainty.
Something Different.
Something Electric.
Things seen in the smart shops of Paris, London and New York at half their prices.
VISIT
Mrs. Helen Freese's
ART ROOMS
And inspect the unusual things selected by her for HOLIDAY PRESENTS
That thought, experience and care have made it possible to find.
947-949 VAN NESS AVE.
Open evenings until December 24th inclusive.
Second door from O'Farrell St,

HOTEL ST. FRANCIS
THE CENTER OF THE NEW YEAR'S CELEBRATION
¶ After watching the parade with its great Chinese dragon, floats and unique features, and the illumination of the Park and hotel, guests will be entertained by special music and entertainment features, and the New Year will be ushered in with a quaint Old World ceremony.
Tables may be reserved now.
UNION SQUARE

large oval table was set forth with American beauty roses, azaleas, lilies of the valley and hyacinths. Mrs. Julius Kruttschnit was the guest of honor. Mrs. James Flood also entertained at a luncheon for about twenty of her young friends in the reception parlors on Tuesday. The shades were drawn and the tables lighted by candles, the decorations and menu were both particularly attractive.

Miss Elsa von Manderscheid gave an enjoyable musicale at the Unitarian Church in Berkeley on Saturday evening. Miss von Manderschied has but just returned from a three years' course of study abroad under Madame Carreno. Previous to her departure for Europe she was a pupil of Mr. Robert Tolmie of Berkeley, who predicted a brilliant career for her. She has recently made a concert tour extending to Sacramento, Grass Valley, and other cities of the northern valley under the direction of her old teacher. Miss von Manderschied's marriage to Samuel Ely Eliot, a nephew of President Eliot of Harvard, is announced to take place on the 28th inst., after which she will reside in Eugene, Oregon, where Mr. Eliot is connected with the State university.

The trustees of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce gave a luncheon in honor of Mr. James Blair of New York at the Fairmont Hotel. Mr. Blair is the head of an old-established banking house of that city which first floated the bonds for the Western Pacific Railroad. He is enthusiastic over California in general and San Francisco in particular, and expressed his surprise at the complete and rapid rehabilitation of the city.

Mr. and Mrs. James McNulty have returned from their honeymoon trip to New York. They were entertained charmingly at several smart functions given in their honor, and the pretty California bride and her lovely frocks were much admired even in that center of fashion and beauty. Mr. and Mrs. McNulty will live with Mrs. McNulty's parents, Mrs. and Mrs. Oscar Owens, whose only and idolized child she is, in their home on Vallejo street near Steiner, a few doors above the Judge Graham home. The groom is a brother of Mrs. Graham.

Registered at the Tavern of Tamalpais recently were A. R. M. Blackhall, P. Russell, George A. Tracy, A. H. McQuillkin, L. Michelson, W. H. Ellis, Joshua Walker, C. C. W. Hann and wife, Mrs. O. A. Stack and son, and William McCann; of San Francisco; Emma Kaiser, Mrs. Charles Miller and W. H. Dean, Berkeley; and Fred Schilingman, Master Eldridge Durbron and W. W. Davis of Mill Valley.

Mr. and Mrs. Wolf will soon occupy their beautiful new home in Washington street. Mr. and Mrs. William Penn Humphreys, nee Wolf, will reside with them this winter.

The Misses Marian and Elizabeth Newhall were guests of Mrs. Henry T. Scott for the week end.

Mrs. William Ford Nichols and Miss Claire Nichols were hostesses at a delightful tea at their home on Webster street on the afternoon of Tuesday, December 1st.

Mrs. L. D. Woodford was in town recently to attend the Hartman concerts. This clever young violinist has returned to California to live permanently. She has located in Los Gatos for the health of her two charming children and has taken up teaching there and in San Jose.

The new bachelor quarters on the twelfth floor of the north wing just completed for the St. Francis are proving immensely popular and many of the most eligible young men in the city are already installed. Joseph Eastland was one of the first, and has fitted up a most luxurious suite.

Mr. and Mrs. Melville Schweitzer of San Francisco, who have just returned from Japan, have been at the Del Monte for some days. Mrs. Schweitzer, nee Lolita Heynemann, was one of the charming brides of last spring.

Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Bailey of Chicago spent the past week playing golf on Del Monte's fine links. The days have been warm and bright, without wind, making ideal weather for outdoor sports.

Mr. J. W. Byrne and his mother, Mrs. Irvine, have taken apartments at the Del Monte for the winter.

The George H. Armsbys have taken permanent quarters at the Hotel St. Francis.

Mr. Horace G. Smith, prominent in business circles in Los Angeles, returned to Del Monte last week with Mrs. Smith, whom he brought as a bride a year ago. They celebrated the anniversary of their honeymoon by taking motor trips to the big trees at Santa Cruz and elsewhere about the Monterey peninsula, and on Sunday they went to the Rancho Del Monte for a short stay. Joseph Greenbaum recently painted a portrait of Mrs. Smith, who is an unusually beautiful young woman.

Invitations have been issued for a luncheon to be given by Miss Perry of Ross to twenty-four of her friends. It will take place on Monday in the Red room of the Fairmont.

The fraternity ball given by the Sigma Phi Upsilon on Friday was a pleasant and beautiful affair. The White and Gold ball room of the Fairmont was filled with the members and their friends. Refreshments were served in the Red room.

The H. D. Pillsburys have come up to the St. Francis to remain for some of the social functions planned for the week.

Captain Smith of the Presido of Monterey was host on Saturday evening at a dinner given to a few intimate friends in Del Monte's pretty winter dining room.

R. H. PEASE, Pres. J. A. SHEPARD, Vice-Pres. C. F. RUNYON, Sec'y R. H. PEASE, Jr., Treas.

New Store and Location of the

GOODYEAR RUBBER COMPANY

587-589-591 MARKET ST. 17-19-21-23-25 SECOND ST.

We have the wall paper in stock that made this room. We made this mantel; we furnished the rugs, floorings, electric fixtures.
Can we make you one?

TAYLOR & SINCLAIR CO.

INTERIOR DECORATORS BUSH AT VAN NESS

JULES' RESTAURANT 328 BUSH STREET
Below Kearny
Phone Kearny 1812

NOTICE

On New Year's Eve we will keep open until 2 o'clock a. m.
Make your reservations now.

Music

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of ALBERT JOHN SCHERZER, Deceased

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Albert Scherzer and Ada C. Brown, Administrator and Administratrix respectively, with the will annexed of the estate of Albert John Scherzer, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said Administrator and Administratrix with the will annexed at the office of Neal Power, room 250, No. 250 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California, that being the place of business of said Administrator and Administratrix with the will annexed as their place of business in all matters connected with said estate of Albert John Scherzer, deceased.

ALBERT SCHERZER,
ADA C. BROWN,

Administrator and Administratrix, respectively, with the will annexed, of the estate of Albert John Scherzer, deceased.

Dated San Francisco, December 1st, 1908.

NEAL POWER, Attorney for Administrator, 250 Montgomery St., S. F.
SULLIVAN & SULLIVAN and THEO. J. ROCCA,
Attorneys for Administratrix, Humboldt Bank Bldg, S. F. 12-19-5

Stage

Fiske Rebuked

The Theatre Trust has had its revenge on Mr. Harrison Gray Fiske, who has been posing for years as a manager of superior integrity and a lover of the highest ideals. Mr. Fiske was expelled last week from the Association of Theatrical Producing Managers on complaint of Henry W. Savage who made the following charges: That Mr. Fiske has secured and is foisting upon the American public an unauthorized version of "The Devil"; that Mr. Fiske produced a play of which he had full knowledge that I had the prior and sole rights; that, in connection with this production, Mr. Fiske has made false statements and deceived me when I approached him as one member of this association to another; that Mr. Fiske has made statements unwarranted by the facts in order to prejudice the public and injure my business reputation and the value of my authorized porduction and also the value of "The Merry Widow"; that Mr. Fiske has by his acts not only occasioned another member of the association considerable financial loss and entailed upon him considerable and unnecessary expense, but has encouraged piracy and the unauthorized production of plays in America. The directors found that by reason of there being no copyright treaty with Hungary at the time the play was contracted for or produced legal rights were not involved and therefore charges 1 and 2 could not be sustained. The directors found further that because the legal rights were not involved statements made in regard thereto or expenditures connected therewith could not be sustained and consequently charges 4 and 5 were dismissed. The third charge, that Mr. Fiske had made false statements and had deceived Mr. Savage when Mr. Savage approached Mr. Fiske as one member of the association to another, was sustained and Mr. Fiske was found guilty of conduct not becoming a member of the association toward another member. Thereupon Mr. Fiske was expelled from the association.

Gillette in a New Play

"Samson," Henri Bernstein's new play, in which William Gillette appeared recently in New York, is said to possess features that appealed strongly to the actor-dramatist. The character portrayed by Mr. Gillette is that of Maurice Brachard, the Copper King of Paris, a man of the self-made class who has risen from an obscure family to a position of great wealth and power among his fellowmen. He is a multi-millionaire and a director in numerous large enterprises. His strength through his money and through his methods earns him the title of Samson, and by sheer force of energy he pushed himself into society and marries Anne Marie, daughter of the Marquis D'Andeline. While he devotes himself to amassing wealth the fair young wife takes up an intrigue with a man about town named Jerome Le Govain. She does not necessarily love Govain, but submits to his love and attentions in order that she may learn something of the ways of the world. Govain is a protege of Brachard, who raised him from a position of poverty, and by advice and with money put him in the way of making a fortune. Brachard, through a friend, learns that Govain is parading his wife around Paris. He makes this discovery one evening as he is about to depart for London. The Copper King changes his plans, returns to his home, and there learns to his utter confusion that the stories about Govain and his wife are true. He then devises a plan of revenge. He invites Govain to meet him next morning in apartments he has secured in the Hotel Ritz. He holds his attention with small gossip until messengers begin to arrive from the Bourse announcing the decline in copper stocks, and finally the fact that copper has tumbled and the market is in a panic. Finally Brachard shrieks at him, "You are ruined!" and after telling Govain why he has wrought this vengeance upon him, seizes his protege by the throat and chokes him into insensibility. This climax occurs in the third act and in the fourth and last the author, it is said, works out a solution of the drama as satisfactory as it is astonishing. Mr. Gillette's leading lady is Miss Constance Collier, the English actress.

At the Van Ness

The Christmas attraction at the Van Ness will be embranced in the second and last week of Henry B. Harris's production of "The Lion and The Mouse." The company that Mr. Harris has brought to San Francisco is in every sense adequate for this production. The individuals success in their efforts to hold the respective characters to the height of their original standard. A special holiday matinee will be given next Friday, Christmas Day, and seats may be had for the full week.

Nordica's Farewell Concert

The last concert of that veritable queen of song, Mme. Lillian Nordica, will be given Sunday afternoon at the Van Ness Theatre when the artist will again render a program such as is rarely given; eleven beautiful songs, a great dramatic aria, and to cap the climax, Schubert's masterpiece, "Die Almacht." The aria that the artist has chosen for this occasion is one but little known to concert goers. It is the great scene in "The Death of Jean of Arc" by Bemberg. The German songs will be "Zueignung" by Strauss, "Stille Sicher keit" by Franz, Schumann's beautiful "Der Nussbaum" and "Mein Freund ist Mein" by Peter Cornelius. French composers will be represented by Paul Vidal and Paladhile, and the Italian school by Gomez who was a Spaniard but wrote several successful operas in Italian, one of which, "Il Guarany," was once given in this city. The English group includes "Now Sleeps the Crimson Petal" by Quilter, "There Was an Ancient King" by George Henschel, and "Hail! Bounteous May!" by Branscombe. Frederick Hastings, the baritone, will have some splendid numbers as will also the talented young pianiste, Miss Showers. Seats are on sale at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s until Saturday afternoon at five, and on Sunday the box office will be open at the theatre after 10 a. m.

CONWAY TEARLE as BEN HUR and CHAS. M. HARRIS as MESSALA

In a scene from "Ben Hur" to be seen at the Van Ness Theatre on December 28th.

"Brown of Harvard"

For its Christmas-week offering the Alcazar management has selected "Brown of Harvard," greatest of college plays. When presented in one of the local high-priced theatres about a year ago it filled the house at every performance during its two week's stay. "Brown of Harvard" was written by Rida Johnson Young, who is best known to Alcazar patrons by her authorship of "The Boys of Company B," one of the biggest comedy hits scored last season. She writes in the vein that appeals especially to women, for she views life from a woman's standpoint. Just as she made the soldiers in "The Boys of Company B" such delightful character, so she presents the collegians in "Brown of Harvard." She faithfully portrays the atmosphere of pure, wholesome school life with its rare joys, transient sorrows, innocent love affairs, all the never-forgotten pictures of life's palmy period. Tom Brown, the central figure of the play, is a rich young student with a generous heart. He assists his sweetheart's brother, Wilfred Kenyon, to pay a gambling debt and offers to defray the living expenses of Gerald Thorne, a Tennessee mountaineer who is working his way through college and supporting his sister Marian who has been deceived by Kenyon. The latter is in the toils of a gambling student named Colton, consents to the latter's demand that he send Marian away from Cambridge on the day of a great boat race and acquaint her brother with the fact. Colton has been betting heavily on the opposing crew. Kenyon gives Marian a check, forged with Brown's signature, and arranges for her departure. The third act shows the Harvard boathouse the day of the race. Just as the crew is starting for the boat Thorne is handed a letter from Marian, telling him of her shame. The young man refuses to take part in the race, and Brown is substituted at the last moment. The race is rowed to victory, but just as Brown is being saluted as the hero, Thorne returns and attempts to throttle him. He has discovered Marian trying to cash the check with Brown's name on it. The fourth act takes place in Brown's room the next morning. A party of students is trying to persuade Tom to tell the whole truth about the check, but he still refuses. Threats from Thorne only arouse him to anger, and he offers "to lick the whole crowd." His friends and Thorne leave. Kenyon remains behind. Brown destroys the check and tells the younger man what he thinks of him. Mrs. Kenyon arrives at this juncture to try to persuade Brown to marry the girl, and then discovers that it is her own son who is to blame. Brown is forgiven, and Evelyn's arrival closes the play with the young student in an ecstacy of joy. In the cast are twenty-six speaking characters and many silent supernumeraries. Bertram Lytell will have the role of Brown, and as Evelyn Kenyon an agreeable impression is sure to be made by Evelyn Vaughan.

"The Lost Paradise"

So great has been the success of "The Lost Paradise" at the Valencia Theatre that the management has wisely decided to continue for another week this splendid adaptation from the German of Ludwig Fulda's striking story of the conflict between capital and labor. "The Lost Paradise" has had many presentations in San Francisco but it is the unanimous verdict of veteran theatre-goers that never before has this sterling play been given with such an adequate cast and with such perfect attention to detail. The second act, showing the office of Reuben Warner, superintendent of the Knowlton Iron Works, with massive machinery in operation, is one of the most startling pieces of realism ever shown on a local stage and is in sharp contrast with the magnificent drawing room of the millionaire mill owner, shown in the first and last acts. Robert Warwick has surprised his most ardent admirers with his virile characterization of the heroic superintendent who is in love with his employer's daughter, but takes sides with the underpaid, half starved toilers in the works, and in some of his scenes does the best work of his career. Miss Blanche Stoddard, as the petted daughter of the mill owner who at first reproaches Warner with being "Only a working-

IDEAL FARMS

"CERTIFIED MILK"

The most perfect product of the modern dairy

Certified to by the Medical Commission of the San Francisco County Medical Society

DISTRIBUTED BY

GUADALOUPE DAIRY CO. Phone Market 2590

STANDARD MILK CO. Phone Market 226

Luscious Old Red Wine

LA QUESTA

AGED IN THE WOOD AND MELLOWED IN THE BOTTLE

Pronounced by experts the best wine made in California

FOR SALE BY

L. D. McLEAN CO. McCAW BROS.

L. N. WALTER, Cor. Devisadero and California

JULIUS BERENDSEN, 762 Devisadero Street

Served at The St. Francis, The Fairmont, Hotel Rafael, Peninsula Hotel, Jules, Chantilly, Berges & Frank's Old Poodle Dog, Thompson's, New Frank's, Union League Club and Cosmos Club.

ASK FOR BLACK AND WHITE SCOTCH WHISKEY

IT IS THE BEST NONE BOTTLED IN AMERICA

man" and afterwards appreciates the tremendous sacrifice made by the young inventor and confesses her love for him, plays a difficult role in a way that wins the entire sympathy of the audience. Helen Lackaye does a clever bit of work as Polly Fletcher, "the country girl in city soil," and Gerald Harcourt, as Bob Appleton, who successfully woos and wins her, does a clever bit of light comedy work. Beatrice Nichols, the new ingenue, has made a hit as "Cinders," and Charles Dow Clarke completely loses his identity as Billy Hopkins, her somewhat soiled affinity. In addition to the usual Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday matinees there will be a special performance Christmas afternoon, and for Christmas week Herr Herman Heller and his splendid orchestra of soloists have prepared an unusually brilliant program, including a catchy march written especially for the occasion by the leader. Herr Heller will also play, as a violin solo, the beautiful "Reverie" of Vieuxtemps.

"Ben Hur" Coming

Klaw and Erlanger's spectacular production of General Lew Wallace's romance, "Ben Hur," will usher in the New Year at the Van Ness Theatre. Beginning Monday evening, December 28th, the season is limited to a fortnight. Matinees are scheduled for Wednesday and Saturday of each week in addition to an extra matinee on New Year's Day. Seats for the first week of the engagement go on sale next Thursday. More than three years have elapsed since this powerful biblical play was last seen in San Francisco. Up to the present writing fifty-nine performance of "Ben Hur" have been given in this city, attracting close to one hundred and fifty thousand persons. This is the record of all America for "Ben Hur" and is one that will live for many years to come as there is no attraction on the theatrical horizon that can in any way be compared to it.

Orpheum Road Show the Best Ever

The Orpheum Road Show, which always pays its annual visit during the Christmas season, will open this Sunday matinee. Mr. Martin Beck, the General Manager of the Orpheum Circuit, has spent many months in its organization and is satisfied that he has completely eclipsed all his previous efforts and provided an entertainment of novelty variety and charm, which will be a delight to the play-going public. Mlle. De Dio, the famous French danseuse, will be seen for the first time in this city and will present her greatest triumph in the European capitals, "Terpsichore's Dream," a magnificent electrical and scenic production in four pictures, "The Golden Butterfly," "The Birth of the Pearl," "She, in the Fire of Life," and "The Carnival Dance." Mlle. De Dio is considered the most beautiful woman on the European stage and is said to have received more eligible offers of marriage than any other of her sex. Only last April, the cablegrams in the local press, announced that this capricious and independent daughter of the French Republic had most positively declined to marry Archduke Heinrich Ferdinand of Austra. Edwin Holt, an actor of great talent and popularity, will with the assistance of his own company, present a delightful one act play called "The Mayor and the Manicure," by George Ade. Hyman Meyer, the "Man at the Piano," will introduce one of the most original and taking acts in vaudeville, presenting what may appropriately be called a musical monologue, in which he sings Eddie Foy's popular song, "He Goes to Church on Sunday" and renders selections from grand opera. Mr. Meyer is one of the most brilliant pianists in vaudeville. Charles and Fannie Van, who are always welcome, will appear in a skit called "A Case of Emergency," in which Miss Van quarrels with her stage partner and separates from him. She then summons the stage carpenter of the theatre,—played by Mr. Van,—and in this way most laughable comedy is produced. Frank Work and Reinhold Ower will be responsible for the acrobatic feature of this big organization. Merian's Canine Players, the most remarkable performing dogs in the world, will present a new Dutch Chinese Drama, entitled "The Elopement of Salome." The other acts on the program will be those famous sensational European Aerialists, the Four Franklins, and Gaston & Green, in their Nell Brinkley creation, and a new series of Motion Pictures.

Stockwell Coming

L. R. Stockwell, prominent before the American playgoers as a comedian for nearly thirty-five years, and a big favorite on the Pacific Coast, will be seen at the American Theatre for an engagement of one week with a special matinee Christmas and Saturday, opening with a matinee Sunday, December 20th, in his one act comedy drama, "The Blind Organist." This will serve as an appetizer for the three act comedy, "Mrs. Temple's Telegram," a farcial play written by Frank Whyatt and William Morris. Its complications are brought about through the efforts of Jack Temple to convince his wife that the night previous to the beginning of the play he had been imprisoned in a lofty car on the Ferris Wheel and compelled to remain there until morning. When she refuses to believe him, he determines that so long as she expects him to lie, lie he will, and he tells her that in point of fact he spent the night at the home of a friend after they had missed the last car. When she asks the name and address of the friend he manufactured both. The man's name is John Brown and he lives in Pickleton-on-the-Thames. The wife thereupon wires John Brown and asks him to call; husband discovers telegram, confides secret to best friend, who happens in and agrees to impersonate Brown. This arrangement progresses satisfactorily until the real Brown appears on the scene and a little later it transpires that the lady who had been locked in the Ferris Wheel car with Temple was none other than the wife of the friend. The usual third act explanations clear up the tangle. No farce in recent years has been acclaimed so emphatic a success as this merry message of mirth.

LILLIAN ANDREWS

The versatile character woman at the Valencia Theatre.

Green in fifteen different shades. Tom Dillon, Milliner for Men, 712 Market street, opposite Call Building.

Princess Theatre

Kolb and Dill continue to draw crowded house at this theatre with their very amusing farce, "Weiner and Schnitzel." In consequence of its tremendous success it will be continued all next week which will positively be the last. It will be succeeded by another musical farce called "The Politicians" in which Kolb and Dill will have splendid opportunities. Several new people have been brought from the east to appear in this production.

In the Limelight

Apropos of the early appearance here of Victor Herbert's latest success, "The Red Mill," it is interesting to note that the well known composer and conductor has many hits to his credit. Among the more notable are "Mlle. Modiste" in which Fritzi Scheff appeared here; "The Fortune Teller," "The Idol's Eye," "The Singing Girl," "The Serenade," "Babes in Toyland" and "It Happened in Nordland."

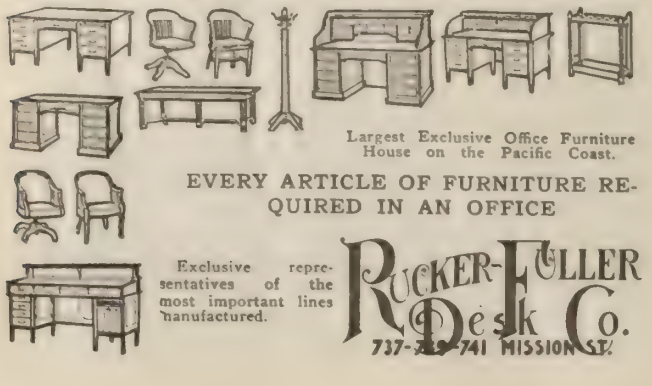
Manager Will Greenbaum announces that owing to a difference in regard to repertoire and also as to choice of theatre he will not be connected in any way with the Lambardi Italian Opera this season.

The forthcoming production of "The College Widow," which will be done for the first time in San Francisco by a stock company at the Valencia Theatre at the conclusion of the run of "The Lost Paradise," has aroused some curiosity, for it is felt that it will be interesting to see heroic Robert Warwick in the role of Billy Bolton, the famous half back, Miss Blanche Stoddard as Jane Witherspoon, the "widow," dignified, and Thomas MacLarnie as Jack Larabee, the football coach.

Complete announcements of Mr. Greenbaum's offerings for the early New Year will appear in next week's issue.

So pronounced a success did "Paid in Full' make here that the announcement of the presentation of "The Wolf" by the same author, has awakened great interest among patrons of the Van Ness Theatre where the play will be seen in January. Like "Paid in Full" its stay will be a limited one.

The Valencia Theatre management wants its regular patrons to bake 1,000 loaves of bread next Wednesday to be given to the Salvation Army for the Christmas dinner this organization gives each year to San Francisco's poor. The ladies are invited to bring the bread to the matinee.



Lillian Russell has decided to include San Francisco in her present season's tour of her newest success, "Wildfire." This racing comedy is said to have proven the best vehicle in which the fair Lillian has yet starred.

One of the most successful musical attractions of the season is "A Stubborn Cinderella" and it is pleasing to note that San Francisco is to see it at the height of its success and with the original company in the cast.

The immense stage of the Van Ness Theatre is more than adequate to offer Klaw and Erlanger's massive production of "Ben Hur" on the same scale of completeness as when it was formerly seen here. Over a hundred people will participate in the production.

Great preparations are under way at the Valencia Theatre for the first production on any stage of Upton Sinclair's dramatic conception, "Prince Hagan," which will occupy the boards at the conclusion of the run of "The College Widow." The story is one that is startling in the extreme and Charles Frohman has signified his intention of sending out a personal representative to witness the initial performance.

Richard Carle will make his first stellar appearance here at the Van Ness Theatre early next year, presenting his newest hit, "Mary's Lamb." Carle is now one of the few big comic opera stars before the public.

Largest Exclusive Office Furniture House on the Pacific Coast.

EVERY ARTICLE OF FURNITURE REQUIRED IN AN OFFICE

Exclusive representatives of the most important lines manufactured.

RUCKER-FULLER Desk Co.
737-741 MISSION ST.

VAN NESS THEATRE
Cor. Van Ness and Grove
Gottlob, Marx & Co., Mgrs.
Phone Market 500

Tonight, Sunday Night and All Next Week, Last Times of Charles Klein's Great American Play

THE LION AND THE MOUSE

The Universal Dramatic Triumph.
Matinees Saturdays and Christmas.
December 28—"Ben Hur," a Mighty Play.

NEW ALCAZAR THEATRE
Cor. Sutter and Steiner
Class "A" Building
Phone West 6036

BELASCO & MAYER, Owners and Managers.
Monday Night, December 21st, and All Week, the Best of College Plays

BROWN OF HARVARD

By Rida Johnson Young.
Extra Matinee Christmas Day.
Prices: Evenings, 25c to $1.00. Matinees, Saturday and Sunday, 25c to 50c.

PRINCESS THEATRE
PHONE WEST 663
S. LOVERICH, MANAGER
Ellis Street, near Fillmore
Absolutely Class "A" Building
Matinee, Saturday and Sunday

This and Next Week Only, KOLB AND DILL
In the Musical Farce

WEINER AND SCHNITZEL

Next—KOLB and DILL in "The Politicians."
Prices—Evenings 25c, 50c, 75c, $1.00. Matinees (Except Sundays and Holidays, 25c, 50c, 75c.

ORPHEUM
Ellis Street, near Fillmore
Absolutely Class "A" Bldg
Phone West 6000

Week Beginning this Sunday Afternoon. Matinee Every Day.
THE GREAT ORPHEUM ROAD SHOW.

MLLE. DE DIO, The Beautiful French Danseuse; EDWIN HOLT & CO., in George Ade's Sketch, "The Mayor and the Manicure"; HYMAN MEYER, "The Man at the Piano"; CHARLES & FANNIE VAN; MERIAN'S CANINE ACTORS, WORK & OVER; FOUR FRANKLINS; NEW ORPHEUM MOTION PICTURES; GASTON & GREEN, in their Nell Brinkley creation.

Evening Prices: 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c. Box Seats, $1.00. Matinee Prices (Except Sundays and Holidays): 10c, 25c, 50c.

VALENCIA THEATRE
Valencia Street, between Thirteenth and Fourteenth
Phone Market 17

This and Tomorrow Afternoons and Evenings and All Week,
Special Matinee Christmas, the Success of the Season

THE LOST PARADISE

The Greatest Labor Drama Ever Written.
Present by the Valencia Stock Company, Including Robert Warwick and Blanche Stoddard.
Regular Matinees, Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday, Prices 25c to 50c.
Evenings, 25c to 75c. Box Seats, $1.00.
Monday, December 28—"The College Widow."

AMERICAN THEATRE
Market St., nr. Seventh
Phone Market 381

Week Commencing Sunday Matinee, December 20th,
Other Matinees Christmas Day and Saturday.
Grand Double Bill. L. R. STOCKWELL, in His One Act Comedy, THE BLIND ORGANIST
Followed by

MRS. TEMPLE'S TELEGRAM

A Laugh in Three Acts.
Prices, Evenings, 25c, 50c, 75c, $1.00. No Higher. Matinees, 25c, 50c, 75c.

TRY MURINE EYE REMEDY
For Red, Weak, Weary, Watery Eyes.
Murine Doesn't Smart—It Soothes Eye Pain.
Try Murine For Your Eyes.

BUY MOHAWK-TRIANGLE BUY MOHAWK-TRIANGLE

MOHAWK TRIANGLE MINING CO. OF ARIZONA

MINES IN GOLDFIELD NEVADA

OFFICERS & DIRECTORS
J. E. EWING PRES.
H. C. DAVIS
P. De B. ROSS! VICE PRES.
Hon. JAMES T. BOYD.
GEORGE M. WILLCOX SEC & TREAS

A Practically Proven Mine of Great Value--- Enormous Profits and Early Dividends Assured

The Mohawk-Triangle Mining Company owns over sixty acres of wonderfully rich ore bodies in the famous Goldfield Mining District of Nevada, where never before in the mining history of the world has there been such an amazing tale of suddenly acquired riches as that which has been told during the past few years.

Its properties consist of a small fraction of a claim situated in the very heart of that fabulously rich mining camp and completely surrounded by rich properties. Within a Stone's Throw of our line are the shafts out of which the famous Hayes-Monnette lease, the Ish-Sheets lease, the Francis-Mohawk lease and the January-Jones lease have taken millions and made their stockholders independently wealthy, while adjoining us and in close proximity to us on the south, east and north are such well known properties as the Red Top, Jumbo, Mohawk, Combination, Florence and other famous mines. Our Engineers, Messrs. Thomas Price & Son, the well known Mining Engineers and Metallurgists of San Francisco and Goldfield, and others who have examined this Fraction for us say. "The same great vein undoubtedly underlies this portion of your property." We have sunk a shaft there, have cut through the drift, and struck solid formation at a depth of about forty feet.

In addition to this fraction, the company owns the Camp Bird Group of claims, consisting of sixty acres situated in the famous Golden Horseshoe Belt, on which are located all the proven mines of the Goldfield District. The properties immediately surrounding these claims are rich in high-grade ore and we have every reason to believe that these sixty acres will develop into a mine ranking in the Bonanza class. We are down one hundred and seventy feet in a shaft on one claim of this group. The shaft is being sunk midway between two well-defined dykes of rich, gold-bearing rock, both of which carry as far as composition, formation and appearance goes, the same kind of ore as that taken from the famous Mohawk mine, which has assayed as high as sixty thousand dollars to the ton. We already have assays running from ten dollars to three hundred dollars to the ton in our shaft but expect to reach the real high grades as soon as we have cut stations at the two hundred and three hundred foot levels and cross-cut to the ledges not more than twenty to thirty feet away.

The Managers and Directors of the Company are all well known men of standing in San Francisco and vicinity; they are developing the properties in a thorough business-like manner with the sole object of making the investment of their stockholders a highly profitable one through the actual, intrinsic, dividend paying value of their mines, rather than through any temporary, fictitious fluctuation in the price of its stock.

For the purpose of continuing the work more vigorously, of sinking the shafts lower, cutting stations, cross-cutting, and for the further purpose of installing a better equipment to enable us to work more rapidly and more economically, we are desirous of raising a little more money, not much for we do not need much more to put us on a paying or dividend paying basis, and for that reason are offering a small block of only 25,000 shares of treasury stock or any part of it at 25 cents a share.

We are offering you the biggest bargain on the American stock market today and urge you to join us, but you must act at once, buy it now. Take it all or as much as you can.

IT MEANS A FORTUNE FOR YOU.

THE MOHAWK-TRIANGLE MINING CO.

SAN FRANCISCO OFFICE - - - - - ROOM 623, CHRONICLE BUILDING

The Conscript

(Continued from Page 13)

her bedroom, where, after making sure that they were alone, she took from her bosom a soiled and wrinkled letter. "Read," she cried, making a violent effort to pronounce the word.

She fell into her chair as if utterly overwhelmed. While the old gentleman was feeling for his spectacles and wiping them, she fastened her eyes upon him and scrutinized him for the first time with curiosity; then she said softly, in an altered voice:

"I trust you."

"Am I not sharing your crime?" replied the old man, simply.

She started; for the first time her heart found itself in sympathy with another heart in that little town. The old merchant suddenly understood both the distress and the joy of the countess. Her son had taken part in the Granville expedition; he wrote to his mother from prison, imparting to her one sad but sweet hope. Having no doubt of his success in escaping, he mentioned three days in which he might appear at her house in disguise. The fatal letter contained heart-rending farewells in case he should not be at Carentan on the evening of the third day.

"And this is the third day!" cried Madame de Dey, as she sprang to her feet, seized the letter, and began to pace the floor.

In this emergency the old tradesman recovered the shrewdness which he had formerly displayed in his business, and gave advice instinct with prudence and sagacity. After agreeing upon all that they were both to say and to do, the old man went about, on cleverly devised pretexts, to the principal houses of Carentan, where he announced that Madame de Dey, whom he had just seen, would receive that evening in spite of her indisposition. Pitting his shrewdness against inborn Norman cunning, in the examination to which each family subjected him in regard to the nature of the countess's illness, he succeeded in leading astray almost everybody who was interested in that mysterious affair. Nevertheless, suspicion had taken too deep root in the minds of some obstinate persons, or some philosophers to be entirely dispelled; so that, in the evening, those who were regular habitues of Madame de Dey's salon arrived there early; some in order to watch her face, others from friendly regard; and the majority were impressed by the marvelous nature of her recovery.

About seven o'clock in the evening the best of the uninteresting society of Carentan was assembled at her house, and formed a large circle about the fireplace. The mistress of the house, sustained in her misery by the compassionate glances which the old tradesman bestowed upon her, submitted with extraordinary courage to the minute questionings, the trivial and stupid reasoning of her guests. But at every blow of the knocker at her door, and whenever she heard footsteps in the street, she interrupted her emotion by raising some question of interest to the welfare of the province. She started noisy discussions concerning the quality of the season's cider, and was so well seconded by her confidant that her company almost forgot to watch her, her manner was so natural and her self-possession so imperturbable. The public accuser and one of the judges of the Revolutionary Tribunal sat silent, carefully watching every movement of her face and listening to every sound in the house, notwithstanding the uproar; and on several occasions they asked her very embarrassing questions, which, however, the countess answered with marvelous presence of mind. Mothers have such an inexhaustible store of courage! When Madame de Dey had arranged the card-tables, placed everybody at a table of boston, reversis, or whist, she remained a few moments talking with some young people, with the utmost nonchalance, playing her part like a consummate actress. She suggested a game of lotto—said that she alone knew where it was, and disappeared.

"I am suffocating my poor Brigitte!" she cried, wiping away the tears that gushed from her eyes, which gleamed with fever, anxiety, and impatience. "He does not come," she continued, looking about the chamber to which she had flown. "Here, I breathe again and I live. A few moments more, and he will be here; for he still lives, I am certain; my heart tells me so! Do you hear nothing, Brigitte? Oh! I would give the rest of my life to know whether he is in prison or traveling through the country! I would like not to think—"

She looked about again to make sure that everything was in order in the room. A bright fire was burning on the hearth; the shutters were carefully closed; the furniture glistened with cleanliness; the way in which the bed was made proved that the countess had assisted Brigitte in the smallest details; and her hopes betrayed themselves in the scrupulous care which seemed to have been taken in that room, where the sweet charm of love and its most chaste caresses exhaled in the perfume of the flowers.

"Brigitte?" said the countess in a heartrending tone, as she placed a chair at the table, as if to give reality to her longings, to intensify the strength of her illusions.

"Oh! he will come, madame; he isn't far away. I don't doubt that he's alive and on his way here," replied Brigitte. "I put a key in the Bible and I held it on my fingers while Cottin read the Gospel of St. John; and, madame, the key didn't turn."

"Is that a sure sign?" asked the countess.

"Oh! it is certain, madame; I would wager my salvation that he is still alive. God can't make a mistake."

"Despite the danger that awaits him here, I would like right well to see him."

A BURNING QUESTION

How to Keep Warm Frosty Mornings? Try the

HOME OPEN FRONT OIL HEATER

A PERFECT HEATER

PORTABLE

SAFE

Guaranteed as an open sheet fire. Most successful oil heater ever invented. Sold on a guarantee. If not satisfactory money refunded.

Made in Three Sizes

MANUFACTURED BY

W. W. MONTAGUE & CO.

Corner Turk and Polk Streets, San Francisco.

Jefferson Square Bowling Alleys

and Billiard and Pool Parlors

925 GOLDEN GATE AVE. CORNER OCTAVIA

LARGEST AND FINEST IN THE WORLD.

BALDWIN JEWELRY CO.

DIAMONDS

PRECIOUS STONES

JEWELRY

SILVERWARE

1261 Van Ness Avenue at Sutter

RACING

NEW CALIFORNIA JOCKEY CLUB

OAKLAND RACE TRACK

Six races each week day, rain or shine. First Race at 1:40 p. m.

For special trains stopping at the track, take Southern Pacific Ferry foot of Market street, leave at 12 M., thereafter every twenty minutes until 1:40 P. M.

No smoking in the last two cars, which are reserved for ladies and their escorts.

PERCY W. TREAT, Sec'y THOS. H. WILLIAMS, Pres.

"Poor Monsieur Auguste!" cried Brigitte; "I suppose he is somewhere on the road, on foot!"

* * * * * * * * *

Such was the condition of persons and things in the house of Madame de Dey, while, on the road from Paris to Cherbourg, a young man dressed in a dark carmagnole, the regulation costume at that period, strode along towards Carentan. At the beginning of the conscription, there was little or no discipline. The demands of the moment made it impossible for the Republic to equip all of its soldiers at once, and it was no rare thing to see the roads covered with conscripts still wearing their civilian dress. These young men marched in advance of their battalions to the halting-places, or loitered behind, for their progress was regulated by their ability to endure the fatigue of a long march.

The traveler with whom we have to do was some distance in advance of the column of conscripts on its way to Cherbourg, which the mayor of Carentan was momentarily expecting, in order to distribute lodging-tickets among them. The solitary traveler entered Carentan, whose towers, of fantastic aspect in the moonlight, had appeared to him a moment before. His steps awoke the echoes of the silent streets, where he met no one; he was obliged to ask a weaver who was still at work to point out the mayor's abode. That magistrate lived only a short distance away, and the conscript soon found himself safe under the porch of his house, where he seated himself on a stone bench, waiting for the lodging-ticket which he had asked for. But, being summoned by the mayor, he appeared before him, and was subjected to a careful examination.

"What is your name?" the mayor asked, with a shrewd glance at him.

"Julien Jussieu," replied the conscript.

"And you come from ———?" said the magistrate, with an incredulous smile.

"From Paris."

"Your comrades must be far behind?" continued the Norman in a mocking tone.

"I am three leagues ahead of the battalion."

"Doubtless some sentimental reason brings you to Carentan, citizen conscript?" queried the mayor, slyly. "It is all right," he added, imposing silence, with a wave of the hand, upon the young man, who was about to speak. "We know where to send you. Here," he said, handing him the lodging-ticket; "here, Citizen Jussieu."

There was a perceptible tinge of irony in the tone in which the magistrate uttered these last two words, as he held out a ticket upon which Madame de Dey's name was written. The young man read the address with an air of curiosity.

"He knows very well that he hasn't far to go, and when he gets outside, it won't take him long to cross the square," cried the mayor, speaking to himself, while the young man went out. "He's a bold young fellow. May God protect him! He has an answer for everything.

The guests at Madame de Dey's had departed. None remained save the public accuser.

"Citizeness," he said, when they found themselves alone, "I am here to see that the laws of the Republic are observed."

* * * * * * * * *

Madame de Dey shuddered.

"Have you no revelations to make to me?" he demanded.

"None," she replied in amazement.

"Ah, madame!" cried the accuser, sitting down beside her and changing his tone, "at this moment, for lack of a word, either you or I may bring our heads to the scaffold.

Madame de Dey feared a trap; she did not move, but her face was on fire and her tongue was frozen. A blow of the knocker rang through the house.

"Ah!" cried the terrified mother, falling on her knees. "Save him! save him!"

"Yes, let us save him," rejoined the public accuser, with a passionate glance at her; "let us save him though it cost us our lives."

"I am lost!" she cried, while the accuser courteously raised her.

"O madame!" he replied with a grand oratorical gesture, "I do not choose to owe you to any one but yourself."

"Madame, here he—" cried Brigitte, who thought that her mistress was alone.

At sight of the public accuser, the old servant, whose face was flushed with joy, became rigid and deathly pale.

"What is it, Brigitte?" asked the magistrate, in a mild and meaning tone.

"A conscript that the mayor has sent here to lodge," replied the servant, showing the ticket.

"That is true," said the accuser, after reading the paper; "a battalion is to arrive here to-night.

And he went out.

The countess was too anxious at that moment to believe in the sincerity of her former attorney to entertain the slightest suspicion; she ran swiftly upstairs, having barely strength enough to stand upright; then she opened the door of her bedroom, saw her son, and rushed into his arms, well-nigh lifeless.

"O my son, my son!" she cried, sobbing, and covering him with frenzied kisses.

"Madame—" said the stranger.

"Oh! it isn't he!" she cried, stepping back in dismay and standing before the conscript, at whom she gazed with a haggard expression.

"Blessed Lord God, what a resemblance!" said Brigitte.

"Those Lustrous Eyes are Murine Eyes"

MURINE EYE REMEDY

A Favorite Toilet Accessory

Has won many Friends as an Aid to the Restoration of Normal Conditions, Healthful Tone and Natural Brilliancy to Eyes that Need Care.

It has proven of great value in the Home as

An Eye Tonic

for Weak, Red, Inflamed & Itching Eyes & Eyelids.

As An Eye Insurance

Tourists, Automobilists and others exposed to Strong Winds, Dust and Reflected Sunlight, which produce Irritation, Granulation, Ulceration and Weak Eyes, will find in Murine a Safe, Soothing Eye Lotion affording "Reliable Relief."

The Finishing Touch

Bewitchingly Costumed
In Costliest Gown,
For the Social Event,
At the South End of Town.

The "Finishing Touch"
To the Toilet is seen
In the Act above Pictured
"Two drops" of Murine.

Try Murine for the "Automobile Eye"

Mrs. Warfield

PIANO SCHOOL FOR CHILDREN AND BEGINNERS

Telephone Piedmont 3414 — 6409 Regent Street, Berkeley

Tuesday and Friday, Ebell Club, Oaklnd

ALL YEAR ROUND
RAIL ROUTE TO

YOSEMITE VALLEY

VIA

SOUTHERN PACIFIC

By way of Merced in connection with the

YOSEMITE VALLEY RAILROAD

Only ten hours' ride to El Portal (the edge of the Valley) and three and one-half hours thence to the heart of the Valley

Ask any of our agents for details or write Chas. S. Fee, Passenger Traffic Manager SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY, San Francisco, for beautifully illustrated descriptive literature.

dered at the aspect of Madame de Dey.

"Ah, monsieur!" she said, leaning upon Brigitte's husband, and feeling then in all its force the grief of which the first pang had almost killed her; "monsieur, I cannot endure to see you any longer; allow my servants to take my place and to

She went down to her own apartments, half carried by Brigitte and her old servant.

Presently the conscript made a noise in his room, drawing his chair to the table.

"I will not stay here," cried Madame de Dey; "I will go to the greenhouse, where I can hear better what goes on outside during the night."

She was still wavering between fear of having lost her son and the hope of seeing him appear. The night was disquietingly silent. There was one ghastly moment for the countess, when the battalion of conscripts marched into the town, and each man repaired to his lodging. There were disappointed its terrible tranquillity. Towards morning the countess was obliged to return to her room. Brigitte, who watched her mistress every moment, finding that she did not come out again, went to her room and found the countess dead.

"She probably heard the conscript dressing and walking about in Monsieur Auguste's room, singing their d——d Marseillaise as if he were in a stable!" cried Brigitte. "It was that which killed her!"

and probably by some terrible vision. At the precise moment when Madame de Dey died at Carentan, her son was shot in Le Morbihan. We might add this tragic story to the mass of other observations on that sympathy which defies the law of space—documents which some few solitary scholars are collecting with scientific curiosity, and which will one day serve as its man of genius.

Letters

A Psychological Romance

"The Guest of Quesnay" is one of that large and growing class of psychological romances, some good, some bad, and the majority only indifferent. This one is good. Booth Tarkington has taken for his subject one Larrabee Harmon, a young American with too much money and too few responsibilities, and he goes his way after the manner of his kind. Before he starts down the steepest pitch of his toboggan slide he has, of course, married the usual beautiful and accomplished girl. After three years of misery, Mrs. Harmon institutes proceedings for divorce, and Larrabee goes from bad to worse. He is entangled with a music hall dancer, and absolutely besotted. In an automobile accident he is so badly injured that at first there is entertained no hope for his recovery, and the general verdict is that the best thing that can happen is his death. Larrabee Harmon, however, in spite of his excesses, has an excellent constitution, and he recovers from his physical injuries, but with a mind absolutely blank. An old aunt places him under the care years after the accident there arrived at an obscure inn, Les Trois Pigeons, this Professor Keredec and his companion, a young man despite his gray hair. There is something mysterious about the pair, for the professor keeps his charge secluded. In course of time Professor Keredec becomes more sociable, and the young man, Oliver Saffren, is permitted to come forward. He is evidently not insane nor feeble minded, yet he lacks social experience and is, to all intents and purposes, about thirteen years of age. At the Chateau of Quesnay, near the inn, is a houseful of guests of the American lessee, is a cousin of Larrabee Harmon's wife. She is still young and beautiful, and the inevitable happens. Oliver Saffren, restored to the condition of baptismal innocence, sees and falls in love with Louise without remembering anything of his former life, and she, of course, recognizes him, but has no need to fall in love since she has never fallen out of that blissful condition. Her cousins, the Wards, oppose the reunion, but Louise, taking a leaf from her former life, elopes once more. At the eleventh hour there appears on the scene Mariana, the dancer, with whom Harmon has been infatuated. Trouble follows, but it appears that while Louise had dropped her suit for separation as soon as begun, Larrabee has gone through all the legal forms of marriage with Mariana. A trial for bigamy or a settlement which would strip him of his last dollar are the alternatives presented for his choice. There is another romance running parallel to the principal plot, and the clever manner in which Anne Elliott managed it bids fair to make her a rival to Elizabeth Ward in the gentle art of steering business into the proper channel. From the McClure Company.

Why they Wore Crepe de Chime

In these days of literary officiousness nothing passes without note, and likewise, query. Sydney Porter (O. Henry) and his wife, were guests at a reception not long ago when a woman introduced to Mrs. Porter said to her: "May I ask you a question that I have been dying to ask your husband for a long

Not caring to be responsible for the early demise of the querist, Mrs. Porter answered: "Why, certainly."

"Well," continued the woman, "why does your husband always have the ladies in his stories wear crepe de chine?"

"I give it up," was the reply. "Let's ask him." So he was called over and interrogated. Like many other apparently deep questions, it turned out to be a simple matter after all. "To tell the truth," said Mr. Porter, "I know only two kinds of goods—calico and crepe de chine. When the girls can't wear calico I make them wear crepe de chine. That's all there is to it."

ANNOUNCEMENT

1909

OLDSMOBILE

We beg to announce arrival
1909 Oldsmobile, December 15th

The following complete line of 1909 models will be on exhibition on the above date. Every one of these cars is representative of the factory that makes it:

Model X Special Runabout	$2000
Model D Palace Touring Car	2750
Model D Toy Tonneau	2750
Model DR Flying Roadster	2750
Model DR Detachable Tonneau	2750
Model Z Touring Car, 6-Cylinder	4200
Model Z Runabout, 6-Cylinder	4200

Besides Limousine and Landaulet Bodies.

The 1909 Oldsmobile contains all that has made the car famous in the past, together with the improvements in keeping with the largest and most extensive factory in the country. Recognized the world over for durability. Investigate.

PIONEER AUTOMOBILE CO.

524 Twentieth St., Oakland 901 Golden Gate Ave., San Francisco

SUMMONS

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA, In and for the City and County of San Francisco. Action No. 12782.

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Lien Upon the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Lien Upon the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants, Greetings.

You are hereby required to appear and answer the Complaint of Ernestine [illegible] Plaintiffs, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first [illegible] you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at the Southwesterly corner of Golden Gate Avenue and [illegible] thence at right angles Southerly One Hundred (100) feet; thence at right angles Easterly One Hundred and Thirty-seven (137) feet and Six (6) inches to the Westerly line of Steiner Street and thence at right angles Northerly [illegible] One Hundred (100) feet to the point of [illegible]

Being a portion of Western Addition Block Number Three Hundred and [illegible]

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the [illegible] to you Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit, for a judgment of said Court as follows:

1st. Ascertaining and determining all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said real property and every part thereof, whether the same [illegible] and determining the title of plaintiffs and each of them to said real property and determining all adverse claims thereto, and adjudging that each of said plaintiffs is the owner in fee simple absolute of an undivided one-half of the said real property and every part thereof.

3rd. For such other and further relief as to the Court may seem proper, and for costs of suit.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 27th day of November, 1908.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By T. C. RYAN, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 12th day of December, A. D. 1908.

MEMORANDUM

The following persons are said to claim some interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiffs, to-wit:

French Savings Bank, a corporation, whose address is No. 108 Sutter Street, San Francisco, California.

CAMPBELL, METSON, DREW, OATMAN & MACKENZIE,
Attys. for Plaintiffs, Balboa Bldg., 595 Market St., S. F. 12-12-10

Auto Notes

About as thorough a test as possible of the uniform quality of a tire, which is essential to its general success, was made recently when on 108 Chalmers-Detroit cars on election day each made 200 miles on Diamond Tires and Marsh Rims, rolling up an aggregate of 22,600 miles with a total tire trouble for the 108 cars of only four punctures. When the varied conditions, climates and surfaces are considered the testing out of 108 sets with absolutely no tire trouble that can be attributed to the tire itself is found it is an unusual test and Mr. C. E. Mathewson is particularly proud of the showing of the new Mountain Tread Tire which was the type used on the cars that day.

Another impromptu match race, in which Victor Verilock, the well known Thomas enthusiast competed, is reported to have taken place Sunday on the Haywards Boulevard. The race which is reported to have been for a $250 wager, brought out some clever driving between the two contestants, and it was only after a piece of reckless driving that Verilock passed his rival and won the purse.

Charles S. Howard of the Howard Automobile Company, who went to the Buick factory three weeks ago to secure the shipment of cars for his agency territory, the State of California, telegraphs that the new model 17 or 40 H. P. five passenger touring car demonstrator was shipped from Flint, Mich., on December 5th, together with the first of the Buick model 10, or "White Streak" runabouts for '09. These cars will reach this city on or about the 21st inst.

Mr. James Flood has just taken delivery of his Packard "30" '09 Limousine from Cuyler Lee. Mr. Flood has owned many automobiles, but the Packard is his first American car.

Mrs. Phil Lyons of Los Angeles, one of the nerviest women drivers in California, has been induced by her friends to try for the Los Angeles to Santa Anna record, and will drive a 1909 four-cylinder Oldsmobile touring car, which she recently purchased, over the roads between the two cities in an endeavor to capture the covetered mark. This Los Angeles-Santa Anna record is one of the hard nuts of the Pacific Coast, and up to a month ago was not so low. Mrs. Lyons is confident, as she is one of the best women drivers on the coast, and has already made out her schedule and gone into active training. On the trail Mrs. Lyons will drive alone and will not be accompanied by a mechanic. The road is badly cut up and never before was in such a bad condition.

Lachman Brothers of this city have taken delivery from the Howard Automobile Company of a Buick two-cylinder touring car.

"The proposed good roads banquet to be given by the Mendocino County farmers, to which they have invited the local Automobile Dealers' Association to send a representative, is one of the most recent signs that the people of the interior are rapidly seeing the advantage of the motor car," said Calvin C. Eib of the Pioneer Automobile Company. "The dealers should take advantage of the invitation and send one of their members to address the meeting. Such a discussion as the occasion will offer cannot be overlooked, and the results from the co-operation of the country people cannot be impressed too strongly on the automobile trade."

Mr. W. J. Monnix of Sacramento has just purchased from Cuyler Lee a Packard "30" touring car.

The Howard Automobile Company received a letter this week from William F. Woods announcing his safe arrival in Los Angeles with his family after a drive from this city to the City of Angeles in his Buick "White Streak." The journey was accomplished without difficulty although much dust was encountered. It occupied just a week including stops at points of interest along the route. Mr. Woods and family recently arrived in San Francisco after an overland journey from Chicago in their "White Streak." They will spend the winter in Los Angeles and anticipate driving home next summer.

Among the prominent automobile men who expect to attend the New York Show, is E. P. Brinegar of the Pioneer Automobile Company. The local representative of the Thomas, Chalmers-Detroit and Oldsmobile will visit the factories of these cars before his return.

Probably the youngest motorist in California is Miss Frances Johnson, daughter of Frank H. Johnson, Jr., the prominent automobile enthusiast of San Rafael. Miss Johnson, although not three years of age is perfectly capable and confident of steering her father's Chalmers-Detroit Speedster, and with a little more strength in her tiny arms, she declares she can drive as good as papa. Little Miss Frances inherited her desire for the sport of motoring, her father being one of the most clever amateurs in the State. Johnson has been identified with motor cars ever since their advent on the coast, and has owned no less than twenty-four different models of machines. He now owns a 1909 Chalmers-Detroit Speedster, which he purchased only after a demonstration of a mile a minute on the Ocean Boulevard. During the last two years Johnson, accompanied by his wife, has toured all parts of California, and although he is a reckless driver and has smashed up several cars he has never been injured.

Mr. A. Cheesebrough has received from Cuyled Lee the first Packard "18" Landaulet to be delivered on the coast.

L. C. Schmidler, a retired business man of Sacramento, is enjoying driving over the boulevards in and about the city in his Buick touring car. He drove down from the Capital City and will spend the winter with his family in this city.

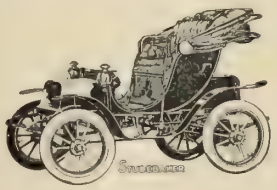
The new Cadillac "Thirty" is practically on a non-stop run, as it is in constant service giving demonstrations and many orders are being taken daily.

J. A. Bennett was here this week and took delivery from the Howard Automobile Company of a Buick two-cylinder touring car which he drove to his home in Santa Rosa.

Packard = Cadillac

All That is Best in Motor Car Construction

PACKARD '09 TOURING CAR



CADILLAC "30" TOURING CAR

30 horsepower, four cylinder, 5 passenger, $1550.00

Cuyler Lee

453 GOLDEN GATE AVENUE SAN FRANCISCO

Delightful Independence

¶ The freedom from restraint that a woman never experiences until she has driven her own electric car can be appreciated by only those who have enjoyed that pleasure. The Studebaker electric car is woman's ideal carriage. Its daintiness and luxury of appointment, its safety and simplicity appeal instantly to her refined tastes.

FREMONT AT MISSION — Studebaker — PHONE DOUGLAS 3000

BUY YOUR ELECTRICAL TOYS FROM AN ELECTRICAL HOUSE

More Practical, Better Quality and Cost Less

Electric Trains, Cars, Dynamos, Motors, Batteries, Machinery, Magic Lanterns Moving Pictures, Telegraph and Telephones, Wireless Outfits, X-rays, Etc.

Educate the boy in the uses of Electricity

LEVY ELECTRIC CO.

TWO STORES

648 Sacramento St. 1205 Polk Street

LEVY ELECTRIC WIRING COMPANY

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA, IN AND FOR THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO.
No. 3386. Department No. 10.

In the Matter of the Estate of REBECCA G. COHN, Deceased.

PAULA BICK STERN, Contestant,
vs.
HENRY HYMAN, et al, Defendants.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA to Henry Hyman, as Executor of the Will of said Decedent; to Theresa Rosenberg, Roeschen Schneider, Flora Brown, Kaskel Bick, Rosalie Bick, Jacob Bick, Meyer Bick, Estella Horn, Paula Stern, Flora Stern, Tina Abrams, Gussie Adler, A. L. Brown, Gracie Weiss, Hebrew Orphan Asylum of the City and County of San Francisco, California, Ladies' Relief Society of Marysville, Yuba County, California, Henry Hyman, Amy G. Hyman, Raymond Gabella Hyman, minor, Doris P. Hyman, minor, legatees and devisees named in said will; to Henry Hyman as Guardian of the persons and estates of said Raymond Gabella Hyman and Doris P. Hyman, minors; to John Doe and Richard Doe, as Administrators of the estate of or as Executors of the will of Rosie Rosenthal, deceased, a legatee and devisee named in said will, and an heir at law of said Rebecca G. Cohn, deceased, and to Harry Rosenthal, her husband and heir-at-law; to John Poe and Richard Coe, as Administrators of the estate of or as executors of the Will of Annie Solomon, deceased, a legatee and devisee named in said Will and an heir at law of said Rebecca G. Cohn, deceased, and to Adolph Solomon, Hildred Solomon, minor, Adolph Solomon, minor, Lesley Solomon, minor, Phylis Solomon, minor, and Louis Solomon, minor, heirs at law of said Annie Solomon, deceased, and to John Roe as Guardian of the persons and estates of said Hildred Solomon, Adolph Solomon, Lesley Solomon, Phylis Solomon and Louis Solomon, minors; to Flora Brown, Theresa Rosenberg, Roeschen Schneider, Meyer Bick, Paula Stern, Estella Horn, Flora Stern, Tina Abrams, Gussie Adler and A. L. Brown, the heirs at law of said Rebecca G. Cohn, deceased, residing in the State of California, GREETING:

Paula Bick Stern, an heir at law of Rebecca G. Cohn, the above named decedent having filed herein a Petition alleging that the instrument heretofore filed herein and admitted to probate as the will of said decedent was wrongfully procured and caused to be made by and through undue influence, menace and fraud, that said decedent was not of sound or disposing mind or memory at the time of the execution of said will, and praying the probate of said will be revoked and set aside;

You are hereby cited to be and appear in our Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, at the Court Room of Department Ten, Probate thereof, in said City and County of San Francisco, State of California, in the Grant Building, on the southeast corner of Market and Seventh Streets on Monday, the first day of February, 1909, at 10 o'clock A. M. of said day, then and there to show cause, if any you have, why the prayer of said Petitioner should not be granted, and why the probate of said Will should not be revoked.

By order of the said Superior Court at the City and County of San Francisco this 28th day of September, 1908.

Attest:
H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By E. B. GILSON, Deputy Clerk.

EDGAR C. LEVY AND GEORGE M. LIPMAN, 623-630 Pacific Bldg.
Attorneys for Petitioner.

SUMMONS

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 19737. Dept. 10.

ELIZABETH J. ROBINSON, Plaintiff,
vs.
FREDERICK L. ROBINSON, Defendant.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA SEND GREETING TO Frederick L. Robinson, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County, or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's willful neglect of plaintiff on account of defendant's idleness, profligacy and dissipation, also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the Seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 9th day of November, A. D. 1908.

H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
(Seal) By L. J. WELCH, Deputy Clerk.

ROBINSON & GETZ, Attorneys for Plaintiff,
45 Kearny St., S. F. 11-21-10

ORDER APPOINTING TIME AND PLACE FOR HEARING PETITION AND DIRECTING NOTICE TO BE GIVEN.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 5296. Dept. No. 10.

In the Matter of the Estate of MARGARET HOLY, Deceased.

George Holy, the Administrator of the estate of Margaret Holy, Deceased, having filed herein his verified petition for an Order or Decree authorizing and directing him as Administrator of the Estate of Margaret Holy, Deceased, to execute a conveyance of the property in said petition described, to James M. Thompson, according to the terms of an agreement heretofore entered into between Margaret Holy, Deceased, and James M. Thompson, and good cause appearing therefor, on motion of Marshall Nuckolls, Esq., Attorney for said Petitioner.

It is hereby ordered that Thursday, the 24th day of December, 1908, at the hour of 10 o'clock a. m., in the above entitled court in Department 10 thereof, in the Grant Building at the southeast corner of Market and Seventh streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, be and the same is hereby fixed as the time and place for the hearing of said petition, and that notice of the hearing of said petition be given by publication of this order in Town Talk, a newspaper of general circulation published in the City and County of San Francisco, for at least once a week for four (4) consecutive weeks before said hearing.

Done in open court this 12th day of November, 1908.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

MARSHALL NUCKOLLS, Attorney for Petitioner,
417 Humboldt Bank Bldg., S. F. 11-21-5

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of Christian Ludwig Umbach, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Executrix of the last Will of Christian Ludwig Umbach, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within four (4) months after the first publication of this notice to the said Executrix at the law office of A. Comte, Jr., No. 333 Kearny street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned selects as her place of business in all matters connected with said estate of Christian Ludwig, Umbach, deceased.

EMILY MARY UMBACH,
Executrix of the last Will of Christian Ludwig Umbach, Deceased.

Dated San Francisco, December 3, 1908.

A. COMTE, Jr., 333 Kearny St., San Francisco, Cal.
Attorney for Executrix. 12-12-5

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA, IN AND FOR THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO.
No. 3386. Department 10.

In the Matter of the Estate of REBECCA G. COHN, Deceased.

FLORA BROWN, Contestant,
vs.
HENRY HYMAN, et al, Defendants.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA to Henry Hyman, as Executor of the Will of said Decedent; to Theresa Rosenberg, Roeschen Schneider, Flora Brown, Kaskel Bick, Rosalie Bick, Jacob Bick, Meyer Bick, Estella Horn, Paula Stern, Flora Stern, Tina Abrams, Gussie Adler, A. L. Brown, Gracie Weiss, Hebrew Orphan Asylum of the City and County of San Francisco, California, Ladies' Relief Society of Marysville, Yuba County, California, Henry Hyman, Amy G. Hyman, Raymond Gabella Hyman, minor, Doris P. Hyman, minor, legatees and devisees named in said will; to Henry Hyman as Guardian of the persons and estates of said Raymond Gabella Hyman and Doris P. Hyman, minors; to John Doe and Richard Doe, as Administrators of the estate of or as Executors of the will of Rosie Rosenthal, deceased, a legatee and devisee named in said will, and an heir at law of said Rebecca G. Cohn, deceased, and to Harry Rosenthal, her husband and heir-at-law; to John Poe and Richard Coe, as Administrators of the estate of or as executors of the Will of Annie Solomon, deceased, a legatee and devisee named in said Will and an heir at law of said Rebecca G. Cohn, deceased, and to Adolph Solomon, Hildred Solomon, minor, Adolph Solomon, minor, Lesley Solomon, minor, Phylis Solomon, minor, and Louis Solomon, minor, heirs at law of said Annie Solomon, deceased, and to John Roe as Guardian of the persons and estates of said Hildred Solomon, Adolph Solomon, Lesley Solomon, Phylis Solomon and Louis Solomon, minors; to Flora Brown, Theresa Rosenberg, Roeschen Schneider, Meyer Bick, Paula Stern, Estella Horn, Flora Stern, Tina Abrams, Gussie Adler and A. L. Brown, the heirs at law of said Rebecca G. Cohn, deceased, residing in the State of California, GREETING:

Flora Brown, an heir at law of Rebecca G. Cohn, the above-named decedent having filed herein a Petition alleging that the instrument heretofore filed herein and admitted to probate as the will of said decedent was wrongfully procured and caused to be made by and through undue influence, menace and fraud, that said decedent was not of sound or disposing mind or memory at the time of the execution of said will, and praying the probate of said will be revoked and set aside;

You are hereby cited to be and appear in our Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, at the Court Room of Department Ten, Probate thereof, in said City and County of San Francisco, State of California, in the Grant Building, on the southeast corner of Market and Seventh Streets on Monday, the first day of February, 1909, at 10 o'clock A. M. of said day, then and there to show cause, if any you have, why the prayer of said Petitioner should not be granted, and why the probate of said Will should not be revoked.

By order of the said Superior Court at the City and County of San Francisco this 28th day of September, 1908.

Attest:
H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By E. B. GILSON, Deputy Clerk.

WM. M. MADDEN, Merchants Exchange Bldg., San Francisco, Cal.
Attorney for Petitioner.

KNIGHT & HEGGERTY, Of Counsel.

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY SALE OF REAL ESTATE SHOULD NOT BE MADE.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO, STATE OF CALIFORNIA.

In the Matter of the Estate of MARTIN C. HOGAN, Deceased.

Edward C. Harrington, executor of the last Will and testament of Martin C. Hogan, deceased, having filed his petition herein praying for an order of sale of certain part of the real estate of said decedent, for the purpose therein set forth.

It is therefore ordered by the Judge of said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said decedent appear before the said Superior Court, in the Grant Building, at the corner of 7th and Market Streets on Monday the 28th day of December, 1908, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said executor to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased, at private sale as shall be necessary, and that a copy of this order shall be published at least four successive weeks in Town Talk, a newspaper printed and published in said City and County.

Done in open court this 24th day of November, 1908.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

J. C. QUINLAN, Attorney for Executor, First National Bank Bldg. 12-5-5

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of Rodrigo Knell, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned executor of the will of Rodrigo Knell, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten (10) months after the first publication of this notice to the said executor at the office of Morrison, Cope & Brobeck, Rooms 701-6 of the Crocker Building, located at the intersection of Market, Post and Montgomery streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, which said office the undersigned selects as his place of business in all matters connected with said estate of Rodrigo Knell, deceased.

PHILIP KNELL.
Executor of the will of Rodrigo Knell, deceased.

Dated San Francisco, November 25th, 1908.

MORRISON, COPE & BROBECK, Attorneys for Executor,
Rooms 701-6 Crocker Building.

NOTICE

Pursuant to the written consent of the holders of more than two-thirds of the issued capital stock of California Cream and Butter Company (a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of the State of California), which consent has been duly filed in the office of said corporation in the City and County of San Francisco, said State, on the 3rd day of December, 1908, and pursuant to a resolution of the Board of Directors of said corporation, which resolution was duly passed at a meeting of said Board of Directors duly called and held at the said office of said corporation on the third day of December, 1908, at which meeting more than a quorum of the Directors of said corporation was present,

NOTICE is hereby given that the principal place of business of said corporation will, on the 2nd day of January, 1909, be changed and removed from the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to the City of Los Angeles, County of Los Angeles, in said State, at No. 401 East Fourth Street therein, after which date the principal place of business of said corporation will be said City of Los Angeles, County of Los Angeles at No. 401 East Fourth Street therein.

This notice is published by order of the Board of Directors of said California Cream and Butter Company.

Dated San Francisco, Cal., December 3, 1908.

F. V. NELSON,
Secretary of California Cream and Butter Company.

TRUNKS AND SUIT CASES
KOESEL'S TRUNK FACTORY
41 ELLIS STREET, NEAR MARKET
GENERAL REPAIRING Phone Douglas 445

Louis Crepaux

(Member of Paris Grand Opera)

Has removed to his new studio,

Delbert Block, 943 Van Ness avenue, cor. O'Farrell.

Reception hours: 11:30 to 12, 3:30 to 5, except Wednesdays. Wednesdays in Oakland, 1154 Brush street.

Emil Steinegger

PIANOFORTE PLAYING

924 Grove St (above Fillmore), San Francisco.

For appointments phone Merritt 2845

Thursdays, 2701 Regent St., Berkeley

Mackenzie Gordon

TENOR

TEACHER OF SINGING { in all its branches, from the rudiments of tone formation to the highest finish and Completion of Public Singing.

Oratorio, Opera and Concert

By appointment only Phone Franklin 3594

Studio: 1350 FRANKLIN ST.

Louis H. Eaton

Organist and Director of the Music Trinity Church

Teacher of

PIANO, ORGAN, SINGING

1678 Broadway Phone Franklin 2244

Donald Maclean

SINGING—Pupil Seagle and De Rezske

Henri Etlin

PIANO—First Prize, Paris Conservatoire

STUDIO, 1613 GREEN ST. Phone, Franklin 3153

Hother Wismer

VIOLINIST

Has resumed teaching

Studios—2945 FILLMORE ST., Tel. West 438; 820 FILLMORE STREET

Ensemble Instruction

Stiles Hall, Berkeley, Saturdays

Samuel M. Shortridge

ATTORNEY AT LAW

CHRONICLE BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO

Tel. Douglas 2176

Robert B. McMillan

ATTORNEY AT LAW

Has removed his Law Offices to the

CHRONICLE BUILDING, Fifth Floor

Phone Kearny 5969 Rooms 517-518

Knight & Heggerty

ATTORNEYS AT LAW and

PROCTORS IN ADMIRALTY

MERCHANTS EXCHANGE BLDG., S. F.

Rooms 626 and 630

PORCHER & SEAGRAVE

HATS AND MEN'S FURNISHINGS

1244 MARKET ST., Bet. Larkin and City Hall Sq.

717 GOLDEN GATE AVENUE

PATRICK & CO.

RUBBER STAMPS

STENCILS, SEALS, SIGNS & ETC.

126 BUSH ST. SAN FRANCISCO

SUMMONS

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE STATE of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 19737. Dept. 10.

ELIZABETH J. ROBINSON, Plaintiff,

vs.

FREDERICK L. ROBINSON, Defendant.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Frederick L. Robinson, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County, or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's willful neglect of plaintiff on account of defendant's idleness, profligacy and dissipation, also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that unless you appear and answer as above required the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the Complaint, as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the Seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 9th day of November, A. D. 1908.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By L. J. WELCH, Deputy Clerk.

ROBINSON & GETZ, Attorneys for Plaintiff,
45 Kearny Street, S. F. 11-21-10

SUMMONS.

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

GUSTAVE WEDELSTAEDT, Plaintiff

vs.

ELIZABETH WEDELSTAEDT, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Elizabeth Wedelstaedt, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above name plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed herein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's desertion and extreme cruelty; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the Complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 12th day of November, A. D. 1908.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By MILTON M. DAVIS, Deputy Clerk.

C. J. ADAMS, Attorney for Plaintiff,
378 Monadnock Bldg., S. F. 12-12-10

HENRY P. TRICOU

NOTARY PUBLIC

508 CALIFORNIA STREET Phone Kearny 711

Residence, 852 Grove St. Phone Page 55

UNION LUMBER CO.

Redwood and Pine Lumber

Railroad Ties, Telegraph Poles, Shingles, Split Shakes, Etc.

CROCKER BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO

ACTION BROUGHT IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO, AND THE COMPLAINT FILED IN THE OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK OF SAID CITY AND COUNTY.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA, IN AND FOR THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO.

W. A. BRANDIES, Plaintiff,

vs.

MARIA ARRELLANES, etc., Defendant.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA SEND GREETING to Maria Arrellanes, sometimes known as Maria Brandies, Defendant:

You are hereby directed to appear and answer the complaint in an action entitled as above brought against your in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, within ten days after the service on you of this summons, if served within this City and County; or within thirty days if served elsewhere.

And you are hereby notified that unless you appear and answer as above required the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any money or damages in the complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, this 16th day of September, A. D. 1908.

H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By W. R. CASTAGNETTO, Deputy Clerk.

F. W. SAWYER, Attorney for Plaintiff.

BONESTELL & CO.

PAPER

The paper used in printing this magazine is our Albion Book

California's Leading Paper House

116 to 124 FIRST ST. SAN FRANCISCO

Phone Kearny 1272

MEN

Afflicted with any private ailment consult the United Physicians and Surgeons. Strictly reliable specialists in Genito-Urinary, Blood and Skin diseases, and all reflex ailments of men. Prompt, efficient services; fees moderate; consultation free and confidential. Write or call. Hours, 9 a. m. to 9 p. m. Sundays, 9 to 2.

A word to the wise is sufficient.

United Physicians and Surgeons

517 Twenty-third St., Oakland

Near Telegraph Avenue.

10 Third Street, San Francisco

Next to Call Building

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., San Francisco, Cal.

Guaranteed Capital	$1,200,000.00
Capital actually paid up in cash	$1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds	$1,453,983.62
Deposits June 30, 1908	$34,474,554.23
Total Assets	$37,055,263.31

Office Hours: 10 o'clock a. m. to 3 o'clock p. m., except Saturdays to 12 o'clock m. and Saturday evenings from 7 o'clock p. m. to 8 o'clock p. m. for receipt of deposits only.

OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohte; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourny; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS—N. Ohlandt, Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohte, Ign. Steinhart, I. N. Walter, J. W. Van Bergen, F. Tillmann, Jr., E. T. Kruse and W. S. Goodfellow.

MISSION BRANCH, 2572 Mission Street, between 21 st and 22nd Street. For receipt and payment of Deposits only.

MAYERLE'S EYE WATER, by mail 65c

Orders for Eye Glasses, Opera Glasses, Lorgnettes, sent by mail, $5, $10, $15.

DANGER SIGNALS

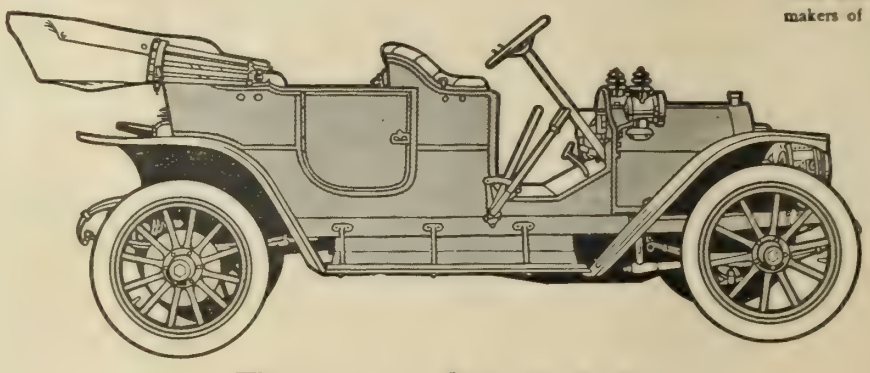
Painful, Sore, Red, Inflamed, Burning, Smarting, Itching, Scratching, Twitching, and Gluey Eyes, Heavy or Crusty Eyelids, Floating Spots, Cloudiness of Vision, Cross Eyes, Watery or Discharging Eyes, feeling like sand in the Eyes, Heavy and Crusty Eyelids are often Considered Dangerous Signals.

NEGLECTED EYESIGHT AFFECTS THE BRAIN

Mayerle's Glasses rest and strengthen the eyes and preserve the sight.

GEORGE MAYERLE

Graduate German Expert Optician, charter member American Association of Opticians and Vice-President Optical Specialist Association of America, 1149 Golden Gate Ave., between Webster and Buchanan sts. Phone Park 3153, San Francisco.



1000 Cars Already Delivered

Touring Cars
Tourabouts
Roadsters

Chalmers-Detroit "30"

"It's a Good Car"

A high-grade 4-cylinder, 5-passenger, 24-30 horse-power car, made by the makers of the Thomas-Detroit Forty.

Price $1500

"The only man who doesn't praise the Chalmers "30" is the man who doesn't own one."

806 of our $1500 "30's" have been delivered up to this date (October 31st, 1908). Not last year's models, but all of them built this year.

806 people are actually running these cars.

806 people know they are the best $1500 cars made, because they have proved them out by use.

806 people will tell you so if you ask them. And after all, are they not the best judges? Some are nearby you—some are your neighbors, perhaps. Ask them what they think. We will gladly abide by their judgment.

If you doubt our word, get hold of a mechanical engineer—let him examine and test the other cars and then ours. Take his word—we will rest our claim on that.

Our car is built by engineers who have designed more successful medium-priced cars than anyone else; engineers who put their names in print and stand back of their designs and statements with their reputations.

Any competent engineer will tell you that these men have now made the best low-priced car on the market.

Remember, 806 of these cars have been delivered already. They are our salesmen. Salesmen of other companies won't tell you the good points of our cars. They are not paid to do that. Don't expect them to do it. Advertising writers are paid enormous salaries to make other cars look good in print. Our cars look good to engineers—look good on the road—look good to people who use them—will look good to you if you will look. The proof of the pudding is in the eating. 806 people "are eating theirs now."

These Facts are Important

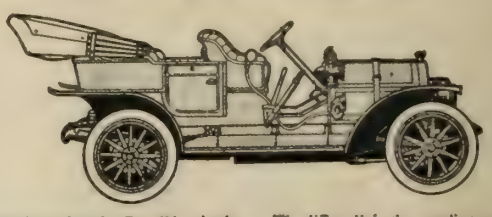
Our "30" car has the specifications known to belong to real touring cars: 110-inch wheel base, close coupled body, hung in the middle of the car, not away out over the rear axle to make room for a "big handsome hood" that don't make the car run, the hood isn't important—it's the engine under the hood. Ours is right, engineers will tell you so; multiple disc clutch, three speed transmission, floating rear axle; ¾ elliptic springs, quick detachable tires, etc.

One of our $1500 cars has been running 200 miles a day for 91 days. This run is from Detroit to Pontiac and back, and the car goes every day, rain or shine. 18,200 miles have been run so far without a miss, right on schedule, and it is still running. If you know anyone in Detroit, write to them to verify this statement. No other car at any price has ever done this before. That's the kind we sell. That's the kind 806 people are using now.

At the Sweepstake Races run over the Vanderbilt Cup course on Saturday, October 10th, our cars won first and second in their class, distancing everybody else, beating the next car 34 minutes, which means that our car was more than 25 miles ahead in a race of 150 miles. The "30" that won first averaged 48 miles per hour on this course, and the "30" that won second averaged 46 miles per hour.

The car that won the Vanderbilt Cup Race on Saturday, October 24th, averaged 64 miles per hour, which was record-breaking time. In comparison with this specially built racing car consider our "30", selling for $1500, averaging 48 miles per hour over this same course. We more than lapped every one of our competitors in the Sweepstake Race. Do you want any better evidence that our car is absolutely right; that our two-bearing crank shaft and our cylinders cast en bloc are the very best construction?

The consistent performance of the two cars shows it was not luck that won for us. One averaged 48 miles per hour, the other 46 miles. Further than that, the car that won second in this race was driven by a man who had never seen the car until an hour before he drove it in the race. We had to get a new driver because the driver we had was disqualified the day before the race because he hit a cow on the course. This car that hit the cow had only the radiator damaged and went into the race the next day and won second.



Our cars in this race were stock cars. There are 806 cars just like them running on the streets and roads of this country. We don't build special cars for racing purposes and build other cars to deliver to our customers. The cars we deliver to customers are the same cars that we enter in races.

In a Nutshell

We have sold 3047 cars to dealers, 806 of these have already been delivered. We are shipping from 15 to 18 cars a day.

The only man who doesn't praise the Chalmers "30" is the man who doesn't own one.

Chalmers-Detroit "Forty" Touring Car, $2750

The Chalmers-Detroit "Forty" is a dandy car, as a thousand users know. It is by all odds the best medium-priced car on the market.

The day of mere extravagance in automobile buying is over. People nowadays will not pay $4000 or $5000 merely for the purpose of saying that they spent that much for an automobile.

What more could you get for $4000 or $5000 than you can get in the Chalmers-Detroit "Forty" at $2750? More power, and more weight, perhaps. Why more power? The "Forty" will do anything that any other car will do. As far as more weight is concerned, it will merely add to the cost of upkeep.

The "Forty" is the speediest, quietest, most economical car of its class. It has won first place as a hill climber; it has won dozens of contests in speed and endurance.

So, far, we have delivered 178 of the 1909 "Forty." Our capacity for the year is only 500. Last year we ran about 200 short of the demand, and there is sure to be a shortage this year. So that if you want a "Forty" please place your order now, either for immediate delivery or for future delivery.

Made in two styles—touring car and roadster—$2750.

PIONEER AUTOMOBILE COMPANY

901 GOLDEN GATE AVE., SAN FRANCISCO

520 TWENTIETH ST., OAKLAND

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

TOWN TALK

CHRISTMAS 1908

PALACE HOTEL

Inseparably Identified with the Social Traditions of San Francisco

PALACE HOTEL COMPANY

OPERATING THE

PALACE AND FAIRMONT HOTELS

PRICE 25 CTS

AT HOTEL DEL MONTE, the Paradise of the Pacific, Christmas week is one of the most delightful of the year. The holiday spirit pervades the place. The superb grounds with magnificent trees, shrubs and flowers soothe and refresh. The golf and tennis grounds invite, the perfect roads tempt to horseback rides or brisk motor trips. The excellent cuisine and perfect service minister to your physical comfort. A warm welcome awaits you. Make your plans for the week-end there. Write for rates and reservations. H. R. WARNER, Manager.

Cresta Blanca

The Standard Wine of California

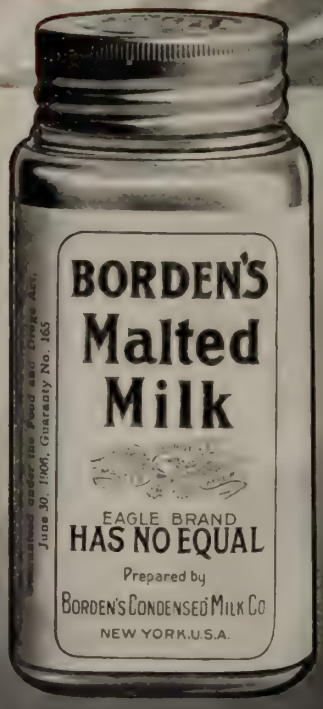
WETMORE, BOWEN & CO.
New York San Francisco Chicago

THERE'S a lot of solid comfort
In old Cresta Blanca wine,
If you're kind of out of humor
Or in trouble in your mind,
When you're feeling awful lonesome
And don't know what to do,
There's a heap of satisfaction
If you take a glass or two.

HOTEL VENDOME SAN JOSE

¶ This famous hostelry of the Santa Clara Valley is unsurpassed in the West for beauty of environment and for those qualities which contribute to ease, comfort and contentment. The atmosphere of this hotel is ideal, redolent as it is of a hospitality that is peculiarly gratifying to wanderers from home. Everything about the hotel reflects the genial personality of the host, Mr. H. W. Lake, who is probably the most experienced hotel executive in the state. The situation of the Vendome is such that it is most inviting to motorists, which is evidenced by the fact that it is always the objective point of automobile parties from either side of the bay. At the Vendome they receive special attention and the accommodations for them are complete.

BYRON HOT SPRINGS HOTEL



Nestled among the foothills of Contra Costa County---a pleasant automobile ride from San Francisco---is a hotel comfortable and refined in its appointments, possessing a delightful environment and a spring whose curative waters have long been famous throughout the world. Particularly favored in its location it has always been a popular terminal for automobile parties. Everything is provided for their comfort and convenience.

You Are Faithfully Served By the Three Standard Milk Products

BORDEN'S

THE BORDEN STANDARD FOR MILK PRODUCTS

was established before the existence of Food Laws, and is the most valuable safeguard you can have on your milk supply, as it is backed by RESPONSIBILITY and WELL TRAINED EXPERIENCE of over FIFTY YEARS.

See that the label bears the name of

Borden's Condensed Milk Co.

"Leaders of Quality"

Selling Representatives, JOHNSON-LOCKE MERCANTILE CO., 213 Sansome St., San Francisco, Cal.

In the World's Eye
MURINE
EYE REMEDY Makes Weak Eyes Strong
Sick Eyes Well
Dull Eyes Bright
Does Not Smart
Soothes Eye Pain
An Eye Tonic
Sold Everywhere.
Prepared in the Laboratory of the Murine Eye Remedy Co.
Chicago, U.S.A.
MURINE
EYE
REMEDY
POSITIVE CURE
STRINGENT, TONIC.
ANTISEPTIC.

THE GRAND STAND ON THE EMERYVILLE RACE TRACK
On Thanksgiving Day, 1908.

NEW CALIFORNIA JOCKEY CLUB

RACING

AT

EMERYVILLE, CALIFORNIA

EVERY WEEK DAY---RAIN OR SHINE

STAKES TO BE RUN FOR SEASON 1908-1909

1.	Opening Handicap	Added Money,	$2,000
2.	Oakland Handicap	Added Money,	2,000
3.	Thanksgiving Handicap	Added Money,	2,000
4.	Crocker Selling Stakes	Added Money,	2,000
5.	Pacific-Union Handicap	Added Money,	2,000
6.	Sacramento Handicap	Added Money,	2,000
7.	Christmas Handicap	Added Money,	3,000
8.	New Year Handicap	Added Money,	2,000
9.	Follansbee Handicap	Added Money,	2,000
10.	Andrew Selling Stakes	Added Money,	2,000
11.	Lissak Handicap	Added Money,	2,000
12.	Burns Handicap	Added Money,		$10,000
13.	Palace Hotel Handicap	Added Money,		2,000
14.	California Derby	Added Money,		5,000
15.	California Oaks	Added Money,		3,000
16.	Waterhouse Cup	Added Money,		5,000
17.	Thornton Stakes	Added Money,		5,000
18.	Gunst Stakes	Added Money,		2,000
19.	Undine Stakes	Added Money,		2,000
20.	Bell Stakes	Added Money,		2,000
21.	Gebhard Handicap	Added Money,		2,500

THOS. H. WILLIAMS, PRESIDENT

PERCY W. TREAT, SECRETARY

BOOTH'S CRESCENT BRAND

The Most Delicious Fish Put in Tins

CALIFORNIA

BROILED MACKEREL

(SARDINIA CAERULEUS)

Packed in SPICE, MUSTARD or TOMATO SAUCE as you prefer

20c Everywhere

MONTEREY PACKING COMPANY, Monterey, Cal.
F. E. BOOTH, Sole Agent, Sacramento and Drumm Sts., San Francisco

ALL RIGHTS SECURED

Of all Scented Soaps Pears' Otto of Rose is the Best

TOWN TALK

THE PACIFIC WEEKLY

Vol. XVII. San Francisco, December 26, 1908. No. 852.

YOSEMITE FALLS IN MIDWINTER.

Glistening in their mantle of snow the scenic wonders of the famous valley of the Sierras are never so enchanting as at this season of the year.

WHERE ONCE THE RUINS WERE.

Districts that have been metamorphosed by mechanical genius.

MARKET STREET LOOKING EAST FROM POWELL.

The massive structure on the left is the James Flood Building which was damaged by the fire. The Emporium is on the right. Nothing but its facade was left standing. It has been rebuilt and is again occupied by the Emporium Dry Goods Company.

AT POST, MARKET AND MONTGOMERY STREETS.

The triangular Crocker Bank Building in the foreground is the only one that was in existence before the fire. It has been completely restored.

THE MONUMENTAL HIBERNIA BANK BUILDING.

This beautiful granite structure was rendered untenantable by fire. It has been completely restored.

THE LONDON AND PARIS NATIONAL BANK.

This beautiful specimen of architecture will soon adorn the northwest corner of Sansome and Sutter streets.

CALIFORNIA STREET AT SANSOME.

A section of the city laid waste by fire. The beautiful granite building in the foreground is the new home of the Bank of California. Only the frontage is here shown.

LOOKING EAST ON MISSION FROM THIRD.

Much of the wholesale trade has located along this thoroughfare since the fire. The buildings are new.

CALIFORNIA STREET LOOKING EAST FROM KEARNY.

The insurance and banking center of San Francisco where massive structures have replaced antiquated shacks.

CHINATOWN BY DAYLIGHT.

CHINATOWN ILLUMINATED BY ELECTRICITY.

These buildings along Dupont street from California northward were erected on the ruins of the old Chinese quarter.

THE CHRONICLE BUILDING.

The new home of the San Francisco Chronicle is at the junction of Kearny, Market and Geary streets. It is a monument to the enterprise of Mr. M. H. de Young who began the work of rebuilding before the ashes were cold.

THIRD STREET LOOKING NORTH FROM MISSION.

This street connects the city's great highway with the depot of the Southern Pacific Company. It was swept by the fire a distance of eight blocks all of which have been rebuilt.

MARKET STREET LOOKING EAST FROM GRANT AVENUE.

This is one of the main office districts through which the great fire swept.

THE ST. FRANCIS HOTEL, UNION SQUARE.

The sections of the city seen on the left and right of this picture were entirely destroyed by the fire.

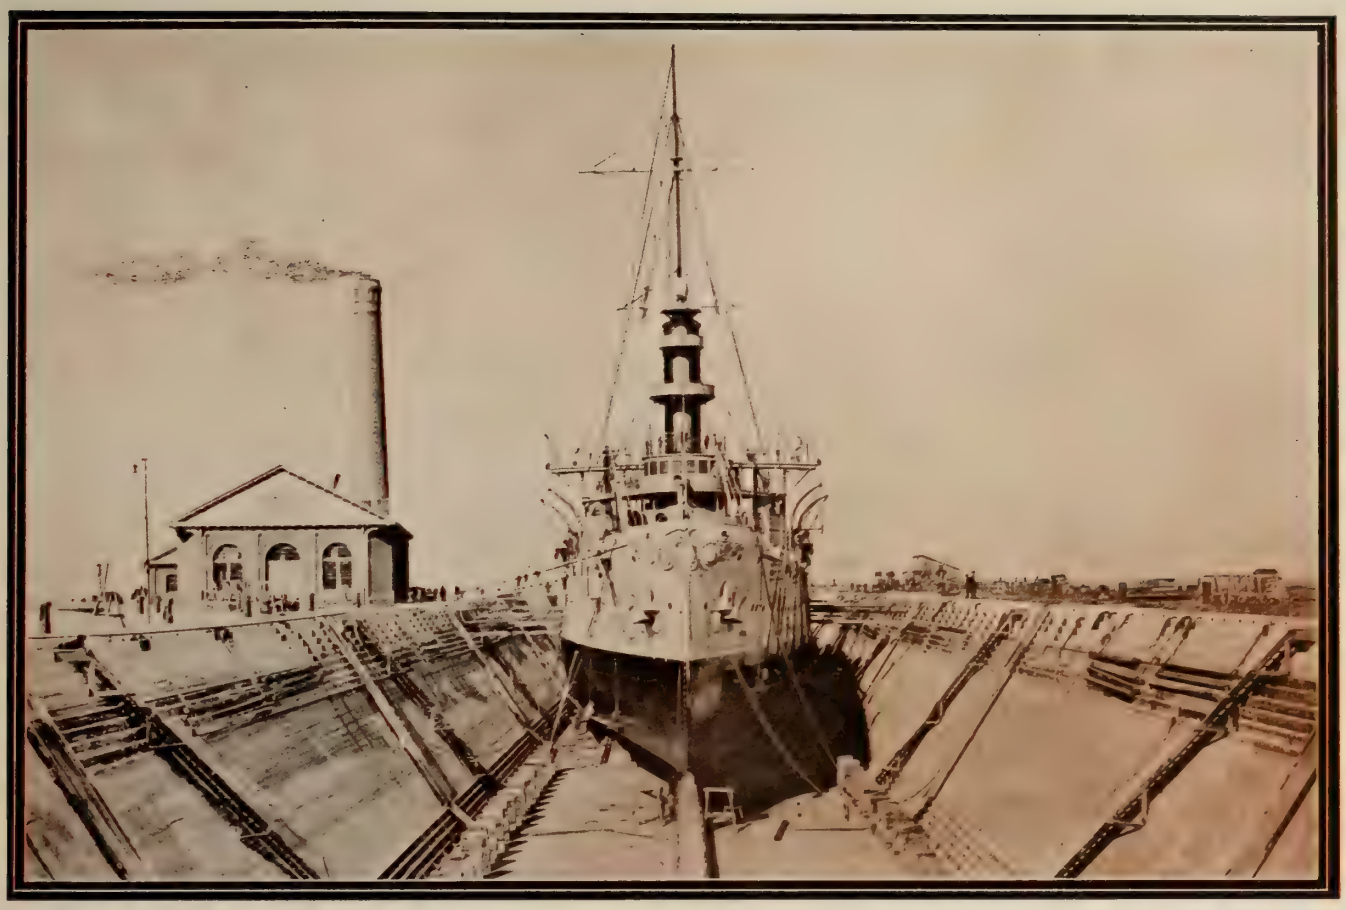
LOOKING EAST ON MARKET FROM STOCKTON STREET.

THE CENTER OF THE RETAIL DISTRICT.

Sutter and Grant avenue.

THE BANK BUILDING OF THE UNION TRUST COMPANY.
To be erected at the junction of Market, O'Farrell and Grant Avenue.

UNION SQUARE.
In the heart of San Francisco. The surrounding territory was swept by fire. This view is from the St. Francis Hotel.



WINTER SPORT IN THE YOSEMITE.

ON THE BEACH AT DEL MONTE.

The idea of the extremes of temperature in California is conveyed by these two pictures, both of which were taken on January 1, 1908.

THE "MILWAUKEE" IN THE HUNTERS' POINT DRYDOCK.

THE STEAMSHIP "MANCHURIA" UNDERGOING REPAIRS.

These mammoth dry docks on the west shore of San Francisco Bay are part of the plant of the Union Iron Works. They are the largest dry docks on the Pacific Coast. In them may be docked the biggest vessels afloat.

SAN FRANCISCO'S NEW SKYLINE.

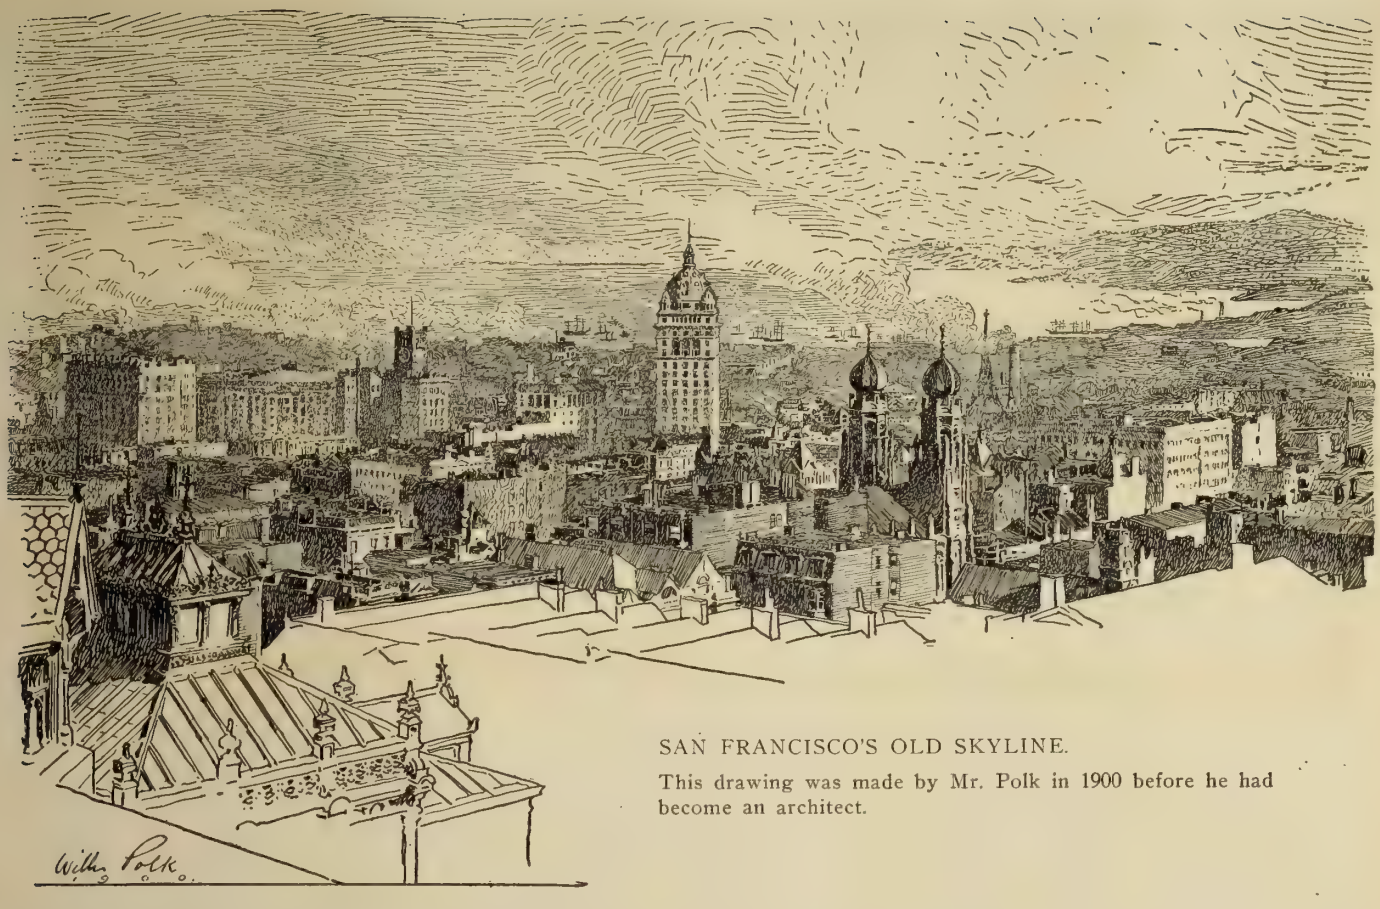
Contrary to custom this drawing was sought at the hands of an architect rather than an artist in drawing, the purpose being to obtain exactness of detail.

The Rebuilding of San Francisco

By Willis Polk

San Francisco has been almost rebuilt. Architecturally it is impressive and there is much of the desirable element of beauty in its massive as well as in its distinctly monumental piles. While the average observer may not be able to appreciate all the artistic features of the new city, certainly none can fail to be impressed by the stateliness and solidity of the whole.

What has been already accomplished is marvelous. The work that has been done exceeds in volume, for the length of time, any similar achievement in history. But properly to apprehend the stupendousness of the achievement one must reflect on the adverse and most discouraging conditions through which the people of this city have struggled and on the obstacles which they have surmounted; the actual dead loss of five hundred million of dollars in excess of the total insurance; insufficient transportation facilities for bringing in building materials; an active, well organized body of labor employed at wages higher than are paid in any other city; a general financial depression throughout the country; a community divided against itself, and a choice assortment of other ills too numerous to mention.



Yet it is doubtful if a greater amount of building could have been done had conditions been the reverse; had all circumstances been favorable instead of discouraging. So whatever view of the matter is taken there is abundant reason for self-felicitation, and as we contemplate what has been done there is much to excite our admiration and surely there is much to stimulate our interest in architecture. Naturally in these days the critical faculty is receiving much exercise. Everybody has probably reached a conclusion respecting the building that comes nearest to realizing all the most desirable elements of architecture. On this subject there is great diversity of opinion. And of buildings that have provoked discussion there is probably none upon which men so widely and vehemently differ as the new Palace Hotel. Architecturally this building is really beautiful. It has all the great qualities such as symmetry, simplicity and reasonable scale of parts, all artistically combined, producing a general effect of quiet dignity. It is a building that will wear well in the sense that it will grow in popular esteem. Structurally it is no better than its wonderful predecessor whose splendid walls defied earthquake and fire. We shall miss the old Palace but we shall learn to love the new one. While most of our new buildings have been constructed to meet urgent necessities and have been designed to meet purely utilitarian needs they as a whole are really beautiful from an artistic point of view. Worthy of especial mention are the Phelan building, the Hotel St. Francis, the Fairmont, the Bank of California, the Bank of Italy, the Humboldt Bank, the Emporium, the Postal-Telegraph Building and the Hibernia Bank.

Architecturally our banks have taken the lead in the making of concessions to art. Antoine Borel & Co., the Security, the Mercantile Trust, the Italian-American and other banks have been completed, and now the Union Trust and the London and Paris National are about to erect beautiful buildings.

If under stress, while meeting the necessities of the moment, we devote so much thought to beauty, what can we not accomplish in the more orderly and conservative building of the future? Is not our city destined to become not only the Paris of America, or, as McKim said of New York, possess as much Rennaissance as Italy and France combined and of itself become, like Venice, a city unique in the world, noted not only for the beauty of its buildings, the charm of its life and atmosphere, the loveliness of its women, the integrity and achievements of its men, but for its wide and far-reaching hospitality—a city of beautiful buildings, wide boulevards, unending parks and other attractions that go with a world's capital.

Our annual fiestas, our conventions, our every-day life, our cafes, and other amusements will all make our future bright and our investments secure.

From a structural point of view, our new city is already superior to our-old one. This is not because we have paid any heed to the lessons taught us by the earthquake and fire, but for the reason that the projectors of our most important buildings have ordered construction of a higher class than that which previously existed. However, numerous buildings have been constructed without considering damage by earthquake as probable or destruction by fire in case of a conflagration as a reasonable possibility.

SAN FRANCISCO'S OLD SKYLINE.

This drawing was made by Mr. Polk in 1900 before he had become an architect.

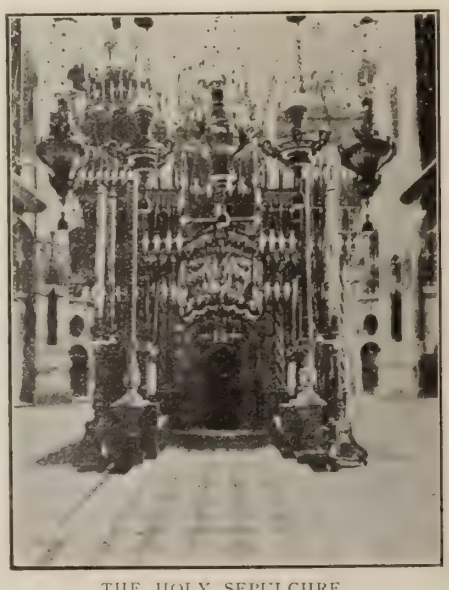
Damage by earthquake can be guarded against in nearly any case. Earthquake damage is not always the result of inferior or faulty workmanship or materials, but is more generally the result of ignorant or incompetent designing. The old City Hall contains specimens of various kinds of construction subject to damage by earthquake, and it also contains specimens of intelligent designing combined with honest construction which withstood the violence of the late earthquake. In the burnt district the fire left a tangled mass of steel which would have all remained standing had an additional expenditure of about two per cent of the total cost of the buildings been made to protect this steel against fire.

These lessons and the warnings they convey—while they have not been heeded to any extent in the rush of the rebuilding, are bound to carry weight and have due effect in the course of time.

AS MARKET STREET LOOKED IN THE OLD DAYS

To Bethlehem---A Christmas Pilgrimage



By Frank Scudamore

It cannot, I fear, be denied that the constantly increasing facilities afforded to modern travelers in strange lands detract somewhat from the charm of their journeyings. Sometimes, indeed, it appears to me that the great touring firms have a good deal to answer for. To be sure they have rendered infinite service to the world at large, since by their admirable organizations they have opened practically all the interesting places of the earth to the many, the length of whose purses, if no other reason, would in the past have rendered a visit prohibitive. Without wishing to appear selfish I will confess that my first visit to the Holy Land—more years ago, alas! than I care to remember—had for me many more attractions than did my last and very recent one. And this not, I honestly think, on account of its novelty, for, as is the case with everyone who has dwelt much in Eastern countries, their beauties and their quaintnesses, and their peoples and manners, take with each passing year a firmer hold on the heart of a Westerner. But there was about that first visit a more infinite variety pervading all its phases and enriching each sensation than can now be found in the much more comfortable, but, alas! more commonplace, method of journeying.

There was no railway in those days from Jaffa to Jerusalem, and no steam launches on the Sea of Galilee, or char-a-bancs in which to drive to Bethlehem from one or other of the numerous hotels in the "City of Peace." The would-be pilgrim then made the journey from Beyrout either on horseback or by a very crazy old diligence, and after turning off at Storra to gaze on the giant ruins of Baalbek, journeyed through the lovely valley of Damascus to that city, whence he was fain to take camel to Jerusalem. And it may be said that the delights and excitements and, at times, some thrilling moments of that journey, richly repaid those bold spirits who undertook it. It was always an experiment, results of which were uncertain. One could not know at any given time what would be the attitude of the Druses or Maronites who might be encountered on the road, and assuredly no novice at camel-riding ever had a dull moment when mounted. Yes, what with the brazen sky above, and the bumping camel beneath, and possible marauding Bedouins on the skyline, that trip was an experience to be remembered.

Yet even in these days of easy-made tours, of pleasure-cum-culture expeditions, aided (or, as scoffers might say, burdened) by the learned discourses of the official lecturer attached to the party, it is still only the privileged few to whom is given the opportunity of visiting the Christian treasure-houses of Palestine. And thus, although it has been written of countless times, some impressions of a Christmastide visit to Bethlehem may prove of interest.

It is at Jaffa that the voyager gets his first shock of sensation, for modern enterprise cannot subdue all the elements, and the surf outside the port today is no less disagreeable than in the time of St. Paul. And when Nature is unkind the crossing of that surf line is no light enterprise, nor, indeed, devoid of considerable danger. I have known whole days to pass when it was impossible to leave the ship, and I have watched for four hours at a stretch the desperate efforts of the lithe, powerful Arab boatmen to approach our vessel's side without the almost certainty that their boat, big and heavy though it was, must be dashed to pieces. They are, in good sooth, marvelous fellows, these men, full of pluck and daring and skill, and it is not a little wonderful to see the dexterity with which on occasion they will catch in their arms the baggage of their passengers, and even the passengers themselves, while their craft is alternately tossed as high as our bulwarks, and sunk twenty feet below them.

THE HOLY SEPULCHRE

At Christmastide Palestine is to be seen at its best, for the days are delightfully, but never oppressively, warm, and the nights are clear and frosty. A dull day or a rainy one would be regarded as wholly untoward, and a matter for bazaar comment during a period of years; though, to be sure, the present writer has once seen the streets of Jaffa ankle-deep in rain-water in December, and has even tossed uncomfortably outside that dangerous port on Christmas Eve in a snow blizzard. Occasionally, too, the glorious white dome of the sky becomes obscured by a "Haboob," which is a dust-storm of brief, but aggressive, violence. But this unpleasantness is chiefly to be expected in the Ides of March, when it claims for itself fifty days of privilege, known as the "Khamsin." It is rare that the visitor to the Holy Land at other seasons of the year is inconvenienced by stress of weather in carrying out the plans formed for his journey even before it was undertaken. Perhaps in some measure is due to these unvarying climatic conditions that familiar phrase, "the unchanging East," which has been patented by a popular writer. Otherwise, owing to the electric trams that run from Cairo to the Pyramids, the vast dam that confines the mighty torrent of the Nile, colleges at Khartoum and regattas on the Zambesi, not to mention a thousand other evidences of the encroachments made by vexatious Westerners on the placid Orient, the expression "unchanging East" would at first sight seem a little peculiar.

And yet, to those who know, the East is still unchanged, and remains today in the life of its peoples just as it was, say, two thousand years ago, when the wonderful event, which was to change and remould the destinies of the entire world, was as yet but dimly foreshadowed. Today, as then, may be seen in Damascus that needle-gate through whose eye, we know, a camel may not pass; and today, again, Justinian's viaduct still brings water from the hills to the thirsty folk of Constantinople; while one may picnic beneath the tree near Bugukdere which sheltered Godfrey de Bouillon's tent. But most of all, it is in the dress and manners and methods of these Eastern folk that the unchangeability of the East is chiefly proclaimed. The Arabs of the Hedgaz today drape themselves in the same costumes as did their ancestors who guarded and fought for possession of the "Kaaba" at Mecca, long before the dawn of Islam. And women in Jerusalem and Olivet, in Bethlehem and Damascus, wear still as a headdress that silver horn engraved with mystic character (of which they ignore the meaning), which had its peculiar and deep tribal significance in the days of the Psalmist.

Perhaps the deepest and most permanent impression left on the visitor to the Holy Land is that of color. Take for instance, a sunset falling over Jerusalem, as seen from the Mount of Olives. There is about a sunset in these wide, white, cloudless lands one salient peculiarity. It is accentuated in the desert, for there you may watch the great orb, angry red, sink slowly to the edge of the horizon always in a white sky, and there hang as though poised and waiting a command; and then, instantly, it drops out of sight, as though it had fallen into some mystic sea. Then arises, and spreads, and rolls out in wondrous hues, that range from gold and crimson to a pink and purple—a vast spreading cloud that might be the steam raised by the sudden impact of the world and the infinite. And in five minutes these glories have spent themselves, and night falls, quickly, like the curtain at a play.

Yet, ere the swift darkness comes, the whole of the quaint old walled city stands out, for a brief space, clear and cameo-like, against the roseate clouds. The ragged Western fortress, the spreading buildings of the Christian Church, the mighty dome of the Mosque of El Saka, built by the prophets, the Rothschild and Montefiore almshouses, and strewn round and about them the many convents and religious establishments that crowd this city of churches, are all projected vividly against the vision with a sharpness that almost is a shock—and then the night.

That Eastern night! The earth is still warm, and there is a kind of shimmering dry glow that rises from it to your knees as you pace in the thick dust of the streets; and a cool, slight breeze, yet more a murmur of air than a breeze, plays deliciously upon the face. There is, moreover, in these Eastern cities (I shall be laughed at for saying it, but I shall be upheld by those who know) a quaint, peculiar fragrance that comes borne from the desert lands on the light airs after sundown, and is very grateful to the senses. They are early people, these simple Eastern folk, or, at any rate, such of them as have not been spoiled by the constant flow of tourists; and in the native quarters of Jerusalem you may find that quite soon after dark the little flaring lamps in the booths and sheeshas have been extinguished, the zithers are silenced, the tric-trac boards are put away, the quaint, misshapen shutters stacked over the melon seller's bulging booth, and all the town silent and slumbering. Strolling, however, in these dreamy starlit thoroughfares, you fall from time to time into the midst of little encampments of voyagers. They have journeyed from all parts of the land, and if they thus take their rest "al fresco," it must not be supposed that they are constrained thereto by poverty, or even by lack of accommodation in the "Hans" and "caravanserais." It is choice only that has prompted them, coupled, maybe, with a certain frugality of mind that is an Arab quality. They may be native tourists, these Bedouin visitors, in their black camel-hair robes and flaunting "kufiicks," or grave men of business, with half a year's produce in the great leather "hourges," stacked within the circles of their sleeping camels. But there they are, placid and happy, with their narghiles alight still, and the faint sweet perfume of the tumbek filling the air, while they chat soberly and in subdued tones.

IN BETHLEHEM

Bethlehem (the House of Bread) is some six miles only from Jerusalem, and about fourteen the hither side of the famed old city of Hebron. The route cannot be said to be picturesque, and were it not for those inseparable associations that bring pilgrims here from all parts of the world, would appeal in little save, maybe, in its peculiar wildness and stern inhospitality. There is a deep valley and a rugged plateau to be crossed, and then a downward tract, stone-strewed, and (despite the tourist influence) ill-kept, and there are but few inhabitations to break the solitude. There is, indeed, to be seen near the wayside a "Ziaret," one of the many to be found strewn over all parts of the East. These buildings, which are ordinarily domed, are really tombs of Mahommedan saints, or shrines raised to their memories, and in them tradition has ever permitted fugitives from justice to find sanctuary. This particular "Ziaret" has attaching to it a story of peculiar interest, in that, according to Bedouin lore, it was here that Jacob once encamped with Rachel, whose grave, or rather its site, is pointed out as being near to the northwest corner of Bethlehem, and close to the road from Jerusalem. The Arabs, who regard such monuments as this with every reverence, who call Jerusalem the "Beit-el-Mukdis," or "House of Holiness," and who call Bethany "Lazarieh," or "the abode of Lazarus," and who hold theories which are in conflict with those of the monks in Bethany as to the site of Lazarus' tomb, narrate all our Bible stories much as we know them ourselves.

Unfriendly though it is, the road from Jerusalem to Bethlehem is a greatly peopled thoroughfare, for in its vicinity, though not much in view, are many of the olive groves, vineyards, and vegetable gardens that supply the town, and the traveler is constantly met by groups of country folks, who are now so accustomed to the passage of European visitors, and, it may be said, do so benefit by their presence, that they have of late thrown off much of that disdainful arrogance that marked their meetings with strangers not many years ago. The folks in the little hamlets scattered throughout this district are in the main Christians, but on the road may be met parties of those hereditary enemies, Druses and Maronites, and of course many of those children of Israel, whose fair skin and red hair is a peculiarity of the Jewish race in this part of the world.

The first aspect of Bethlehem, viewed from the rocky approach that rises from the stone-strewn desert, is impressive chiefly from the fact of the numerous crosses, planted on the lofty peaked roofs of a number of houses, which seem to dominate all the little city. The bulk, however, of the houses in this little unwalled town are the square-built, flat-roofed, two-floored and narrow-windowed structures, built of dazzlingly white stone, that are equally typical of Moorish and Algerian modern architecture. There is in Bethlehem one feature that cannot fail to impress the Western visitor, and this is that the guardians of the law, the keepers of the peace in this stronghold of the Christian churches, where, moreover, the entire population is Christian, are the Moslem soldiers of the Sultan. You find them everywhere here (as, indeed, in Jerusalem), at the gates, at the street corners, at the entrances to the churches, and even in the most sacred inner shrines, placed there, if you please, to prevent strife between these Christians who should so dearly love one another. Let it be said to their honor, that they perform their duties with a perfect sobriety, and a courtliness that might well teach a lesson to those

(Continued on Page 73.)

Christmas Sentiments

By Harry Cowell

Them's my sentiments! Yes? But whose, in the name of Lindley Murray? Surely not those of his friend, Harry Cowell, in such incredibly bad grammar! Oh, hang grammar and grammarian goose high, and mistletoe not so high, and holly where you will, and the stocking where you know, and me not at all, especially, not in the format of golden sentiments upon the pink walls of your boudoirs. Them's, in un-highfallutin, ungrammatical, downright United States, my Christmas sentiments! At a time when the whole world must needs ring and rhyme with folly and jolly, and the like, nothing save melancholy barred, who cares a continental for fine French phrases and the mincing of one's words, as if they were meat and other things most delectable in the mouth, though not a little difficult of digestion? Christmas sentiments indeed! Precisely, proseur; not in word merely! Them's mine, and the saint's. What in—Lapland, does he know about parsing and parsoning, or any such pedantry? Even if he does unwittingly put a wrong construction on our words; what of it? We cannot all be wits. Remembering that he is a foreigner, and our guest, let us accept, in the spirit offered, the presents and sentiments which are handed down to us, by way of the chimney, year after year and generation after generation, on one day, or night, out of the three hundred and sixty-five—not to be pedantic and except leap-year, which gives woman a one-third chance against man the proposer!

Be sure, O lass after my own heart! you give the generous saint his full name, nor, begrudging him any honor, nick off the end, and so find your stingy-sweet self, not in the gentle hands beloved of children, nor in the country of hands at all, but set aside from seasonable joys, in the restrictive claws you wot of, his majesty's, the Old Nick of Time Immemorial!

But better that than to be bedeviled into loving your neighbor, and mistletoed into kissing the wrong man, and turkeyed into a harem-scare'em view of life in general and of love in particular.

To be sure, there may be just a hint of Bacchus, gentle as the stir of the Earth that causes him to turn over in his wintry bed and smile in his sleep at his dream of the blossom face of Spring, with its never-failing promise that, or ever again the night cometh—wherein nor Christian man nor Grecian god may work—the grape shall once more put to shame all the princely dyes of Tyre, making glad the eyes of mortals, as doth its heart's blood their hearts.

'Tis then my sainty better-half, the Muse, insists on usurping the head of the house, taking the reins into her own hands, giving the "dears" their heads, their hearts' desires, and ours-heads, hearts, and desires!—and there's no stopping her or them, but there is the—other saint to pay! She fancies she knows all about it. I know better. I say to her: "Let me drive—love. It's man's prerogative! One has to draw the lines somewhere, and —how, and—what tightly. You really are worse than that baby there of yours ("ours" being reserved of me for moments when the child shows the harmlessness of the dove; "mine," when the wisdom of the serpent. No even half-divine offspring ever showed both at the same time)! See him, with pad and pencil, trying to figure it all out, and no hand at figures, any more than you, save at your own. He has Santa Claus on the brain, as have you, my sweet, but knows neither how, when, nor where to draw the "reins.—dear," as he calls them, bless his stupid little heart!"

"Oh, hang the expense!" she cries; "we must please the dears!" (One might think I had forgotten the expense when I was hanging things, but I hadn't. Believing in the equality of the sexes, and knowing only too well that she would do it latter on, I left that to my wife.) "We really must!" she insists; whereupon I: "Them's my sentiments to a "t," or a dot (over the i), if that likes you better! You mean, of course, the dear public. But do I not know how to demean myself? They are not to be cried down, nor laughed to scorn, but written up and down to, and made to smile and weep and cough—pleased, in short, as you say. And, as I well know, and you, my serio-comic love, the dears are as easily made to smile as a bride with beautiful teeth, and as easily made to weep as a merry widow, desirous of being comforted, with eyes beautiful enough to be kissed dry, and so saved from ruin!"

But enough, to take up the word, of these little family affairs; though, after all, what is Christmas, from happened beginning to hoped for end, but a family affair?—its lowly human-divine beginning, as portrayed in words, by the saints of religion, Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John; and, in oils, by the saints of art, Raphael, Murillo, Titian, and Da Vinci; and its end, as portrayed, in the most golden of all speech, try the Founder himself, as the making of one vast holy family of humanity, in His day, as in ours, so wickedly shaken apart by (shall we call them, wife?) family jars! Is it not the day of days for the amicable settling of old quarrels between members of the lesser or larger family? Is it not child's day, the day whereon we grown-ups become as little children and are given as our Christmas present the entry for a space into the kingdom of happiness? Is not the soul of sadness in the smile of Christmas the seeing, in the yule-log fires, of faces present only there,—in spirit, on parole, as it were, from purgatory—a funeral most private, as befits its sacredness; a simple sad family affair, with the salt of the tears time-strained away, so that the residue is, in effect, sweeter than many a boasted boisterous joy? Enough of these little family affairs! Can we really ever have enough of them? Ask Roosevelt. Without them, where would Christmas be? Nowhere! "Utopia! you mean!" cries some old Scrooge of a bachelor. You mean wretch! What do you mean? Scrooge, Scrooge, you miserable dotard! how many Christmases would your Utopia see, without them? And the few it might see, how much worth seeing would they be? Tell me that, Scrooge, and hie thee, or ever it be too late, to where hangs the mistletoe, mercifully interceding in thy behalf, indeed, in lieu of thee! Finally, are not the several prices of those slippers, suspenders, neck-ties, etc.,. family secrets kept by women in a way that is nothing short of free-masonry; jealously guarded as is the secret of typewriter-ribbon-making by man? Other secrets there are anent the typewriter, that speech and a lucid diction were given me to conceal. In truth, were I to do my very best to reveal them, and it would no doubt all end by my leaving the reader in the dark. Would to heaven that I might break off with the abruptness and self-confidence of your finished godsip and say—"But that would be telling!" There are things—no end of them—that in my heart of hearts I know that I know, and time and again, with my head of heads and my hand of hands have I tried to tell them, but never yet told them, nor ever shall tell. After all is said and done, man finds it easier to tell what he doesn't know than what he does, what isn't so than what is, not what he means but what he means not. Man is ever heard to say what he does not mean. Them's my sentiments. Christmas? Yes! Do not for a vain moment imagine that the most optimistic of all saints differ with me in these opinions, no matter how much he may from me in other essentials. Deeds speak louder than words, do they? As a rule, you admit. Do you? Does the saint, think you, always say what he means? often? once in a while? ever? Who can rise up of a Christmas morning, look snow in the face—or, if in California, flowers—and say, his hand on his heart: "I have never failed to read aright the message left over-night in my stocking!"—and that, be the mood he rises in ever so much holier-than-thine, modest reader, mine? By means of two hyphens I have brought two words closer together; how much closer home to you have I brought my meaning by means of two hyphens? To you, of course! But to how many besides you? Ah, reader dear, had every one thy discernment, and writing were a pasttime for the gods, and every day Christmas. See, I give thee herewith thy box. Fear not to open it. Greek gods, as Heine so beautifully fancied, may, of a fact, have disguised themselves and so found service under the new regime; but never, never, never (Harry Cowell's word for it, Harry Heine's to the contrary notwithstanding), would Pandora, if I know ought of the lady, serve behind a candy counter!

But all this savors of Pagan sweet, and is untimely! Yes and no—Pagan, yet not untimely; just the suspicion of Paganism's celebration of the turn of the year, which the natural man, be he ever so matter-of-fact, must needs behold with eyes that brighten. And the Pagan was a poet. Anyway, you retort, it has long since ceased to ring and rhyme, if not with folly, at least, with holly and jolly, and all the goodly Christmasy rest of them, and is beginning to get in tune with the forbidden, if infinite, melancholy of things. Well, so the season ever ends; and all's well that ends so. As the spirit of some diviner Dante, permitted—by special grace, for especial purpose of God, to meet, say, especial need of man—to visit the abode of the blest, would return to earth not without a touch of regret; so do we go back from the cheer of Christmas to the drear work-a-days, dutifully, but not feather-footed. Them's my feelings. Fool I may be; fool I must be: for I have taken a fool's advice (Sir Philip Sidney's—whom his own Muse-wife called "fool!" as he, confirming the word, tells us). I have looked into my heart, and written. For the thinker, Christmas is not all turkey and champagne; sometimes, no turkey at all, no champagne! No wonder I once looked into my heart and made this epigram: "To think is to be sad!"

Herodias

(This masterpiece of French literature, one of the finest examples of the artistry of the incomparable Flaubert, was adapted for Town Talk. It is in this story that Flaubert gives his famous vivid description of the Salome dance. To read this story is to mingle with persons who walked the earth in the days of Christ, getting the while a breath of the atmosphere of scenes that He witnessed.—Editor Town Talk)

I.

Within the citadel of Machaerus on the Eastern shore of the Dead Sea there was a palace adorned with porticoes and sheltered by a terrace along which ran a balustrade of sycamore-wood with tall poles arranged to hold a tent.

One morning before dawn, the Tetrarch Herod Antipas leaned on the balustrade and looked forth over the plain through which the Jordan flowed, and it filled him with dread to see the brown tents of the Arabs, the daughter of whose King he had cast aside to take Herodias, wife to one of his brothers, who lived in Italy.

Antipas was waiting succor from the Romans, and he was consumed with impatience. Suddenly he heard a voice in the distance, as if escaping from the bowels of the earth. It made him turn pale.

"Mannaeus! Mannaeus!" the voice called.

A man appeared, naked to the waist, like a masseur at a bath. He was very tall, aged, fleshless, and wore at his hip a cutlass in a copper sheath. His hair, brushed back and held in place by a comb, accentuated the height of his brow. His eyes were dull with drowsiness, but his teeth gleamed and his toes rested lightly on the flagstones, his whole body having the suppleness of a monkey and his face the impassiveness of a mummy.

"Where is he?" asked the Tetrarch.

Mannaeus replied, pointed with his thumb to something behind them:

"There! still there!"

"I thought that I heard him!"

And Antipas, having drawn a long breath of relief, inquired concerning Iaokanann, the same man whom the Latins called St. John the Baptist. Had those two men been seen again who had been admitted as a favor to his dungeon some months before; and had the purpose with which they had come been learned since?

Mannaeus replied:

"They exchanged some words with him in secret, like thieves at a cross-roads in the night. Then they went away towards Upper Galilee, announcing that they were the bearers of great tidings."

Antipas hung his head, then exclaimed in a tone of alarm:

"Keep him! keep him! And let no one enter! Lock the door fast! Cover the hole! None must even suspect that he lives!"

Before receiving these orders Mannaeus had carried them out; for Iaokanann was a Jew.

The Samaritan continued:

"At times he becomes excited, he longs to fly, he hopes for rescue. At other times he has the tranquil aspect of a sick beast; or else I see him walking to and fro in the darkness, saying: 'What matters it? That He may grow great, I must needs shrink!'"

Antipas and Mannaeus glanced at each other. But the Tetrarch was weary of reflection.

Some one touched him. He turned. Herodias stood before him.

A light purple robe covered her to the sandals. Having come forth hurriedly from her chamber, she wore neither necklace nor earrings; a tress of her black hair fell over one arm, and its end was lost to sight between her breasts. Her two open nostrils throbbed; a joyous expression of triumph lighted up her face; and in a loud voice, shaking the Tetrarch's arm, she said:

"Caesar loves us! Agrippa is in prison!"

"Who told you so?"

"I know it."

She added:

"It is for having aspired to Caius's empire!"

While living on their arms, he had schemed to obtain the title of king, which they, like him, coveted. But in the future no more fear! "Tiberius's dungeons are hard to open, and sometimes life is not secure therein!"

Antipas understood her; and, although she was Agrippa's sister, her atrocious purpose seemed to him justified. Such murders were a consequence of the state of affairs, a fatality attached to royal families. In Herod's they had become too numerous to count.

Then she set forth her plan: clients bought, letters discovered, spies at every door; and how she had succeeded in seducing Eutyches the denouncer. "Nothing deterred me! Have I not done even more for you? I have abandoned my daughter!"

After her divorce she had left the child in Rome, hoping to have others by the Tetrarch. She never mentioned her. He wondered why that outburst of affection.

The tent had been spread, and huge cushions were speedily brought to them. Herodias sank upon them and wept, turning her head to him. Then she passed her hand over her eyes, said that she proposed to think no more about it, that she was happy; and she recalled to his mind their chats yonder in the atrium, their meetings at the baths, their strolls along the Via Sacra, and the evenings at the great villas, amid the plashing of fountains, beneath arches of flowers, by the Roman Campagna. She gazed at him as of yore, nestling against his breast, with cajoling gestures. He pushed her away. The passion that she tried to kindle was so far away now! And all his misfortunes had flowed from it; for war had raged well-nigh twelve years. It had aged the Tetrarch. His shoulders were bent; in his sad-colored toga with a violet border, his white hair blended with his beard, and the sun, shining through the veil, bathed with light his troubled brow. Herodias's too was wrinkled; and, seated face to face, they eyed each other fiercely.

The roads over the mountain began to be peopled. Herdsmen drove their cattle, children dragged donkeys along, grooms led horses. Those who descended the heights above Machaerus disappeared behind the castle; others ascended the ravine opposite, and, having reached the town, discharged their burdens in the courtyards. They were the Tetrarch's purveyors, and servants preceding his guests.

But, at the foot of the terrace, on the left, an Essene appeared, in a white robe, barefooted, with a stoical air. Mannaeus, on the right, rushed forward, brandishing his cutlass.

"Kill him!" cried Herodias.

"Hold!" said the Tetrarch.

He stood still; the other did likewise.

Then they withdrew, each by a different stairway, walking backward, keeping their eyes fixed on each other.

"I know him!" said Herodias; "his name is Phanuel, and he seeks speech with Iaokanann, since you are blind enough to spare his life!"

Antipas suggested that he might some day be of use. His attacks upon Jerusalem would win to their side the rest of the Jews.

"No!" she said; "they accept all masters and are not capable of forming a fatherland!" As for him who stirred the people with hopes never lost since the days of Nehemiah, the best policy was to suppress him.

There was no need of haste in the Tetrarch's opinion. Iaokanann dangerous! Folly! he feigned to laugh at the idea.

"Hold your peace!" And she repeated the tale of her humiliation one day when she was going towards Gilead to gather balsam. People were putting on their clothes on the bank of a stream. On a low hill near by a man was speaking. He had a camel's skin about his loins, and his head resembled a lion's. "As soon as he saw me he spit out at me all the maledictions of the prophets. His eyes shot fire; his voice roared; he raised his arms as if to tear the thunder from on high. Impossible to fly! the wheels of my chariot were buried in sand to the axles; and I drove away slowly, sheltering myself beneath my cloak, my blood congealed by those insults, which fell like a shower of rain."

Iaokanann made life impossible to her. When he was taken and bound with cords, the soldiers were ordered to stab him if he resisted; he was as gentle as a lamb. They had put serpents in his dungeon; they were dead.

The futility of these tricks drove Herodias mad. Besides, what was the cause of his war against her? What interest guided him? His harangues, delivered to crowds, were circulated, spread abroad; she heard them everywhere, they filled the air. Against legions she would have been stout of heart. But that power, more harmful than the sword, and intangible, was stupefying, and she paced the terrace, livid with wrath, lacking words to express the passion that choked her.

She reflected, too, that the Tetrarch, yielding to public opinion, would perhaps deem it best to cast her off. In that case all would be lost! From childhood she had cherished the dream of mighty empire. It was to attain it that, deserting her first husband, she had allied herself to this one, who, she thought, had deceived her.

"I obtained a powerful support when I entered your family!"

"It is equal to yours!" rejoined the Tetrarch, simply.

Herodias felt the blood of the priests and kings who were her ancestors boiling in her veins.

"But your grandfather swept the temple of Ascalon! The others were shepherds, bandits, heads of caravans, a wandering horde, subject to Judah from the time of King David! All my ancestors vanquished yours! The first of the Maccabees drove you forth from Hebron; Hyrcanus forced you to be circumcised!" And, giving vent to the patrician's scorn for the plebeian, Jacob's hatred of Edom, she reproached him for his indifference to insults, for his mildness towards the Phoenicians, who betrayed him, his cowardly subservience to the people, who detested him. "You are like them, admit it! And you sigh for the Arab girl who danced around the stones! Take her! Go, live with her, in her canvas house! feed on her bread cooked in the ashes! drink the curdled milk of her sheep! kiss her blue cheeks! and forget me!"

The Tetrarch was no longer listening. He was gazing at the roof of a house, on which there was a young girl, and an old woman holding a parasol with a reed handle as long as a fisher's line. In the centre of the rug stood a great traveling-basket, open. Girdles, veils, jewels overflowed from it in a confused mass. Now and again the girl stooped towards those objects and shook them in the air. She was dressed like the Roman women, in a wrinkled tunic, with a peplum adorned with emerald tassels; and blue bands confined her hair, which was doubtless too heavy, for from time to time she put her hand to it. The shadow of the parasol hovered above her, half hiding her. Twice or thrice Antipas caught a glimpse of her shapely neck, the corner of an ear, or of a tiny mouth. But he saw her whole figure, from the hips to the neck, as she bent forward and drew herself up again with supple grace. He watched for the repetition of that movement, and his breath came faster; flames kindled in his eyes. Herodias observed him.

He asked: "Who is she?"

she answered that she had no knowledge, and left him, suddenly appeased.

The Tetrarch was awaited under the porticoes by the Galileans, the master of the writings, the chief of the pasturage, the director of the salt-wells, and a Jew of Babylon, in command of his horsemen. All hailed him with loud acclamations. Then he vanished towards the inner chambers.

Phanuel appeared at the angle of a passage.

"Ah! again? You came to see Iaokanann doubtless?"

"And you! I have to tell you something of moment."

And, following Antipas, he entered, at his heels, a dark apartment.

The light entered through a barrel opening that extended along the wall under the cornice. The walls were painted a dark pomegranate color, almost black. At the end stood an ebony bed, with cords of ox-hide. A golden buckler, above, gleamed like a sun.

Antipas walked the whole length of the room, and lay down on the bed.

Phanuel was standing. He raised his arm, and said in the attitude of one inspired:

"The Most High sends one of his sons to earth now and again. Iaokanann is such an one. If you oppress him you will be punished."

"It is he who persecutes me!" cried Antipas. "He demanded of me an impossible act. Since then he has rent me. And I was not harsh at the beginning! He has even sent forth from Machaerus men who overturn my provinces. A curse upon his life! Since he attacks me, I defend myself!"

"His fits of anger are too violent," replied Phanuel. "No matter! He must be set free."

"One does not set free raging beasts!" said the Tetrarch.

"Have no fear," the Essene replied. "He will go hence to the Arabs, the Gauls, the Scythians. His work is destined to reach to the ends of the earth!"

Antipas semed lost in a vision.

"His power is mighty! Against my will, I love him."

"Then let him be free!"

The Tetrarch shook his head. He feared Herodias, Mannaeus, and the unknown.

Phanuel strove to persuade him, alleging as a guaranty of his plans the submission of the Essenes to the King. People respected those poor men, unconquerable by torture, always clad in flax, and able to read the future in the stars.

Antipas recalled the words he had let fall a moment before.

"What is this thing which you said was of moment?"

(Continued on Page 75.)

The Blonde and the Brunette

By Major Ben C. Truman

After much careful and diversified study along certain lines for half a century I am constrained to believe and affirm that as between the perfect American Blonde and the perfect American Brunette the former is much more beautiful and attractive, although a statuesque brunette of perfection of form and feature is accounted by many as one of the most showy and magnificent of all living things. Up to a quarter of a century ago the proportion of blondes and other "light" people to brunetts and other "dark" people through the United States, except in Maryland, Florida, Louisiana, Texas and California, were as five to three. This could be partly accounted for from the fact that the early amalgamation of foreign blood with our English-American was of light Irish and light German stock, which has lately been lessened by the introduction of much more dark than light immigration, conspicuously from Italy, Austria, Turkey, Arabia, France, Mexico, Greece and Spain, and the greater willingness of these latter than the former to "multiply and replenish the earth." So that in another quarter of a century the "darks" will have caught up and passed the "lights," and especially as five-sixths of our Jews are dark; and, as is well known, are generous breeders.

One reason why the average blonde is better looking than the average brunette is because she has whiter skin, whiter teeth, and whiter hands than the brunette, which put her far in advance of her darker sister in real prettiness and real or seeming cleanness. On the other hand the eyes and lashes of the brunette are more attractive than those of the blonde, but not the eyebrows, which are generally too heavy or too bushy, and too irregularly near each other. The teeth of the brunette are longer and thus homelier than those of the blonde, and her ears and feet and hands are larger. The lips, cheeks and nails are redder and more attractive in the blonde than in the brunette; while as regards hair and neck and shoulder blades neither has the better of the other. Nearly the same may be said of forehead and the space between the eyes, except that the brunette is slightly in second place. The coming of the unspeakable mustache to the lip of the brunette seldom intrudes upon that of the blonde, while the embonpoint that frequently overtakes both is lesser and less vexatious with the latter than with the former. In fine, the commanding blonde is serener, of better temper and of sweeter expression that the commanding brunette, although she worries much more over little things than the latter.

The sweetly-faced woman at the opera, say, or on any swell occasion—with pretty eyes and eye brows; cherry lips and rosy cheeks; peach-and-cream complexion and immaculate teeth; medium little ears with tint of seashell; and with a moderately long white neck without mole or other blemish, and of commanding stature, is full blonde or nearly so, and the incarnation of perfect female beauty—and in the majority. If the very attractive one have magnificent hair, brilliant eyes, sweeping lashes, handsome bust, glorious shoulder-blades and superb haugtiness of manner, she is a brunette; and with so fetching a way as to bewilder you momentarily regarding your first choice of the sweetly-faced one with the pretty eyes, the lovely lips, the rosy cheeks and perfect complexion, and other attributes of supreme loveliness and charm. And between: The mezzo; the "brown"; an human arabesque; with golden hair of silken softness and luxuriance; great brown orbs and sweeping lashes and incomparable brows that were never vexed by pencil or dye to match; dimpled cheeks of a rich russet tone, and cherry lips that curve like a Cupid's brow. The beauty of Hebe, the goddess of youth, could not have been more extraordinary.

The "Autocrat of the Breakfast Table" declared that the eye of the true blonde is clearer and more brilliant than that of the brunette thus:

"There are two kinds of poets, just as there are two kinds of blondes. Why, there are blondes who are such simply by deficiency of coloring mater,—negative or washed blondes, arrested by Nature on the way to become albinesses. There are others that are shot through with golden light, with tawney or fulvous tinges in various degree,—positive or stained blondes, dipped in yellow sunbeams, and as unlike in their mode of being to the others as an orange is unlike a snowball. The Albino-style carries with it a wide pupil and a sensitive retina. The other, or the leonine blonde, has an opaline fire in her clear eye, which the brunette can hardly match with her quick, glittering glances."

So far as can be guessed the average proportions of the statuesque brunette is not quite equal to that of her imposing sister. The height of a perfect blonde is exactly equal to the distance between the tips of the middle fingers of either hand, when the arms are fully extended; ten times the length of her hand, or seven and one-half times the length of her foot, or five times the diameter of the chest, from one armpit to the other, should correspond with the height of the whole body. The distance from the junction of the thighs to the ground should be exactly the same as from that point to the crown of the head, and the knee should be exactly midway between the first-named point and the ground at the heel. The distance from the elbow to the tip of the middle finger should be the same as from the elbow to the middle line of the breast; from the top of the head to the level of the chin should be the same as from the level of the chin to that of the armpits, and from the heel to the toe. It is a noteworthy fact that the hand and foot of the brunette is larger than those of the blonde—that the one requires larger gloves, much larger shoes, and somewhat more capacious hosiery than the other. It is also noteworthy that the blonde requires large shoes and gloves than she did thirty years ago.

I have said that the blonde worries more than the brunette—I should have said that she worries more grievously; for so far as asylum statistics go, the totals in sixty-eight asylums in Canada and the United States show that the percentage of those regarded as hopelessly insane are 81 blondes to 53 of brunettes. But the figures from these sixty-eight asylmus also show that out of 16,512 patients 703 have light hair and only 66 red or auburn locks—in other words, 96 per cent of the female inmates are brunettes, with black or brown hair, and the latter in varying shades, while only two per cent have blue eyes. In one New England asylum there is not a single inmate who is not a brunette. The penitentiaries of the United States show that brunettes and others with dark hair or dark eyes, or both, rate 78 per cent, not including negroes. To some extent this is accounted for by the great number of dark foreigners imprisoned—especially in New York, Illinois, Missouri, Louisiana, and California—for all kinds of atrocious crimes. The brunette drinks to excess much more than the blonde, as drunken women before police judges average above seven of the former to three of the latter.

While husbands, as a general thing are more brutal than wives, and much more promiscuous in their disregard for the eighth commandment, more small internecine disturbances have resulted from what is termed "nagging," by men's so-called better halves, than by all the other engenderments of serious conjugal infelicities. And this is where the brunette can give the blonde points and win out always in this married woman's exclusive game.

The blonde is a more constant nagger of children, perhaps, than the brunette; but when it comes to the "old man" the latter absorbs nearly all the gateau in the boulangerie. This is where raven hair, flashing black eyes, high temper and nervous-muscular temperament can administer to the one with the flaxen hair, blue eyes sweet-disposition and sanguine-lymphatic temperament, a solar plexus appulse that agitates the eponge.

And while men, especially of the latin race, are more cowardly amid impending dangers at sea and howl louder over extreme bodily pains than women, so the brunette may be placed in the same category alongside the blonde.

Pursuing this subject farther, the brunette is more rapid at love-making than the blonde and less sympathetic and tender, she also displays more celerity in marrying and also of unmarrying—for she is more frequently the heroine in a divorce court; but she is more responsive to the toesin of love than her more ethereal sister, and less inclined to "race-suicide." The brunette is quick tempered and more quarrelsome than the blonde, more jealous of her husband, more hateful and more vindictive, with or without cause; the blonde in contradistinction sometimes drags out a miserable life, rather than confess or even rebuke publicly the husband whose brutalities should have sent him to the whipping post or to some such place as our own orthodox hell.

There might be still greater scope given this agreeable topic. But the writer recalls that most felicitous declaration of the urbane Kentuckian, who said that "all whisky is good but some kinds are better than others"; and cheerfully admits, along the same generous course of reasoning, that all women of standard acceptableness are precious, beautiful and lovely; but that some are more lovely, more beautiful and more precious than others. And asks:

"Are they not more frequently the blondes?"

In conclusion, I am constrained to state that, after carefully and (I trust) competently taking all the parts and features of a select number of truly beautiful competitors into consideration, a unanimous verdict would be reached that the perfect blonde of fine stature and commanding presence takes first place, with the brunette of like proportions and like mein a close second. As regards small women—not slender women—they belong to a separate class; some are very compact, very dainty, very winsome, very sweet and very beautiful, to be sure, but they cannot impress nor command, nor entrance like the rarer ideals.

With few exceptions, all the noted beauties of Ireland, England, France, Germany, and the United States have been beautiful blondes of commanding stature and presence, and next to them the beautiful and statuesque brunettes. Cleopatra was the only little woman that had emperors at her feet, and she was a half Grecian and nearly a blonde. The great painters of Europe are more partial to blondes as an ideal, and the old masters of Italy and Spain and of the Flemish school gave nearly all their women golden or "Titian" hair.

Could Apollo step out of Parnassus and behold the perfect blonde and the perfect brunette and have his choice of one, he would surely select that paragon of womankind with head and neck and shoulders of perfect mould; large luminous and beautiful blue eyes; complexion of white and pink and rose; lips of coral redness and teeth of purest white and ravishing regularity and symmetry; a perfect nose and mouth and breath more delicious than atter of roses, and hair falling over her gleaming shoulders like a golden cloud. Still, Apollo might take the other. Quien sabe?

THE YOSEMITE.

The scene that all artists love to depict.

'Neath the Mistletoe

I kissed her 'neath the mystletoe,
  She was so young, so sweet, so fair,
  With bright blue eyes and golden hair.
  The world may talk—I do not care—
In fact I'd like them all to know
I kissed her 'neath the mystletoe:

Nor do I think she seemed too bold,
  But added rather to her charms,
  When round my neck she threw her arms,
  And whispered soft her small alarms;
For she was only five years old,
And feared, it seems, her nurse might scold.

Yosemite in Winter Time

Description of a Trip in the Heart of the Sierras Where Nature in her Sublimest Mood Thrills and Enthralls.

The traditional Christmas is one that has its setting in snow. Even here in San Francisco where one never sees snow except in pictures we think of Santa Claus as an old fellow whose whiskers are garnished with snow and who travels in a sleigh. Yet most residents of this city believe that the traditional Christmas is not for them. The fact is that at this season of the year in less than twelve hours anybody can go from the heart of the metropolis to the heart of the Sierras and there enjoy all the comforts of home.

How few have made the trip to Yosemite in winter! In former years only the hardy explorer dared penetrate the depths of the Sierra winter to view the glories of Yosemite, but now it is a trip that can be taken by any one, for the new railroad takes you to the park line, and the hotels, which are open all the year, provide their guests with all the comforts of the best city hotels. In speaking of Yosemite in winter, do not think of it as a cold, dreary bewilderment of snow and ice. The trip to Yosemite is much the same as in the summer time from the travelers standpoint.

Leaving the little city of Merced on the Yosemite Valley Railroad, we are soon on the open plains of the sunny San Joaquin, headed for the snow-capped Sierras that rise abruptly before us. At Merced Falls we enter the canyon and the ascent through the narrow gorge has commenced. Bagby is the half-way station. From this point onward we begin to realize more fully that we are going deeper and deeper into the mountains, for the canyon walls shut us in completely and tower skyward, and we see nothing but huge mountain walls ahead and behind us. The track curves around each projecting abutment with the exact precision of the river. The steep mountain sides are studded with spruce and pine trees. We round another curve, completing almost a full circle of what is known as the Hog Back, when plainly up the canyon ahead of us, on the face of the mountain wall, we see the filmy sheet of water called the Chinquapin Fall, opposite which and far below on the river's edge, is El Portal, "The Gateway," to the Yosemite National Park and the end of the first part of our journey to the gem of the Sierras.

Away up in the mountains, an altitude of nearly two thousand feet, we find this picturesque, secluded resort, shut in on all sides by the mountains, with the wild rushing river, white with foam, before us. Here we stop in the large, new hotel for rest and preparation for the ride through the park to our destination in the valley. This three hour drive is one of the most exhilarating features of the trip. The beauty and the grandeur of this trip are unsurpassed on any other road of equal length in America. It follows the Merced River, and there are many points of special interest along the way, such as Arch Rock, Chimney Rock, the great bowlders that line the river bed, the massive overhanging rocks hundreds of feet high, the stately forest trees and the ferns and underbrush that grow between. We find the first traces of snow along the road just before we reach the floor of the valley.

We are thus in a measure prepared for the grandeurs of Yosemite that burst on the vision as the stages halt on the bank of the river for our first general view, where El Captain looms up to the left 3,300 feet high, and the beautiful Bridal Veil Fall to the right. It is a scene of winter glory beyond description. We are on the threshold of nature's vast amphitheater, surrounded by towering walls surmounted by lofty domes, made musical by many waterfalls, tinselled with snow and ice, environed by all the outward manifestations of winter. The floor of the valley presents a landscape white with snow, the trees of the forest are decked with garlands of snow, and the higher elevations clad in glistening armour, a winter splendor unsurpassed anywhere in the world. It thrills the being, quickens the life-blood, and exalts the mind. As we cast our gaze from side to side and behold the massive walls, and above us the clear blue sky, we begin to realize our human insignificance, and the sublimity of Yosemite. As we proceed along the floor of the valley, the panorama unfolds itself in grand procession, perfect in all its parts; Cathedral Rock and Spires on the right, to the left in a semi-circle, appear Eagle Peak, Yosemite Falls, Royal Arches and the great Half Dome.

The winter atmosphere is invigorating, and while the thermometer varies from the freezing point down to zero we do not feel the cold as the air is clear and dry, filtered through the warm sunshine. Amid the sublimities of nature we find much to occupy our time and admiration, trips to mirror Lake, Vernal Falls, Yosemite Falls, a drive or sleigh ride around the floor of the valley, and to Inspiration Point which is so aptly named. The trees of the forest are in a pensive mood. The squirrel skips about in search of the hidden nut and the snow bird twitters from limb to limb, and bruin stalks about unharming and unmolested, except for the click of the camera, two fine specimen recently being photographed within the not great distance of twelve feet.

California as the Midwinter Playground of America, with her varied attractions and great diversity of climate from the sunny Southland to the snow-capped Sierras of the North, and from coast to plain, has in "Yosemite in Winter," added to the list a winter resort that is growing in popularity. California has become the Switzerland of America for winter sports in which young and old participate with a zest that comes only from exercise in the crisp mountain air. A happy, active concourse of people in Yosemite, skating on Mirror Lake and artificial ponds, toboggan slides miles in length, skeeing over the higher elevations, sleighing and other winter pastimes are possibilities of the future. In the meantime "Yosemite in Winter" is a most delightful place to spend a few days or weeks.

TOWN TALK

Published Weekly by
TOWN TALK PUBLISHING COMPANY
Theodore F. Bonnet.....Editor
Ralph A. Grover.....Manager
88 First St., cor. Mission, San Francisco. Telephone Douglas 2612.

SUBSCRIPTION One Year, in advance, $4.00; six months, $2.25; three months, $1.30; single copies, 10 cents. Foreign subscriptions (countries in Postal Union), $5.00 per year. For sale by all Newsdealers.

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter.

The Trade in San Francisco supplied direct by us. Outside of San Francisco by the San Francisco News Co.

For foreign and local advertising rates address 88 First Street, San Francisco.

We decline to return or to enter into correspondence as to rejected communications; and to this rule we can make no exception. Manuscripts not acknowledged within four weeks are rejected.

In the Olden Time

An ancient English roundelay sings of Christmas that "comes but once a year and when it comes it brings good cheer." Those were the days when the mistletoe hung on the castle wall, when the Lord of Misrule reigned in bower and hall, when the servitors bore to the banquet board the baron of beef and the boar's head steaming hot and grinning graciously with tusks that had gored the favorite hound of the belted knight in whose manorial hall these revels were scaring the echoes and shaking the tapestries picturing an older romance. Those were the days when the yule log blazed and real ghosts stalked in the dim shadows; when grand dames sat stiff-stomachered in brocade of Antwerp beside the ingle nook and told tales of ancestral days to eager children clustered at their knees. And when the good knight's sword was rust, and his soul with the angels, we trust; when the revelers of that day were laid away in the churchyard mold and the grand dame's effigy, full length, sculptured in marble, reposed on the tomb in which her ashes mingled with the dust from which they came; when the little children who had listened at her knee had grown to manhood and womanhood, fought their fight and passed away, leaving other children to beget another posterity even unto the third and the fourth generation; when that day was ended there came another still singing of Christmas and its cheer which comes but once a year; a day when glad chimes rang out on the frosty air; when blue-nosed, teary-eyed, cherry-cheeked boys and girls sang carols under the windows of the squire of the county and the knight of the shire; when the kitchens clanged to clamor of the feast in the making; when the tankards of ale were drained by sturdy drinkers; when warm wine possets sweetly spiced were passed round to the ladies; when the ghosts had ceased to be real; and when the elders of the village told tales of the elder time when they were privileged to go up to the hall in the old castle and hear the tales of more ancient days from lips that had kissed the hand of the grand dame who sat in the ingle nook and recited her youthful triumphs in the very ancient days when knights were bold and barons held their sway. Then followed the age immortalized by the immortal Dickens in his Christmas carols, in Tom Tiddler's ground and the immortal remark of Tiny Tim—with which we are all familiar. And now it is the time of Santa Claus and gift-scattering, and roast turkey, and early shopping, and over eating and peace on earth for a few days and good will to men during the holiday season.

In the Guinea-Jingling Age

Still we sing of Christmas which comes but once a year with its good cheer; not as some of our forefathers sang it when they brought it over in Lord Baltimore's ships (for it didn't come over in the Mayflower with the strait-laced, solemn-visaged Puritan forefathers); not as it was sung in the raftered farmhouses of Vermont or in the plantation houses of Virginia; not as they sang the song in Manhattan when Madison was President and "Dolly" was the first lady in the land. The words are the same, to be sure; but they are sung in their literal sense—Christmas comes but once a year (thank the Lord); and when it comes it brings good cheer (to those who are able to enjoy the festivities of the season). Christmas comes but once a year, we sing it; and it's lucky for us that it doesn't come oftener. It brings good cheer, of course; because it is the custom to feel cheerful and to pretend that we are more cheerful at this time of the year than at any other. Those of us who can afford it loosen our purse strings a trifle for our friends and relations and for "deserving charities"; but we count the giving an extravagance and charge it to profit and loss with extreme emphasis on the complimentary term. We do not sing the song with the spontaneity that trilled and roared it in the good old days. We try to deceive ourselves into the belief that we sing it honestly; but in very truth we are not wholly deceived; we know that there is something lacking in the spirit of our singing. This is eminently a money-chasing age; a sordid, selfish, mercenary age; an age when eleven months of the year is devoted to an effort to get the better of our fellow citizens; an age when everybody covets his neighbor's ox and his ass and frequently his wife as well; an age when we crowd all the good cheer remaining in the old song into a week of hasty endeavor to square our account with Him who said: "If thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee; leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift." It is in this spirit that a vast multitude of those that sing the good old English song compound for their perennial sins of commission and their diurnal sins of omission. They bring their gift to the altar at Christmas time and pretend that they have been reconciled to their brother. Next week they will drop this pretense and if the brother isn't up in the morning quite early, keeping a sharp and wary outlook for the gift-offering brother, he will lose another ox, another ass or his second wife. Christmas comes but once a year; and only once a year; and the cheer that it brings is a job-lot preserved in cold storage to be served with the Christmas turkey, to be drunk in the Christmas wine, to be stuffed into the Christmas stocking, and to be dropped into the charity-box of some "deserving" public institution.

A Christmas Contrast

If we could recover a few of our lost barbaric virtues perhaps there would be less need for a special season of peace on earth and good will to men. Even if we could resume the business of fighting for the spoil with clubs and stone hatchets it might not be so bad. In that contingency everybody would know what to expect; and he would go about amply prepared for the worst. Men who meet each other openly and with weapons fully disclosed harbor a respect for each other as unconcealed as their weapons. The period of human history immediately following the stone age, when the tribes began to make simple laws governing their conduct towards each other, was the golden age. In that time justice was a definite thing and could not be misconstrued. There were no subtle sophistries in the stern, straightforward logic of the primitive courts and popular assemblies in which judgment was given responsive to the clashing of the shields and the shouting of the multitude. But the laws were very plain and simple as befitted the need of a people still in the childhood of their understanding. These laws were comprehensible to the dullest intellects; and they were implicitly obeyed because the majority of the tribes were swift to punish infractions of their unwritten but outspoken code. Civilization had not yet "dawned" to reveal methods by which man may overcome his fellow man by craft, cunning, chicane and the plausible lie. The stout, honest, forthright club was the final arbiter in all disputes arising between man and man. Conquest was possible only after the law of the club had been determined. Theft was a punishable crime, and that which a man had he owned by right of his industry or his valor. Unless a man killed his enemy in fair fight he was guilty of murder under the laws. There was no evil speaking in those days, because men were barbaric and therefore brave enough to say what they had to say face to face with those whom they would libel. There was no cheating, no false weight, no striving for the upper hand in the trade and barter of those days; because in the first place there was no such thing as money, and because the one defrauded was lawfully at liberty to find the savage who had defrauded him and take back that which had been surreptitiously procured; if the barbarian accused denied the offense he was permitted the ordeal of the club or the arbitrament of the battle-ax, either in his own person by his own stout right arm, or by a champion ready to do battle in his behalf against a foe stronger or more skillful. Those were good old days lived by good men because they were honest men. And in those days every day was lived in the spirit of what we call Christmas. If men did not love one another as we pretend to love one another, they never failed in their respect for their neighbor—and most men's respect is better worth having than some men's friendship or the hollow pretense of friendship. So there is the difference between the golden age and the age of brass and brummagem—in the one it is Merry Christmas but once a year; in the other it was Happy Christmas all the year.

Justice With a "Gun"

As we are now in the peace-on-earth season and presumably more inclined than at other seasons to good will toward one another a few amiable suggestions with reference to the desirability of associating justice with dignity and decorum may not be taken amiss. We have observed of late the prevalence of the pistol in our courts and it has occurred to us that it might be well to inquire whether it is deemed an essential adjunct to a proper and effective administration of justice. If it is why are not our laws framed to permit the judges of our courts and the officers of those courts, including the attorneys at bar, the bailiffs and clerks, the "plain clothes men" and the "body guards" to wear their "guns" in full view? Why are these deadly weapons "concealed"? One would be justified in thinking that if the pistol is a part of the machinery of justice, it should be as open to inspection as the law books themselves, the oath-bound affidavit, the iron-bound "precedent," and the brass-bound "immunity contract." If the pistol is an essential part of our California jurisprudence, it should always be "in evidence." In this view of this peculiar judicial "procedure" the pistol is an important factor of the "argument"; it may be a major or a minor premiss or it may be a definite and logical conclusion. Only the "charge to the jury" and the verdict of that jury may "justly or legally be "concealed" until it shall be necessary to "draw." On the other hand (the pistol hand, so to speak) if it is not necessary to administer justice at the muzzle of six-shooters and "automatic guns," why are they tacitly recognized as essential features of our court procedure? Why are "gun fighters" massed in our tribunals of justice? Why do "body guards" arm themselves to their teeth before they go to the courts where their "services" may be "required"? Why are the coat tails of the lawyers mere curtains to hide the dread weaponry of a wilder justice than that dispensed from our justice-weighted "benches"? Why is the rabble mob of the curious populace permitted to pass the policeman at the door bearing pistols in their pockets with which to assassinate lawyers against whom they may happen to have brooded a murderous revenge? On the Mexican frontier, in the savage back settlements of Montana, on the "bad man" ranges of Nevada, in the whiskey belt of Arizona, in the sub-tropical sections of Southern California where the crack of the pistol and the gleam of the jealous lover's stilletto is an echo and a glimpse of the dark backward of a primitive barbarism, it is the custom and the habit of the roaring cowboy and the tough citizen of Bitter Creek, "all wool and a yard wide," to deposit their lethal hardware with their favorite "barkeep" before they enter upon the periodical frenzy of a bug-juice orgie in the town they have chosen as the scene of their saturnalian antics. The habit of the cowboy—this custom of the primitive citizen from Bitter Creek—is a precaution, a preventive and a necessary concession to the amenities of a social environment different from that in which the visiting "gun men" have been reared and endured. In that environment each man is a law unto himself and justice is frankly administered under the rulings of Judge Colt occassionally assisted in banc by Judge Lynch. In that region all controversies are submitted to the arbitrament of the pistol and decided in what is technically called "the drop"; the hair-trigger under pressure of finger of men entirely ready usually closes the argument and disposes of the cause at issue. But when these pistol justices "come to town" they doff the ermine of their several courts and submit to the forms and conventions of another, and, it may be, a "superior" civilization. The final question, therefore, is one touching the kind of "civilization" in which the courts of San Francisco are operated. Are we living in a community of the Bitter Creek class where Justice carries a pistol in her belt to reinforce the menace of her sword and to sustain the verdict of her scales? Or are we so well entrenched in the precedents of an age-worn civilization that we may demand the cowboy concession to the polite conventions of any desert town or frontier settlement? Shall we submit to the obsolete barbarism of "shooting up the town," or shall we insist that every bad man's gun shall be placed in temporary pawn with the barkeep?

The Hub.
CHAS. KEILUS & CO
EXCLUSIVE
HIGH GRADE CLOTHIERS

No Branch Stores—No Agents.

IT'S SATISFYING TO KNOW THAT WHEN BUYING CLOTHES YOU'RE GETTING GOOD VALUE. OUR CLOTHES MAKING SYSTEM IS OPEN LIKE A LEAVED BOOK. THE VITALS ARE FIRST CLASS; THE FABRICS ARE ALL TESTED. OUR STYLES UNIMPEACHABLE. OUR CLOTHES ARE DIFFERENT. THAT'S WHAT THEY TELL US.

We Protect The Hub Chas Keilus & Co. San Francisco. Qualities.

We use every endeavor to please our clients. Nothing overlooked, to meet our endeavors. By our large increasing volume of business we quote "merit receives its just reward." Being exclusive high-grade clothiers, there's more expected of us and it's natural, we ought to understand our business thoroughly. That's why our clothes get severe criticism, but we're not afraid of any critic that lives. Our clothes can stand it, they're right.

JEWELERS' BUILDING
Post Street, Near Kearny, San Francisco.

The Canal Scandal

Mr. Alfred Henry Lewis, writing for the Hearst papers which are now warmly in sympathy with the Roosevelt administration, and which have never lost an opportunity to swat Mr. Pulitzer of the New York World, says that it is absurd to think of investigating Panama Canal graft. The proposition, he asserts, emanated from the railroad combination which hopes to prevent the building of the canal. "The thing for honest men to do," says Mr. Lewis, "is to settle cooly which they prefer, a canal or an investigation." In all probability honest men are in favor of both; and intelligent men will not be likely to be hoodwinked by the suggestion which probably emanated from the White House, that there are railroad magnates in the country so stupid as to consider the feasibility of blocking operations on the canal at this late day. The canal will be constructed, and the truth will come out with reference to the transactions which made the acquisition of the canal zone possible. Historical data of such prodigious importance cannot be suppressed. Nor can the issue between the President and the World be permanently obscured by billingsgate. It may be true, as Mr. Roosevelt most unhappily and vulgarly expresses it, that the men who question his Panama statements are "creatures of the gutter so low that they envy the eminence of the dunghill," but yet those statements are not to be accepted with the respect accorded to holy writ. Aside from the fact that habitual inaccuracy of utterance has tended somewhat to impair Mr. Roosevelt's reputation for veracity, the people are not to be denied that which gratifies their educated appetite for muckrakings. Mr. Roosevelt himself stimulated in the populace a craving for the very thing of which now he is intolerant; and even though it should appear that inquiry would be fraught with retribution for the Exalted One at Washington, it is bound to be made. The fact is that public curiosity has been filliped as much by the President's hysterical efforts to discourage inquiry as by the sensational charges that have been made. And curiosity is not to be assuaged with choler. Indeed, it has been heightened by denials which are not in accord with evidence that is beyond the possibility of disproof. For example the President has said that the $40,000,000 which this country paid for the canal properties was delivered to the French Government, and he had himself corroborated on this point by one of his subordinates at Washington. Yet the records of the Treasury Department, the framed checks on exhibition there, and the testimony before the Senate Committee on Interoceanic Canals, established beyond question that the money was paid to J. Pierpont Morgan & Company. The supposition is that Morgan & Co., represented a syndicate of American capitalists at the head of which was William Nelson Cromwell, who enjoyed confidential relations with President Roosevelt. And the suspicion seems to be well grounded that the Cromwell syndicate, acting on a straight tip, bought the stock in the original canal company for the price of a shoe-string and sold it for the appraised value of a tannery. But in all probability the Cromwell syndicate earned the profits of the deal; for Cromwell made the Panama revolution which probably cost more than the ten millions extra allowed for expenses by the American Government. According to Senor J. Gabriel Duque given during the investigation instigated by the late Senator Morgan, which terminated at his death, Cromwell bought up Columbian generals as though they were ammunition sold in the open market. The Columbian general who was sent to stop the revolution was "bought off," said Duque. From these meagre details it is evident that there is a big story behind the Panama Canal deal, and probably there is much in it for which the people of this country were they as intensely moral as Mr. Roosevelt wishes to make them, would be heartily ashamed. Certainly if, as might be inferred from Senor Duque's testimony, this Government played the part of a higher-up in corrupting Columbian officials, the probing of the scandal will result in our everlasting humiliation. But we are a great as well as a good people and to be entirely repentant we must know the size and number of our sins. A full confession is good for the soul.

Confusion of Latitude and Tradition

The steamer Lurline departed for the Hawaiian Islands last week loaded with evergreen Christmas trees consigned to the central points of holiday celebrations. Doubtless they will be decorated in the orthodox manner with strings of cranberries and popcorn and sprinkled with imitation snow, while "Jolly St. Nick," in the traditional furred coat, top boots, mittens and muffler, will skip about and make merry in that tropical clime to the music of sleigh bells and "the trampling and pawing of each little hoof" of his eight reindeer. Santa Claus will hardly find himself more out of his element in Honolulu than he is in San Francisco, where the native born of less than twenty years who has not traveled has never encountered snow or seen a sled out of a picture. Nevertheless we are so bound down by cast-iron tradition that to use anything but an evergreen as a Christmas tree, or to decorate it in any but the orthodox manner, would be regarded as tempting the fates. It is said that New England grandmothers of the last generation used to knit woollen mufflers and mittens for their far-off grandchildren in tropical islands, secure in the faith that cold weather was due at Christmastide, independent of such trivialities as latitude. Though the holiday season falls in the summertime in south latitudes the conservative Britain of New Zealand and Australia must have his plum pudding and mince pie, along with the roast beef of old England, and it must go sorely against his grain to be obliged to forego a roaring fire and sit to his holiday meal out of doors. Though the Santa Claus and Christmas tree features are essentially Germanic it is notable with what persistency they are forced upon the Latin races. In Southern Europe, instead of a gift-laden tree and a fantastic apparition the crib or manger is the central feature of the celebration. Each family sets apart some space in the principal living room where there is fitted up a miniature representation of the Stable at Bethlehem, and art, skill and ingenuity are expended as well as money in making the picture as realistic as possible. Tiny figures to represent St. Joseph, the Virgin Mother, the Child, the Three Kings and the angels, are introduced. The ox and the ass, as well as the sheep watched by their shepherds, are provided, and though no doubt the tourist would find there anachronisms and absurdities, and perhaps even an opportunity to denounce "idolatry," there is no question at all but that the people, both old and young, are governed by a spirit of reverence and religion. The strenuous efforts of benevolent and charitable people to compel the little Italians and Spaniards to substitute the Christmas tree and St. Nicholas, for which they have neither family nor national tradition, for the "crib" with its Biblical story, seems to be as far-fetched as the idea of sending evergreens to the tropics to be decked with imitation snow and eating plum pudding on what corresponds to a New York Fourth of July.

REMOVAL NOTICE

OUR OFFICE after December 21, 1908, will be at 311 to 317 Crocker Building, corner of Post and Market streets.

OUR WAREHOUSE will remain at the Southwest corner of Eddy and Hyde Streets, until April 18, 1909, on that date we shall remove to our old location, 147-151 Minna Street and 144-148 Natoma Street.

GLADDING, McBEAN & CO.

My Grace

By A. M. Buckton

A streak of captive light that sleeps
  In an ancient hall,
And faintly smiles, and wanes, and creeps
From the rustling poplar bough that sweeps
  Over the ivied wall—

A far-off singer down the street—
  Children at play—
The first wan primrose, brave and sweet,
In the frozen hedgerow at our feet
  On a winter's day—

The song of a lark, o'er flowing heaven
  In a rain of light—
The village curfew tolling seven,
And, sweet as the sense of sin forgiven,
  The falling night—

A word that seems to haunt and ring
  Through bygone years;
And, playing on some hidden string,
Sets musically murmuring
  The nameless tears—

A book, in which some human soul,
  Careless perchance,
Opens the long emblazoned scroll
Of all his life, asking no toll
  For that dear glance!

The innocent laugh of boy or maid
  In the market-place,
And all fair things that have obeyed
Their sending forth, for these be said
  My daily grace!

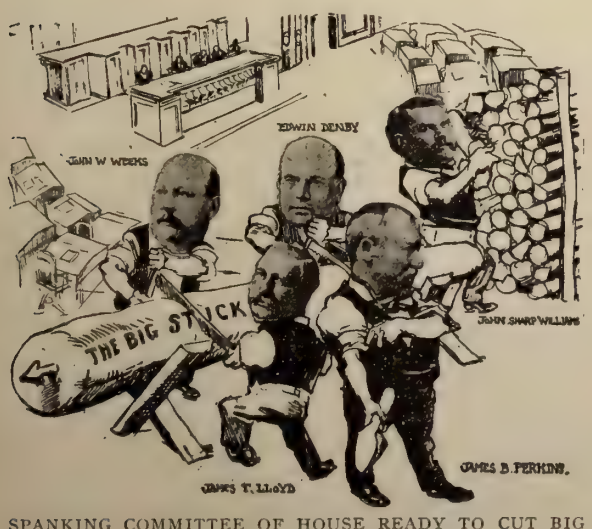
Perspective Impressions

Even a Rockefeller, it appears, cannot be libeled with impunity.

The tenacity of self-love is often mistaken for patriotic perseverance.

To get the most out of life one must have no stronger desire than that of the improvement of his own nature.

Among intelligent beings there is none more despicable than he whose highest gratification is born of the triumph of vindictiveness.



Another bond issue is recommended. Not, however, by the enthusiastic gentlemen who hope to increase the population of the city to one million.

Pat Crowe, the bandit, has become an evangelist and is lecturing on public morals. Perhaps Crowe is sincere, which is more than can be said for some lecturers on public morals.

Would President Roosevelt have objected to the employment of gumshoe men by Congress to watch him and his agents when the canal deal was on?

True goodness is humble and charitable. It looks not for infirmities, it inflicts no wound, it is conscious of its own imperfections.

Said Father McQuaide at the bier of a man hounded to his death: "There was no excuse for slander with William J. Biggy as a target. The man who will circulate false reports concerning the character of another, who would rob a just man of a fair name, does an injury that neither labor, charity or time can repair." Any comment from the editors of the Call and the Bulletin?

SPANKING COMMITTEE OF HOUSE READY TO CUT BIG STICK TO SPLINTERS.

—New York World.

HE'S QUITE A STAND-PATTER HIMSELF.

—Philadelphia North American.

A Year of California Literature

By Sarah Connell

The year 1908 has been almost devoid of events of special literary interest in San Francisco and its immediate vicinity. There was a mild flurry of excitement in the early spring, when it was reported that Jack London and his little craft had dropped out of sight and, as far as evidence to the contrary could be adduced, were probably reposing at the bottom of the South Seas. Mr. London made an effective denial, however, for in the midst of the hasty preparation of obituaries, laudatory and otherwise, he stepped from the deck of the returning Mariposa, hale and well, and with no intention whatever of abandoning his mercenary scheme of circumnavigating the globe. As it was part of the original plan to make several flying visits home before the final return, the various and varied conjectures as to the why and wherefore of the "mysterious" reappearance were just so much waste exertion. Unless we include the exhibition of Eleanor Gates' Arabian horses and the loss of George Sterling's dog, as events of literary interest, there is nothing more exciting to chronicle than the usual number of club receptions to passing celebrities, chief among whom was Elinor Glyn, who was wined and dined and feted, and given every opportunity to view the wildest and wooliest west at its wildest and wooliest. The result of her observations will probably be given to the waiting and expectant world in some shape during the coming year.

Upton Sinclair, who has elected to make his future home among the literary colonists at Carmel-by-the-Sea, delivered a course of lectures in our city, but it must be confessed that they attracted no particular attention, for the whole question of graft, pro and con has become an oppression to us. Mr. Sinclair closed the procession of "muck-rakers," for there has been scarcely one of the brotherhood who has not paid us a flying visit and held us up to scorn as the traditional awful example. But, as the old market woman remarked to the compassionate purchaser who deplored the cruelty of the necessary preparation of her edibles, "these eels are used to skinning," and there is probably no other topic which would prove less interesting to the population as a whole than a magic lantern exhibition of the wounds and scars of our body politic. "The return of the native" is the shortest and simplest method of chronicling the list of our own people who have looked in upon us, for there have been few Californian writers of any prominence who have not been able to spare time for a brief call. Chief among them have been the Irwin brothers, Wallace and Will, both of whom have won a secure place in the world of letters. William Winter, the veteran dramatic critic, spent some months in the southern part of the State in search of health. The Atlantic fleet brought with it an army of special correspondents, though many of the best known among them returned to the east without waiting for the ships to reach San Francisco.

Californian authors have kept the reading world fairly busy during the past twelve months, and though none have reached the first rank it is only fair to admit that they have kept well up with the procession. The Sunset Magazine held one of its periodical lotteries, in other words, a prize contest, and the verdict of the jury, as is invariably the case in all such enterprises, shows that it is the experienced writer, not the amateur who "dashes things off," whose work tells. Throughout the year 1908 the society columns have kept us well informed of the assiduity with which this or that charming maid was inking her fingers in the secret production of some masterpiece, but evidently the dancing floor, the hotel piazza and the golf links have proved superior attractions to the midnight oil or the secluded study. "In the name of the Prophet!" cries the Oriental street vender, and, having attracted the attention of the throngs by the magnificence of his proclamation, he completes his tale with "Figs." So, when the heralding trumpet is sounded, and the Bavardes make announcement, the experienced listen for the still, small voice which may, perhaps, add its modest "Figs" at the end of the outcry.

Early in the year Jack London's Iron Heel was given to the world. It proved to be a specialistic romance of the extreme order, and though it was discussed seriously in economic societies and college lectures, attracted but little attention from the general reader, who prefers something of a more conventional order, a pretty love story or an automobile romance. The Pacific Monthly secured the serial rights of "Martin Eden," another London story, and is said to have paid the author seven thousand dollars for the privilege. Mr. London has contributed short stories to various periodicals, and the episodes of his adventurous cruise have enlivened the pages of weeklies, east and west. Some one has defined genius as the capacity for keeping everlasting at it, Mr. London does his daily stint of work no matter what the conditions, and the surprising thing about his work is that it is so good considering the enormous quantity which he produces.

Homer Lea, who enjoys the distinction of being a lieutenant in the army of China and of having had a price put on his head by no less a personage than the late Tsi An, gave us a surprisingly good novel, "The Vermilion Pencil,." It is Mr. Lea's first novel, and likewise, the first dealing with Chinese life. Samuel Hopkins Adams' "Flying Death" proved to be a story of mystery enthralling enough to hold the reader's attention from first page to last, and Stewart Edward White's "Riverman," dealing with the forest products after the timber getters have completed their labors, is a worthy successor in point of time, to his "Blazed Trail," and in every other respect its equal if not its superior. Mr. White's other contribution to the book list is a practical guide to campers and trampers which it would be a wanton cruelty to put into the hands of any one unable by circumstances to follow its suggestions.

One of the literary sensations of the year was a series of Letters of a Japanese School Boy, which have appeared in Collier's Weekly. The identity of the author was revealed in course of time, and he proved to be no other than Wallace Irwin. Mr. Irwin has also put into print the "Sonnets of a Car Conductor."

The Macmillan Company has issued a new edition of Gertrude Atherton's novels, including "Patience Sparhawk," "The Californians," "The Splendid Idle Forties," and others of her earlier productions. Mrs. Atherton has been as busy as usual though the only new title she has added to her catalogue is "The Gorgeous Isle," a story of local Bohemia. In length it is no more than a novellette, and there is therefore reason to assume that early in 1909 she will be heard from again.

M. H. FAY

1239 VAN NESS AVENUE

Sells Nothing But Books

And there is nothing more suitable for Christmas, Holiday or Anniversary Presentation.

1239 Van Ness Avenue

Mary Austin, who has been spending some months in Europe, gave us the excellent "Santa Lucia," a story of a small college community. The initiated have no difficulty in locating the institution to which reference was made, and it stands to Mrs. Austin's credit that despite this fact there has been none of the usual unpleasant gossip incident to the effort to fit living people into the shadowy garments of the characters.

Though but a short tale, there is no book on the same subject which has attracted so much attention as the collaboration of James Hopper and Fred. Bechdolt, 9009. The tale is one of convict life, the scene that of the State penitentiary at San Quentin, and whether one agrees with the author or not in the matter of the coddling of convicts the fact remains that as a story it is a great one.

Another book which has been made the subject of widespread attention and discussion, especially in the women's clubs, is Mrs. Loewenberg's "Irresistible Current." The topic, the inevitable rounding off of sharp corners of creed and dogma until the whole world is united in a universal religion of tolerance, is one which appeals to all classes, and as a first effort, Mrs. Loewenberg scored high.

The Chamberlain sisters, Lucia and Esther, published their most ambitious work, and it is sad to chronicle that it proved to be the last in which they were to collaborate, for, shortly after its appearance, and while the newspaper columns were yet publishing commendatory reviews, just as arrangements had been entered into for its dramatization, one of the co-authors of "The Coast of Chance" laid down her pen and pencil forever. Miss Esther Chamberlain died after a lingering illness, when fame was presenting her smiling face.

Adeline Knapp's "Well in the Desert" was well received, and the memoirs of E. I. Barra, one of the genuine Argonauts, bid fair to become as popular as books of reminiscences of the early days have always proved. One of the Norwich, Connecticut, papers is now reproducing serially Uncle George Bromley's "Long Ago and Later On," which broke all records locally as a best seller.

Miss Agnes Tobin has turned her attention to lecturing on literary celebrities, and her success in this field seems predestined to reach the same high mark that she has already scored in her productive work.

There has been an abundance of both poetry and verse produced within the borders of our State, but no volume of any especial importance. Local publishing houses have turned out their usual quantity of excellent work, and the Pacific Coast periodicals have held their own. The number of new book stores which have been opened during the year, to say nothing of the extensive book department of the new Emporium, is evidence that some one must buy books, while the additions which have been made to the Mercantile Library, so that there is now scarcely floor space remaining for another tier of shelves, goes to show that borrowers are equally numerous. The Mercantile Library Association hopes to be housed in its new building on the old Post street site before the next New Year, and there is crying need for a municipal library building to take the place of the temporary and unsuitable quarters occupied by the Mission branch of the free library. Charles F. Lummis recently compiled a list of the books catalogued in the Los Angeles library which had been written by persons then or at some past time connected with the Angel City. The list closely printed, occupied the space of two newspaper columns, though it includes only the titles of volumes, not magazine contributions, and concerns itself with Los Angeles only. Several of the eastern publishing houses have established local headquarters in San Francisco during the past year, and the literary retrospect and prospect, from whatever point of view, is decidedly encouraging.

At One O'Clock in the Morning

(From Baudelaire's Poems in Prose. Translated by F. F. Sturm.)

Alone at last! Nothing is to be heard but the rattle of a few tardy and tired-out cabs. There will be silence now, if not repose, for several hours at least. At last the tyranny of the human face has disappeared—I shall not suffer except alone. At last it is permitted me to refresh myself in a bath of shadows. But first a double turn of the key in the lock. It seems to me that this turn of the key will deepen my solitude and strengthen the barriers which actually separate me from the world.

A horrible life and a horrible city! Let us run over the events of the day. I have seen several literary men; one of them wished to know if he could get to Russia by land (he seemed to have an idea that Russia was an island); I have disputed generously enough with the editor of a review, who to each objection replied: "We take the part of respectable people," which implies that every other paper but his own is edited by a knave; I have saluted some twenty people, fifteen of them unknown to me; and shaken hands with a like number, without having taken the precaution of first buying gloves; I have been driven to kill time, during a shower, with a mountebank, who wanted me to design for her a costume as Venusta; I have made my bow to a theatre manager, who said: "You will do well, perhaps, to interview Z; he is the heaviest, foolishest, and most celebrated of all my authors; with him perhaps you will be able to come to something. See him, and then we'll see." I have boasted (why?) of several villainous deeds I never committed, and indignantly denied certain shameful things I accomplished with joy, certain misdeeds of fanfaronade, crimes of human respect; I have refused an easy favour to a friend and given a written recommendation to a perfect fool. Heavens! it's well ended.

Discontented with myself and with everything and everybody else, I should be glad enough to redeem myself and regain my self-respect in the silence and solitude.

Souls of those whom I have loved, whom I have sung, fortify me; sustain me; drive away the lies and the corrupting vapours of this world; and Thou, Lord my God, accord me so much grace as shall produce some beautiful verse to prove to myself that I am not the last of men, that I am not inferior to those I despise.

ROBERTSON'S
A BOOK STORE
1539 VAN NESS AVE. NEXT TO THE "WHITE HOUSE"
CARD PLATES .·. MONOGRAMS
WEDDING INVITATIONS
A. M. ROBERTSON

HOTEL VICTORIA
N. E. cor. Bush and Stockton
CENTRALLY LOCATED .·. A MODERN AND UP-TO-DATE FAMILY HOTEL
Sun in every room. Elaborate furnishings. Excellent cuisine.
Large lobby and reception room. Grill room. Dining room.
American and European Plan.

Christmas Legends and Superstitions

By the Bookworm

If Christmas falls during the waning moon we shall have a good year, the nearer to the full moon, the better, for then "The man in the moon will smile on us."

The Frisian legend of the man in the moon is that on Christmas Eve an old man, thinking of his next day's dinner, climbed the fence into his neighbor's cabbage patch and helped himself to the fine vegetables. Just as he lifted to his back the sack in which he had stowed them, the Christ child rode by on his white horse carrying gifts to good children, and seeing the thief he said: "Because thou hast stolen on the holy eve thou shalt stand in the moon and be seen by everyone forever and ever." So there he stands, with the sack of stolen cabbages on his back, and his only relief is that on Christmas Eve, he may turn around once.

Russian folk lore has it that the man was one who went up and down the world seeking the isle on which there was no death. At last, after traveling long and far, he found his haven in the moon and took up his abode there. After a hundred years had passed Death called for him, and a fierce struggle ensued with the moon, which claimed to be exempt from visitations of the dread messenger. The moon was victorious and the man remained, but Death lies in wait; so there he sits and looks down upon the earth, perhaps tired of his long vigil, but certain that should he venture forth he would never more return to his secure haven.

There are innumerable traditions, legends and superstitions connected with the mistletoe. Not only does the gift of a sprig confer good fortune, but likewise it is supposed to impart the ability to perceive witches and evil doers. The holder of a sprig of mistletoe is safe from the effects of poison no matter how cunningly administered. To the childless it brings offspring and to the sick health. The house in which the mistletoe is preserved is insured against lightning and fire and in some parts of rural England, when the Christmas decorations are removed on the second of February the mistletoe is fed to the best cow of the herd to insure the welfare of the cattle. The custom of using mistletoe for house decoration comes down from the Druidical ages. Not all mistletoe was sacred to Druids, but only that which was found growing upon oak trees. It was cut with elaborate ceremony by the priests, and the sprigs were sent around, with sprays of ivy, to remind the people to decorate their houses with evergreens in which were sheltered the sylvan sprites until the warm days come again.

To possess magic qualities holly must be woven into a wreath and worn on Christmas Eve. The wearer may evoke spirits that will sing Christmas songs. If preserved during the year it will insure the owner safety from violence. One who wears the holly wreath on Christmas night and goes alone to sit in a dark church will be gifted with second sight. All who are to die within the year will file past him in the dark.

The ancient Saxons burned the Yule log as a symbol of the turning of the sun towards spring. A brand snatched from the fire was saved to light the Yule log of the next year, and this brand, carefully preserved, was supposed to protect the house from fire during the year and subdue the spirit of the flames. In Devonshire the burning of the Yule log symbolizes the burning of old wrong and grievances, and the wassail bowl is quaffed to the drowning of feuds and animosities. In the South of France there is a custom analagous to that of the Saxon Yule log. The ceremony of cutting the tree is participated in by the whole household, and tradition demands that it shall be dragged to its place on the hearth by the eldest and the youngest. The nonogenarian grandsire and the infant in arms often play their part in this ceremony by merely touching the log, which must always be from a fruit-bearing tree, while the actual labor is performed by the the stalwart intervening generations. The sowing of St. Barbara's grain is another rural French custom. On the sixth of December, St. Barbara's day, wheat or other grain is planted in a shallow dish and carefully nurtured in the sunniest window or beside the hearth. The next harvest is believed to be forecast by the success of this trial planting, and the miniature field is the central decoration of the feast which is held on Christmas Eve.

One of the most picturesque and ancient of the Christmas spectacles of Rome has passed and within the next few years the "Christmas pipers" will survive only in tradition. These pipers were almost always peasants and shepherds of Abruzzi, who left their mountain homes in time to make their first appearance in Rome on St. Catherine's day, the twenty-fifth of November, the St. Catherine to whom devout maidens make prayer:—

"A husband, St. Catherine,
A handsome one, St. Catherine,
A rich one, St. Catherine,
A nice one, St. Catherine,
And 'soon,' St. Catherine."

With those whose prayer is unanswered—or perhaps it is those who fail to make the supplication betimes and sincerely—are doomed to braid the saint's hair for all eternity in the other world. St. Catherine's day is the arbitrary date on which the Roman winter begins, and upon which, without regard to the actual temperature, the Roman dons his heavy clothing, lights his fire in the stove and demands warmer bed covering. To the children the advent of the piper signified more than the coming of cold weather, for they knew that there intervened only one month more before the holidays. Old people and children gathered around the pifferai in the streets, the children, doubtless, attracted as much by the costume as by the music, the boys, as all the world over, on mischief bent, feeling that the strangers were their fair game. The pipers were dressed in blue linen, with a vest of flaming red, and trousers reaching only to the knee. Their sturdy legs were bound with the cords and straps which secured their leathern sandals, and a large leather bag at the waist served to hold the pipe, knife and other useful or necessary articles which elsewhere find room in the numerous pockets. They wore a short, round mantle fastened with a clasp at the throat, and their hair, long, luxuriant and curly, spread over their shoulders. Their hats of felt and broad in the brim, were decorated with peacock feathers and red tassels.

Usually these musicians were found in groups of three, two of whom played on a species of clarinet while the third manipulated an instrument not unlike the Celtic bagpipe. They passed through the streets of the cities, playing before the sacred images, and many families invited them into the houses, some even making appointments with the same groups from year to year. The usual compensation was one lire for each song, about twenty cents in our currency, and after the Christmas holidays the pipers returned to their homes the richer by perhaps fifty dollars, an almost incredible sum for

(Continued on Page 74.)

San Francisco's Finest Hat Store
Selling America's Leading Hats
PAUL T. CARROLL
Sole Agent KNOX HATS
708 MARKET ST. 25 GEARY ST.
1066 WASHINGTON ST., OAKLAND
Give him a CARROLL HAT ORDER for Christmas

The Spectator

Why Not Use a Prayer Wheel?

If the impending legislature is not saved from the snares of its own iniquity it will not be for lack of prayerful supplication on its behalf to all the gods in the Christian pantheon with an extra appeal to Jehovah. Owing to Senator Eddie Wolfe's objection during the last session to prayers that mentioned the Savior of the Christian sects it has been decided at this session to put on a force of chaplains representative of every religious denomination in both houses. These chaplains will take turn and turn about in addressing their several deities and it is expected by the steering committee, all of whom are unregenerate infidels, that each chaplain will look after the salvation of his special flock. Each prayer will cost the taxpayers $6, but it will be money well spent if it procures sufficient attention at headquarters to merit the assignment of a few angels with flaming swords to stand at the portals of the capitol and keep Satan at bay; to beat back the mammon of unrighteousness; to warn off Beelzebub; to clear the lobby of bribe-dispensing boodlers and boodling bribe-takers; to inspire legislation of the highest moral quality; and to impress upon the legislators the necessity of keeping in mind from one prayer to the next one the substance and intent of the prayer that was prayed by the last chaplain who uttered his invocation. What a farce it is—this polytheistic clamor amid the sordid, self-seeking, utterly worldly environment of a heterogeneous assemblage of politicians, sycophants, place seekers, pharisees, scribes and hypocrites! The very rivalry of the two-and-seventy jarring sects for the opportunity to "earn" a dollar a minute by the utterance of a generalized hope that the Almighty will "bless these deliberations," is ample evidence of the insincerity of the whole business. It would not be so bad if the chaplains would specify a few of the things that should be blessed and a few of the other things that should be damned; but a prayer of that kind would probably greatly offend those prayed for, and no chaplain that will draw a per-diem from this legislature would dare to mention anything of that sort in his prayers. It is this mockery of the sacred things of real religion that provokes the sneer on the lips of those who sit in the seats of the scorners.

Reggie—I have a jolly little diamond Christmas gift for Flossie; do you think I might trust the maid to put it in her stocking?

Jim—The French proverb says, he who serves himself is well served.

A Backsliding Peacemaker

In the eighth distribution of the Nobel prizes recently announced nothing American was mentioned. The peace prize was awarded to K. F. Arnoldson of Sweden, and M. F. Bajer, of Denmark, both former parliamentarians. This prize was once awarded to a distinguished American for promoting a peace compact between two nations that happened to be warring just previous to the meeting of the committee entrusted with the distribution of honors and emoluments commensurate with a place upon this roll of international fame. Since that time this distinguished citizen of the American republic has stultified the judgment of the committee by declaring war on the Congress of his country; by stepping down from the chair of State into the vulgar arena to do battle with the gladiators of the press; by making the quarrels of the wrangling mob his own and thereby degrading the dignity of the highest office in the gift of his fellow citizens. I hope that prize winners this year will take warning from the awful example of this American; I hope that they will justify the good opinion of the committee by continuing to be peacemakers, not peace breakers.

They Were Overlooked

I am also disappointed in the literature award. This prize went to Professor Rudolf Eucken of Jena University, who has written much on philosophical subjects. I had hoped that Dr. Jordan of Stanford University, or President Wheeler of the University of California, would be recognized at this time. I have never read any of Professor Eucken's philosophical works; and it is not my intention to read them; but I have read Dr. Jordan's books on fish culture, and I am going to read President Wheeler's "Sermons, Essays and Addresses" as soon as they are published. Perhaps the Nobel prize committee is also waiting for that publication, as regards the learned prex of our State University; but I cannot understand how the committee missed those authoritative fish books by Dr. Jordan. It cannot be that the members of the committee have never heard of Dr. Jordan and his piscicultural disquisitions. I hope next year to record an award in the literature class of the Nobel distribution to either Dr. Jordan or President Wheeler.

A Boost for American Literature

I suppose all the great writers and poets of America will have to wait their turn in this distribution. I see that prizes have already been awarded in this department to M. Sully-Prudhomme, the French poet; to Jose Echegaray, Spanish playwright; to Rudyard Kipling, "poet laureate of British imperialism"; to Professor Carducci, the Italian author; and to Sienkiewicz, the Polish writer. But thus far our poets, best sellers, magazine writers and able journalists have been passed by as if they had never existed. Yet some of them must be as worthy in their specialties as those whom I have mentioned as winners of the prize for high literary achievement. Perhaps the committee has not heard of these poets, authors, etc., whose names are household words with us. If so, I will take great pleasure in sending my list of those whom I think worthy of prizes, to be considered after the committee has exhausted its own list of writers from every other nation on earth. If deemed necessary I can forward with my list a long petition signed by most of our leading citizens recommending the persons named for substantial recognition at any time within the discretion of this committee or any of its successors even unto the third or fourth generation.

On the "Third Degree"

Fairfax Whelan has been telling the Commonwealth Club about the "third degree," and he has promised to tell them more—much more. These are not secrets of any prison house that Mr. Whelan has ever occupied, but as an eminent Grand Juryman he has had frequent Spring 1909, Silk and Opera Hats just arrived. Tom Dillon. Milliner for Men, 712 Market street, opposite Call Building.

Two Keys To Open..

YOUR BOX IN OUR SAFE DEPOSIT VAULTS—THE CUSTODIAN'S KEY AND YOURS. THIS GIVES ABSOLUTE SECURITY. BOXES $4.00 A YEAR AND UP.

Crocker Safe Deposit Vaults

Crocker Building Post and Market Sts., San Francisco

opportunity of looking through the wickets of the dungeons and torture chambers of the modern Inquisition. He is familiar by hearsay with the "sweating" processes of the police department and he knows how the thumbscrews are applied in the inner chamber of the District Attorney's office. The result of his near experience and his observation has evidently induced a doubt in the mind of Mr. Whelan as to the efficacy of this method of procuring testimony for the prosecution. Seemingly he disapproves of duress and coercion by the police in the effort to justify the arrests they make and the accusations they formulate. Apparently he is not quite satisfied with the "question" department of the District Attorney's office. But what is he going to do about it? What is the Commonwealth Club going to do about it? What is anybody going to do about it? Nothing; of course; for it is nobody's business to interfere with the prosecution's processes of getting information that can only be obtained by threats and promises; by the torture of perpetual questioning at all and any hour of the day or night; by rewards for base treachery of accomplices and pals; by threats of the penitentiary upon evidence falsely reported as given in the confessions of those accomplices; by lies and favors; tricks and devices; physical tortures and immunity contracts that are in truth documents to compound the felonies of the accused on condition that they will implicate others beyond the reach of the prosecution except through the testimony of unconvicted felons.

Mediaeval Methods

Something of this Fairfax Whelan told to the Commonwealth Club of this city, a few days ago; and the majority of that congregation, some of whom are among the most respectable and highly esteemed citizens in the community, were astounded. It was as if Mr. Whelan had lectured to them on recondite history of the Middle Ages, including in his discourse corroborative data from secret memoirs of officials and executioners whose duty it was to manipulate the machinery of justice in the days when the Council of Ten was supreme over the doges of imperial Venice and when Torquemada sat in grim judgment on the fate of unhappy heretics already condemned to the auto-da-fe in the great plaza of Seville. The members of the Commonwealth Club were astonished at the revelations of Mr. Whelan; which argues that they pay but little attention to what they read in the newspapers. These things are plainly printed every day, and he who runs may read; he who ponders on what he reads may comprehend and understand. What is meant, for example, by the phrase: No charge was placed against the prisoner and he is now in detinue? What is this condition that the reporters call "detinue"? As it is necessary to explain these matters to the Commonwealth Club, I will say that "detinue" in police vocabulary is synonymous with the "sweating process" and means that the prisoner is under the torture of the question; that he is in a dark, hot cell where he is never sure that he will be permitted to rest in sleep; where he is likely to be roused at midnight or just before dawn to be interrogated regarding the matter of which he is accused; to be bullied, threatened, browbeaten; or, if the "case" warrants, to be promised "immunity" for his share in the crime if he will implicate somebody of more importance to the prosecution. This is what is meant by "detinue." And this is but a bald, inadequate resume of what really happens to a prisoner after he has come into the hands of a police not quite sure that they have seized the right man, or whose ultimate purpose is to use this man as a tool and instrument in the effort to convict somebody else. A prisoner in detinue is not permitted to exercise any of his constitutional rights; he is not allowed to see a lawyer or to communicate with his friends; he is in incommunicado as absolutely as were the prisoners ordered under arrest by "Butcher" Weyler in Cuba or by the Spanish tyrants who ruled with mediaeval despotism in the Philippines before Dewey shattered the shackles of that galley slave government.

An Editorial Indorsement

The Commonwealth Club disapproved of the "third degree' as practiced by the police department and the District Attorney's office, as heartily as did Mr. Whelan; but there was one man in the State of California that gave the system his full commendation. Chester H. Rowell, commenting on the facts revealed by Mr. Whelan, said editorially in the Fresno Republican, that it was necessary to "question" the accused before charging him with crime, so that the prosecuting officers may have a basis of action. It was customary to question little children suspected of wrong doing, and Mr. Rowell saw no difference between the parental investigation of juvenile disobedience or other delinquency and the "sweating" processes by which the police and the officials of the District Attorney's office "arrive at the truth" preliminary to formal procedure under restrictions prescribed by the law. According to Mr. Rowell it is eminently proper that a citizen accused shall be "investigated" before he is tried by the courts; that he shall be found guilty by the police or the prosecuting officers before he is granted his inalienable privileges under the constitution of his country; that he shall be allowed to "confess" before he fulfills his further contract of implicating somebody whom the prosecution could not otherwise convict and whom it is useless to attempt to put through the "third degree." Of course Editor Rowell is sincere in this opinion. But once in detinue Editor Rowell would change his mind. If it could happen that Editor Rowell might be "in detinue" or in process of "sweating" by the police of San Francisco or the officials of the District Attorney, no shout of dissent, no cry of alarm, no squeal of pig imprisoned helpless beneath a gate, would be louder than the protest and denunciation of this same Fresno journalist and all-round reformer.

A Relic of Barbarism

The vital objection to the practice of the "third degree" is that it is a flagrant violation of the spirit and principle of the Anglican trial by jury. The "third degree" is the modern name of "the question," also known as "the torture," which was one of the features of the inquisitorial trial. In this country and in England the method of ascertaining the truth with respect to the guilt or innocence of a man charged with crime is known as the accusatorial trial, and it should be public from beginning to end. Not even the public prosecutor, according to Francis Lieber in his work "On Civil Liberty and Self-Government," has the right to make "a secret examination of the pris-

J. C. WILSON
BROKER
Private Wire, Chicago and New York
Member New York Stock Exchange, Chicago Board of Trade and Stock and Bond Exchange, San Francisco
LOCAL AND EASTERN STOCKS AND BONDS
Main Office, Mills Bldg. Tel. Krny. 482.
Branch Office, Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles.

Seattle's Newest and Most Modern Hotel

"Twelve Stories of Solid Comfort"
Building, concrete, steel and marble.
Located, most fashionable shopping district.
210 rooms, 135 baths.
Library and bound magazines in reading rooms for guests.
Most refined hostelry in Seattle.
Absolutely fireproof.
English Grill.
Rates, $1.00 up
HOTEL SAVOY SEATTLE

oner before the trial, the results of which are to be used at the trial, as this actually forms part of the French penal code." In this connection it may be of interest to be informed what is thought of the "third degree" in England. The London Saturday Review of August 3, 1907, commenting on the Steunenberg trial, touched on the subject of the part played by Pinkerton detectives. "One of the detectives of this firm," said the Review, "was given a free hand to manage Orchard, and the allegations are that he wore down his nerves and brought him to the point of starvation in the process. If an English detective had used such means, though he holds a more independent position than a detective of one of the interested parties, it is safe to say that the confession would have been disregarded by an English jury."

The Local Torture Chamber

With these observations of the old fashioned Harvard professor of law and of a London journal in mind may it not be instructive to reflect on the treatment of Abe Ruef by Detective Burns. As Ruef has been convicted and as the whole city is proud of the glorious achievement and feels that in his case no injustice could be done, I may be permitted to remind my readers that the unspeakable one was "sweated" at odd hours of the night when he was roused from sound slumber, and that this species of torture was not for the purpose of inducing the prisoner to incriminate himself, but to extract from him testimony that might lead to the conviction of others. Perhaps it will be said that the treatment to which Ruef is reported to have been subjected bore no relation to the methods pursued in the torture chamber in which the abhorrent inquisitorial trial was held. Therefore I will quote again from Professor Lieber in his chapter on the Inquisitorial Trial: "He (the judge) is allowed to resort to all kinds of tricks in order to work upon the imagination of the prisoner; for instance, calling him up at midnight, examining him and suddenly showing a skull to him." From the same authority I also learn that "court and police frightfully mingle in their functions in the first stages of the trial," and he exclaimed "No wonder that the Germans universally called for a total change of such a trial, and, as I stated before, some very important changes have taken place."

The Ways of Detectives

A circumstance that should not be overlooked in considering this matter of the "third degree" is that the prisoner under our system is not "sweated" by a judge but by a detective whose sole object is to win the glory of a conviction. Everybody who knows anything about police affairs knows that detectives are not actuated mainly by the love of truth in the pursuit of evidence against men charged with crime. When a detective undertakes to establish the guilt of a man, if he does not (as frequently has been done) actually fabricate evidence, at least he will contrive to make circumstances fit into the chain which he has set out to forge. Of this characteristic of detectives there has been abundant illustration in this city. Even detectives of more than average integrity in the ordinary affairs of life, out of a perverted professional enthusiasm, seem to develop an instinct for shaping facts to fit a theory. It is the same instinct which newspaper reporters often unconsciously develop when their specialty is that of solving sensational mysteries. We saw it illustrated but recently both by detectives and reporters in the case of a Berkeley student suspected of murder and in the Ednah Clark case, both of which were followed to a solution satisfactory to those engaged in dovetailing circumstances. Unquestionably the "third degree" often has enabled the police to fasten crime on persons, who, otherwise would have escaped punishment, but that is hardly sufficient justification for innovations and illegal practices which may become precedents to facilitate the railroading of innocent ment to jail and to the scaffold.

The Strange Case of a Millionaire and His Son

While on the subject of criminal prosecutions it may be worth while to call attention to the case of Charles Boyle of San Rafael, recently convicted of burglary in Salinas and soon to be tried for a murder of which he is suspected. He is the son of Henry Boyle, a millionaire, who is separated from the young man's mother, and who, from all accounts, has not done much toward assisting the prisoner. Indeed, according to the Independent of San Rafael, after several prominent citizens of that town testified that the defendant was insane, the father took the stand and swore that his son was sane, the result being that the jury found him guilty. There is more that I have learned from the same paper and it is that to which I wish to direct attention. The District Attorney of Salinas by whom Boyle was prosecuted for burglary says that the prisoner is "a cool, calculating, deliberate fiend, who would stop at nothing to accomplish his end," and while it is true "he is not of sound mind, nevertheless he is too dangerous a scoundrel to be at large." So he is to be tried for murdering a poor woman whose throat was cut from ear to ear. Boyle is the young man who, some months ago, poisoned valuable horses belonging to A. W. Foster and committed other apparently motiveless crimes in San Rafael. Some years ago he was injured playing football and now he is a fiend, but Dr. Hitchcock of San Rafael, Dr. Howitt, Dr. Wickman, George Agnew, Frank Johnson, the Fosters, whose horses were poisoned, and numerous others are convinced that the unfortunate young man is absolutely irresponsible. Nevertheless, a district attorney, who says that the prisoner is not of sound mind, apparently is prepared to prosecute him for murder. I am told that in Salinas the murder excited great indignation, and that such is the present state of feeling Boyle is very likely to be convicted. Meanwhile an explanation of the attitude of the defendant's father ought to be interesting. Rather a queer individual himself, I am inclined to think, for I read in the Independent that after giving testimony against his son he tried to collect from the county clerk three dollars for witness fees. Obviously this case contains the elements of a story of exceptional human interest, and I am curious to know why it has not been exploited.

Burlingame Matron (returning a borrowed book)—Thanks very much. I like Balzac. He writes such good English.

WE ARE SPECIALISTS AND DEALERS IN UNITED RAILWAYS OF SAN FRANCISCO
SECURITIES
And will be pleased to furnish quotations on application.
SUTRO & COMPANY
BROKERS
Phone, Kearny 332
412 MONTGOMERY ST. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

The GOLD MEDAL for quality in the Franco-British Exhibition has been awarded to
To His Majesty the King
By royal appointment
WHITE HORSE
WHISKY.
QUALITY THE SECRET OF SUCCESS
MACKIE & CO. DISTILLERS LTD.
LAGAVULIN DISTILLERY, ISLAY Established 1742
MALT-MILL " "
CRAIGELLACHIE " GLENLIVET
Note.—Any person proved guilty of re-filling our empty bottles with inferior whisky will be prosecuted.

Our Army From the British Viewpoint

Once again the American army has excited the ire of the British critic, who has proceeded to demolish it at long range, horse foot and guns. The London Daily Telegraph publishes a long screed in which it is set forth that the American military force is all that an army should not be and that it can never be anything better than it is. Grievance No. 1 appears to be that instead of ornamenting barracks in small towns and acting as escort for nurses and housemaids on their afternoons out (for a consideration) the American soldier spends the greater part of his service time on frontier posts and in the Philippines. "He plays no part in the literature of his country and no Kipling has ever sketched his life in time of peace." As to that, the obvious answer is that the American soldier is stationed where his work lies. England has always had an army but it is a current belief that until Kipling introduced her to her own "Soldiers Three" she was not aware of it, and if memory serves, it was on frontier posts and in the colonial possessions that he met his redoubtable "musketeers." In all the years of her existence the British Empire has produced but one Kipling, so it is hardly fair to use his name, though any stick will answer to beat a dog with. If we may not claim a Kipling, we have General Charles King, an army officer who has seen service under every condition and who has written nearly a dozen novels dealing with army life. John Fleming Wilson wrote some stories which in matter and manner challenge comparison with Kipling's soldier episodes and it would not be at all difficult to quote the names of half a score others, while England can claim but the one. Moreover if one is to fall back upon Kipling for evidence, the British army consists of little more than the three, with officers enough to keep them in order. That the army is the home of the American officer is admitted. It is expected to be so. The American army officer is educated by the government with the understanding that while he remains in the service he will devote the whole of his time and talents to his work. The English officer is a man of family who buys a commission and makes no effort whatever to live on his pay. He is acceptable not because of his training or military enthusiasm but because he has had the good luck to be born a "gentleman," and it is assumed in some mysterious fashion all the rest will be added unto him. It is a rather singular complaint to make of a citizen of a republic that as an officer he serves a nation, not a party, and an equally singular grievance to record against a private that he is citizen first and soldier afterward. Our critic has read his Kipling to little purpose after all. He laments that "Even on active service the American private expects to receive his rations of fresh meat and soft bread as laid down in the regulations. He has none of that grit which makes the British private tighten his belt and go on with the certainty that before long he will have a fight which will more than compensate him for his privations." In "A Conference of the Powers," "the Infant," discoursing at length on the same subject, voices his criticism as follows: "Tommy's such an exacting sort of creature, though he works beautifully. He wants to live as though he were in barracks all the time. I was grubbing on fowls and boiled corn, but the Tommies wanted their pound of fresh meat and their half-ounce of this and their two ounces of t'other thing, and they used to come at me and badger me for plug tobacco when we were four days in jungle! I said 'I can get you Burmese tobacco but I don't keep a canteen up my sleeve.' They couldn't see it. They wanted all the luxuries of the season, confound 'em." As to the iniquities of the American soldier writing to his congressman to complain, wherefore not when rations are short and looted army supplies are sold in the markets? It is one of the things that the American people expect and which the soldier in his civilian capacity has a right to report. He probably is paying his share of the taxes out of which military rations are bought.

As Kipling Saw Us and What Happened

When Kipling was a green and callow youth he made a flying trip through our country and took occasion to ridicule our "dear little army" and to prophecy what would happen if we ever had occasion to make real use of it. He rather regretted that the two nations were so nearly related that there was little likelihood of Tommy Atkins ever taking a share in the sport, for he felt convinced that it would be all over in the first round. He outlined the consternation that would overtake the United States were a foreign navy to appear on our shore and smacked his lips over the rich loot that would be afforded by the coast and lake cities bombarded from a distance of six miles, while military and citizens cowered fearful in the interior. He knew just the absurdity and futility of attempting to fill the ranks with volunteers, and pictured the confusion worse confounded and the joy of the enemy, who would proceed to "lick us to a frazzle" while the distracted officers were bringing a semblance of order out of the chaos. But what happened? We did have a war with a nation which was generally looked upon as a rather formidable opponent, and her navy never came within sight of our shores. It was brought to a triumphal conclusion, from declaration of hostilities to final treaty, within less than sixteen weeks, and we went calmly on about our business as before. On the other hand, the invincible British army brought face to face with a handful of resolute Boers, was so completely routed that even Kipling himself turned his pen to the berating of his own nation. His laudation of the cricket and polo heroes became denunciation of the "flanneled fools" and "muddied oafs," and instead of the glorification of the six feet of Irish and Yorkshire beef and brawn his attention was forced to the undersized, pigeon-breasted unintelligent material which, even when the requirements were lowered to

GIERSBERGER WINES

The wine of merit and quality all around the world. Compare it with the best wines and we are satisfied.

THEO. GIER WINE COMPANY

Phone Oakland 123 1225-1227 BROADWAY, OAKLAND

TAFT & PENNOYER

The Mecca for Christmas Shoppers

Everything Pertaining to a Merry Christmas Displayed Here as Nowhere Else

T. & P.

Glove and Merchandise Orders

Don't worry a moment about what to give—give one of our Glove or Merchandise Orders. They are good anywhere in the store.

A Glove Order is also good at P. Centemeri, the well-known glove manufacturers in San Francisco. This is an excellent gift for your San Francisco friends.

An acceptable present, a box of Gloves; assorted styles and colors; three pair in a box. Prices, $3.00, $4.50 and $6.00 per box.

CLAY STREET, 14th to 15th
OAKLAND

the last notch, were insufficient in numbers to fill the ranks. It is eminently true that the army man, whether officer or private, is not conspicuous on our streets, and perhaps for the same reason that doctors and lawyers would be missed likewise, if we depended on their uniform to identify them. They are not numbered among the unemployed and are supposed to be attending to their legitimate occupations elsewhere. Moreover, the army man is a very small part of our population. In Germany, for instance, one man in thirty is a soldier. In the United States the proportion is one in three hundred, and the three hundred are spread over a vastly larger area. As to "the ghastly failures made at the time of the Spanish war" they were not made by the military but by the civilian arm of the nation, and considering the still more ghastly blunders made at the time of the Boer war, a decent reticence would seem to be more to the purpose. The simple truth is that the might of the British army is largely a matter of theory. Up to the time of the Boer war it was so many years since it had been called upon to face a foe of anything like equal strength and equipment that there was virtually no adequate basis of comparison. The little outbreaks which furnish occupation for the troops in India are about on a level with our own Indian troubles. While the United States as a whole has never given the Indian wars the serious consideration which they deserved, the insurrections of the Burmese and Afghan tribes have been duly magnified, and the stay-at-home Englishman who meets an occasional officer on leave at a club and encounters Tommy in the splendors of his uniform, is too apt to be carried away by the gold lace and glitter. When it comes to quoting Kipling as authority in army matters the result is like searching the scripture. There is a text for every argument, and for all his glorification of the man in the ranks, his grit and willingness, there steals into the memory that protest of Stanley Ortheris "pen 'north of pop" against being "a thin red 'ero" in time of war and not good enough to be served with drink in a common club if any one else objected to his red coat, while one of the few occasions on which slow, stolid Jack Learoyd opened his mouth to speak it was in denunciation of the stock pious tale of the bad boy who began his career of crime by stealing birds' nests, and followed it through a course of Sabbath-day swimming, until he finally reached his ordained bad end 'an' went an 'listed for a sojer."

"So the millionaires gave a mask ball? Was it a success?" "No, but it would have been a success save for Percy Lavender." "What did he do?" "Why, he went disguised as a process-server, and all the millionaires jumped out of the windows."

The Steinheil Mystery

Not since the exposure of the great Humbert swindle has Paris shown so much interest in a crime as that which is taken in the murder of Adolphe Steinheil, the artist and of his mother-in-law, Madame Japy. At first it was thought the murders were committed by thieves. Mr. Steinheil who was found in her room, bound and gagged, told the police that a red-headed woman and four men committed the crimes, and that their purpose was robbery. In the course of time stories were told about Mme. Steinheil and her relations with persons of high position. M. Leydet, the Magistrate, was accused of being willing to stifle the inquiry because he had been an intimate friend of Mme. Steinheil. M. Hamard was said to be in the same position. But the stories that gained most credence were based on the intimacy which existed between the late President Felix Faure and Mme. Steinheil. According to one story Mme. Steinheil possessed letters written to her by Felix Faure which her husband had threatened to publish for blackmailing purposes. The burglary, according to this story, was carried out by the authorities themselves to get possession of the letters, while the accidental presence of the painter, his wife and her mother brought about the tragedy. Another story, propagated by the anti-Dreyfusards, was that Mme. Steinheil was the agent of a Jewish syndicate which supported Dreyfus and that she had poisoned Felix Faure the evening before he was going to sign the decree for the revision of the Dreyfus case.

Faure's Death

The story that Felix Faure was murdered has been in circulation several years, and it has been hinted at in many newspapers by correspondents who intimated that it was instigated by the secret police of Paris. The facts regarding his death are briefly these: About 5 o'clock on the afternoon of February 17, 1899, Faure entered a room in the Elysee Palace which had been fitted up as a place where he could take a rest from his official labors. He was there joined by his mistress, Mme. Steinheil. Three-quarters of an hour later M. Le Gall, the President's secretary, who was in an adjoining room, heard a cry for help from the room. Entering, he discovered M. Faure lying back on the sofa very pale, obviously ill, and moaning loudly, while in front of him stood Mme. Steinheil, who fainted on seeing Le Gall enter. A doctor who chanced to be in the building declared the President to be dying from an attack of arterio-sclerosis. Mme. Steinheil was hurried to a carriage and sent home. The President was moved into the residential part of the palace, where he died at 10 o'clock.

The Man She Loved

Mme. Steinheil was a society woman of powerful influence in the days of Faure's administration. She was beautiful, clever and hampered by no scruples as was evident from her many love affairs. After the murder of her husband she went about as though nothing had happened until, as she has since explained, to justify herself in the eyes of one whose love she had lost, she ac-

RHEUMATISM
AND ALL PAIN INSTANTLY RELIEVED BY
BAUME BETULAE
THE ORIGINAL APPLICATION BY ABSORPTION
SOLD BY DRUGGISTS FOR 50 CENTS A TUBE
AND AT OWL DRUG COMPANY STORES.

J. M. Jacobi & Co.
S. W. COR. MONTGOMERY & SUTTER STS

To the Woman in Doubt

Who puts to herself the inevitable Yuletide question

"What Shall I Give Him"

The store of J. M. Jacobi & Co. is a veritable revelation.

Gifts for Men

Specially priced today. For instance, here is one suggestion:

SPECIAL

Fancy "sweater" Waistcoats with silk sleeves, novel and fashionable, $5 to $16
With self sleeves - - - $3 to $12
Twenty per cent discount

cused an American journalist of the crime. He proved an alibi and then she said the murder was committed by her husband's valet. He too proved an alibi and then she accused the son of her cook, a man named Wolf, who also proved an alibi after which Madame Steinheil herself was arrested. The man whose love she said she wished to regain put himself at once in communication with the Attorney-general. He proved to be M. Borderel, a wealthy land owner in the Department of Ardennes, Mayor of Balaives and a typical country gentleman of middle age, a widower with four children. He told the following story: "On March 8th last I went to Paris to see my children. I was introduced to Mme. Steinheil at a reception. Her beauty and grace fascinated me forthwith and I gladly accepted her invitation to call at her house to see her husband's pictures. When I went I bought two pictures for $1,600. A little later I was invited to dinner, and found at the house a wealthy and distinguished company belonging to the artistic, military, industrial and judicial worlds. The musical talents of the mistress of the house charmed me, our social relations soon took on another character and a few days before Easter we arranged to pass the holiday season at her cottage at Bellevue. For a month it was an exquisite idyll. Marguerite seemed to adore me. She told me her past life. One day she said: 'I know that evil tongues pretend that I have had many lovers. It is false, I swear it! I have never loved but one man, that is you.' I had a name on my lips which I repeated to her—Felix Faure. She sprang up. 'It is false! I was ill in bed when he died. I can prove it, if you will, by showing you Dr. Suffit's certificates.' (The doctor has since said that he was not even attending Mme. Steinheil at the time.) Then she added, 'I love only you. My husband leads a life of infamy. I hate him. I have hated through my life, my husband and my mother, who compelled me to marry him. I will get a divorce and you shall marry me.'"

He Deserted Her

M. Borderel told her at once that he intended never to marry owing to his children; certainly not before his daughter, then 13, was grown up. M. Borderel paid the rent and all the expenses of the Bellevue villa and returned to his country home. There a reaction set in, and he determined to break with Mme. Steinheil. He returned to Paris on May 14th for a final interview with her, but returned without explaining himself as he found her entertaining a large dinner party. On May 30th, the morning before the crime, Mme. Steinheil called him up on the telephone in the Mayor's office at Balaives. "The communication was bad," M. Borderel told the Magistrate. "I could only hear these words, 'Well, I am satisfied. At least I hear your voice.' Then came a burst of laughter so young, so pure, so clear, that now I do not believe it possible that the woman who laugned like that in the morning could have taken part in so fearful a crime on the same evening." When M. Borderel heard of the crime he hastened to Paris and saw Mme. Steinheil, who was still too ill to speak to him. Since then, he says, he has not heard from or written to her, except that he has sent her funds by the hands of a friend. The new Magistrate is beginning his inquiry over from the beginning, his first step being to order the bodies of M. Steinheil and Mme. Japy to be exhumed to see if a chemical analysis will show if they had been poisoned or drugged on the evening of the crime with a view to facilitating its perpetration. Marietta Wolf, the cook, now incensed by the accusation against her son, is willing to tell stories about the mistress she once loved, stories of her liaisons with rich men which leave it clear that M. Steinheil knew how his wife lived and obtained so much money.

"I hear that young Mr. Philkins is quite ill," said Mrs. Joggins. "Yes, poor fellow," replied Mrs. Snooper, "he leads such a sedimentary life that his health is shattered."

CENTRAL TRUST COMPANY

of California, has removed to its new offices, corner Market, Sutter and Sansome Streets. A general banking business transacted.

CHAS. F. LEEGE, President B. G. TOGNAZZI, Manager

CIGARS!!!

We have now in stock our specially selected Improved Havana Cigars:

MANUEL GARCIA ALONZO
VILLAR Y VILLAR
LORDS OF ENGLAND
BUCK Y CIA.
ADELINA PATTI
H. UPMANN
LA AFRICANA
ANTHONY AND CLEOPATRA

We also recommend our new especial selected Imported Havana Cigars under the brand—

"STAR AND GARTER"

KEY WEST AND DOMESTIC CIGARS

From $2.50 to $20.00 per box.

M. BLASKOWER 201 MONTGOMERY ST. 1117 VAN NESS AVE.

IDEAL FARMS

"CERTIFIED MILK"

The most perfect product of the modern dairy

Certified to by the Medical Commission of the San Francisco County Medical Society

DISTRIBUTED BY

GUADALOUPE DAIRY CO. Phone Market 2590

STANDARD MILK CO. Phone Market 226

Children's Books
Babies' Books
Latest Fiction
Standard Works
Books of Reference Dictionaries
Diaries
Religious Works
Bibles
Guest Books
Scrap Books
Post Card Albums
And in fact any kind of a book you would be likely to want.

NOTHING MAKES A BETTER GIFT THAN A GOOD BOOK

SMITH BROS.

ART DEALERS STATIONERS BOOK SELLERS

463-465 THIRTEENTH STREET Between Broadway and Washington

OAKLAND

Pyrographic Outfits
Burnt Wood Novelties
Appliqued Leather
Framed and Unframed Pictures
Kodaks
Calendars
Leather Goods
Brass Novelties
Fancy Stationery
Poker Chips
Fountain Pens
Desk Sets
And everything else a big stationery and art goods store has to sell.

SELECT NOW WHILE STOCKS ARE COMPLETE

The Old Consul and the New

I learn from an article by Professor Powell, published in one of the cheap and popular newspapers of New York, that my old friend the American consul is no more; that he is a political deadster and deep buried in the dust and mold of the tradition of diplomacy. He is a picturesque memory; and another now fills the place that once was his. This other, I am informed, is an up-to-date young man, alert, active, suave, aggressive in crisis or emergency, learned, cultured, enterprising, cool headed, wise as Polonius, shrewd as Falstaff, witty as Mercuito. This young man is an Admirable Crichton in all knowledge necessary to his consular and diplomatic equipment. He is the product of a civil service examination that would have floored a Jeremy Bentham and knocked old Doc Johnson endwise. He has achieved an excess of 85 per cent in oral and written answers to questions in maritime and commerial law, political economy, history of the United States, modern history of the world at large, arithmetic, one or two languages besides English, and business methods appertaining to the office he is seeking. These young men, some of whom could square the circle or solve the fourth dimension if it was required by the Examiners of the Civil Service are to receive, in the beginning of their career, from $2000 to $2500 a year! Imagine all that learning, ability, occult and highly specialized erudition, going begging for the hire of a bank cashier or the city editor of a newspaper in a third or fourth rate city! How many Envoys Extraordinary, Ministers Plenipotentiary, or Ambassadors to the Court of St. James could pass that examination on a basis of 85 per cent? My hope of preferment against Doctor Pardee's chance of getting what he would like to have, that not one of our far-flung diplomats occupying seats of the mighty at banquet boards of foreign court functions, could smash forty per cent out of that consular examination, to say nothing of 85 per cent. It's all very well to get these erudite and capable young men for the service of the government; but what a waste of young men! That's the way it goes. Millions of volts and watts and ohms of mental energy expended upon trivial affairs to produce infinitesimal results. Mountains laboring to bring forth a measly litter of miserable mice, bludgeons braining butterflies, square men in round holes, and square holes to misfit round pegs. There must be something wrong with these young fellows. Perhaps they lack ambition and prefer the easy dignity, the cultured or semi-cultured environment of a consular or legation job, to the larger, manlier, more useful, more courageous if more streuous effort necessary to maintain them on the firing line in the fierce, relentless battle of life, wherein victory or defeat makes for the common betterment of humanity and the higher civilization of posterity. My heart bleeds for these splendidly equipped young men thus wantonly consigned to lives of vague incertitude and eternally doomed to dull oblivion's shade. The old-time, stout-hearted, tobacco-chewing, swaggering, blustering, bluffing, big hearted consuls were good enough, "smart" enough and big enough to represent the American republic abroad; and they were brave enough if occasion required to tell king, kaiser, prince or potentate to "go to hell." They never fawned at courts or bent the pregnant hinges of the knee to Shah, Sultan, Rajah or Ahkoand of Swat. They "seen their duty, a dead sure thing; and

TAIT'S CAFE

MAKES A SPECIALTY OF CATERING

For Dinners, Luncheons, Breakfasts or Weddings in San Francisco, Bay Cities or San Mateo County. Menus and estimates submitted.

TAIT'S CAFE,

Van Ness and Eddy, San Francisco.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

HEAR OUR ARTISTS AND ORCHESTRA DURING DINNER AND AFTER THEATRE

MISS ANITA GILL, Mezzo Soprano

MISS NADYNE PARKER, Lyric Soprano

THOMPSON'S ANNEX

O'Farrell near Fillmore

THE COSMOS

658 MARKET ST., OPPOSITE PALACE HOTEL

Table d' Hote Lunch, 50c.

Salad

Fresh Crab — Sliced Tomato

Soup

Cream of Onion — Sliced Tomato

Entrees

Tenderloin of Sole, Tartar Sauce — Salmon Trout, Maitre d'Hotel

Pot Roast with Noodles — Sheep's Feet Spanish

Vienna Schnitzel, Tomato Sauce — Leg of Lamb with Spanish

Tagliarini and Cheese — Roast Beef, au Jus

Dessert

Sliced Bananas and Cream — Water Melon — Ice Cream

Apple Pie — Squash Pie

Swiss Cheese — Roquefort Cheese — Brie Cheese

JULES' RESTAURANT 328 BUSH STREET

Below Kearny

Phone Kearny 1812

NOTICE

On New Year's Eve we will keep open until 2 o'clock a. m.

Make your reservations now.

Music

AFTER A HEARTY DUCK DINNER

JACKSON'S NAPA SODA

ASK FOR BLACK AND WHITE SCOTCH WHISKEY

IT IS THE BEST

NONE BOTTLED IN AMERICA

Green in fifteen different shades. Tom Dillon, Milliner for Men, 712 Market street, opposite Call Building.

they went for it thar an' then." So wrote one of the ablest secretaries that ever directed the business of our Department of State, paying the tribute of a great man's appreciation of a hero's merit; and so he might have written of the old time consul, whose place is now filled with America's best young manhood, frittered away in work that ought to be performed by men of sterner stuff, coarse-fibred, perhaps, but competent, and for the most part loyal to the trust reposed in them by their country and their countrymen.

The New Year's Eve Celebration

The downtown New Year's eve celebration is not to be merely a local affair. The ruralities have begun to sit up and take notice, and there is going to be a great rush of people hitherward for participation in the joyous event which gives promise of being a carnival of the most spirited character. According to Paul T. Carroll, chairman of the celebration committee, the carnival "will go down in the annals of local history as the biggest and most distinctive event ever held here." Andrew McCarthy, chairman of the Finance Committee, says that the merchants have responded generously and with enthusiasm. "They are pulling together as they never pulled before," he says, "and the spirit of them augurs well for the future of the city." Among the greatest enthusiasts in town are the Chinese. Mr. Look Tiu Eli, manager of the Sing Chong Company, the first firm to begin rebuilding in the old quarter, has been taking a most active interest in the preparations for the celebration. He was mainly instrumental in raising ten thousand dollars for illuminating and decorating purposes.

Gardener McLaren is Now Author McLaren

Though there are guides and treatises innumerable for the use of gardeners, amateur and professional, it has been a subject of regret that not one of the extensive library is of practical value in our own State, and still less in our own vicinity. Not only do times and seasons vary so that the Californian looks for blossoms at about the season that his eastern brother is breaking soil and examining seed catalogues, but the plants and shrubs which are considered worthy of special care and shelter either take care of themselves in our climate or else are discarded for others of greater value. Mr. John McLaren, our master gardener, under whose guidance Golden Gate Park has grown from an ocean sand dune into one of the wonders of the modern world, has at last come to the rescue, and his "Gardening in California" will prove to the prospective home builder every bit as valuable as the device of an architect on house construction. Mr. McLaren does not make the mistake of taking anything for granted, but goes back to first principles, to the selection of the grounds, the laying out of footpaths and driveways, the consideration of every point of advantage and disadvantage, and the outlining of house, stable and other structures by means of flagged stakes—all this before the first spadeful of earth is turned. Each step in the construction of roads as well as of lawns, flower beds, vistas and tree clumps is given the same attention. Water supply is considered, and in fact, every possible problem connected with the laying out and care of a pleasure garden. There are even diagrams showing the best treatment of plots from the size of a small city lot to that of a sizable park, but for his minuteness the author is never dogmatic. He advises, suggests variations, guides, but never commands. Water gardens, window boxes, house plants and conservatories all receive their due. Nearly every plant, shrub and tree that can be grown is described; the method of propagation, special need, best location for culture, insect pests, and everything else of interest or value set forth. Even the shape of the hole into which a shrub is to be transplanted is descanted on at length. "Gardening in California" will be a useful guide to one whose operations must be confined to a handkerchief lawn. The prospective owner of a large plot or a country place should not dream of ignoring it. Even if there is to be an army of gardeners and undergardeners, the information to be gathered from its pages, the hints of how and why, will prevent much future disappointment inevitable when matters are managed haphazard. And to crown all, Mr. McLaren's easy simplicity of language and his deep interest in his subject gives the book an intimate character. Each garden lover—and it is not designed for any other—must feel that it is personal and to himself. The work has been brought out in beautiful style by Mr. A. M. Robertson.

DOWNTOWN MERCHANTS' COMMITTEE
Sitting down (reading from left to right) are W. D. Fennimore, John A. Hammersmith and Paul T. Carroll; standing, Robert A. Roos and A. G. McCarthy.

ROOS BROS.

Clothiers to Men, Women and Children

MARKET AT STOCKTON AND ELLIS also VAN NESS AT BUSH

Mother Goose in Bohemia

The Christmas jinks of the Bohemian Club bids fair to equal if not to outshine former festivities in point of cleverness, as well as to serve the legitimate end of all such endeavors. It is rumored that so many of the monthly dinners have been marred, at least for some of the members, by an objectionable broadness that something in the nature of a protest has been registered, and that the Christmas playlet is to mark the beginning of a reform. It is to be a rollicking extravaganza of Mother Goose characters, taking in everything, from the ogres with their "buckets of blood' melody to the little owls. Mother Goose will be impersonated by Dick Hotaling. J. Wilson Shields is to be one of the ogres, and Spencer Grant, Harry Bates and Billy Smith are to be the owls. It is the joint work of Charles Fields and a collaborator.

And McCreery Vanished

The members of the Bohemian Club are looking for Mr. McCreery. He has been missing, so they say, since Friday night, and the cause of his disappearance may be traced to Dr. Shields. The genial club members had a gay dinner party. Prosperity smiled and merriment

Largest Exclusive Office Furniture House on the Pacific Coast.

EVERY ARTICLE OF FURNITURE REQUIRED IN AN OFFICE

Exclusive representatives of the most important lines manufactured.

RUCKER-FULLER Desk Co.

737-739-741 MISSION ST.

Grand Prix and Highest Awards at all World Expositions

DEWAR'S

SCOTCH WHISKEY

Makes the Best High Ball on Earth

SHERWOOD & SHERWOOD, Importers

Luscious Old Red Wine

LA QUESTA

AGED IN THE WOOD AND MELLOWED IN THE BOTTLE

Pronounced by experts the best wine made in California

FOR SALE BY

L. D. McLEAN CO. McCAW BROS.

L. N. WALTER, Cor. Devisadero and California

JULIUS BERENDSEN, 762 Devisadero Street

Served at The St. Francis, The Fairmont, Hotel Rafael, Peninsula Hotel, Jules, Chantilly, Berges & Frank's Old Poodle Dog, Thompson's, New Frank's, Union League Club and Cosmos Club.

R. H. PEASE, Pres. J. A. SHEPARD, Vice-Pres. C. F. RUNYON, Sec'y R. H. PEASE, Jr., Treas.

New Store and Location of the

GOODYEAR RUBBER COMPANY

587-589-591 MARKET ST. 17-19-21-23-25 SECOND ST.

ran high, and it occurred to them that the time was ripe to indulge in a new piano for their private entertainments. No sooner was the proposition made than a subscription was started and in the course of a few minutes two hundred and fifty dollars were raised. It was a goodly sum, but as nothing but a Steinway was to be considered, of course it fell a long way short of the full price. Dr. Shields presented the pathetic case to the consideration of Mr. Creery, who is a cautious man in money matters, and credited with an inclination to look twice at his dollars before he bids them farewell. Be that as it may, he drew out a well filled wallet and handed out greenbacks to the amount of fifty dollars. In the name of the club Dr. Shields acknowledged the generosity. In his suavest manner he inadvertently gave the assurance that they would be only too happy to appeal again should they be in need, and that they felt confident the deficiency would be made good. Mr. McCreery clapped his hands to his head and ran. He has not been seen about the club premises since, and even the lightest-hearted express fears that the case is serious.

THE WEEK'S FINANCIAL OUTLOOK

By R. E. Mulcahy

A general change of sentiment has come over Wall Street operators since my last letter. Many of the big traders who have maintained a bullish position for the past year turned on the market after President-elect Taft delivered his Wednesday night speech in which he gave expression to what might be expected in the way of tariff revision. It was generally believed he would be contented with a few reductions here and there, but it is quite evident that a campaign of no small proportions will be conducted in this direction. The stocks that will be mostly offered will be smelters: steel, lead, copper, and securities of this character. Mr. E. F. Hutton, who is considered one of the best posted Wall Street men, predicts Steel Common will sell at 30, that St. Paul, Great Northern and Northern Pacific will necessarily have to reduce their present rate of dividends. There has been evidence recently of many large transportation properties showing a willingness to float new bonds. The fact that so many wanted to do this at this time caused a reversal of the recent bullish feeling. One by one the market leaders began liquidating their holdings. The public have a fairly good load to carry at present, and will no doubt have to let go should any material decline come. The market will wave one way and the other as bills are brought to light by Congress. The aggressiveness of President Roosevelt does not add assurance to investors.

The market in general has had a very big advance durthe past six months. No doubt many of the large lines, which are accumulated during the panic, have been sold out and will not be replaced unless a material decline from present prices is seen. Money rates are somewhat lower than they were a week ago. For the present at least quick profits should be taken. A scalping market will be about the best that may be expected until more definite information may be had regarding the action of Congress.

A good motto—Temperance against Prohibition—"The Old Government" against poor Whisky.

HUNTER WHISKEY

HIGHEST STANDARD OF THE AMERICAN
GENTLEMAN'S WHISKEY

HENRY CAMPE & CO., INC.,
Distributors for California and Nevada
San Francisco, Cal.

Hotel Westminster

Los Angeles, Cal.
Fourth and Main Sts.

American Plan, Reopened

Rates per Day $2.50 Rooms without Bath

Rooms with Bath $3.00, $3.50 and $4.00

European Plan

$1.00 per day and up, with bath $1.50 and up

F. O. JOHNSON - - Proprietor

Telephone DOUGLAS 2487 R. E. MULCAHY, Manager

E. F. HUTTON & CO.

THE PIONEER HOUSE

BANKERS AND BROKERS

Members
New York Stock Exchange
New York Cotton Exchange
New York Coffee Exchange
Chicago Board of Trade

490 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Branch, ST. FRANCIS HOTEL

Two Private Wires to Chicago and New York

Washington, D. C., 1301 F Street
Los Angeles, 112 W. Third Street
New York, 31-33-35 New Street

Social Prattle

By TANTALUS

The Greenway Assembly

By the first of his Assemblies at the Fairmont Ned. Greenway fully sustained his reputation as a host. Nay, he won new laurels, and wore them with the jaunty air of the gayest of gay young cavaliers. As I hinted last week Mr. Greenway has been whipping up his energies, stimulating himself with a view to notable achievement, and now I am pleased to record the gratifying success that crowned his mighty endeavor. At brief intervals for several years the rumor has been let loose to the dismay of the elect that our illustrious master of the revels, mindful of the waning of his physical powers and the waxing of his embonpoint, was about to abandon the fashionable herd to its fate—to retire with his laurels, as it were, and yield the sceptre to some younger person inspired with ambition for a record. But now it is evident that these rumors were without foundation; that Mr. Greenway has taken a new lease of life and implanted himself more firmly than ever on his throne; also, that a little rivalry was the very stimulant the doctor ordered. The plutocrats of Burlingame may come to town with their checkbooks to invade the Greenway citadel; they may organize and exclude; they may electrify and dazzle, but they can't make Ned take a back seat. I don't know what the first Greenway Assembly cost, but there was nothing about it that savored of the piker. The resources of the Fairmont were never so thoroughly tested as they were last Friday night; nor had we ever before quite realized the capacity for enchantment inherent in that big white palace on the hill. As for the human side of the ball, it was in every sense eloquent of the wealth and beauty of San Francisco. If anybody who is somebody in society was not present it was because nobody could alter the circumstances that rendered attendance impossible. But this does not mean that the bars were down.

MISS CAROL HARRIMAN

Daughter of E. H. Harriman, President of the Southern Pacific Company.

Dr. Louis D. Mead has opened offices at 626-627 Butler Building, Union Square.

The Barn Dance

The ball, despite the sumptuousness of it, was delightfully free from everything that one associates with the always frozen formalities, and as there was a surplus of men none of the girls pined for partners. The debutantes who suffered disappointment at the first Greenway had no cause for complaint. The gaiety of the event did not reach its climax until the midnight banquet at which everybody went in for a rollicking good time, after which came the barn dance which has become the inevitable feature of all such affairs. As usual the novices cut a comical figure, even the most graceful of them behaving somewhat after the style of a Kangaroo.

MISS MARY HARRIMAN

Daughter of E. H. Harriman, President of the Southern Pacific Company.

Among the girls who have almost reached perfection in this dance are Claire Nichols, Margaret Newhall and Christine Pomeroy. Of Christine I heard it remarked that she can do the dance better than a native to the manner born.

The Riot of Luxury at Burlingame

It is idle to speculate on the question of the final limit of luxury when people have the money and the will to spend it. Mere millionaires are already relatively amongst the poor, and it need surprise no one if, some day in the future, fashionable charities will be organized to assist them in the purchase of what to them are necessaries, just as second-hand toys and clothing and holiday dinners are now provided for the real paupers. The cost of such little matters as carriages and automobiles runs up into the ten thousands, and one may as well have nothing at all as fall behind the fashion in such things. The George A. Popes, they tell us, have the automobile fever in a virulent form. The latest addition to their collection is a Renault Limousine furnished with gold and Bohemian glassware. Every novelty that French ingenuity could suggest has been added. The pressure of an electric button drops into place the bridge table and extra seats, and there is absolutely nothing lacking which wealth could supply or fancy demand. The glory of every other machine has been dimmed, and since the appearance of the Popes' at the last polo game it has been the subject of the envious gossip of the Burlingame set. Naturally, others will not consent to be outdistanced, and we may look forward to a period of extravagant rivalry. The Andrew Welches already have the machine fad well developed. They have four now, but someone mentioned that they were negotiating for another for Santa Barbara next summer. As money is no object with them the chances are that their next acquisition will outdo the Popes' in its appointments.

An Episode of a Ball

There are practical disadvantages to be encountered by the wearers of the Directoire gown. Some of the adopters of this style find it difficult to progress at all under any circumstances, and would, no doubt, appreciate the forethought which counseled our great-grandmothers of beloved memory to practice in private before they ventured abroad in the voluminous crinoline of their day and generation. The specific charge brought against the Directoire is the hindrance which it interposes to the full enjoyment of the dance, though Paris dancing masters have already signified their intention of meeting the difficulty half way by introducing new movements more in keeping with the costume. But that is yet in the future, and the present problem is how to meet conditions as they are, wear the fashionable gown, enjoy the dance and avoid making a spectacle of one's self. At one of the recent balls in this city a matron and a maid each solved the difficulty to her own satisfaction, though they adopted diametrically opposite methods. The matron's gown was a stunning one, with a train several yards in length, and when the waltz began she found herself confronted with the choice between letting it sweep or holding it too high to conform to the accepted conventions. She quickly decided in favor of the former, with the result that ere long she was obliged to retire for repairs to what remained of her four hundred dollar gown. The maid, on the other hand, began the dance with vigor, holding her train from the ravages of passing feet. One or two falls convinced her that clinging gowns and graceful dancing were incompatible, so she arranged her costume as comfortably as circumstances permitted, and danced the evening away. They say her silver and blue stockings were the envy of every woman present. It was at this same ball that George Newhall remarked on the extravagance of the hosiery, which must have cost a small fortune in itself.

A Continuous Performance

Miss Marion Wright is an extremely popular girl. During the last year she has officiated as bridesmaid at so many weddings that she has numbered her gowns, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. The seventh was the frock she wore at the Davis-McDonald wedding, where she was maid of honor. It was soft corn-colored satin draping her slender figure in an unbroken line, with a panel of gold-colored embroidery that hung straight from neck to feet. Her hair, done in Grecian style, completed the effect of her costume.

MISS ELSIE DE WOLFE
REPRESENTED BY
MRS. EDGAR DE WOLFE
INTERIOR DECORATION AND OBJETS D' ART
TEMPORARY OFFICE, GRANADA HOTEL TELEPHONE FRANKLIN 422

None But the Army For Her

It would be hard to tell which of the two cousins, Eliza McMullin and Anna Weller, who were formally presented to society on the same day, is the more popular. While Eliza, by the way, has expressed no predilection for any of the professions that supply eligibles for the swell debutante class, Anna, I hear, is partial to the army. I understand that she has unburdened herself and declared that she will never marry at all unless the inevitable "he" wears the olive-drab for an everyday dress. She might "possibly" marry into the navy, as second choice, but the applicant for her hand and heart must "positively wear a uniform." The ultimatum has gone forth and we have but to await results, but, come to think of it, at her coming out tea the artillery appeared to be the army branch most in favor.

The Borels

Word comes from San Mateo that Lupita Borel is busying herself these days with plans for Christmas festivities for the poor children of Beresford. It is unusual for one so young to be so forethoughtful but the work which she accomplishes cannot be overestimated. The Borel girls are all bright and clever, and their advantages of travel and continental society make them unusually interesting conversationalists. Had the family remained in the city Miss Lupita would have been one of the winter's debutantes, but until the expiration of the lease which the Pacific Union Club holds on the Borel residence they have elected to make their home at San Mateo. Society has probably missed them more than they have society, for they are a most united family and quite a colony among themselves. The three married daughters, Mrs. Bevet, Mrs. Lewis and Mrs. Cotton have their own homes near the family mansion just outside of San Mateo, and there are two younger daughters still sheltered under the old roof tree. Miss Lupita is a studious girl with the unique fad of keeping a collection of the wild flowers of every country which she has visited.

The Corbins and the Pattons

The society hives of Washington are buzzing with the story that it was the social ambition of his wife that led to the defeat of Major General H. C. Corbin for the

CHAS. M. PLUM & CO.

Offer suggestions for appropriate Christmas gifts

Many Inexpensive Pieces

Novelties in Furniture

Prices Greatly Reduced on

Oriental Rugs

Scores of beautiful rugs, all sizes and weaves. Reduced prices from $9 up.

OLDEST CARPET AND FURNITURE HOUSE IN SAN FRANCISCO — ESTABLISHED 1850

1632 CALIFORNIA STREET
Below VAN NESS

important position of chairman of the inauguration ceremonies to take place next March. Like all women's warfare, the action took place behind the scenes, and only the result is presented to the public. To understand the situation one must delve more or less into ancient history which has more or less of a California setting. Mrs. Corbin's father, the late William Patton, was one of those picturesque western characters, an ordinary Virginia City miner who one day "struck it rich." When fortune smiled upon him he turned his back on the Nevada town and with his wife and family he established himself in San Francisco. There were five daughters who were enrolled at the convent of Notre Dame in San Jose and given all the advantages of education. Mr. Patton did not survive long to enjoy his fortune, and at his death he left his widow enormously wealthy. Like many other pioneer wives, Mrs. Patton was practically destitute of book-learning and the contrast between her pathetic ignorance and her large bank account only served to emphasize the discrepancy. Eventually she went abroad with her daughters and when she returned to America, took up their abode on Massachusetts avenue in Washington, where they bent all their energies in the direction of social conquest. The sudden death of the mother, who left a large fortune somewhat lessened the handicap, but for all that, the home of the Patton girls was facetiously dubbed "the Irish Legation" by the tongues of the Washington wits. The Pattons were fine girls and their clever wits and caustic tongues made it a dangerous pastime to cross swords with them. Mary, the eldest daughter, was once reported to be engaged to Bourke Cochran. Augusta married Congressman J. M. Glover of Maine, from whom she was divorced, in order, so said the gossips, to marry Senator W. A. Clarke. Edith is the wife of Major General Corbin and Nellie and Josephine are yet unmarried. They succeeded to some extent in their ambition of storming the portals of society but have never entered the holy of holies. Mrs. Corbin's name appeared in the list of contributors to the Republican campaign fund as the donor of ten thousand dollars. It is gossipped about that had the chairmanship been given to General Corbin Mrs. Corbin would have exercised the right to score off her old debts against those who have opposed her socially, and so great was the fear of those who, in their own day of supremacy ruthlessly used their power that every opposing influence was brought to bear, with the result that the coveted post was given to E. J. Stellwagon, the banker.

The Kurtzs of Yerba Buena

To see dainty little Mrs. Kurtz in her pretty home on Goat Island, no one could imagine her in high boots and hunting garb, and yet, up at the big Van Arsdale place, "Ridgewood," above Ukiah, hunting was always one of her favorite pursuits. The Van Arsdales have a beautiful tract of land there; and before her marriage Irene was fond of giving large house parties during the season. Hospitality was informal, and there was a good deal of pleasure, roughing things. Mrs. Kurtz has just returned from a visit to Ridgewood and will spend the winter at the navy station. There is a story, too proposterous to be quite credible told in connection with Lieutenant Kurtz's advent on these shores, though as a story it is good enough to bear repetition, even if the joke is on us. It seems that the lieutenant's orders designated Yerba Buena as his station, and on his arrival in San Francisco his first inquiries were how to reach it. He was assured that there was no place of the name in this vicinity, but as his official orders distinctly named Yerba Buena he continued to seek information as to its location, and when he insisted that it was an island in San Francisco bay he was jokingly assured that the war department had taken one glass too many. In the course of time it was recalled that the place was sometimes called Goat Island and then people caught on. These same wiseacres are now believed to be keeping a memorandum of the official title stored in the backs of their minds to spring casually on the next unsuspecting stranger.

A Philosophic Debutante

Katherine Donohue has developed an independence of character unusual for a girl of her years. She takes life philosophically and enjoys herself in her own way, an attitude of mind which it would be well for other debutantes to cultivate. On Friday night she presented an agreeable contrast to some of the other buds who permitted their disappointment to be seen when, through lack of a sufficient number of dancing men, they were left without partners for some of the numbers. Miss Donohue, on the other hand, elected to sit on several times when she might have been on the floor, and appeared to take as much pleasure out of the passive role of spectator as she would have enjoyed as a participant. It is not at all unlikely that she was actuated by the most unselfish motives, the assumption that if she did not dance some other girl would be asked, and one little heart-twinge averted. Another little debutante shows an inclination to be less greedy of pleasure than is generally assumed to be the case with the very youthful. She was heard to remark that she could hardly wait for next winter to arrive, and when asked why, instead of replying that she was eager to launch on another season of gaiety, she answered: "Because I shall not have to go out when I do not choose to."

Burlingame Holiday Festivities

San Francisco will be quite deserted over the Christmas holidays. A regular mid-summer colony will gather again in Burlingame and several big house parties will be given at the many beautiful homes that have been closed since the commencement of the season. The festivities planned for the occasion are very numerous, dinners

Hours, 10 to 12

MRS. GENE ARNOLD

Special Massage of Face and Scalp

Careful attention given to physician's orders

Phones Douglas 4266
Douglas 2260

HOTEL REGENT, 562 SUTTER ST.

ED. PINAUD'S HAIR TONIC

(Eau de Quinine)

The one hair preparation in all the world that is endorsed by

THE ROYALTY OF EUROPE
THE ARISTOCRACY OF AMERICA
PROMINENT STARS OF THE STAGE
MEN AND WOMEN IN ALL WALKS OF LIFE

WHY?

Because for nearly a century it has been used with wonderful success for dandruff, itching scalp and falling hair. In this time hundreds of hair tonics have come and gone, but ED. PINAUD'S maintains its position as the best, due entirely to its merits. It is more than a mere hair tonic—as a daily dressing for the hair it is a delight, making the hair soft, lustrous and fragrant. It should have a prominent place on the dressing table of all refined people.

Would you like to try a sample of this delightful preparation? Write us today, enclosing 10 cts. (to pay postage and packing), and we will send you a liberal sample.

PARFUMERIE ED. PINAUD, DEPT. S. F.

ED. PINAUD BLDG. FIFTH AVE., NEW YORK

and polo matches taking the lead and ending with the large ball New Year's Eve at the Burlingame Country Club. Mrs. Mountford Wilson will entertain at one of the largest house parties, her guests including Mrs. C. O. Alexander and Harriett, in whose honor it will be given. Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Welch, I hear, will also reopen their home in El Cerrito for the week, and the Tom Driscolls will entertain about five of their friends at a delightfully informal house party. The Clarks, the de Guignes, the Robert Colemans and the Popes also will entertain, so with the many guests from the city who will go down for the night the Country Club Ball should be particularly brilliant.

At the Nordica Concert

The first meeting of the St. Francis Musical Art Society was held on Wednesday last and was socially and musically a brilliant success. San Francisco has a reputation as a musical center, and the assemblage which gathered to listen to Nordica was distinctly select. Some few were foolish enough to admit that it was the occasion and not the music which tempted them forth, but in the main it was an audience of music lovers. Nordica was only at her second best, but the program was unusually fine, and Nordica even at second best, is better than good. These meetings are a departure from the usual style of social entertainment, and an indication that our society people have acquired something of an intellectual impulse. It is a mark of distinction to be invited to attend these affairs, and appreciated accordingly. The subscription price for the winter is fifteen dollars, a sum which insures the prospect of good music, and as the patronesses are of the exclusive set the attendance will always be brilliant. The women were stunningly gowned, and some notable box parties were given. The seating capacity of the Colonial ball room was taxed to its full capacity and at the last moment extra chairs were brought in for the accommodation of late comers. The St. Francis Musical Art Society is a revival of the association formed before the fire. Preparations are being made to carry it on on a much larger scale than the original intention contemplated.

Christmas Cotillion at Del Monte

Invitations have been received for a cotillion to be given by Mr. and Mrs. H. R. Warner at Del Monte on Saturday, December 26th. A number of society folk from this city have planned to go down and spend the holiday at Del Monte and will participate. Captain Estes of the Presidio of Monterey will lead the dancers through the figures and the charming social military coterie of the Monterey post will be out in full force.

New Club Rooms at Hotel Del Monte

A number of changes have been made in the interior of Hotel Del Monte which add greatly to the attractions of the place. Among the most important of these is the opening of the new club rooms. Part of the Ladies' Grill and some of the adjoining rooms have been thrown together and a number of amusement features installed, making it possible for one to enjoy the facilities and conveniences of the club house without going out of doors.

The Old Fashioned Dinner

The Callihan sisters, Miss Carrie, Miss Lillie and Miss Mary are among the first of the local society folk to participate in the new fad—that of giving an old fashioned family dinner. This innovation has come from the East along with a lot of other Christmas notions. The idea seems to be meeting with popular favor and many orders for such repasts have been ordered for holiday week. Several orders for dinners like our great grandmothers used to make have been filed at the Victoria Hotel. The Callihan dinner took place last Sunday evening in the American dining room of the hotel. The table was made beautiful with carnations, none but these fragrant flowers being used, but in their infinite variety. The menu of course, was unique, containing some modern French specialties as well as the goodies of old Colonial days. It was strictly a family dinner; those around the old fashioned mahogany board being the Misses Callihan, Mrs. S. Pettigrew, Mr. and Mrs. William Lemman, Mr. Percy L. Pettigrew and Henry C. Callihan.

HOTEL ST. FRANCIS

THE CENTER OF THE NEW YEAR'S CELEBRATION

Watch the Fiesta from St. Francis—the Park aglow with myriads of lanterns; the procession with floats, bands, hundreds of decorated autos and the great Chinese dragon; and the battle of confetti and flowers.

The hotel will present a novel illumination. Within the building the New Year will be announced by a quaint Old World ceremony and special music, souvenirs, and surprises will be provided.

Tables may be reserved now.

UNION SQUARE

Not Guilty

Quite shocking to the nerves of our provinical aristocracy was the news received from Washington last Sunday to the effect that the Frank Carolans of Burlingame were suspected of being smugglers, the suspicion being grounded in the reports of special agents of the Treasury. The Carolans are reported to have come back from Europe with forty-one trunks which passed the New York Customs House on a free entry. Of course the suspicion is preposterous. The Carolans are very respectable people, and they wouldn't do such a vulgar thing as that which is implied in the press despatches. It is really a very contemptible crime to cheat Uncle Sam. The Carolans are people of high ideals. In the split which occurred in the Burlingame set as a result of the graft prosecution Mrs. Carolan took sides with Mrs. Rudolph Spreckels. She wants to see all the higher-ups go to jail, a fact that vindicates her lofty sentiments. And as for Frank Carolan, the polo-player, he is arently pro-prosecution. As a rule he doesn't take much interest in politics, preferring to serve his country as a looker-on in swelldom, but he hates crooks. He has no sympathy for men who permit themselves to be "stood up." Therefore it is safe to presume that it is rank calumny to suggest the probability of his having done the "standing up" with Uncle Sam as a victim. The Carolans will prove that the reports from Washington are groundless. The cause of morality is not to suffer by the smirching of any of its champions.

Christmas Dinner at Hotel Carlton.

A delightful Christmas dinner will be served at the Carlton, in Berkeley, on Christmas Day:

Blue Points, Deep Shell.
Mock Turtle au Sherry Consomme en Tasse
Salted Almonds.
Olives. Celery en Branche.
Broiled Mountain Trout, Maitre de Hotel.
Pommes Duchess.
Boiled Eastern Ham, a la Gelle.
Chicken a la Poulette, en Patties.
Orange Jelly en Basket. Punch a la Carlton.
Roast Prime Ribs Beef, au Jus.
Roast Turkey, Chestnut Dressing, Cranberry Sauce.
Suckling Pig and Apple Sauce.
Mashed, Steamed and Brown Sweet Potatoes.
Asparagus and Butter.
Lobster en Mayonnaise. Fruit Salad.
English Plum Pudding, Hard and Brandy Sauce.
Hot Mince Pie. Pumpkin Pie.
Neapolitan Ice Cream.
Fruit Cake Citron Cake Pound Cake
Macaroons. Cocoanut Kisses. Angel Cake.
Fruit. Nuts. Raisins. Baby Cream Candy.
Camenbert and Roquefort Cheese.
Toasted Crackers. Coffee.

In the Social Spotlight

The New Year will be ushered in at the Fairmont with abundant ceremony. Besides the special concert in the lobby all evening, supper will be served in the Laurel Court until the wee sma' hours.

Mrs. Wm. Tevis gave the second of a series of luncheons to twenty of her friends on Tuesday. It was held in the grey room of the Fairmont.

Mrs. James Flood was hostess at a beautiful luncheon at the Fairmont on Thursday. It was in honor of that charming debutante who has been so much entertained this winter—Miss Katherine Donohoe.

Among the many society folk who came to town for the Greenway Assembly and stayed over at the Fairmont were Mr. and Mrs. B. H. Dibblee, Ross; Mr. and Mrs. Percy Moore, Menlo Park; Mrs. A. W. Foster, San Rafael; Mrs. T. W. M. Draper and daughters, San Rafael; Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Coryell, Menlo Park; Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Cotton, San Mateo; Mr. and Mrs. John M. Lewis, San Mateo; Viscomte and Madame de Tristan, San Mateo; M. De Lande, San Mateo; Mr. and Mrs. Albert Dibblee, Ross; Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Perry, Ross; Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Spencer, Menlo Park; Mr. and Mrs. Sylvanus Farnham, Mrs. J. A. Clifford, Oakland.

One of the holiday entertainments which is looked forward to with pleasant anticipations is the dance to be given on the twenty-eight at the home of Mrs. George Boardman, for her grand daughter, Miss Dora Winn. The Boardmans are occupying the Atherton home on California and Octavia streets this winter.

The aftermath of the De Young weddings is a record of shattered nerves and social indisposition, so indefatigable were the friends of the brides in their efforts to prove hom really popular they were. One young matron who has taken to her bed on the verge of nervous prostration as a result of her participation in the numerous festivities confided to a friend that if she could afford it she would go away and take a complete rest, "but of course that is out of the question now," she added.

Mrs. J. L. Martel gave a birthday dinner recently in honor of her son-in-law, Charles Stoval. A brother of Mr. Stoval, who is on a visit to California was also a guest on this occasion, which was exclusively a family affair.

The dates for the Subscription Dances to be given in the Colonial ball room of the St. Francis are December twenty-sixth and the first Saturday in February.

Lieutenant John Hastings Howard, U. S. A., who was one of the most popular men in local society during his recent visit at the St. Francis, was married last week to Miss Helen Valentine Chaffee, the youngest daughter of General Adna R. Chaffee. The ceremony took place in St. Paul's Procathedral in Los Angeles, and was the most notable army wedding of the year on the coast.

THE HUB AT THE CENTER

Nothing has taxed the shrewdness of merchants so much of late as the selection of down-town locations. With the mercantile center completely metamorphosed it required the exercise of rare judgment to determine what particular neighborhood would be most advantageous to any particular line of business, but now that all the leading merchants have found their bearings it is remarkable how many of them have had their judgment vindicated. Perhaps there is none better satisfied than Charles Keilus of the "Hub" which now occupies the Jewelers' Building on Post street near Kearny. Carrying as it does the highest class of men's clothing the Hub, in the very heart of the retail district, (where the Hub ought to be) is ideally located. Moreover the store is one that might well serve as a model for the trade. Its appointments are excellent and are evidently the result of no small degree of reflection, research and ingenuity. Charles Keilus & Co. are deserving of felicitation on their achievement.

REDUCE THE CARES

Of housekeeping. One decidedly practical way is to use Borden's Peerless Brand Evaporated Milk in all cooking where milk or cream is required. Results will be more satisfactory than with most "fresh" milk. The convenience and economy will please you. Dilute Peerless Milk with water to any desired richness.

A SKIN OF BEAUTY IS A JOY FOREVER

DR. T. FELIX GOURAUD'S

ORIENTAL CREAM

OR MAGICAL BEAUTIFIER

Purifies as well as Beautifies the Skin. No other cosmetic will do it.

Removes Tan, Pimples, Freckles, Moth Patches, Rash and Skin Diseases, and every blemish on beauty, and defies detection. It has stood the test of 60 years; no other has, and it is so harmless we taste it to be sure it is properly made. Accept no counterfeit of similar name. The distinguished Dr. L. A. Sayre said to a lady of the haut-on (a patient): "As you ladies will use them, I recommend 'Gouraud's Cream' as the least harmful of all the skin preparations."

For sale by all Druggists and Fancy Goods Dealers.

GOURAUD'S ORIENTAL TOILET POWDER

For infants and adults. Exquisitely perfumed. Relieves Skin Irritation, cures Sunburn and renders an excellent complexion. Price 25 Cents, by Mail.

GOURAUD'S POUDRE SUBTILE

Removes Superfluous Hair. Price $1.00, by mail

FERD. T. HOPKINS, Prop'r, 37 Great Jones St., New York City.

THE CHAFING DISH

The Chafing Dish is now becoming so generally used, and its necessity in the household so fully recognized, that we take pleasure in calling your attention to the fine line we handle, as well as every Chafing Dish necessary.

L. D. McLEAN CO.

IMPORTERS AND GROCERS

PHONE FRANKLIN 2810 1158-1168 Sutter St. San Francisco

Odd Things in the World

James W. Cummings, the American contractor and engineer, is noted for a custom which he has kept up for twenty-seven years, that of always returning to the place where he was born to enjoy his Christmas dinner with his parents at London, Ontario. No matter in what part of the world he may be he always arranges for his annual journey and at different times he has made his flying trips from South America, Japan, India, Russia and Turkey. Two years ago Mr. Cummings started from Constantinople, and reached London in time to catch his steamer the next morning. Every thing went well until he took the Grand Trunk railroad, when a snow blockade was encountered and for the time being it looked as if the tryst would not be kept. It was, however, for he reached the house just half an hour before the dinner hour. Some years ago Mr. Cummins happened to mention casually this habit of his in the presence of B. F. Corey, the steel magnate. Mr. Corey was incredulous and offered to forfeit to Mr. Cummings a hundred dollars for every dinner which he ate at home. Thus far there has been but one occasion when the millionaire has not been called upon to play Santa Claus, when a railroad wreck caused the traveler to be one day late. It was Mr. Cummings who set London aghast at the time of King Edward's coronation, by a feat which the English contractors and engineers had declared to be impossible. It was necessary to lay a large amount of cable, some twenty-eight miles. The Englishmen refused to consider the contract, but one and all declared that it was out of the question to complete the work in the given time. Mr. Cummings took it in hand, laid the whole amount in eight days, and had several days to spare.

Bishop Selwyn of New Zealand and Melanesia was well known during his university days as a devotee of the art of self-defense. He incurred a great deal of animosity from a certain section of New Zealand owing to his sympathy with the Maoris during the war. One day he was asked by a rough, in one of the back streets of Auckland, if he was the "bishop backed up the Maoris." Receiving a reply in the affirmative the rough, with a "Take that, then!" struck his lordship in the face. "My friend," said the bishop, "my bible teaches me that if a man smite thee on one cheek turn him the other," and he turned his head slightly the other way. His assailant, slightly bewildered, struck him again. "Now," said his lordship, "having done my duty to God, I will do my duty to man," and, taking off his coat and hat, he gave the anti-maori champion a most scientific thrashing.

Art in the preservation of trees has a splendid exemplar in the case of an oak on the grounds of Longfellow Park, near Minnehaha Falls, Minnesota. In the park arrangement R. F. Jones came across a majestic oak which he desired to preserve. The sound part of the tree was more than three feet in diameter, but burrowing insects had the early life of the tree worked to such an extent as to leave a large hollow extending to the heart. The ordinary procedure in such cases is to fill the cavity with plaster or concrete, but this did not appeal to the artistic sensibility of Mr. Jones. He took careful measurements of the cavity and engaged a sculptor to produce an artistic filler for the blemish. Following the Indian traditions, the sculptor modeled a large Indian head in low relief and a cast was made. The plug fitted accurately and was set in concrete.

Malta fever has been practically stamped out of the British army since the doctors discovered its originating causes, and with the compulsory cessation of the use of goats' milk, which contained the fever germs, the number of admissions to hospital has dropped successively for three years from 643 to 161 and 11 cases. The troops in India have benefited greatly from the improvement in medical science and from the increased knowledge of the doctors as regards sanitation. In the forty years between Waterloo and the Crimea campaign, according to Colonel Tulloch, nearly 100,000 Europeans perished in India from preventable causes. For the first half of this period the army numbered 25,000 men, and later was

¶ This is the first HOLIDAY SEASON in San Francisco's restored downtown district. Civic pride and the satisfaction of buying of the most progressive houses will make the old-time business portion once more the busiest center of holiday shopping.

¶ We welcome you as a visitor to our building---the most unique and complete jewelry establishment in the West. We welcome you to see our carefully selected showings of Gold Jewelry, Table Silverware, Sterling Silver Toilet Articles, Cut Glass, Watches and Clocks.

¶ We would advise you to shop now, when you may enjoy full range of choice and unhurried selection. Open evenings.

¶ Take Sutter Street car; it stops at our doors.

HAMMERSMITH & CO.

Goldsmiths, Silversmiths, Jewelers

SUTTER AND GRANT AVE. • SAN FRANCISCO

raised to 40,000. The terrible mortality, mainly in Bengal, was the result of a want of sanitary knowledge in the selection of cantonments. Apart from humane considerations, the monetary loss alone, irrespective of that of invalided soldiers, amounted to £10,000,000. Formerly the most dreaded station was Mian Mir, the Lahore cantonment. There in 1879 the admissions per 1,000 men from fever alone were 3,427 and from all causes 4,700. Ten years ago the average of admissions was 2,000 per 1,000 but it has dropped gradually one or two hundred annually until last year, when it was 650 per 1,000. It is natural that the number of constantly sick in India should be higher than it is in the United Kingdom, and it is still double; but now those in command appreciate the financial as well as the humanitarian importance of the question.

Three years after the Jeannette sank in the ice to the northeast of the new Siberia Islands some relics of the ill-fated expedition were picked up on the southwest coast of Greenland. From all the available data Nansen, who is our leading authority on Arctic currents, and Professor Mohn of Christiania, arrived at the conclusion that these relics could have reached west Greenland by no other way than across the pole. Between 1899 and 1901 about fifty drift casks were set afloat in the ice north of Bering Strait, and one of them was picked up on the northeast coast of Iceland. Nearly five years and six months had elapsed from the day it was cast adrift north of Point Barrow, just where Amundsen expects to enter the ice, till it was found. From all that has been learned of the currents to the north of Asia by Nansen, Sverdrup and Cagni and of the east Greenland current which washes the shores of Iceland as it comes from the unknown north, the only conclusion reached is that this cask must have crossed the polar area in the neighborhood of the pole. There are flaws in every other hypothesis that caused them all to be set aside.

A strange case has just occurred at Porthcawl, Eng., showing the effect of the imagination in causing disease and cure. A professional man on a visit there took out his four false teeth while shaving but forgetting the fact and failing to find them later suddenly concluded that he must have swallowed them accidentally. At once he began to suffer pains, a doctor was sent for, to whom he described his agonies; emetics were administered but in vain, and the tortures made him twist his body convulsively. Then a maid brought the teeth, which had dropped behind the dressing table, and instantly the pains ceased.

His Grace the Duke of Argyll was addressing a select company in a London drawing room on the present state of thing in South Africa. "I look forward to the time," he said, "when the Englishman will marry the Boer girl and have an English wife as well!" Respectable dowagers looked their surprise, and the men began to smile. Then the Duke carefully explained that he meant, of course, that the Boer girl should become an Englishwoman to all intents and purposes.

ARTISTIC HALF TONES

The beautiful half tones with which this special holiday number of Town Talk is garnished are the work of the William Brown Engraving Company of 355 McAllister street. They are of the very highest class. The workmanship is of an exceptionally artistic quality such as can be produced only by the employment of the very latest facilities for half tone engraving. The Brown Company boasts the very finest equipment on the coast. Before the fire the plant was located on Montgomery street and it was there completely destroyed. Mr. Brown, the president of the company, immediately went east and spent several months there studying the newest appliances in engraving and making careful selections. The company has its plant now in operation on McAllister street where it is handling the cream of the half tone business, and by the excellence of its productions greatly enhancing the reputation of the firm.

MENNEN'S
BORATED TALCUM
TOILET POWDER

"Baby's Best Friend"

and Mamma's greatest comfort. Mennen's relieves and prevents Chapped Hands and Chafing.

For your protection the genuine is put up in non-refillable boxes—the "Box that Lox," with Mennen's face on top. Sold everywhere or by mail 25 cents—Sample free.

Try Mennen's Violet (Borated) Talcum Toilet Powder—It has the scent of Fresh-cut Parma Violets. Sample free.

GERHARD MENNEN CO., Newark, N. J.

Mennen's Sen Yang Toilet Powder, Oriental Odor } No
Mennen's Borated Skin Soap (blue wrapper) } Samples
Specially prepared for the nursery. Sold only at Stores.

When you have a choice, take the best. For purity of design, harmony of color and quality, there can be no better wall paper made than that shown by

TAYLOR & SINCLAIR CO.

INTERIOR DECORATORS BUSH AT VAN NESS

Mrs. Warfield

PIANO SCHOOL FOR CHILDREN AND BEGINNERS

Telephone Piedmont 3414 6409 Regent Street, Berkeley

Tuesday and Friday, Ebell Club, Oakland

Castilleja School

PALO ALTO, CALIFORNIA.

Boarding and day school for girls. Certificate admits to Stanford University. Out-of door study and gymnasium a special feature. School year begins August 24, 1908. Send for illustrated catalogue. Mary I. Lockey, A. B., Principal.

Leading Hotels and Resorts

HOTEL ST. FRANCIS
UNION SQUARE

The center of the New Year's celebration

Under the management of JAMES WOODS

FAIRMONT HOTEL

¶ The enjoyment of the New Year's celebration on Market Street will be most worthily completed by supper in the beautiful Laurel Court. Music all evening. Supper served until 2:00 a. m. Applications for table reservations received now.

Management of PALACE HOTEL COMPANY

HOTEL DEL MONTE

Near quaint old Monterey---125 miles from San Francisco.

Uniting all the pleasures of outdoor life under ideal conditions with the conveniences and luxuries of the best metropolitan hotels.

For rates, reservations, etc., address H. R. WARNER, Manager.

BYRON
HOT SPRINGS HOTEL

One of the world's most curative springs.

One of America's most comfortable and refined hostelries.

See Southern Pacific information bureau, ground floor James Flood Building or any Southern Pacific agent or Peck-Judah Co., 789 Market street, or address Manager at hotel.

HOTEL DEL CORONADO
CORONADO, CAL.

Coronado is essentially an Hotel of quiet elegance. It has the most equable climate of which any knowledge exists. Hotel Del Coronado has unique facilities for out-of-door recreation. Polo, golf, tennis, boating, fishing and motoring on good roads. Rates $4 per day upward. For special information apply to MORGAN ROSS, Manager, Coronado, or H. F. NORCROSS, representative, Los Angeles.

HOTEL CARLTON

Telegraph Avenue at Durant
BERKELEY

A FIRST-CLASS TRANSIENT AND FAMILY HOTEL

MRS. W. F. MORRIS, Proprietor
formerly of Hotel Cecil, 960 Bush Street, San Francisco

YOSEMITE VALLEY
OPEN ALL YEAR

Why not plan a Holiday Trip to California's Wonderland for yourself and friends.

It is a quick, comfortable trip; daily train service. And Yosemite at this time is no less attractive than in other seasons. First class hotel service at El Portal and in the valley. For through tickets, see Southern Pacific or Santa Fe, or address

O. W. LEHMER, Traffic Manager, Y. V. R. R., Merced, Cal.

HOTEL MANX
UNION SQUARE
Powell and O'Farrell Sts.

To Permanent Guests

the management offers an excellent service at especially low rates. Every room connected with bath.

Under the management of N. M. KELLAR

You will find SWAIN'S

Bakery and Restaurant on the line at

1241 VAN NESS AVENUE, Near Sutter Street

AFTERNOON TEA for Shoppers with Music from 3 to 5 o'clock
BROWNLOW, the baritone, sings every evening from 6 to 8 o'clock

LEVY'S CAFE
Third and Main Streets, Los Angeles, Cal.

Much the Best Place to Get Fine Things to Eat and Listen to Choice Music at Popular Prices.

A Theory Smashed at the Orpheum

By Theodore Bonnet

To the opinions of my friend, a press-agent, I listen with as close attention as ever was given by rapt pupil sitting in the academic groves at the feet of Plato. My friend is dogmatic, and as such is never a niggard of his wisdom, nor is he lukewarm in the tone and terms of his opinions which are invariably set forth not as the judgments of a frail mortal but as verities from which there is no escape. He was enlightening me the other day on the subject of criticism applied to vaudeville, and he told me that all newspaper critics make the mistake of considering to what extent a performance gratifies their taste. They lose sight of the fact that as a vaudeville performance is designed to please everybody if it should be entirely pleasing to anybody it would be a failure from the manager's standpoint. This paradoxical view of the matter struck me as quite plausible. It takes all sorts to make a world, I reflected, and it is therefore natural that for a vaudeville show to please its little world it must avoid uniformity of manners and literature; it must appeal to the vulgar as well as to the refined; to the man who hates intellectual dogs and detests their trainer, as well as to the curious individual who enjoys a contortionist and dotes on educated birds. I found myself entirely in accord with my friend's theory and I elaborated it, arguing to myself that we are so many-sided nowadays it is important that the theatrical manager should cater to all tastes—to those who are shocked by everything that lies outside of conventionalists; to the Philistine, to the loud guffaw and to the wan smile. It even occurred to me how absurd it was to complain of horseplay, since to purge a vaudeville show of all that is vulgar would be to render it inane to barkeepers, newsboys, and the sons of Burlingame millionaires and their affinities. With the new theory in mind I attended a performance of the Orpheum Road Show which opened Sunday afternoon; prepared to be bored awhile and resolved not to be impatient with the things that did not please my taste providing they did not predominate. During that performance the new theory melted into thin air. Here is a show that hasn't a dull moment for me and yet I am sure it is not a failure. Quite the contrary; I am convinced that it will prove the most popular road show that ever came to the Orpheum. The reason the theory of my friend, the press-agent, doesn't work out in practice in this instance is that every stunt is a vaudeville gem of the first water and of unique coloring. What ordinarily you do not care for you will like when you see it in the Road Show. For example you may abhor acrobatic feats, but it does not follow that you will be intolerant of the Franklins. Ordinarily, perhaps, the young man who sings and dances and his lady partner who dances and sings do not afford you much delight, but you will find it hard to resist the captivating qualities of Billy Gaston and Ethel Green in their nicely mannered, thoroughly manicured and well groomed skit "Spoonyville" which is rightly termed a "Nell Brinkley creation." As for Hyman Meyer, "The Man at the Piano," it would be hard to find a standard by which to appraise him, for his performance though slightly reminiscent is almost a novelty and a most acceptable one. And there are other good things, such for example as Mlle. De Dio, the Parisian danseuse, in what she calls a Terpsichorean Dream, a dainty spectacular production that sets a new standard of charm and refinement, but there is one feature so excellent that it would compensate for a world of dreariness. I refer to George Ade's one-act play "The Mayor and the Manicure." The most vital and genuine humor that we get nowadays comes from George Ade, whose original and breezy satire has been given expression in dramatic sketches which prove that a man may be of the literati and still write for vaudeville. The vaudeville sketch bears the same relation to dramatic literature as the short story does to the novel, but to be literature the sketch must comply with the requirements of technique, and there are not many sketch writers whose workmanship is as impeccable as Ade's. His "The Mayor and the Manicure" is a perfect one-act play, constructed from a single theme as a naturalist constructs a skeleton from a single bone. Its plot ripples along the surface and its bright lines and situations keep one wreathed in smiles without ever exciting ribald laughter. Like all Ade's plays it abounds in flashes of wit and humor and fairly drips pearls of philosophy.

The Realistic Sicilians

"They eat 'em alive, they eat 'em alive!" is the graphic way a New Yorker with a spirited vocabulary and terse methods describes the Sicilian actors at the Broadway Theatre. "Still," he continues reflectively, "if you want to assassinate an evening and commit justifiable homicide on a few hours spare time you can't do better than to see them," They are milder when you see them behind the scenes. Some one has said that they had to have Mount Aetna in action, otherwise they couldn't play. Anyway the first thing you notice is that the scene as set shows Mount Aetna and they lean up against it in a very friendly and syspathetic manner as one by one they are brought up and introduced.

MISS GRACE TRAVERS
In the stock company at the Valencia.

"Ben Hur" at the Van Ness

Startling in its immensity and unquestionably the biggest production of a play ever made in the world, Klaw and Erlanger's "Ben Hur" will make another bid for the approval of the San Francisco public at the Van Ness Theatre on Monday evening next, December 28th. The engagement is limited to two weeks. No Sunday performances will be given but a matinee will be played on Wednesday and Saturday of each week and an extra matinee is announced for New Year's Day. Since the original production in New York City in 1899, "Ben Hur" has been presented in every important city of America as well as in Canada, England and Australia. The discussion it has caused among representative personages in the religious and educational fields has had widespread influence among all classes. The appeal of "Ben Hur" is not to the ear and eye alone, but to the heart. Through all the scenes of beauty of this vivid portrayal of the exciting time of the dawn of Christianity, the plain, simple story of the "Man of Calvary" is brought home with all-compelling force.

THE LYRIC STRING QUARTETTE

Will Greenbaum's Plans for the New Year

Commencing January 1st, Manager Will L. Greenbaum will join the new down town colony and establish his box office at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s Sutter and Kearny street store. The first of his stellar attractions will be the splendid prima donna soprano, Mme. Johanna Gadski, who will take a four weeks' furlough from the Metropolitan Opera House Co. to make a concert tour. She will appear two Sunday afternoons at the Van Ness Theatre, the dates being January 10th and 17th, and will be the star of the second St. Francis Musical Art Society's concerts. An Oakland concert will also probably be included. Mr. Frank La Forge, the well known composer-pianist, will assist Mme. Gadski. Following this artist will come one of the greatest of the pianists now before the public, Mme. Katherine Goodson, who returns to this country for her third series of concerts with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mme. Goodson will play here Tuesday and Thursday nights, January 19th and 21st, and Sunday afternoon, the 24th. During February Mackenzie Gordon will give two concerts here and one in Oakland under the Greenbaum management; and Mme. Frieda Langendorff, mezzo soprano from the Wagner Festival Theatre in Bayreuth, Royal Opera in Dresden and Metropolitan, New York, will give recitals, assisted by Mme. Flora Karp Heilbron of Vienna, a pianiste of the highest ability. Mme. Langendorff and the Lyric String Quartette will furnish the third of the St. Francis Society's affairs. In March Josef Lehvinne, the great Russian pianist, and David Bispham, will give concerts. In April Ossip Gabrilowitsch, one of the most attractive of the Russian pianists, and the wonderful virtuoso, Mischa Elman, said to be the greatest violin prodigy the world has ever known, will both appear in public concerts as well as the St. Francis affairs. Other events are being negotiated for, including some novel lectures and a series of Burton Holmes "Travelogues." Mr. Greenbaum certainly has secured the very best available musical attractions. By his energy and enterprise he has done much toward making the name of San Francisco rank among the principal art-loving cities of the world. All this impresario now needs is a suitable hall and opera house, and he is devoting his energies to that end.

TRY MURINE EYE REMEDY
For Red, Weak, Weary, Watery Eyes.
Murine Doesn't Smart—It Soothes Eye Pain.
Try Murine For Your Eyes.

Next: "The College Widow"

The last performances of "The Lost Paradise" which has enjoyed a phenomenal run at the Valencia Theatre, will take place next Sunday afternoon and evening and on Monday night George Ade's best and brightest comedy, "The College Widow," will be staged on an elaborate scale. This will be the first production by a stock company of the play that has made all of America and even staid old London laugh. There are over twenty speaking parts in the play and nearly sixty people will be on the stage. The clever members of the Valencia stock company are all rehearsing overtime and entering most heartily into the spirit of their roles. It will indeed be a novelty to see heroic Robert Warwick in the role of Billy Bolton, the famous half back, Blanche Stoddard as Jane Witherspoon, "the widow," dignified Thomas MacLarnie as Jack Larrabee, the football coach, Helen Lackaye as Flora Wiggins, the prominent waitress, Darrell Standing as Peter Witherspoon, president of Atwater College, Grace Travers as Bessie Tanner, the athletic girl, and the many other favorites in equally odd roles. W. T. Sheehan, who made such a hit at the Valencia during the Arthur Cunningham engagement, has been especially engaged to play Matty McGowan, a trainer, and Charles Dow Clark will revel in the role of "Bub" Hicks. "Prince Hagen," the new and powerful drama by Upton Sinclair, author of "The Jungle," will receive its first production on any stage at the Valencia Theatre immediately following "The College Widow."

FLORENCE ST. LEONARD as IRAS and CONWAY TEARLE as BEN HUR
In a scene from "Ben Hur" to be seen at the Van Ness Monday, December 28th.

One More Week of the Road Show

Next week will positively be the last of the Orpheum Road Show. Several novelties will be introduced into the program. Gus Edwards' School Boys and Girls and Rogers & Deeley will be additional features. The School Boys and Girls is one of the most popular acts in vaudeville and will be cordially welcomed, especially as it returns to us greatly improved and strengthened with a number of new songs that are now New York successes, among them being "Sunbonnet Sue," by the author of "School Days" and "Your're Just the Boy for Me." Rogers and Deeley are new to us. They entitle their act, which is very much out of the ordinary, "The Singer and His Valet." It is a combination of burnt cork comedy by one member and tuneful and catchy singing by the other.

The Sunday "Pop" Concerts at Lyric Hall

Manager Will Greenbaum announces the second series of "Pop" concerts on Sunday afternoons at Lyric Hall to commence Sunday afternoon, January 3rd. There will be a course of four, the dates being Sunday afternoons, January 3rd and 31st, February 28th and March 28th. The principal feature at these concerts will be chamber music by the Lyric String Quartette, assisted by well known pianists and occasionally with appropriate vocal numbers interpreted by splendid artists. The quartette members are William Hofmann, for many years concertmaster with Walter Damrosch; J. A. Patterson, Nathan Firestone, and W. Villalpando. The pianists engaged are Mrs. Oscar Mansfeldt, Mr. Gyula Ormay, Mr. Eugene Blanchard, and Miss Therese Ehrmann, who will play in the order named. The program for the opening concert will consist of the String Quartette by Mozart, op. 12, Sonata for violin and piano in G minor by Tartini, and the Quintette for strings and piano by Christian Sinding. At the second concert an entire Dvorak program will be given, including the "American Quartette," Quintette for piano and strings, and Mr. Lawrence Strauss, tenor, will sing a group of the Bohemian composer's songs. Season tickets for the entire course will be sold at the very low rate of $1.50 and $2.50, and may be secured on and after Wednesday, December 30th, at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s, corner of Kearny and Sutter streets. From an educational and truly musical standpoint these will be the most important concerts of the season.

BERTRAM LYTELL

In the Alcazar's new year offering, David Belasco's picturesque drama of mining days in the Sierras. Bertram Lytell will appear as the Road Agent. In this character the clever young leading man made one of his most emphatic hits last season, when the play attracted capacity-taxing audiences at each presentation during two mid-Lenten weeks.

American Theatre

The American Theatre's offering for New Year's week commencing Sunday matinee, December 27th, will be the favorite Irish comedians Murray and Mack in their latest musical comedy success, "The Sunny side of Broadway." There are no less than twenty-three entirely original musical numbers to be heard in this delightful musical melange which is conceded to be one of the best produced this season. Some of the vocal gems that will set everybody's lips a-pucker are "Shara Sara," "Butterfly Life," "Most Every Town Has a Broadway, But There is Only One," "The Circus Queen," "Love is Very Foolish," "Good Old College Days" and "I'd Rather Be a Billy Goat in Harlem."

The Dutch Comedians

At the Princess Kolb and Dill are repeating their old O'Farrell street achievement. Of the style of entertainment in which these Dutch comedians excel their admirers never tire. In "Weiner and Schnitzel" their grip is as firm as ever, but nevertheless they have decided to make a change, and next week they will appear in a brand new farce, "The Politicians," which will afford them opportunities in a field of endeavor which they should be able to exploit with great success. It is easy to imagine the potentialities for side-splitting fun with Mike and his long friend "doing politics."

At the Alcazar

That rollicking drama of college life, "Brown of Harvard," is captivating Alcazar audiences this week. The members of the versatile stock company have entered with enthusiasm into the spirit of this sprightly play and the production is redolent of that important element, atmosphere—reminding one of that other notable Alcazarian achievement, "In Old Heidelberg." Next week the management will produce that stirring drama, "The Girl of the Golden West," with which the members of the company are familiar having already scored therein. Indeed it was in this play that the Alcazar stock won new laurels, giving a performance of exquisite charm. The best evidence of the success that was met with in this play is that the management has resolved on a revival in the holiday season when rivalry is always keen.

The Gadski Concerts

Two concerts to be given by the great dramatic soprano, Mme. Johanna Gadski, will be at the Van Ness Theatre, the dates being Sunday afternoons, January 10th and 17th. The programs have been very carefully selected and the artist will not repeat any of the songs she

Jefferson Square Bowling Alleys
and Billiard and Pool Parlors
925 GOLDEN GATE AVE. CORNER OCTAVIA
LARGEST AND FINEST IN THE WORLD.

VAN NESS THEATRE Cor. Van Ness and Grove
Gottlob, Marx & Co., Mgrs.
Phone Market 500

Two Weeks Only, Beginning Monday, December 28,
No Sunday Performances. Matinees Wednesday and Saturday Each Week.
Extra Matinee New Year's Day.
Klaw and Erlanger's New and Greater

BEN HUR

Staged on a scale of unparalleled splendor.
Prices: 50c, $1.00, $1.50 and $2.00.

NEW ALCAZAR THEATRE Cor. Sutter and Steiner
Class "A" Building
Phone West 6036

BELASCO & MAYER, Owners and Managers.
Monday Evening, December 28th, and All Week, David Belasco's
Picturesque Play of California in the Gold Days,

THE GIRL OF THE GOLDEN WEST

Superbly Acted and Staged.
Prices: Evenings, 25c to $1.00. Matinees, Saturday and Sunday, 25c to 50c.

PRINCESS THEATRE PHONE WEST 663
S. LOVERICH, MANAGER
Ellis Street, near Fillmore
Absolutely Class "A" Building
Matinee, Saturday and Sunday

Beginning Monday Night, Matinee New Year's Day, KOLB AND DILL offer

THE POLITICIANS

Another Story With Music. Book by Aaron Hoffman. Lyrics and Music by J. A. Raynes. (First time on any stage.)
Prices—Evenings 25c, 50c, 75c, $1.00. Matinees (Except Sundays and Holidays, 25c, 50c, 75c.

ORPHEUM Ellis Street, near Fillmore
Absolutely Class "A" Bldg
Phone West 6000

Week Beginning this Sunday Afternoon. Matinee Every Day.
LAST WEEK OF THE ORPHEUM ROAD SHOW, Supplemented by GUS EDWARDS' SCHOOL BOYS AND GIRLS. Nine Youthful Singers, Dancers and Comedians. Also John P. ROGERS and Ben N. DEELY, "The Singer and His Valet."
Evening Prices: 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c. Box Seats, $1.00. Matinee Prices (Except Sundays and Holidays): 10c, 25c, 50c.

VALENCIA THEATRE Valencia Street, between
Thirteenth and Fourteenth
Phone Market 17

Saturday and Sunday Afternoons and Evenings, Last Times of
"THE LOST PARADISE."
Commencing Monday Evening, December 28th, Special Matinee New Years, Elaborate Production of

THE COLLEGE WIDOW

George Ade's Pictorial Comedy
Presented by the Full Strength of the Valencia Stock Company, including Robert Warwick and Blanche Stoddard. Sixty People on the Stage.
Regular Matinees, Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday, Prices 25c to 50c.
Evenings, 25c to 75c. Box Seats, $1.00.
Next—"Price Hagen," by Upton Sinclair.

AMERICAN THEATRE Market St., nr. Seventh
Phone Market 381

Week Commencing Sunday Matinee, December 27th,
Other Matinees New Year's Day and Saturday,
The Originals MURRAY AND MACK
In Their Latest Musical Comedy Success

THE SUNNY SIDE OF BROADWAY

Prices, Evenings, 25c, 50c, 75c, $1.00. Matinees, 25c, 50c, 75c.
Procure your seats in advance for New Year's Eve.
Coming: "Arizona."

THE LYRIC HALL "POP" CONCERT

by the
LYRIC STRING QUARTETTE
Assisted by Other Excellent Artists.
Four Sunday Afternoons, January 3rd and 31st, February 28th, March 28th
Season Tickets $2.50 and $1.50, Read Wednesday, December 30th, at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s Sutter and Kearny Street Store only Mrs. Oscar Mansfeldt pianist at First Concert in Sinding's Quintette.

Mme. GADSKI

AT VAN NESS THEATRE
Sunday Afternoons, January 10th and 17th.
Programs entirely different from the previous concerts.
Seats $2.50, $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00.
Mail orders now received. Address Will L. Greenbaum at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s, where complete programs are now obtainable.

The Gold Medal for quality in the Whisky Section of the Franco-British Exhibition has been awarded to the "White Horse" Whisky, belonging to Mackie & Co., Distillers, Ltd., Islay and Glasgow. It was only last month this old-established firm was honored with the Appointment by Royal Warrant to His Majesty the King.

has sung on her previous visits to the city excepting in the Wagnerian offerings. The programs will be made up of songs in French, English, German and Italian, and as usual Frank La Forge, the composer-pianist, will assist. The prices will range from $2.50 down to $1.00, and mail orders will be received from now on and filled in order of their receipt.

THE RETURN OF "SUNNY JIM"

"Sunny Jim" is with us once more. He has bobbed up again looking as sprightly and happy as he did six years ago when his name was a household word and his face adorned the pages of magazines and newspapers in this and other lands. He is welcomed home as a long lost and almost forgotten sojourner in strange lands. In other words, "Sunny Jim" has been rejevenated, regalvanized, resuscitated. Of course you have heard of "Sunny Jim." You have heard of him unless you have been living on the sandy slopes of Patagonia or in the caves of the South Sea Islands. Originally introduced to show the healthful and helpful effects of a well known breakfast food upon the human temperment, "Sunny Jim" became recognized as a natural expression of that type of good natured, wholesome, healthful Americanism with which we are all familiar. Many rhymsters have immortalized him in poetry. Thousands of happy-go-lucky swains in villages and towns were nicknamed "Sunny Jim." His sunny face was "benevolently assimilated" by other advertisers of all kinds of commodities. Thousands of letters were received by The H-O Company merely addressed to "Sunny Jim," Buffalo, N. Y. "Sunny Jim" indeed was the most widely known character that ever came down the dusty highways of twentieth century publicity. Of course thousands who knew "Sunny Jim" have forgotten the popular breakfast food with which his smiling countenance was identified. They remember "Sunny Jim," but they have forgotten "FORCE." His reappearance in the public press is merely an effort on the part of The H-O Company to reclaim this popular evangel of good health and good living and to re-establish him in the effections of the people. "Sunny Jim" belongs to "Force" and "Force" belongs to "Sunny Jim"—you can not separate them. He is the personification of sunshine and happiness but he isn't half so sunny as the boy or girl who eats his famous breakfast food every day in the year.

CONWAY TEARLE AS BEN HUR

In "Ben Hur" at the Van Ness Theatre, Monday, December 28th.

GUS EDWARDS' SCHOOL BOYS AND GIRLS

Who will appear next week in conjunction with the Orpheum Road Show.

A STRIKING EXHIBITION

Sherman, Clay & Company are exhibiting in their Kearny street windows one of the most unique mechanical displays ever shown in this city. Mr. Ellis Hansen, the window dresser employed by this concern has constructed a miniature theatre which is run by electricity, and shows over one hundred scenes from the various operas which are represented by the music of the Victor Talking Machine. The scenic effects of this miniature theatre are exceedingly beautiful. Colored electric lights which would do credit to the most elaborate theatrical productions throw rays of light corresponding to the various scenes which add greatly to the attractiveness of the display. Mr. Hansen has spent nearly a year in constructing this theatre and the furor and interest it has created since first being exhibited last Tuesday afternoon proves that his painstaking efforts have not been in vain. This is the first time in the history of talking machines that a series of actual illustrations from the scenes of the operas in which the songs have been sung have been put up on exhibition. Sherman, Clay & Company are congratulated upon their ability to produce such a display.

LUXURIOUS STEAMSHIP OFFICES

The Hamburg-American Line, whose temporary offices were at 908 Market street near Powell, are moving to their new permanent location under the Union League Club's building, corner of Powell and O'Farrell streets, which they have leased for a term of years. The offices will be very handsomely furnished in mahogany, and it is the intention of Mr. H. F. Dorgeloh, Pacific Coast Manager of the Company, to establish in this city the most thoroughly appointed steamship and general European tourist offices on the Pacific Coast.

STILL ON THE MARKET

BROOKS HOMOEPATHIC COUGH AND CROUP SYRUP

FULL SIZE, 25 CENTS AT OWL DRUG STORES

ABOUT TO START OUT ON A FISHING EXCURSION.

THE FISHING BOATS AT THE PIER.

THE PACKING HOUSE ON THE SHORE OF MONTEREY BAY.

California's Sea Foods

California has given to the world so many gifts from her garden soil that one is apt, perhaps, to forget that she is emphatically a seaboard State. The gold from her mountains, the grain and fruits from her valleys, the oil and wine from her foot hills, would seem almost to have run the scale of a country's resources and a lavish scale too. But California has the greatest ocean on the globe lying at her feet which must be considered not only as her willing slave to "fetch and carry" the commerce of two hemispheres, but also as a limitless source of wealth and plenty. This ocean directly contributes to the weath of California. It supplies us with sea foods of infinite variety, and the handling of them is one of the great industries of the State. For years the rivers of California have yielded the finest of salmon and the variety of fresh fish in our markets is one of its remarkable features. But it remained for old Monterey, the cradle of California's infancy greatness, the scene of picturesque Spanish life in the early days, to give us, direct from Neptune's table, a delicious seafood which is becoming better know each year.

The beautiful Bay of Monterey, chosen by the wise old padres as a landing place and a nucleus for their new empire, is a veritable sea-garden and a favorite feeding place for the Pacific fishes. A cruise in one of Monterey's gondola-like "glass-bottomed" boats is like a visit to fairyland. The clear blue water and white floor of the bay make it possible to see distinctly even at a depth of forty to fifty feet. The sea flora, its colors beggaring description, sway to and fro with the motion of the waves, the sea-urchins and anemones clinging to the rocks show every shade of pink, lavender, purple and crimson, while, ever shifting in and out, glides the endless procession of fishes. Here they are found in infinite variety, from the tiniest minnow to the biggest salmon. Under the influence of the Mediterranean conditions, one is inclined to look for Mediterranean species of fish, and here they are, particularly the sardine. But so much larger are they than the European cousins that the old Spaniards called them mackerel and as "California Mackerel" they have continued to be known commercially.

The possibility of preserving these sardines and putting them on the market for the delectation of the public first suggested itself to Mr. F. E. Booth, who had been for many years interested in the packing of salmon on the Coast. He formed a company known as the Monterey Packing Company, put up a packing plant at Monterey and began in a small way to can the sardines, putting them on the market under the "Crescent" Brand of Broiled California Mackerel. This was about six years ago. Each year has seen a steady enlarging of the plant as demands required. The product has met with much favor on this Coast and also in the various Eastern cities where it has been introduced. If there is truth in the old saying that "the proof of the pudding is in the eating" then proof is not lacking of the excellence of this California product for its packers say that wherever it is known it is in demand.

A little glance at the methods of treating the fish may be of interest, especially to those who like to know "what they are eating." The fishing is done mostly at night, the best catches being made in the dark of the moon. Any one who has been on the Bay of Monterey on a night lighted only by the stars, will remember the peculiar beauty of the waves tipped with phosphoresent light. This shimmering, shifting radiance comes from the myriads of little fish attracted by the boat's lantern.

After the night's catch, the fishermen bring up at the cannery early in the morning. The heaps of silvery fish are transferred to the salting and cleaning house on the wharf where they go through a process of cleaning, scaling and washing, then up to the cooking rooms. Here they are laid in wire frying baskets and broiled in a vat of boiling olive oil until thoroughly cooked. As soon as they are sufficiently cooled, they are carried to the packers' tables and placed in the cans, into which the spices or sauce has been put. The filled cans are taken to the seaming machine and closed by what the ladies would call a "French seam," i. e., a double fold. No solder is used in these cans. After closing, the cans are run into an oven or "retort" and cooked again for about forty-five minutes. When this second "cook" is done the cans are washed clean and set aside for the labelers' hands. The process sounds complicated, but the force acts with method and so smoothly and swiftly that the lapse of time between the landing of the fish and the taking from the retort is only about three hours on an average day. By the middle of the afternoon the work of canning is done, the floors washed down, everything scrubbed as clean as hands can make it, and quiet settles over the cannery wharf for a few hours. The little fishing boats, moored in a flock, rock idly with the waves, and the beautiful crescent of white sandy beach stretches around the blue bay as far as the eye can reach, reminding one of the appropriateness of the name that the Monterey Packing Company has given to its product —"Crescent" Brand.

So quiet reigns until the sunset hour when the fishing fleet again starts out to gather a new harvest.

Green in fifteen different shades. Tom Dillon, Milliner for Men, 712 Market street, opposite Call Building.

ALL YEAR ROUND
RAIL ROUTE TO

YOSEMITE VALLEY

VIA

SOUTHERN PACIFIC

By way of Merced in connection with the

YOSEMITE VALLEY RAILROAD

Only ten hours' ride to El Portal (the edge of the Valley) and three and one-half hours thence to the heart of the Valley

Ask any of our agents for details or write Chas. S. Fee, Passenger Traffic Manager SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY, San Francisco, for beautifully illustrated descriptive literature.

CHRISTMAS GREETING

Start 1909 aright. Telephone us about wiring or repairing.

Telephone Douglas 1185 and 1186.

LEVY ELECTRIC CO.

HURRY UP ELECTRICIANS

LEVY ELECTRIC WIRING COMPANY

Electric Trains, Cars, Dynamos, Motors, Batteries, Machinery, Magic Lanterns Moving Pictures, Telegraph and Telephones, Wireless Outfits, X-rays, Etc.

648 Sacramento St. San Francisco 1205 Polk Street

A Boon to Mankind

Milk is the one perfect food, the essential without which the race must inevitably cease to exist. Whole races subsist without vegetables, and societies for the discouragement of meat eating flourish, but without milk not only humankind but the whole order of mammalia would cease to rear its progeny. With the growing inability or disinclination of mothers to nurse their children the importance of a pure supply of the lacteal fluid becomes a matter of increasing importance. No other factor save that of foul living conditions contributes so great a share to mortuary statistics than tainted dairy conditions, and, unfortunately, milk is one of the best "cultures" for the growth of bacteria. Unprotected milk is a standing invitation to the destroyers. The dried sputum from a consumptive workman, the filth of a carelessly kept stable, the scar tissue of some ill conditioned animal, is carried to an uncovered pail, and a series of summer epidemics, carries fatality to homes so far removed from the source of the evil that it is attributed to almost any plausible local condition rather than to that which is its origin. Mysterious visitations of typhoid are too often the result of using an impure water supply for cleansing the receptacles, but until comparatively recently it has not occurred to boards of health and city authorities to place any restrictions on the dairy farmers or middlemen, and even yet the argument of "unwarrantable restrictions and hardships" is looked upon as a valid excuse for permitting what is in fact a dealing out of wholesale homicide. It remained for the city of Copenhagen to be the first to establish the feasibility of a pure and healthful supply of milk while at the same time demonstrating that it does not involve so great an expense as to render milk a luxury for the wealthy. Copenhagen is the center of the world's greatest trade in dairy products, and the natural supposition would be that there, if any where, an abundance of pure milk would be available. Dr. G. Busck, a wise and shrewd wholesale butter-dealer, had his attention called to the subject by the plight of one of his employees. It was nearly thirty years ago that he noticed one of his most valued workmen showing signs of concern and abstraction, and, on questioning him, discovered that the cause was the condition of the man's child. All it needed was milk, yet even the poor supply that had hitherto nourished it was cut off because the father refused to patronize the saloon keeper, not being a drinking man. Dr. Busck's temper was aroused. He understood perfectly the unsanitary places kept by liquor dealers and he was equally exasperated by the facts that a decent working man should be compelled to go to such places for milk and that it should be refused him because he objected to buying liquor. The result was that he called together several of his friends,—three university professors, a diplomat, a physician and a lawyer, and formed the "Milk-Furnishing Society of Copenhagen," with a capital of about $2500. The scheme was laughed at and derided, but they persisted until the next phase was reached, the angry opposition of the farmers and dealers whose business was interfered with, but with the hearty backing of the newspapers and the health officials, together with the education of the public, the movement gained ground and today it has a capital of $150,000. Not only has it been a success financially from the start, but it has purified the entire milk trade of Copenhagen and its influence is spreading to Germany, Norway, and Sweden. No dairies or farms are owned by the society. It confines its activities solely to the inspection of the farms and their products. The dairymen bind themselves to feed their cattle on approved foods, to report any disease that manifests itself amongst the herds and to exercise the same supervision over the employees and their families. The society, on its part, pays the market price for all milk from a suspected animal until it is examined and certified by the society's veterinarian. The incentive to dispose of infected or suspicious milk is thus removed, since there is no loss occasioned and the certification of the society is of the greatest value. The dairy farms are models of cleanliness. The cattle are groomed before milking. No dry-sweeping is permitted in the stables, which are specially constructed, and the milkers are dressed in a uniform which is frequently changed and laundered under supervision. Soap, towels and fresh water are convenient to the milking room, and immediately after milking the milk is poured into sterilized receptacles and removed to the cold chamber.

MILCH COWS IN MAIN CORRAL OF IDEAL FARMS IN MARIN
All animals are tested for tuberculosis

Oversight is not yet relaxed for the sealed tins, which are forwarded by special cars to the society's headquarters where they are opened. Temperature is taken, and samples tested both by tasting and chemical analysis. No chances are taken with cans accidentally left unsealed, but their contents are sent to the butter-making department a lower price being allowed. The milk is strained three times before being bottled for delivery, and the same care is taken with the receptacles as with the fluid. The apparent "restriction of trade" has helped business for, though the milk sells for considerably less than the price charged in this country, allowing for the difference in standards of living, there is a demand from all classes. The con-

Milo

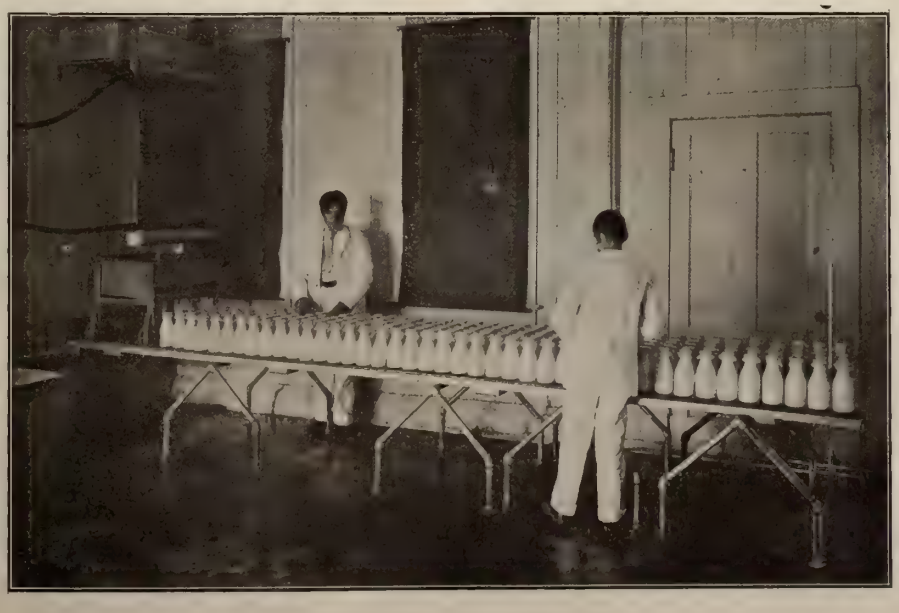
Do you know what Quality means in a Turkish Cigarette? If not get a box of "MILO." Then, any other cigarette, and try same, side by side. You'll note the delicate, aromatic mildness of the "MILO." Mildness (yet with the richness in flavor) is what costs in Turkish Tobacco, and its just this that makes the Perfect Cigarette. You'll find it in No Other.

This perfection is obtained only by owning our own plantation in Turkey—the careful watchfulness from the seeding to the finished article.

Write to the Surbrug Company for samples and prices.

THE SURBRUG COMPANY, New York City

sumption of milk is about double what it was before the establishment of the society. All milk dealing is under the supervision of the board of health. No one can enter into the business in any of its branches without notifying the sanitary police. The restrictions as to antiseptic cleanness of person and premises, and the revocation of permits to shops which fail to live up to the remotest requirements, with periodic and unannounced visits from the inspectors make it virtually impossible to escape detection. The dealer who mixes his supplies so that a sample cannot be traced to its source becomes personally responsible for consequences. If he retains each sample in the receptacle in which it is delivered to him the responsibility goes back to the farmer, provided that the shopkeeper has obeyed the regulations. Copenhagen has not had a milk epidemic since 1891. The rate of infant mortality in Copenhagen in 1906 was but 144 to a thousand. Chicago's statistics give 210, Cleveland 256, Savannah 228, and Fall River 420. Even in Buffalo, where there is exceptional care taken in the matter of a milk supply, 201 out of every thousand deaths are of children under one year of age. The figures are expressive. The fault with the American systems of supervision, heretofore appears to have been in not taking hold at the source of supply. Usually milk which is delivered for city consumption comes from a wide area, and the responsibile body is the State Department of Agriculture instead of the local board of health. The State Department investigates and reports, but does nothing toward the eradication of evils. The departments do the best they can, under the circumstances, and public feeling is not yet sufficiently aroused to the importance of the movement. Without an adequate force of inspectors equipped with proper authority comparatively little can be accomplished. Dealers who are, perforce, unvisited for months at a time, and have not before them the fear of losing their business are prone to become lax and indifferent. Still, the public conscience is being aroused and there are few of the larger cities which have not undertaken some reform in the matter of a milk supply. In a word, the real solution of the problem is "Pure milk from sound cows," and the Copenhagen society has demonstrated it as an attainable condition. The success of the Copenhagen, it is worthy to note, has been duplicated across the bay in Marin County on the Ideal Farms.



INTERIOR OF THE MAIN STABLE OF THE IDEAL FARMS

This stable is as clean as the kitchen of a good housewife.

MOVING DOWN TOWN

The firm of Chas. M. Plum & Company, the oldest furniture and carpet house in San Francisco, who for twenty years prior to the fire were located outside of the retail district, corner of Ninth and Market streets, have decided to move down into the new retail district. They have leased from Mrs. J. R. K. Nuttall and Mrs. Sarah Rosenstock their property on the north side of Sutter street just above Grant avenue, for a long term of years. The owner will proceed at once to erect a handsome building specially adapted to the business of Plum & Company. The lot is fifty-two feet six inches by one hundred and twenty-six feet extending to a rear street, which insures plenty of light for their floor displays. The building is to be completed by the first day of next July.

A Scotchman, wishing to know his fate at once, telegraphed a proposal of marriage to the lady of his choice. After spending the entire day at the telegraph office, he was finally rewarded late in the evening by an affirmative answer. "If I were you," suggested the operator when he delivered the message, "I'd think twice before I'd marry a girl who kept me waiting all day for my answer." "Na, na," retorted the Scot. "The lass who waits for the night rates is the las sfor me."

IN THE BOTTLING DEPARTMENT

The milk must be bottled at the farm.

Chateau Wines in California

By E. H. Rixford

Not the most famous but unquestionably the finest of the chateau wines of California are those made by Mr. E. H. Rixford at his La Questa vineyard. He is one of the few vineyardists of California who are as eager to be proud of their products as to profit therefrom.—Editor Town Talk

The editor of Town Talk has asked me to tell his readers how to produce a chateau wine in California.

There is no secret about it. If the conditions are favorable, the same varieties of grapes are grown as in the Medoc, and the same practices are followed, a fine wine ought to be produced in this State.

In the preface of his work entitled, "The Wine Press and the Cellar," published in 1883, the writer used this language—"If every grower in the State will only devote a portion of his ground to the cultivation of the choicest varieties of grapes, making sure that he knows what he is cultivating, will use the best methods of vinification, preserve each kind of wine by itself, or keep a careful record of his blends, and will age and rear the different products according to the best and most intelligent methods, the writer confidently expects that favored spots will be found in time which will produce wines that will compare favorably with the fine wines of Europe; and we may even venture to hope that some lucky individual will find that he is possessed of a vineyard that will make his name famous as the producer of a grand wine equal to the most renowned wines of the world."

IN THE LA QUESTA VINEYARD

In this picture is shown the Medoc system of training the vine.

THE WINE PRESS

The soil in which the vines are grown exercises an important influence on the wine made from the grapes grown thereon, and in France, great stress is laid upon its composition. The finest wines of the Medoc, as a rule, are produced upon a gravelly soil, but the constituents vary greatly in the different vineyards, and any one who is curious upon this subject is referred to the French works where the question of soils is discussed. Suffice it to say that the finest wines are not produced on low, wet, clay soil, but rather from grapes grown on rolling lands whose soil is comparatively light, and largely made up of broken stone, gravel and sand, with a due proportion of clay.

Climate of course, exercises a powerful influence on the product of the vine, and a delicate table wine cannot be produced in a very hot climate, nor where the weather is so cold that the grapes will not ripen sufficiently to eliminate the harsh acidity of the fruit. In a comparatively new country like California, the matters of climate, physical condition and soil must be determined by experience, following the indications suggested.

IN THE WINE CELLAR

The best variety of grapes, however, must absolutely be planted. The Cabernet Sauvignon enters largely into the production of all the classified grands crus of the Medoc, and its use cannot be neglected in the production of similar wines in any country. Grown with this grape in different proportions are a few other varieties peculiar to that region. Chateau-Lafite cultivates seventy-six hectares of vines, seventy hectares in Cabernet Sauvignon, three in Merlot, and three in Cabernet Franc, and Verdot. Chateau Margeaux has eighty hectares, forty of which are Cabernet Sauvignon, twenty Malbec, and twenty Merlot, Verdot, and Carminere in about equal proportions. Chateau Latour has forty-six hectares in vines, one-half of which are Cabernet Sauvignon and Cabernet Franc, one-fourth Malbec, one-fourth Verdot and other varieties. Mouton Rothchild has sixty hectares almost exclusively in Cabernet Sauvignon.

Many connoisseurs who have drunk "La Questa" have flatteringly compared it with some of the fine growths mentioned, therefore I take the liberty of giving our own methods, after years of experimenting on the lines followed in the Medoc.

La Questa Vineyard at Woodside, San Mateo County, is situated on a hillside, gently sloping to the southwest, the soil contains a noticeable proportion of broken rock, sand and gravel, and is underlaid with a ferruginous clay. It is planted to Cabernet Sauvignon and a small percentage of other varieties. The grapes ripen about the middle of October and at that season of the year the fermentation is gentle, even, and complete, and we do not experience the difficulties of warmer climates, where the high temperature destroys the yeast germs, and the vintner has what in common parlance is called "a stuck tank," in which fermentation ceases all too soon, and before the must is dry.

The vines are planted four feet apart in rows eight feet between, and are pruned and trained according to the system which prevails in the Medoc, each vine bearing two arms, and each arm one or two canes bent in the form of a bow or arc and tied to a wire about eighteen inches above the ground, as illustrated in the picture showing the vines after the winter pruning and tying. The grapes are gathered when the juice shows about twenty-two per cent of sugar. Defective and green grapes are left on the vines in picking. We stem our grapes and they fall from the stemmer into fermenting tanks of 2000 gallons capacity, with four foot staves. Fermentation is completed in about a week, when the new wine is drawn off into puncheons of about 180 gallons capacity, and remains in them until the first racking when it is drawn off into vats holding about 1000 gallons, leaving the heavy lees behind.

The fermenting house in which the new wine remains till the first racking is a plain, wooden building with a concrete floor.

The cellar in which the ovals are stored is a stone building with thick walls, partly underground, with a well ventilated attic, and we are able to maintain a fairly even temperature in all kinds of weather.

The wine is carefully racked four times the first year, and after that twice or three times a year till it is put into bottles. After three or four years in wood it is bottled and laid away for one or two years more before putting it on the market.

It is not possible in an article of this length to give more than general indications of the practices to be followed in making a Chateau wine, but they will be found assembled from the works of the best French writers in the book already mentioned. But presuming that the proper location has been found with favorable climate and soil, and the finest varieties of grapes are planted, and they are gathered and pressed, and the wine has been put into the cellar, it will be impossible to put out a fine wine much less a Chateau wine, unless the most scrupulous attention is given to cleanliness. No utensil or cask should be allowed to become sour or mouldy, or come in contact with the liquid. If ever "Cleanliness is next to Godliness," emphatically it is so in wine making.

It is a notorious fact that a few years ago almost all the California wines when new seemed good and promising but at the end of a year or two were found to be defective, partly because stored in open wooden buildings, but principally because they had come in contact with sour and filthy utensils and containers.

And let me say here that the average man will no more make fine wine than the average farmer will make fancy butter. The same neatness and tidiness in both is essential. The attempt to produce a Chateau wine must be a labor of love, for years of experimenting are required before adequate results can be had, and therefore, as already indicated, in making wine for profit, the producer must carry on the more remunerative business of producing quantity rather than quality, but he should not fail to experiment in a small way in hopes, in the end, of reaching perfection in the art.

A BURNING QUESTION

How to Keep Warm Frosty Mornings? Try the

HOME OPEN FRONT OIL HEATER

A PERFECT HEATER
PORTABLE
SAFE

Cheerful as an open grate fire. Most successful oil heater ever invented. Sold on a guarantee. If not satisfactory money refunded.

Made in Three Sizes

MANUFACTURED BY

W. W. MONTAGUE & CO.

Corner Turk and Polk Streets, San Francisco.

BALDWIN JEWELRY CO.

DIAMONDS

PRECIOUS STONES

JEWELRY

SILVERWARE

1261 Van Ness Avenue at Sutter

J. W. McDONALD, Jr., President JAS. H. BISHOP, Secretary

CITY STREET IMPROVEMENT CO.

GENERAL CONTRACTORS

Streets, Sewers, Railroads, Steel and Concrete Construction

305-306 Merchants' Exchange Building

Telephone Kearny 4295 Yards, Seventeenth and Harrison Sts.

BUY MOHAWK-TRIANGLE BUY MOHAWK-TRIANGLE

MOHAWK TRIANGLE MINING CO. OF ARIZONA
MINE S IN GOLDFIELD NEVADA

OFFICERS & DIRECTORS
J. E. EWING PRES
H. C. DAVIS
P. De B. ROSSI VICE PRES.
Hon. JAMES T. BOYD.
GEORGE M. WILLCOX SEC & TREAS

A Practically Proven Mine of Great Value--- Enormous Profits and Early Dividends Assured

The Mohawk-Triangle Mining Company owns over sixty acres of wonderfully rich ore bodies in the famous Goldfield Mining District of Nevada, where never before in the mining history of the world has there been such an amazing tale of suddenly acquired riches as that which has been told during the past few years.

Its properties consist of a small fraction of a claim situated in the very heart of that fabulously rich mining camp and completely surrounded by rich properties. Within a Stone's Throw of our line are the shafts out of which the famous Hayes-Monnette lease, the Ish-Sheets lease, the Francis-Mohawk lease and the January-Jones lease have taken millions and made their stockholders independently wealthy, while adjoining us and in close proximity to us on the south, east and north are such well known properties as the Red Top, Jumbo, Mohawk, Combination, Florence and other famous mines. Our Engineers, Messrs. Thomas Price & Son, the well known Mining Engineers and Metallurgists of San Francisco and Goldfield, and others who have examined this Fraction for us say. "The same great vein undoubtedly underlies this portion of your property." We have sunk a shaft there, have cut through the drift, and struck solid formation at a depth of about forty feet.

In addition to this fraction, the company owns the Camp Bird Group of claims, consisting of sixty acres situated in the famous Golden Horseshoe Belt, on which are located all the proven mines of the Goldfield District. The properties immediately surrounding these claims are rich in high-grade ore and we have every reason to believe that these sixty acres will develop into a mine ranking in the Bonanza class. We are down one hundred and seventy feet in a shaft on one claim of this group. The shaft is being sunk midway between two well-defined dykes of rich, gold-bearing rock, both of which carry as far as composition, formation and appearance goes, the same kind of ore as that taken from the famous Mohawk mine, which has assayed as high as sixty thousand dollars to the ton. We already have assays running from ten dollars to three hundred dollars to the ton in our shaft but expect to reach the real high grades as soon as we have cut stations at the two hundred and three hundred foot levels and cross-cut to the ledges not more than twenty to thirty feet away.

The Managers and Directors of the Company are all well known men of standing in San Francisco and vicinity; they are developing the properties in a thorough business-like manner with the sole object of making the investment of their stockholders a highly profitable one through the actual, intrinsic, dividend paying value of their mines, rather than through any temporary, fictitious fluctuation in the price of its stock.

For the purpose of continuing the work more vigorously, of sinking the shafts lower, cutting stations, cross-cutting, and for the further purpose of installing a better equipment to enable us to work more rapidly and more economically, we are desirous of raising a little more money, not much for we do not need much more to put us on a paying or dividend paying basis, and for that reason are offering a small block of only 25,000 shares of treasury stock or any part of it at 25 cents a share.

We are offering you the biggest bargain on the American stock market today and urge you to join us, but you must act at once, buy it now. Take it all or as much as you can.

IT MEANS A FORTUNE FOR YOU.

THE MOHAWK-TRIANGLE MINING CO.

SAN FRANCISCO OFFICE - - - - - ROOM 623, CHRONICLE BUILDING

Xmas Time

Now are the jolly days
  Home for the holidays,
Loudly rejoicing in freedom from school,
  Freed from the pedagogue,
  Every young head agog,
Over the profits accruing from Yule.

For Pa:

There's a fine embroidered motto, and a pair of slippers neat,
Worked up in flaring worsted that will surely burn his feet.
Here's a shaving mug, and pasteboard box to hold his cuffs and collars,
And a pocketbook that's horribly devoid of cents or dollars.

For Ma:

There's a bulky looking bundle, quite suggestive of a sacque,
Which some will think a seal once wore upon his dripping back.
But which, when looked at closely, and not in social rush,
Will prove to have been made complete of A 1 cotton plush.

The Children:

Will find their little stockings a hanging o'er the fire,
Stuffed full of indigestion, to which they all aspire.
For little girls are pretty dolls, in gorgeous satin drest,
Which cry Mamma, also Papa, when thumped upon the breast.
And for th'omniscient, omnipresent, ubiquitous small boys,
Are horns, and drums, and everything that contributes to noise.
And, last of all, for baby sweet, the dearest little fellow,
There stands a horse six inches high, his legs all painted yellow.
And wagons great, all stuffed with blocks, and sixteen Noah's arks,
And three or four small woolly dogs, with artificial barks.

Not one forgot of all the clan upon this happy morn
Which makes all other happy days by contrast seem forlorn,
Which bringeth to ye poet's face a broad, refulgent smile.
For now he vends to Sunday school his carols by the mile

WHAT WINGFIELD THINKS OF GOLDFIELD

George Wingfield, vice-president of the Goldfield Consolidated Mines Company, whose sudden rise from comparative poverty to the affluence of a multi-millionaire when the Mohawk mine made its sensational strike a few years ago and the stock of the company rose quickly from twenty-five cents to twenty dollars a share, is quoted in the Goldfield News of December 12, 1908, as saying: "The Mohawk has made a magnificent record, as everybody knows, but there are other Mohawks in the Goldfield district." The Mohawk-Triangle Mining Company is practically a close corporation, very little of its stock having been permitted to its treasury but all who are interested in the company or who are in close touch with its management thoroughly agree with Mr. Wingfield. Before the present managers of the company secured these claims they spent days and weeks thoroughly examining and pricing every available claim in the Goldfield district, and judging then from the excellent surface showings, from the fact that the claims were traversed by two of the strongest quartz outcroppings to be found in the State, from the values placed on and found in the adjoining properties and the prices at which claims in the immediate vicinity were selling, they believed they had secured a bargain, while now, having practically proved their value by the development work already done, they are convinced of it, and honestly and sincerely believe their property to be worth over a million dollars and that they will take many millions out of it before the end of next year. Over sixty-seven thousand dollars, it is said, was taken out of the Ish-Sheets shaft, within a few feet of the Mohawk-Triangle sideline during the last three days of the Ish-Sheets lease. Mr. S. Thornton Langley, a Goldfield pioneer and one of the best informed and most successful mining operators in the district, writes as follows: "In my opinion, the combination of your Camp Bird Group with your Mohawk-Triangle Claim, presents the strongest combination of any group of mines in Goldfield today." From all reports it certainly looks as though this was one of the coming mines of the Goldfield district.

A GREAT HOME BUILDER

It will possibly be a great many years before a building and loan association will be able to duplicate the good done by the Continental. In nineteen years it has been the means of helping people in California to build nearly 5,000 homes. Counting five people to a family, this number of homes assembled would make a city of 25,000 population. The number of men employed in constructing this number of homes means a small army of employees. In the meantime it has distributed to its investors, whose money has been invested in the association and whose money built these homes, over $3,000,000.00 in profits.

The Continental was organized in 1889 for the purpose of creating a medium through which people could build their homes and for the further purpose of helping the workingman or woman to make better interest on savings than by any other system of banking. Its record shows the success of the enterprise, beyond question. In January, 1909, the Continental will be in its new home at the junction of Market and Taylor streets and Golden Gate avenue.

"Those Lustrous Eyes are Murine Eyes"

MURINE EYE REMEDY

A Favorite Toilet Accessory

Has won many Friends as an Aid to the Restoration of Normal Conditions, Healthful Tone and Natural Brilliancy to Eyes that Need Care.

It has proven of great value in the Home as An Eye Tonic for Weak, Red, Inflamed & Itching Eyes & Eyelids.

As An Eye Insurance Tourists, Automobilists and others exposed to Strong Winds, Dust and Reflected Sunlight, which produce Irritation, Granulation, Ulceration and Weak Eyes, will find in Murine a Safe, Soothing Eye Lotion affording "Reliable Relief."

The Finishing Touch

Bewitchingly Costumed
In Costliest Gown,
For the Social Event,
At the South End of Town.

The "Finishing Touch"
To the Toilet is seen
In the Act above Pictured
"Two drops" of Murine.

Try Murine for the "Automobile Eye"

OLD CROW R. B. HAYDEN JOHN BUTLER BOURBON MEADVILLE RYE

Powell's
THE STRAIGHT WHISKEY HOUSE
NO RECTIFIED GOODS

N.W.COR. MISSION & FIRST STS.

TELEPHONE KEARNY 2047

EVERY DRINK OF WHISKEY SOLD OVER THIS BAR IS PURE AND STRAIGHT; REDUCED TO 87 PROOF WITH DISTILLED WATER ONLY.

A BEAUTIFUL CLASSIC STRUCTURE

The "CONTINENTAL BUILDINGS," located at the junction of Market and Taylor Streets and Golden Gate Avenue, is now practically completed.

This structure was designed by Architects Howard & Galloway. It is a two-story and basement Class "A" building of classic architecture. The exterior of the building is ornamented with granite relieved by pure white terra cotta and oxidized copper.

The entire ground floor will be devoted to the use of the Continental Building and Loan Association. This floor will be finished in Grecian cream-colored and Verdi marble with ornaments of solid oxidized copper.

The second story will contain a number of handsomely equipped offices unsurpassed for light, heat and ventilation.

The locality is one of the most central in San Francisco, being in the very midst of the great department stores and is also fast becoming the banking center.

Nineteen Years

The Continental Building and Loan Association was organized in September, 1889, and has been doing business in California during the entire time.

Nearly 5000 members have built their homes through this Association.

It has paid to its members in dividends the sum of $3,000,000. At no time have they amounted to less than six per cent per annum, compounded semi-annually.

There is no better investment than its 6% Certificates of Deposit.

If you are not a member you have missed a safe and profitable investment.

A Systematic Home-Saving Institution

Our literature is free. Cordial treatment if you call.

CONTINENTAL BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION

To Bethlehem

(Continued from Page 27.)

of the older faith who affect to despise them. They are ragged —these tarbooshed Turk "Askeri"—they are out at elbows and often shoeless, and not infrequently go hungry; yet they stand quietly at their posts, while hordes of greasy, squabbling, unsavory pilgrims jostle them, and only too frequently have they to intervene in embittered conflicts between the members of different congregations, which not seldom lead to bloodshed.

The most prominent building in the town, and one which naturally chiefly impresses the approaching visitor, is the great square convent of the Nativity. The building much more resembles a fort than a convent, and it is like enough (seeing that in its present form it is reputed to have been built in one of the later crusades, after being previously destroyed by the Saracens), that it may not infrequently have been used as a fortress. Within this convent do we find the church of the Nativity, which is of course the objective of every visitor. This church is built in the form of a cross, but only one portion of it is open. This is the nave, a stately specimen of architecture which contains forty-eight magnificent Corinthian columns of solid granite, each nearly three feet through and twenty-seven feet high. This nave belongs to the Armenian congregation; the rest of the building—the arms, that is, of the cross—is walled up and inaccessible. One of the most noticeable facts about this great church is the low square door which is its only entrance; there were of course many other doors, but they also have been walled up, and for a reason that is not flattering to Christianity, seeing that the measure was taken by the Turkish authorities for the purpose of preventing the Christians of various sects from making a battle ground of the interior of the sacred edifice.

Even as it is, however, and despite the actual reason, there is a beautiful appropriateness about this low doorway, in that all who pass its threshold must perforce bow the head. Within the nave itself the many chapels are hardly ever to be found untenanted. It would be hard to describe them or the shuffling crowd that constantly frequents the great building. At the head of the cross and on the threshold is a sculptured marble star; which the Bethlehemites believe to be the central point of the universe—the umbilicus mundi. It is a long, intricate and tortuous passage that leads from here to the crypt below, and to the lamp-lit chapel of the Nativity—where the Saviour is said to have been born,—whose walls are hung with silken draperies from Damascus, bright with the gayest colors, and where the gold star of Bethlehem gleams before the altar, with its inscription, "Hic de Virgine Maria Jesus Christus Natus est," almost wholly worn away by the constant kisses of fervent worshippers. Near by, again, the stone manger stands—within another chapel—in a low recess cut in the solid rock. To each of these shrines, and others, the Christian visitor is gravely escorted by a Turkish soldier, whose office of protection is indeed no sinecure.

Of course, in this church of Bethlehem there has been built up, around the original and simple fact, a vast amount of superstition. There is, however, amid all these chapels and shrines one other spot, apart from the center of peculiar worship, which must have an abiding interest for everyone. This is the grotto where St. Jerome (whose advocacy of celibacy for women had brought down upon him the wrath of Europe), settled down after his long wanderings through Asia Minor, Egypt and Palestine, to make the translations of the Old Testament, which, in spite of persecutions which drove him at times to seek refuge in the mountains, he succeeded in completing before his death.

The sentiments of the visitor to Bethlehem are of a conflicting nature. On leaving the place of his pilgrimage, all associations impel reverence, respect and worship, yet it must be granted that in view of the scenes which the visitor to the sacred shrines can hardly fail to witness—the turbulence, the violent quarrels, the jealousies, the bloodshed even, which the Moslem soldier is sometimes powerless to avert—all the coarse features, indeed, which cannot but take from the simple majesty of the Holy Place—it were, perhaps, the most gracious part to remain away.

The "Direct Wire"

Editor of great city daily (to his assistant):

"Billy, have you finished that 'special' from Washington?"

"Not quite. I had to write one from Chicago, a letter from our correspondent in Paris, the Wall Street story and that stuff from Lincoln, Neb. I'll finish the Washington 'special' in a few minutes. By the way, do you want anything from New York about the Harriman deal in Los Angeles—a denial or anything of that sort? Seems to me that we ought to set people right about the matter.

Not the Right Man

A young man had been calling now and then upon a young lady, when one night, as he sat in the parlor waiting for her to come down, her mother entered the room instead and asked him in a very grave, stern way what his intentions were. He turned very red and was about to stammer some incoherent reply, when suddenly the young lady called down from the head of the stair: "Mamma, mamma, that is not the one."

SING FAT CO.

Famous Oriental Bazaar

Deal with the old reliable firm. Established 1866.
All goods guaranteed. If not satisfactory money refunded.

Holiday Suggestions

In Oriental Arts

A Thousand Articles to Select From

S. W. Cor. GRANT AVE. and CALIFORNIA STS.
CHINATOWN, SAN FRANCISCO
Branch Store, 548-550 So. Broadway, Los Angeles

SING CHONG CO., Inc.

LEADING CHINESE BAZAAR

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in Bronzes
Porcelains
Ivory
Ebony
Furniture
Jewelry
Screens
Silk Embroideries
Kimonos
Cloissonnes
Satsumas
Handkerchiefs
Shawls
Gowns
Beads Bed Spreads

MANUFACTURERS OF
LADIES' UNDERWEAR and SILK DRESSES

Telephones Douglas 1245 and China 80

601-611 DUPONT STREET, Corner Cafifornia
CHINATOWN, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Christmas Legends and Superstitions

(Continued from Page 40.)

the mountaineers of the Abruzzi. In the early years of the nineteenth century the pipers knew no limit of hours. They played day and night, as long as breath and endurance enabled them to hold out, a condition which was by no means agreeable to those who would sleep o' nights, amongst whom was Pope Leo XII, who decreed that pipers should not play upon their instruments earlier than four o'clock in the morning. In 1836, owing to the prevalence of cholera and the watchfulness of the soldiers, the pipers were unable to make their annual descent on the Eternal City, and the populace looked upon the deprivation as a national misfortune. Up to 1870 the Christmas pipers were still a spectacle of the Roman holiday but in that year it was thought that they were too primitive and too little in keeping with modern times, so their places were taken by certain wandering players akin to our own "little German bands," who stopped outside shops and hotels and played some modern march or operatic selection, with drum beats and harsh brazen instruments. The few survivors of the once numerous band of pifferai are to be found now only in isolated rural districts, where they are still welcomed in the houses, rewarded with gifts of money and merchandise and treated to holiday cheer.

Though the children of Mexico and Spanish South America have neither Santa Claus nor Christmas tree it does not follow that they are to be commiserated, for the holiday season is by no means ignored. Every household has its representation of the stable at Bethlehem, which is usually put in place a week before Christmas day and not removed until after the Epiphany, the sixth of January. Always, on the night before Christmas the old story is told that the animals have the gift of speech, and it might be an additional miracle to the young minds could they but know that wherever the legend is revived the creatures invariably speak the language of the country, be it Italian, French, Spanish or Portuguese, though all the year round the bleating of a sheep, the lowing of an ox or the crowing of a cock would appear to be a common tongue in all lands. In Mexico a characteristic celebration, which, however, has fallen somewhat into decay of late years, was the "posada." This was a commemoration of the journey undertaken by Mary and Joseph, and lasted for nine nights. Several families joined together in this ceremony, and their respective houses represented the various stopping places at which shelter was sought on the way to Bethlehem to be enrolled according to the order of the Roman emperor. On each successive evening the guests with their servants assembled at the house designated for that particular night, and each provided with a lighted candle, they formed a procession at the head of which were carried the figures of Mary and Joseph. Maching through the corridors of the house they recited a litany or sang hymns until they reached the appointed room. There some of the company entered and closed the door, taking upon themselves the character of inmates of the house. The party outside, representing the pilgrims, then chanted a request which, freely translated ran:

"In heaven's name I beg for shelter;
My wife tonight can go no farther."

To which those inside the closed room made reply,

"No inn is this; begone from hence.
Ye may be thieves; I trust ye not."

Further importunities in the same style overcame the objections and, the door opened, the pilgrims were admitted. A gaily decorated altar with small gifts received the figures, and after prayers were recited, the remander of the evening was spent in dancing, feasting and amusement. The last night of the "posada" was usually held at the home of some wealthy man who could afford to decorate lavishly and make the entertainment in keeping. The Mexican peasantry, like the English rustics, used to hold a rude sort of dramatic entertainment such as Thomas Hardy describes in "The Return of the Native." The "pastores" or shepherds do not seem to have inherited a traditional play, or to have constructed a systematic presentation, but, dressed in fantantic garb representing anything from angel to devil, they went about from house to house, singing and dancing. They were rewarded with small gifts of money or simple refreshments, and occasionally a rich resident would provide a special entertainment for them. But with the advent of railroads, tourists and the inevitable sophistication, both the "posada" and the shepherd's serenade have become more or less vulgarized and for that reason they are, if not forbidden, at leased looked askance upon by the church.

The custom of giving presents at Christmas is usually attributed to the tradition of the gifts carried by the Three Wise Men to the Christ child, but it is likewise claimed to have had its origin in another old custom, that of the priests placing a box on out-bound ships for the receipt of alms. On Christmas day this box was opened and masses said for the contributors. The box came to be called the Christ Mass Box, hence our custom of Christmas boxes and gifts. It seems a far-fetched and improbable derivation, but no one is obliged to accept it as genuine.

Carl Christensen of Oakland took delivery this week from the Howard Automobile Company of a Buick two-cylinder touring car.

CHAS. E. HANSEN, President A. McLAUGHLIN, Vice-President
GEO. F. VOLZ, Secretary and Treasurer

TELEPHONE PARK 33

NATIONAL BREWING COMPANY

Cor. Fulton and Webster Streets
San Francisco, Cal.

Herodias

(Continued from Page 30.)

A negro appeared. His body was white with dust. He gasped for breath and could only say:

"Vitellius!"

"What! has he arrived?"

"I saw him. Within three hours he will be here!"

The portieres at the doors of the corridors were separated as by the wind. A busy hum filled the castle, a tumult of people running to and fro, of furniture being dragged about, of silver plate falling to the floor; and from the towers trumpets sounded, to call the scattered slaves.

II.

The ramparts were thronged with people when Vitellius entered the courtyard. He was leaning on his interpreter's arm, followed by a great red litter adorned with plumes and mirrors; he wore the toga, the laticlave, the buskins of a consul, and his person was surrounded by lictors.

The Tetrarch had fallen at the Proconsul's feet, grieved, he said, that he had not been sooner informed of the favor of his presence. Otherwise he would have ordered that whatever the Vitellii might require should await them along the roads.

Between the pillars, with their brazen capitals, Herodias was seen, advancing with the air of an empress, amid women and eunuchs carrying burning perfumes on silver-gift salvers.

The Proconsul took three steps to meet her; and, having saluted him with an inclination of the head:

"What joy!" she cried; "henceforth, Agrippa, the enemy of Tiberius, is powerless to do harm!"

Vitellius asked why there were so many people. Antipas told him the reason: his birthday festival; and he pointed out several of his people, who leaned over the battlements, lowering enormous baskets of meat, fruit, vegetables, antelopes and storks, large sky-blue fish, grapes, melons, pomegranates arranged in pyramids. Aulus could not restrain himself. He rushed towards the kitchen, impelled by that gluttony which was destined to surprise the universe.

Passing a cave, he saw stew-pans like cuirasses. Vitellius came to look at them, and demanded that the underground rooms of the fortress should be opened for him.

They were hewn in the rock, with high vaulted roofs, and pillars at intervals. The first contained old armour, but the second was filled to overflowing with pikes, all their points protruding from a bouquet of plumes. The third seemed to be hung with mats of reeds, the slender arrows were arranged so straightly side by side. Scimitar-blades covered the walls of the fourth. In the center of the fifth, rows of helmets, with their crests, formed as it were a battalion of red serpents. In the sixth naught could be seen save quivers; in the seventh, naught but military boots; in the eighth, naught but armlets; in those following, pitchforks, grappling-irons, ladders, ropes, and even poles for catapults, even bells for the breastplates of dromedaries And as the mountain grew larger at its base, and was hollowed out within like a beehive, beneath these rooms there were others more numerous and deeper.

Vitellius, Phineas his interpreter, and Sisenna, the leader of the publicans, walked through them by the light of torches borne by three eunuchs.

In the shadow they distinguished hideous objects invented by the barbarians: head-crushers studded with nails, javelins that poisoned the wounds they made, pincers resembling a crocodile's jaws; in a word, the Tetrarch had in store in Machaerus munitions of war for forty thousand men.

He had gathered them in anticipation of an alliance of his enemies. But the Proconsul might believe, or say, that it was to fight against the Romans, and the Tetrarch sought explanations.

They were not his; many were used for protection against brigands; moreover, they were needed against the Arabs; or else, they had all belonged to his father. And, instead of walking behind the Proconsul, he went before, at a rapid pace. Then he stood against the wall, which he covered with his toga, holding his elbows away from his sides; but the top of a door appeared above his head. Vitellius noticed it and wished to know what was on the other side.

The Babylonian alone could open it.

"Call the Babylonian!"

They awaited his coming.

At first he seemed not to understand the interpreter. But Vitellius cast a glance at Antipas, who instantly repeated his command. Thereupon Jacim placed both his hands against the door. It glided into the wall.

A breath of hot air came forth from the darkness. A winding path sloped downward; they followed it and reached the entrance to a grotto, of greater extent than the other underground apartments.

At the rear there was an arched opening over the precipice, which defended the citadel on that side. The blossoms of a honeysuckle that clung to the wall hung downward in the bright light of day. Along the ground trickled a murmuring thread of water.

There were white horses there, a hundred perhaps, eating barley from a board on a level with their mouths. All had their manes painted blue, their hoofs in bags of esparto, and the hair between the ears curled over the frontal bone, like a wig.

A Perfumed Powdered Soap

BORAXO

For Toilet and Bath

YOUR DEALER SELLS IT

The 20-Mule Team Brand

PACIFIC COAST BORAX COMPANY

OAKLAND CHICAGO NEW YORK

Telephone Douglas 351

JOHN KITCHEN JR. CO.

BOOKBINDING

Blank Books Paper Ruling

Printing and Lithographing

Loose Leaf Ledgers Leather Novelties

67 FIRST STREET

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

With their very long tails they lazily lashed their legs. The Proconsul was struck dumb with admiration.

But what was there beneath?

"Nothing! a man, a prisoner."

"Show him to me!" said Vitellius.

The Tetrarch did not obey; the Jews would have learned his secret. His disinclination to raise the shield angered Vitellius.

"Break it in!" he shouted to the lictors.

Mannaeus had divined what was happening. Seeing an axe, he thought that they were going to behead Iaokanann—and he stopped the lictor at the first blow on the bronze circle, inserted a sort of hook between it and the pavement, then, straightening his long, thin arms, slowly raised it; it opened, and all marveled at the old man's strength. Beneath the wood-lined cover was a trapdoor of the same dimensions. At a blow of the fist it folded in two panels; then they saw a hole, a great ditch, surrounded by a staircase without a rail; and they who leaned over the brink saw at the bottom something indistinct and horrifying.

A human being lay on the ground, covered with long hair that mingled with the beast's hair that clothed his back. He rose; his brow touched a horizontal grating; and from time to time he disappeared in the depths of his den.

The sun gleamed on the points of the tiaras and on the sword-hilts, and heated the flagstones beyond measure; and doves, flying from the eaves, fluttered above the courtyard. It was the hour when Mannaeus usually threw grain to them. He crouched before the Tetrarch, who stood beside Vitellius. The Galileans, the priests, the soldiers, formed a circle behind them; all held their peace, in agonizing suspense as to what was about to happen.

First there was a profund sigh, uttered in a cavernous voice.

Herodias heard it at the other end of the palace. Overcome by a sort of fascination, she passed through the crowd; and with one hand on Mannaeus's shoulder, and body bent forward, she listened.

"Woe to you, Pharisees and Sadducees, generation of vipers, inflated skins, tinkling cymbals!"

They recognized Iaokanann. His name passed from mouth to mouth. Others hastened to the spot.

"Woe to you, O people! woe to the traitors of Judah, to the drunkards of Ephraim, to those who dwell in the fat valleys and who are overcome with wine!

"Let them fade away like the water that flows, like the snail that melts as it crawls, like the foetus of a woman who does not see the sun.

"Thou must take refuge, O Moab, among the cypresses like the sparrows, in caverns like the jerboa. The gates of the fortresses shall be rent asunder more easily than nutshells, walls shall crumble, cities shall burn; and the scourge of the Eternal shall not rest. He shall turn your limbs about in your blood as wool is turned in the dyer's vat. He shall tear you like a new harrow; He shall scatter morsels of your flesh upon the mountains!"

Of what conqueror was he speaking? Was it of Vitellius? The Romans alone could effect such an extermination. Complaints arose:

"Enough! enough! let him finish!"

He continued, in a louder voice:

"Beside their mothers' dead bodies, little children shall drag themselves through the dust. You shall go at night to seek bread among the ruins, at the risk of sword thrusts. The jackals shall fight for your bones on the public squares, where the old men used to talk at evening. Your virgins, swallowing their tears, shall play the lute as the stranger's feasts, and your bravest sons shall bend their backs, crushed by too heavy burdens!"

The people remembered their days of exile, all the calamities of this history. These were the words of the prophets of old. Iaokanann sent them forth, like mighty blows, one after another.

But the voice became sweet, melodious, musical. It proclaimed enfranchisement, splendid portents in the sky, the newly born, with an arm in the dragon's cavern, gold instead of clay, the desert blooming like a rose. "That which is now worth sixty talents will not cost an obol. Fountains of milk shall gush from the rocks; you shall sleep in the wine-presses, with full bellies!—When wilt Thou come, whose coming I await? In anticipation, all the peoples kneel, and Thy sway shall be eternal, O Son of David!"

The Tetrarch threw himself back, the existence of a Son of David affronting him like a threat.

Iaokanann anathematized him for his assumption of royalty: —"There is no king save the Eternal!"—and for his gardens, his statues, his ivory furniture—like the impious Ahab!

Antipas broke the cord of the seal that hung upon his breast, and threw it into the hole, bidding him to hold his peace.

The voice replied:

"I will cry aloud like the bear, like a wild ass, like a woman in labor!

"The punishment has already befallen thee in thy incest. God afflicts thee with the sterility of the mule."

And laughter arose, like the plashing of the waves.

Vitellius persisted in remaining. The interpreter, in an unmoved voice, repeated in the Roman tongue all the invectives that Iaokanann roared in his own. The Tetrarch and Herodias were forced to listen to them twice. He panted, while she, open-mouthed, watched the bottom of the hole.

The ghastly man threw back his head, and, grasping the bars,

HIND, ROLPH & CO.

SHIP OWNERS

SHIPPING AND COMMISSION

310 CALIFORNIA STREET
SAN FRANCISCO

Seattle Office
COLMAN BUILDING

Honolulu Office
212 MERCHANT STREET

ZELLERBACH PAPER COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO OAKLAND LOS ANGELES

Wishes You a

MERRY CHRISTMAS
And a
HAPPY NEW YEAR

ZELLERBACH BUILDING

Southeast corner BATTERY AND JACKSON STS., San Francisco

A monument to good business methods and occupied entirely by us.
Visitors are cordially invited to inspect our store and warehouse.

Zellerbach Paper Company

pressed against them his face, which had the aspect of a tangled underbrush, and in which two coals of fire beamed.

"Ah! it is thou, Jezebel!

"Thou dost take his heart captive with the creaking of thy shoes. Thou didst neigh like a mare. Thou didst set thy bed on the mountains, to accomplish thy sacrifices!

"The Lord shall tear away thine earrings, thy purple robes, thy veils of fine linen, the circlets from thine arms, the rings from thy feet; and the little golden crescents that tremble on thy brow, thy silver mirrors, thy fans of ostrich feathers, the mother-of-pearl pattens that increase thy stature, the pride of thy diamonds, the perfumes of thy hair, the painting of thy nails—all the artifices of sensuality; and the stones shall be too few to stone the adulteress!"

She glanced about her for protection. The Pharisees hypocritically lowered their eyes. The Sadducees turned their faces away, fearing to offend the Proconsul. Antipas seemed at the point of death.

The voice grew louder, took on new intonations, rolled hither and thither with a crashing as of thunder, and, repeated by the mountain echoes, struck Machaerus with bolt after bolt.

"Stretch thyself in the dust, daughter of Babylon! Grind flour! Remove thy girdle, unloose thy shoes, truss up thy skirts, cross the rivers! Thy shame shall be laid bare, thine opprobrium shall be seen! thy sobs shall break thy teeth! The Eternal abhors the stench of thy crimes! Accursed! accursed! Die like a dog!"

The trap-door closed, the cover was lowered to its place. Mannaeus wished to strangle Iaokanann.

Herodias vanished. The Pharisees were scandalized. Antipas, in their midst, defended himself.

"Doubtless," said Eleazar, "one may marry his brother's wife; but Herodias was not widowed, and, moreover, she had a child, wherein lay the abomination."

"Not so! not so!" objected Jonathas the Sadducee. "The Law condemns such marriages, without proscribing them absolutely."

"It matters not! They are most unjust to me!" said Antipas; "for Absalom lay with his father's wives, Judah with his daughter-in-law, Ammon with his sister, Lot with his daughters."

Aulus, who had been sleeping, reappeared at that moment. When he was informed of the affair, he took sides with the Tetrarch. He should not be disturbed by such foolish ideas; and he laughed aloud at the reprobation of the priests and the frenzy of Iaokanann.

Herodias, on the steps, turned towards him.

"You are wrong, my master! He bids the people refuse to pay the tax."

"Is that true?" instantly asked the publican.

The answers were generally in the affirmative. The Tetrarch confirmed them.

Vitellius thought the prisoner might fly; and, as Antipas's conduct seemed to him equivocal, he posted sentinels at the gates, along the walls, and in the courtyard.

One thought afforded the Tetrarch consolation. Ioakanann was no longer at his disposal, the Romans had taken charge of him. What a relief! Phanuel was walking on the path around the battlements. He called him and said, pointing to the soldiers:

"They are stronger than I! I cannot set him free; it is not my fault!"

The courtyard was empty. The slaves were at rest. Against the reddening sky, flame-colored on the horizon, the smallest perpendicular objects were outlined in black. Antipas distinguished the salt-wells at the far end of the Dead Sea, and he no longer saw the tents of the Arabs. Doubtless they had gone. The moon rose; a feeling of peace descended upon his heart.

III.

The guests filled the banquet-hall.

It had three naves, like a basilica, separated by pillars of algum wood, with bronze capitals covered with carvings. Two galleries with openwork balustrades overhung it; and a third, in gold filagree, jutted out at one end, opposite an immense arch.

Candelabra burning on long tables extending the whole length of the hall formed bushes of fire, between cups of painted clay and copper platters, cubes of snow and heaps of grapes; but those red gleams one after another were lost in space because of the height of the ceiling, and points of light twinkled, like the stars at night, through the branches. Through the opening of the vast arch, one could see torches on the terraces of the houses; for Antipas feasted his friends, his subjects, and all who had presented themselves.

Slaves, as active as dogs, and with their feet encased in sandals of felt, went to and fro, carrying salvers.

The proconsular table stood upon a platform built of sycamore boards, beneath the gilded tribune. Tapestries from Babylon enclosed it in a sort of pavilion.

Three ivory couches, one opposite the door and one on either side, held Vitellius, his son, and Antipas; the Proconsul being next the door, at the left, Aulus at the right, the Tetrarch in the center.

On one side there were the priests and officers of Antipas, people from Jerusalem, the chief men of the Greek cities; and, under the Proconsul, Marcellus with the publicans, friends of the Tetrarch, the notables of Cana, Ptolemais, and Jericho; then, mingled pellmell, mountaineers from Libanus and Herod's old soldiers (twelve Thracians, a Gaul, two Germans), gazelle-hunters, Idumean shepherds, the Sultan of Palmyra, seamen of Eziongeber. Each person had before him a cake of soft dough,

GEO. RUSSELL REED CO.

QUALITY INKS

Levey's Brilliant Printing Inks
Mayer's Lithographic Inks
Photo Engravers' Supplies

645-653 Battery Street
San Francisco, Cal.

Our inks used on this publication

ASSOCIATED OIL COMPANY

WELLS FARGO & CO. BUILDING
Telephone Kearny 4800
SECOND AND MISSION STS.

on which to wipe his fingers; and their arms, stretching out like vultures' necks, seized olives, pistachioes, and almonds. All the faces beamed with joy beneath crowns of flowers.

The talk was of Iaokanann and men of his type; Simon of Gittoy purged sin with fire. A certain Jesus—

"The worst of all!" cried Eleazar. "An infamous juggler!"

Behind the Tetrarch a man arose, as pale as the hem of his chlamys. He descended from the platform and addressed the Pharisees:

"False! Jesus does miracles!"

Antipas would fain see one.

"You should have brought Him hither? Tell us."

Then he told that he, Jacob, having a daughter who was sick, had betaken himself to Capernaum, to implore the Master to heal her. The Master had replied: "Return to thy home, she is healed!"—and he had found her in the doorway, having left her bed when the hand of the dial marked three o'clock, the very moment when he had accosted Jesus.

Of course, argued the Pharisees, there are devices, powerful herbs! Sometimes, even there, at Machaerus, one found the "baaras," which made men invulnerable; but to cure without seeing or touching was an impossiblity, unless Jesus employed demons.

And the friends of Antipas, the chief men of Galilee, repeated, shaking their heads:

"Demons, clearly."

Jacob, standing between their table and that of the priests, held his peace, with a haughty yet gentle bearing.

They called upon him to speak:—"Explain His power."

He bent his shoulders, and in an undertone, slowly, as if afraid of himself:

"Know you not that He is the Messiah?"

All the priests glanced at one another, and Vitellius inquired the meaning of the word. His interpreter waited a full minute before replying.

They called by that name a liberator who should bring to them the enjoyment of all their goods and power over all peoples. Some indeed maintained that two should be expected. The first would be vanquished by Gog and Magog, demons of the North; but the other would exterminate the Prince of Evil; and for ages they had expected His coming every minute.

The priests having taken counsel together, Eleazar spoke for them.

First, the Messiah would be a Son of David, not of a carpenter. He would confirm the Law; this Nazarene assailed it; and—a yet stronger argument—he was to be preceded by the coming of Elias.

Jacob retorted:

"But Elias has come!"

"Elias! Elias!" echoed the multitude, even to the farthest end of the hall.

All, in imagination, saw an old man beneath a flock of ravens, the lightning shining upon an altar, idolatrous pontiffs cast into raging torrents; and a women in the tribunes, thought of the widow of Zarephath.

Jacob wearied himself repeating that he knew him! He had seen him! And so had the people!

"His name?"

Whereupon he shouted with all his strength:

"Iaokanann!"

Antipas fell backward as if stricken full in the chest. The Sadducees leaped upon Jacob. Eleazar harangued, seeking to obtain an audience.

When silence was restored, he folded his cloak about him and propounded questions, like a judge.

"Since the prophet is dead—"

Murmurs interrupted him. It was believed that Elias had disappeared only.

He angrily rebuked the multitude, and asked, continuing his inquiry:

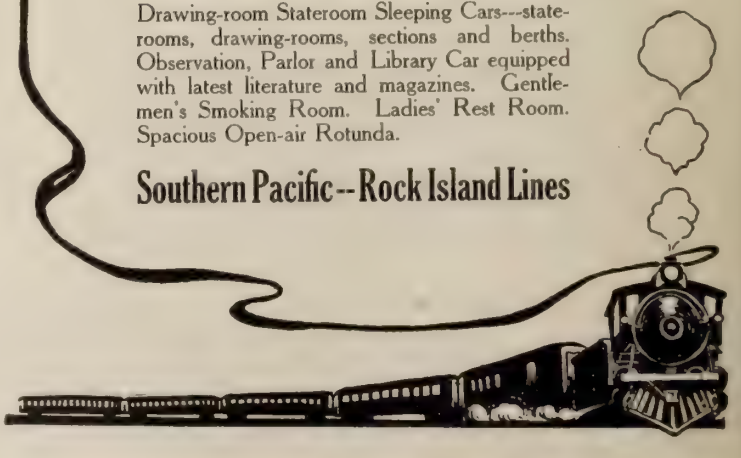
"Think you that he has come to life again?"

"Why, not?" said Jacob.

Aulus had not finished vomiting when he wished to eat again.

"Give me some marble-dust, schist from Naxos, sea-water, no matter what! Suppose I should take a bath?"

He crunched snow; then, after hesitating between a Commagene stew and pink blackbirds, he decided upon gourds with honey. The Asiatic stared at him, that faculty of absorbing food denoting a prodigious being of a superior race.



Bulls' kidneys were served, also dormice, nightingales, and minced-meat on vine leaves; and the priests disputed concerning the resurrection. Ammonius, pupil of Philo the Platonist, deemed them stupid, and said as much to Greeks who laughed at the oracles. Marcellus and Jacob had come together. The first described to the second the bliss he had felt during his baptism by Mithra, and Jacob urged him to follow Jesus. Wines made from the palm and the tamarisk, wines of Safed and of Byblos, flowed from amphorae into crateres, from crateres into drinking-cups, from drinking-cups down thirsty throats; there was much talk, and hearts overflowed. Jacim, although a Jew, did not conceal his adoration of the planets. A merchant of Aphaka stupefied the nomads by detailing the wonders of the Temple of Hierapolis: and they asked how much the pilgrimage would cost. Others clung to their native religion. A German, almost blind, sang a hymn in praise of that promontory of Scandinavia where the gods appeared with halos about their faces; and men from Sichem refused to eat turtle-doves from respect for the dove Azima.

Many talked, standing in the center of the hall, and the

THE ANGLO-CALIFORNIAN BANK
Established 1873
Capital Subscribed - - - $3,000,000
Paid In - - - - - - 1,500,000
Surplus and Undivided Profits - 1,500,000
Head Office, LONDON
San Francisco Branch, Cor. PINE AND SANSOME STREETS
City Sub Branches
MISSION AND SIXTEENTH STS. 1020 VAN NESS AVE.
A general banking business transacted. Accounts of corporations, firms and individuals solicited. Loans made on approved securities. Exchange bought and sold and letters of credit issued on all parts of the world.
IGNATZ STEINHART, Manager
J. FRIEDLANDER, Cashier F. E. BECK, Asst. Cashier

Golden State Limited
1908-09 Season Opened
December 15, 1909
No better or more direct service between San Francisco, Southern California and Chicago
Through the golden laden orange groves---by the wonderful Salton Sea---Mexican border scenes and the Rio Grande
Careful and attentive dining service Meals a la carte
Drawing-room Stateroom Sleeping Cars---staterooms, drawing-rooms, sections and berths. Observation, Parlor and Library Car equipped with latest literature and magazines. Gentlemen's Smoking Room. Ladies' Rest Room. Spacious Open-air Rotunda.
Southern Pacific--Rock Island Lines

vapor of their breaths, with the smoke of the candles, made a fog in the air. Phanuel passed along the wall. He had been studying the firmament anew, but he did not approach the Tetrarch, dreading the drops of oil, which, to the Essenes, were a great pollution.

Blows rang out against the gate of the castle.

It was known now that Iaokanann was held a prisoner there. Men with torches ascended the path; a black mass swarmed in the ravine; and they roared from time to time:

"Iaokanann! Iaokanann!"

"He disturbs everything!" said Jonathas.

"We shall have no money left if he continues!" added the Pharisees.

And recriminations arose:

"Protect us!"

"Let us make an end of him!"

"You abandon the religion!"

"Impious as the Herods!"

"Less so than you!" retorted Antipas. "It was my father who built your temple!"

Thereupon the Pharisees, the sons of the proscribed, the partisans of the Mattathiases, accused the Tetrarch of the crimes of his family.

Suddenly the panels of the golden tribune opened; and in the brilliant blaze of candles, between her slaves and festoons of anemone, Herodias appeared—on her head an Assyrian mitre held in place on her brow by a chinpiece; her hair fell in spiral curls over a scarlet peplum, slit along the sleeves. With two stone monsters, like those that guard the treasure of the Atrides, standing against the door, she resembled Cybele flanked by her lions; and from the balustrade above Antipas, she cried, patera in hand.

"Long life to Caesar!"

This homage was echoed by Vitellius, Antipas, and the priests.

But there came to them from the lower end of the hall a hum of surprise and admiration. A young girl had entered.

Beneath a bluish veil that concealed her breast and her head could be seen her arched eyebrows, the sards at her ears, the whiteness of her skin. A square of variegated silk covered her shoulders and was secured about her hips by a golden girdle. Her black drawers were embroidered with mandrakes, and she tapped the floor indolently with tiny slippers of hummingbirds' feathers.

When she reached the platform, she removed her veil. It was Herodias, as she was in her youth. Then she began to dance.

Her feet passed, one before the other, to the music of a flute and a pair of crotala. Her rounded arms seemed to beckon some one, who always fled. She pursued him, lighter than a butterfly, like an inquisitive Psyche, like a wandering soul, and seemed on the point of flying away.

The funereal notes of the gingras succeeded the crotala. Prostration had followed hope. Her attitudes signified sighs, and her whole person a languor so intense that one knew not whether she was weeping for a god or dying of joy in his embrace. Her eyes half closed, she writhed and swayed with billowy undulations of the stomach; her bosoms quivered, her face remained impassive, and her feet did not stop.

Vitellius compared her to Mnester the pantomimist. Aulus was vomiting again. The Tetrarch lost himself in a dream and thought no more of Herodias. He fancied that he saw her near the Sadducess. The vision faded away.

It was not a vision. She had sent messengers, far from Machaerus, to Salome her daughter, whom the Tetrarch loved; and it was an excellent scheme. She was sure of him now!

Then it was the frenzy of love that demanded to be satisfied. She danced like the priestesses of the Indies, like the Nubian girls of the Cataracts, like the Bacchantes of Lydia. She threw herself in all directions, like a flower beaten by the storm. The jewels in her ears leaped about, the silk on her back shone with a changing gleam; from her arms, from her feet, from her garments invisible sparks flashed and set men aflame. A harp sang; the multitude replied with loud applause. By stretching her legs apart, without bending her knees, she stooped so low that her chin touched the floor; and the nomads, accustomed to abstinence, the Roman soldiers, experts in debauchery, the miserly publicans, the old priests soured by disputes, all, distending their nostrils, quivered with desire.

Then she danced about Antipas's table, in a frenzy of excitement, like a witch's rhombus; and in a voice broken by sobs of lust he said: "Come! come!" She danced on; the dulcimers rang out as if they would burst; the crowd roared. But the Tetrarch shouted louder than them all: "Come! come! thou shalt have Capernaum! the plain of Tiberias! my citadels! half of my kingdom!"

She threw herself on her hands, heels in the air, and thus circled the platform like a huge scarab, then stopped abruptly.

Her neck and her vertebrae were at right angles. The colored skirts that enveloped her legs, falling over her shoulders like a rainbow, framed her face a cubit from the floor. Her lips were painted, her eyebrows intensely black, her eyes almost terrible, and drops of sweat on her forehead resembled steam on white marble.

She did not speak. They gazed at each other.

There was a snapping of fingers in the tribune. She went thither, reappeared, and, lisping a little, uttered these words with an infantine air:

"I want you to give me, on a charger, the head—" She had forgotten the name, but she continued with a smile: "The head of Iaokanann!"

BRITTON & REY
ESTABLISHED 1852

Everything from a visiting card to a twenty-four sheet poster

Copperplate engraving and printing, photo-engraving, steel die engraving and stamping, type printing, bookbinding, lithographing

Sales Office, 555 COMMERCIAL ST.
Factory, BAY NEAR POWELL

UNION LUMBER CO.

Redwood and Pine Lumber

Railroad Ties, Telegraph Poles,
Shingles, Split Shakes, Etc.

CROCKER BUILDING, SAN FRANCISCO

The Tetrarch sank back, overwhelmed.

He was bound by his word, and the people were waiting. But the death that had been predicted to him, should it befall another, might avert his own. If Iaokanann were really Elias, he could escape it; if he were not, the murder would be of no importance.

Mannaeus was at his side and understood his purpose.

Vitellius recalled him to give him the countersign of the sentinels guarding the moat.

It was a relief. In a moment all would be over.

But Mannaeus was hardly prompt in the execution of his functions.

He reappeared, but greatly perturbed.

For forty years he had filled the post of executioner. He it was who had drowned Aristobulus, strangled Alexander, burned Mattathias alive, beheaded Zosimus, Pappus, Josephus, and Antipater, and he dared not kill Iaokanann! His teeth chattered his whole body trembled.

He had seen in front of the hole the Great Angel of the Samaritans, all covered with eyes, and brandishing an enormous sword, red and jagged like a flame. Two soldiers brought forward as witnesses could confirm him.

They had seen nothing save a Jewish captain, who had rushed upon them and who had ceased to live.

The frantic rage of Herodias burst forth in a torrent of vulgar and murderous abuse. She broke her nails on the gilded grating of the tribune, and the two carved lions seemed to bite at her shoulders and to roar with her.

Antipas imitated her, so did the priests, the soldiers, the Pharisees, all demanding vengeance; and others indignant that their pleasure was delayed.

Mannaeus went forth, hiding his face.

The guests found the time of waiting even longer than before. They were bored.

Suddenly the sound of footsteps echoed in the corridors. The suspense became intolerable.

The head entered; and Mannaeus held it by the hair, at arm's length, proud of the applause.

When he had laid it on a charger, he offered it to Salome. She ran lightly up to the tribune; some moments later the head was brought back by the same old woman whom the Tetrarch had noticed that morning on the roof of a house, and later in Herodias's chamber.

He recoiled to avoid looking at it. Vitellius cast an indifferent glance upon it.

Mannaeus went down from the platform and exhibited it to the Roman captains, then to all those who were eating in that part of the hall.

They examined it.

The sharp blade of the instrument, cutting downward, had touched the jaw. The corners of the mouth were drawn aside convulsively. Blood, already clotted, studded the beard. The closed eyelids were of a leaden hue, like shells; and the candelabra all about shone upon it.

It reached the priests' table. A Pharisee turned it over curiously, and Mannaeus, having turned it back again, placed it in front of Aulus, who was awakened by it. Through their partly open lids the dead eyes and the lifeless eyes seemed to speak to each other.

Then Mannaeus presented it to Antipas. Tears flowed down the Tetrarch's cheeks.

The torches were extinguished. The guests took their leave, and Antipas alone remained in the hall, his hands pressed against his temples, still gazing at the severed head; while Phanuel, standing in the center of the great nave, muttered prayers with outstretched arms.

At the moment when the sun rose, two men, previously despatched by Iaokanann, returned with the long-awaited answer.

They confided it to Phanuel, who was enraptured by it.

Then he showed them the sorrowful object on the charger, amidst the remnants of the feast. One of the men said to him:

"Be comforted! He has gone down among the dead to announce the Christ's coming!"

The Essene understood now the words: "That He may grow great, I must needs shrink."

And all three, having taken the head of Iaokanann, went forth in the direction of Galilee.

As it was very heavy, they carried it each in turn.

German Savings and Loan Society

526 California Street, San Francisco

Guaranteed Capital	$1,200,000.00
Capital actually paid up in cash	$1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds	$1,453,983.62
Deposits June 30, 1908	$34,474,554.23
Total Assets	$37,055,263.31

Office Hours: 10 o'clock a. m. to 3 o'clock p. m., except Saturdays to 12 o'clock m. and Saturday evenings from 7 o'clock p. m. to 8 o'clock p. m. for receipt of deposits only.

OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohte; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourny; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Eells, Attorneys.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS—N. Ohlandt, Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohte, Ign. Steinhart, I. N. Walter, J. W. Van Bergen, F. Tillmann, Jr., E. T. Kruse and W. S. Goodfellow.

MISSION BRANCH, 2572 Mission Street, between 21st and 22nd Street. For receipt and payment of Deposits only.

TELEPHONE DOUGLAS 671

The Talk of the Town.....

WIELAND'S

EXTRA PALE

LAGER BEER

Is Better Than the Rest
It's Brewed of the Best

On Draught at all the First-class Cafes

Brewery's Own Bottling at all Dealers

Golden State Limited

1908-09 Season Opened
December 15, 1908

No better or more direct service between San Francisco, Southern California and Chicago

Through the golden laden orange groves---by the wonderful Salton Sea---Mexican border scenes and the Rio Grande

Careful and attentive dining service Meals a la carte

Drawing-room Stateroom Sleeping Cars---state-rooms, drawing-rooms, sections and berths. Observation, Parlor and Library Car equipped with latest literature and magazines. Gentlemen's Smoking Room. Ladies' Rest Room. Spacious Open-air Rotunda.

Southern Pacific--Rock Island Lines

PIERCE-ARROW

SIX-CYLINDER

Four Speed Selective Transmission Side Lever Control

36 H. P. SIX CYLINDER FIVE PASSENGER TOURING CAR

We Have to Offer

36 H. P., Six Cylinder Pierce Arrow Cars
48 H. P., Six Cylinder Pierce Arrow Cars
60 H. P., Six Cylinder Pierce Arrow Cars

The above cars can be equipped with Runabout (2 and 3 passenger), Tourabout (4 passenger), Brougham, Landaulet (5 passenger), Suburban, Landau and Open Tonneau (7 passenger) bodies.

MOBILE CARRIAGE CO.

DISTRIBUTORS

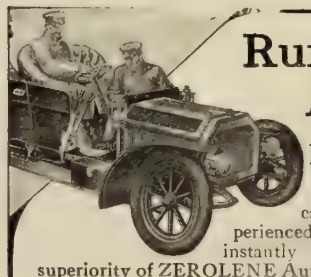
TELEPHONE FRANKLIN 1784

762-764 GOLDEN GATE AVENUE

Auto Notes

Mr. C. E. Mathewson, Pacific Coast manager of the Diamond Rubber Co., left for a short trip to the northwest Saturday for the purpose of installing another branch in that section with distributing depots in the larger cities. The enormous increase in their business in that section makes it imperative that the trade be given the same care that is accorded other branches of the Diamond Rubber Company.

With the idea of demonstrating the usefulness of the automobile many remarkable tests have taken place during the past year, and the latest exploit was to drive an Olds touring car so that the six states would be touched within twenty-four hours. The idea originated with Arthur Adams of Boston, and W. D. Smith and William Snyder did the trick in an Oldsmobile. The party of four motorists left Boston at 9:30 p. m. for Newburyport and then made for Portsmouth, N. H. Then the car was headed for Kittery, Me., and from this point the journey was continued to South Vernon Junction, Vermont. Having entered Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont, the car came back to Massachusetts once more via Worcester, and crossing the State entered Connecticut at East Thompson. The run was then continued to Blackstone, R. I., and it wound up in Boston. The entire distance of 352 miles was covered in 22 hours and 40 minutes. Mr. Smith said that in some places in Vermont and Western Massachusetts he found some very bad stretches of roadway. This is one of the most strenuous tests ever given a stock motor car, especially one driven by an amateur driver. The car at times on the route reached the fifty mile an hour clip, while at other places the low speed had to be used, for miles at a stretch.



Colonel Fenner has had a delivery wagon put into service at his garage in Los Angeles. He took a White Steamer Chassis, stripped it, and substituted a wagon body in place of the tonneau. As is the custom with all of Colonel Fenner's White Steam Cars, the new vehicle has been named; it is called "Maggie."

At the demonstration given Sunday afternoon a week ago by the local agents for the Studebaker E-M-F "30" car, one of the first 1909 popular priced machines to reach the local market, the car proved itself all that has been claimed for it by the Studebaker Bros.' Company of California. With John H. Eagal, manager of the automobile department of the firm referred to, at the wheel, every known test in the way of road demonstration was put to it, in each instance the car proved itself mechanically qualified to be awarded a place in the front ranks with the new '09 cars that will be seen in this State. One of the chief features of the new machine is the exceptional road clearance, the rear axle clearing the ground by 10¾ inches, while the fly wheel scores 13½ inches. One of the most satisfactory incidents of the afternoon's run was the manner in which the car climbed the steepest hills.

While recuperating from his recent severe attack of illness at Redding, Governor James N. Gillette has enjoyed many drives in the bracing air about that pretty little city situated under the shadows of Mt. Shasta. These health jaunts were made in the Buick "White Streak" of his attending physician, Dr. F. Stabel, and in company with the doctor and Ferdinand Hurst, a member of the Governor's staff and a resident of Redding.

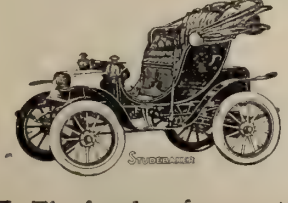
The "World's Work" in a recent issue had the following to say about the White Steamer in foreign trade: "The makers of a well-known American automobile may be taken as one example, chiefly for the reason that the French are credited with being the foreordained manufacturers and exporters of these vehicles. An American company which had met with great success in the manufacture of sewing-machines entered this field a few years ago, and its factory was given the task of producing a car that would win in competition with those made in Europe. One such test was made in England last year. Nearly fifty cars of American and European manufacture undertook to climb a certain hill under specific conditions—and an American car, the by-product of the sewing machine factory, showed the highest efficiency. The company has a branch office in London and claims England as one of its important markets, in spite of the proximity of Paris. Its triumphs in other parts of the world are equally significant. The traveler may find the automobiles of this company in Japan, where twenty-nine of them are used as passenger buses in the city of Osaka; in India, where another company operates ten on the bus line between Rawal Pindi and Muree; in Java, where the Dutch government uses them for carrying the mails, and in such widely scattered cities as Mexico, Melbourne and Johannesburg."

Many automobile owners who have declared their intention of taking part in the big New Year's Eve parade in which 1,500

Running A Car By Ear

The trained ear of the experienced automobilist instantly detects the superiority of ZEROLENE Auto Lubricating Oil in the even, contented "pur-r" of the engine that tells the story of perfect lubrication. No matter what the type of gasoline engine or season of the year, ZEROLENE invariably gives perfect lubrication under all conditions.

ZEROLENE



Auto Lubricating Oil

is produced in only one place in the world. It is non-carbonizing, and keeps cylinders and spark plugs in perfect condition. It is practically friction, carbon and trouble proof.

Absolutely free from all trace of acid.

ZEROLENE is put up in sealed cans with patent spout that cannot be refilled. Also put up in barrels for the garage trade. Sold by dealers everywhere.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY
(Incorporated)

Delightful Independence

¶ The freedom from restraint that a woman never experiences until she has driven her own electric car can be appreciated by only those who have enjoyed that pleasure. The Studebaker electric car is woman's ideal carriage. Its daintiness and luxury of appointment, its safety and simplicity appeal instantly to her refined tastes.

FREMONT AT MISSION — Studebaker — PHONE DOUGLAS 3000

ANNOUNCEMENT

1909

OLDSMOBILE

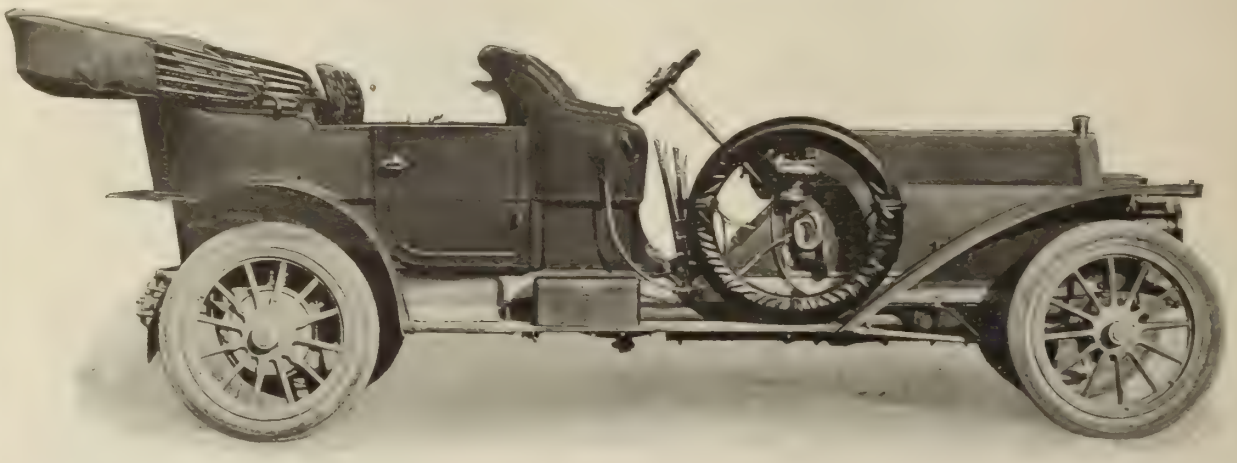
We beg to announce arrival
1909 Oldsmobile, December 15th

The following complete line of 1909 models will be on exhibition on the above date. Every one of these cars is representative of the factory that makes it:

Model X Special Runabout	$2000
Model D Palace Touring Car	2750
Model D Toy Tonneau	2750
Model DR Flying Roadster	2750
Model DR Detachable Tonneau	2750
Model Z Touring Car, 6-Cylinder	4200
Model Z Runabout, 6-Cylinder	4200

Besides Limousine and Landaulet Bodies.

The 1909 Oldsmobile contains all that has made the car famous in the past, together with the improvements in keeping with the largest and most extensive factory in the country. Recognized the world over for durability. Investigate.



PIONEER AUTOMOBILE CO.

524 Twentieth St., Oakland — 901 Golden Gate Ave., San Francisco

STEVENS-DURYEA

SIX-CYLINDER TOURING CAR

Model Y 40 Horsepower

SPECIFICATIONS

Passenger Capacity—Seven.

Motor—Six vertical cylinders 4¾ bore x 4½ stroke, cast in pairs, water jackets integral. Inlet and exhaust valves are located on the same side of the cylinder and are operated by one camshaft.

Ignition—Two independent systems; Bosch high tension magneto and multiple coil.

Control—By throttle and spark levers located on a sector on the steering wheel but not revolving with it; also foot accelerator on the throttle.

Clearance—Under front axle 12 inches. Under flywheel 12 inches. Under transmission case 16 inches. Under rear axle 10¼ inches.

Springs—Front, semi-elliptic, 36 inches. Rear, semi-elliptic, 48 inches. Rear, cross spring, 36½ inches.

Brakes—Two sets on each rear hub. The external set are contracting brakes, asbestos-to-metal, operated by foot lever. The internal set are expanding brakes, metal-to-metal, operated by an emergency lever. Both brakes are extra wide faced and of large diameter.

Wheel Base—142 inches.

Tires—Front 36 x 4, rear 36 x 5.

Cooling—Large cellular radiator. Centrifugal pump. The fan driven by wide belt from the flywheel.

Oiling—Direct connected force feed oiler, located under the hood lubricates the engine. The steering gear, cardan joint, and differential are packed in grease. The transmission gears run in oil and transmission bearings are oiled by splash.

Tank Capacity—21 gallons of gasoline, with auxiliary tank.

Clutch—Patented multiple-disc clutch, consisting of two sets steel discs, one set being faced with asbestos. No oil is used.

Gears—Three speeds forward, and reverse. Automatic position-finder for shifter.

Rear Axle—Floating type.

Front Axle—I beam section.

Weight—Car complete, 3400 pounds.

Finish—Standard, English purple lake body and black underbody. English purple lake chassis with carmine striping. Option: Brewster green body and chassis. Any special color will be furnished for $50 additional.

Body—Of rolled sheet aluminum, built upon a wood frame.

Bearings—Annular throughout, except engine which are Babbitt.

Equipment—Full Lamp, and Gas Tank.

Price—$4.000.

THREE POINT SUPPORT—UNIT POWER PLANT

PACIFIC MOTOR CAR COMPANY

376-380 GOLDEN GATE AVENUE

Manufactured by the STEVENS-DURYEA CO., Chicopee Falls, Mass.

Member Association Licensed Automobile Manufacturers

cars will participate, have endorsed the suggestions made by John H. Eagal of the Studebaker Company that the occupants and drivers of the different cars appear in costumes.

Dan Whitman has received the demonstrator of the Regal, a new car in this market for which he has been appointed. The car is a low-priced thirty horsepower machine, and is made in touring car, roadster and toy tonneau styles.

E. M. Hecht has returned from a tour in Europe, during which he covered 17,000 miles in his Packard.

The distinction of having driven the farthest over the most difficult roads to attend the recent Savannah races, belongs to R. D. Lambert. Mr. Lambert piloted his 30 horsepower White Steamer from New Orleans, a distance of 1150 miles. He was eight days on the road and almost all of the journey was through deep sand or over heavy clay roads.

What is probably the severest test to which an automobile has been subjected in California was the two years' service exacted from two two-cylinder Buick touring cars by the Aetna Springs Company on the auto stage-line between St. Helena and Aetna Springs, Napa County. Len D. Owen, manager of the Aetna Springs Company and his driver, Randolph Preston, drove both of these cars to this city last week. During the two sessions' service these cars were in daily use, except Sundays, and were overloaded with both passengers and baggage on almost every trip. The most remarkable features of the splendid showing made by these cars were their ability to negotiate the heavy grades, their constant reliability and last but not least the grand total mileage of 21,000 miles for each machine. In appreciation of the splendid showing made by the two-cylinder Buicks, Manager Owen has placed an order with the Howard Automobile Company for two four-cylinder, seven-passenger, fifty horsepower Buick touring cars of the '09 model which he will place in service on the St. Helena-Aetna Springs line for the season of 1909.

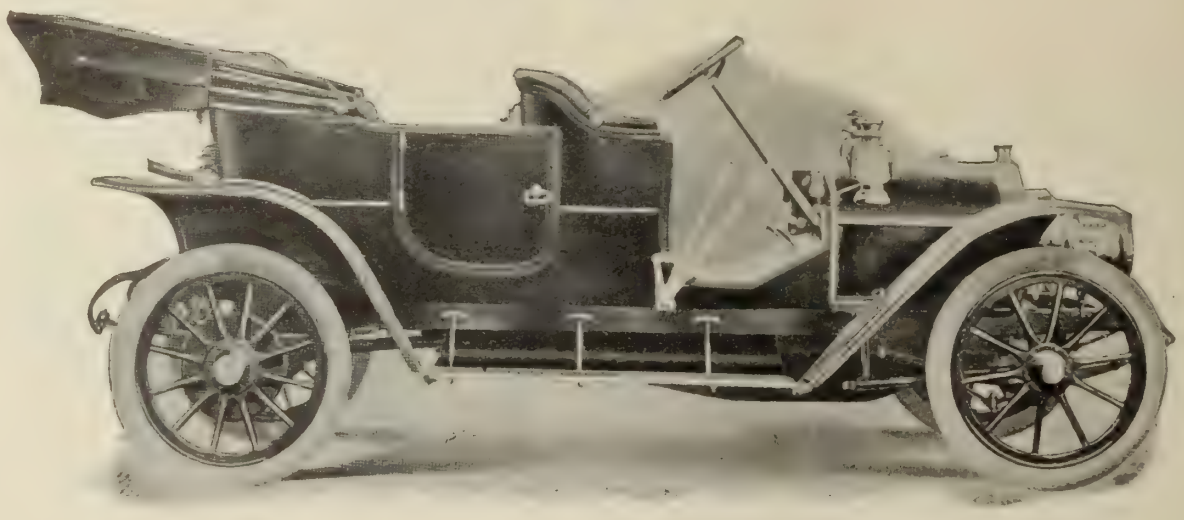
A. Hatt, Jr., left San Francisco for his home at Napa yesterday in his new 30 horsepower straight line body White Steamer. The recent convert to the automobile will use his car on trips through the mountains of Napa and Lake County. Mr. Hatt is proprietor of the Napa Transportation Company, and owns the various boats which ply between San Francisco and Napa. Before deciding upon the purchase of an automobile he had his engineers and experts on both steam and gas engines thoroughly investigate all of the cars in the local market. It was upon their recommendation that he purchased a White Steam car.

The first of the Cadillac "Thirty" cars to arrive, following Cuyler Lee's demonstrator, and some of them were delivered. Clarence Letcher of San Jose came up to the city to get his, which he will use as a demonstrator in the Garden City. The others were shipped to Watermann Bros. at Fresno and A. L. Salbach at Stockton.

C. E. Williams, a prominent motorist of Portland, arrived yesterday with his thirty-horse-power Chalmers-Detroit car, and will tour the State. The severity of the weather during the winter season in the northern State prevents motoring on any extensive scale, and a great many enthusiastic motorists of the web-foot State are expected to follow the example of Williams and immigrate to the land of sunshine and flowers with their cars.

GREAT GRAND-DAUGHTER OF GEN. VALLEJO AT WHEEL OF WHITE "PATHFINDER"

Indicative of the popularity enjoyed by the Studebaker automobile, and specially significant at the present time, is the following telegram which was received yesterday by the Studebaker Brothers' Company of California from the New York branch of the same institution: "Notwithstanding inclement weather, sales at this branch constantly increasing. Past two weeks sold forty-four cars." The local representatives say the



DR. A. J. MINAKER IN 1909 RAMBLER ROADSTER

Before You Buy Be Sure You

COMPARE THIS

1909 CHALMERS-DETROIT 1909

"30"

FOUR CYLINDER. PRICE, $1650, SAN FRANCISCO

With any car on the market regardless of price. Compare the Chalmers-Detroit part by part with any other car selling anywhere near the same price. Pick it to pieces and select your machine by the result.

NO EXCUSES NO APOLOGY NO PROMISES

You get a CHALMERS-DETROIT on the date you want it IMMEDIATE DELIVERY

$3180 to $6000

Also a complete line of 1909 Thomas Flyers on hand, including the famous old New York to Paris 4-60 type, the new demountable limousine body, and the sensational 6-40 touring car. Seventeen models. Ready for delivery.

Inspection cordially invited

PIONEER AUTOMOBILE COMPANY

901 GOLDEN GATE AVE., SAN FRANCISCO 524 TWENTIETH ST., OAKLAND

THE 1909 PALMER-SINGER TOURING CAR
Pacific Motor Car Co., Distributors.

dispatch indicates not only a healty demand for the Studebaker cars in the East, but likewise in the South, as the New York house controls that portion of the country.

In an interview on the advantages and results of advertising, E. P. Brinegar of the Pioneer Automobile Company said: "The method of selling automobiles is one of the most important questions of the motor business. Ever since the automobile industry was in its infancy, up to the last two years, the chief difficulty the manufacturers had to overcome was the equal distribution of their outputs to the country representatives. It was not a question of how to get rid of such a number of machines, but how much each agent could be allowed. With the rapid increase in the production of motor cars, however, the competition arising therefrom became close, and has continued until an automobile is now sold weeks and even months in advance of delivery. The people have become educated to motor cars principally by the publicity given in newspapers, and liberal advertising on the part of the factories. Advertising creates the interest among the possible purchasers of automobiles, and eventually brings results in the shape of inquiries for a car. An instance of the advantage of preliminary advertising is shown by the orders we placed for Chalmers-Detroit cars, principally from customers who had become familiar with that line of machines from reading advertisements. Another case of advertisement is shown by the Thomas Company, which has sold hundreds and is continuing to sell hundreds of Thomas cars all over the world, as a result of the victory in the New York-to-Paris race. Every newspaper in the country had pictures and advertisements of the car, and people placed their orders simply on the showing made by the car. I consider newspaper advertising one of the most important and successful methods of disposing of automobiles."

The 1909 Rambler demonstrators which have reached this city cause thought among the automobilists. They are a study to those who admire the consistency in detail. It would be impossible to find an automobile where the designer and constructor paid so much attention to the fine details as are apparent on the Rambler car. These refinements dovetail in so well that they produce a vehicle that is very popular.

Cuyler Lee has just delivered to Dr. Herbert C. Moffitt a thirty horsepower Packard touring car of the 1909 model.

Captain Pourie, stationed at the Presidio, is the latest army man who joined the ranks of motorists. Every day the Captain takes a spin about the reservation in his new White Steamer, and lately has gained enough confidence to go off alone out of town.

Packard — Cadillac

All That is Best in Motor Car Construction

PACKARD '09 TOURING CAR

CADILLAC "30" TOURING CAR

30 horsepower, four cylinder, 5 passenger, $1550.00

Cuyler Lee

453 GOLDEN GATE AVENUE SAN FRANCISCO

METROPOLIS TRUST & SAVINGS BANK

MARKET & NEW MONTGOMERY STS.

ON SAVINGS DEPOSITS we pay 4% INTEREST

BOXES $4 and up.

DUPLICATION OF KEYS IMPOSSIBLE. PARACENTRIC LOCK

Inspection Invited.

VAULTS ~ 'DIFFERENT FROM ANY YOU'VE SEEN'

SPECK, PASCHEL & CO.

REAL ESTATE AND INSURANCE

228 MONTGOMERY STREET, MILLS BUILDING

Insurance Placed in First-class Companies Money Loaned at Current Rates of Interest

OFFICES TO LEASE

BUTLER BUILDING
S. W. Cor. Geary and Stockton Sts., facing Union Square
WESTBANK BUILDING
Gore Corner Market, Ellis and Stockton Sts.

REPORT OF CONDITION

UNION TRUST COMPANY

OF SAN FRANCISCO

Banking Department

At the Close of Business, September 23, 1908

Not Including any Trust Funds

RESOURCES

Loans on Stocks and Bonds		$3,239,048.30
Loans on Real Estate		2,391,277.08
Investments in U. S. Bonds, Other Bonds and Stocks		3,256,018.98
Office Building and Safe Deposit Vaults		1,499,925.15
Money on hand	$ 868.893.10
Due From Banks in California	2,775,043.85
Due from other Banks and Bankers subject to Check	2,622,725.85
Total Available Cash		$6,266,662.80
		$16,652,932.31

LIABILITIES

Capital paid up		$1,192,000.00
Surplus and undivided Profits		1,368,437..18
Due on Current Accounts	$7,794,986.43
Due on Term Accounts	6,297,508.70
Total Deposits		$14,092,495.13
		$16,652,932.31

CHARLES J. DEERING, Cashier.

OFFICERS

ISAIAS W. HELLMAN, President
I. W. HELLMAN, Jr., Vice-President and Manager
CHARLES J. DEERING, Cashier and Secretary
H. VAN LUVEN, Asst. Cashier and Asst. Secretary

DIRECTORS

ISAIAS W. HELLMAN - - - - - President
Also Pres. Wells Fargo Nevada National Bank of S. F.
J. L. FLOOD - - - - - - - Capitalist
I. W. HELLMAN, Jr. - - - - Vice-President
Also V.-Pres. Wells Fargo Nevada National Bank of S. F.
JOHN D. SPRECKELS - Pres. J. D. Spreckels & Bros. Co.
TIMOTHY HOPKINS - - - - - - Capitalist
GEORGE A. POPE - - - - - - - Capitalist
CHARLES HOLBROOK, Pres. Holbrook, Merrill & Stetson
JACOB STERN - - - President Levi Strauss & Co.
WM. L. GERSTLE - Treasurer Northern Commercial Co.
A. H. PAYSON - President Spring Valley Water Co.
J. HENRY MEYER - - Ant. Borel & Co., Bankers
CHARLES G. LATHROP - - - - - Capitalist
E. S. HELLER - - - - - - Attorney-at-Law
CHARLES J. DEERING - - Cashier and Secretary
Union Trust Company of San Francisco

Acts as Executor, Administrator, Guardian, Trustee,, Assignee, Receiver, Agent, Attorney, etc., and executes trusts of every description.

Safe Deposit Vaults

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA, IN AND FOR THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO.
No. 3386. Department No. 10.

In the Matter of the Estate of REBECCA G. COHN, Deceased.

PAULA BICK STERN, Contestant,
vs.
HENRY HYMAN, et al, Defendants.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA to Henry Hyman, as Executor of the Will of said Decedent; to Theresa Rosenberg, Roeschen Schneider, Flora Brown, Kaskel Bick, Rosalie Bick, Jacob Bick, Meyer Bick, Estella Horn, Paula Stern, Flora Stern, Tina Abrams, Gussie Adler, A. L. Brown, Gracie Weiss, Hebrew Orphan Asylum of the City and County of San Francisco, California, Ladies' Relief Society of Marysville, Yuba County, California, Henry Hyman, Amy G. Hyman, Raymond Gabella Hyman, minor, Doris P. Hyman, minor, legatees and devisees named in said will; to Henry Hyman as Guardian of the persons and estates of said Raymond Gabella Hyman and Doris P. Hyman, minors; to John Doe and Richard Doe, as Administrators of the estate of or as Executors of the will of Rosie Rosenthal, deceased, a legatee and devisee named in said will, and an heir at law of said Rebecca G. Cohn, deceased, and to Harry Rosenthal, her husband and heir-at-law; to John Poe and Richard Coe, as Administrators of the estate of or as executors of the Will of Annie Solomon, deceased, a legatee and devisee named in said Will and an heir at law of said Rebecca G. Cohn, deceased, and to Adolph Solomon, Hildred Solomon, minor, Adolph Solomon, minor, Lesley Solomon, minor, Phylis Solomon, minor, and Louis Solomon, minor, heirs at law of said Annie Solomon, deceased, and to John Roe as Guardian of the persons and estates of said Hildred Solomon, Adolph Solomon, Lesley Solomon, Phylis Solomon and Louis Solomon, minors; to Flora Brown, Theresa Rosenberg, Roeschen Schneider, Meyer Bick, Paula Stern, Estella Horn, Flora Stern, Tina Abrams, Gussie Adler and A. L. Brown, the heirs at law of said Rebecca G. Cohn, deceased, residing in the State of California, GREETING:

Paula Bick Stern, an heir at law of Rebecca G. Cohn, the above named decedent having filed herein a Petition alleging that the instrument heretofore filed herein and admitted to probate as the will of said decedent was wrongfully procured and caused to be made by and through undue influence, menace and fraud, that said decedent was not of sound or disposing mind or memory at the time of the execution of said will, and praying the probate of said will be revoked and set aside;

You are hereby cited to be and appear in our Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, at the Court Room of Department Ten, Probate thereof, in said City and County of San Francisco, State of California, in the Grant Building, on the southeast corner of Market and Seventh Streets on Monday, the first day of February, 1909, at 10 o'clock A. M. of said day, then and there to show cause, if any you have, why the prayer of said Petitioner should not be granted, and why the probate of said Will should not be revoked.

By order of the said Superior Court at the City and County of San Francisco this 28th day of September, 1908.

Attest:
H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By E. B. GILSON, Deputy Clerk.

EDGAR C. LEVY AND GEORGE M. LIPMAN, 623-630 Pacific Bldg.
Attorneys for Petitioner.

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY SALE OF REAL ESTATE SHOULD NOT BE MADE.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO, STATE OF CALIFORNIA.

In the Matter of the Estate of MARTIN C. HOGAN, Deceased.

Edward C. Harrington, executor of the last Will and testament of Martin C. Hogan, deceased, having filed his petition herein praying for an order of sale of certain part of the real estate of said decedent, for the purpose thereon set forth:

It is therefore ordered by the Judge of said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said decedent appear before the said Superior Court, in the Grant Building, at the corner of 7th and Market Streets on Monday the 28th day of December, 1908, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said executor to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased, at private sale as shall be necessary, and that a cony of this order shall be published at least four successive weeks in Town Talk, a newspaper printed and published in said City and County.

Done in open court this 24th day of November, 1908.

THOS, F. GRAHAM, Judge.

J. C. QUINLAN, Attorney for Executor, First National Bank Bldg. 12-5-5

SUMMONS

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
In and for the City and County of San Francisco. Action No. 12782.

ERNESTINE KRELING and JAMES F. LEAHY, Plaintiffs,
vs.
All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Lien Upon the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants, Greetings.

You are hereby required to appear and answer the Complaint of Ernestine Kreling and James F. Leahy, Plaintiffs, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at the Southwesterly corner of Golden Gate Avenue and Steiner Street; running thence Westerly along the Southerly line of Golden Gate Avenue One Hundred and Thirty-seven (137) feet and Six (6) inches; thence at right angles Southerly One Hundred (100) feet; thence at right angles Easterly One Hundred and Thirty-seven (137) feet and Six (6) inches to the Westerly line of Steiner Street and thence at right angles Northerly along said line of Steiner Street One Hundred (100) feet to the point of commencement.

Being a portion of Western Addition Block Number Three Hundred and Eighty-one (381).

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiffs will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit, for a judgment of said Court as follows:

1st. Ascertaining and determining all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said real property and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, or whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description.

nd. Establishing the title of plaintiffs and of each of them to said real property and determining all adverse claims thereto, and adjudging that each of said plaintiffs is the owner in fee simple absolute of an undivided one-half of the said real property and every part thereof.

3rd. For such other and further relief as to the Court may seem proper, and for costs of suit.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 27th day of November, 1908.
(Seal)
H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By T. C. RYAN, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 12th day of December, A. D. 1908.

MEMORANDUM

The following persons are said to claim some interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiffs, to-wit:

French Savings Bank, a corporation, whose address is No. 108 Sutter Street, San Francisco, California.

CAMPBELL, METSON, DREW, OATMAN & MACKENZIE,
Attyns. for Plaintiffs, Balboa Bldg., 595 Market St., S. F. 12-12-10

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA, IN AND FOR THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO.
No. 3386. Department 10.

In the Matter of the Estate of REBECCA G. COHN, Deceased.

FLORA BROWN, Contestant,
vs.
HENRY HYMAN, et al, Defendants.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA to Henry Hyman, as Executor of the Will of said Decedent; to Theresa Rosenberg, Roeschen Schneider, Flora Brown, Kaskel Bick, Rosalie Bick, Jacob Bick, Meyer Bick, Estella Horn, Paula Stern, Flora Stern, Tina Abrams, Gussie Adler, A. L. Brown, Gracie Weiss, Hebrew Orphan Asylum of the City and County of San Francisco, California, Ladies' Relief Society of Marysville, Yuba County, California, Henry Hyman, Amy G. Hyman, Raymond Gabella Hyman, minor, Doris P. Hyman, minor, legatees and devisees named in said will; to Henry Hyman as Guardian of the persons and estates of said Raymond Gabella Hyman and Doris P. Hyman, minors; to John Doe and Richard Doe, as Administrators of the estate of or as Executors of the will of Rosie Rosenthal, deceased, a legatee and devisee named in said will, and an heir at law of said Rebecca G. Cohn, deceased, and to Harry Rosenthal, her husband and heir-at-law; to John Poe and Richard Coe, as Administrators of the estate of or as executors of the Will of Annie Solomon, deceased, a legatee and devisee named in said Will and an heir at law of said Rebecca G. Cohn, deceased, and to Adolph Solomon, Hildred Solomon, minor, Adolph Solomon, minor, Lesley Solomon, minor, Phylis Solomon, minor, and Louis Solomon, minor, heirs at law of said Annie Solomon, deceased, and to John Roe as Guardian of the persons and estates of said Hildred Solomon, Adolph Solomon, Lesley Solomon, Phylis Solomon and Louis Solomon, minors; to Flora Brown, Theresa Rosenberg, Roeschen Schneider, Meyer Bick, Paula Stern, Estella Horn, Flora Stern, Tina Abrams, Gussie Adler and A. L. Brown, the heirs at law of said Rebecca G. Cohn, deceased, residing in the State of California, GREETING:

Flora Brown, an heir at law of Rebecca G. Cohn, the above-named decedent having filed herein a Petition alleging that the instrument heretofore filed herein and admitted to probate as the will of said decedent was wrongfully procured and caused to be made by and through undue influence, menace and fraud, that said decedent was not of sound or disposing mind or memory at the time of the execution of said will, and praying the probate of said will be revoked and set aside;

You are hereby cited to be and appear in our Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, at the Court Room of Department Ten, Probate thereof, in said City and County of San Francisco, State of California, in the Grant Building, on the southeast corner of Market and Seventh Streets on Monday, the first day of February, 1909, at 10 o'clock A. M. of said day, then and there to show cause, if any you have, why the prayer of said Petitioner should not be granted, and why the probate of said Will should not be revoked.

By order of the said Superior Court at the City and County of San Francisco this 28th day of September, 1908.

Attest:
H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By E. B. GILSON, Deputy Clerk.

WM. M. MADDEN, Merchants Exchange Bldg., San Francisco, Cal.
Attorney for Petitioner.
KNIGHT & HEGGERTY, Of Counsel.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of Rodrigo Knell, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned executor of the will of Rodrigo Knell, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten (10) months after the first publication of this notice to the said executor at the office of Morrison, Cope & Brobeck, Rooms 701-6 of the Crocker Building, located at the intersection of Market, Post and Montgomery streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, which said office the undersigned selects as his place of business in all matters connected with said estate of Rodrigo Knell, deceased.

PHILIP KNELL.
Executor of the will of Rodrigo Knell, deceased.

Dated San Francisco, November 25th, 1908.

MORRISON, COPE & BROBECK, Attorneys for Executor,
Rooms 701-6 Crocker Building.

NOTICE

Pursuant to the written consent of the holders of more than two-thirds of the issued capital stock of California Cream and Butter Company (a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of the State of California), which consent has been duly filed in the office of said corporation in the City and County of San Francisco, said State, on the 3rd day of December, 1908, and pursuant to a resolution of the Board of Directors of said corporation, which resolution was duly passed at a meeting of said Board of Directors duly called and held at the said office of said corporation on the third day of December, 1908, at which meeting more than a quorum of the Directors of said corporation was present,

NOTICE is hereby given that the principal place of business of said corporation will, on the 2nd day of January, 1909, be changed and removed from the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to the City of Los Angeles, County of Los Angeles, in said State, at No. 401 East Fourth Street therein, after which date the principal place of business of said corporation will be said City of Los Angeles, County of Los Angeles at No. 401 East Fourth Street therein.

This notice is published by order of the Board of Directors of said California Cream and Butter Company.

Dated San Francisco, Cal., December 3, 1908.

F. V. NELSON,
Secretary of California Cream and Butter Company.

RACING

NEW CALIFORNIA JOCKEY CLUB

OAKLAND RACE TRACK

Six races each week day, rain or shine.
First Race at 1:40 p. m.

For special trains stopping at the track, take Southern Pacific Ferry, foot of Market street; leave at 12 M.; thereafter every twenty minutes until 1:40 P. M.

No smoking in the last two cars, which are reserved for ladies and their escorts.

PERCY W. TREAT, Sec'y. THOS. H. WILLIAMS, Pres.

TRUNKS AND SUIT CASES

KOESEL'S TRUNK FACTORY

41 ELLIS STREET, NEAR MARKET

GENERAL REPAIRING Phone Douglas 445

Louis Crepaux

(Member of Paris Grand Opera)

Has removed to his new studio,

Delbert Block, 943 Van Ness avenue, cor. O'Farrell.

Reception hours: 11:30 to 12, 3:30 to 5. except Wednesdays. Wednesdays in Oakland, 1154 Brush street.

Emil Steinegger

PIANOFORTE PLAYING

924 Grove St (above Fillmore), San Francisco.

For appointments phone Merritt 2845

Thursdays, 2701 Regent St., Berkeley

Mackenzie Gordon

TENOR

TEACHER OF SINGING { in all its branches, from the rudiments of tone formation to the highest finish and Completion of Public Singing.

Oratorio, Opera and Concert

By appointment only Phone Franklin 3594

Studio: 1350 FRANKLIN ST.

Louis H. Eaton

Organist and Director of the Music Trinity Church

Teacher of

PIANO, ORGAN, SINGING

1678 Broadway Phone Franklin 2244

Donald Maclean

SINGING—Pupil Seagle and De Rezske

Henri Etlin

PIANO—First Prize Paris Conservatoire

STUDIO, 1613 GREEN ST. Phone, Franklin 3153

Hother Wismer

VIOLINIST

Has resumed teaching

Studios—2945 FILLMORE ST., Tel. West 438; 820 FILLMORE STREET

Ensemble Instruction

Stiles Hall, Berkeley, Saturdays

Samuel M. Shortridge

ATTORNEY AT LAW

CHRONICLE BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO

Tel. Douglas 2176

Robert B. McMillan

ATTORNEY AT LAW

Has removed his Law Offices to the

CHRONICLE BUILDING, Fifth Floor

Phone Kearny 5969 Rooms 517-518

Knight & Heggerty

ATTORNEYS AT LAW and PROCTORS IN ADMIRALTY

MERCHANTS EXCHANGE BLDG., S. F.

Rooms 626 and 630

PORCHER & SEAGRAVE

HATS AND MEN'S FURNISHINGS

1244 MARKET ST., Bet. Larkin and City Hall Sq.

717 GOLDEN GATE AVENUE

PATRICK & CO.

RUBBER STAMPS

STENCILS, SEALS, SIGNS & ETC.

126 BUSH ST. SAN FRANCISCO

SUMMONS

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE STATE of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 19737. Dept. 10.

ELIZABETH J. ROBINSON, Plaintiff,

vs.

FREDERICK L. ROBINSON, Defendant.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Frederick L. Robinson, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County, or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's willful neglect of plaintiff on account of defendant's idleness, profligacy and dissipation, also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that unless you appear and answer as above required the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the Complaint, as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the Seal of the Superior Court of the State of California. in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 9th day of November, A. D. 1908.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By L. J. WELCH, Deputy Clerk.

ROBINSON & GETZ, Attorneys for Plaintiff,
45 Kearny Street, S. F. 11-21-10

SUMMONS.

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

GUSTAVE WEDELSTAEDT, Plaintiff

vs.

ELIZABETH WEDELSTAEDT, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Elizabeth Wedelstaedt, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above name plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed herein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's desertion and extreme cruelty; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the Complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 12th day of November, A. D. 1908.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By MILTON M. DAVIS, Deputy Clerk.

C. F. ADAMS, Attorney for Plaintiff,
378 Monadnock Bldg., S. F. 12-12-10

BONESTELL & CO.

PAPER

The paper used in printing this magazine is our Albion Book

California's Leading Paper House

116 to 124 FIRST ST. SAN FRANCISCO

Phone Kearny 1272

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of ALBERT JOHN SCHERZER, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Albert Scherzer and Ada C. Brown, Administrator and Administratrix, respectively, with the will annexed of the estate of Albert John Scherzer, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said Administrator and Administratrix with the will annexed at the office of Neal Power, room 204, No. 250 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned select as their place of business in all matters connected with said estate of Albert John Scherzer, deceased.

ALBERT SCHERZER,
ADA C. BROWN.

Administrator and Administratrix, respectively, with the will annexed, of the estate of Albert John Scherzer, deceased.

Dated San Francisco, December 16, 1908.

NEAL POWER, Attorney for Administrator,
250 Montgomery St., San Francisco.

SULLIVAN & SULLIVAN, and
THEO. J. ROCHE, Attorneys for Administratrix,
Humboldt Bank Bldg., San Francisco. 12-19-5

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of CHRISTIAN LUDWIG UMBACH, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Executrix of the last Will of Christian Ludwig Umbach, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within four (4) months after the first publication of this notice to the said Executrix at the law office of A. Comte, Jr., No. 333 Kearny Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned selects as her place of business in all matters connected with said estate of Christian Ludwig Umbach, deceased.

EMILY MARY UMBACH,

Executrix of the last Will of Christian Ludwig Umbach, Deceased.

Dated San Francisco, December 3, 1908.

A. COMTE, Jr., 333 Kearny St., San Francisco,
Attorney for Executrix. 12-12-5

MEN

Afflicted with any private ailment consult the United Physicians and Surgeons. Strictly reliable specialists in Genito-Urinary, Blood and Skin diseases, and all reflex ailments of men. Prompt, efficient services; fees moderate; consultation free and confidential. Write or call. Hours, 9 a. m. to 9 p. m. Sundays, 9 to 2.

A word to the wise is sufficient.

United Physicians and Surgeons

517 Twenty-third St., Oakland

Near Telegraph Avenue.

10 Third Street, San Francisco

Next to Call Building

California Optical Co.

Makers of Good Glasses

Down Town Now

CALIFORNIA OPTICAL CO. are now in their new store, 181 Post Street, near Grant Avenue. The Fillmore Street store is closed.

SCIENTIFIC OPTICIAN

MAYERLE'S EYE WATER, by mail 65c

Orders for Eye Glasses, Opera Glasses, Lorgnettes, sent by mail, $5, $10, $15.

DANGER SIGNALS

Painful, Sore, Red, Inflamed, Burning, Smarting, Itching, Scratching, Twitching, and Gluey Eyes, Heavy or Crusty Eyelids, Floating Spots, Cloudiness of Vision, Cross Eyes, Watery or Discharging Eyes, feeling like sand in the Eyes, Heavy and Crusty Eyelids are often Considered Dangerous Signals.

NEGLECTED EYESIGHT AFFECTS THE BRAIN

Mayerle's Glasses rest and strengthen the eyes and preserve the sight.

GEORGE MAYERLE

Granduate German Expert Optician, charter member American Association of Opticians and Vice-President Optical Specialist Association of America, 1149 Golden Gate Ave., between Webster and Buchanan sts. Phone Park 3153, San Francisco.

THE HIBERNIA SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY

Incorporated 1864

CORNER MARKET, McALLISTER AND JONES STREETS

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA

Deposits - - - - -	$50,379,393.65
Reserve Fund - - - -	3,497,687.37

JAMES R. KELLY, President

R. M. TOBIN, Sect'y and Treas.

TOBIN & TOBIN, Attorneys

Wells Fargo Nevada National Bank

OF SAN FRANCISCO

UNION TRUST BUILDING, No. 4 MONTGOMERY STREET

Capital Paid Up - - - -	$ 6,000,000.00
Surplus and Undivided Profits - -	4,785,996.41
Total - - -	$10,785,996.41

ISAIAS W. HELLMAN, President

I. W. HELLMAN, Jr., Vice-President

F. L. LIPMAN, Vice-President

FRANK B. KING, Cashier

GEORGE GRANT, Asst. Cashier

E. L. JACOBS, Asst. Cashier

W. McGAVIN, Asst. Cashier

Our New Home After April 1, 1909
San Francisco Gas and Electric Company
445 Sutter Street San Francisco

The Best Christmas Gift

this year is Good Digestion and Good Health. You can get both by eating the crisp, malted flakes of cooked wheat. It is King of all the flaked foods---easily digested, full of nutriment, delicious for breakfast with milk or cream.

"FORCE"

You have never tasted real corn flakes if you never ate the food that is all food. Made of the choicest white corn, steam-cooked, malted, flaked and toasted. Supplies the energy needed to begin the day's work. Crisp and delicious with milk or cream.

KORN-KINKS

THE ONLY MALTED CORN FLAKES

To get the full flavor and delicious crispness of "FORCE" and KORN-KINKS it is best to pour them into a pan or earthenware dish and warm in oven before serving; then serve in large dish with cream, piling the flakes in on one side of the dish and pouring the cream or milk in the other side, dipping the flakes as eaten.

Your Grocer Sells Them

Made by the H-O Mills, Buffalo, N. Y.
The Famous Mills That Make Good Things to Eat

Vol. XVII. No. 852. SAN FRANCISCO, JANUARY 2, 1909. PRICE, 10 CENTS

TOWN TALK

THE PACIFIC WEEKLY

IF YOU GET TIRED of ordinary cereals there's a lot of palate pleasure for you in a dish of crisp, dainty, delicious

KORN-KINKS

Also a lot of nourishment, for it contains all the nutritive material in white flint corn, cooked, malted, rolled into flakes and baked. It agrees with the most delicate stomach and has a flavor that pleases everybody. Makes the blood tingle with new life and energy.

THE ONLY MALTED CORN FLAKES

To get the full flavor and delicious crispness of KORN-KINKS it is best to pour them into a pan or earthenware dish and warm in oven before serving; then serve in large dish with cream, piling the flakes in on one side of the dish and pouring the cream or milk in on the other side, dipping the flakes as eaten.

Your Grocer Sells It

Made by the H-O Mills, Buffalo, N. Y.
The Famous Mills That Make Good Things to Eat

Leading Hotels and Resorts

HOTEL ST. FRANCIS
UNION SQUARE

The center of entertainment
in the city that entertains

Under the management of JAMES WOODS

FAIRMONT HOTEL

Wishes everybody a
Happy and Prosperous New Year

Management of PALACE HOTEL COMPANY

HOTEL DEL MONTE

Near quaint old Monterey---125 miles from
San Francisco.

Uniting all the pleasures of outdoor life under ideal conditions with the conveniences and luxuries of the best metropolitan hotels.

For rates, reservations, etc., address H. R. WARNER, Manager.

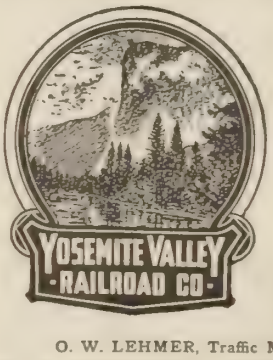
BYRON
HOT SPRINGS HOTEL

One of the world's most curative springs.

One of America's most comfortable and refined hostelries.

See Southern Pacific information bureau, ground floor James Flood Building or any Southern Pacific agent or Peck-Judah Co., 789 Market street, or address Manager at hotel.

HOTEL DEL CORONADO
CORONADO, CAL.



Coronado is essentially an Hotel of quiet elegance. It has the most equable climate of which any knowledge exists. Hotel Del Coronado has unique facilities for out-of-door recreation. Polo, golf, tennis, boating, fishing and motoring on good roads. Rates $4 per day upward. For special information apply to MORGAN ROSS, Manager, Coronado, or H. F. NORCROSS, representative, Los Angeles.

HOTEL CARLTON

Telegraph Avenue at Durant
BERKELEY

A FIRST-CLASS TRANSIENT AND FAMILY HOTEL

MRS. W. F. MORRIS, Proprietor
formerly of Hotel Cecil, 960 Bush Street, San Francisco

YOSEMITE VALLEY
OPEN ALL YEAR

Why not plan a Holiday Trip to California's Wonderland for yourself and friends.

It is a quick, comfortable trip; daily train service. And Yosemite at this time is no less attractive than in other seasons. First class hotel service at El Portal and in the valley. For through tickets, see Southern Pacific or Santa Fe, or address

O. W. LEHMER, Traffic Manager, Y. V. R. R., Merced, Cal.

Hotel Westminster

Los Angeles, Cal.
Fourth and Main Sts.

American Plan, Reopened

Rates per Day $2.50 Rooms without Bath

Rooms with Bath $3.00, $3.50 and $4.00

European Plan

$1.00 per day and up, with bath $1.50 and up

F. O. JOHNSON - - Proprietor

You will find SWAIN'S

Bakery and Restaurant on the line at

1241 VAN NESS AVENUE, Near Sutter Street

AFTERNOON TEA for Shoppers with Music from 3 to 5 o'clock
BROWNLOW, the baritone, sings every evening from 6 to 8 o'clock

LEVY'S CAFE

Third and Main Streets, Los Angeles, Cal.

Much the Best Place to Get Fine Things to Eat and Listen to Choice Music at Popular Prices.

TOWN TALK

THE PACIFIC WEEKLY

Vol. XVII. San Francisco, January 2, 1909. No. 853

SCENE FROM "BREWSTER'S MILLIONS"

To be produced at the Van Ness Theatre following "Ben Hur."

SCENE FROM "THE COLLEGE WIDOW"

Which is making such a hit at the Valencia Theatre.

TOWN TALK

Published Weekly by
TOWN TALK PUBLISHING COMPANY
Theodore F. Bonnet.....Editor
Ralph A. Grover.....Manager
88 First St., cor. Mission, San Francisco. Telephone Douglas 2612.

SUBSCRIPTION—One Year, in advance, $4.00; six months, $2.25; three months, $1.30; single copies, 10 cents. Foreign subscriptions (countries in Postal Union), $5.00 per year. For sale by all Newsdealers.

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter.

The Trade in San Francisco supplied direct by us. Outside of San Francisco by the San Francisco News Co.

For foreign and local advertising rates address 88 First Street, San Francisco.

We decline to return or to enter into correspondence as to rejected communications; and to this rule we can make no exception. Manuscripts not acknowledged within four weeks are rejected.

Judge Wright's Decision

From what we read in the newspapers it appears that Judge Wright excited great indignation by sentencing three illustrious labor leaders to jail for contempt of court. It appears too that Judge Wright's action was entirely unexpected. For though labor is represented to be very much down-trodden these days, as a matter of fact it excites so much awe and commands so much servility that it is almost incredible that there is sufficient backbone anywhere to exact from it the deference due to the institutions of the country. The arrogance of capital is bad enough, but it is not so pregnant with menace as the presumption of organized labor. It is easy enough to dissipate the arrogance of intrenched capital. This we have learned from history as well as from recent experience. Like all bullies capital is cowardly. Witness the terror of our pompous plutocracy which has been in a panic more than a year. Wall street has had the ague from fright; the harrimans have been on the run, and even the mighty, saturnine Rockefeller has dismounted from his high horse to conciliate the inflamed multitude. Meanwhile Labor has been as "chesty" as an imperial tyrant; now strutting like a titanic peacock, now striking an attitude of defiance and demanding the while that all interests be subordinated to those of the two million men banded together under the banner of unionism. For several years that proud, domineering autocrat of the unions, the Hon. Samuel Gompers, has commanded at Washington the services and the obedience of statesmen employed to represent all the people. We have seen the President himself serving as the mouthpiece and instrument of this despotic bully. From his headquarters in Washington Gompers has ordered the political death of Congressmen for refusing to vote for class measures; laws have been suspended at his behest; the highest officials in the land have been intimidated into acquiescence in projects designed by him to abridge the liberties of the millions of American workingmen who decline to submit to union dictation. No wonder that Judge Wright caused some astonishment when he decreed that the cloud-gatherer of the industrial Olympus, whose frown is fraught with consequences dire, should go to jail for merely presumsuming to render negligible the order of a court of inferior jurisdiction!

The Coddling of Labor

According to the volcanic and vociferous orators of organized labor Judge Wright's decision is in restraint of certain inalienable liberties guaranteed by the Constitution. These learned patriots who invoke or damn the Constitution with equal facility evidently are laboring under the delusion that civil liberty means the power of self determination and unrestrainedness of action, whereas it means protection or checks against undue interference whether this be from individuals, from masses, or from government. The philosophers of organized labor lose sight of the fact that what is guarantee for one individual is check to another; and apparently it suits their purpose to ignore the axiom of political science that there can be no individual liberty where every citizen is not subject to the law. In this connection it is interesting and instructive to recall that the unanimous decision of the Supreme Court of the United States rendered in the Danbury Hatters case showed that in that tribunal of many dissents no difference of opinion existed as to the clear application of the Sherman anti-trust law to the boycotts which were admittedly maintained by the American Federation of Labor from time to time against the interstate trade of hundreds of manufacturers. This is interesting and instructive to recall because when that decision was rendered it became the duty of the President to proceed against the American Federation of Labor as he had proceeded against certain trusts that had violated the Sherman law. But the election was approaching, and the truculent Mr. Roosevelt who hates malefactors of great wealth with the same fervor with which he cultivates the friendship of organized labor, cautiously refrained from setting the machinery of the law in motion. Yet Mr. Roosevelt in his annual message of 1903 said: "Whenever either corporation, labor union or individual disregards the law or acts in a spirit of arbitrary and tyrannous interference with the rights of others, whether corporations or individuals, then where the Federal Government has jurisdiction it will see to it that the misconduct is stopped, paying not the slightest heed to the position or power of the corporation, the union or the individual, but only to one vital fact—that is, the question whether or not the conduct of the individual or aggregate of individuals is in accordance with the law of the land." Thus did the Big Talk at Washington expound certain admirable principles. Thus did the Prince of Politicians launch his thunderbolts. But mark what happened when in the Danbury Hatters case (which is on all fours with the Buck's Stove and Range Company's case), it became a matter of undisputed fact and law that since its formation the American Federation of Labor has had as the principal reason of its existence the maintenance of the boycott, and had imposed an embargo upon interstate commerce and had coerced employers into a surrender of their liberty and employees into joining the union. The President suspended the law and advised that it be amended. Yet the labor leaders vociferate about oppression and about liberty; and the demagogues of the press inveigh against a Government that discriminates in favor of capital!

The Demagogues of Journalism

If Judge Wright's decision was unexpected, not so the mob-coddling attitude of the demagogue press. The Cleons of journalism know their Demos. They have been very busy of late stirring up dissatisfaction with the courts, and naturally they seized with enthusiasm the opportunity of affecting the belief that Gompers, Mitchell and Morrison had received very harsh treatment. Incidentally they did not scruple at conniving at the propagation of the impression that to punish the labor leaders Judge Wright entirely ignored the principle of the freedom of the press. Judge Wright of course did nothing of the kind. Gompers, Morrison and Mitchell deliberately employed the press for the express purpose of violating an injunction. To be sure they assumed that the injunction was void in so far as it infringed upon the freedom of the press, but it is a very grave mistake to assume that the principle of the freedom of the press implies that no punishment can legally be imposed on newspapers. Civil liberty is but a phrase if does not compel respect for all the reasonable rights and privileges of man; and whenever the press curtails or extinguishes those rights and privileges it frustrates the primary purpose of the Constitution of a free people, and in its own licentiousness it becomes a despotism. But as a matter of fact Judge Wright did not find the labor leaders guilty of contempt merely for what they printed. As he was careful to explain their conduct as publishers was but incidental to the whole plan of action by which they defeated the purpose of the injunction. In respect of these matters, which are well understood by all intelligent men, it is hardly likely that any delusion exists among the demagogues of journalism. But they have found it profitable to appeal to the ignorance of the mob, for thus they extend their circulation, and when they do not purposely employ sophistry to mislead, their specious arguments may with a fair degree of certainty be attributed to a state of mind developed insensibly through zealous perseverance in the charlatanical art.

Urging Mob Rule

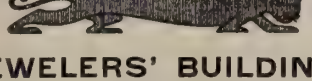
The persistency of the press in its demagogic course ought to be inspiring to speculative minds; and doubtless it is to those melancholy pessimists that read in the signs of the times the gradual disintegration of our government. In this very indignation excited by Judge Wright's action in sentencing the labor leaders to jail we see the effect of agitation designed to persuade the multitude that the courts should be rendered more directly amenable to public opinion. To give point to their arguments the agitators have descanted on the indifference of the courts to the rights of the weak and the advantages enjoyed by wealth in the tribunals of justice. There has been so much said on this subject that the dissatisfied and the disgruntled, who are more accurately classified as the multitudinous unsuccessful, have come to believe that all the courts are controlled by the predatory rich. Along with this belief has come the notion propagated by political peddlers of catholicons that our system of government is in need of improvement, and that millennial perfection is to be attained by putting the people in closer touch with the machinery of government. This theory is entirely grounded in the most familiar of all fallacies pertaining to the science of government: that there are but two principles between which civilized men have to choose—Divine Right and Democratic Might. Both principles were fabricated by despots. They are false in logic, unhallowed in practice and ruinous in development. The founders of this Republic believed that to establish a democracy on a solid basis the people and the government must be united in one living organism by a widely ramified system of institutions instinct with self-government. They knew that power was not liberty; that because it is power it requires limitation; that wherever liberty was believed to consist in the unlimited power of the people the inevitable result was neither more nor less than the absolutism of the majority and the speedy decay of the nation. It has been said that the great danger of self-government is that the people may come to forget the principle of being governed and remember only that they are governing. When this takes place popular absolutism begins and the end is always near. Obviously we have reached the point where we are being urged to devote most of our attention to governing. We are thinking of destroying our representative form of government by getting so close to our legislature that it will have no freedom of judgment, and so close to our courts that they will heed our passions in preference to law and reason. It was but the other day that a local journal suggested the advisability of applying the principle of the Recall to our courts, the argument being of course that the judgment of the people should prevail in all matters irrespective of the principles of any governmental institution. This has always been the philosophy of the demagogue whose maxim ever has been, Vox Populi Vox Dei. Which reminds us of the words of a great American philosopher: "Woe to the country in which political hypocrisy first calls the people almighty, then teaches that the voice of the people is divine, then pretends to take a mere clamor for the true voice of the people, and lastly gets up the desired clamor." To be apprehensive of destructive innovations on our system of government is not to be considered without justification when we find that throughout the country the people are being told that they are almighty and that the only way to correct the abuses that have resulted from the corruption sown by men of prodigious wealth is to substitute the voice of the multitude for the principles of Republican institutions. If we are not coming to popular absolutism it is not because at this moment the people apprehend its inevitable consequences. The direct primary is in favor and the principle of it is being urged for all purposes. It is believed to be the only principle by which we can crush the power of corrupt political bosses and compel our servants to be honest. The evil of it is its plausibility. The effect of its universal application cannot be doubted by anybody who has studied the science of government and the history of nations that are no more.

Good Resolutions

The first week of the new year is a time-honored period of good resolutions. A place that shall be nameless is paved with them annually. The lamentable circumstance that the same resolutions are renewed by the same persons at the beginning of each year is not an argument in favor of the discontinuance of the ancient custom. A good resolution is never wasted even if it is only passed to print and eventually laid on the table. A good resolution is always an earnest of a virtuous intention, and virtue is invariably its own reward, except in those rare instances when the Carnegie committee in charge of the Carnegie hero medal fund rewards virtue conspicuously advertised in the newspapers.

The Best Resolution

With this generalization upon a subject with which we are all more or less familiar, let us now consider a specific resolution that ought to be adopted by every citizen of



The Hub
CHAS. KEILUS & CO
EXCLUSIVE
HIGH GRADE CLOTHIERS

No Branch Stores—No Agents.

"MY TAILOR" MUST ABDICATE. HE'S BEEN IN A LONG TRANCE. WHEN HE WAKES AND NOTICES THE COLD, COLD NAKED TRUTH THAT HE HAS BEEN KNOCKED OUT. OUR PATTERNS ARE NEWER; OUR FABRICS ARE THE BEST; OUR FASHIONS ARE BETTER, AND OUR PRICES—WELL! WELL! JUST HYPNOTIZE "MY TAILOR."

The Hub
We Protect Chas Keilus & Co. Qualities.
San Francisco.

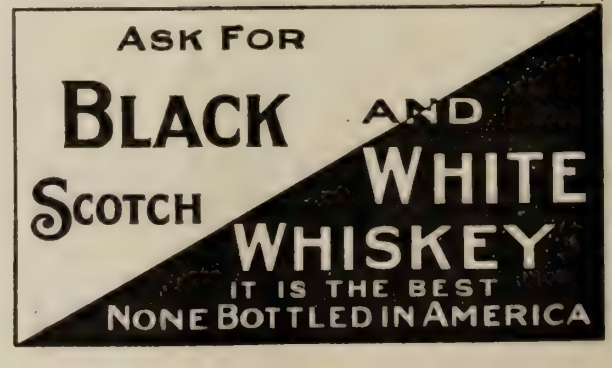
This ready-made clothes industry today is one of the country's largest enterprises. Today nobody that is well posted would think of having a pair of shoes, a shirt, underwear or hat made to measure. The art of fitting by capable designers has advanced the standard of ready clothes. Our clothes have converted men who used to have their clothes made to order. Ask "my tailor!" and they are more than satisfied.

JEWELERS' BUILDING
Post Street, Near Kearny, San Francisco.

San Francisco. Suppose that each of us resolves to mind his own business hereafter. Let each citizen of San Francisco look back upon the history of this city as it has been written from day to day during the year 1908—what does he read? Everybody's business has been the business of everybody else. And what has been the consequence? A condition almost bordering on a state of anarchy. A lot of people have been interfering with the business of their neighbors, instructing them how they should act, how they should conduct their private affairs, how they should behave in the presence of each other, how they should utter their thoughts in relation to the morals of the town. Even private opinion has been under surveillance, espionage and censorship by self-constituted courts of inquiry and individual snoops. Let us resolve that there shall be no more of this. Let each citizen resolve that he will attend strictly to his own business and let that of his neighbor alone. We are living under what is known as an institutional form of government. Our institutions do not render us entirely free from the ills that flesh is heir to, but it is safer and more consistent with the principles of morality to be governed under them than to be subject to the whims and prejudices of even the wisest and best of men. We should all strive to strengthen those institutions. When we disregard the sanctity of them, as we do when we attempt to do that which we deem to be expedient rather than that which the law prescribes we are guilty of a great crime. It would be well for us to be more tolerant of one another. Intolerance bespeaks ignorance and breeds evil. Why should our self-righteous neighbor seek to coerce the rest of us into believing as he believes. It is possible that our meddlesome neighbor may be wrong in his own opinion; and it is also possible that we may be right in our opinion. What do we gain by trying to force our neighbor to believe as we do? In some instances we gain the contempt of our neighbor. This contempt may not always be expressed, because we may fear that such expression would injure our legitimate business by depriving us of our neighbor's trade. In business the pocket is the depository of all our emotions. It is exceedingly sensitive to threat and menace. If the businessmen of San Francisco were bullied in the matter of their political and religious views as they have been bullied in regard to their opinions on the civic morality of their fellow citizens, there would be such an uproar that the bullies would be glad to get back into the obscurity from which they had emerged—back to their law practice, back to their counting rooms, back to their inherited wealth, back to their over charged office tenantry, back to their ordinary business—their vocation in life, where they belong. If everybody had attended to his own business last year without regard to the business or opinion of his neighbor this city would have been more prosperous and more moral than it is. If everybody will resolve in the beginning of this new year that he will mind his own business during the year, San Francisco will, at the end of the year record the most prosperous year in her history. Therefore let us all so resolve in this first week of 1909. It is business prosperity that we need first; that achieved the morality of the community will take care of itself without assistance from the self-righteous, the censors or the snoops.

The British Female Boor

Old time text books on rhetoric used to devote a chapter to the exemplification of the differences between wit and humor. A more imperative need today is some means of infusing into the average intellect a knowledge of the difference between either wit or humor and sheer, downright insolence. In Lady Aberdeen's mind there is evidently much confusion on this subject. The lady herself appears to have some wit, which is but a varnish on the mind, an exterior polish that can never compensate for a lack of humor. Lady Aberdeen has no humor, but with insolence and bad manners she is well supplied. This aristocrat recently spent six weeks in New York gathering material for a novel designed "to show up American women so that they may see themselves as other do and see just how funny they are." If she succeed half so well in showing up Americans as she has in her own unconscious self-revelations, she will score a brilliant success. She spent much of her time making ill-natured criticisms on the appearance and dress of her fellow passengers in the street cars and of whipping out her pencil and tablets to caricature them openly. She complains of the annoying things she found to put up with during her stay, but apparently it has not occurred to her that she may have been a serious annoyance to others, whose better breeding, even if it is not "aristocratic" and does not date back to the eleventh century, deterred them from impertinences. If American women were too stout, "Your men lack, what shall I say? Backbone; yes, that's it. They are too namby-namby. Our men are fine specimens of manly men. Well, I guess that comes from fighting, don't you think so? If the New York men had more fighting ancestors back of them, who had really distinguished themselves in war as ours have done, well, it would give them more real character and manliness." There was scarcely a topic which this agreeable lady did not treat in the same refined and restrained manner. She complained that Americans talked too much, "while we English think a lot and do little talking." Doubtless she will succeed in making an interesting book of her Six Weeks in New York. Mrs. Trollope did the same sort of thing long, long ago, and her son, the distinguished novelist, afterward admitted that his mother's views were colored by the failure of her expectations of reaping a fortune in a commercial enterprise. The Americans proved to be less gullible than she hoped and she recouped herself by her vitriolic pen. If they will display the same prudence with regard to Lady Aberdeen and restrain their curiosity to see how they appeared to her and how she hopes to make them appear to themselves, they will effectively rebuke her insolence.



HOTEL VICTORIA

N. E. cor. Bush and Stockton

CENTRALLY LOCATED .·. A MODERN AND UP-TO-DATE FAMILY HOTEL

Sun in every room. Elaborate furnishings. Excellent cuisine. Large lobby and reception room. Grill room. Dining room.

American and European Plan.

The Dark Horse in the Wilderness

I lay my face on barren sands;
The thirsty sands drink up my tears,
My tribute to the desert lands
Where I have wandered years and years!

Insatiate sands, the whole world's flood
Of tears but leaves you thirsting still.
O could you drink of my life's blood
Your heart and mine had had their will.

Love holds the trembling mortal heart
Within the shelter of his hands,
And will not let its Dream depart
For all the drought of desert lands.

—Althea Gyles.

Perspective Impressions

Wounded vanity is not to be dressed by a surgeon.

It may be better to be sad than unrighteous, but it is not more agreeable.

In time San Francisco will have an aristocracy tracing itself back to the great fire.

San Francisco must and will do more than sympathize with the earthquake sufferers of Italy.

The old Globe is off again on her annual trial, and the pilot will have his hands full to keep the craft bottom side down.

The experience of Philander Chase Knox proves that the divinity that shapes our ends is not to be prejudiced by a name.

Mark Twain has incorporated his pen name in the hope that his heirs may be able to profit from his works after the copyright expires. But Mark seems destined to survive his heirs.

Mr. Roosevent says he may catch some wild animals in Africa. Setting traps is one of his favorite pastimes.

Nine-tenths of the fussiveness of reformers is nothing but the gratification of the itch to be doing of people who have nothing to do.

The New York World says that the testimony drawn out at the trial of the night riders shows that conditions existed which "illustrate vividly the danger to society of the law-twisting and law-evading oppression of the unscrupulous strong and the lawless reprisal of the revengeful weak." This is vague but it is worth keeping in mind. Night riders are not the only law-twisters in the country.

Mr. J. C. Martin of Dayton, O., says that Mr. Roosevelt altered his letter to the President by inserting the word "unitarian" as synonymous with "infidel," and then used the altered document as a text on toleration. Of course Mr. Martin may properly be described by a short and ugly word which has become the most popular in the language.

COMPLIMENTS OF THE SEASON.
—Chicago Tribune.

PEACE.
—New York World.

Fioraccio

(This short story is a translation from the Italian of Giovanni Magherini Graziani, whose most important work, a life of Michael Angelo, was published in 1871. He published several small volumes of tales and essays. He held high rank among the literary men of his day in Italy. "Fioraccio" is one of the masterpieces of the literature of the supernatural.—Editor's Note)

They called him Fioraccio, but his real name was Antonio. He kept an inn by the bridge. Behind the inn he kept a "fence." He was a receiver of stolen goods. The police had him under suspicion, but they never could catch him. Fioraccio was bald, and he never wore a hat. He had yellow eyes like a cat's. He wore a sneer on his face, and when he talked he whistled because he had lost his teeth. He sat all day in front of his inn and said spiteful things about everybody that passed by. He scoffed at religion, and if the holy sacrament passed by his door he didn't even take his pipe out of his mouth, but smoked faster than ever to show his disrespect. He had no use for the Madonna or the saints; and if the priest asked him as he was blessing the houses:

"Fioraccio, do you want the holy water?"

"I can give it myself," he would answer.

Hardly was his old father in his grave when he cleared all the pictures and crosses out of the house; and when the old woman who swept out his rooms asked him if he wasn't afraid of the judgment, he answered:

"I don't want my wall covered with rubbish."

If he'd been content with being wicked himself! But he was always making mischief, and putting other people up to evil doings. He didn't even respect innocence, and taught little boys to lie and steal.

And so he lived for many years; but at last his time came, like other people's. He began to look very old, and to get up late, and go to bed early. The shop would be open every other day; then open two days and shut three days. He grew to be a perfect skeleton, all skin and bones, and the scaldino was never out of his hands. Everybody said, "Ah! Fioraccio isn't long for this world." And he wasn't. At last he took to his bed; but instead of repenting and changing for the better, he went on worse and worse. He blasphemed like a fiend. The worse he was the worse he swore. At last the old woman, who was the only creature that went near him, told him that if he didn't stop swearing she wouldn't come any more.

"Why not?" asked Fioraccio.

"Because I'm afraid that some day the devil will come and carry us both off," said the old woman.

"Oh, the devil! and the devil! If there was one really, he'd have made me a visit long ago," said he.

The priest, when he heard how ill Fioraccio was, said to himself, "I must go to him; there's no help for it!"

And he went; but they say he made a fast that day, though it wasn't in the calendar. He knocked, and went upstairs. When Fioraccio recognized the priest's voice, he said, "What does that fellow want with me? I won't see him."

"How? you won't see him!" said the old woman. "It seems to me it is only polite of him to make you a visit."

"Oh yes, I dare say, but I don't care for such politeness; priests are like owls, birds of ill omen. And—"

But the old woman had opened the door by this time, and beckoned to the priest to come in.

The priest entered the room.

"But I told you not to come in," howled Fioraccio.

"Good-morning, Antonio."

Fioraccio only growled.

"I heard you were ill, and—"

"It was something that they didn't say I was dead."

"And I thought I would come and see you." So he began to talk; but as soon as he tried to bring the talk round to the point he desired, Fioraccio always changed the subject. At last the priest grew desperate, and laying his hand on Fioraccio's shoulder:

"Fiore," he said, "you mustn't be angry if I speak seriously to you. You know that we haven't only the body to look after—"

"I know what you mean; but when I want to confess I'll send for you."

"But, of course, whenever you choose—"

"Pray don't trouble yourself—"

But the priest wouldn't be content without preaching a little; so he began to talk of repentance, and restitution, and such things, you know. When Fioraccio heard the word "restitution" he flew into a rage, and called out:

"Did I ever rob you of anything?"

"I don't mean that; I mean—"

"Now, listen, Mr. Rector. You and I do very well as long as we are apart, but if we meet we disagree. So, if we're to have peace, you'd better not come here any more. Do you hear?" And he turned his back, and not another word would he say.

"How goes it?" asked the old woman.

"He won't hear of it. If those above don't take it up, I don't see what is to be done. Tomorrow I'll come, at all events," said the priest.

"The Lord and Our Blessed Lady grant it." But before the next day Fioraccio suddenly grew worse, and before the priest could get to him he was dead.

This happened in 1837, and there are plenty of people living now that remember the whole story, and can tell it to you better than I can. Scarcely was he dead when he turned black all over, so that it was a horror to look at him. They rang the bell, carried him to church, and then into the church-yard, where they buried him.

The next morning, before day (it was hardly four o'clock), the priest was in bed, when he heard a knock at the door, and asked who was there, thinking some sick person wanted him.

"It's Cecco," said the servant.

"What Cecco?"

"Cecco from ———" (Fioraccio's place).

"What, in Heaven's name, does he want at this hour?"

"Wants to see your reverence."

"Send him in; let's see what it is."

Cecco appeared at the door, hat in hand.

"What's the matter now?"

"Something you'll hardly believe. Didn't your reverence bury Fioraccio yesterday?"

"Of course I did. What about it?"

"He's got up again."

"What?"

"He's got up again."

"Impossible!"

"It's the case, all the same. I was passing by on my way to work in the field. When I was passing the burial-ground I turned around to look in, and there, just where we buried him, I saw something white. I thought I must be dreaming, and as by chance I had the key in my pocket, I went in to look. It was he—Lord keep us from lies!—but I turned short round, and came away without looking back."

"So you came here and waked me."

"Who else was I to come to? The strange thing is that the earth looks as if it hadn't been touched."

"Some one must have done it to play you a trick. You're sure the gate was locked?"

"Locked and bolted. And he wasn't very pleasant to go near, either."

(Continued on Page 29.)

J. C. WILSON

BROKER

Private Wire, Chicago and New York
Member New York Stock Exchange, Chicago Board of Trade and Stock and Bond Exchange, San Francisco
LOCAL AND EASTERN STOCKS AND BONDS
Main Office, Mills Bldg. Tel. Kmy. 482. Branch Office, Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles.

A Clay-Footed Idol

Methods and Practices of the Autocrat of all the Americas Compared Cursorily With Similar Devices Employed by the Senate-Strangling, Liberty-Choking Tyrants of Rome Under the Caesars; with a Brief Allusion to Mr. Roosevelt's Unhappy Scrimmage with the Newspapermen.

By Democritus

The King is dead; long live the king. (Mark the capitalization of the dead King.) Roosevelt goes; Taft is at the open door. Exit the Big Noise; enter the Broad Grin. Hail and Farewell! A bas le Teddy; salut le Bill.

With Caesar goes all his impedimenta—the Big Stick; the Brotherless Spear; the Flatulent Message; the Short and Ugly Word; the Fatherly Advice and the Motherly Counsel; the Bluster of Bombastes, the Brag and Bluff of Bobadil, and the Petulant Pop of Ancient Pistol. So passes the prophet of the Utterly Absurd; so vanishes the Patently Impossible and Vain.

It is not a President that steps down from the seat of the mighty; it is just Roosevelt. English alienists say he is mad. Not so; but we are. The reign of Theodore I (may his tribe decrease) is ending not an hour too soon. And we now realize what a narrow escape we have had—for he might have been elected to a third term. But the gods were kindly—and the Big Gun exploded prematurely; his grand stand play of putting aside the proffered crown was an impulse of vanity to be atoned with the penance of life long regret; to be retrieved, if possible, four years hence by another nomination and election. Not mad in the sense that the English alienists describe; but afflicted with an ego-mania that is nearer akin to madness than is genius.

It is curious that Theodore Roosevelt should have begun his career in politics by stepping softly in gumshoes, and that he wears the same shoes as he goes roaring down the front steps of the White House. How many students of American history remember that it was Theodore Roosevelt, Police Commissioner of the city of New York, who gumshoed the red light district to spy personally on the patrolmen suspected of taking bribes from fallen women and after midnight drinks at the back doors of saloons? Yet it must now be palpable to the uninformed and the incredulous that a Big Policeman has been occupying the office of President of the United States for more than seven years. The assumption is not figurative, for Congress has accused Theodore Roosevelt of using the secret service of the national government as a Chief of Police or a Police Commissioner would use the Gumshoe Department of a city government. It is related that the President of the United States, when called upon to produce proof of the necessity of employing the secret service men in business connected with the Executive Department, called into consultation one of the detectives so employed to assist him in framing a message of explanation to be sent to the greatest deliberate body in the world! A detective at the elbow of the President of the United States while that exalted personage was in the act of writing a State paper! Napoleon may have consulted Fouche; but Napoleon was a despot duly accepted by the people of France, and Fouche was more than a mere Minister of Police—he had served as ambassador to the Cisalpine Republic and the Netherlands, and he was head of the provisional government after Waterloo—a man of superior ability and one who is mentioned with respect by the historian.

It is extremely difficult for a modern democrat to reconcile the methods of Tiberius and Sejanus with the administration of a free republic of the twentieth century. It is difficult, but not impossible. By reincarnating Tiberius or by imagining a Sejanus in power in the executive mansion of the United States, it would be possible to rehabilitate the old Roman despotism under the stars and stripes. Readers of Roman history are aware that Rome was once a republic, and that it persisted as such for nearly five hundred years. Then came ambitious, unscrupulous, aggressive men who gradually and insidiously sapped the foundations of the republic and poisoned the patriotism of its citizens. The ultimate crime of this imperial conspiracy was Caesar—by Caesar was Roman liberty finally assassinated. After Caesar came Tiberius—and Sejanus; and all that is implied in those names.

Not that I would compare Roosevelt with any of the great men that wore the Roman purple; but some of the Roosevelt methods have been in the manner of Roman tyranny. Especially Roman is the Roosevelt manner of browbeating the American Congress; very like the manner of Tiberius is Roosevelt's later attitude towards the United States Senate—as if, like Tiberius, he would compel obedience to his command from every representative of the people. And the Roosevelt method of achieving this despotic purpose is very much the same as was practiced by Tiberius—the method of the spy and the informer; espionage and suspicion; the secret service and veiled threats of unpleasant exposure.

The only prototype of Theodore Roosevelt in American history was Andrew Jackson; yet here too there is a marked difference. Jackson was an autocrat and as far as his powers permitted he was a self-willed despot; but he was braver than Roosevelt has shown himself to be. Jackson was a man of action rather than a writer of vituperative messages to Congress. Where Roosevelt is merely an academic critic of the courts and the administration of justice that does not suit him or accord with his personal ideas of what justice may happen to be, Jackson, on the other hand was not afraid to speak of the Supreme Court of the United States with contempt; to give it credit, in ironical phrase, for lawyer ability, while denying that the highest tribunal in the nation was other than a co-ordinate branch of the executive vested with power to advise the President if he asked for its advice but always subordinate to his jurisdiction. As for any advice that the Justices of the Supreme Court might offer—if President Jackson thought it good advice he would act upon it; but if he did not like the advice he would not hesitate to reject it.

Theodore Roosevelt has not gone quite as far as that; but another term as President would probably have screwed his courage to the sticking point and perhaps he would have out-Jacksoned Jackson in defiance of the established institutions and the sacred traditions of the nation.

Roosevelt's absurdity, however, reached its apogee when he undertook to measure his big stick with the rapier of the press. When Laffan of the Sun, Pulitzer of the World and Delevan Smith of the Indianapolis News had finished with Roosevelt he was a frazzle—and nothing more. Contrast the verbose, clumsy diction of Roosevelt's letter to Foulke, and the bombastic vituperation of his subsequent Panama scandal message, with the forty lines reply of Laffan, the double paragraph of Pulitzer and the scant half column written by Delevan Smith; and then tell me who got the worst of that joyous passage at arms. In all this answer to the Roosevelt attack there was not a single epithet; Roosevelt was

WE ARE SPECIALISTS AND DEALERS IN UNITED RAILWAYS OF SAN FRANCISCO
SECURITIES
And will be pleased to furnish quotations on application.
SUTRO & COMPANY
BROKERS
Phone, Kearny 332
412 MONTGOMERY ST. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

all epithet. With a turn of the wrist Roosevelt was completely disarmed—and he hasn't found his big stick yet; his spear that knows no brother is at the shop of the blacksmith for repair. I believe he even threatened a libel suit "on behalf of the American people" who had been "insulted" by these journalists because they had insinuated or charged that the Panama canal negotiations had been manipulated by grafters to put money into the pockets of a pirate crew whose long, low rakish schooner sails the sea of finance along the Wall street main. But at latest advices this libel suit inter populi has not been instituted and I suspect that it was balked by the Attorney General who gravely advised to the face of Roosevelt and laughed consumedly behind the Roosevelt back.

Now that Roosevelt is going out, a long peace is looked for in administration circles. It will be the calm after the storm. President Taft is no longer in need of advice or assistance from Roosevelt; and he will do a very foolish thing if he permits his friend and sponsor to meddle with affairs of State. We can stand a bully in the White House once in fifty years; but we can't stand for a puppet in the presidency once in the lifetime of the republic.

The Spectator

Rich and Respectable Smugglers

I do not understand why persons who are rich enough to buy $20,000 worth of clothes and gewgaws and trumpery "art"—brummagem of the Parisian fakers in "old antiques" and trash of the faubourg junk shops—try to sneak the stuff into this country without payment of the duty that a paternal government has placed on such truck to discourage its importation. I read in the newspapers that some of the most respectable of the rich people of Burlingame have committed this crime and that some of them have been caught at it. Now they will have to pay about five times the amount that the stuff cost them and about twenty times the amount that it would "fetch" under the hammer in a place of vendition. If this evasion of the customs were invariably the act of women I could easily reconcile the fact with the purpose and intention. Woman is not a smuggler by instinct though she resents the embargo on goods for which she has already paid the price. The government itself is for her an intangible thing—she knows that it exists because it attempts to charge her for bringing her "bargains" into the country; but that the government is vested with the right to impose this tax or that she is under any moral obligation to pay the tax she utterly denies. But the offenders are not all women. Some of them are said to be among our most "prominent" male citizens; men that would scorn to profit illegally at the expense of their fellow countryman. Why, then do they stoop to this petty robbery of all their fellow citizens? I confess that the answer is wholly beyond my limited knowledge of this phase of human nature. I suspect, however, that the smugglers realize that they have been swindled by the fakers and dressmakers, and are trying to delude themselves into the belief that their merchandise is enhanced in value if it is not burdened with the government tax. It is a foolish notion, to be sure; but even the rich and respectable are frequently afflicted with foolish notions.

The Brilliant Klumpke Sisters

"Rosa Bonheur, Her Life and Works" is the title of a forthcoming volume which should prove of more than passing interest to art lovers in general and San Franciscans in particular, since its author, Miss Anna Klumpke, is the eldest of that distinguished family of four sisters who were born in our city and acquired their early education in the public schools. Miss Anna Klumpke was at first the favorite pupil, and later, the nearest friend and companion of the French artist whose life was too busy to afford time for ordinary intimacies. When Miss Bonheur died it was found that she had made Miss Klumpke her heir, and there were rumors of the usual suits at law by distant relatives or "dear" friends, but Miss Klumpke, who probably had had a private understanding with her patroness, maintained a dignified attitude during the preliminary storm, and after the tumult and the shouting died, explained her intention of turning the bequest into a permanent public benefaction with reasonable restrictions to guard the property and maintain the exhibit, and the tempest subsided almost as speedily as it was raised. The second sister, Augusta, Mme. Dejerine, M. D., and the wife of Dr. Dejerine of Paris, is one of the most noted nerve specialists of Europe, and the first woman to be admitted to a French hospital as an interne. There was a deal of fuss and talk and yards on yards of red tape unwound before the conservative old school of French doctors gave way, and the victory which was finally won was made the occasion of a celebration by the women students and doctors, but while they were banqueting and speech-making, Dr. Klumpke, in her dark gown and list slippers was walking the wards under her charge. The youngest of the quartette, Julia, is a violinist of note in Europe, but the third sister, Dorothea, Mrs. Isaac Roberts, the astronomer, is perhaps the most widely known. Besides her original work in observation and recording, she has held high office in astronomical associations. She translated into French all the scientific documents of the Astronomical Congress held in Paris a few years ago, and when the Bureau of Measurements was established at the Paris Observatory she was made its director. Dr. Roberts was a pioneer of nebular photography. He was a self-made man who, by his own exertions advanced himself to the first rank of his profession, and at his death in 1904 he left scholarships in the University of Liverpool, the University of North Wales and the University of South Wales, in astronomy, botany, geology, electricity, biology, chemistry, physics and zoology. He expressly stipulated that no religious test should be applied to students taking examinations for these scholarships and that if two applicants were found equally worthy the preference should be given to the poorer. The Klumpke girls were quite young when they left San Francisco in the seventies, none of them having yet donned long skirts. It is worthy of remark that though they were all good students, standing well in their classes, they are not remembered as prodigies. Either their parents displayed more common sense than most in restraining them from

Seattle's Newest and Most Modern Hotel

"Twelve Stories of Solid Comfort"

Building, concrete, steel and marble.

Located, most fashionable shopping district.

210 rooms, 135 baths.

Library and bound magazines in reading rooms for guests.

Most refined hostelry in Seattle.

Absolutely fireproof.

English Grill.

Rates, $1.00 up

HOTEL SAVOY SEATTLE

exploitation or the quiet, matter of fact manner in which they did their work failed to attract the attention of their preceptors, and yet, of the scores of wonder-children who were their contemporaries in the same school, those whose drawings adorned the blackboards on "company days," and whose recitations and music were a stereotyped part of every exhibition program, scarcely one in after life rose above mediocrity.

Brown Jr.—Is there a difference between embarrassment and shyness?

Brown Sr.—Certainly. When you are embarrassed for money your shyness doesn't stop you from asking for some.

Moral Tone of Oakland Town

Some of the unco guid of Oakland have declared a holy war on one of the newspapers of that city because the newspaper, as charged by the holy hypocrites and sacrosanct pharisees, is "pro-graft," meaning as clearly defined in the talmud and book of laws of the hypocrites and pharisees, that the newspaper has expressed opinions concerning the methods and purposes of the graft prosecution in this city differing essentially from that which the "anti-grafters" hold and express. In Oakland it is rank heresy and flat sacrilege to oppose the edicts and "interpretations" of the hypocrites and pharisees, who are not only without sin themselves but are divinely inspired to utter the only truth on which the citizens of Oakland can believe and be saved. If Praise-God-Barebones were alive and praying today he would dwell in Oakland when he was not going up against the tribes of Kedar to spoil the men of the east, to take away their tents and their flocks, their curtains and all their vessels, and their camels. Oakland is so full of holiness and hypocrisy that it looks like a pillar of a cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night. Oakland wears an arc light halo throwing its beams afar to blazon its good deeds in a naughty world.

A Debt Never to be Paid

But as I started to tell you, these Holy Willies of Oakland have placed a boycott on one of the local newspapers because it refuses to bow down and worship the graft prosecution, crying aloud: "There is but one Spreckels and Professor Boke in his prophet!" This holy interdiction is peculiar in that it prohibits the printing in the unholy columns of the newspaper the usual announcements of the Sunday discourses of the preachers earning the wages of virtue by the sweat of their tongues in the pulpits of the two-and-seventy jarring sects whose chapels and conventicles are assessed for taxation by the assessors of Oakland. This excommunication is not a pecuniary deprivation. On the contrary, it is a glad relief for the newspaper. These announcements are not paid for like other advertisements; they are printed by the newspapers as one of the multitudinous charities demanded by the churches from the press. The Oakland newspaper in question has given thousands of dollars' worth of advertising space to the churches of Oakland; it has given this space without price and without hope of future reward. The entire obligation has been upon the preachers and the church people. If these announcements had not been printed in this newspaper nobody would have known that the preacher was in existence, that the church was supporting a preacher, or that he would on the next Sabbath morning preach a sermon in which he would definitely answer the question, "Am I My Brother's Keeper?" All the "activities" of all the churches of Oakland have been advertised in this newspaper during more than thirty years; all the church raffles have been "written up"; all the begging "socials" and "subscription parties" have been iterated with damnable iteration in endless columns of whining appeal written by the preachers or the gifted feminine members of their congregations; sermons that were stale, flat and unprofitable have been printed verbatim at the request of the preachers; appeals for aid on behalf of the churches or in the interest of the missionary department of the churches have been published almost weekly during more than a quarter of a century, necessitating, in many instances the curtailment of real news to make room for this rubbish. And not one dollar of profit has ever resulted to the newspaper for all this printing and advertising. Now the viper strikes at the breast that has warmed it. There's a sample of Christian charity and human gratitude for you! That's the way they order things for the greater glory of the two-and-seventy jarring sects in the holy city of Oakland! But I say unto you that it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a hypocrite to enter the kingdom of heaven, and in the final judgment it shall be reckoned a crime of magnitude against him who has cast scorn upon his benefactor. But these things are not written in the books of the pharisees nor uttered from the lips of their priests and elders.

Fantastic Figments of Fiction

E. Hough, a writer for the magazines whose specialty is western episode and western manners, has devoted a page of criticism of all the other writers for the magazines whose specialty is western incident and western customs. He does not spare his intimate friend Frederick Remington, the artist, whose specialty is western art and western delineation. He is also cruelly sarcastic in detraction of the Belasco western drama. All of which is justified by the documents in the case and the truth of nature. As Mr. Hough declares, this flood of fiction based on the manners of the west, is the product of the imagination of writers who live mostly in the town of Brooklyn, New York—the artists are either resident in or temporarily exiled from the town of Lyme, Massachusetts. These have created a west of their own, peopled by cowboys and others whose like is not upon sea or land save in the fancy of their inventors; whose attire is a grotesque masquerade, and whose language is nearer that of the sheeted dead that did squeak and gibber in the Roman streets, than any tongue the mortals speak. But what of it? Why complain? Who, of the multitude that read these stories will know the difference? or, knowing, care the worth of a rawhide quirt whether this fiction is true to the western manner or

Milo

Do you know what Quality means in a Turkish Cigarette? If not get a box of "MILO." Then, any other cigarette, and try same, side by side. You'll note the delicate, aromatic mildness of the "MILO." Mildness (yet with the richness in flavor) is what costs in Turkish Tobacco, and its just this that makes the Perfect Cigarette. You'll find it in No Other.

This perfection is obtained only by owning our own plantation in Turkey—the careful watchfulness from the seeding to the finished article.

Write to the Surbrug Company for samples and prices.

THE SURBRUG COMPANY, New York City

The GOLD MEDAL for quality in the Franco-British Exhibition has been awarded to

To His Majesty the King
By royal appointment

WHITE HORSE WHISKY.

QUALITY THE SECRET OF SUCCESS

MACKIE & CO. DISTILLERS LTD.
LAGAVULIN DISTILLERY, ISLAY
MALT-MILL " "
CRAIGELLACHIE " GLENLIVET

Established 1742

Note.—Any person proved guilty of re-filling our empty bottles with inferior whisky will be prosecuted.

not? If it were true it would probably be quite commonplace, for the truth about the cowboy is not stranger than the fiction that he has inspired. And the same may be said of all the fairy tales that fill the magazines and periodicals; it is all bombast and fustian from the same loom; it is all fashioned out of whole cloth, cut to fit the requirements of the reading mob. It is neither truth nor literature; it is rot—and the only reason that it is not published in the Sunday supplements of the daily newspapers is because the magazines, high and low class, pay a better price for it than is paid by the "Sunday editors."

Tommy—Papa, was Berkeley a bishop?

Fond Parent—No my son; Berkeley is a town that has no excuse for existence save that it is a source of reform for San Francisco.

An Honest Policeman

The appointment of Jesse B. Cook to the office of chief of police has given more satisfaction than anything else that has been done during the whole course of Mayor Taylor's administration. In a large city there can be no more important desideratum than that of an honest man at the head of the police department, and from all reliable accounts 'twas of the incorruptible kind of clay that Jesse B. Cook was fashioned. For having selected Cook the Police Commissioners are deserving not only of felicitation but also of the ardent esteem of this community. We are under a far greater debt of gratitude to those gentlemen than the average citizen is able to conceive. That incredible person, the average citizen, is incapable of conceiving the possible depth of his own ignorance respecting current happenings. He has read all about the persecution of Biggy, the dogging of his footsteps, the schemes to force him out of the department; he has observed that the Police Commissioners were subjected to ridicule and abuse, but do you suppose that he has the faintest idea of the inspiration of it all? In all probability he thinks that such things are of spontaneous occurrence. Yet doubtless he is as cocksure in his views on what ails this city as though he had a supernatural source of information.

A Terror to the Chinese

In addition to being honest Chief of Police Cook is qualified by experience, intellect and enthusiasm for his present position. Though he is known principally for his record in Chinatown being the only man that ever compelled the gamblers of that quarter to close their dens, he has proved himself capable and efficient in the performance of every duty to which he has been assigned. He is a man of education and of exceptional courage. A fact that is not generally known is that he is something of a linguist and that Chinese is one of the languages which he has pretty well mastered. To this is attributed much of his success in Chinatown, for the Chinese never knew that he understood their language, and as a consequence he was in such close touch with their designs and their doings that they suspected him of being in communication with one of their innumerable evil spirits. They called him "The Man With the Evil Eye."

Bergerot Dissents

By the time Mr. William Denman gets his plan for improving the judiciary before the Legislature he will probably find that it is not so free from objection as he has been pleased to believe. A little while ago he reported that Grove L. Johnson of Sacramento was the only lawyer who had expressed disapproval of the plan. I am informed that there are many members of the bar whose views on the subject are in accord with those of Mr. Johnson, and I have seen a copy of a letter addressed to Mr. Denman by P. A. Bergerot, a very highly respected and learned practitioner, in which several objections to the proposed reform are set forth in vehement terms. Mr. Bergerot is opposed to the scheme for legal reasons and for sentimental reasons, and from the statement of his views it is evident that though he has not figured in factional strife he has not been oblivious to the strange realities of contemporary life in this turbulent city. He states as one of his objections to the plan that "It may help to perpetuate in power or in office, venal and incompetent judges who may be, to speak without discrimination, the tools of the higher-ups or the lower-downs, or of newspaper cabals, or of Order and Law Leagues, Leagues of Justice, Civic Leagues, Good Government Leagues, or of Vigilance Committees, which are all in one sense or another, nothing more or less than embodiments of some fixed, narrow, fanatical, one-sided principle, idea or project." Obviously Mr. Bergerot's perceptive faculties are in good working order. As a lawyer of considerable experience and one who tries his cases on their merits perhaps he has had some experience of judges who are press made and who are the faithful puppets of tyrannical journals.

The Root of the Evil

Mr. Bergerot observes that there seems to lurk in Mr. Denman's plan "a moral fear to strike at the root of the evil." He adds: "The experience of every civilized nation in the world, ancient as well as modern, has conclusively shown that the only practical and successful way to remove the judiciary from the demoralizing influence of politics or from the baneful contamination of Law and Order Leagues of the Chicago type which resort to dynamite, and of Leagues of Justice which employ equally reprehensible methods to attain their objects, is to abolish the present system and supplant it by an appointive scheme." The State courts of Massachusetts, by the way, are not supplied with judges by popular vote. The judges are appointed to office and no complaint is ever made of the quality of justice dispensed by the courts of that commonwealth, which are not only removed from popular clamor but are independent of the press. No Massachussetts editor ever dares to threaten a judge or suggest what decision should be rendered. No newspaper in that State ever attempted to intimidate a court by reporting that it was rumored

TAILORS HABERDASHERS CLOTHIERS

PERFECT CLOTHES

J. M. Jacobi & Co.

Telephone Douglas 708 MONTGOMERY STREET, CORNER SUTTER

Grand Prix and Highest Awards at all World Expositions

DEWAR'S

SCOTCH WHISKY

Makes the Best High Ball on Earth

SHERWOOD & SHERWOOD, Importers

that the judges had been influenced by the relatives or friends of a litigant.

Three different waiters at a large hotel asked a professor at dinner, in quick succession, if he would have soup.

A little annoyed, he said sarcastically to the last: "Is it compulsory?"

"No, sir," answered the man, "I think it is mock-turtle."

A Millionaire's Literary Effusion

The Hon. James D. Phelan has been uttering himself in Colliers Weekly in what his enemies will say is his characteristic style. Among capitalists Mr. Phelan is reputed to have some rhetorical affluence and even grace of diction, but I find no evidence of these gifts in his magazine article. Judged as a literary performance Mr. Phelan's disquisition is far from praiseworthy. Nobody can discern the genial warmth of Mr. Phelan's amiable temperament in a production which is so dull and fish-like as to remind one spontaneously of stale beer and a clammy handclasp. It reveals not even that glibness which exhibits itself in Mr. Phelan's public speeches when he has had time to prepare himself. There have been occasions when the gallant young patriot exhorted the mob in a fulgurant, sulphurous and piping style, but in this literary effusion his style is turgid, his English execrable, his reasoning obscure and confused.

It is Not Characteristic

But the blemishes of Mr. Phelan's article are not wholly the result of the swooning of his intellectual faculties. Apparently his inflexible conscience nods occasionally, for one might imagine from what he wrote for Collier's that he had set himself to express judgments that would satisfy other demands than that of veracity. If men, as somebody has said, in their writings unconsciously afford glimpses of the depths of their being, Mr. Phelan is an exception to the rule. This article, which purports to have been written by him drips venom and abounds in half-truths, circumstances that bespeak an ugliness of soul not to be imputed to a man of Mr. Phelan's noble qualities of mind and heart. Apparently to swat two men it is stated in Colliers that love of successful dishonesty went so far in San Francisco that W. H. Crocker and I. W. Hellman "refused to subscribe to funds for the reception of the American fleet last May because Mayor Taylor's committee, representing the honorable and inflexible administration in San Francisco, and whose chairman was a man identified with the graft prosecution had charge of the work." Now this is not merely bad English; it is untrue. But it is incredible that Mr. Phelan in the enjoyment of unclouded senses would stoop to such flagrant unveracity. It is incredible that a man distinguished for his shrewdness as well as for his broad mind and large heart would swat an enemy so awkwardly as to expose himself to the scorn of honest men? The whole town knows that many prominent citizens who, whether justly or not, despise Mr. Phelan, refused to contribute money to a committee over which he presided and for no other reason than that they are intolerant of his personality. Yet we find Mr. Phelan attributing their attitude to a sinister motive and at the same time concealing from the people of the East for whom he wrote that he himself was the chairman of the committee to which he referred. To believe that Mr. Phelan in his sober moments thus rendered himself naked to his enemies is to assume that his is a vacant mind fettered by puerile hate. Preposterous!

The Courts Calumniated

But let us further examine this remarkable article and see how unlikely it is that Mr. Phelan wrote it in the full tide of his faculties. He says therein that many residents of this city were disposed to be tolerant of the crime of bribery and that "even the courts were infected with this poison," and "the several judges of the Appellate and Supreme Courts privately expressed bias." This of course is gratuitous assertion which seems conclusive of mental habits that blunt not only the perceptive faculties but also the sense of truthfulness. Incidentally it bears out what I have repeatedly asserted in these columns, and I feel quite certain that Mr. Phelan would not consciously lend me corroboration. I have stated that it has been the policy of the Graft Prosecution to calumniate the courts of this State and that this policy was adopted when other methods of intimidation were found futile. I have stated that principally because of this policy, which I hold to be more infamous than any of the crimes that excited the virtuous indignation of the prosecutors, I have refused to credit them with being animated with zeal for the welfare of the community. It is the policy by which they have damned themselves, and which must eventually result in their execration. Mr. Phelan knows that Justice Beatty and his associates and the judges of the Court of Appeal are not intolerant of crime; though he probably feels that they must be intolerant of the criminal methods by which men charged with crime have been pursued. He knows furthermore that the only basis there is for the statement that they "privately expressed bias," is the statement of a woman, employed by the veracious Bulletin, to the effect that one judge told her that Calhoun "had to put up."

Indiscreet Argument

It is not quite easy to discover what Mr. Phelan considers himself to have proved. It is obvious enough that he affects a firm belief in himself and his associates, but one is almost tempted to impugn the genuineness of a zeal that so readily germinates unveracity. If it was Mr. Phelan's purpose to rehabilitate the Graft Prosecution against criticism he was unfortunate in adopting a method which has all the flavor of the method by which the Graft Prosecution got itself into disrepute. Moreover he was unfortunate in his choice of position. For example he says: "Something has been wrong in San Francisco, but the attempted assassination of Heney has made it right." This is what Mr. Phelan's Pacific-Union Club friends would call an epigram. Apparently it is compact with shrewd observation, but it will not stand the test of analysis. To hold that public sentiment was set right by the murderous assault on Heney is to imply that it required an absurd misconception of the obvious to bring the public to the support of the Graft Prosecution. While this is in a measure true it is an indiscretion on Mr. Phelan's part to refer to it with gratification. Undoubtedly Haas propped a tottering cause by doing

IDEAL FARMS

"CERTIFIED MILK"

The most perfect product of the modern dairy

Certified to by the Medical Commission of the San Francisco County Medical Society

DISTRIBUTED BY

GUADALOUPE DAIRY CO. Phone Market 2590

STANDARD MILK CO. Phone Market 226

Largest Exclusive Office Furniture House on the Pacific Coast.

EVERY ARTICLE OF FURNITURE REQUIRED IN AN OFFICE

Exclusive representatives of the most important lines manufactured.

RUCKER-FULLER Desk Co.

737-741 MISSION ST.

something which enabled Mr. Phelan and his associates to delude the sentiment of the stupid and unwary. But is it not apparent to all intelligent persons that there is reason to censure a movement conducted by men who are inclined to such charlantry? Everybody knows that Heney was shot by a madman whom he had driven to desperation by an act which he might have some difficulty in justifying. Everybody knows that the incitation of Haas cannot even be remotely traced to the circumstance that Heney was engaged in the graft prosecution. No intelligent person believes that Haas who shot Heney and then killed himself acted at the instigation of any higher-up. Nay, it would be less preposterous if anybody were so foolish as to contend seriously that Haas was the instrument of a third party, to argue that he was instigated by the prosecutors, since it is at least not irrational to impute the motive for a crime to those who profit by it. The shooting of Heney surely could never have been conceived to be advantageous to the higher-ups. The feeblest minded of mortals might have conjectured the effect of so startling a crime. The prosecutors have exploited it for all it was worth, but they should cautiously abstain from reminding the feeble-minded public how the trick was worked. Mr. Phelan should put his cumbersome pen aside. The Graft Prosecution has not been opposed, as he would have the people of the East believe, because they are trying to send wealthy criminals to jail, but because their conduct on the whole has been characterized by the very same qualities that are to be found in the mass of misrepresentation which Mr. Phelan wrote for Collier's Weekly.

MR. L. OHLEYER

Returning from a few hours sports on famous preserves at Alvarado.

Fond Young Mother (with first-born)—Now, which of us do you think he is like?

Friend (judicially)—Well, of course, intelligence has not really dawned in his countenance yet, but he's wonderfully like both of you!

REMOVAL NOTICE

OUR OFFICE after December 21, 1908, will be at 311 to 317 Crocker Building, corner of Post and Market streets.

OUR WAREHOUSE will remain at the Southwest corner of Eddy and Hyde Streets, until April 18, 1909, on that date we shall remove to our old location, 147-151 Minna Street and 144-148 Natoma Street.

GLADDING, McBEAN & CO.

Another Daniel Come to Verse

If all the poetry now extant were of mediocre quality and if all the poets now living were inferior, I would be willing to accept the poetry of Daniel S. Richardson as serving a purpose superior to that which, in my present opinion, it seems to serve. As there are many poems of acknowledged merit and as there are a few poets of ability still living, I am compelled in all candor to say that, personally, I fail to see any necessity whatever for Mr. Richardson's poetry. I do not wish to be understood as denying Mr. Richardson's right to express his thoughts in poetical form; there is no law, human or divine, that prohibits poets from writing their poetry. I merely question Mr. Richardson's discretion in forcing himself into the asphodelian fields where better poets have trod and where other better poets are even now treading.

Suggestions by a Layman

Mr. Richardson calls his collection of poems "Trail Dust," with the sub-title, "A Little Round-up of Western Verse," to appraise these cattle terms at their full poetic value. I am sure that the imagery is all right, and I am convinced that there is a subtle analogy between a dusty trail and a little round-up of Western verse; but I am compelled by a defective imaginative faculty to take the title of Mr. Richardson's book of verse for granted, accepting it in blind faith upon the assumption that he would not have so named it if it were not absolutely appropriate to the contents. Turning to the poetry of Mr. Richardson, I chance upon these lines:

> "My heart was light, though the skies were dumb,
> 'At last, sweet Dora,' I said, 'I come.'"

Here I find myself on the horns of a dilemma. Does the poet speak in avoirdupois or optics? Does he mean that his heart was illuminated or does he wish us to understand that it was buoyant? The statement that "the skies were dumb" fails to elucidate the poet's meaning, for if his heart was light in the sense that it could be measured by candle-power the skies ought to be dark; whereas if his heart were light as a feather the skies should be heavy as lead. Solving the problem by the first process the lines would read,

> "My heart was light, though the skies were dark,
> 'At last, sweet Dora,' I said, 'I bark.'"

But if we interpret the lines in the terms of weights and measures they should be construed thus:

Luscious Old Red Wine

LA QUESTA

AGED IN THE WOOD AND
MELLOWED IN THE BOTTLE

Pronounced by experts the best wine made in California

FOR SALE BY

L. D. McLEAN CO. McCAW BROS.
L. N. WALTER, Cor. Devisadero and California
JULIUS BERENDSEN, 762 Devisadero Street

Served at The St. Francis, The Fairmont, Hotel Rafael, Peninsula Hotel, Jules, Chantilly, Berges & Frank's Old Poodle Dog, Thompson's, New Frank's, Union League Club and Cosmos Club.

"My heart is light, though the skies are heavy.
'I'll meet thee, Dora, on the levee.'"

This is not poetry, I am free to admit, but it conveys a clear meaning and is logical which Mr. Richardson's version is not. I do not insist that Mr. Richardson's heart should have been talkative while the skies were dumb.

Personal Poetry

Bard Richardson is an admirer of Andrew Furuseth. He writes an entire poem to that "plain, strong man" who "makes his fight along the ramparts, armed alone with sense of wrong—the people's moan—the pathos of their plea for right." If I were a poet and were inspired to write a poem panegyrical of Andrew Furuseth, I think I should keep in mind that the subject of my poem was a sailorman as well as a professional agitator. Starting from this premiss I would picture him as "making his fight" along the bulwarks or the taffrail instead of "along the ramparts" like a soldier. I would arm him with a cutlass and boarding pike as more effective for his purpose than "sense of wrong," the people's "moan," or even the "pathos of their plea for right." But in truth if I were a poet I wouldn't write about Andrew Furuseth at all. I would tune my lyre for nobler themes, and I would sing of Walter McArthur and Richard Cornelius—names that hit the Parnassian trail with the anapaestic lilt of a galloping mule on a corduroy road. I am convinced by reading Bard Richardson's poem on Andrew Furuseth that there is more poetry in a bucket of tar and more genuine afflatus in a mess of lobscouse.

More of Sterling

There is one thing to be said for Mr. Richardson—he writes for his contemporaries. Who runs may not only read but understand Poet Richardson, but the test of a poem is not its intelligibility. The world is full of poems that are not worth understanding. These sentiments I have written with George Sterling before me; not in the flesh but between book covers, in a new volume of poems printed by Mr. A. M. Robertson, who, by the way, also gave us the effusions of Richardson. Now Sterling is suspected of writing for posterity, a suspicion born of his "Testimony of the Suns" and strengthened by the incredible misunderstanding of his "A Wine of Wizardry," which is the title poem of the book before me. This poem is a riot of the imagination, and it is therefore unintelligible to the average man whose imagination is merely latent, but as for the poems that accompany it they are constructed on lines at once sane and magnificent. There is in them poetry to be proclaimed inflexibly for what it is. It is uttered in the language of poetry and it can be recognized not by hackneyed poetical expressions but by the eternal signs of poetry, one of which is that of spontaneous inspiration as when he speaks—to take a thought at random—of the Wind's insuperable throng like the roar of archangels' chariots heard by mariner or sentry along "The star-usurping battlements of night." Sterling's book of poetry is like a garden that you wander through picking blooms as you go and when laden and you retrace your footsteps you find that you have left behind others as beautiful as those you have gathered. That he is not hard to understand may be seen from the following perfect piece of craftsmanship, charming in its simplicity and its verbal music achieved by the deft employment of vowels and consonants:

Slow to the wanton sun's desire
The vestal-bosomed buds unfold,
Till poppies flaunt a silken fire,
And buttercups a glassy gold.

The Man I Might Have Been

And here is a Sterling poem, which, though it will appeal to the man in the street, is nevertheless not without merit:

Now, ere the gray and ghastly dawn
Restore the heartening sun,
And Conscience, at his light withdrawn,
Behold her toil undone,
With more than day's remorseful pow'r,
To grimmest ghosts akin,
He comes to haunt a candid hour—
The man I might have been.

Clear-visioned with betraying night,
I count his merits o'er,
And yet no comfort from the sight,
Nor any cure therefor,
I'd mourn my desecrated years
(His maimed and sorry twin)
But well he knows my makeshift tears—
The man I might have been.

Decisively his looks declare
The heart's divine success;
He held no parley with despair,
Nor pact with wantonness;
He wanders with accustomed feet
The heights I dreamt to win;
A sleepless hour, he finds it sweet—
The man I might have been.

His station in the ranks of good
I view with joyless eyes;
His victories o'er self withstood
Denying I surmise.
Tho' reason slay him at a glance,
The mirth of death agrin
Defines him master of mischance—
The man I might have been.

Wedding Invitations
Announcements Name Cards
Late Books Fine Picture Framing
SMITH BROTHERS
462-464 THIRTEENTH ST. OAKLAND, CAL.

TAFT & PENNOYER

The First Special of Its Kind Ever Offered by Our Silk Department

We have offered many SILK SPECIALS, but this is the first time we have been enabled to give our customers a genuine bargain on imported SHENTUNG PONGEE.

Everyone knows the sterling worth and the variety of uses to which this desirable material may be put. Also PONGEE is a fabric that is always in style, for dresses, waists and underwear, year in and year out, and at all seasons of the year.

ONE HUNDRED PIECES of PONGEE are offered while they last at the following prices:

HEAVY SHENTUNG PONGEE—19 inches wide, 18½ yards to the piece, 50 cents the yard or $9.00 the piece.

HEAVY SHENTUNG PONGEE—26 inches wide, 14½ yards to the piece, 65 cents the yard or $9.00 the piece.

CLAY STREET, 14th to 15th
OAKLAND

Whenas I ponder in my pride
(An after-dream of day)
If thus the willful gods deride
My will to scorn the clay,
He comes where jealous of their youth
I nurse a starveling sin,
To sting me with the acrid truth—
The man I might have been.

Tho' half I deem my gentle friends
Would love him less than me,
No less the daunting wraith attends
The dark's sincerity.
O Fates that held us at your choice,
How strange a web ye spin!
Why chose ye not with equal voice
The man I might have been.

An Immunity Banker

If Dazell Brown has not sequestered some of the money he stole from the California Trust Deposit Company he is a very foolish and improvident bank looter. I suspect, however, that he has put by a lot of the swag to be used in his personal financial habilitation after he has doffed the stripes of his penal servitude. Dalzell Brown is a very wise person. He seems to know a lot more than they know in the District Attorney's office, over whose eyes he seems to have pulled much wool. Any way he managed to take advantage of the immunity habit that has fastened upon the District Attorney; and although he was guilty of robbing the widow, pilfering the money of the orphan and stealing candy from babes, he was sent to the penitentiary for only eighteen months, and all of the other charges against him were cast into the limbo of immunity to companion the immunity contracts of the grafting supervisors. And if the sheriff's deputies had not protested against being compelled to chaperon this favorite jailbird Dalzell Brown might have been enjoying a joyous ticket of leave even unto this day, for all that Mr. Langdon would have done to curtail it. We hear loud noise clamoring of Justice with a ciptal J. Does anybody, including District Attorney Langdon and Professor Boke, think that justice with a capital J. Does anybody, including District At-Is there anybody in San Francisco, or even in Berkeley, who will deny that Dalzell Brown is as depraved and despicable a criminal as Abe Ruef? Yet somebody has permitted Dalzell Brown to escape the full penalty of his felonies. Why? It is said that Brown promised to unload about a million dollars of his plunder, and that on this mere promise he received his "immunity." But he has not unloaded. Perhaps he never had it to unload; but that does not clear the skirts of the District Attorney's office. They ought to have made him "come through" with the coin or with evidence to convict somebody "higher up," before they wasted their immunity on him. Even now it is not too late to withdraw the contracts, as they were withdrawn from Andy Wilson. This bank looter can be prosecuted upon the other charges against him, if District Attorney Langdon sees fit to order the prosecution. Otherwise I fear that Dalzell Brown will come out of the penitentiary prepared to start another fake bank and, fortified with this experience, educated by his former mistakes, that he will succeed in robbing more widows, that he will pilfer the trust funds of some more orphans, and that he will steal some more candy from babies, conducting his financial operations on a higher plane and so far within the strict letter of the law that even District Attorney Langdon will not attempt to prosecute him or dare to offer him immunity. By the way, Mr. Brown's attorney was Hiram Johnson who sometimes represents the District Attorney's office and prosecutes grafters.

STILL ON THE MARKET

BROOKS HOMOEPATHIC COUGH AND CROUP SYRUP

FULL SIZE, 25 CENTS AT OWL DRUG STORES

Exit the Band

The noisy brass band is to vanish from Golden Gate Park and there is to be substituted a symphony orchestra. The musical taste of this community is to be educated right in the heart of the great playground. The plain people are no longer to vegetate in inglorious ignorance of the music that soothes the highbrowed intellect. Wagner could not understand Berlioz nor Berlioz Bach, but the great masters all and singular are to be understood by the plain people of this cultured metropolis. Ragtime is to be banished. Vulgar popular ditties are never more to appeal to elemental emotions. Mayor Taylor, who is above all things a poet, and who loves art in whatever terms it is expressed, is in favor of the symphony and Theordore Vogt, the composer and talented musician, has been delegated to introduce the musical change. Mr. Vogt believes that the plain people can easily be educated up to an understanding and an appreciation of high class music, and it was at his suggestion that Mayor Taylor and the Park Commissioners resolved to banish the band. Mr. Vogt has already organized an orchestra of forty-eight pieces, and he will start the music going on Sunday, January 10th. Mr. Vogt is a musical enthusiast and he is entering with much spirit into his enterprise. He believes that the new organization will be the nucleus of a permanent symphony orchestra.

Father (trying to read the paper)—What was that awful racket in the hall just now?

Mother—One of the children fell down the stairs.

Father (irascibly)—Well, you tell those children that if they cannot fall down stairs quietly they won't be allowed to fall down them at all.

TAIT'S CAFE

MAKES A SPECIALTY OF CATERING

For Dinners, Luncheons, Breakfasts or Weddings in San Francisco, Bay Cities or San Mateo County. Menus and estimates submitted.

TAIT'S CAFE,

Van Ness and Eddy, San Francisco.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

HEAR OUR ARTISTS AND ORCHESTRA DURING DINNER AND AFTER THEATRE

MISS ANITA GILL, Mezzo Soprano
MISS NADYNE PARKER, Lyric Soprano

THOMPSON'S ANNEX

O'Farrell near Fillmore

THE COSMOS

658 MARKET ST., OPPOSITE PALACE HOTEL

Table d' Hote Lunch, 50c.

Salad
Fresh Crab — Sliced Tomato

Soup
Cream of Onion — Sliced Tomato

Entrees
Tenderloin of Sole, Tartar Sauce — Salmon Trout, Maitre d'Hotel
Pot Roast with Noodles — Sheep's Feet Spanish
Vienna Schnitzel, Tomato Sauce — Leg of Lamb with Spanish
Tagliarini and Cheese — Roast Beef, au Jus

Dessert
Sliced Bananas and Cream — Water Melon — Ice Cream
Apple Pie — Squash Pie
Swiss Cheese — Roquefort Cheese — Brie Cheese

JULES' RESTAURANT 328 BUSH STREET
Below Kearny
Phone Kearny 1812

NOTICE

On New Year's Eve we will keep open until 2 o'clock a. m.
Make your reservations now.
Music

Recollections of Teed

The telegraphic reports of the death of "Koresh" Teed and of the final consent of his followers to the interment of his body after they has despaired of the promised resurrection probably attracted but little attention locally, yet a score of years ago Teed was a figure of much prominence in this city. He was one of the pioneers of a new freak religion, and despite his revolutionary theories of astronomy and geology he had quite a following, not by any means recruited from the most ignorant and lowly. One of his "doctrines" was that we inhabited the inside of a sphere, not the outside, and his theories of the movements of the heavenly bodies were as fanciful. He professed himself to be Moses, the Hebrew lawgiver, and claimed divine powers. Though he was not actively persecuted, means were found to convince him that the atmosphere of San Francisco was insalubrious and he departed hence, prophesying all sorts of disaster for a community so inhospitable to the Lord's chosen. Eventually he established himself at Tampa, Florida, where his death took place last week. Amongst the households that were disrupted by his vagaries was that of James E. Mills, the mining engineer. There was an interesting family of four children, the two daughters just verging upon womanhood when Mrs. Mills became a disciple of Teed. No persuasion or argument could shake her faith in her prophet, and when he left California she was one of the dupes who accompanied him. Finding himself unable to influence her, Mr. Mills obtained a divorce for the sake of settling family and business affairs, and with his children he returned to Quincy, Plumas County, near which place he had been engaged in experimental engineering projects. Both Mr. and Mrs. Mills died several years ago. The children felt keenly the humiliation of their mother's vagary, and never cared to emerge from their retirement.

"What kind of boys go to heaven?" asked the Sunday-school superintendent.

"Dead boys," yelled the youngest member of the infant class.

The Shoppers' Revenge

The workingman's pipe has almost gone out in Oakland. The street railroad corporation of that city has issued an edict to the effect that no smoking shall be permitted on the rear seats or platforms or in the closed sections of the cars operated by the corporation. Heretofore the weary workingman could smoke his after-breakfast or after-toil pipe on the front and rear section of the cars while resting from a hard day's work on his long ride from the workshop to his humble cottage home in the suburbs. Now it is ordained that he must ride on the front section or forego the solace of his pipe until he escapes from the jurisdiction of the railroad company. I am informed that this order was issued at the behest of women passengers who, during the rush of the recent shopping season, were compelled to stand or hang themselves to the straps while the seats were filled with workingmen, all of whom wore pipes in their mouths and puffed the smoke where they listed, regardless of what nostrils might be offended with the rank odor of cheap tobacco. Thus a double revenge on the horny-handed sons of toil was planned by the early and late shoppers of Christmas week—they revenged themselves upon the workingmen for their ungallantry in refusing to offer their seats to the shoppers, and they revenged themselves on the vile tobacco. The husbands of these shoppers never smoke anything except the best cigars; and when the shoppers themselves indulge the pleasant vice they smoke only the most delicate latakia or the most fragrant Turkish and Egyptian. Nobody except the weary workingman of Oakland is inconvenienced by this new order of the street railroad corporation; and as the ukase is in absolute consonance with the reform policies of the company, largely based on rules conspicuously placarded in the cars instructing the "patrons" of the company how to behave in the presence of the conductors, its philanthropic and beneficient purpose may not be questioned.

"The Irresistible Current"

Mrs. I. Lowenberg's philosophical novel "The Irresistible Current" which has been the talk of women's clubs for some months is now in its third edition. This is indeed a remarkable record for a first production. Mrs. Lowenberg had the good fortune to write a novel with a purpose of interest to a very large class of people. The religious question, which is really the motif of the work, is one that has entered deeply into human affairs, and the author has handled it with tact and discretion while at the same leading her readers through a story abounding in heart interest. Fresh stimulus appears to have been given to the demand for the novel during the season of peace on earth.

MOVE TO NEW QUARTERS

Sherwood & Sherwood will move into new and commodious quarters at 41 to 47 Beale street, San Francisco, about January 1st. The large increase in orders for their different world standard goods have compelled them to seek larger accommodations for carrying on their growing business and no pains have been spared in fitting up their new establishment, in a manner which will facilitate the promptest and best delivery service to their many customers.

Sherwood & Sherwood are the sole agents for J. H. Cutter Whisky, Schlitz Milwaukee Beer, Rosskam, Gerstley & Co. Philadelphia Ryes, Burke's Guinness Stout and Bass Ale, Dewar's Scotch Whisky, and many other fine imported liquors —Crosse & Blackwell's Pickles, Condiments, etc., Colman's Mustard, etc., etc.

The wholesalers and retailers wishes them much success in their new location and a continuation of the business which, through their sterling qualities, both in business dealings and in the high grade of goods handled, they have enjoyed for the many years past. The name of Sherwood & Sherwood has been made a symbol throughout the entire coast for honesty and quality.

Jefferson Square Bowling Alleys
and Billiard and Pool Parlors
925 GOLDEN GATE AVE. CORNER OCTAVIA
LARGEST AND FINEST IN THE WORLD.

ALL RECIPES calling for Milk or Cream will be more successful and satisfactory if you use
BORDEN'S
PIONEER
BRAND
EVAPORATED
MILK
(Unsweetened)

Convenience, Economy, Purity commend Pioneer Milk for all culinary purposes
Send for Recipe Book
BORDEN'S CONDENSED MILK CO.
"Leaders of Quality"

THE WEEK'S FINANCIAL OUTLOOK

By R. E. Mulcahy

The action of the Wall Street securities during the last ten days of 1908 were decidedly puzzling to those best informed. The present bull market started just one year ago, and has been a most remarkable market to say the least. Many reactions were seen but only two were of any particular consequence. These were followed by quick recoveries. The Union Pacific and Southern Pacific stocks have continued during that period as market dealers. A reaction or an up turn in these stocks meant the same action in the whole market list. At times the Hill group would show signs of becoming leaders, but their supremacy would be of short duration. The Harriman issues have a wonderful public following. This has come about through natural channels. Harriman has to some extent taken the public into his confidence by his manner of building up properties. No man on Wall Street at present or in the past has had such public aid in carrying on a bull campaign as Harriman has experienced. There was a time not long ago when Hill had the public's confidence; but some way or other Harriman has supplanted Hill. By securing control by the Burlington Company of the Colorado Southern, Hill has attained a very strong position geographically speaking, and ere long there may be a clash of no small magnitude should encroachment be made upon the territory of either. It is rumored with some grounds of authority that St. Paul will be placed in control of the M. K. & T. property. Both properties are controlled by the Standard Oil crowd.

The Texas and Pacific securities have been very active of late on rumors of a dividend in the near future. From the action of the Wisconsin Central stock issues it is quite evident strong buying has been in evidence for the purpose of control. Those well informed say the Canadian Pacific people have practically secured control of Wisconsin Central and will soon announce the fact officially.

New York Central has been very active and scored a fair advance lately. A general shake up in its management is expected soon after January 1st.

There has been quiet absorption of the Erie shares during the past month, the stocks have been taken as they were offered. If Harriman has representation sufficiently strong in the Erie management the stock is cheap and will do better.

Denver and Rio Grande has shown remarkable strength of late; this is thought to be due to the expected early completion of the Western Pacific, of which company it owns and has in its treasury fifty-one per cent of the common stock, which has sold recently at 22½. At no distant day this stock will become a valuable asset of the Denver and Rio Grande.

The general stock market from an unbiased standpoint should have a good reaction, but such a condition is not at present visible. The best market readers consider a good break would put the market in a much stronger position. Evidently the strong market leaders tried their hand to force a decline last week, but were forced to retrace their steps in a hurry as the outside buying that came into the market was too strong not to be understood. The action of the market at present would indicate a higher range of prices during the early part of January at least. The Industrial list is being given a great deal of attention just at present. Car Foundry, American Locomotive, Pressed Steel Car and the Equipment companies in general should show improvement in their security values. Many of them have shown good profitable earnings during the late depression. No doubt regular dividends will soon be resumed by many of them.

The Copper stocks are very erratic. There is no doubt existing a fair supply of metal which will take time to consume. The Silver market shows signs of advancing. This should add some encouragement to the situation. The Grain markets, after a month's depression, are again advancing and promise to continue to a higher level. Exports of wheat are considered liberal. The Cotton market seems to drag, a fact attributed by many to the recent laws passed by Southern States abolishing "futures." The buying power has been taken away and all opportunity given to the Market Center buyer who is dictating prices to the producer. It is thought these laws will be repealed at the earliest possible moment. Security values in the local market are firm with an advancing tendency. Money is somewhat tight but will become easier after the first of the year, when considerable eastern money will find its way to San Francisco.

FOR 300 YEARS

THE WORLD'S MOST FAMOUS CORDIAL

LIQUEUR

PÈRES CHARTREUX

—GREEN AND YELLOW—

At first-class Wine Merchants, Grocers, Hotels, Cafes.
Butjer & Co., 45 Broadway, New York, N. Y.,
Sole Agents for United States.

ROBERTSON'S

A BOOK STORE

1539 VAN NESS AVE. NEXT TO THE "WHITE HOUSE"

CARD PLATES .·. MONOGRAMS

WEDDING INVITATIONS

A. M. ROBERTSON

Telephone DOUGLAS 2487 R. E. MULCAHY, Manager

E. F. HUTTON & CO.

THE PIONEER HOUSE

BANKERS AND BROKERS

Members
New York Stock Exchange
New York Cotton Exchange
New York Coffee Exchange
Chicago Board of Trade

490 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Branch, ST. FRANCIS HOTEL

Two Private Wires to Chicago and NewYork

Washington, D. C., 1301 F Street
Los Angeles, 112 W. Third Street
New York, 31-33-35 New Street

Social Prattle

By TANTALUS

The Haughty Mrs. Mills

Apropos the recently announced engagement of Miss Beatrice Mills to the Earl of Granard, some interesting stories of the young lady's mother were related at a gathering one evening last week. Mrs. Mills was a Miss Livingstone of New York, one of an old family better provided in its later days with pedigree than with pelf. It is said she once remarked that there were no ladies to the manor born in California, so, when D. O. Mills, her father-in-law, gave a large dinner party to some visiting Californians, amongst whom were the Mayo Newhalls, Mrs. H. T. Scott, Mrs. Russell Wilson, and others as socially prominent there was some speculation amongst the ladies as to whether Mrs. Ogden Mills would condescend to grace the festal occasion. She did not, and when, later in the season, Mr. Russell Wilson visited New York and was a guest at a dinner given by the Ogden Millses, he made a merry joke about

Photo, Bruguiere & Eisen

MRS. ARTHUR BRANDER

Formerly of this city but now of San Diego. She has been visiting friends in town.

"moving in an entirely different set from that which his wife graced." Apparently Mrs. Mills believed the men from California to be more congenial than the women.

She Sparkled

Literally the most brilliant figure at the Greenway Assembly was Mrs. George Newhall, who scintillated with diamonds. Her dog collar excited enthusiastic admiration. I believe it outrivals any other on the coast. It was a gift from Mr. Newhall presented just before the ball, and it is said that he has been collecting and matching the stones for five years. On his last trip to New York he completed his self-appointed task, and the collar was made to order, and finished with a marvelous pearl clasp. Even Mrs. Oliver Tobin's wedding gift is said to be dimmed by comparison, and Mr. Newhall is receiving as many congratulations on his good taste as Mrs. Newhall is on her acquisition. Mr. Newhall's quest and purpose was kept secret, and until the persentation was made his wife had not a suspicion of what was in store for her.

Eastland's Freak Pin

Joseph Eastland is another prominent society man with a fad for precious stones, but his taste lies in the direction of the odd and fanciful. One of his recent acquisitions was picked up in Paris. It is composed of a cluster of diamonds connected with a hidden spring which, when manipulated causes the diamonds to disappear and be replaced by rubies, while another touch

Photo, Bruguiere & Eisen

MISS HELEN THOMAS

Who will become a bride in the New Year. She is engaged to J. W. Sefton, Jr.

will replace the rubies with sapphires. Mr. Eastland congratulates himself on having fewer pins to be mislaid, but on the other hand, there is the disadvantage of having all three disappear at once. The combination jewel is said to be really pretty, which is not always or often the case with "freak jewelry."

Social History

The exploitation of the affairs of the Long family, consequent on the discovery of the identity of the long-lost daughter Ada brings to mind an encapade of one of the sons. Frank Long, while yet in his teens, hied himself to Martinez, not then the Gretna Green which it has since become, accompanied by Miss Birdie Yost, the daughter of the late Dan Yost, who was several

MISS ELSIE DE WOLFE
REPRESENTED BY
MRS. EDGAR DE WOLFE
INTERIOR DECORATION AND OBJETS D' ART
TEMPORARY OFFICE, GRANADA HOTEL TELEPHONE FRANKLIN 422

years his senior. They were duly married, and after the ceremony, returned to San Francisco, each to the bosom of the family. Not a word was said and not a suspicion entertained until a full year later, when suit was brought by the wife to compel support. Then, of course, the story of the secret marriage came out. Eventually Mrs. Long obtained a divorce and married into the army, becoming the wife of an officer named Hammond. Frank Long also ventured again on the stormy sea of matrimony, his second wife being Miss Carol Cobb, a relative of Prentiss Cobb Hale.

Some of the Old Aristocracy

Mrs. Robert Williams and Miss Queen Anne Williams are visiting relatives in this city. The late Mr. Williams was a brother of Mrs. E. B. Clement, Mrs. Thomas C. Van Ness, and Gardiner Williams of South Africa. Mrs. Will Denman, (Leslie Van Ness), Mrs. John Taylor, (Daisy Van Ness), and Mrs. Dixwell Hewitt (Kate Clement) are all nieces. Although not yet formally announced it is an open secret amongst the family and friends that Miss Queen Anne Williams is to be married in the near future to Mr. Axel Applegarde of Sweden, whom she met while visiting her sister in Finland. Mrs. Williams was Miss Jennie Gluyas of St. Helena, where she continued to reside for many years after her marriage but Mr. Williams met with financial reverses and went to Central America with a hope of retrieving his fortunes. One day Mrs. Williams invested in a lottery ticket which proved to be a winner. It netted her fifteen thousand dollars, and she immediately took her family abroad for education, locating herself in Dresden. It is only within the last few years that she has returned to America. The eldest daughter, Mary, developed artistic talent and was one of the Examiner's staff about ten years ago. After the death of her husband, Seymour Davidson, she went to New York where she won new fame as a caricaturist under the name Kate Carew. Later she married Henry Chambers, a newspaperman, and has now retired from the field of active work. Nona Williams married a wealthy resident of Finland. Miss Queen Anne is the youngest daughter, but there are three sons, Neil, Reed and Gluyas, all attending eastern colleges. Miss Ethel Hartson, whose marriage to Lieutenant Caldwell Turner, U. S. N., will take place in February, is a niece of Mrs. Williams. The Williams and Gluyases families were of our early day aristocracy.

Ned is Democratic

The bavardes of the daily press seem to be losing sleep over the discussion of the vexed question of the revision of the Greenway list. It is claimed that under a new title the club will be reorganized on a much more exclusive basis, but there seems to be little ground for the assertion. There has been some weeding out, but after all it is very slight. The old faces appear at the Assemblies, reinforced by the pretty debutantes. The personal friends of the Czar resent the implication that he has a passion for exclusiveness and in proof that he is democratic they point to his many intimates who are not "in." At the dinners that preceded the Assembly the diners found time between courses to discuss their neighbors, the Greenway list, and of course, the Assemblies. "The list is to be decidedly revised," was the authoritative statement of one; "only the exclusive set is to be included—even the papers have gotten hold of it." A gentleman looked over to the opposite table and smiled. "If Greenway has revised the list," he said, "he did it on the wrong side of the fence," and the subject was changed.

A Gift From the Cook

Perhaps one of the most curious gifts ever made on any occasion was the contribution to the Merry Christmas of Judge and Mrs. Beatty made by their Chinese cook, who proudly presented to them a young Celestial of the age of twelve years. A white elephant could not have been less unexpected or more difficult to dispose of and for the present that part of the problem still remains unsolved. It develops that there was a world of method in the philanthropic cook's madness, for it seems the youngster is his own son, but just arrived from China. By presenting him to the Beatties the provident father reasoned that he was providing a good home for the boy, and while relieving himself of the expense of his support he would yet be able to keep a watchful eye on his training. In the first blush of their surprise the new "owners" did the obvious and natural thing, and ushered young Master Oriental into the room where the grandchildren were surrounded by their toys. A gramophone was set going and it was the first thing which attracted his attention. He gazed in open-mouthed wonder at the machine, took two slow and methodical trips around the box examining it critically, and finally ended by giving a vigorous shake to every curtain and drapery in the room. He has not yet solved the mystery, but the traditional patience and persistency of his race will eventually clear it for him unless, in the meanwhile, the Beattys find some practical answer to their own problem, how to dispose of their unwelcome gift.

Carrying Jewels to Golconda

Mr. and Mrs. Charles G. Yale of Oakland have received some very interesting letters from their daughter, Mrs. Gracey, wife of Consul Wilbur T. Gracey of Tsingtau, China. The letters were written en voyage from London to Colombo, Ceylon, where the curried prawns are famous for their delicious flavor and where they know how to cook rice in ninety-and-nine ways before they descecrate it by mixture of other food. From Aden Mrs. Gracey wrote a vivacious description of English manners aboard the India, a P and O steamer outward bound for Calcutta on the Hoogley and Bombay. These English people were evidently much affected by their caste distinctions, and while the ordinary Englishman and Englishwoman of the "middle class" were extremely punctilious in the matter of acquaintance with one another, refusing all recognition unless formally "introduced," they were paralyzed with joyful awe or awful joy whenever one of the titled Englishmen on board condescended to remark within hearing of any of the "lower class" that "it was beastly fine weather, don't you know." Most of Mrs. Gracey's fellow voyagers seemed to be excessively rich, or, in any event, if not as rich as they seemed to be had been only temporarily impoverished by lavish expenditures for jewelry. Solomon must have been arrayed gloriously indeed if he wore as much jewelry as did these Englishwomen on a steamer voyage "from Nome to Hindia." At dinner every night diamonds shone from every breast, sunbursts blazed, tiaras flashed, bracelets dazzled, rings sparkled. There was but one logical conclusion: Either these women were very wealthy or diamonds were very cheap. Mrs. Gracey, being an American, and naturally addicted to

Hours, 10 to 12
MRS. GENE ARNOLD
Special Massage of Face and Scalp
Careful attention given to physician's orders
Phones Douglas 4266
Douglas 2260
HOTEL REGENT, 562 SUTTER ST.

THE CHAFING DISH
The Chafing Dish is now becoming so generally used, and its necessity in the household so fully recognized, that we take pleasure in calling your attention to the fine line we handle, as well as every Chafing Dish necessary.
L. D. McLEAN CO.
IMPORTERS AND GROCERS
PHONE FRANKLIN 2810 1158-1168 Sutter St. San Francisco

a Jeffersonian simplicity of habit and manner, could not help but draw the contrast between this brilliant dinner and promenade display and the general view of a similar occasion in America, where only the vulgar rich and the unspeakable parvenu empty their jewel boxes every time they go to a public dinner; and where a very broad distinction is made between the opera and the cafe. Of course these women changed their frocks or gowns for every meal, and those who were accompanied by maids were easily distinguished from the others by their elaborate coiffures, some of which had been in process of construction since luncheon. The Graceys were to proceed from Colombo to Hongkong where they would remain a short time before visiting Mr. Gracey's father at Foochow, finally reaching Tsingtau by way of Shanghai where a brief stop would be made. It was their original intention to travel on the trans-Siberian railway,

PRAYING TO SANTA CLAUS

but they were deterred by reports of cholera in Russia; and they were prevented from visiting Alexandria and making the trip to the pyramids and the upper Nile, by a quarantine against smallpox in Egypt.

Mabel Toy's Engagement

Along the channels of social gossip there rippled early in the week the glad news of the engagement of Miss Mabel Toy and Mr. Francis W. Lucas. The felicitations that poured in on the popular young real estate man were in the nature of a continuous performance. Miss Toy is one of the most lovable girls in society, and the winning of her hand and heart is indeed an enviable achievement. Possessed of all the graces that make companionship enjoyable, she has matured her intellectual gifts in travel abroad, and her manners and conversation attest not only her power of observation but her appreciation of the things that are worth while. Miss Toy was introduced to society through the medium of the Greenway dances, and she has figured prominently in the principal social events that have marked the past two seasons. She is the daughter of George D. Toy, one of San Francisco's leading real estate agents.

Of the Clan Kirkham

A wedding of much interest to Californians on account of the prominence of the bride's family took place on Wednesday evening, December 30th, at Christ Church, Springfield, Massachusetts, when Miss Lolia Safford, daughter of Mrs. May Kirkham Safford, became the wife of John Stevens, also of Springfield. Mrs. Safford will be remembered as the interesting and attractive May Kirkham, daughter of the late R. W. Kirkham, at one time quartermaster at the Presidio. Their beautiful home in Oakland was the center of much gaiety in those days. Mrs. P. J. Wheeler, wife of Dr. Wheeler, is a relative of the family, and Stanton Davis Kirkham, the author, is a cousin of the bride. Kirkham street in Oakland was named after General Kirkham. Mr. Davis is head of the largest twine manufactory in the world at Ludlow, Massachusetts.

The Penalty of a White Lie

"How oft a tangled web we weave
When first we venture to deceive."

The parents of a family of young daughters residing on the "good" side of the bay were to be absent from home for a few days, and the careful mother thoughtfully asked an old friend of hers to keep a watchful eye on the "children," not that they needed surveillance at all; oh, no, but accidents might happen, etc. The good matron took her responsibilities rather more seriously than is generally the case, and immediately 'phoned her charges to come and spend the evening with her. They, however, had made their own disposition of their time, and had no inclination to see their program superseded, so they as promptly 'phoned back an excuse. One of the sisters was suffering from a severe cold, and they thought they should all remain at home to nurse her. Meanwhile, the young bachelor guests whom they had invited to supper arrived, and after the meal all strolled out about the large grounds. The door bell was heard to ring, and one of the girls volunteered to investigate, promising to be "right back in a minute." It happened to be the ci-devant invalid, and it was many weary minutes ere she returned to report, for the visitor whose importunate ring had summoned her was none other than the non-resident chaperone, provided with a family medicine case and "first aid to the injured." "I have come to doctor your cold," she announced. "Now, go right upstairs to bed and I'll get the mustard and hot water and things." Protest was in vain. A cold severe enough to be an excuse to remain at home could not of California, has removed to its new offices, corner Market, Sutter and Sansome Streets. A general banking business transacted.

THE CHRISTMAS TREE AT BYRON SPRINGS

CENTRAL TRUST COMPANY

CHAS. F. LEEGE, President B. G. TOGNAZZI, Manager

Mrs. Warfield

PIANO SCHOOL FOR CHILDREN AND BEGINNERS

Telephone Piedmont 3414 6409 Regent Street, Berkeley

Tuesday and Friday, Ebell Club, Oaklnd

possibly have cured itself so speedily, and there was nothing to do but submit to the dragooning. To bed she went and was liberally dosed and drugged after the approved methods. Then the good woman departed, saying that she would be around early in the morning to note the effect of her treatment, and no sooner was she out of the house when the patient jumped up, dressed hurriedly and returned to her companions, explaining her enforced absence by saying, "I've been through the third degree sweating process."

The Honolulu Smart Set

Mrs. Hyde-Smith is visiting her daughter, Mrs. Harold Dillingham, in Honolulu, and by all reports she is having a delightful time. She is singularly fortunate in being in a position to enjoy the hospitality of all three of the cliques which rule society in the island capital, the missionary element, the real smart set, which rivals our own Blingum in its hilarity, and the highly intellectual set. Harold Dillingham's parents are both descendants of the early missionaries, and his sister, the wife of Governor Frear, is quite the leading light of the cultured cult, while he and his brother have been amongst the most brightly gilded youths of the coterie of that bachelor hall known as "Virtue Villa."

It Was Here They Originated

Although the fire made great inroads on the income of Mrs. Phoebe Hearst she has not permitted her charities to languish on that account. She supports five kindergarten classes in various parts of the city. The board of education has recently granted the use of two class rooms to the Golden Gate Kindergarten Association, and there is a class, established three months ago in connection with the Glen Park school. The Pioneer Association supports two classes amongst the Italian residents. The Christmas festival with which the kindergartens bring their school term to a close is always an interesting occasion, not only to the children and their parents, but to the members of the kindergarten associations and to disinterested visitors who are apt to be amazed at the capacity developed by the infants. San Francisco is the home of the kindergarten. It was in this city that the experiment was first tried, and the success which crowned the early efforts was the direct means of establishing the feasibility of the scheme on American soil. Incidentally, it was the Pioneer kindergarten which gave Kate Douglas Wiggin and her sister, Miss Nora Smith, to literature, for according to Mrs. Wiggin's own confession, she had never even dreamed of writing until the imperative need of funds for her work made some desperate effort necessary.

Christmas at the Victoria

Christmas was a day of feasting and frolic at the Hotel Victoria, where the permanent guests kept open house in an informal way, and there was a constant stream of visitors all day. In the evening there were music and song and an impromptu promenade concert. Four dinners were given in the latest style which is in reality a resurrection of that of older times. After the soup and salad the other courses were omitted and everything was served from the head of the table. Monsieur Adagnous, acting as master of ceremonies, gave his attention to the carving, going from table to table as there was demand for sliced turkey. The cochon de lait occupied a table in the European dining room, and the little squealer was very picturesque in his harness of red ribbons, with a sprig of holly in his mouth. The largest of the old-fashioned dinners was given by Mrs. A. L. Foye in the banquet room. All of the ladies were handsomely gowned in Directoire style. The guests were Dr. and Mrs. E. E. Park, Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Chisholm, Mrs. Douglas, W. W. Douglas, A. T. Dunbar, Mrs. J. H. Sullivan, Miss Elizabeth and Miss Sophie Sullivan. Col. W. L. Weimer was host to a party of six in the European dining room. His table was decorated with red berries and carnations. Monsieur A. de Closmadenz entertained eight at his table. California violets were the only flowers used. Monsieur and Madame M. Rolland had four friends as guests to their dinner. Their flowers were carnations.

Better Than a Policeman

Philanthropists have queer experiences, especially about holiday time. A lady prominent in benevolent circles tells this good story on herself. One day she was quietly entertaining a caller in her own home when the door was unceremoniously pushed open and in rushed a ragged and forlon specimen of childhood, who breathlessly exclaimed: "Oh, Mrs. ————, if daddy comes home drunk again tonight, will you come and sit on him?" "But sonny," she remonstrated, "that's a case for the policeman." Nothing daunted, the urchin made answer, "Oh, but dady's a heap more scared of you than he is of the 'cops.'"

The Del Monte Dance

The Christmas Cotillion given by Hotel Del Monte was a very pretty affair carried through with unusual vivacity and dash. The Post was out in full force, and Captain Estes led the merry party through the intricate figures with a spirit none could resist. The opening of the cotillion was an effectiv march with Japanese lanterns and all other lights turned low. Two trees illuminated with colored electric bulbs held the favors and added a charming bit of color to the room. A novel and pretty figure imprisoned the ladies fair, in a many sided screen while the devoted swain waited outside on bended knee. At a given signal the fair ones burst through the colored

GIERSBERGER WINES

The wine of merit and quality all around the world. Compare it with the best wines and we are satisfied.

THEO. GIER WINE COMPANY

Phone Oakland 123 1225-1227 BROADWAY, OAKLAND

This is a Great Offer READ IT!

We Will Give Away 100,000 Samples of French Perfume

ED. PINAUD'S EXTRACT LILAC VEGETAL

The finest perfume in the world for handkerchief, atomizer, bath and finger-bowl.

We do this to prove our long-standing claim that ED. PINAUD'S LILAC VEGETAL is the best perfume for general toilet use; exquisitely delicate and lasting. Lilac is the latest rage in Paris. We also want you to know more about

ED. PINAUD'S HAIR TONIC

(Eau de Quinine)

If you have dandruff—If your hair falls out—If you want beautiful hair—Use this delightful French preparation.

No woman who values her personal appearance can afford to neglect her hair.

Write to-day for sample of ED. PINAUD'S HAIR TONIC. Send 10 cents (to pay postage and packing), and we will mail you a liberal sample, and will also send a Free sample of

ED. PINAUD'S LILAC VEGETAL

If you want to try these two famous French preparations, fill out coupon below, tear out this ad., wrap up 10 cents in silver or stamps, and send it to us to-day.

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ State_____

PARFUMERIE ED. PINAUD

ED. PINAUD BLDG. Address Dept. S. F. NEW YORK

tissue panels and sailed away with the chosen one. Another popular but less romatic figure was the closing one with horns, which the exuberent ones tooted with all their might and main, and wished with all their hearts they might come back another night to toot again.

Another Californian on Broadway

Another California girl has made a hit. Ruth Allen, daughter of one of our pioneers, has her name out in electric lights on Broadway. She began her stage career as a member of a barnstorming party, and afterward joined the Alcazar forces, where she became a great favorite and soon came under the notice of Florence Roberts, whose company she joined. She created the character of the college girl in "The Strength of the Weak." They played on Broadway that season, and though Miss Allen was only a novice she was the single success of the metropolitan production. She is enjoying another successful season now on the vaudeville stage, in a sketch written especially for her and called "Ruth Allen and Her Six English Boys." The lads were imported from the old country especially for the playlet.

A Bishop's Lecture

The Camera Club gave one of its most interesting exhibitions on Friday evening last, when Bishop Edwin H. Hughes gave a lecture illustrated by lantern slides descriptive of his trip up the Nile and other travels abroad. He is an eloquent speaker, and the humorous anecdotes of his experiences were appreciated by the large audience which filled Christian Science Hall. Bishop Hughes is a recent acquisition to San Francisco, having been appointed to succeed Bishop Hamilton of the M. E. Church.

The Bohemian Dinner

The Christmas dinner of the Bohemian Club was very lively and festive, even for a Bohemian entertainment. The cost of the decorations alone ran well up into the hundreds. Some three hundred and forty of the club members were present, and whispers from behind the closed doors are to the effect that Christmas enthusiasm rose so high as to verge upon disorder. Frequent calls for order and even resort to strong language were found necessary, and for a while it looked as if serious measures would be demanded. Wine flowed freely and the genial Charlie Dickman gave an excellent personation of Bacchus. The enthusiasm died down somewhat towards the early hours, but day was breaking before the last took their departure. One of the older and more staid members made caustic comments on the conduct of those present but there is question whether he himself was so very circumspect a score of years ago, and comments on the difference in the point of view of seventy and forty have savored neither of the indulgence due to youth nor of the reverence expected for age.

In the Social Spotlight

There was a merry Christmas celebration at Byron Springs where the L. R. Meads entertained a jolly week-end party which included Dr. and Mrs. L. D. Mead, Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Sadler, Miss Ruth Sadler, Mr. Sydney Woodruff, Mrs. Woodruff, Miss Mildred Woodruff, and Rev. F. Jacquet. The Christmas tree at Byron was a gorgeous affair and there were many little ones on hand to sip full of the delights of the occasion.

On the evening of the first Colonial dance, Miss Hanna Du Bois, one of the most hospitable hostesses of the younger social set, will entertain a number of her friends at dinner in the St. Francis.

Professor J. G. Schurman, President of Cornell University and one of the leading educators of America, is at the Fairmont.

RHEUMATISM
AND ALL PAIN INSTANTLY RELIEVED BY
BAUME BETULAE
THE ORIGINAL APPLICATION BY ABSORPTION
SOLD BY DRUGGISTS FOR 50 CENTS A TUBE
AND AT OWL DRUG COMPANY STORES.

One of the smartest dinners that will precede the first Colonial dance will be given in the St. Francis by Mrs. Mary H. Smyth for her grandson, Hanson Grubb. The guests will be a number of our most charming debutantes and several of Mr. Grubb's college friends.

The popularity of the golf links is steadily increasing. It has become quite the winter fad for those not drawn Burlingameward for the polo tourments to meet Sunday afternoons for a few hours' practice. Amongst the best players are Fred Greenwood, Joe Eastland and Courtney Ford, who are becoming experts. Some excellent plays are made by the girls, too. One of the most striking figures on the links last Sunday was Mrs. Henry Crocker in her new sealskin coat. Henry Crocker, too, is quite a devotee to the sport.

The Honorable M. Shiraishi, one of the industrial barons of Japan, is at the Fairmont accompanied by Mrs. Shiraishi. Mr. Shiraishi is president of the Toyo Kisen Kaisha steamship line which is making such a strong bid for the commerce of the Pacific. The new liner Chio Maru is due to arrive here shortly, as she is now en route on her maiden voyage. The Chio is a sister ship to the beautiful Tenyo Maru, but is said to be a finer vessel in many ways.

Mrs. W. R. Broome of Ventura, better known as "Lady" Broome, is at the Fairmont with her charming daughter and is being extensively entertained during her stay in the city.

One of the most popular debutantes of the season is Miss Anna Weller, the grand daughter of Mrs. John McMullin, who makes her home at the Fairmont. She has been the recipient of many teas, luncheons and other entertainments given in her honor at the hotel.

There was an old-fashioned merry-making at the Hotel Carlton, in Berkeley, on Christmas day, and in the evening a tree was provided at which both old and young shared the fruit, the gifts being in the nature of mirth-provoking trifles suggested by the fads and fancies of the recipients. After the tree there was an informal dance held in the lobby of the hotel. New Year's night saw another dance, and on the evening following a progressive bridge party. The directors of the Chamber of Commerce gave a banquet during holiday week in the private dining room, and on January 15th the members of the Unitarian club will entertain.

Mrs. Henry T. Scott and Mrs. Joseph B. Crockett will leave the city on January 2nd for their long tour abroad. Mayo Newhall will accompany them as far as Philadelphia where he will resume his studies. Masters Mintzer and Macmonigle are students of the same college.

BEAUTIFUL AND CHARMING MADAM L. M. MAYE, 55 YEARS OF AGE

Who will assist Dr. Cristion of Paris, France, in his two lectures on "Beauty Culture and Facial Blemishes," next Monday and Tuesday afternoons at 2:30 o'clock at the Golden Gate Hall, 2137 Sutter street. Madame Maye will be dressed on this occasion in the latest Parisian gowns and hat. Every lady should attend these beauty lectures and learn how to remain young and attractive looking. Monday afternoon lecture is free and for ladies only.

A few of the recent arrivals at the Tavern of Tamalpais were: From San Francisco, Mr. C. P. Gooding, George B. Webster, C. P. Carruthers, A. R. M. Blackhall, Percy Russell, Mary E. Dunne. From Portland, Oregon: Mr. and Mrs. P. H. Tyman, Mr. and Mrs. L. A. Shaw, J. Veach, Mrs. J. Veach, and Miss Lillian Veach.

Parties are being made up to spend New Year at Del Monte, where a golf tournament for the men and a bridge tournament for the ladies have been arranged for. Amongst those who have signified their intentions of being present are Mr. and Mrs. Wyatt Allen, Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Chenerey, and Mr. and Mrs. B. Brady.

Mrs. E. A. Sturgis, wife of Captain Sturgis, U. S. N., will sail on January 3, for Honolulu to join her husband, who will be stationed in the islands for the next two years.

Mrs. E. Walter Hedges will leave New York on January 13th for a tour abroad. She will sail on the Oceanic, going first to Paris, and expects to be absent for several months.

The marriage of Miss Helen Gentry of Kansas City, Missouri, and Edward Bonneau Noble took place at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Gentry, on Wednesday evening, December 30th. The Gentrys are socially prominent in Kansas city and Mr. Noble is the son of Mrs. Carrie Green Noble of this city. The young people will be at home at 2405 Webster street after February 15th.

Mrs. Jerome Lincoln and Miss Ethel Lincoln returned from their New York visit in time for the holidays. They are once more established in their own home on Scott street.

Dr. William E. Page has been appointed resident physician at the Hotel Potter. Mrs. Burling, mother of Mrs. Page, and Miss Lolita Burling, will in future make their home permanently with the Pages in Santa Barbara.

Mr. Frederick Hastings, the baritone of the Nordica Company, was the guest of honor at an enjoyable dinner given by Mr. and Mrs. George T. Wright at their home in Alameda last Friday evening. The guests numbered sixteen, amongst whom were Mr. and Mrs. Morgan, Miss Winifred June Morgan, Mrs. Selden S. Wright, Antonio de Grassi, Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Landsburger. Later other guests arrived to participate in the pleasures of a musical evening, an exceptionally enjoyable one, amongst so many gifted artists.

George T. Mayre made a flying trip to Washington, D. C., last week. He will return with the new year, accompanied by his family.

Bert Payne, son of the late Theodore Payne, arrived in the city in time to spend the holidays with his mother and brothers at the Fairmont. Curiosity is rife amongst his acquaintances as to whether he will renew his devotion to one of the attractive sisters who occupied his attention before he became a Yale student. It was surmised then that an engagement had been entered into but if so the public has not been taken into confidence.

The large New Year eve ball given by the Mayo Newhalls was in honor of Mayo Jr. and was distinctly an affair for the very young. Only those in their early teens were invited.

The dance given by the Hitchcock Military Academy in San Rafael was also for the youngest members of society, and proved a most enjoyable affair.

The annual concert and Christmas entertainment of the Crocker Old People's Home will take place on December 29th. An interesting program has been arranged, including a vaudeville stunt by Mrs. E. A. Sturgis, formerly Miss Edna Montgomery, assisted by her brother, Chauncey Montgomery. The Neapolitan Mandolin and Guitar Club will give selections, Miss Alice Poorman will give a reading, the Misses Sherwood will contribute and the Girls' Settlement Club is down for a one-act play. The entertainment will conclude with dancing and refreshments. The directors of the home and their friends will be the special guests of the evening. Mrs. Charles Stewart has worked indefatigably to make the affair a success.

The first of the Subscription dances, hereafter to be brilliant features of social life in San Francisco, was given last Saturday night in the Colonial ball room of the Hotel St. Francis. The spirit of holiday cheer inspired the motive of decorations; and wreaths of red berries, as well as palms and laurels, were used to create a very happy setting to the picture of beautiful women attired in costly gowns and jewels. A clever idea was introduced at an interval between the dances, when a number of the ladies, standing in the loges, swung tissue paper fishes, suspended from gilded poles, over the heads of the dancers, who eagerly sought to capture them. Each fish contained a favor, and great fun was aroused by the fantasy. The second dance will occur on the evening of February 6th.

Cards have just been received here from Chicago announcing the marriage in that city of Mr. A. D. Shepard, the popular President of the Pacific Improvement Company, and Miss Margaret Bowen. The news came as a pleasant surprise to Mr. Shepard's many friends who had not the slightest suspicion that his journey eastward had been taken at the behest of Cupid. Mr. Shepard is one of the enthusiastic members of the Sequoia Club, in the affairs of which he has played a conspicious part. The bride is one of Chicago's fairest daughters and I hear that she is a member of a distinguished family. On their arrival here Mr. and Mrs. Shepard will be at home to their friends at the Hotel Victoria.

THE NATURAL FLAVOR

Of the richest and purest cow's milk is retained in Borden's Peerless Brand Evaporated Milk (unsweetened). It is especially adapted for use either plain or diluted on breakfast fruits or cereals. In coffee and chocolate it is much better than fresh cream. It enriches all milk dishes.

SANTA BARBARA MISSION

Odd Things in the World

The chance discovery of a wild persimmon tree in an abandoned field is bringing to J. C. Evans of Harlem, Kansas, a good annual income. Fourteen years ago Mr. Evans was walking through an abandoned field in Eastern Jacobson County when he noticed the persimmon tree, and being a horticulturist he saw that it differed somewhat from the ordinary wild persimmon. He took some scions or sprouts from it and planted them on his farm in Clay County, just across the river. From these shoots he planted until he now has 200 fine bearing trees, the fruit of which is said to be the largest and finest flavored of native American persimmons. The fruit is about as large as a California plum and finds a ready sale in Kansas City at 30 cents a basket. The 200 trees yield an income of $10 or more a tree each year.

The senate of Glasgow University has issued an order that girl graduates are not to converse inside the cloisters with the students of the other sex. The girls much resent this action as encroaching upon their freedom. To enforce the order the senate has established a woman censor, whose appearance in the cloisters was the signal for a reception which was by no means effusive. The girls declare they themselves are quite capable guardians of their hearts and threaten to refuse to enter the classrooms if such an indignity is persisted in.

MUIR WOODS, MT. TAMALPAIS

First Giraffe in Europe

Dr. Johnson, as is well known, refused for many months to believe in the Lisbon earthquake, and Parisians formerly were just as skeptical as to the existence of the giraffe, a new specimen of which has just been added to the Jardin des Plantes. The earliest specimen of these gentle creatures was seen in Paris in the reign of Louis XVI. We learn from a French contemporary that the giraffe was first heard of in 1787, when it was described by a Frenchman named Levaillant, who had journeyed to the land of the Hottentots and Kaffirs. When the explorer referred to the animals with the long necks he was looked upon as a Munchausen and told that he was such in not the politest language. It was only when some living specimens arrived in the French capital that Levaillant's reputation for veracity was re-established, and then the animals for a long time formed the sensation of Paris, not only among the multitude but in all scientific circles.

Kiamil Pasha, the leader of the young Turks and the present grand vizier, is by birth a Jew, but became a Mohammedan when a boy through his father's conversion. Although about 75 years old, he is a man of very modern ideas, having served his country as governor of Syria, as ambassador at St. Petersburg and also as grand vizier. He is a great traveler and a wonderful linguist, speaking English, Hebrew, Greek, German, French and, of course, Arabic and Turkish. He is the most accomplished statesman in Turkey today.

Medals for Canal Workers

Medals of bronze manufactured from the old scrap left by Ferdinand de Lesseps in his unsuccessful effort to dig a canal across the Isthmus of Panama are soon to be struck in the mint in this city, to be presented to all American workmen on the present canal operations who can show a service record extending over two years. Correspondence toward this end has been conducted for some time, and it is expected the medals of honor will be ready for presentation in 1909. The idea originated with President Roosevelt on his visit to the Canal Zone. Large quantities of copper and tin have been collected from the useless French machinery for the purpose.

The Ten Travelers

(A popular puzzle of a generation ago.)

Ten weary, footsore travellers,
All in a woeful plight,
Sought shelter at a wayside inn
One dark and stormy night.

"Nine rooms, no more," the landlord said,
"Have I to offer you.
To each of eight a single bed,
But the ninth must serve for two."

A din arose. The troubled host
Could only scratch his head,
For of those tired men no two
Would occupy one bed.

The puzzled host was soon at ease—
He was a clever man—
And so to please his guests devised
This most ingenious plan:

A B C D E F G H I

In room marked A two men were placed,
The third was lodged in B,
The fourth to C was then assigned,
The fifth retired to D.

In E the sixth he tucked away,
In F the seventh man,
The eighth and ninth in G and H and,
And then to A he ran,

Wherein the host, as I have said,
Had laid two travellers by;
Then taking one—the tenth and last—
He lodged him safe in I.

Nine single rooms—a room for each—
Were made to serve for ten;
And this it is that puzzles me
And many wiser men.

Stage

Drew's latest

When John Drew next appears here it will be as the hero of William Sumerset Maugham's play "Jack Straw." Maugham is the brilliant young English author of four successful plays lately acted simultaneously on the stages of four of the leading London theaters. "Jack Straw" is written in a vein of light comedy and makes no pretensions to literary quality. "The name of Maugham," as the New York Sun remarks, "will not go thundering down the ages along with Racine, Ibsen, Shaw and Shakespeare .... A new intellect has not arrived on the stage in the person of Mr. Maugham, but a new entertainer has. 'Jack Straw' is a farce. It is merry and delightful." The hero of the play is something between a butler and an Archduke of Pomerania, and the comic elements of the piece arise from this confusion of identity. In London he was acted by Charles Hawtrey. In New York, where the play is being presented by Charles Froman at the Empire Theater, he is impersonated by John Drew. The part shows Mr. Drew at his best.

Van Ness Theatre

"Ben Hur," the inspiring religio-dramatic work from the pen of General Lew Wallace, is proving a tremendous drawing card at the Van Ness Theatre where it will remain the attraction for a second and final week. No Sunday performances are given but matinees are announced for Wednesday and Saturday. It is well for those who attend to know that the curtain rises promptly at eight o'clock and also that one of the greatest scenes of the play is shown at the outset. The one referred to is the desert where is shown The Wise Men and their camels. The Chariot race scene is shown to fine advantage on the immense stage of the Van Ness and the same can be said of The Mount of Olives scene where over three hundred people appear bearing palm branches. Conway Tearle in the title role is especially convincing. In fact he is exceptionally well fitted for the portrayal of the part. Florence St. John as Iras, Zaidee Appleton as Tirzah, Alice Haynes as Esther, Chas. M. Harris as Messala, are all well cast. The final performance of "Ben Hur" is announced for Saturday night, January 9th. "Brewster's Millions" will be the succeeding attraction, opening its engagement of eight days on Sunday, January 10th. The comedy-melodrama was seen at the Van Ness last season for two weeks and will be played this year by practically the same excellent company as that which appeared in it on the former occasion. Robert Ober will have the principal role. The attraction is under the management of Cohan and Harris who have staged the play on a very elaborate scale. The big yacht scene is said to be the height of stage realism.

"The College Widow"

So great has been the glee and so many have been the laughs caused by the hundreds of funny lines and amusing situations in "The College Widow" that the Valencia Theatre management has wisely decided to play George Ade's delightful pictorial comedy for another week. The concluding performances will not be given on Sunday afternoon and evening, as was originally intended, but seven days later. Everybody who loves clean, clear, witty American comedy, staged with artistic discretion and acted by a cast which fits every individual role to a nicety, will rejoice in the advent of "The College Widow." It has been gladdening the hearts of the laugh-hungry audiences during the week and has demonstrated the enduring charm of this inimitable stage picture of life in the small colleges of our land. Time does not dim the luster of George Ade's jolliest of plays. Although one knows all the bright lines by heart, he laughs just as much as the first time he heard them, for they are so vividly true to character and the life of the day. To most theatregoers "The College Widow" is a familiar and well beloved friend. There is not a single character type in the play which any one who has even a slight acquaintance with the universities cannot recognize and identify. One does not have to be a B. A. to enjoy the wit and humor of this delicious comedy, yet it must always appeal most strongly to those who have lived through just such experiences as the boys in the play; who have tender memories of other college "widows," other football games, faculty receptions, athletic co-eds and fraternity chums. The performance at the Valencia goes with a snap and zest absolutely refreshing. Robert Warwick, handsome, big of frame and looking Bill Bolton, the half-back hero, to the very finger tips, does fine work in this role. Blanche Stoddard gives just the correct touch to the character of the widow. Charles Dow Clark as "Bub" Hicks, the freshman, is one of the great laughing hits of the show. His blank facial expressions would make an undertaker forget his vocation. W. T. Sheehan as the trainer, Matty McGowan, is another of the irresistible mirth-provokers. The character of the waitress, Flora Wiggins, is acted by Helen Lackaye for every laugh there is in it. Grace Travers is the real thing as the athletic girl who says, when she regards her sunburned arms and neck at the faculty reception, that she wishes she had either taken more clothes off or not gone out in the sun. Antoinette Crawford is charming and piquant as the girl with the kodak and her "thank you" every time she gets her subject to pose is one of the catch tidbits of the performance.

WILFRED CLARKE

To appear at the Orpheum Theatre next week.

Belasco's "Girl"

Another week of "The Girl of the Golden West" begins next Monday evening at the Alcazar, with every indication that the drawing power of the great Belasco play has increased rather than decreased since its first presentation. The duration of its run has not yet been decided. It is not so much in its story as in the atmospheric effects employed and the brilliant acting of at least three members of the Alcazar company that "The Girl of the Golden West" enthralls. Indeed the narrative is little more thon a series of dramatic incidents in the career of "The Girl," but the clothing of each incident with a marvelous realism intensifies the general coherence, while the individual and team work of Evelyn

MME. GADSKI
Soon to appear at the Van Ness.

Vaughan as The Girl, Bertram Lytell as the road agent, and Will R. Walling as the sheriff compels admiring attention when it is in evidence. If fate had willed that Miss Vaughan instead of Blanche Bates create the role of The Girl, Broadway would now have another favorite, for all who have seen both actresses in the part pronounce the Alcazar's young leading woman more than equal to its exaction. Mr. Lytell has never appeared to better advantage than as the road agent, and Mr. Walling's acting as Jack Rance is excellent. The rest of the characters are minor ones, but all are portrayed in a way that preserves the rough and ready atmosphere which Belasco's marvelous stagecraft has created.

The Gadski Concerts

For her two concerts at the Van Ness Theatre Sunday afternoons, January 10th and 17th, Mme. Gadski has arranged programs of the greatest interest from every standpoint. At the first concert part I will consist of old songs by such composers as Hadyn, Reichardt, Young, Dr. Arne and some of the charming old French XVIII century chansons. Among the works in this group are "My mother bids me bind my hair," "The lass with the delicate air," "Venez agreeable printemps" and" Phyllis has such charming graces." The second part will consist of modern songs by Schubert, Franz, Frank La Forge and Richard Strauss. For the third part Mme. Gadski has chosen three Wagnerian gems, "Der Engel," "Slumbersong" and "Senta's Ballard" from "The Flying Dutchman." Mr. Frank La Forge, the splendid pianist and composer, will be the assisting artist. Prices will range from $2.50 down to $1.00. Mail orders will receive careful attention if addressed to Will L. Greenbaum. Mme. Gadski has been secured for the second concert of the St. Francis Musical Art Society Thursday evening, January 14th. Mme. Gadski's Oakland concert will be given at Ye Liberty Playhouse Wednesday afternoon, January 20th, and on this occasion she will give a recital entirely different from either of her San Francisco concerts. It is probable that she will repeat the St. Francis program on this occasion.

E. H. Sothern Coming

Mr. E. H. Sothern, the foremost American actor, will appear at the Van Ness during the two weeks commencing January 18th. For his San Francisco engagement Mr. Sothern has selected three of the most important plays of his entire repertoire—Hamlet, Lord Dundreary, and Richard Lovelace. He will be seen therefore in romantic drama, eccentric comedy and Shakesperian tragedy. Mr. Sothern presents "Lord Dundreary" in strict accordance with the manner of interpretation given by his father, the original parader of the role. "Richard Lovelace" is Mr. Sothern's latest dramatic achievement. Like in "If I Were King," he appears in this play as a poet-warrior. The scenes are laid in 1650. Lovelace was a poet who went to war. The play was written by Laurence Irving, son of Sir Henry Irving. It gives Mr. Sothern great opportunities for widely diversified portrayal.

The Lyric Hall "Pop" Concerts

The first of Will Greenbaum's "Pop" concerts at Lyric Hall will be given Sunday afternoon, January 3rd, with the Lyric String Quartette and Mrs. Oscar Mansfeldt as the executants. This will be the first of a series of four concerts to be given at intervals of four weeks. These concerts which Mr. Greenbaum hopes to establish as a permanent institution will open a new field to our local artists who will be given every opportunity of appearing before the public. The program arranged for this first concert is as follows: 1—String Quartette No. 12 (G major, Mozart; 2—Sonata for violin and piano (G minor), Tartini; 3—Quintette for strings and piano op. 5, Sinding. Mrs. Oscar Mansfeldt will be the assisting pianist and will play the sonata with Mr. William Hofman in addition to the very important piano part in the quintette. Season and single tickets are on sale at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s Sutter and Kearny street store and the box office at the hall will be open Sunday at 10 a. m. The general admission is 50 cents. The second concert will be given on the 31st. It will be styled "An Afternoon with Dvorak."

FREE FOR LADIES

MONDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 11th

At 2:30 O'Clock

GOLDEN GATE HALL

2137 SUTTER STREET, Bet. Steiner and Pierce

Scientific Lectures in English on

BEAUTY CULTURE

And

FACIAL BLEMISHES

By

Prof. Cristion, M.D., A.M.

Late of the Paris Academy of Sciences

Beauty doctor to Mmes. Bernhardt, Nordica, Patti and Langtry, assisted by one of the most beautiful women of her age, MME. L. M. MAYE. Monday afternoon, lecture is free.

Tuesday afternoon, admission, 50 cents.

"The Politicians"

Kolb and Dill have scored a tremendous hit at the Princess with their new musical farce, "The Politicians," which there is every indication is destined to be as popular as any of its predecessors. The production is a most elaborate one and the additions they have made to their company are certainly valuable acquisitions. Adele Rafter has made a complete conquest of her audiences and George A. Wright and Percy Bronson are in pleasant evidence as admirable comedians. The production is elaborate and beautiful and the entire entertainment is enjoyable throughout. "The Politicians" will be continued until further notice.

Thomas's "Arizona"

After an extended engagement in England and after again playing to crowded houses for over 150 nights at the Academy of Music, New York city, Augustus Thomas's masterpiece "Arizona" will return to this city with most of the original cast and the same mammoth production which pleased the theatre-goers abroad and in the east. "Arizona" will open at the American theatre Sunday afternoon and will be here for one week only with the usual matinees. The critics and public are unanimous in declaring "Arizona" to be one of the best of American plays. The story is full of heart interest and of tense situations which are relieved by the richest kind of comedy, skillfully worked in by the author who has given so many clever plays to the American stage. The story of the play revolves around the officers of the Eleventh United States Infantry and the family of Henry Canby, a wealthy ranchman. Col. Bonham's wife who is young and pretty becomes infatuated with Captain Hodgman, and his scheme to have her elope with him is nipped in the bud by the timely arrival of Lieutenant Denton, a young officer who is in love with her sister. Denton is found in a compromising position with the colonel's wife and in order to protect the woman refuses to speak. This leads to many trying scenes but in the end the truth is bared and all are united happily. The production is under the management of Hollis E. Cooley who has engaged such capable players as Ernest Allen, J. J. Hyland, Edward Mulligan, Julia Morris, Alma Bradley, Frederick Webber and Charles E. Graham for the principal characters, while all of the minor parts are in the hands of players who have been portraying the roles for several years past. The following attraction will be "Fifty Miles From Boston," by George M. Cohan.

Orpheum Vaudeville

Rare enjoyment may be looked for at the Orpheum next week beginning this Sunday matinee when a new program will be introduced. Wilfred Clarke, a dashing light comedian, will appear in a farce of which he is the author, entitled "What Will Happen Next." Mr. Clarke, who is a nephew of that great tragic genius, Edwin Booth, and a brother of Creston Clarke, will have the support of his own company. De Biere, a wonderful illusionist from London will introduce some astonishing novelties. The Salvaggis, the famous whirlwind dancers from the El Dorado, Paris, are expected to prove a tremendous success. The troop includes four ladies and one gentleman whose dancing is described as "furious and strenuous." The effect of their performance is heightened by a picturesque setting showing the Bal Tabar, Paris, during its busiest moments. In addition to their whirlwind dancing the Salvaggis introduce characteristic Parisian, Spanish and classic numbers. Edwin Latell, a very amusing comedian and a capital musician, will present a musical monologue, called "Dull Care." Josie and Julia Rooney, daughters of Pat Rooney, will do a singing and dancing stunt. Hibbert and Warren, two minstrels, will indulge in a pastime which they call "The Pianist and the Dancer." Gus Hibbert is considered one of the best eccentric dancers in this country, while his partner, Fred Warren, is thoroughly at home at the piano. Eva Taylor, whose recent success in "Chums" is fresh in the public mind, will return for one week only, and Gus Edwards' School Boys and Girls, whose popularity is greater than ever will conclude their engagement with this program. A new series of Orpheum Motion Pictures will conclude the performance.

VAN NESS THEATRE Cor. Van Ness and Grove Gottlob, Marx & Co., Mgrs. Phone Market 500

Beginning Monday, January 4th, Second and Last Week,
Matinees Wednesday and Saturday. No Sunday Performances.
Klaw and Erlanger's New and Greater

BEN HUR

Last Time Saturday Night, January 9th.
Sunday, January 10th: "Brewster's Millions."
Coming E. H. SOTHERN.

NEW ALCAZAR THEATRE Cor. Sutter and Steiner Class "A" Building Phone West 6036

BELASCO & MAYER, Owners and Managers.
Monday Night, January 4th, Starts the Second Week of David Belasco's Picturesque Play of California in the Mining Days

THE GIRL OF THE GOLDEN WEST

Superbly Acted and Produced.
Prices: Evenings, 25c to $1.00. Matinees, Saturday and Sunday, 25c to 50c.

PRINCESS THEATRE PHONE WEST 663 Ellis Street, near Fillmore Absolutely Class "A" Building
S. LOVERICH, MANAGER Matinee, Saturday and Sunday

This and Next Week Only
KOLB & DILL
In Another Tremendous Hit

THE POLITICIANS

Prices—Evenings 25c, 50c, 75c, $1.00. Matinees (Except Sundays and Holidays, 25c, 50c, 75c

---

ORPHEUM Ellis Street, near Fillmore Absolutely Class "A" Bldg Phone West 6000

Week Beginning this Sunday Afternoon. Matinee Every Day.
A GREAT NEW SHOW.
WILFRED CLARKE & CO. in his own farce, "What Will Happen Next"; DE BIERE, European Illusionist; LES SALVAGGIS, Parisian Whirlwind Dancers; EDWIN LATELL, Musical Monologist; ROONEY SISTERS, the American Dancers; HIBBERT & WARREN, the Pianist and the Dancer; EVA TAYLOR & CO. in "Chums"; NEW ORPHEUM MOTION PICTURES. Last Week of GUS EDWARDS' SCHOOL BOYS AND GIRLS.
Evening Prices: 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c. Box Seats, $1.00. Matinee Prices (Except Sundays and Holidays): 10c, 25c, 50c.

VALENCIA THEATRE Valencia Street, between Thirteenth and Fourteenth Phone Market 17

This and Tomorrow Afternoons and Evenings and All Next Week,
The Biggest Laugh in Years!

THE COLLEGE WIDOW

George Ade's Pictorial Comedy.
Presented by the Full Strength of the Valencia Stock Company, including Robert Warwick and Blanche Stoddard. Sixty People on the Stage.
Regular Matinees, Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday, Prices 25c to 50c.
Evenings, 25c to 75c. Box Seats, $1.00.
Monday, January 11—"Prince Hagen," by Upton Sinclair.

AMERICAN THEATRE Market St., nr. Seventh Phone Market 381

Week Commencing Sunday Matinee, January 3rd, America's Greatest Play

ARIZONA

By Augustus Thomas.
One Year Each—New York, Chicago, England.
Prices, Evenings, 25c, 50c, 75c, $1.00. No higher. Matinees, 25c, 50c, 75c.
Next: George M. Cohan's "Fifty Miles From Boston."

THE LYRIC HALL "POP" CONCERT

(Lyric Hall, corner Larkin and Turk Sts.)
THE LYRIC QUARTETTE
Assisted by Mrs. Oscar Mansfeldt,
This Sunday Afternoon, January 3rd at 2:30.
Reserved Seats $1.00 and 50 cents. General Admission 50cents.

Extra! Two Feasts of Song by

Mme. GADSKI

Sunday Afternoons, January 10th and 17, VAN NESS THEATRE.
Seats $2.50, $2.00, $1.50, $1.00 ready next Wednesday at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s Kearny and Sutter Street store only where complete programs may be obtained. Mail orders accompanied by current funds carefully attended to address to Will L. Greenbaum.

GADSKI IN OAKLAND
Wednesday Afternoon, January 20th at 3:30 "Ye Liberty.
Coming: Katherine Goodson, Pianiste.

Fioraccio

(Continued from Page 8.)

"Did you bury him again?"

"Not I, indeed! And, besides, your reverence must come, for perhaps it isn't all quite natural. I mean—you know—

"This morning I can't manage it; I have that affair at X——."

We each took a thick stick, and started, for the cemetery.

"You could come before that; the whole thing won't take more than an hour."

"No, no; mind what I tell you. Go and bury him again."

"But—"

"Only you put him deep enough, I'll promise you he won't come above ground again."

The next morning there he was again. The priest called out:

"What now?"

"Same old story."

"What story?"

"Fioraccio."

"Above ground again?"

"Just that."

"It doesn't seem possible."

"But it's so. If you don't believe me come and see for yourself."

"I do believe you, but what can I do? You must just bury him again. Some one must have—"

"If you saw the state he's in you wouldn't think anybody would be likely to want to meddle with him."

"I don't know. Sometimes—"

"Well, I'll bury him this time, and then we'll see."

That same day—I remember it as if it were yesterday—I was taking some tools to the smith to be mended, when I came upon Cecco coming away from the burial-ground with the spade in his hand.

"Been putting somebody to bed?" I asked.

"If you knew!" said he.

"What?"

"I've just buried Fioraccio."

"Only now. What did you keep him above ground so long for? Wanted to be quite sure he was dead?"

"I've buried him over again—twice." And he tells me the whole story.

I wouldn't believe him, and I remember saying: "I'm sure somebody helps him to get above ground."

"Somebody does, you may be sure, and it's easy to guess, who."

"I know what you mean. Somebody who has no need of a spade. Look here," I went on, "Let's you and I come and watch here to-night, and see who comes. Are you afraid?"

"No!" he answered; "not with you. I wouldn't stay alone, though."

That night at nine o'clock there I was.

So we each took a thick stick, and started for the cemetery. It was an ugly black night, promising rain. Outside we couldn't stay; we should have been seen.

Cecco opened the gate, and we went in; but we could not shut the gate when we were inside.

"Leave it ajar," said I, "if any one comes it won't be by the gate, but over the wall."

"But here we shall be seen."

"Where's he buried?"

"There, by the dead-house."

"Let's go in there, then."

"In the dead-house?"

"Where else? There's no other place."

There was a bench, and we sat down. I began to light my pipe.

"What are you doing?" asked Cecco; "if they see the light they'll know there's some one here."

"Oh yes, as if I was going to stay here all night without even smoking; I should go to sleep."

We said very little more; neither he nor I had any wish to talk. We heard nothing but the bats, which kept flying in and out; now and then a dog barked.

The clock struck eleven. I thought I heard steps on the road, but they passed by.

"It's Faustino," said Cecco. "I know his whistle"—for he had began to whistle as he passed the gate, as people do when they feel a little timid. About half an hour later an owl flew close by my face, and gave me a great start; but she was afraid of us, and flew off, and we heard her hoot outside.

"It must be nearly midnight."

"We might go now. Nothing is likely to happen to-night," said I.

"Wait till the clock strikes."

"Very well, we'll wait."

"Listen, there's the clock. One, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten, eleven—twelve."

I felt him catch me by the arm.

"Look, look there!"

There, where Fioraccio was buried, the earth began to heave and roll, rising slowly, slowly, as if it were pushed up from below, and we saw him rise out of it upright; he remained so for a moment, and then fell at full length on the grass. Cecco said not a word, but strode off across the cemetery and went out, and I after him. I wanted to turn back and look if it were really he, but I hadn't the courage; I passed close by him, but I didn't look. I tell it to you as it happened. Cecco was trembling from head to foot; I knew by his voice.

R. H. PEASE, Pres. J. A. SHEPARD, Vice-Pres. C. F. RUNYON, Sec'y R. H. PEASE, Jr., Treas.

New Store and Location of the

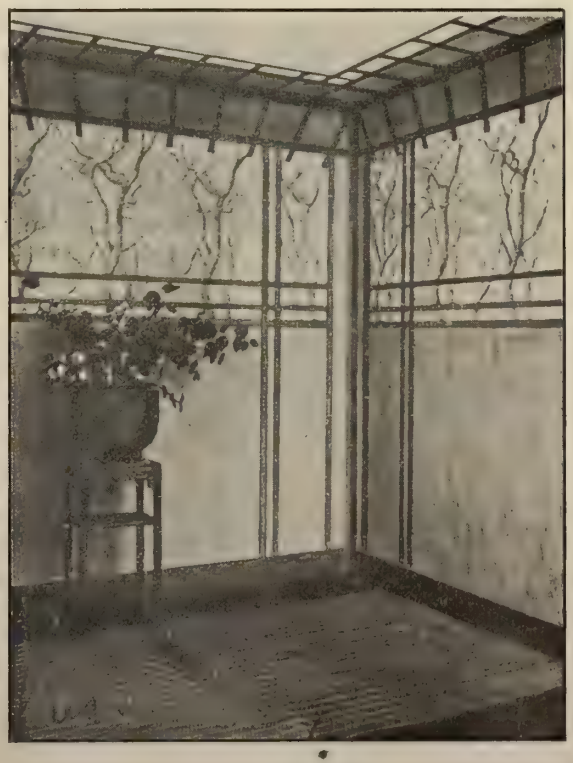
GOODYEAR RUBBER COMPANY

587-589-591 MARKET ST. 17-19-21-23-25 SECOND ST.

NEW YEAR GREETING

Start 1909 aright. Telephone us about wiring or repairing.

Telephone Douglas 1185 and 1186.



LEVY ELECTRIC CO.

HURRY UP ELECTRICIANS

LEVY ELECTRIC WIRING COMPANY

Electric Trains, Cars, Dynamos, Motors, Batteries, Machinery, Magic Lanterns Moving Pictures, Telegraph and Telephones, Wireless Outfits, X-rays, Etc.

648 Sacramento St. San Francisco 1205 Polk Street

We have the wall paper in stock that made this room. We made this Let us make your home beautiful with our Wall Papers, Curtains and so on.

TAYLOR & SINCLAIR CO.

INTERIOR DECORATORS BUSH AT VAN NESS

"Did you see?" he said.

"I saw it. Won't you shut the gate?"

"I won't touch anything. The rector must come to-morrow and see for himself—he wouldn't believe me. I'll go straight to him now, and you must go with me."

"But we can't go at this hour," said I; "to-morrow morning early, rather. I'll go home with you to sleep. I told them at home that I should be out all night."

In the morning early we went to the priest, and told him all that happened.

"And what are we to do?" he asked.

"If your reverence doesn't know who should?" asked Cecco.

"If you tried—"

"Tried what? Burying him again? You see it's of no use."

'Certainly it is no use," said I; "in holy ground he won't stay, that's quite plain—such a rascal as he was."

"Hush!" said the priest. "Don't tell any one of this—I lay it on your consciences; and, besides, we have no right to judge the dead. You,Cecco, go and put him once more underground."

"Your reverence may command me in everything, but, saving your presence, I can't and I won't go back to the cemetery again; here's the key, but go I won't—that's flat."

"Never mind, I'll send some one with you, if you're frightened. And you (to me) go to the convent of ————, with a note for the father superior."

In fact he wrote a note, and I took it to the convent. The superior read it, and said to me: "I understand; tell the rector that everything shall be done as he asks."

I took back the answer to the priest.

"Have you got him underground?" I asked.

"Yes, but I thought we never should manage it, I assure you."

"Do you want anything more of me?"

"Not now; to-night, perhaps. If I want you I'll send for you."

"You will find me at home; I'll come directly."

All the while I was at work I was wondering what the priest could want of me, but I thought it must have something to do with Fioraccio. Just after sunset the priest's nephew came to tell me I was to go to the parsonage. I went, and found there two Capuchin friars, who had come to exorcise Fioraccio. The priest wanted me to come with him.

"When?" I asked.

"To-night."

"Then I must go and tell my wife."

"What in the world are you doing always out at night?" asked she.

I told her some story or other, and after supper I went off to the priest. He would have it that I should sup again with him. The friars would neither eat nor drink, and we heard them praying aloud in the next room, and reciting the office. Just before midnight one of the friars put his head in at the door and said:

"It is time now. Let us go."

The priest turned pale, but he was forced to make a virtue of necessity and to come with us. We took a lantern, and went out of the house by the garden door. There were five of us—the priest, the two friars, Cecco, and I, all as silent as the grave; in the dark, that way, we seemed like conspirators. I was in front with the Capuchins; Cecco and the priest came behind. When we came to the gate I lit the lantern; plenty of trouble it gave me, too; I thought it would never light, but at last I found a match that would kindle. The priest was the first to enter the cemetery.

"What did I tell you?" whispered Cecco; "there he is again!"

I was in front. The light fell full on the face of Fioraccio. But why do I call it a face? It was black as charcoal, with open mouth and those two yellow teeth, and the yellow eyes wide open, shining in the darkness. I turned sick and stopped short.

"Heavens! how ugly he is!" I cried.

"Hush!" said the friar who was nearest me.

Then they put on their stoles, opened their books, sprinkled the dead with holy water, and recited the service of exorcism. I held the light, the priest clung to my sleeve, and I felt him tremble; indeed, from time to time, he gave such convulsive starts that the lantern shook in my hand, and the friars could not see to read. "Antonio! Antonio!" called out the friar, "Antonio! answer, in God's name."

Not a word did he say.

"Try calling him Fioraccio; perhaps he won't answer to his Christian name." This I whispered into the friar's ear.

The Capuchin sprinkled the corpse once more with holy water, then began calling, "Fioraccio, answer, answer!"

There came a deep voice, hollow-sounding, and far away, as if from fathoms underground.

"Who calls me? What do you want?"

It was the devil, who answered for him.

"Why do you not stay where you have been laid. What is the reason you do not rest?"

"Because I cannot."

"Why can you not rest?"

"Because—" And he began to tell us why. Such things! such things! that he had done in life. The priest put it all under the seal of confession with us afterwards He said "that he was damned body and soul." And saying this, he swore a fearful oath. And then he said:

"Take me away from here."

"Where do you want to go?"

"To the Arno. Under water twenty braccios deep. There, where I can hear no bells."

SUNSET MAGAZINE

JANUARY NUMBER

The Blue Moon

A story of mystery and romance in the quest of a lost mine in Nevada. This is the latest novel by Mary Austin, famous as the author of "The Land of Little Rain." It begins in January and will run through six numbers.

Defense of the Pacific

Two stirring articles, profusely illustrated, and written from army and navy standpoints. Naval Constructor H. A. Evans discusses from the view point of an expert, the vital question of provision on the Pacific Coast for the care of a great fleet. Col. M. P. Maus, U. S. A., who commanded the recent army maneuver camp at Atascadero, points out what such schools of war mean to the country's defense.

Jimmie

The $500 prize story, a tale of the desert and the mystery of man's soul. A powerful tale by a new writer, Ralph W. Gilman.

Helping the Indians

An authoritative statement by President Jordan, of Stanford University, regarding the Riverside conference, its aims and its results.

208 pages of pictures by the best artists and stories by the brightest writers, all upon Western subjects and full of Western color.

Now on Sale at All Newstands 15 Cents

UNION LUMBER COMPANY

Redwood and Pine Lumber

Railroad Ties, Telegraph Poles, Shingles, Split Shakes, Etc.

CROCKER BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

DIVIDEND NOTICE

CENTRAL TRUST COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA, Market and Sansome Sts. Branches: 624 Van Ness Ave. and 3039 Sixteenth St. For the half year ending December 31, 1908, a dividend has been declared on deposits in the Savings Department of this Bank at the rate of four (4) per cent per annum, free of taxes, payable on and after Saturday, January 2, 1909. Dividends not called for are added to and bear the same rate of interest as the principal from January 1, 1909. B. G. TOGNAZZI, Manager.

DIVIDEND NOTICE

HUMBOLDT SAVINGS BANK, 783 Market Street, near Fourth—(Member of the Associated Savings Banks of San Francisco). For the half year ending December 31, 1908, a dividend has been declared at the rate of four (4) per cent per annum on all savings deposits, free of taxes, payable on and after Saturday, January 2, 1909. Dividends not called for are added to and bear the same rate of interest as the principal from January 1, 1909. W. E. PALMER, Secretary.

DIVIDEND NOTICE

SECURITY SAVINGS BANK (Member of Associated Savings Banks of San Francisco), 316 Montgomery Street. For the half year ending December 31, 1908, dividends upon all deposits at the rate of four (4) per cent per annum, free of taxes, will be payable on and after January 2, 1909. FRED W. RAY, Secretary.

DIVIDEND NOTICE

THE GERMAN SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY (Member of Associated Savings Banks of San Francisco), 526 California Street, Mission Branch, 2572 Mission Street near Twenty-second. For the half year ending December 31, 1908, a dividend has been declared at the rate of four (4) per cent per annum on all deposits, free of taxes, payable on and after Saturday, January 2, 1909. Dividends not called for are added to and bear the same rate of interest as the principal from January 1, 1909. GEORGE TOURNY, Secretary.

DIVIDEND NOTICE

THE SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY (Member of Associated Savings Bank of San Francisco), 101 Montgomery Street, corner Sutter Street. For the half year ending December 31, 1908, a dividend has been declared at the rate of four (4) per cent per annum on all deposits, free of taxes, payable on and after Saturday, January 2, 1909. Dividends not called for are added to and bear the same rate of interest as the principal from January 1, 1909. Money deposited before January 10th will draw interest from January 1, 1909. WM. A. BOSTON, Cashier.

DIVIDEND NOTICE

SAN FRANCISCO SAVINGS UNION (Member of Associated Savings Banks of San Francisco), northwest corner California and Montgomery Streets. For the half year ending December 31, 1908, a dividend has been declared at the rates per annum of four and one-quarter (4¼) per cent on term deposits and four (4) per cent on ordinary deposits, free of taxes, payable on and after Saturday, January 2, 1909. Depositors are entitled to draw their dividends at any time during the succeeding half year. A dividend not drawn will be added to the deposit account, become a part thereof and earn dividend from January 1st. LOVELL WHITE, Cashier.

"You shall have three braccios."

We heard another oath, always in that voice underground, for Fioraccio's mouth never stirred. And the friars sprinkled him again with holy water.

"For the last time; how much water must you have?"

"Five braccios."

"You shall have three, and no more."

He went on swearing. At last he said:

"Well, if I must I must, but not in too much of a hurry."

And at that moment we saw something, dressed all in red, fly up over the wall.

"We must come back to-morrow," said the friar. "God have us all in his holy keeping!"

We left the cemetery; you should have seen the priest how he trembled. The next day he sent for me and told me: "We must take him away to-night, and you must make a coffin for him."

"But I never made a coffin in my life."

"You can manage it somehow. You can generally get to the end of what you undertake. And it needn't be such a fine piece of work, you know, so long as it holds together."

"Well," said I, "I'll do my best." I went home, and looked up some chestnut planks I had, and made the coffin. Then I went to the parsonage, where I found the Capuchin friars and the priest talking together.

"The coffin is done," I said. "Shall I bring it here?"

"What are you thinking of? To-night, after dark, you must take it to the cemetery and put him into it; you can call Cecco, if he will go with—you, in short, do the best you can; only get him into the coffin. Then he must be carried—somehow—"

"I understand," said I; "I am to look after the whole business. Very well, I'll see what I can do. Cecco wouldn't hear of carrying him; we had better ask some of the Brotherhood."

"No; because we must keep it as quiet as we can."

"As quiet as you like. But it is a long way to the Arno, and that coffin is made of chestnut. It is heavy, I can tell you."

"Can't you find a cart?"

It was settled that I should borrow my cousin's cart, and the priest should find some more men. Then I went for Cecco, who made no end of difficulty about coming, and after dark we carried the coffin to the cemetery. There he was again, uglier than ever. One could see that he was damned only to look at him.

"Here, Cecco," said I, "help me to lift him." I turned round. No Cecco. I ran out of the gate, and found him in the road.

"Look here," said he, "if you can't manage it by yourself, you must get somebody else, for you've seen the last of me in there."

I went back. I had a great mind to run away, too, but I had promised his reverence, and, besides, it wouldn't have done to make a scandal. So I set the coffin on its side, and rolled him into it. Blessed Virgin! it almost made me faint away. Then I had nothing better to do than to turn round and look at him. It was the light, perhaps, but he looked just as if he was grinning as he used to when he was alive. I threw the cover on, anyhow, and bolted—I must say I bolted—as hard as I could go. The priest told me to harness the cart towards ten o'clock at night, when there would be no one about, and bring it to the cemetery. I found waiting for me at the gate the priest, the two friars, Cecco, a brother of Cecco's, and three others whom the priest had sent for. We took up the coffin in silence, and put it in the cart; then I took the donkey by the bridle, and we set off. It was a dark, close night, when one could hardly breathe or see where one was going, though we had two lanterns. What we went through on that road God only knows—now we were on this side of the road, now on that, now among the trees, never ten paces straight ahead; and the poor donkey tugged and tugged, as if the coffin had been made of lead. Every minute one or the other of the lanterns went out. From time to time we passed through a thick fog, so thick that we lost sight of each other, of the east, of everything. The friars went on muttering prayers and sprinkling holy water, and we recommended ourselves to God and to the Madonna. Even I lost courage altogether. As for the poor priest, we had to leave him at a farm-house on the road, for he could go no farther. But that was nothing to what followed. Just as we passed the turning at the mill of ——— a hurricane burst over us that uprooted trees, carried off hay-stacks, tiles off the roofs, all sorts of things. We were surrounded by a cloud of leaves, twigs, straw, and dust. I never remember such a whirlwind. Two hay-stacks flew off into the air as if they had been locks of tow; a big pine-tree that two men couldn't clasp round went rolling over the plain like a twig; and along the banks of the Arno oaks uprooted, willows twisted together like yarn. Nothing to be seen of the cart or of the beast—nothing; we could not tell which way they had gone. We recommended our souls to Heaven, and went on. I don't know how we found our way to the bank of the Arno, just there where it is deepest. We could hardly recognize the place. We found the donkey standing there, quite still.

"Here," said the friar.

"No," said the same voice we had heard in the cemetery. "More water—more water!" And then oaths, to make one's hair stand on end with fright.

"No; there's enough here."

Then more oaths, and more oaths.

"Here," said the friar, "I command you, in the name of God!"

All of a sudden there was a great rush and sputter of flame, as if one had thrown sulphur on a fire, and we saw a figure like a galley-slave, all in red, and heard a splash and a gurgle, and when we looked at the cart it was empty. I went home, put the beast in the stall, and turned to go to the house.

"Who's that?" cried my wife. "Wait; I'll get up."

I didn't answer; it didn't seem as if it was me she was speaking to.

"Will you have something to eat?" she said. "You had no supper yesterday. I'll make a fire and cook this bit of beef; it will only take a minute." So saying, she began to kindle the fire.

I looked on while my wife put a fagot on the coals, which began to sputter and send out sparks, and I said, without thinking:

"Just like him."

"Just like who?" said she.

I perceived that I had said too much, and wanted not to say anything more; but it was of no use, she had it all out of me. I tried to eat, but couldn't swallow a mouthful. I went to bed. When I was nearly asleep I heard the house door open. I listened, and heard a noise as if the kettle and the bucket were rolling over the floor.

"There's somebody there," said my wife.

"Hush," said I, "I hear them," for the noise began again.

"Get up; there's some one there."

I got up and went into the kitchen. Nobody there—the bucket and the kettle each in its place, the door shut and bolted. I went back to bed, but couldn't close an eye until morning. The noise kept on all night in the kitchen. The next morning, when I went out, I met the old woman who had taken care of Fioraccio. She stopped me and asked me about what had happened in the night, of which she had heard something. When I told her about the noise in the kitchen, she said: 'At that same hour I could not sleep, and I took up my rosary meaning to say it for him. Hardly had I begun when I saw him appear, all dressed in red, and he said to me:

"'No need to say it for me; it's of no use. I'm damned—damned for all eternity.'"

A BURNING QUESTION

How to Keep Warm Frosty Mornings? Try the

HOME OPEN FRONT OIL HEATER

A PERFECT HEATER
PORTABLE
SAFE

Cheerful as an open grate fire. Most successful oil heater ever invented. Sold on a guarantee. If not satisfactory money refunded.

Made in Three Sizes

MANUFACTURED BY

W. W. MONTAGUE & CO.

Corner Turk and Polk Streets, San Francisco.

HOTEL EMPIRE

BROADWAY AND 63d ST.
(Lincoln Square)
NEW YORK CITY

A Family and Transient Hotel of the Best Class

In the Very Center of Everything Worth While

Cafe and Restaurant noted for excellent cooking, efficient service and moderate prices.

Rooms with detached bath $1.50 per day and up.
Rooms with private bath $2.00 per day and up.
Parlor, bedroom and bath $3.50 per day and up.

W. JOHNSON QUINN,, Prop.

The Gold Medal for quality in the Whisky Section of the Franco-British Exhibition has been awarded to the "White Horse" Whisky, belonging to Mackie & Co., Distillers, Ltd., Islay and Glasgow. It was only last month this old-established firm was honored with the Appointment by Royal Warrant to His Majesty the King.

The Well-Dressed Man

What to Wear, When and Where

Written exclusively for Town Talk by J. M. JACOBI

For the benefit of those men who have neither the time nor inclination to study the art of Dressing Correctly, we will publish a series of weekly Fashion Chats.

We shall also start a query column, in which the reader may ask questions pertaining to dress. These questions will be answered always in the following issue.

THE FULL DRESS SUIT AND ITS DUTIES

To be worn only after 6 p. m. where ladies are present in full evening dress for the following functions: Reception, Evening Wedding, Formal Dinner, Dance and Theatre. The complete attire for these occasions are as follows:

Full Dress Coat. With peaked lapels, these lapels to be silk faced.

Waist Coat. White, single breasted of pique or silk with either 3 or 4 buttons.

Trousers. Same material as dress coat, to have braid or soutache at side seams.

O'Coats. Inverness, Raglan, Protector, Chin or Chesterfield in oxford grey or black, colors proper, Protector and Chin coats most popular this season.

Shirts. Cuffs attached, plain white or pique bosom, also bosoms with one-thirty-second inch knife pleat.

Collars. Round tabbed wings or poke.

Cravat. White lawn tie, silk or pique (be sure to get tie to fit collars).

Gloves. White kid gloves with self back.

Hat. Silk or opera hat for theatre.

Boots. Patent leather, calf or calf with either cloth or kid tops to button. For dance patent leather pamps.

Hose. Black lisle or silk.

Jewelry. Pearl or moonstone links, studs to match.

That the dress suit is only to be worn after 6 p. m. and what a sartorial crime it is to do otherwise is plainly shown by the following anecdote: A man who committed an atrocious crime was confined at Sing Sing awaiting the day of his electrocution, the hour of which was 2 p. m. When asked as customary to express his last wish, his desire was to be electrocuted in a full dress suit—which wish was granted. Now a prominent sartorial art journal is in doubt which was the greater crime, the one he committed or that of wearing a dress suit before 6 p. m.

Automobile roads between Belmont and the fourteen mile house, south of San Francisco, are in bad shape according to M. W. Levy, who returned from a trip south several days ago in his Studebaker touring car. Levy says that while the rains have been to a large extent responsible for the conditions of the roads there is plenty of room for improvement of a character which would not be so effected by rains. "For instance," says Levy, "men are at work on portions of the road right along, but, it seems that the moment one end of the road is repaired, the other is in bad shape and this back and forth work is not doing the road the good that it should. There seems to be nothing permanent about it. The last time I went down that way, a few days ago, we went down by way of Oakland. The road to San Jose by that route is in good condition, but, it was coming back by way of San Bruno and San Mateo that we encountered the cut up pieces of roadway that I refer to and which in my opinion needs immediate attention with the view of making the improvements of a more permanent nature."

Mid-winter motoring, through snow and mud is not the pleasure that summer touring affords the automobilist, according to Jack Nagle, who owns a 30 horsepower Chalmers-Detroit car in a northern town. The roads throughout the northern section of the State are reported to be in bad condition and the chances are that few of the owners of automobiles will wear their cars out touring before spring. The snow, which would be a novelty to local motorists, is reported to be one of the worst drawbacks to the automobile enthusiasts around New Castle.

Joseph A. Bouquet of this city purchased from the Howard Automobile Company this week his second Buick automobile. His first purchase was of the '07 model two-cylinder runabout which he used in his buisness. He took delivery this week of a two-cylinder touring car which he will use exclusively for the pleasure of his family.

"Those Lustrous Eyes are Murine Eyes"

MURINE EYE REMEDY

A Favorite Toilet Accessory

Has won many Friends as an Aid to the Restoration of Normal Conditions, Healthful Tone and Natural Brilliancy to Eyes that Need Care.

It has proven of great value in the Home as

An Eye Tonic

for Weak, Red, Inflamed & Itching Eyes & Eyelids.

As An Eye Insurance

Tourists, Automobilists and others exposed to Strong Winds, Dust and Reflected Sunlight, which produce Irritation, Granulation, Ulceration and Weak Eyes, will find in Murine a Safe, Soothing Eye Lotion affording "Reliable Relief."

The Finishing Touch

Bewitchingly Costumed
In Costliest Gown,
For the Social Event,
At the South End of Town.

The "Finishing Touch"
To the Toilet is seen
In the Act above Pictured
"Two drops" of Murine.

Try Murine for the "Automobile Eye"

LARGEST COLLECTION ON THE COAST

DIAMONDS AND GEMS

BALDWIN JEWELRY CO.

1261 VAN NESS AVENUE AT SUTTER

RACING

NEW CALIFORNIA JOCKEY CLUB

OAKLAND RACE TRACK

Six races each week day, rain or shine. First Race at 1:40 p. m.

For special trains stopping at the track, take Southern Pacific Ferry, foot of Market street; leave at 12 M.; thereafter every twenty minutes until 1:40 P. M.

No smoking in the last two cars, which are reserved for ladies and their escorts.

PERCY W. TREAT, Sec'y. THOS. H. WILLIAMS, Pres.

Auto Notes

E. R. Thomas says: "I do not favor a reduction or increase of tariff on foreign automobiles on account of French and Italian labor ranging from seven to ten cents per hour as against twenty-five to thirty-five cents per hour for American labor. The present tariff will not prohibit the importation of the surplus product of foreign manufacturers wherever they so desire. On account of the newness of the industry, out of the whole two hundred manufacturers a limited number are firmly established on a profit-making basis. In my opinion, the industry has hardly started in this country. There are two million horseless vehicles made annually in the United States, and contrary to public opinion, over twelve hundred thousand of them are for transportation of individuals, and if the industry is given further opportunity for development within a comparatively few years, instead of turning out fifty thousand per annum, the country will absorb two hundred and fifty thousand automobiles per annum, if unretarded by reduction of tariff and permitting foreigners to compete for all classes of trade. It is not the tariff but home competition that regulates the cost to the consumer for the reason that the foreign manufacturer charges a much higher price than the American for the same quality and character of machine."

A unique investigation conducted by a Chicago magazine with a view to ascertaining the best quality of auto tires in use has resulted in a decision that the Diamond tires surpass all others in durability.

"Courtesy of autoists to one another on the automobile roads in Europe is on the decline," writes Frank H. Baird who is at present touring Europe in his Studebaker touring car which he purchased while in California last spring from the local Studebaker Bros.' Company. "I have recently made the famous

M. W. Levy and party of friends leaving the St. Francis in his special constructed Studebaker touring car. Reading from left to right those seated in the automobile are Sam Marshall, M. W. Levy, Harry H. White, J. Bradford, Chester N. Weaver and Frank B. Dickson.

Paris-Berlin run and while on the road encountered many autoists in all sorts of plights from punctures to machines that had taken fire and burned down. It is deplorable the absolute selfish attitude which seems to prevail here. And such a contrast to the brotherly spirit which prevails on the roads in California! The drivers here hardly stop to aid even when they know that someone has perhaps been injured. It is needless to say that I am enjoying the change. During the few weeks that I have been abroad I have traveled no less than 3,000 miles in my machine and I can truthfully say that it is a wonderful car for endurance. I shall spend the next month in Italy after which I will go back to France where I intend to rest with my family for a few weeks and then return to America." The letter which was dated Berlin was received yesterday by Chester N. Weaver, manager of the local Studebaker Bros.' Company branch.

The first of the '09 Buick "White Streak" are now on exhibition in the sale room of the Howard Automobile Company. The new models have many improvements and refinements over the '08 model which won such an enviable reputation in the track meets and hill climbs during the current year. The '09 "White Streaks" are of three inch longer wheel base than the '08 model. It has detachable single rumble seat, double tourabout seats or baby tonneau. The regular tire equipment for the coming year is 30x3½ inches. A more economical oiling system with dash sight feed has been installed. What is probably the greatest improvement is the double ignition system with Remy magneto with which the new cars are equipped.

Mr. John W. Stetson of Oakland received the first Cadillac "30" to be delivered at retail in San Francisco by Cuyler Lee.

Speaking of the recent trip of the one hundred members of the Chamber of Commerce to Southern California, Mr. E. P. Brinegar of the Pioneer Automobile Companys, says that the automobiles of Southern California contributed very largely to the success of the trip and much to the pleasure of the delegates. In Los Angeles the party was met by a delegation from the Chamber of Commerce with fifty automobiles and were taken for a three hours' ride all over the city. On the following day at Riverside the entire party were taken for an automobile ride of some forty or fifty miles, and on their stop at Santa Maria, they were met by forty-six automobiles. This was indeed a surprise to the entire party. The machines were numbered and lined up according to number and kept in this order throughout the entire fifty mile drive. Mr. Brinegar states that the handling of the machines at Santa Maria was the best he had ever seen and he believes our local people in giving automobile parades would do well to consult those who had charge of the automobile ride at Santa Maria. The visitors were all surprised at the number and class of machines used in Southern California. Automobiles were seen as far south as Imperial Valley.

Mr. C. H. Letcher of San Jose has just received his Cadillac "30" demonstrator from Cuyler Lee.

A fast trip from San Ramon Valley, via Haywards, was made recently by E. J. Twiggs and party in their Oldsmobile. The roads via the Dublin Grade are fine for motoring, according to Twiggs, the surface being as hard as asphalt and very fast, even the mud holes were frozen and gave the motorists no trouble. The trip to this city was made in less than two hours.

Mr. A. L. Salbach of Stockton has just taken delivery of his Cadillac "30" demonstrator from Cuyler Lee.

Studebaker

¶ A high-class dependable car built by a responsible maker, a car that never fails to give satisfaction on the road and a car in which it is a pleasure to ride.

Three Models: Two "30's" one "40"
Touring or Limousines

Write or phone for a demonstration

Studebaker Bros. of California

Phone Douglas 3000 Mission at Fremont

ANNOUNCEMENT

1909

OLDSMOBILE

We beg to announce arrival
1909 Oldsmobile, December 15th

The following complete line of 1909 models will be on exhibition on the above date. Every one of these cars is representative of the factory that makes it:

Model X Special Runabout	$2000
Model D Palace Touring Car	2750
Model D Toy Tonneau	2750
Model DR Flying Roadster	2750
Model DR Detachable Tonneau	2750
Model Z Touring Car, 6-Cylinder	4200
Model Z Runabout, 6-Cylinder	4200

Besides Limousine and Landaulet Bodies.

The 1909 Oldsmobile contains all that has made the car famous in the past, together with the improvements in keeping with the largest and most extensive factory in the country. Recognized the world over for durability. Investigate.

PIONEER AUTOMOBILE CO.

524 Twentieth St., Oakland 901 Golden Gate Ave., San Francisco

Letters

Monologues on Graft

"The Gentle Grafter" is a series of monologues delivered by one Jeff Peters, who, if he is not king of his craft, is, at all events, one of the "higher-ups." Despite his absurd and whimsical extravagances of language, Peters is a philosopher and so clever in his presentation of his side of the case that one more than half sympathizes with him. Jeff has his own code of morals. He reasons that a certain proportion of mankind is born with a perverted opinion of its own smartness, and that it is the logical corollary that others are endowed with the complementary attributes. If the fools are so intensely anxious to be relieved of their superfluous increment, the wise ones are only carrying out the designs of nature in lightening their burdens for them. Jeff Peters has only scorn and contempt for the Wall street methods of preying upon the credulity of the poor by inducing them to enter into fake investments. He does not want it on his conscience that he has "robbed" any one nor taken anything without giving something in return, even if it is only a square inch of white soap as a spot eradicator or a bottle of water colored with cochineal and flavored with cinnamon, as a cure-all. Peters is strictly honest "according to his light," but his light is usually black darkness. The naive innocence with which he relates his exploits is comparable only to the gravity assumed by small children at play when they are unaware of the observation of their elders. Peters and his partners work in a humble sphere, but after all, their morals, or lack of morals are precisely those of the better favored; and perhaps the vital difference between the two is that whereas the "financiers" manage to hold on to enough of their gains to insure a respectible social position, the "gentle grafters" are apt to be overtaken by misfortunes unheralded and to find themselves at the bottom of the toilsome ladder almost before they realize that they have climbed. Though thus made foot balls of fate, the grafters are always good tempered, and one could readily recall better men than Jeff Peters who would prove worse company. The high lights of the literary world have but just discovered O. Henry, and though it says little for their perspicacity or the wide range of their reading, one can envy them the pleasant sensation of the novelty. He has been compared to Bret Harte, Mark Twain, and the whole succession of humorists, but the comparison really means nothing more than the hint that those who have enjoyed and appreciated the older authors will find O. Henry a kindred spirit. Published by McClure.

A Good Juvenile

Here's another first-rate book for boys, and by a woman, too—Isabel Hornibrook. Its first merit is that it is not a "school-book," where pampered and spoiled youngsters put in their time cutting up monkey-shines and outwitting faculties. Its second and many subsequent ones is that it has a substantial meal of meat in its five hundred pages, and the boy who secures a copy will not discard it after one reading. Oakley Rose, its boy hero, was the son of a Gloucester skipper, last member of a family distinguished for courage and fidelity in a community where it takes extraordinary courage to attract attention. Oakley was an orphan, living with his grandfather, who had a small veteran's pension. Grandfather Rose was considered a young man by his neighbors, only a little past three score. His was of a long-lived family, usually surviving well into the nineties, and he and Oakley assumed as a matter of course that matters would remain as they were for many years. The boy's ambition, fostered by his aged relative, was to complete his high school course and enter the Institute of Technology with a view to becoming a naval designer. Grandfather Rose's sudden death puts an end to all these dreams. Not only is there no possiblity of continuing the school course, but the immediate bread and butter problem becomes an imperate consideration. Oakley does not give up, however, but attacks his problem from a new angle. If he cannot learn to design a vessel he will learn to build one, and with this end in view he secures work in a neighboring ship yard, beginning in the lowest capacity. Partly through friendship with a nephew of the owner, partly through the good nature of the "Professor" himself he is permitted the "run" of the "mould loft," and between work in the yard and observation in the loft, coupled with ambition and determination, he had already made substantial strides when the attention of a designer was attracted by the crude design of a fishing vessel which Oakley had made. It was not the first occasion when Oakley and the architect had met, and the mutual attraction of the first meeting was the spark which struck fire on the second occasion. The door of the architect's office was opened and the ambitious youth was ushered in to begin on his chosen career. Meanwhile he had been north to George's Shoal on a haddocking trip, and later, to the arctic waters halibuting, and between fishing and sailing, fog and storm, he experienced all the vicissitudes and dangers that are to be found in such undertakings. The title, "From Keel to Kite" is symbolical, both of the building of the lad from his first humble work to his final success, and of the ship, from its first timbers to its loftiest sails. Stores of the sea seem to have leaped into popularity, probably to some extent because of the prominence which the navy has occupied during the past year. It will not be surprising if the youngsters who have been spending spare moments on college yells and ragtime ditties should be found numbling to themselves that sing-song rhythm:

Nothe a point easterly
No' nothe-e-east
Nothe-east a point northerly
Nothe east.

Every boy who navigated a raft on a winter pond used to take a pride in knowing how to box the compass, but of late it has become numbered amongst the lost arts of childhood. Lothrop, Lee and Shepard, who are the fairy godfathers of juvenilia, are the publishers.

TRY MURINE EYE REMEDY
For Red, Weak, Weary, Watery Eyes.
Murine Doesn't Smart—It Soothes Eye Pain.
Try Murine For Your Eyes.

German Savings and Loan Society

526 California Street, San Francisco

Guaranteed Capital	$1,200,000.00
Capital actually paid up in cash	$1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds	$1,453,983.62
Deposits June 30, 1908	$34,474,554.23
Total Assets	$37,055,263.31

Office Hours: 10 o'clock a. m. to 3 o'clock p. m., except Saturdays to 12 o'clock m. and Saturday evenings from 7 o'clock p. m. to 8 o'clock p. m. for receipt of deposits only.

OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohte; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourny; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Eells, Attorneys.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS—N. Ohlandt, Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohte, Ign. Steinhart, I. N. Walter, J. W. Van Bergen, F. Tillmann, Jr., E. T. Kruse and W. S. Goodfellow.

MISSION BRANCH, 2572 Mission Street, between 21st and 22nd Street. For receipt and payment of Deposits only.

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY SALE OF REAL ESTATE SHOULD NOT BE MADE.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO, STATE OF CALIFORNIA.

In the Matter of the Estate of MARTIN C. HOGAN, Deceased.

Edward C. Harrington, executor of the last Will and testament of Martin C. Hogan, deceased, having filed his petition herein praying for an order of sale of certain part of the real estate of said decedent, for the purpose therein set forth;

It is therefore ordered by the Judge of said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said decedent appear before the said Superior Court, in the Grant Building, at the corner of 7th and Market Streets on Monday the 28th day of December, 1908, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said executor to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased, at private sale as shall be necessary, and that a copy of this order shall be published at least four successive weeks in Town Talk, a newspaper printed and published in said City and County.

Done in open court this 24th day of November, 1908.

THOS, F. GRAHAM, Judge.

J. C. QUINLAN, Attorney for Executor, First National Bank Bldg. 12-5-5

SUMMONS

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
In and for the City and County of San Francisco. Action No. 12782.

ERNESTINE KRELING and JAMES F. LEAHY, Plaintiffs,
vs.
All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Lien Upon the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants, Greetings.

You are hereby required to appear and answer the Complaint of Ernestine Kreling and James F. Leahy, Plaintiffs, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at the Southwesterly corner of Golden Gate Avenue and Steiner Street; running thence Westerly along the Southerly line of Golden Gate Avenue One Hundred and Thirty-seven (137) feet and Six (6) inches; thence at right angles Southerly One Hundred (100) feet; thence at right angles Easterly One Hundred and Thirty-seven (137) feet and Six (6) inches to the Westerly line of Steiner Street and thence at right angles Northerly along said line of Steiner Street One Hundred (100) feet to the point of commencement.

Being a portion of Western Addition Block Number Three Hundred and Eighty-one (381).

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiffs will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit, for a judgment of said Court as follows:

1st. Ascertaining and determining all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said real property and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, or whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description.

nd. Establishing the title of plaintiffs and of each of them to said real property and determining all adverse claims thereto, and adjudging that each of said plaintiffs is the owner in fee simple absolute of an undivided one-half of the said real property and every part thereof.

3rd. For such other and further relief as to the Court may seem proper, and for costs of suit.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 27th day of November, 1908.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By T. C. RYAN, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 12th day of December, A. D. 1908.

MEMORANDUM

The following persons are said to claim some interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiffs, to-wit:

French Savings Bank, a corporation, whose address is No. 108 Sutter Street, San Francisco, California.

CAMPBELL, METSON, DREW, OATMAN & MACKENZIE,
Attyns. for Plaintiffs, Balboa Bldg., 595 Market St., S. F. 12-12-10

Louis Crepaux

(Member of Paris Grand Opera)

Has removed to his new studio,

Delbert Block, 943 Van Ness avenue, cor. O'Farrell.

Reception hours: 11:30 to 12, 3:30 to 5. except Wednesdays. Wednesdays in Oakland, 1154 Brush street.

Emil Steinegger

PIANOFORTE PLAYING

924 Grove St (above Fillmore), San Francisco.

For appointments phone Merritt 2845

Thursdays, 2701 Regent St., Berkeley

Mackenzie Gordon

TENOR

TEACHER OF SINGING { in all its branches, from the rudiments of tone formation to the highest finish and Completion of Public Singing.

Oratorio, Opera and Concert

By appointment only Phone Franklin 3594

Studio: 1350 FRANKLIN ST.

Louis H. Eaton

Organist and Director of the Music Trinity Church

Teacher of

PIANO, ORGAN, SINGING

1678 Broadway Phone Franklin 2244

Donald Maclean

SINGING—Pupil Seagle and De Rezske

Henri Etlin

PIANO—First Prize Paris Conservatoire

STUDIO, 1613 GREEN ST. Phone, Franklin 3153

Hother Wismer

VIOLINIST

Has resumed teaching

Studios—2945 FILLMORE ST., Tel. West 438; 820 FILLMORE STREET

Ensemble Instruction

Stiles Hall, Berkeley, Saturdays

Samuel M. Shortridge

ATTORNEY AT LAW

CHRONICLE BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO

Tel. Douglas 2176

Robert B. McMillan

ATTORNEY AT LAW

Has removed his Law Offices to the

CHRONICLE BUILDING, Fifth Floor

Phone Kearny 5969 Rooms 517-518

Knight & Heggerty

ATTORNEYS AT LAW and PROCTORS IN ADMIRALTY

MERCHANTS EXCHANGE BLDG., S. F.

Rooms 626 and 630

PORCHER & SEAGRAVE

HATS AND MEN'S FURNISHINGS

1244 MARKET ST., Bet. Larkin and City Hall Sq.

717 GOLDEN GATE AVENUE

PATRICK & CO.

RUBBER STAMPS

STENCILS, SEALS, SIGNS & ETC.

126 BUSH ST. SAN FRANCISCO

SUMMONS

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE STATE of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 19737. Dept. 10.

ELIZABETH J. ROBINSON, Plaintiff,

vs.

FREDERICK L. ROBINSON, Defendant.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Frederick L. Robinson, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County, or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's willful neglect of plaintiff on account of defendant's idleness, profligacy and dissipation, also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that unless you appear and answer as above required the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the Complaint, as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the Seal of the Superior Court of the State of California. in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 9th day of November, A. D. 1908.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By L. J. WELCH, Deputy Clerk.

ROBINSON & GETZ, Attorneys for Plaintiff, 45 Kearny Street, S. F. 11-21-10

SUMMONS.

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

GUSTAVE WEDELSTAEDT, Plaintiff

vs.

ELIZABETH WEDELSTAEDT, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Elizabeth Wedelstaedt, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above name plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed herein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's desertion and extreme cruelty; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the Complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 12th day of November, A. D. 1908.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By MILTON M. DAVIS, Deputy Clerk.

C. F. ADAMS, Attorney for Plaintiff, 378 Monadnock Bldg., S. F. 12-12-10

BONESTELL & CO.

PAPER

The paper used in printing this magazine is our Albion Book

California's Leading Paper House

116 to 124 FIRST ST. SAN FRANCISCO

Phone Kearny 1272

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of ALBERT JOHN SCHERZER, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Albert Scherzer and Ada C. Brown, Administrator and Administratrix, respectively, with the will annexed of the estate of Albert John Scherzer, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said Administrator and Administratrix with the will annexed at the office of Neal Power, room 204, No. 250 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned select as their place of business in all matters connected with said estate of Albert John Scherzer, deceased.

ALBERT SCHERZER,
ADA C. BROWN.

Administrator and Administratrix, respectively, with the will annexed, of the estate of Albert John Scherzer, deceased.

Dated San Francisco, December 16, 1908.

NEAL POWER, Attorney for Administrator, 250 Montgomery St., San Francisco.

SULLIVAN & SULLIVAN, and THEO. J. ROCHE, Attorneys for Administratrix, Humboldt Bank Bldg., San Francisco. 12-19-5

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of CHRISTIAN LUDWIG UMBACH, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Executrix of the last Will of Christian Ludwig Umbach, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within four (4) months after the first publication of this notice to the said Executrix at the law office of A. Comte, Jr., No. 333 Kearny Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned selects as her place of business in all matters connected with said estate of Christian Ludwig Umbach, deceased.

EMILY MARY UMBACH,

Executrix of the last Will of Christian Ludwig Umbach, Deceased.

Dated San Francisco, December 3, 1908.

A. COMTE, Jr., 333 Kearny St., San Francisco, Attorney for Executrix. 12-12-5

MEN

Afflicted with any private ailment consult the United Physicians and Surgeons. Strictly reliable specialists in Genito-Urinary, Blood and Skin diseases, and all reflex ailments of men. Prompt, efficient services; fees moderate; consultation free and confidential. Write or call. Hours 9 a. m. to 9 p. m. Sundays, 9 to 2.

A word to the wise is sufficient.

United Physicians and Surgeons

517 Twenty-third St., Oakland

Near Telegraph Avenue.

10 Third Street, San Francisco

Next to Call Building

Down Town Now

CALIFORNIA OPTICAL CO. are now in their new store, 181 Post Street, near Grant Avenue. The Fillmore Street store is closed.

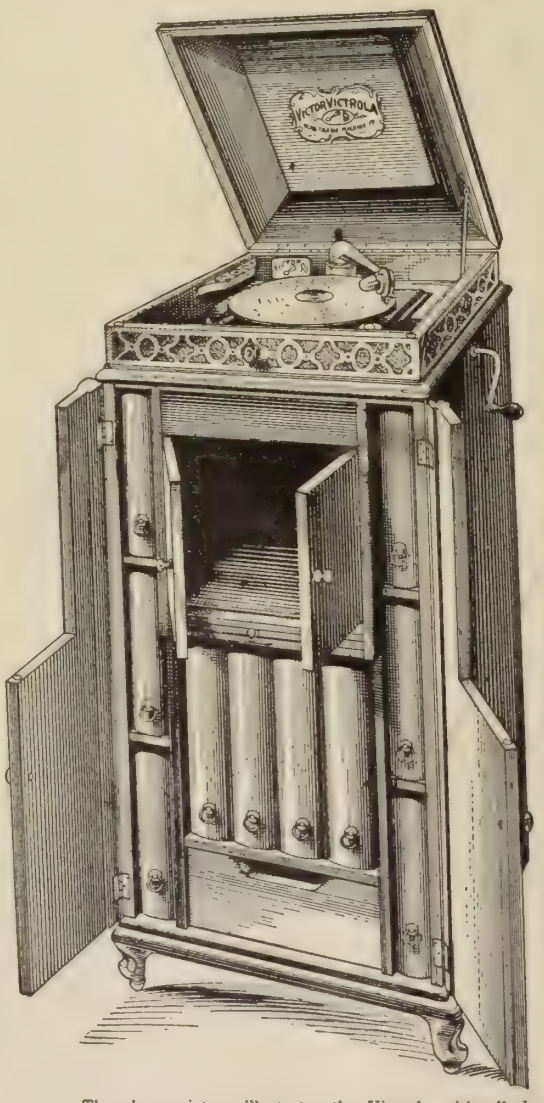
MAYERLE'S EYE WATER, by mail 65c

Orders for Eye Glasses, Opera Glasses, Lorgnettes, sent by mail, $5, $10, $15.

DANGER SIGNALS

Painful, Sore, Red, Inflamed, Burning, Smarting, Itching, Scratching, Twitching, and Gluey Eyes, Heavy or Crusty Eyelids, Floating Spots, Cloudiness of Vision, Cross Eyes, Watery or Discharging Eyes, feeling like sand in the Eyes, Heavy and Crusty Eyelids are often Considered Dangerous Signals.

NEGLECTED EYESIGHT AFFECTS THE BRAIN



Mayerle's Glasses rest and strengthen the eyes and preserve the sight.

GEORGE MAYERLE

Graduate German Expert Optician, charter member American Association of Opticians and Vice-President Optical Specialist Association of America, 1149 Golden Gate Ave., between Webster and Buchanan sts. Phone Park 3153, San Francisco.

The KING of all Talking Machines

The $200 VICTROLA---Terms if desired

All Victors are great entertainers, full of wonderful musical possibilities, but the greatest Victor of them all is the Victor without a horn—The Victor-Victrola.

As the Steinway Grand is to all other Steinway Pianos, so is the Victrola to all other Victors—the King of all—the best of all—the most costly of all.

Little $10 Victors are playing the marvelous new Victor records and captivating the musical world of two hemispheres—$17.50 Victors are playing the same records even better—$50 Victors show results well proportioned to the cost, but the $200 Victrola leads them all.

It doesn't require salesmanship to sell Victrolas. Advertising wouldn't even be necessary if the public realized the wonderful perfection of these great instruments. We seldom meet any one with the means to buy a Victrola who, after hearing them played, don't immediately and unquestionably acknowledge its superiority by purchasing the instrument. If we had the Victrolas to spare we could send fifty of them out to fifty Victorless homes in this city on trial and without any further demonstration than the music they would produce, at least forty of them would be accepted and sold.

It's a privilege to get a Victrola. It's an honor to own one. There's the same pride in the ownership of an instrument like the Victrola as there is in the ownership of a blue ribbon horse, or of a magnificent piece of art work, or a masterpiece in oil or $10,000 automobile—the same pride that always goes with the ownership of the best of anything. Remember, however, all this does not mean that other Victors are not worthy of a place in your home. Every Victor is worth its price. No matter whether you pay $10, $40, $60, $100 or $200 for a Victor you'll get full value for your money.

Many people are glad and proud to own a Steinway Upright and just so will many people be glad to own a regulation Victor. There are some people, however, who can afford an Art Grand Steinway and to these people we present for consideration the Victrola—The Art Grand Talking Machine.

If interested call or write without delay, as our stock of Victrolas is limited in quantity.

The above picture illustrates the Victrola with all doors open, showing the filing cabinets for records, the little doors from which the sounds come forth, the lid on top that closes down over the record to shut out the mechanical noise of operation and the general contour of the instrument. The $200 Victrola is made of piano finished mahogany.

Steinway and Other Pianos

Sherman Clay & Co.

VICTOR Talking Machines

KEARNY AND SUTTER STS., SAN FRANCISCO

BROADWAY AT 13th, OAKLAND

1635 VAN NESS, SAN FRANCISCO

Vol. XVII. No. 854. SAN FRANCISCO, JANUARY 9, 1909. PRICE, 10 CENTS

TOWN TALK

THE PACIFIC WEEKLY

BOOTH'S CRESCENT BRAND

The Most Delicious Fish Put in Tins

CALIFORNIA

BROILED MACKEREL

(SARDINIA CAERULEUS)

Packed in SPICE, MUSTARD or TOMATO SAUCE as you prefer

20c Everywhere

MONTEREY PACKING COMPANY, Monterey, Cal.

F. E. BOOTH, Sole Agent, Sacramento and Drumm Sts., San Francisco

Leading Hotels and Resorts

HOTEL ST. FRANCIS
UNION SQUARE

The center of entertainment
in the city that entertains

Under the management of JAMES WOODS

FAIRMONT HOTEL

Wishes everybody a
Happy and Prosperous New Year

Management of PALACE HOTEL COMPANY

HOTEL DEL MONTE

Near quaint old Monterey---125 miles from
San Francisco.

Uniting all the pleasures of outdoor life under ideal conditions with the conveniences and luxuries of the best metropolitan hotels.

For rates, reservations, etc., address H. R. WARNER, Manager.

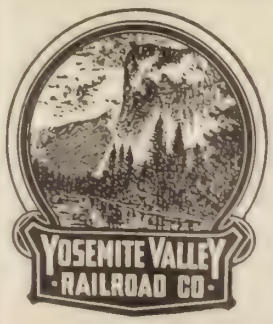
BYRON
HOT SPRINGS HOTEL

One of the world's most curative springs.

One of America's most comfortable and refined hostelries.

See Southern Pacific information bureau, James Flood Building, or any Southern Pacific agent or Peck-Judah Co., 789 Market street, or address Manager at hotel.

HOTEL DEL CORONADO
CORONADO, CAL.



Coronado is essentially an Hotel of quiet elegance. It has the most equable climate of which any knowledge exists. Hotel Del Coronado has unique facilities for out-of-door recreation. Polo, golf, tennis, boating, fishing and motoring on good roads. Rates $4 per day upward. For special information apply to MORGAN ROSS, Manager, Coronado, or H. F. NORCROSS, representative, Los Angeles.

HOTEL CARLTON

Telegraph Avenue at Durant
BERKELEY

A FIRST-CLASS TRANSIENT AND FAMILY HOTEL

MRS. W. F. MORRIS, Proprietor
formerly of Hotel Cecil, 960 Bush Street, San Francisco

YOSEMITE VALLEY
OPEN ALL YEAR

Why not plan a Holiday Trip to California's Wonderland for yourself and friends.

It is a quick, comfortable trip; daily train service. And Yosemite at this time is no less attractive than in other seasons. First class hotel service at El Portal and in the valley. For through tickets, see Southern Pacific or Santa Fe, or address

O. W. LEHMER, Traffic Manager, Y. V. R. R., Merced, Cal.

Hotel Westminster

Los Angeles, Cal.
Fourth and Main Sts.

American Plan, Reopened

Rates per Day $2.50 Rooms without Bath

Rooms with Bath $3.00, $3.50 and $4.00

European Plan

$1.00 per day and up, with bath $1.50 and up

F. O. JOHNSON - - Proprietor

You will find SWAIN'S

Bakery and Restaurant on the line at

1241 VAN NESS AVENUE, Near Sutter Street

AFTERNOON TEA for Shoppers with Music from 3 to 5 o'clock
BROWNLOW, the baritone, sings every evening from 6 to 8 o'clock

LEVY'S CAFE

Third and Main Streets, Los Angeles, Cal.

Much the Best Place to Get Fine Things to Eat and Listen to Choice Music at Popular Prices.

TOWN TALK

THE PACIFIC WEEKLY

Vol. XVII. San Francisco, January 9, 1909. No. 854

ROBERT OBER, AS "MONTY" IN "BREWSTER'S MILLIONS"

To be seen at the Van Ness Theatre for one week only beginning Sunday, January 10th.

TOWN TALK

Published Weekly by
TOWN TALK PUBLISHING COMPANY

Theodore F. Bonnet.....Editor
Ralph A. Grover.....Manager

88 First St., cor. Mission, San Francisco. Telephone Douglas 2612.

SUBSCRIPTION—One Year, in advance, $4.00; six months, $2.25; three months, $1.30; single copies, 10 cents. Foreign subscriptions (countries in Postal Union), $5.00 per year. For sale by all Newsdealers.

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter.

The Trade in San Francisco supplied direct by us. Outside of San Francisco by the San Francisco News Co.

For foreign and local advertising rates address 88 First Street, San Francisco.

Los Angeles office, 734 Central Building.

A Dread of the Legislature

The deliberations of the provincial statesmen who assembled at Sacramento this week will doubtless be productive of many blessings for which we shall all be duly grateful. However, without sinister motive, with no desire to disparage or deprecate we take this occasion to express the hope that our legislators may plod proudly through the session without consummating any radical innovations. Frankly we confess that every session of the Legislature fills us with misgivings. We are apprehensive of the zeal that transplants itself to Sacramento every two years, there to devise new schemes of government, and incidentally to win distinction, not to mention other things, in the interest of all the people. The psychology of our attitude toward the Legislature is quite simple. We have observed that men whose temperament inclines them toward such honors and emoluments as are to be achieved at Sacramento have a consuming passion for exercising their faculty for adventurous and crude speculation upon subjects in regard to which their knowledge is scanty and their perceptions confused; and therefore we are painfully conscious of the tremendous power of evil that resides in the legislative department of our glorious commonwealth. Nor is it only with a sensation of dread that we approach a session of the legislature. It is impossible to view without impatience the great waste of good purpose and noble aspirations which is bound to be caused by the efforts of shallow reformers to improve on existing conditions. How much intellect and zeal do we find consumed at ever session of the Legislature in spasmodic efforts to galvanize worn-out formulas into a dim semblance of life!

When it is Dangerous to Dissent

This year, unless all signs fail, there is to be a greater burst of energy on the part of reformers at Sacramento than ever before. The State is now in the throes of a spasm of political reform; and where more logically should such a spasm ease itself off than at Sacramento. The State is full of reformers who have discovered short cuts to the millennium, and all of them will be heard from before the end of the session. And we fear that it will be useless to advise our provincial statesmen, while the moral spasm is on, to adhere to fundamental principles in all essential points, or to remind them of the importance of consenting only to such modification as seem necessary to repair what time has enfeebled and to restore what abuse has impaired. Of the futility of advice in this matter we are persuaded because history teaches that it is never safe to differ from a reformer at a time when the people are enthusiastic in their devotion to demagogues, and in these degenerate days we do not hope to find self-sacrificing patriots in the Legislature. To argue against a reform measure, however mischievous it may be, at a time when the passion for reform amounts to a popular obsession is like daring to contend with a deity, or a mysterious, yet irrevocable destiny. Dissenters are corrupt heretics in the eyes of the majority until the scales are worn off. It is in such times that individuality in politics is destroyed, that manly character degenerates, and the salutary effect of the decorous conflict of opinion is lost. It is in such times that great damage is done. That something radical is about to occur we have reason to believe. The people of California are disgusted with machine politics, and they are disgusted with corruption, and they are ready to do the things that the righteous and omniscient leaders of reform proclaim essential to their welfare. But let us hope that we are only about to have crowded upon us the experience that leads to enlightenment.

To Tinker With the Jury System

Among the institutions of our government which the Legislature is to be urged to reform is that of the jury trial. Certain philosophers who are quick to see the blemishes which are but the casual specks on a glorious institution that has endured for centuries, have come to the conclusion that in trial by jury in criminal cases there is room for improvement. They are of the opinion that unanimity should not be required except in murder cases. Whether it would be wise to make the proposed change is a question upon which there may be honest difference of opinion. In our opinion it would be very unwise to make the change without making other changes equally important. The only argument that we have heard advanced in favor of the proposed innovation is that it would have a tendency to render successful bribery impracticable. This is a desideratum of considerable importance, but of far greater importance is the principle of personal liberty which is not upheld in some communities with the zeal that bespeaks a high order of civic patriotism. While jury-bribing is an evil that we should be eager to eradicate, the punishment of innocent persons is one that we should strive to make impossible. In reducing the strength of the strong let us not render the weak absolutely helpless. Let us not, for example, countenance the practice of employing professional jurors. This is a scandalous practice that has been in vogue in our criminal courts for some years. Ever since we began paying jurors in criminal cases the criminal courts have been infested with men eager to do jury duty; and it is a well known fact that these men are less concerned with satisfying their conscience than with pleasing the prosecuting officer. When we start in reforming trial by jury let us see to it that no man shall be allowed to serve in more than one criminal case in one year. Let us also make it a serious offense for a prosecuting officer to employ detectives in interviewing men before they get into the jury-box; let us deter detectives from threatening to indict jurors when their only purpose is intimidation; let us make it hazardous for a newspaper editor to employ devices journalistic prejudicial to the rights of an accused person. After all these matters are attended to then it may be worth while considering the advisability of altering a time-honored institution which has served as the great bulwark of liberty in monarchies against the crown, and which in republics, has stood as a committee of the people between the accused and the people themselves, a more exacting king when excited than one that wears the emblem of imperial power.

A Trimmer in Action

"He never plainly manifested what was his wish; he never expressed his meaning with explicitness; his words were ever utterly opposed to his real purpose; he ever wholly denied what he wished, and seemed to wish what he abhorred. He stormed on occasions which in reality excited no strong emotion in him; and seemed perfectly tranquil precisely in moments of the most vehement wrath."

Of the foregoing description of an historic personage frequently have we been reminded of late, but never more strongly than when we read President Roosevelt's last message to the Congress wherein he disclaims ever having intimated that "the majority of the Congressmen were in fear of being investigated by the secret service men" or "that Congress as a whole was actuated by that motive." The precise language used by the President in his former message in discussing the action of Congress on the provision in the sundry service bill with reference to the employment of the secret service in the Treasury Department is as follows: "It is not too much to say that this amendment has been of benefit only, and could be of benefit only, to the criminal classes"; also, "The chief argument in favor of the provision was that the Congressmen did not themselves wish to be investigated by secret service men"; also, "but if this is not considered desirable a special exception could be made in the law prohibiting the use of the secret service force in investigating members of Congress." Could anything be clearer than the implication contained in this language? Doubtless if the President had wished to affront Congress unequivocally, to make it impossible for Congress to ignore the imputation, he might have employed innuendo more delicately veiled, but in all the circumstances of the matter his meaning is obvious enough. He says that the chief argument in favor of the provision was that "the Congressmen themselves did not themselves wish to be investigated"; that the provision "could be of benefit only to the criminal classes." This is the favorite, the familiar argument of all the dogmatic reformers of the day. Accompanying ever proposed innovation is the sentiment: "If you do not agree with me you are a crook." If President Roosevelt did not wish to charge that Congress as a whole was not moved by another argument than the one which he mentioned then why did he make reference to it and assert that it was "the chief argument in favor of the provision?" That his language is hardly susceptible of any other construction than the one placed upon it by Congress, is a conclusion borne out by his own pitiable periphrastic performance in casuistry of last Monday. If the Idol of the Masses does not by his most recent outpouring of tangled and incoherent verbiage convict himself of being a trimmer, then our judgment in such matters is absolutely worthless. In this characteristic message the President tells us he has never said that Congress was actuated by evil motives; that no one holds the authority and dignity of Congress in higher respect than he does; that he has always deprecated indiscriminate condemnation of all Congressmen; et cetera. And then he proceeds to explain that the argument to which he referred as the chief argument was employed by only two members of the Committee on Appropriations and by the private secretary of Congressman Cannon in an article published in a Chicago newspaper. All of which taken in connection with the President's contradictory utterances, professions and practices with reference to the courts, organized labor and muckrakers bears out the description of an historical personage contained in the excerpt quoted above. Of that character drawing, it is but just to explain, Theodore Roosevelt was not the subject. That was written by Dio Cassius who had for his subject a gentleman of the name of Tiberius known in history as one of the Caesars. He ruled the Roman people with the assistance of a detective named Sejanus. Tiberius, like Theodore Roosevelt, had great faith in the spy system. He argued that only the criminal class objected to being "shadowed," and Sejanus employed spies to trail the Roman Senators, who as a consequence, became the servile tools of their imperial master and the result was disastrous to the Roman people. Which reminds us that the chief argument against the employment of civil service men to watch Congressmen is the one discussed by Mr. Cannon's secretary, of which it is evident that President Roosevelt is not in ignorance since he refers to the whole article in his message. From that article we learn that the objection to the employment of secret service men to watch Congressmen is that it may give the Executive a dangerous power over the legislative department of the government. Of the soundness of that objection there can be no question, and cowardly indeed is the Congress that would tolerate on the part of the Executive the assumption of such a privilege. In that same article of which the President in his profound ignorance of the true principles of this government complains it is stated that secret service men have been employed at Washington to shadow Congressmen "with a view of involving them in scandals that would enable the bureau to dictate to them as to the price of silence." This is the inevitable consequence of the employment of detectives in official life. It was the consequence of the activity of spies in the days of Tiberius. Government by the spy system is not a free government, and it is not the kind of government that a free and intelligent people has ever desired.

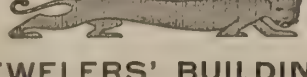
The Call of Nature

In these days, when ministerial scandals are as common as any other kind, it is not surprising to find a preacher advocating from the pulpit the cause of the "love pirate." The Rev. Phillip Cone Fletcher of St. Louis recently took up the cudgels in favor of the "affinity," his argument being that "In nine cases out of ten there was no willful wrong perpetrated or intended by the guilty ones, but only a lack of strength to overcome one of the most powerful and masterful forces of the universe—the call of nature to nature." There it is, the whole modern doctrine of irresponsibility. "I can't help it" is justification and excuse for any dereliction. Time was when anyone who could not plead a weak mind as a mitigation for moral lapses was promptly told that he should find means to strengthen his resolution or else expect to be dropped from the ranks of the respectable. People usually find it a comparatively simple matter to choose the course which will give them the greatest degree of satisfaction. In other times, when "love pirates" were called by a plainer and harsher name, and found themselves ostracized by their relatives as well as by their social acquaintances there was comparatively little of the affinity business. It is an unquestioned truth



The Hub.
CHAS. KEILUS & CO
EXCLUSIVE
HIGH GRADE CLOTHIERS

No Branch Stores—No Agents.

ALL THE EFFORTS THAT WE MAKE ARE BUNCHED IN ONE THOUGHT TO PRODUCE THE BEST CLOTHES THAT CAN BE HAD FOR MONEY. THE ACCURACY OF OUR SHAPES IS APPROVED BY MEN WHO KNOW. OUR FABRIC COLLECTION, THE CHOICE OF THE WORLD'S LOOMS. OUR TAILORING NONE BETTER. WE SURELY CAN'T OFFER MORE.

This Label The Hub Chas Keilus & Co. San Francisco. Our Guarantee.

We cater only to dressers of class, who appreciate clothes that are correct. We search every market of the world to procure patterns that are exclusive. This being an exclusive men's clothes shop, it behooves us to be carefully exclusive, not in price, but in fabrics and shapes. There are no better clothes to be had than those you find in this new and modern shop. If more men knew this, we'd be awfully busy.

JEWELERS' BUILDING
Post Street, Near Kearny, San Francisco.

that the mere ceremony of marriage is no charm which precludes the possibility of straying thoughts, but it is only a weak, selfish, and self-indulgent nature which will make no effort to withstand impulse. Marriage was never designed to procure the everlasting blissfulness of any pair of individuals, much less of any one. The evolution of society has made the orderly propagation and rearing of children an essential for the carrying on of the social scheme. Nature is never in the least concerned with the individual be it plant, animal or human. The laws of nature are the laws best suited for the welfare of each species, and it is manifestly not for the benefit of the children of the human race that all laws save individual whim should be abrogated. Rev. Fletcher is most considerate in his statement that the "business girl" who is blamed for "usurping" husbands is not any more deserving of reprobation than her sisters in other walks of life would be under the same conditions. The simple, plain, unvarnished fact is that a silly flirtatious woman and a man without ballast are not endowed with either virtues or vices out of the circumstance of their occupations. A woman will always be given all the opportunities to behave herself that she cares to avail herself of, whether she is "in society" or earning her own living. A man who is inclined to amorous dalliance will not be forced to walk the straight and narrow path simply because his stenographer refuses to meet him half way. Dr. Fletcher and others of his ilk would be better employed in teaching observance of the seventh commandment as handed down from Mount Sinai than in laying such particular stress on the eleventh. He is furthering the cause of neither God nor man by his attitude, but only adding stress to the current view that the greatest menace to morality today is the sensational pulpit.

In Restraint of Musical Quacks

Dr. H. J. Stewart is the responsible father of a bill for licensing music teachers which is to be introduced at the current session of the State Legislature. His ostensible object is to secure official recognition for teachers and to bar out incompetents; and to that end there is to be an examination before an official board, with a fee of ten dollars for that "privilege," and a yearly license tax of a dollar. Dr. Stewart's object is most commendable, but most difficult of achievement. The profession of the musical instructor is a refuge for quacks and incompetents, and they are very mischievous impostors, but how to get rid of them is a hard problem. The difficulty lies in the fact that the musical art is at once the most popular and the most difficult of comprehension. Like all art it has its fixed principles, but ignorance concerning them is widespread and profound. This ignorance is to be met with even among skilled musicians, and among them, too, are to be found many pretenders—instrumentalists, who do not scruple at teaching the vocal art which they do not understand, and fiddlers who will direct an orchestra though they may be lacking in all the essential qualities of leadership. It will be easy to organize a board of examiners, but who will pass upon the fitness of the examiners? For the medical and legal professions it is easy to select examiners because we have schools that certify to the qualifications of practitioners, but we have no academy of music which fixes standards by which musicians may be judged. We fear that Dr. Stewart's scheme for ridding his profession of charlatans will only result in exciting the political ambition of incompetent musicians. So long as it is assumed that every little girl must have music lessons, and so long as the average parent is capable of comprehending just two things—the low price at which instruction can be had and the short period in which Mamie can learn to bang out a tune, the probability is that the cheap and incompetent teacher will flourish openly or surreptitiously. Unfortunately this delusion respecting the desirability of rendering the power of execution in some degree accessible to all women is encouraged by competent as well as by incompetent instructors, and the public, as well as the musical art, suffer in consequence. What we need more than a board of examiners to pass upon the mere question of the competency of musical instructors is more general cultivation of the knowledge of the musical art. More important than that every little girl shall be rightly instructed in an art for the practice of which but few are temperamentally or intellectually qualified, is that the majority should have sufficient theoretical education to enable them to discriminate and enjoy.

The Book Problem

"It's the hardest thing in the world to get a salesman or woman in a shop to tell you what book among a thousand of its kind is the best." This is the wail of a perplexed holiday shopper to whom, evidently, books are only bricks of printed paper. Otherwise she would have known that it is as nearly impossible for a book salesman to give final judgment in the matter of the best book as it would be for a milliner to select the prettiest bonnet, or the manager of a toy department, to pick out the very prettiest doll. Individuality is too large a factor in these matters for any arbitrary judgment to be satisfactory. The book which the salesman would select might be anything but pleasing to the one it is intended for. The chance of its being otherwise would be about equal to the chance of picking a winning lottery ticket, for there is no absolutely best book of any kind unless it be a text book or a scientific treatise. What pleases one taste will make no appeal to another. Admirers of Laura Jean, Charles Garvice and Georgie Sheldon have never heard of Mrs. Humphrey Ward. They cannot give the titles of two of Scott's or Dickens's works and are blissfully unconscious of the existence of most of the other novelists of note. History and essays are non-existent for them. The intelligent book clerk who would offer "The Portreeve" to one of them might better have resurrected Caesar's Commentaries. The fulminations of the literary periodicals have not shaken the faith of the worshipers at the shrine of Caine and Corelli, nor have all the efforts to "teach literature" had an appreciable effect on the general intelligence. Boys and girls who are set to work to pick Shakespeare and Browning to pieces in school, and to parrot the opinions of their preceptors on the beauties of Ruskin and the strength of Carlyle, drop to their natural level just as soon as they forsake the class room, and take up for their own delectation precisely the same grade of books which their brand of intelligence has always reveled in. And children, as well as adults, have their preferences, and where one boy revels in Stratemeyer another of the same age demands Stewart Edward White. Girls of a certain age and cast of mind are never so happy as when they have something to weep over, while elderly women crave the happy ending even though it be at variance with probabilities. Men read fewer books than women, and have correspondingly less patience with frivolties. The only safe guide to follow in selecting books for others is to confine one's self to the precise volume which has been specified as desirable. It is about as puzzling a task to prescribe reading matter for another as it is to select clothing. If it were a mere question of covering nakedness or providing a specimen of printed matter, anything at all would answer the purpose, and apart from that, appearance might be the guide, but there are so many other points to be taken into consideration that Punch's famous advice to those about to marry becomes equally applicable to those tempted to buy books for presentation—"Don't."

Beauty-Sprite

False lights and shifting sand,
Black way and rough and long,
Lost men and like to fail,
This much is ours:

Sometimes to strike a trail.
Sometimes to hear a song.
Sometimes to seize a hand.
I even yours.

Go with me till the sun
Mine be and yours,
Star and companion,
Ours, even ours.

—Ralph Hodgson.

Perspective Impressions

Grand Juror Sanborn has been rewarded for his civic zeal. But what's the matter with Oliver?

If it were proposed to amend the Commandments by substituting for one of them the words "Thou Shalt not Squeal," the proposition would receive the hearty support of many distinguished citizens.

An Exchange wishes to know what has become of the talented writers whose brilliant thoughts once sparkled in the columns of the daily press. Having recently examined the advertising columns of our country exchanges we have come to the conclusion they are holding editorial positions with patent medicine firms.

Why this persistent iteration of the demand that the balance of the Relief Fund be sent to Italy? It is true we have no more earthquake sufferers who need the money, but perhaps there are eminent citizens who do. But don't concern yourself about that fund. You may be denounced as a crook if you do.

When William S. Bade, theological professor of Berkeley and member of the Sierra Club protested in Washington against the proposed "desecration" of Hetch-Hetchy, Marsdon Manson, a celebrated political engineer, demanded to know whether his "way" was being paid by Spring Valley. The logic of this question is irrefutable. It is the kind of logic for which Berkeley is famous, and hence the irony of its employment for the confounding and flooring of a Berkeley professor.

Detective William J. Burns in an interview in Toledo, Ohio, said that he expected to catch Detweiler of the Home Telephone Company in the near future. This is the same Burns who is said to have said that Haas confessed to him; the same Burns who has the "goods" on jurors every little while; the same Burns who was so indignant at the imputations arising out of the Biggy inquest that he was going to have the matter investigated by his friend Langdon. There is nothing that throws so much light on the edifying methods of the Graft Prosecution as what Burns has said.

A HIGH LIVER

—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

MAKE ROOM

—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Guardians of Public Morals

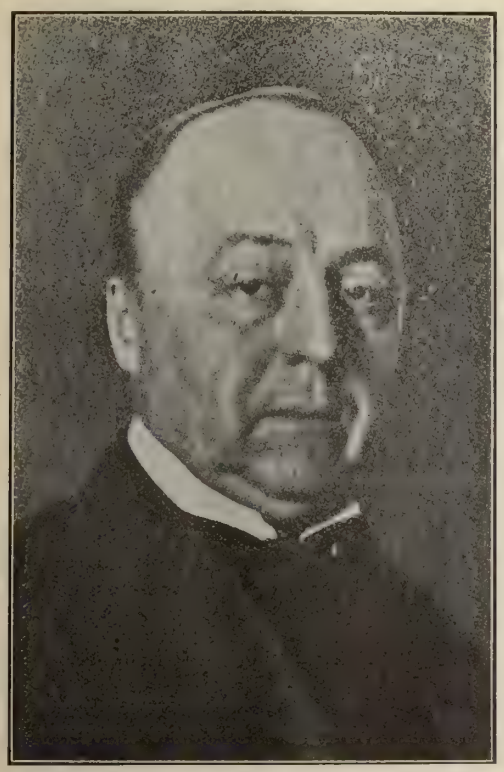
How the Great and Wicked City of San Francisco was Saved From the Insidious and Fascinating Vices that Came on New Year's Eve Accompanying Queen Carnival Disguised as the Spirit of Wine, the Spirit of Woman and the Spirit of Song.

By Democritus

I am more than pleased to be able to report to the Advance Committee of the Civic Department of the California Club that the people of San Francisco behaved themselves with decorum, decency and outward virtue on New Year's eve. I credit this salutary condition of the public morals in the trying circumstances of a hilarious, convivial and hysterical occasion, solely to the good offices of the Advance Committee of the Civic Department of the California Club. It has probably been forgotten by everybody except the members of the Committee and myself that on Tuesday, December 29, 1908, an admonitory proclamation was published by the Committee announcing the coming of Carnival "accompanied by three spirits—Spirit of Wine, Spirit of Woman, Spirit of Song," and asking Spirit of Womanhood to "see to it" that "no shadowed page is turned this New Year night"; that "the spirit of wine, which is strong and sometimes wanton, doth not rule over the other spirits"; that "the morning light breaks on no broken hearts or soiled wings of white doves"; and that "the bright crown of her glory is not taken." I therefore recall this proclamation to assure the ladies of the Advance Committee that their admonition was duly heeded and that nothing beyond the usual routine of vice and virtue happened in this town on the night of the New Year's carnival.

No "shadowed pages" were "turned" that are not turned every day in the year by some of those who make up the heterogeneous population of a great city; the spirit of wine, though strong and sometimes wanton, did not rule over the other spirits more despotically than she rules at all times in the places where she has absolute jurisdiction; the morning light did not break on a single broken heart, no wings of white doves were soiled, and no bright crowns of glory were taken. The abstemious drank no more wine than the apostle Paul recommended to Timothy in place of water for his stomach's sake and his other infirmities; the virtuous practiced their virtues assiduously if not as ostentatiously as might have been desired by the Committee; and the vicious did not forget that the police were abroad and vigilant beyond their ordinary habit. I congratulate the Advance Committee on the good result of their timely warning to the people of San Francisco. It is something to be proud of when admonition of this kind uttered by those who are nameless save for their collective designation, enforces a moral pulchritude in the presence of which even those who are without sin find no opportunity to cast the stones tight clutched in their immaculate fists.

I have heard but one note of protest against the Advance Committee's pronunciamento. One old cynic, steeped in vice, wanted to know what business it was of the Advance Committee to arrogate to themselves the right to regulate the private morals of the community. He announced that as far as he was concerned he would do as he pleased as long as the doing did not bring him to the attention of the police. His morals and his vices were his own, he declared, and as long as they did not interfere with the morals and vices of his fellow citizens he would resent any attempt to restrict them or to correct them. "Suppose," said he, "I should issue a monitory edict directed at the members of this committee advising them to keep out of the divorce court, to pay more heed to their husbands and children than they lavish on their clubs and their 'civic duties,' to stay at home more than they do, and to quit meddling with affairs of other people—suppose I should address such a communication to these ladies and publish it in the newspapers in big type; what do you think would happen to me? Why, my dear fellow, they would run me out of town. Yet I see no essential difference between my impertinent remarks and the gratuitous admonition of this Advance Committee of the Civic Department of the California Club. Such assumption of virtue is nothing less than rank pharisaism. No doubt my eyes are full of motes, but that fact does not confer upon my neighbor the right to pluck them out before he has cleansed his own optics of the beams that disfigure his visionary apparatus, obscuring his perception and distorting his judgment of the things he sees. For my self I judge no man, lest I be myself judged even more severely than I have judged him. I mind my own business and I think everybody else should attend to his business in the same way. We have laws and courts and a fairly efficient police department to enforce the statutes deemed necessary to maintain the moral status of the community, and I consider it a work of supererogation even in the technical theological sense of the term, to transcend the letter and the spirit of those statutes, founded as they are upon the experience and usage of long ages. If my eye offends me I will pluck it out; but I will not permit the man that lives next door to perform that service for me, or to advise me upon the offensive character of my organ of vision."



So spoke the vicious old cynic—a reprobate of magnitude and a brand not to be snatched from the burning. Otherwise I have heard naught but the most enthusiastic commendation of the good effect accomplished by the Advance Committee's proclamation. That the city was thereby saved from a saturnalia of vice and drunken disorder on New Year's eve is not questioned by any reputable, self-righteous citizen. No one conversant with the unspeakable immorality of the town left to its own devices without restraint by such influences as are exerted by our leagues of justice and good government, can for a moment doubt that this warning proclamation by the Advance Committee of the Civic Department of the California Club absolutely squelched every tendency on the part of the unvirtuous, the bibulous and the libidinous to convert our New Year eve celebration into a bacchanalian rout and a riot of libertinism.

The good that was accomplished by the committee's proclamation in deterring thousands of men and women who were viciously inclined and who would have indulged their vicious inclinations if they had not read the committee's high-flown address, completely silences the criticisms of those who insist that the warning was in bad taste. Surely the moral behavior of our citizens is of greater importance than good manners or good taste. If every body attended strictly to his own business as advised by the old cynic whom I have quoted our morals would go to the demnition bow-wows. Besides those who admonish the rest of us are made better, if that is possible, by watching over the morality of their neighbors, prying into the concerns of persons whose lives are not above reproach, snooping hither and thither in the dark and noisome places of the social environment, and devoting the leisure of their shopping time to the duty of casting stones at the sinful. In the exercise of these self imposed civic, social and moral functions the people who go about performing these services to humanity are themselves lifted to a higher plane from the lofty altitude of which they may look down on the vast mass of their fellow citizens still wallowing in their several sloughs of despond. I have always envied the fellow who went up into the temple to pray, standing and praying thus with himself: "God, I think thee, that I am not as other men are, extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this publican"; and I feel my own degradation and utter unworth in the presence of such persons even as did the publican, who, standing afar off, would not lift up so much as his eyes unto heaven, but smote upon his breast, saying, "God be merciful to me a sinner."

Taft's Secretary of State

Being a Recital of the Principal Events in the Brilliant Career of Philander Chase Knox, Formerly a Trust Lawyer, Now a Trust Buster.

In the four years of President Taft's administration we shall hear a good deal of a little fat man who is familiarly known in Washington as "the sawed-off cherub," which isn't any worse than his real name. The man is Philander Chase Knox. He is only five feet five inches in height, but he is said to share with Elihu Root the distinction of being our most highly finished product. And like Elihu Root he illustrates the absurdity of the efforts of newspapers of a certain character to propagate a prejudice in public life against lawyers who have achieved fame and wealth in the service of great corporations. Root and Knox have rendered more valuable service to the Government in its efforts to abridge the unlawful privileges of the trusts than any other two men in the country. Familiar as they are with the methods of the trusts; having pointed the way to most of them, they are experts in the art of tearing down that which they reared.

PHILANDER CHASE KNOX

Mr. Knox is to succeed Mr. Root as Secretary of State, and he will doubtless be as zealous as was the man who defended Tweed in promoting the interests of the Government. With a fortune accumulated in the service of the trusts, ambitious of the highest honor in the gift of the people, Philander Chase Knox is now a sterling civic patriot. It is of such material that some of the greatest civic patriots in the history of the country were fashioned.

Senator Knox was born in Brownsville, Pa., fifty-four years ago. His wealth today is estimated at two million dollars. His real career was carved out in Pittsburg. He specialized on corporation law, and when the Smoky City began the manufacture of multimillionaires it found Knox a very indispensable sort of individual. He has been described as "the law on two legs." It is difficult to think of him, says one Washington correspondent, in any other way than as a lawyer. "Try to figure the teething Knox, the Knox of measles, the marble-playing Knox, and still the respected shade of Blackstone will linger." He became connected with the Carnegie company, and it is said that it was he who did the major part of the legal work of putting together the United States Steel Corporation. The newspaper men, in that fine, easy, generous way they have, allotted him an income from his law practice of anywhere from fifty to two hundred thousand dollars a year at the time that President McKinley enticed him away from his practice to become Uncle Sam's attorney-general at a salary of eight thousand.

President Roosevelt's recent special message on the Panama Canal gives Mr. Knox credit for the work which he, as attorney-general, did in connection with the purchase of the waterway, a piece of work which Senator Knox himself calls his most important legal accomplishment. Upon Mr. Knox, as attorney-general, devolved the duty of securing a good title to the property of the Panama Canal Company. Senator Morgan of Alabama, the champion of the Nicaragua route, urged that under the French law the Panama Canal Company had no right to dispose of its concession. He said the concession was not worth anything, even if it could be obtained. Furthermore, he declared that if this Government should take over the concession, it would have to take with it debts of the company aggregating $600,000,000.

The attorney-general was besieged with offers from legal firms desiring to undertake the examination of the titles and attend to the legal formalities. The knowledge that he had $10,000,000 at his disposal made the employment specially attractive to the legal talent of the country. While dining at the White House one evening Mr. Knox was asked by the President if he had decided what legal firm he would employ for this work.

"Yes, I have already decided that question," replied Mr. Knox. "This is the first big legal job that has come along since I have been in the Cabinet, so I think I will attend to it myself. I have plenty of assistants to look after the details, and I am not unused to handling big jobs."

"I am mighty glad to hear you say that," replied the President, and it was so arranged.

Charles W. Russell, one of Mr. Knox's regular assistants, was sent to Paris and spent two months in searching the French statutes, examining the concession, and investigating questions of French constitutional law. Then he cabled for Attorney-General Knox. Mr. Knox arrived in Paris on a Monday evening and left the following Saturday. In less than a week he went over all the data prepared by Mr. Russell, satisfied himself on every doubtful point, and was prepared to submit his opinion. During the return voyage he occupied himself in dictating his opinion, and when he arrived in Washington, it was practically ready to submit to the President. The conclusion he reached was that "the United States would receive a valid and unencumbered title."

When the attorney-general put in his expense account for this work, John Hay, Secretary of State, called him on the telephone and told Mr. Knox that evidently there was a mistake in the account.

"What's wrong with it?" asked Mr. Knox.

"Why, the clerk must have dropped a cipher or two," said Mr. Hay. "It is only thirty-nine hundred and some dollars."

"Well, that is correct," replied Mr. Knox.

Perhaps the most important accomplishment of Mr. Knox's administration of the Department of Justice was his victory in the Northern Securities case. The Northern Securities Company was a corporation with an authorized capital of $400,000,000, organized for the purpose of taking over the capital stock of the Northern Pacific and Great Northern Railroads, two competing lines, and in effect merging them. The promoters believed that by means of this holding company they could accomplish what the law forbids. Knox brought suit against the Northern Securities Company, the two railway companies, and their controlling stockholders, for the purpose of dissolving the merger. The Government won its case in the United States Circuit Court, but under the old order of things the defendants could have appealed

(Continued on Page 31.)

The Tall Woman

(From the Spanish of Pedro Antonio de Alarcon. This is one of the masterpieces of the fantastic literature of psychical phenomena, the theme of which is taken from a realm of experience which is traditional and which has engaged the sober attention of scientists. The story is founded on a Spanish legend, similar to that of the family spectre, whose appearance gives to the luckless one who sees it an infallible presentiment of death. It has a counterpart in the legend of the banishee's cry familiar to the people of Ireland. Editor's Note)

"Sit down," said Gabriel, "and I will tell you a strange and wonderful story in proof of my thesis, which is, that supernatural events still occur on this sublunary globe. I mean of course events which you cannot explain in terms of reason, or science, or philosophy."

Gabriel was addressing a group of friends who were spending a day among the beautiful pines of Pequerinos, and who at this moment were eating a lunch out of a hamper.

"As you know," he said, "I am not visionary or superstitious, but listen to what I have seen and heard, and then tell me what explanation of an earthly, physical, or natural sort, however you may name it, can be given of so wonderful occurrence. My story is about Telesforo X———; he died in 1860. He was a young fellow from Andalusia, an engineer of the roads corps. He was to have married the Marquis of Moreda's daughter, but as you know the fair Joaquina died suddenly at the baths of SantaAgueda. I called on Telesforo about fifteen days after his loss and I found him very melancholy. He told me this story.

I.

"'I do not know whether it is due to some inborn fatality of imagination, or to having heard some story or other of the kind with which children are so rashly allowed to be frightened, but the fact is, that since my earliest years, nothing has caused me so much horror and alarm as a woman alone, in the street, at a late hour of the night. The effect is the same whether I actually encounter her, or simply have an image of her in my mind.

"'You can testify that I was never a coward. I fought a duel once, when I had to, like any other man. Just after I had left the School of Engineers, my workmen in Despenaperros revolted, and I fought them with stick and pistol until I made them submit. All my life long, in Jaen, in Madrid, and elsewhere, I have walked the streets at all hours, alone and unarmed, and if I have chanced to run upon suspicious-looking persons, thieves, or mere sneaking beggars, they have had to get out of my way or take to their heels. But if the person turned out to be a solitary woman, standing still or walking, and I was also alone, with no one in sight in any direction—then (laugh if you want to, but believe me) I would be all covered over with goose-flesh; vague fears would assail me; I would think about beings of the other world, about imaginary existences, and about all the superstitious stories which would make me laugh under other circumstances. I would quicken my pace, or else turn back, and would not get over my fright in the least until safe in my own house.

"'Once there I would fall a-laughing, and would be ashamed of my crazy fears. The only comfort I had was that nobody knew anything about it. Then I would dispassionately remind myself that I did not believe in goblins, witches, or ghosts, and that I had no reason whatever to be afraid of that wretched woman driven from her home at such an hour by poverty, or some crime, or accident, to whom I might better have offered help, if she needed it, or given alms. Nevertheless, the pitiable scene would be gone over again as often as a similar thing occurred—and remember that I was twenty-four years old, that I had experienced a great many adventures by night, and yet that I had never had the slightest difficulty of any sort with such solitary women in the streets after midnight!

"'Things were going on so, when, nearly three years ago (unhappily, I have good reason for knowing the date, it was the night of November 15-16, 1857), I was coming home at three in the morning. As you remember, I was living then in that little house in Jardines Street, near Montera Street. I had just come, at that late hour, a bitter, cold wind blowing at the time, out of a sort of a gambling-house—I tell you this, although I know it will surprise you. You know that I am not a gambler. I went into the place, deceived by an alleged friend. Little by little I was carried away by the feverish and seductive passion, and lost all the money I had. I even went away owing a round sum, for which I had left my note behind me. In short, I ruined myself completely; and but for the legacy that came to me afterwards, together with the good jobs I have had, my situation would have been extremely critical and painful.

"'So I was going home, I say, at so late an hour that night, numb with the cold, hungry, ashamed, and disgusted as you can imagine, thinking about my sick old father more than about myself. I should have to write to him for money, and this would astonish as much as it would grieve him, since he thought me in very easy circumstances. Just before reaching my street, where it crosses Peligros Street, as I was walking in front of a newly built house, I perceived something in its doorway. It was a tall, large woman, standing stiff and motionless, as if made of wood. She seemed to be about sixty years old. Her bold and malignant eyes, unshaded by eyelashes, were fixed on mine like two daggers. Her toothless mouth made a horrible grimace at me, meant to be a smile.

"'The very terror or delirium of fear which instantly overcame me gave me somehow a most acute perception, so that I could distinguish at a glance, in the two seconds it took me to pass by that repugnant vision, the slightest details of her face and dress.

"'The first thing which struck me in that woman, as I will call her, was her extreme height and the breadth of her bony shoulders. Then, the roundness and fixity of her dry, owl-eyes, the enormous size of her protruding nose, and the great dark cavern of her mouth. Finally, her dress, like that of a young woman of Avapies—the new little cotton handkerchief which she wore on her head, tied under her chin, and a diminutive fan which she carried opened in her hand, and with which, in affected modesty, she was covering the middle of her waist.

"'Nothing could be at the same time more ridiculous and more awful, more laughable and more taunting, than that little fan in those huge hands. It seemed like a make-believe sceptre in the hands of such an old, hideous, and bony giantess! A like effect was produced by the showy percale handkerchief adorning her face by the side of that cut-water nose, hooked and masculine; for a moment I was led to believe (or I was very glad to) that it was a man in disguise.

"'But her cynical glance and harsh smile were those of a hag, of a witch, an enchantress, a Fate—a I know not what! There was something about her to justify fully the aversion and fright which I had been caused all my life long by women walking alone in the streets at night.

"'My house was at the opposite end of the long and narrow street, in which I was alone, entirely alone with that mysterious phantom whom I thought able to annihilate me with a word. How should I ever get home? Oh, how anxiously I looked towards that distant Montera Street, broad and well lighted, where there are policemen to be found at all hours! I decided, finally, to get

(Continued on Page 28.)

J. C. WILSON
BROKER
Private Wire Chicago and New York
Member New York Stock Exchange, Chicago Board of Trade and Stock and Bond Exchange, San Francisco
LOCAL AND EASTERN STOCKS AND BONDS
Main Office, Mills Bldg. Tel. Kearny 482.
Branch Office, Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles.

The Steinheil Murder

A Case that Abounds in Incidents More Redolent of the Gallic Temperament Than Any of the French Dramas Which are Expurgated for American Audiences.

The Steinheil murder still holds the attention of Paris. The examination of witnesses has been in progress in the Palais de Justice for several weeks, and the newspapers are full of the testimony. From recent developments it appears that Mme. Steinheil is credited with having created a character which certainly will live in Paris boulevards and music hall life. She said that when she went to her villa at Bellevue to entertain one of her wealthy lovers she used to explain her absence to her family by saying she was going to see her Aunt Lily, a rich and eccentric lady, who loved her, but did not want to know her husband or daughter. If all the family were at Bellevue and she wanted to get rid of them she told them Aunt Lily was coming and sent them off to the house in Paris. Mme. Steinheil has confessed that her affection for her husband had died, giving for a reason the receipt of anonymous letters accusing him of infamous habits. Once she wished to divorce him for this reason, but he opposed her on account of the daughter.

THE STEINHEIL FAMILY

Mme. Steinheil, her husband whom she is believed to have murdered and her daughter.

She allowed that she had lovers, but could not say if her husband was aware of it; at least he never let her know that he was. Her love for her mother had changed to hate because she had induced her to marry Steinheil, her mother's motive being to take advantage of Steinheil's infatuation for her by giving her no dowry, her mother having made great sacrifices to give the other two daughters dowries. She accused her mother of living on her.

Since the tragedy nearly all of Mme. Steinheil's lovers have been in hiding, but there is one, Count de Balincourt who has come into the open and talked quite freely. "I really can't understand," he says, "why people seem so terribly afraid of recalling their friendship with the Steinheil family. What do they fear—the eminent functionary of fine arts, Mr. D. B——— and Judges L———, Lem———and B——— or Gen. C———, D——— and N——— of Paris, B——— of Ardennes or the other B——— of Anjou? Why should the charming Countess of T——— find it a reproach to have eaten a dinner cooked by Mariette? What have we all to fear? A little ridicule? And after that? It's a long time now since ridicule killed any one. I met Mme. Steinheil one evening on the Metropolitan Underground Railway. In the crush of leaving a station a young woman cried out. I intervened and helped her up the stairs. Outside she thanked me. I gave her my name. She invited me to come and see her husband, who was an artist. Some days later I called and the husband showed me his work. It was of Meissonier's style, but style only. Shortly after he proposed to paint my portrait. I agreed. I have only a very vague recollection of the man. He was small, puny and miserable, who painted with a magnifying glass little things tremendously worked up and had no point of view for the affairs of real life. They say much evil of him. I believe they are wrong; he seemed to me incapable of any action at all, even a bad one. His wife was a woman of grace and excessive amiability, with a constant wish to please every one. In many circumstances this exaggerated mania to charm neighbored on disease."

All the amateur Sherlock Holmeses in Paris have been exercising their skill on the question of the clocks that were found stopped in the house of the murder. One was a long grandfather's clock which had stopped at twelve minutes past midnight and the other was a small clock from beside M. Steinheil's bed found in a cupboard marking the same time. At the time of the murder it was taken for granted the long clock had been shaken by the burglars, possibly in the struggle, or purposely stopped so that its ticking or striking should not prevent them hearing any one approaching. At any rate, it was concluded that they marked the time of the crime. But now it is suspected that they were altered, moved back some hours, with a view of establishing an alibi. The question has been raised whether the striking machinery was altered at the same time as the hands, this does not seem to have been tested at the time of the murders, and when a reporter tested the clock some months after the striking movement was correct with the time. An expert clockmaker has been charged with the task of examining this clock to see if the state of its works will show whether it has been deranged by being turned back, and M. Bertillon has been instructed to search for any finger marks on the pendulum and machinery. No satisfactory explanation for Mme. Steinheil reviving the case has been brought forward. The murders were committed the last day of May; June, July, August, September and October passed without the inquiry making any progress, and the affair had dropped entirely out of public interest when on October 31st Mme. Steinheil wrote a letter to a newspaper saying that long cloaks similar to those the murderers had worn had been stolen from the Yiddish Theatre in Rue Saint Denis. How she knew this has not been found out. Now M. Borderel, Madame's friend from the Ardennes, whom she hoped to marry, had continued to send her money after the murders by the hand of his friend M. Martin. M. Martin told the Magistrate that when he gave her a sum of money on October 15th he told her that M. Borderel would only consent to see her again when she had established her innocence. Was it this intimation that caused her to write the letter of a fortnight later which has resulted in her own arrest? The most sympathetic

REMOVAL NOTICE

OUR OFFICE after December 21, 1908, will be at 311 to 317 Crocker Building, corner of Post and Market streets.

OUR WAREHOUSE will remain at the Southwest corner of Eddy and Hyde Streets, until April 18, 1909, on that date we shall remove to our old location, 147-151 Minna Street and 144-148 Natoma Street.

GLADDING, McBEAN & CO.

if not the only sympathetic figure in the whole tragedy is the daughter, Marthe Steinheil. She had looked forward to marrying her lifelong playmate, Louis Buisson, but now his father declares there was no engagement and has sent his son into the army to work his way up from the ranks to a commission. It is, however, satisfactory to find Louis Buisson quoted as saying:

"I have no impressions on the Steinheil affair. I don't know the Steinheil affair. I know only Marthe Steinheil. I know that Marthe had a lot of trouble in sending me letters. It was not, perhaps, always Remy Couillard who intercepted them.

"I have enlisted for three years. When I have finished my service I shall be of age and shall marry."

"Marry Miss Marthe Steinheil?"

"Absolutely. She is not responsible for what her parents may have done and I shall marry her whatever happens."

The Spectator

Terrors Obliterated by Earthquake

Whatever has happened to our old friends Scylla and Charybdis reliable information on the subject will not be forthcoming until calm scientific inquiry is made with reference to those effects of the great earthquake which are not immediately of human and harrowing interest. But far be it from me to suggest that the fate of the gloomy cell where "whuling Scylla shrouds her face" and of that "humbler rock" where, beneath "a huge wild fig-tree curled with ample leaves," sits divine Charybdis "supping the black deeps," is merely of scientific interest. Warm in the affections of all of us are those two terrors of the Strait of Messina of which Homer sung in the twelfth book of his Odysseys. They have become proverbial to denote opposite dangers that beset one's course, and they have served the purpose of writers and spellbinders from time immemorial. Scylla and Charybdis have been conspicuous figures in the field of rhetoric ever since Horace, observing that an author, seeking to avoid one fault falls into another. Even Shakespeare found them available for his purpose in The Merchant of Venice, thus: "When I shun Scylla, your father, I fall into Charybdis, your mother." Some writers have preferred to eschew Scylla and Charybdis in favor of the frying-pan and the fire, but the instinct for classical allusion is strong in the best of us.

More Mythology Must be Written

Surely if Scylla and Charybdis are no more, as has been reported, they are entitled to an obituary notice. Both were personages of distinction long before they became fixtures in the treacherous Strait of Messina. For their age alone they are entitled to reverence, and if they have disappeared a new chapter of mythology must be written covering the most recent decree from Olympus. Perhaps Scylla, the beautiful maiden, who, by reason of the passion which she kindled in Glaucus provoked the jealousy of Circe and was transformed into a snaky monster, with six heads and an appetite for hapless mariners, has been reinstated in divine favor. The truth should be known. Perhaps Charybdis has by this time repented the theft of the oxen of Hercules and is very glad to be out of the whirlpool business. As a matter of fact, Charybdis, who has been known in modern times as Galofaro, has not of late been so great a terror as in the days of Ulysses. Hans Christian Anderson describing a trip through the gulf says: "Our ship glided over the eddying Charybdis; we had no foreboding of it. Where is that wild maelstorm? They pointed to the sea close by where we sailed; but there was no particular motion of the waves to be seen."

Messina in History

That Charybdis, however, was once a pretty tough proposition to encounter we have the testimony of history as well as mythology. Which reminds me that a great deal of history was made right in the Strait of Messina and on the shores thereof. It was the embroiled transactions of Carthage with the Grecian States in Sicily that provoked the occasion of her first rupture with Rome. The town of Messina was then the seat of the pirate Republic of the Mamertines and it stood in close alliance with Rhegium on the Italian side, now known as Reggio, one of the cities which is reported to have been destroyed. In Rhegium a community as lawless as that of Messina had sprung up in the confustion of the Roman war with Pyrrhus. During that war inhabitants of Rhegium had solicited a detachment of a Roman garrison for their protection. Accordingly, a body of Campanians was sent them from Rome, and these troops with the assistance of their neighbors across the Strait in Messina, expelled or massacred the citizens for whose protection they had been sent, and established a tumultuary government in Rhegium. A little later a Roman army marched upon Rhegium, took it by storm and killed nearly all of the garrison consisting of 4,000 men. Thenceforth in effect Rhegium was subject to Rome. It was in one of the wars with Carthage that Rome lost a large fleet in the Strait of Messina, mainly for the reason that the Roman navigators were unacquainted with the currents.

The Vicissitudes of Reggio

The City of Reggio was one of the oldest settlements in Italy. It was originally a Euboean colony and was peopled in 723 B. C. by fugitive Messenians. It rose to great prosperity in the old days, but suffered from war, and in 387 B. C. was captured by Dionysius I. of Syracuse and destroyed. It was again captured in 270 by the Romans and it underwent many vicissitudes of conquest in the Middle Ages. Totila, the Goth, captured it in 549 A. D., the Saracens did likewise in 918, the Pisans in 1005. Robert Guiscard in 1060 and the Turks in 1552 and again in 1597. After the great earthquake of 1783 the town was almost entirely rebuilt, and it presented a more modern aspect than some of the other towns and had wide streets which were studded with numerous handsome villas. It had a beautiful cathedral which dated from the seventeenth century, and it possessed numerous other handsome buildings, among them the

BROKERS AND DEALERS
IN HIGH GRADE
INVESTMENT SECURITIES

SUTRO & COMPANY
412 MONTGOMERY ST., SAN FRANCISCO

Requests for Information Either by Personal Interview or Correspondence will be Gladly Received and Promptly Attended to.

HOTEL VICTORIA
N. E. cor. Bush and Stockton
CENTRALLY LOCATED .·. A MODERN AND UP-TO-DATE FAMILY HOTEL
Sun in every room. Elaborate furnishings. Excellent cuisine.
Large lobby and reception room. Grill room. Dining room.
American and European Plan.

Capella del Sacramento, highly decorated with colored marble; the Strada delle Caserme, and adjacent to it the Civic Museum, which contained a fine collection of terra cottas, lamps, statuettes and vases, including a few very antique specimens with curious ornamentation. Above the cathedral and back of it stood the Castello. In the piazza adjoining the railway station there was a fine statue of Garibaldi. Another handsome square was the Piazza Vittorio Emanuele, where the band often played and which was embellished with a statue of Italia. The Strada Reggio Campi, which ran along the heights behind the town, was considered a fine promenade, and it gave one of the finest views of the environs and of the Sicilian coast to be obtained anywhere. Reggio was distant from Messina about six and a quarter miles. Probably its most beautful feature to the tourist lay back of the town, where the forest called Aspromonte rose in imposing fashion. It was there in the vicinity of Reggio that Garibaldi was wounded and taken prisoner by the Italian troops under Pallavicini on August 29, 1862. The ascent of this forest slope took about nine hours and when the summit was gained, especially in moonlight, a commanding view of the sea, the islands and Sicily of unparalleled beauty was obtained.

Teacher—"Now Tommy, if I say 'The father blessed his six children,' is that active or passive?"
Tommy—"That is active."
Teacher—"Correct, and what is passive?"
Tommy—"The father was blessed with six children."

Maxine Has a Theatre

That Maxine Elliott isn't wasting any tears over her lost Goodwin I am convinced from what a friend writes me from New York. The fair ox-eyed beauty of the polite, social drama is now so busy managing a theatre that she has probably forgotten all about the fickle Nat. and probably doesn't care if he has an affinity at every one-night stand. The new playhouse was opened last week. It is on West Thirty-ninth between Broadway and Sixth avenue. It is one of the finest in America, the materials being marble, steel and concrete, and the building being practically impervious to fire, there being nothing combustible in it except the wood of the stage proper and in the framework of the seats. Special arrangements have been made for the comfort of the public, including seats of more than common width. The capacity of the house is about 900, and there is an uninterrupted view of the stage from all points, owing to the absence of supporting columns. The front of the house and the inner walls are of white marble and the interior decorations are in old ivory, old gold, and mouse color. It is to be hoped that the dramatic entertainment within may prove worthy of the luxurious and artistic surroundings. The opening play, "The Chaperon," is by Marion Fairfax, and deals with the adventures of an American girl who is seeking a divorce from the objectionable foreign count whom she had foolishly married. While acting the part of chaperon with some girl friends, she is surprised by her husband, and, in the effort to avoid him, innocently involves herself in a somewhat compromising situation. Everything, of course, is straightened out satisfactorily in the end. It is expected that Julia Marlowe, Madame Nazimova, and Mary Mannering will act in this house when Miss Elliott is engaged elsewhere.

Sexless Sororities

L L

Social scientists and sophomoric sororities at the State University have formally decreed that hereafter the feminine gender shall be taboo among the precieuses and intellectuals of the academic vicinage. It began with the term "co-ed." Years ago when woman sat the feet of Gamaliel because she couldn't sit at the feet of Hypatia, they were called "co-eds" in derision of their presumption manifested in a desire to crowd the porticos and consume masculine fodder at the supreme feast of reason. Then as time tempered the humor of the appellation they were called "co-eds" because nobody could think of any other name quite as appropriate. So they have been "co-eds" from that day to this. But now the sororities revolt and declaring that there is no sex in intellect insist that the emasculated sobriquet, which is neither male nor female and scarcely human, shall be consigned to the limbo of dead slang. There are no more "co-eds" at the State University—they are students; if, by some stretch of infrequent and virtually impossible circumstance it should ever be necessary to differentiate the sex of the students at the university they may be called women students and men students as a reluctant concession to an obsolete usage. Other sex distinctions have also been disposed of in a similarly summary manner. There are no more "postmistresses" and an employe of the postoffice department is invariably a "postmaster" whether he wears trousers or skirts—she is a "postmaster" in petticoats or shirt sleeves. So with "shop girl." There are no "shop girls," of course, for the girls have themselves decreed that they are all "shop ladies," but as there are no "ladies" in the sorority vernacular the lady of the shop must submit to being called hereafter a "shop woman" if she will not lose her sex identity in the common noun "clerk." The next move of the reforming sororities of the university will be to abolish the feminine pronouns. All impersonal designation will be "he," "his" and "him." Even the term "sorority" is to be abolished; hereafter the lettered Greeks of the university will be "frats." It was at first suggested that they were "feminine frats" but a student learned in etymology and syntax acquired in some high school, pointed out the contradiction of meaning in the proposed designation and the offensive if eternal "feminine" was dropped. Now the stranger on the campus will be unable to distinguish between the male students and the female students except as he may presume a difference of sex by the attire, which, in all probability will also, eventually, be compromised to conform to the sexless idea of the social scientists and the sophomoric sororities.

"Did she have a rawhide when she assaulted you?" asked his honor of a meek gentleman who accused his wife of assault with intent to kill. "No, your honor," said the poor man, feeling of himself tenderly, "I'm the one that had the raw hide; in fact, your honor, I have it still."

A Literary Native Returns

Mrs. Gertrude Atherton, California's most gifted authoress, has come home to write her new novel. She was heralded by a hundred journalistic trumpets all of them proclaiming how great she is and how proud we are that she belongs to us. Let my own wiffling note help to swell the adulatory clamor. Mrs. Atherton is direct from the famous Bavarian capital, the lordly city

SADDLE HORSE

Beautiful young saddle horse, finest breeding—walk, trot, canter, singlefoot and fox-trot. Is also thoroughly high schooled to fancy steps and will kneel to mount and lay down. A rare bargain as owner must sell. Address 934 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

Seattle's Newest and Most Modern Hotel

"Twelve Stories of Solid Comfort"

Building, concrete, steel and marble.

Located, most fashionable shopping district.

210 rooms, 135 baths.

Library and bound magazines in reading rooms for guests.

Most refined hostelry in Seattle.

Absolutely fireproof.

English Grill.

Rates, $1.00 up

HOTEL SAVOY SEATTLE

of Munich founded by Henry the Lion in the twelfth century, hoary with tradition, steeple-deep with wonderful legends of battles, sieges and knightly deeds; redolent of literature, art and courtly manners; renowned for its conservatories of music; admired for the architecture of its cathedrals and palaces; so oppressed by its atmosphere of culture, so high-browed with intellectual aspirations. What a contrast it must be in the comparative degrees of Mrs. Atherton's descriptive epithets between Munich and Petaluma where our gifted pen lady wrote her last novel! Munich—Petaluma! Yet the music of Petaluma's name is sweet, far more melodious, than the abrupt, explosive consonants of Munich.

She May be a Tradition

The newspapers inform me that Mrs. Atherton will write her "forthcoming novel" on top of Mount Tamalpais. It is announced by the literary bavardes of the local press that the authoress of The Randolphs of Redwood and The Conquerors seeks seclusion as an aid to the composition of this latest seller. That is why she will perch on Tamalpais. Now I don't know what kind of novel Mrs. Atherton intends to write, nor do I know how much "seclusion" is necessary to the composition of a novel of any sort. The summit of Tamalpais may be sufficiently secluded for the production of a novel of adventure or manners; but I do not think it is isolated enough to inspire the writer of a problem novel or a novel of serious purpose. I am sure that Marie Corelli would not be able to attain her best thought on Tamalpais, and I have heard that Mrs. Humphrey Ward's best work has been achieved at a very low altitude. It is possible, however, that Mrs. Atherton has no intention of writing in competition with Marie Corelli or Mrs. Ward; perhaps she has designed a novel to fit the kind of seclusion that she will find on the top of Tamalpais. Anyway it is a good thing for Tamalpais, and in time to come tourists will probably perform pilgrimages to the summit of Tamalpais to breathe the Atherton atmosphere, to sit in the chair that Mrs. Atherton sat in, to eat at the same table where our famous authoress dined while she was writing one of her most famous sellers—as travelers from New Zealand and Oshkosh now seek out the tavern of the Cheshire Cheese in London, to sit in Samuel Johnson's chair, to dine at Samuel Johnson's table, to eat of the pudding that Samuel Johnson loved so well, made from a recipe two hundred years old and handed down from cook to cook of the famous tavern. All this may happen to the memory of Mrs. Atherton as it happens to the memory of Dr. Johnson.

Sam, Oliver and Gertrude

Pardon me if I interpolate here the legend that garrulous biographers tell of the first meeting of Johnson and Goldsmith when the Great One came to sup with the Young Unknown—how the Behemoth wore new clothes, his wig nicely powdered and his buckles well polished, wishing, as he explained to Percy, of the Reliques, who inquired the cause of such unusual neatness, to show a better example to Goldsmith whom he had heard of as justifying his own disregard of cleanliness and decency by quoting his (Johnson's) practice. It was from this humble lodging in Wine Office Court, while Goldsmith's landlady was pressing him within doors and the bailiff threatening without, that Johnson took a manuscript written by Goldsmith, to James Newberry, sold it for sixty pounds, and returning with the money relieved the Young Unknown from all pecuniary embarrassment. And the story ends with the dramatic touch to the purpose that the manuscript lay neglected for two years and was then published to win immortality for the author of The Vicar of Wakefield. May the novel that Mrs. Atherton will write on the summit of Mount Tamalpais gain for her a niche in the temple where Goldsmith and Johnson abide.

"I must have order in this court-room," said the stern judge; "I must and will have less noise and confusion here. I have already disposed of three important cases without being able to hear one word of the evidence."

Even Wheeler Was Forgiven

The friends of that great moral uplifter, the Hon. Charles S. Wheeler, are felicitating him these days on his good fortune in falling into the soft, lucrative snap of attorney for the Spreckels estate. At the same time they cannot but marvel at the singularity of the manner in which the whirligig of time has requited the good Mr. Wheeler for the zeal which he exhibited in behalf of his client, Rudolph Spreckels, in the days when bitter warfare was being waged between father and son. For while it is gratifying to know that the fierce animosities engendered in the heat of that scandalous contest have been abated, one cannot resist the impulse to ponder the curious transformation that has taken place. It is all the more curious when we reflect that the late Claus Spreckels was noted not only for his unyielding, unbending character, but also for his disposition to harbor and nourish resentment. He did not go through life forgiving his enemies or gratifying them by permitting himself to be placated. With all his virtues he was reputed to be inexorable in his hostilities. While it was natural for him to forgive his children, even those that brought sorrow into his life, yet it seems incredible that he should go to his grave with the prospect of his estate supplying riches to the attorney who had devised ways and means of harassing him during a protracted struggle in the courts. However, I rejoice in the good Mr. Wheeler's good fortune. And now I expect to see him more zealous than ever, if that be possible, in his wholly disinterested espousal of the great moral cause which Mr. Rudolph Spreckels is engineering. Mr. Wheeler has had faith in Mr. Spreckels for lo these many years, and his faith has brought him grace and other things. His faith in Mr. Spreckels is stronger, I believe, than his faith in the courts, which his friend Mr. Phelan calumniated in Collier's. And yet the courts have been very kind to Mr. Wheeler. Especially were they kind to him during the contest over the Fair estate. It will be remembered

J.M. Jacobi & Co.
S.W. COR. MONTGOMERY & SUTTER STS
Perfect Clothes for Men
Growing business demands more room
January 20th we annex 45-47 Montgomery

The GOLD MEDAL for quality in the Franco-British Exhibition has been awarded to
To His Majesty the King
By royal appointment

WHITE HORSE
WHISKY.
QUALITY THE SECRET OF SUCCESS
MACKIE & CO. DISTILLERS LTD.
LAGAVULIN DISTILLERY, ISLAY
MALT-MILL " "
CRAIGELLACHIE " GLENLIVET
Established 1742
Note.—Any person proved guilty of re-filling our empty bottles with inferior whisky will be prosecuted.

that Mr. Wheeler first had faith in the pencil will, but in those days his faith could be shaken.

No Contest in Sight

The supposition is that there is to be no contest over the Spreckels millions and yet the unsentimental alacrity with which the Hon. Charles S. Wheeler rushed in for letters of administration on the estate of the Sugar King might justify the suspicion that it was deemed advisable to take no chances. The will of Claus Spreckels, by the way, is a most lawyer-like document. There is nothing of sentiment in it. It gives not the slightest hint to the charitable side of the distinguished Captain of Industry; but this is probably for the reason that he instructed his heirs as to what charitable institutions should receive some of his millions. Mr. Spreckels was not in the habit of taking the public into his confidence; so the will is therefore characteristic. There are persons who think that a will should disclose the tender sentiments of the testator, but Mr. Spreckels regarded a will as nothing more than a business document. Hence his failure to mention even his little grandson who was named for him at a time when his son Claus A. Spreckels preferred to be known as C. Augustus Spreckels.

"What a murderous-looking villain the prisoner is," whispered an old lady, in a court-room, to her husband. "I'd be afraid to get near him."

"Sh!" warned her husband, "that ain't the prisoner. He ain't been brought in yet."

"It ain't! Who is it, then?"

"It's the judge."

The Utility of Statistics

A child of tender years recently took from the shelf of one of the branches of the public library for home use a bulky tome of the report of the coast and geodetic survey or something of that nature. The assistant, who was a recent addition to the library force and more deeply impressed than she is ever likely to be again with the scope and value of modern educational methods, asked the little miss if it were for herself, and if she expected to master its contents. "Oh, it doesn't make any matter what the reading is about," answered the supposed prodigy. "I want a big, fat book to press leaves in."

Emma Goldman, Anarchist

Emma Goldman, anarchist and expounder of new thought, is coming to town to lecture at the Victory Theatre on some very interesting topics. By some of them my interest has been aroused, and I have resolved to know more about Emma Goldman than what hitherto I have learned from the newspapers in which she is pronounced dangerous. "Minorities vs. Majorities" is one of her subjects. Now it occurs to me that if Emma Goldman argues that minorities are more frequently deserving of consideration than majorities her views, so far as that particular subject are concerned, are not so dangerous as the insidious preachments of the demagogues of the press. "Puritanism the Great Obstacle to Liberty," is another thesis which arrests my attention, for that is just what Puritanism is. Miss Goldman is also to lecture on "The Drama the Greatest Disseminator of Radical Thought." That doesn't sound dangerous. Emma Goldman is said to be the most cultured and scholarly woman on the public platform. Versed in the literature of many countries, an art critic, a student of the drama and of political economy, yet she is not deemed worthy of the respectful consideration of the highly respectable. But the highly respectable are generally Philistines.

Little Willie Knew

The Sunday school lesson had been on the subject of Moses leading the children of Israel into the wilderness. When the great day of the Christmas entertainment arrived the teacher, misguided mortal, sought to turn the late instruction to good account before Bishop Nichols, who was to preside over the festivities. The children were bright and quick, and the superintendent counted much on their precocity and its effect on the distinguished guest. "And now, children," said he with a view to making practical application of the lesson, "who is it that has led the people of San Francisco out of the wilderness?" A blank and bewildered silence followed, and the pleasant smile which illuminated the teacher's countenance began to congeal, when a small urchin in a back seat frantically waved his hand. "That's right, Willie," was the encouraging invitation, for it seemed as if the situation were to be saved after all, "you may tell us who it was." "Abe Ruef," was the trimuphant reply, and the class wondered why the superintendent collapsed.

Yuan Gives up His Jacket

Yuan Shih Kai is the ablest statesman in China. His ability is manifested chiefly in his knowledge of the modern needs of his country. He realizes as no other Chinese diplomat has realized that China must conform her institutions to the standard of those adopted and maintained by the powers of the western world. Otherwise, he knows that China must subject herself to the discretion of the "outside barbarian" without hope of making successful resistance to any demand, however oppressive or exacting, that may be imposed by any or all of those who would loot the Middle Kingdom if opposing jeal-

Largest Exclusive Office Furniture House on the Pacific Coast.

EVERY ARTICLE OF FURNITURE REQUIRED IN AN OFFICE

Exclusive representatives of the most important lines manufactured.

RUCKER-FULLER Desk Co.

737-739-741 MISSION ST.

California Limited

The only exclusively first-class train to the East via any line.

Dining-car service under Fred Harvey management—that's the best on earth.

On your way East you can stop and visit

YOSEMITE VALLEY AND GRAND CANYON

No other line puts you in reach of both of these places. Our folders tell.

F. W. Prince, G. T. A.
F. W. Prince, C. T. A.

Santa Fe

ousies did not hamper their mercenary greed. It was Yuan Shih Kai, more than Li Hung Chang, who established friendly relations between the foreigners and the imperial court at Pekin when that coterie of Manchu usurpers was sore beset by these "foreign devils" highly inflamed by passions incited by the cruelties and massacres of the Boxer revolt. It was Yuan Shih Kai who reformed the money standard of China as far as it could be reformed on a silver basis. It was Yuan Shih Kai who raised the army to a higher caste standard and compelled its reorganization on a modern military formula. It was Yuan Shih Kai who procured an edict from the late Emperor, indorsed by the Empress Dowager, abolishing torture in the courts of the empire. It was Yuan Shih Kai who, in conjunction with Chang Chih Tung, viceroy of Hupei, inspired the edict that made essential features of western learning a part of the educational system of China as part of the requirement of official preferment. All this was accomplished by Yuan Shih Kai, taotai of Shanghai, Viceroy of Chihli, Grand Councillor of the empire. And he was a patriot throughout. He worked constantly for the good of his country without thought of personal emolument or personal aggrandizement in any sense. The consequence has been the disgrace of the greatest man in China; the downfall of one of the ablest statesmen and most subtle politicians in the world. His purple jacket has been taken from him, and his golden clasps removed from his official belt.

Perils That Environ the Manchu

The degradation of Yuan Shih Kai is unquestionably the result of reactionary intrigue in the Forbidden City. The Manchu feels that he has come at last permanently into what is his own by right of conquest and forthright usurpation. It is the Manchu or the Chinese in China today; the Manchu stands for the maintenance of the traditions of his order; the Chinese is in revolt against the dynasty. The Manchu is conservative; the Chinese is progressive. The Manchu is of the old; the Chinese of the new. If the Chinese prevail by the adoption of western ideas and western methods the day of the Manchu is done in the Middle Kingdom, and the Machu is wise enough to see that. There will be no constitution for China if the Manchu can prevent it. Therefore it was necessary to get rid of Yuan Shih Kai even at the risk of an uprising of all the southern provinces where revolt against Manchu tyranny breeds with the breeding of a wonderfully fecund population; it was necessary to suppress this Chinese patriot, eminently fitted to be the leader of his people, even though the action should bring upon the reigning dynasty the resentment of the foreign powers and all that may be implied of aggression in such resentment. What the outcome will be even the wise men of Pekin cannot foretell. It takes a long time to percolate the essence of a great thought through the arid, close-meshed mentality of the Chinese masses. But once strained it ferments with terrific violence. The Tai-ping rebellion was an Idea militant; the Boxer uprising was an Idea in reaction; the one was a Chinese movement to give China back to the Chinese; the other was a Manchu plot to drive the hated foreigner into the sea. If Yuan Shih Kai gives the word the Manchu will sit no more on the dragon throne; if Yuan Shih Kai holds his peace, the Manchu will learn another lesson from the West—and it may be taught in the language of the Japanese.

Wedding Invitations

Announcements Name Cards

Late Books Fine Picture Framing

SMITH BROTHERS

462-464 THIRTEENTH ST. OAKLAND, CAL.

Miss Jones—Don't you think, Mr. Heha, that Miss Brown, whom you met last evening, is a very plain person?

Mr. Heha—Yes, indeed, I think she is the homeliest girl I ever saw, present company of course always e—er—um—that—is—yes, yes, she's mighty plain.

A Street Car Moralist

A philosopher is employed by the Oakland Traction Company to write moral precepts, ethical apothegms and quaint apologues for the edification of the corporation's patrons. I suspect that this is the aphorist who put out the workingman's pipe on the rear platforms of the company's cars. Anyway the diction of the ukase placarded in the cars announcing the prohibition is very like that which conveys the philosophical epigrams on the duty of the passengaire in the presence of the conductaire—an interdiction, by the way, that does not include the occupancy of seats by the objecting women on the front section of the cars. And in this I see a great injustice and discrimination scarcely consonant with the high tone of the ethics prescribed for the Oakland traveling public by the corporation. Why should the workingman's pipe be forced into the none too commodious area of the front platforms already monopolized by women who were unable to obtain seats on the back section? I hope the philosopher will take up this question with the inner soul of the corporation. And I look for another edict compelling women passengers to restrict themselves to the inside of the car and the rear section. The poor workingman surely has a few left over rights that the car company is bound to respect without the admonitory hint of a court of law.

Time-Devouring Transfers

But I was almost forgetting my philosopher and his latest definition of a transfer. That definition is now pasted conspicuously in all of the cars of the company so that all who ride may read. It is written thus: "Transfer: A bit of paper that costs you nothing and fre-

TAFT & PENNOYER

Our Thirty-Second Annual

10% Discount Sale

Is Now in Full Swing

10% in name only—as the discounts range from 10% to 50%

This is the season of the year with us that the purchasing power of your DOLLAR is stretched to its utmost buying capacity. All our departments offer a TEN PER CENT REDUCTION on our regular prices; some of them 15 per cent; some 25 per cent; and in some cases where we have lines that we are desirious of closing out the reduction reaches 50 PER CENT. This statement cannot help but convince you that this month of JANUARY, 1909, will be an ideal month in which to shop and to buy generously.

CLAY STREET, 14th to 15th
OAKLAND

quently saves you $4 for carriage hire. Gets stale and useless if kept over 15 minutes. Some people kick because they can't use it as an annual pass." How's that for the richness of things? A transfer "costs you nothing"; yet you have just paid money for the right to use the cars of this corporation as a vehicle of transportation to some point which cannot be reached on the line over which you are traveling! A transfer to another line, therefore, according to the corporation's moral philosopher is a generous gift by a generous benefactor who is under no obligation to carry you to your destination without payment of another fare to reimburse the company for the trouble of letting you ride on another car. Moreover, I don't quite see the analogy between the saving grace of an Oakland Traction company's transfer and $4 worth of carriage hire, nor do I recall any decision of the Supreme Court that enables a street railroad corporation to "stale" a transfer after it has been "kept over 15 minutes." Furthermore I am compelled to dispute this philosopher's dictum that "some people (not some persons, mark you) kick because they can't use it (the transfer) as an annual pass." Why should anybody wish to use a street railroad transfer as an annual pass? I can readily understand why any person holding a transfer entitling him to ride on another car should wish to use that transfer whenever he saw fit—under the law of contracts; but the philosopher's statement is otherwise not only irrelevant, impertinent, and immaterial, but it is absurd. Philosophers should avoid hyperbole and exaggeration in the expression of their philosophy. I commend to the studious attention of this street car philosopher the exemplary restraint invariably practiced by such eminent ethical authorities as Immanuel Kant, Karl Wilhelm, Friedrich von Schlegel, Georg Wilhelm Friedrich Hegel, Rene Descartes, Johann Wolfgang von Goethe, and Francis Bacon, all of whom, he will find on close inspection, were painfully accurate in all their statements and exceedingly chary in arriving at conclusions by mere inference. I am afraid that the Oakland Traction philosopher has not quite learned his ticklish trade.

The Hamburg American Line have removed their offices from Market Street near Powell to 160 Powell Street.

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Action No. 13512.

MARY A. DALY, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, Defendants, Greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of MARY A. DALY, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above-entitled Court and County, within three (3) months after the first publication of this SUMMONS, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situated, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

Parcel Number One. Commencing at a point on the Westerly line of Devisadero Street, distant thereon sixty-three (63) feet nine (9) inches Southerly from the Southerly line of Jackson Street; running thence Southerly along said Westerly line of Devisadero Street twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet six (6) inches; thence at right angles Northerly twenty-five feet (25) feet, and thence at right angles Easterly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet six (6) inches to the point of commencement. Being a portion of Western Addition Block Number 497.

Parcel Number Two. Commencing at a point on the Northerly line of Clay Street, distant thereon one hundred and ten (110) feet Easterly from the Easterly line of Devisadero Street, and running thence Easterly and along the said Northerly line of Clay Street twenty-eight (28) feet nine (9) inches; thence at right angles northerly one hundred and twenty-seven (127) feet eight and one-quarter (8¼) inches; thence at right angles Westerly twenty-eight (28) feet nine (9) inches; and thence at right angles Southerly one hundred and twenty-seven (127) feet eight and one-quarter (8¼) inches to the Northerly line of Clay Street and the point of commencement. Being a portion of Western Addition Block Number 463.

Parcel Number Three. Commencing at the Southeasterly corner of Bush and Powell Streets; running thence Easterly along the Southerly line of Bush Street forty-five (45) feet; thence at right angles Southerly sixty-seven (67) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Westerly forty-five (45) feet to the Easterly line of Powell Street; and thence Northerly along said Easterly line of Powell Street sixty-seven (67) feet and six (6) inches to the point of commencement. Being a portion of Fifty Vara Lot Number 314.

Parcel Number Four. Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Folsom Street, distant thereon one hundred and ninety (190) feet Southerly from the Southerly line of Precita Place; running thence Southerly and along said Easterly line of Folsom Street twenty-seven (27) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Easterly one hundred and ten (110) feet; thence at right angles Northerly twenty-seven (27) feet and six (6) inches; and thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and ten (110) feet to the Easterly line of Folsom Street, and the point of commencement. Being Lot Number 32, as per Kingston's Map of Lots Numbers 148 to 153, Precita Valley Lands, filed in the office of the County Recorder of the City and County of San Francisco, July 20, 1865, and recorded in Map-Book E and F of Maps, at page 29.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit:

That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute; that her title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 31st day of December, A. D. 1908.

(Seal)

H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this Summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 9th day of January, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiff: A. TURTURICI and E. TURTURICI, residing at ——————, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, have and claim an interest in Parcel Number Four of the land in said Complaint and hereinabove described, under a certain Agreement of Sale.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Attorney for Plaintiff, Rooms 1255-1257 Flood Bldg., 870 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal. 1-9-10

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

HEAR OUR ARTISTS AND ORCHESTRA DURING DINNER AND AFTER THEATRE

MISS ANITA GILL, Mezzo Soprano
MISS NADYNE PARKER, Lyric Soprano

THOMPSON'S ANNEX
O'Farrell near Fillmore

THE COSMOS
658 MARKET ST., OPPOSITE PALACE HOTEL

Table d' Hote Lunch, 50c.

Salad
Fresh Crab — Sliced Tomato

Soup
Cream of Onion — Sliced Tomato

Entrees
Tenderloin of Sole, Tartar Sauce — Salmon Trout, Maitre d'Hotel
Pot Roast with Noodles — Sheep's Feet Spanish
Vienna Schnitzel, Tomato Sauce — Leg of Lamb with Spanish
Tagliarini and Cheese — Roast Beef, au Jus

Dessert
Sliced Bananas and Cream — Water Melon — Ice Cream
Apple Pie — Squash Pie
Swiss Cheese — Roquefort Cheese — Brie Cheese

JULES' RESTAURANT 328 BUSH STREET
Below Kearny
Phone Kearny 1812

NOTICE
On New Year's Eve we will keep open until 2 o'clock a. m.
Make your reservations now.
Music

Luscious Old Red Wine

LA QUESTA

AGED IN THE WOOD AND MELLOWED IN THE BOTTLE

Pronounced by experts the best wine made in California

FOR SALE BY

L. D. McLEAN CO. — McCAW BROS.
L. N. WALTER, Cor. Devisadero and California
JULIUS BERENDSEN, 762 Devisadero Street

Served at The St. Francis, The Fairmont, Hotel Rafael, Peninsula Hotel, Jules, Chantilly, Berges & Frank's Old Poodle Dog, Thompson's, New Frank's, Union League Club and Cosmos Club.

THE WEEK'S FINANCIAL OUTLOOK

By R. E. Mulchay

The decision rendered on Monday by the Supreme Court in favor of 80 cent gas in New York took Wall Street by surprise. The shock was tremendous, causing holders of Consolidated Gas securities to unload them regardless of price. Sales were made from 165 to 138 in a few minutes. A difference of ten points was seen between sales. At 138 good support was given resulting in a rally to 148 where another spasm of selling broke out afresh quickly breaking the price to 141, from which point a faint rally was seen. On Tuesday and Wednesday outsiders began to liquidate their belated holdings causing a decline to 123 as compared with 165¼ on Monday. It is believed further court proceedings will be brought shortly.

The severe decline in Consolidated Gas unsettled the rest of the list, resulting in declines of two to six points throughout the list. The Harriman group seemed to be without support except that of a spasmodic character. The general news of the past week was favorable to higher prices. The earnings published by several of the leading railways was decidedly favorable, the one bearish feature was Italy's great disaster; to what extent insurance companies have suffered is the question troubling banking interests most. It will be remembered the action of the stock market after our own disaster of April 18th. The Eastern security market continued firm until May 2nd, when urgent selling started; this was afterwards learned to be the liquidating of securities by insurance companies to provide funds to meet losses. It may be possible the present decline comes from a similar cause; however, money rates continue cheap, and do not reflect any immediate urgent demand as might be expected in a case of great loss. That a reaction of good proportion has been overdue is beyond question. One year of a steady upward movement is more than an average. There are many conditions appearing which are not encouraging to a bull market at the present time. The Standard Oil case is to be retired. The advance in freight is meeting with strong opposition. President Roosevelt is again becoming aggressive. Trouble is brewing among the Eastern and Northwestern Railways regarding the entrance into New York of the Canadian Pacific, Hill having encroached upon Harriman's Southern territory. The Industrial Properties are threatened with tariff legislation, the Steel corporation being the chief target. It will mean a greater volume of production with no reduction in general earnings. It will also mean the locking up and closing down of many small steel plants, the business of which must find its way to the big show. No one will question that there is room for certain reductions in the steel trade, but to make reductions as a whole will place hardships upon many small plants which they were not able to stand up under. So many conditions are in evidence at the present time that will affect market values it would seem the part of wisdom to act with due caution before taking on too many commitments marketwise. At this time the issuance of over one billion dollars of new bonds is contemplated for new improvement by railways; these bonds must be sold and it will require time for the public to digest them. The best that may be looked for will be a scalping market for some time. On good declines good stocks will do to buy to be sold out on a fair rally. Trading should be confined to first class stocks regardless of their price. If the cheap ones were worth more the market would give evidence of it. It is as if compared with real estate. If you own inside property you will always find a market for it; if on the other hand you own outside property you must wait your opportunity.

A GOOD JUDGE OF FINE WHISKEY
PRONOUNCES

HUNTER
BALTIMORE
RYE

A PERFECT PRODUCT OF THE STILL, BECAUSE WHISKEY CANNOT BE MORE CAREFULLY MADE, AGED AND PERFECTED

HENRY CAMPE & CO., INC.,
Distributors for California and Nevada
San Francisco, Cal.

IDEAL FARMS

"CERTIFIED MILK"

The most perfect product of the modern dairy

Certified to by the Medical Commission of the San Francisco County Medical Society

DISTRIBUTED BY

GUADALOUPE DAIRY CO. Phone Market 2590

STANDARD MILK CO. Phone Market 226

CENTRAL TRUST COMPANY

of California, has removed to its new offices, corner Market, Sutter and Sansome Streets. A general banking business transacted.

CHAS. F. LEEGE, President B. G. TOGNAZZI, Manager

Telephone DOUGLAS 2487 R. E. MULCAHY, Manager

E. F. HUTTON & CO.

THE PIONEER HOUSE

BANKERS AND BROKERS

Members
New York Stock Exchange
New York Cotton Exchange
New York Coffee Exchange
Chicago Board of Trade

490 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Branch, ST. FRANCIS HOTEL

Two Private Wires to Chicago and New York

Washington, D. C., 1301 F Street
Los Angeles, 112 W. Third Street
New York, 31-33-35 New Street

Social Prattle

By TANTALUS

Mr. de Dampierre is Here

The date of the wedding of Marie Christine de Guigne and Elie de Dampierre has been set for the fourteenth of this month. It is to be a large church affair followed by a breakfast to which only the family and a few intimate friends have been invited. The first six months are to be spent in France, where the large de Dampierre estates are situated, after which the time will be divided between France and the de Guigne home in San Mateo, but even as it is, there are many regrets that one of the two attractive de Guigne girls has not chosen a Californian for her mate. Like many French marriages, the engagement between Miss de Guigne and Monsieur de Dampierre was brought about through a family arrangement between the parents of the young couple, who first settled the preliminary details and then intimated their desires to their children. After meeting a few times the young people pronounced the arrangement agreeable to them, and speedily developed a warm attachment for each other. Since the arrival of Monsieur de Dampierre and young Christian de Guigne on Christmas eve Marie Christine and her affianced have been the guests of honor at a number of delightful entertainments at Burlingame and San Mateo, but the time has been so short and there has been so much to do in preparation for the grand event that few of the friends here have had many opportunities to see much of the fair bride-to-be, and she has appeared at only two of the larger social functions. Monsieur de Dampierre is a wealthy man in his own right and successor to the title Compte, now borne by his father. Miss de Guigne, who is the daughter of Minnie Parrott, eldest daughter of the older branch, inherited a fortune from her mother.

MISS BETTY HAMMOND

The talented sister of John Hayes Hammond who is winning fame in the East as a playwright.

Not to be a Nun

The news that Barbara Parrott was in a Sacred Heart convent in Rome was a shock to her many friends in California, for the first impression made by the announcement was that she had entered upon a religious life. It seems, however, that she has only decided upon taking a post-graduate course instead of sharing the quiet family life in Switzerland. Barbara is the little blonde Parrott girl who made her debut the winter previous to the departure of the family for Europe. Her first season was very gay, and she showed such appreciation for the good things of life that her present step was a decided surprise. Perhaps there is not one girl in a thousand who would settle back into convent ways after a few years of emancipation, but Barbara writes that she is quite contented. Her immurement will not be for long, however, for in the summer she will go to Scotland on a visit to her cousins, the Douglas-Dicks.

Photo, Bruguiere & Eisen MRS. J. J. MOORE

One of Burlingame's most beautiful women. The Moores have taken apartments at the Fairmont for the winter.

The Time Will Come

At the Boardman dance given for Dora Winn, the young granddaughter of the house, there was a noticeable dearth of girls of a suitable age for the boys invited.

Mrs. Warfield

PIANO SCHOOL FOR CHILDREN AND BEGINNERS

Telephone Piedmont 3414 6409 Regent Street, Berkeley

Tuesday and Friday, Ebell Club, Oaklnd

MISS ELSIE DE WOLFE

REPRESENTED BY

MRS. EDGAR DE WOLFE

INTERIOR DECORATION AND OBJETS D' ART

TEMPORARY OFFICE, GRANADA HOTEL TELEPHONE FRANKLIN 422

It is an omen favorable to the debutantes of the years to come that the boys should outnumber the girls, but because of the discrepancy in this instance some amusing things occured. Paige Montegle, lacking a supper partner of a suitable age, gaily sauntered into the refreshment room with one of the little Shreve girls under his arm. She is a great many years his junior, and the sight led to some good-humored banter. However the ill-matched couple seemed to have a pleasant time, and difference in age is a matter that every year will remedy. While his friends assure Paige that by the time he has graduated from college the little miss will be just old enough for him to dance attendance upon, he declares that he thoroughly enjoyed the supper and loyally asserts that when the times comes the young lady will be well worth "rushing."

Nobility Coming to Burlingame

Polo enthusiasts are rejoicing in the good news that during the next few months some of the most skilled foreign devotees of the sport are scheduled to visit California. Burlingame is making preparations accordingly, and the three polo fields are being kept in the best of condition. It is the aim of some of the gentle sportsmen to make San Mateo and Burlingame the center of out-door sports for the United States, and no expense is being spared in efforts to attract attention to the coming contests. Valuable trophies are to be presented to the winners, and it is said that already nineteen thousand dollars have been subscribed towards this end. With the advantages of a social environment that loves nothing so much as display, and a practically unlimited financial backing, aided by the most accommodating climate in the world, there seems to be every reason for regarding the coming tournament as a foreordained success. The English and the Indian teams number amongst their members the crack players of the world. The English team will reach California in the late spring, and as most of its players are of the British nobility, and will be accompanied by their wives, the social life of the colony "down the peninsula" will reach the climax of gaiety before the commencement of the summer. Not only are social programs being planned well in advance, but polo practice is faithfully kept up as never before. Some of the new acquisitions to the local club begin to develop considerable skill for novices, and the competition between the two teams is keen. As further inducement, a number of valuable silver cups have been purchased by the committee and at the end of the present series of games each member of the winning team is to receive one of the trophies. Walter McCreery has won commendation for some of his brilliant strokes, and it is confidently hoped that our home teams will invite favorable comparison with the visitors.

The Paxtons

The Charles Paxtons, who according to newspaper report, are on the verge of a domestic rupture, are very well known in local social circles. Charles Paxton is the brother of Blitz Paxton, whose own affairs have had more than a passing interest for devourers of sensational news, and both are sons of the late Healdsburg banker of that name. Mrs. Charles Paxton was Miss Susie Darneal, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hervey Darneal of Alameda. She was a beautiful girl and had a long reign as an acknowledged belle. Her father is the official reporter of the Supreme Court and her mother a prominent member of the association of Colonial Dames of America. About eight years ago Susie Darneal married Alan Bowen of Alameda in spite of her mother's opposition to the match, the only effect of which was to give the affair prominence in the newspapers. The young couple went to New York to live but in less than two years they were separated by a divorce. Mrs. Alan Bowen Darneal was married to Charles Paxton about three years ago. She is a woman of taste and refinement, and has created a furor by her magnificent and dazzling dressing. They have resided at the St. Francis, where their domestic rift has attracted the attention of other residents, and their affairs have been whispered over and hinted at, so that, although up to date the papers have not been filed nobody is in the least surprised that there is trouble brewing. The parents of Alan Bowen, Mrs. Paxton's first husband, surprised their fellow townsmen by seeking a divorce after they had had a family of nine children, most of them grown up.

Mrs. Lieb in Italy

Anxiety is expressed for the safety of Mrs. Samuel Lieb, wife of Judge S. F. Lieb of San Jose, as there is fear that she may have been one of the victims of the Italian disaster. The last letter that the family received from her announced her intention of starting at once for Italy where she had planned to spend several months, and nothing has been heard of her since the calamity. Mrs. Lieb is a sister of Dr. John Grissam of Oakland. The eldest daughter of Judge and Mrs. Lieb, Elinor, is the wife of Professor W. H. Wright of the Lick Observatory, a son of the late Judge Selden S. Wright. Miss Lida Lieb married Mr. Armstrong, a mining man of Denver.

At the recent annual dinner of the Sequoia Club Mr. J. D. Phelan had as his guest Mrs. Gertrude Atherton, who has but recently returned to San Francisco. Eighty-five sat down to the dinner, and brilliant speeches and bright toasts were in order. Messrs. Phelan, Peikotto and Allan Dunn being especially happy in their remarks. Music and dancing brought the evening to a close. The club rooms were artistically decorated by Miss Elizabeth Holmes.

Mrs. W. H. Mills and her two charming daughters, Miss Ardella and Miss Elizabeth, are stopping at the Hershey Arms in Los Angeles. They expect to leave soon for their long contemplated trip to New York.

NORTH GERMAN LLOYD

FAST EXPRESS SERVICE

PLYMOUTH—CHERBOURG—BREMEN, 10 A. M.

Kaiser Wm. II.....February 2 Kaiser Wm. II.....March 2
Ceeilie .. ..February 16 Ceeilie .. ..March 23

TWIN-SCREW PASSENGER SERVICE

BREMEN DIRECT—10 A. M.

Brandenburg .. ..January 14 Chemnitz .. ..January 28
P. Frdh. Wm. ....January 19 Neckar .. ..February 4
Calls at Plymouth and Cherbourg.

MEDITERRANEAN SERVICE

GIBRALTAR—NAPLES—GENOA, AT 11 A. M.

K. Luise .....January 16 *K. Kaiserst .....February 11
K. Albert .....January 30 K. Luise .....February 27
*Calls at Madeira, Gibraltar, Algiers, Genoa; thence proceeding on Orient Cruise. Good accommodations available to Genoa.

North German Lloyd Travelers' Checks.

OELRICHS & CO., 5 Broadway, New York.

ROBERT CAPELLE, G. A. P. C. 250 POWELL ST.
Opposite St. Francis Hotel, San Francisco. Telephone Kearny 6794.

SCHOOL OF DESIGN

The San Francisco Institute of Art
(Formerly Mark Hopkins Institute)
Affiliated with the State University

PAINTING
DRAWING
DECORATIVE DESIGNING

MODELING ILLUSTRATING TEACHERS' COURSE

Daily, Saturday and Night Classes. Open January 4th.
Circulars mailed on application to the S. F. Institute of Art, California and Mason Streets, San Francisco.

Milo

Do you know what Quality means in a Turkish Cigarette? If not get a box of "MILO." Then, any other cigarette, and try same, side by side. You'll note the delicate, aromatic mildness of the "MILO." Mildness (yet with the richness in flavor) is what costs in Turkish Tobacco, and its just this that makes the Perfect Cigarette. You'll find it in No Other.

This perfection is obtained only by owning our own plantation in Turkey—the careful watchfulness from the seeding to the finished article.

Write to the Surbrug Company for samples and prices.

THE SURBRUG COMPANY, New York City

A Literary Couple

Another wedding of social interest locally is that of Kathleen Thompson to Charles Norris, which will be quietly celebrated in New York next March. Owing to a press of business affairs Mr. Norris will be unable to spend the spring in California, as he had anticipated, and in the course of a few weeks Miss Thompson, accompanied by Mrs. Norris, the groom's mother, will leave for New York, where the marriage will take place soon after their arrival. They will make their future home in New York, where, report says they will open a studio and live in truly artistic and somewhat Bohemian style. Charles Norris is well known in San Francisco and well liked. He is essentially a man's man, and like his brother, the late Frank Norris, he has chosen literature for his life's work. He is at present the editor of the American Magazine but has already won for himself a reputation as a writer of short stories. Miss Thompson is no less clever with her pen, and has acquired some glory in our local newspaper world. She is a daughter of the late James Thompson, for many years president of the Bohemian Club, who was noted for his quick, bright mind and ready flow of wit. She is the eldest of three girls. Her sisters, Theresa and Margaret, are favorities of the younger set both here and in Mill Valley where, until within the last few years, they have made their home.

A Mizner in Literature

Wilson Mizner has again made his way into print, this time as the author of a Collier prize story, "Three Saved," a stirring tale of Alaskan adventure. There has never been any question on the subject of ability in the Mizner family, but unfortunately application and ambition have been lacking. Addison Mizner has artistic talent which was put to proof some years ago when in Honolulu. He executed the miniatures of several children so successfully that orders piled in upon him, and had he chosen to accept them he might have made a reputation for himself. Addie, however, found the tropics too enervating for such "hard labor," and nothing came of it.

Stokes Detached

Dr. Charles Francis Stokes, U. S. N., who was in command of the hospital ship Relief when she almost foundered in a typhoon on her voyage from Manila to Guam, has been detached and will join the navy surgeons' department at Washington. Dr. Stokes and his wife are well known in this, where Mrs. Stokes, who was Miss Charlotte Bermingham, daughter of Captain John Bermingham, was prominent in the old, exclusive set of North Beach, amongst whom were Miss Edna Moody, the Bosqui girls, the Boltons and Miss Roberta Wright, all now married and as popular as matrons as they were before. Mrs. Stokes was a brilliant and loveable girl. Her intimate friend was Miss Beulah Hobbs, the first wife of Webster Jones, from whom she was divorced and afterwards married Count Arsimovitch of Russia. Dr. Stokes was appointed to the command of the Relief by the President. At the time it was the cause of some friction and considerable heated discussion between the line and staff officers of the service.

He Has a Dainty Boudoir

A. Dalton Harrison, one of the best known and most eligible bachelors of this vicinity, made a spectacular wind-up to his New Year celebration, which ended in the smashing of a hose cart belonging to the Oakland fire department, a wordy warfare with a good Samaritan who tried to come to his rescue, an arrest for violating the speed limit, and finally, a forfeiture of the thirty-one dollars bail money which he had deposited as earnest of his appearance in the police court to answer the charge of fast motoring. Harrison was returning from the Claremont Club where he had been celebrating the New Year, and at two o'clock in the morning he was either too blind to see or to indifferent to heed the apparatus of the department working to extinguish a blaze in the Delger Block. A. Dalton Harrison is an Englishman, a member of the insurance firm of Catton, Bell and Co. His home is on Paru street in Alameda, and is one of the most artistic in the Encinal city. He entertains in a lavish manner and is noted for his numerous and costly dinner parties. It is said that no society debutante's boudoir could be more dainty than Mr. Harrison's and his bed room is a dream. The four-post bed is draped and festooned in pale pink silk studded with electric lights and the bath room is a work of art. Few bachelors care to entertain in such regal style, and he is the subject of pointed attentions from managing society mammas. At one time he was a worshipper at the shrine of Miss Susie Darneal, now Mrs. Charles Paxton.

Never Again For Her

Word comes from Los Angeles that the Walter Watsons contemplate building in the southern city during the spring. Mrs. Watson will be remembered as Jennie Lathrop, whose romantic marriage was a nine-days' wonder in our social world. It is on account of the unpleasant publicity given to the affair by the Bavardes of the daily press that the Watsons have elected to make Los Angeles their home in the future. In fact, Mrs. Watson has written to her friends vehemently declaring that never again will she set foot in San Francisco. She has taken but little part in the social life of Los Angeles yet, but after the new home is finished and occupied, she will do her share both in entertaining and in being entertained.

A Boston Lecturer in Berkeley

Rev. Joseph H. Crooker, D. D., and Mrs. Crooker of Boston are stopping at the Hotel Calton in Berkeley. Rev. Mr. Crooker is pastor of the Roslindale Unitarian Church of Boston, and while in Berkeley he will give a course of lectures at the Unitarian Divinity School. He has also promised to preach several times to congregations in San Jose. He is the author of a number of books dealing with present-day religious problems, and his latest work, "The Church Today," has been printed by three denominations. Mrs. Crooker is also a minister, the Reverend Florence Kollack Crooker, pastor of the St. Paul's Universalist Church of Boston. She organized the Universalist Church at Pasadena and before her marriage was widely known as a writer and lecturer in Chicago, where she organized a large Universalist Church

GIERSBERGER WINES
The wine of merit and quality all around the world. Compare it with the best wines and we are satisfied.
THEO. GIER WINE COMPANY
Phone Oakland 123 1225-1227 BROADWAY, OAKLAND

Grand Prix and Highest Awards at all World Expositions
DEWAR'S

SCOTCH WHISKY
Makes the Best High Ball on Earth
SHERWOOD & SHERWOOD, Importers

of which she was the pastor for thirteen years. At the close of Mr. Crooker's lecture engagement they will leave for Southern California to spend several weeks.

She's Such a Catch

The festivity consequent on the celebration of New Year's eve proved too much for more than one sedate married man. A well known insurance agent was feeling in a rarely happy mood when, accompanied by his wife and her mother, he boarded a California street car outside the Fairmont some time in the "we, sma' hours ayont the twal.'" The car was well filled with returning merry-makers and the bars of conventionality were down, so, spying an old friend in the corner, he waxed loquatious. "Hallo, Tom," he called out pleasantly, "how are you? Come on over here—I want you to meet my mother-in-law. She's a catch!" An audible smile ran round the car and his wife endeavored to quiet him. To her mild remonstrance he made answer, "Oh, that's all right; we want to get rid of her," and even the mother-in-law joined in the laugh that followed.

The Colonials

Everybody has been on the qui vive for the first of the Colonial dances, scheduled for Friday evening of this week at the St. Francis, and as it is designed more for the younger people than for the married set, the debutantes have been anticipating it with more than usual interest. The Colonials promise to be among the jolliest affairs of the season, even though they are to be governed by the strictest of rules. The patronesses insist on having the dances begin early in the interests of the men, who have not found the very late hours compatible with business life. In deference to this consideration the ball will be in full swing by a quarter before ten. There will also be a strict surveillance kept on the arriving guests, and the presentation of membership cards will be insisted upon before admission is granted. The precaution is justified by the experience of other organizations this winter and even that of the hosts at private balls, who have been annoyed by discovering the presence of climbers and would-be's who have slipped into the sacred precincts on the strength of their own impudence. The second Colonial, on the twenty-third of February, will not be a Colonial cotillion, as has been generally assumed, but a regular Mardi-Gras, with fancy costumes, dominoes and masques. It will take the place of the carnival formerly held at the Hopkins Institute of Art, and as it will be the last affair of the season, it may be expected to be a lively occasion.

The Colonel Floored Greenway

According to a veracious New York journal Colonel John W. Cotton's stepdaughter, Elizabeth Latimer, is a great beauty and has been creating a furor in the smart set. Mrs. Cotton and her daughter are conspicuous figures in the social swim, but Colonel Cotton has abandoned the gaiety of the metropolis, preferring as he does the rare and bracing atmosphere of San Francisco. The Colonel is physically and temperamentally a picturesque personality, the very embodiment of Western breeziness and good-fellowship. In New York a few years ago he was one of the familiar figures in Wall street, and he was identified with some pretty big financial projects, but he has forsworn high finance for a business that is to him a pastime—that of cultivating in mankind a taste for wine. The Colonel is really a professional educator, the literature of the vine being his hobby and the expounding of it his chief delight—with a bottle of Pommery for an object lesson. Recently after a debate with Mr. Ned Greenway the verdict rendered was that Pommery had Mum lashed to the mast.

A SKIN OF BEAUTY IS A JOY FOREVER

DR. T. FELIX GOURAUD'S

ORIENTAL CREAM

OR MAGICAL BEAUTIFIER

Purifies as well as Beautifies the Skin. No other cosmetic will do it.

Removes Tan, Pimples, Freckles, Moth Patches, Rash and Skin Diseases, and every blemish on beauty, and defies detection. It has stood the test of 60 years; no other has, and it is so harmless we taste it to be sure it is properly made. Accept no countefeit of similar name. The distinguished Dr. L. A. Sayre said to a lady of the haut-on (a patient): "As you ladies will use them, I recommend 'Gouraud's Cream' as the least harmful of all the skin preparations."

For sale by all Druggists and Fancy Goods Dealers.

GOURAUD'S ORIENTAL TOILET POWDER

For infants and adults. Exquisitely perfumed. Relieves Skin Irritation, cures Sunburn and renders an excellent complexion. Price 25 Cents, by Mail.

GOURAUD'S POUDRE SUBTILE

Removes Superfluous Hair. Price $1.00, by mail

FERD. T. HOPKINS, Prop'r, 37 Great Jones St., New York City.

A Victoria Function

The Hotel Victoria kept open house in true Knickerbocker fashion on New Year's eve, with plenty of enthusiasm, music and good cheer. The Victoria is a new hotel and the management spared no effort in making its first public function a success. The guests of the house were privileged to invite their friends, and a merry gathering of nearly three hundred took possession of the place early in the evening. The entire lower floor was beautifully decorated and thrown open for the use of the various buffets in the banquet hall, with sandwiches and all the other good things provided in equal proportion. When the horns announced the coming in of the New Year everyone crowded to the lobby, and helped to swell the din so effectively that it was not until an hour later, when the merrymakers were in the enjoyment of a delicious supper, that Fred. Eppstein and his string orchestra were able to make themselves heard. Every table in the three dining rooms was taken and some of the most prominent people of the city were visitors. Not one, but half a dozen punch bowls adorned among the guests. Choice flowers and fruits were displayed and lights glowed from every corner. The dawn was well advanced before the last of the revelers realized that the New Year was really in and that it was time for them to depart.

The select dancing class of Mrs. Wilkins which convene on different days each week are becoming more and more popular. The Juvenile Class at 3:15 Thursday afternoon always attracts the parents of the youngsters who enjoy watching the children take their first steps. On the same evening the U. C. Student Class is held, and on Friday the High School, both at 8 o'clock, and the married people's assemble is the first and third Monday of each week. All these classes meet at Wilkins Hall, Berkeley, under the personal direction of Mrs. Wilkins.

PROF. FELIX CRISTION, OF PARIS, FRANCE

That Golden Gate Hall will be packed Monday afternoon to hear Paris' great beauty scientist, there can be no doubt. Much will be said to pay the most fastidious ladies, as it is claimed that Prof. Cristion is a master in this art, and coming as he does from Paris and being authority on facial blemishes and beauty culture, the up-to-date lady will receive valuable information. Mme. Maye, his assistant, will wear a genuine Worth gown. No babies or children admitted. Ladies are requested to be seated by 2:30 o'clock. Monday afternoon's lecture is free.

In the Social Spotlight

Judge William Lawlor came down by train to meet his friends, Mr. and Mrs. John Spring, Mrs. Daniel Frohman and Mr. E. W. Bowen, who had motored to the Del Monte from the city. Mrs. Frohman, Margaret Illington, as she is better known, is taking a much needed rest after her arduous season in "The Thief."

Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Postlethwaite and Miss Postlethwaite are at Del Monte.

Mr. J. W. Irvine and his mother, Mrs. M. Irvine, have returned after a short stay in the city.

The following San Franciscans registered at Del Monte during the week: Mr. and Mrs. Julian Hart, Mr. and Mrs. Philip I. Mason, Mr. and Mrs. W. O. Wayman, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. McNear and George McNear, third, Dr. and and Mrs. Hanlon, Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Chenery, Mr. John Marshall and Miss Marion Marshall, Mrs. Samuel Seller, Miss Alma Levison, Mr. and Mrs. A. Lindeur, Mrs. A. T. Shaw and Miss Shaw, Miss L. M. Doe, Mr. J. O. Meara, Mr. M. G. Pfaff.

Mr. and Mrs. Francis McComas and their friend, Mrs. Mortimer Smith, spent the week at Del Monte and attended the Charles Rollo Peters' New Year's eve party.

Society is looking forward to the next affair of the St. Francis Musical Art Society, and there is no doubt that the brilliancy of the first concert will be equalled if not surpassed, for Gadski's local popularity is exceptional.

The ball masque on New Year's eve, and the reception of the day following at the Presidio of Monterey, together with Charles Rollo Peters' little party and several informal hops and dinner parties at Hotel Del Monte added considerable vivacity to the social life of the peninsula.

The W. B. Wilshires, with their charming daughter, Miss Doris, have given up their Buchanan street home and are at the Victoria for the winter.

Major J. S. Parks and his daughter, Miss Genevieve, were guests at the Del Monte for the week's end and attended the reception at the Presidio. Major Parks has just got back from a flying trip to the Philippines and China, but he will be obliged to return to the Orient in the near future and in his absence he will leave his family at the Del Monte.

Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Coryell of Menlo Park, and their guests, Mrs. Kate Voorhees Henry, Miss Jessup, Dr. Otto Graf, Count d' Abbons and M. Leon de Ware, were down for New Years and the week end. They were the guests of Charles Rollo Peters on New Year's eve.

Mr. Lindsay Scrutton was at Del Monte with a jolly golfing party who took advantage of the exceptionally fine weather and played enthusiastically every day. Amongst them were Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Chenery, Mr. and Mrs. R. I. Bentley, Mrs. George D. Ali, Mr. Gustave Sutro and Mrs. Samuel Schwartz.

Mrs. Clement Bennett was hostess at two delightful teas on last Sunday and Monday afternoons at the Fairmont, in honor of Mrs. Charles D. Pierce of Stockton. A most delightful hour was spent on each occasion and it enabled the old friends of Mrs. Pierce, who lately returned from Europe, once more to greet her.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Trounson have closed their Mill Valley place and taken apartments at the Hotel Victoria for the remainder of the season.

Mrs. Joseph E. Crockett, who is soon to leave for an extended tour of the old world, was the guest of honor at Mrs. Samuel Knight's luncheon at the St. Francis. It was a farewell party, and amongst those who assembled to wish her a pleasant voyage were Mrs. J. Athearn Folger, Mrs. George W. Lent, Mrs. Robert T. Woods, Mrs. Osgood Hooker, Mrs. William C. Irwin, Mrs. Joseph D. Grant, Mrs. Robert Oxnard, Mrs. Mountford Wilson and Mrs. Henry T. Scott.

RHEUMATISM

AND ALL PAIN INSTANTLY RELIEVED BY

BAUME BETULAE

THE ORIGINAL APPLICATION BY ABSORPTION

SOLD BY DRUGGISTS FOR 50 CENTS A TUBE
AND AT OWL DRUG COMPANY STORES.

A BURNING QUESTION

How to Keep Warm Frosty Mornings? Try the

HOME OPEN FRONT OIL HEATER

A PERFECT HEATER

PORTABLE

SAFE

Cheerful as an open grate fire. Most successful oil heater ever invented. Sold on a guarantee. If not satisfactory money refunded.

Made in Three Sizes

MANUFACTURED BY

W. W. MONTAGUE & CO.

Corner Turk and Polk Streets, San Francisco.

THE CHAFING DISH

The Chafing Dish is now becoming so generally used, and its necessity in the household so fully recognized, that we take pleasure in calling your attention to the fine line we handle, as well as every Chafing Dish necessary.

L. D. McLEAN CO.

IMPORTERS AND GROCERS

PHONE FRANKLIN 2810 1158-1168 Sutter St. San Francisco

You may have beautiful hair now, but we want to help you to retain it even through old age.

We should like to have every reader of this paper try

ED. PINAUD'S

(Eau de Quinine)

HAIR TONIC

for one month—we KNOW the results would warrant its constant use.

Nothing has ever been known to equal the wonderful efficiency of this delightful preparation. It preserves the youthful beauty of the hair, prevents dandruff and keeps the scalp hygienically clean.

Let us send you a sample bottle, or better still, buy this famous French hair tonic from your dealer to-day and test it for yourself.

Your name and address (with 10 cents for postage and packing) will bring a liberal sample by return mail.

WRITE TO-DAY.

PARFUMERIE ED. PINAUD

ED. PINAUD BUILDING, DEPT. S. F.

FIFTH AVENUE - - NEW YORK

Stage

Satire on Family Pride

That clever English writer, St. John Hankin, seems to tread upon very delicate and dangerous ground in his comedy, "The Last of the De Mullins," which has just been produced by the London Stage Society. Presumably this is the reason why it was selected for performance. It, apparently, is a satire upon the least precious sort of family pride. Janet De Mullin is the daughter of an ancient house that has been withering in mouldy, futile, but respectable insignificance for generations. She is born with an independent spirit, an infusion of red blood, and the spirit of revolt, and so permits herself to love unwisely and too well. Being deserted by her lover —a young subaltern—and unable to conceal her lapse, she goes to London where she starts a hatshop, prospers, and boldly faces the world with her fatherless boy. By and by her parents become more or less reconciled with her, but are scandalized at the idea of a De Mullin making a living out of trade. They demand that she shall return and live in the old home, with the child, to whom the grandparents have become attached. But she finds that she can no longer exist in the ancestral atmosphere, with its old-fashioned prejudices and pride, and therefore goes back to town to fight the battle of life alone maintaining that she has been justified from the first by the maternal instinct which had prompted her. The notion that an act of folly becomes a safe or noble precedent because in a single instance its worst consequences have been avoided is, of course, ridiculous, but the modern dramatist is only too apt to mistake the meaning of the old adage that exceptions prove the rule. Mr. Hankin, it appears, found an admirable impersonator of his emancipated heroine in Lillah McCarthy.

"Brewster's Millions" at the Van Ness

The Cohan & Harris comedians, headed by Robert Ober, will present the New York, London and Chicago success, "Brewster's Millions" at the Van Ness Theatre commencing Sunday night, January 10th. "Brewster's Millions" is a dramatization of George Barr McCutcheon's novel of the same name. The play deals in the frankest manner imaginable with the improbable and the impossible, and this same frankness so takes the audience off its guard that the unreal becomes real, and the smile of bland good nature engulfs every one. Montgomery Brewster's grandfather dies and leaves him a round million. Then a western uncle passes away and wills the young man seven millions providing he spends the first bequest within twelve months. A list of queer conditions are tacked on the will, but "Monty," being a good-natured young chap, sees fun ahead and takes up the gauntlet. Did you ever try to spend a million in a year? From the difficulties encountered by Brewster it would seem that the spending of ten hundred thousand dollars "legitimately" in 365 days is attended by greater hardships than is the saving of a similar amount. The engagement is limited to eight days.

The Gadski Concerts

The first of the two Sunday afternoon concerts at the Van Ness Theatre by San Francisco's favorite primadonna soprano, Mme. Johanna Gadski, will be given this Sunday afternoon, January 10th, promptly at half past two, when with the assistance of the talented pianist and composer, Mr. Frank La Forge, the artist will present one of the most attractive and interesting programs ever offered our music lovers. The first part of the program will be devoted to very old works and will be as follows: "My mother bids me bind my hair," Hadyn; "When the roses bloom" and "Menuet d' Exaudet," Reichardt; "Venez agreable printemps," Chansons of the XVIII century; "Phyllis has such charming graces," Young; "The lass with the delicate air," Arne; piano solo, "Gavotte with variations, Rameau. The second part will consist of modern songs of the romantic school and will include two by Mr. La Forge. "Die Junge None" and "Nacht und Traume," Schubert; "Stille Sicherkeit," Franz; "Ich lieb eine blume, Franz; "Evening Stillness" and "Expectancy," La Forge; "Nacht" and Zueignung," R. Strauss; piano solo, "Nocturne in F sharp major, Chopin. The third part will be entirely Wagnerian and includes "Der Engel," "Schlummerlied" and "Senta's Ballad" from "The Flying Dutchman. The second and last concert will be given the following Sunday when an equally interesting program will be given.

Gadski in Oakland

For her concert in Oakland at Ye Liberty Playhouse on Wednesday afternoon, January 20th, at half past three, Mme. Gadski has selected a program which contains not one work of her San Francisco ones. The reason for this is that so many music lovers cross the bay to attend the concerts on this side and are disappointed when the program is repeated at the Oakland concert. This time there will be no cause for that complaint. Seats for this event will be on sale at the theatre box office Friday morning the 15th, and prices will be just the same as in San Francisco.

Belasco's "Sweet Kitty"

"Sweet Kitty Bellairs," which is to be given its first presentation west of Chicago next week at the Alcazar, was written by David Belasco, who found his inspiration in Egerton Castle's charming tale, "The Bath Comedy." It will be the most elaborate production ever undertaken by a stock theatre. In the cast are thirty-five speaking parts and a small army of silent supernumeraries, and each of the four acts unfolds a set of gorgeous stage pictures. As a production this play will tax to utmost limit the Alcazar's artistic and mechanical resources; and to give full justice to incidental and entreact music, specially composed by William Furst of New York, the orchestra will be considerably augmented. The first act takes place in the temporary officers' quarters of a British infantry regiment where a "ladies' day" is in full swing. In the second act a nobleman's sumptuous lodgings are shown, and act three takes place at a regimental ball. The final act develops at Bristol, where the troops embark for the continent in a pouring rain. This is one of the greatest evidences of Belasco's wizardry as a creator of impressive stage realism. Preceding the play is a pretty prologue addressed to the audience by a pretty girl in coquettish array. In the title part Evelyn Vaughan will have one of the most congenial roles she had ever played. The character rapidly alternates between serious and lightsome moods, and at all times is intensely engaging. In both these phases of interpretation Miss Vaughan has shown a high order of talent since she came to the Alcazar, so it will be akin to a double treat to witness her as the winsome and capricious Kitty. Her acting will be enhanced in effectiveness by her costumes, which are of the fashion worn by England's high-born dames when George the Third was king. All the other principal characters will be attired with similar faithfulness to their rank and the period and place of the play. Bertram Lytell's handsome face and figure will lose no charm by his sartorial embellishment, and the ensemble scenes, of which there are several, promise to be the most luxurious and artistic pictures ever presented in a stock theatre anywhere.

UPTON SINCLAIR

Whose play "Prince Hagen" will be given its initial production at the Valencia Theatre Monday evening.

Sothern's Repertoire

The Van Ness Theatre will present its strongest offering to its patrons with the appearance of Mr. E. H. Sothern for two weeks commencing Monday, January 18th. In his first week he will appear in the three most important plays of his present repertoire: "Richard Lovelace," "Lord Dundreary" and "Hamlet." During his second week Mr. Sothern will appear as "Richelieu" for the first time. His performance of Hamlet will rank as one of the most important events of the dramatic year, and "Lord Dundreary" will doubtless excite widespread interest. Mr. Sothern presents this play just as it was presented by his father, and his impersonation of the role is looked upon as one of the most humorous creations of the present day drama. "Richard Lovelace" is the newest dramatic impersonation Sothern has given to the stage.

Sinclair's Play

After a successful run of two weeks the "College Widow" will be played for the last time at the Valencia Theatre on Sunday afternoon and evening, and on Monday night "Prince Hagen." a fantastic drama in four acts and six scenes, by Upton Sinclair, author of "The Jungle," will be presented for the first time on any stage. Those who have read the story and have been privileged to witness the rehearsals which have been progressing for several weeks predict an overwhelming success for the play. Gerald Manning, the hero. is an impoverished poet with a passion for music, particularly the Wagnerian operas, strains from which he plays on his violin while camping in the Canadian woods, where his solitude is broken in upon by a party of rich New Yorkers. After the departure of the tourists, one of whom has captivated the heart of the poet, Manning turns to his violin for solace from what he knows to be a hopeless passion. As he plays snatches from his favorite operas he is amazed to discover the Niebelungen dwarfs issuing from behind rocks and trees. They convince him that they are not creatures of the imagination, and take him with them into the cavern in the bowels of the earth. Prince Hagen, "the son of violence and crime," is now introduced. He returns to the earth with Manning, where he becomes the controller of the earth's supply of gold. The ensuing scenes are laid in a Bowery saloon, a Fifth Avenue mansion and a Newport country seat, with Prince Hagen always dominating every situation except one. He cannot win the hand of the magnate's daughter, but is eventually eliminated from the scene by being overcome by a sleeping powder and carried back to the Neibelungen cave. With Prince Hagen removed and Manning free to marry the girl of his choice, the end of the play is in keeping with the traditions of fairy lore, "and so they were happy ever after." The almost lightning changes of scene and the opportunity for brilliant stage effects of the woodland scenes bring "Prince Hagen" well within the lines of a spectacular production. The music, which will be a special feature, has been written by Herman Heller, the talented leader of the orchestra, who has been collaborating with Mr. Sinclair, himself a violinist of no small attainments. The orchestra will be augmented by French horns, oboes, bassoons and other instruments, and for this production will comprise over twenty performers chosen from amongst the best musicians obtainable. There are twenty speaking parts in the play, and the full strength of the Valencia company will be called out.

Mackenzie Gordon's Recitals

Although Mackenzie Gordon has often been heard in public here he has given very few recitals; so the announcement of two recitals in this city and one in Oakland will be welcomed by all lovers of beautiful songs perfectly rendered. As an interpreter of "lieder" Gordon ranks with such artists as De Gogorza, Hamlin and

ASK FOR
BLACK AND WHITE
SCOTCH WHISKEY
IT IS THE BEST
NONE BOTTLED IN AMERICA

Mme. GADSKI
PRIMA-DONNA SOPRANO
Assisted by Mr. Frank La Forge, Pianist,
VAN NESS THEATRE
This Sunday Afternoon, January 10th 2:30 sharp, and Sunday Afternoon, January 17th, at 2:30 sharp.
Seats $2.50, $2.00, $1.50, $1.00 at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s Sutter and Kearny Store. Box Office Sunday at Theatre. Phone Market 500.
GADSKI IN OAKLAND, Wednesday Afternoon, January 20th
A Special Program.
Seats ready next Friday at Ye Liberty. Steinway Piano Used.

EXTRA!! MME. KATHARINE
GOODSON
One of the World's Greatest Pianists in Three Exceptional Programs,
CHRISTIAN SCIENCE HALL
Tuesday and Thursday Evenings, January 19-21; Sunday Afternoon, Jan. 24.
Seats $1.50 and $1.00 at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s next Friday, when complete programs may be obtained.
Mason and Hamlin Piano Used.
GOODSON IN OAKLAND
Friday Afternoon, January 22nd at 3:30.
Next: MACKENZIE GORDON, Tenor.

ROBERTSON'S
A BOOK STORE
1539 VAN NESS AVE. NEXT TO THE "WHITE HOUSE"
CARD PLATES .·. MONOGRAMS
WEDDING INVITATIONS
A. M. ROBERTSON

Bispham, and in English, Irish and Scotch "folk-songs" he has no peer. The concerts in this city will be given Tuesday night, February 9th and Sunday afternoon, February 14th, and the Oakland concert will be Friday afternoon, February 12th at Ye Liberty Playhouse.

Katharine Goodson—a Great Pianist

Manager Will Greenbaum is in receipt of a letter from the violinist Arthur Hartman from Vancouver in which he writes: "I have just played the Kreutzer Sonata with Katharine Goodson and I want you to know I consider her about as perfect an artist as lives." In an interview some months ago in London Arthur Nickisch, the great conductor, said: "I have known many artists in my life, many soloists, but the true musicians I can count on the fingers of one hand: Ysaye, Paderewski, D'Albert and to these I now add Katharine Goodson. It is by reason of such reports that Manager Greenbaum claims to have in Katharine Goodson one of the very great pianists and musicians of the present day. Miss Goodson was born in England and was a pupil of Leschetizky. She will be heard in three exceptionally interesting programs at Christian Science Hall, the dates being Tuesday and Thursday nights, January 19th and 21st and Sunday afternoon, January 24th.

A Cohan Play at the American

The attraction at the American Theatre for the week beginning Sunday afternoon will be George M. Cohan's latest musical drama "50 Miles From Boston" which will be presented under the management of Cohan and Harris. Versatile Miss Hazel Lowry will appear at the head of a big company which includes such favorite players as Joseph Sparks, Suzanne Leonard Westford, W. Douglas Stevenson and Thomas Emory. The play concerns itself with the trials and triumphs of the demure little post-mistress, who is also the village beauty, and who falls in love with the hero of the Harvard Baseball Club. The entire village takes a hand in the game and it looks for a while as if poor Cupid and the post-mistress were going to come out losers. The usual rivalry for the favor of the post-mistress furnishes screamingly funny situations and brings in all the village characters, from the shy little post-mistress herself, and the complacent owner of the solitary village department store, to the haughty heiress, who went to school in Boston.

Orpheum Vaudeville

The Orpheum has certainly started the New Year most auspiciously for the present program is of exceptional merit, and next week's bill is particularly attractive. The Three Yoscarys, famed the world over as eccentric comedy acrobats, will be the headliner. Attired in modern costume and encumbered with heavy overcoats they perform marvelous athletic feats which are interspersed with a quaint and dry comedy that is irresistible. Mr. and Mrs. Gene Hughes, refined comedians, will present a dainty comedy by Fred J. Beaman, entitled "Suppressing the Press," which has scored a great hit in the leading vaudeville theatres of the East. Rogers and Deely, who played a too short engagement of one week recently, will return with their clever and diverting skit, "The Singer and His Valet." Next week will be the last of De Biere, the marvelous illusionist, those charming terpsichorean artists, the Rooney Sisters, the famous Parisian dancers, Les Salvaggis, Hibbert and Warren, and also of that splendid light comedian, Wilfred Clarke and his clever company in the delightful comedy, "What Will Happen Next?"

NEW ALCAZAR THEATRE
Cor. Sutter and Steiner Class "A" Building Phone West 6036
BELASCO & MAYER, Owners and Managers
Monday Night, January 11th, and All Week, First Time in San Francisco of David Belasco's Comedy of Heart
SWEET KITTY BELLAIRS
Adapted from Egerton Castle's Famous Story, "The Bath Comedy."
Prices: Evenings, 25c to $1.00. Matinees, Saturday and Sunday, 25c to 50c.

VAN NESS THEATRE
Cor. Van Ness and Grove Gottlob, Marx & Co., Mgrs. Phone Market 500
Beginning Sunday Night, January 10, Engagement Limited to Eight Nights, Matinee Saturday, the Cohan and Harris Comedians in Frederic Thompson's Stupendous Production, BREWSTER'S MILLIONS
With ROBERT OBER
The same notable cast and scenic effects as seen here last season, including the GREAT YACHT SCENE.
Jan. 18—E. H. SOTHERN in "Hamlet," "Richard Lovelace," "Lord Dundreary" and "Richelieu."

PRINCESS THEATRE PHONE WEST 663
S. LOVERICH, MANAGER
Ellis Street, near Fillmore
Absolutely Class "A" Building
Matinee, Saturday and Sunday
This and Next Week
KOLB & DILL
In Their Latest and Greatest Hit
THE POLITICIANS
Book by Aaron Hoffman—Music by J. A. Raynes.
Prices—Evenings 25c, 50c, 75c, $1.00. Matinees (Except Sundays and Holidays, 25c, 50c, 75c

ORPHEUM
Ellis Street, near Fillmore
Absolutely Class "A" Bldg
Phone West 6000
Week Beginning this Sunday Afternoon. Matinee Every Day.
ARTISTIC VAUDEVILLE.
THE THREE YOSCARYS, Europe's Foremost Athletic Eccentrics; MR. and MRS. GENE HUGHES, in the Dainty Playlet, "Suppressing the Press"; ROGERS & DEELY, "The Singer and his Valet," This Week Only; The Mysterious De BIERE; LES SALVAGGIS; THE ROONEY SISTERS; HIBBERT & WARREN; NEW ORPHEUM MOTION PICTURES. Last Week—Great Comedy Triumph WILFRED CLARKE & CO. in "What Will Happen Next?"
Evening Prices: 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c. Box Seats, $1.00. Matinee Prices (Except Sundays and Holidays): 10c, 25c, 50c.

VALENCIA THEATRE
Valencia Street, between Thirteenth and Fourteenth Phone Market 17
Saturday and Sunday Afternoons and Evenings, Last Times of "The College Widow."
Commencing Monday Evening, January 11, First Production on Any Stage of PRINCE HAGEN
A Fantastic Drama by Upton Sinclair, author of "The Jungle," Presented by the Valencia Stock Company, Including Robert Warwick and Blanche Stoddard. Special Music Composed by Herman Heller and Played by an Orchestra of Twenty.
Regular Matinees, Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday, Prices 25c to 50c. Evenings, 25c to 75c. Box Seats, $1.00.

AMERICAN THEATRE
Market St., nr. Seventh Phone Market 381
Week Commencing Sunday Matinee, January 10th, Cohan and Harris Present
GEORGE M. COHAN'S
Rural Rustic Musical Play
FIFTY MILES FROM BOSTON
A Fetching Cohan Chorus.
Prices, Evenings, 25c, 50c, 75c, $1.00. No higher. Matinees, 25c, 50c, 75c.
Next: FLORENCE ROBERTS.

FREE FOR LADIES
MONDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 11th
At 2:30 O'Clock
GOLDEN GATE HALL
2137 SUTTER STREET, Bet. Steiner and Pierce
Scientific Lectures in English on BEAUTY CULTURE
And FACIAL BLEMISHES
By
Prof. Cristion, M.D., A.M.
Late of the Paris Academy of Sciences
Beauty doctor to Mmes. Bernhardt, Nordica, Patti and Langtry, assisted by one of the most beautiful women of her age, MME. L. M. MAYE. Monday afternoon, lecture is free.
Tuesday afternoon, admission, 50 cents.

The Well-Dressed Man

What to Wear, When and Where

Written exclusively for Town Talk by J. M. JACOBI

For the benefit of those men who have neither the time nor inclination to study the art of Dressing Correctly, we will publish a series of weekly Fashion Chats.

We shall also start a query column, in which the reader may ask questions pertaining to dress. Such questions will be answered in the following issue.

THE BUSINESS OR LOUNGE SUIT AND ITS DUTIES

This suit is to be worn for business, lounge and street. Scarcely ever has there been so much discussion in regard to the proper styles for the business suit, as at the present time. The public mind is so to say perplexed by the many styles shown in the window of the clothier, as well as by the tailors who make clothes to order. One will find in either place quite unobstrusive styles fit for men of refinement, men who think anything away from the plain or conservative, to be foppish. And one will find freak clothes, so-called on account of this freakish appearance. These clothes have an abundance of cuffs, scollopped flaps, pearl buttons, and velvet trimmings. These suits are often mistaken for "college clothes," which is decidedly a misnomer, for should one look down, from the heights of Ithaca into Cornell university or visit Harvard or Yale College, no exaggerated clothes at all would be discovered, and the only chance to have one of these college men wear a freak suit would be to have him first knocked senseless.

A Modish suit is not an embodiment of queer pockets, slits or extreme effect, but on the contrary it should have an individuality due to originality of the designer and the tailor.

Coat. Sack coat either single or double breasted.

Waistcoat. To match coat or fancy waistcoat.

Trousers. If with single breasted coat to match, if with double breasted of same or different material.

Hat. Derby or Alpine.

Shirt. Stiff or pleated, colored, with cuffs attached.

Collar. Fold or wing.

Cravat. Four-in-hand tie or once over.

Gloves. Tan Cape or Reindeer.

Boots. Buttoned calf, high laced calf or Russet high or low.

Jewelry. Gold links or studs.

The shoulders to be of material width and braced with the concave effect, while pugilistic effect should be avoided and so should the narrow or sloping shoulder for neither will "go" with the American man.

Length of coat for average height man between 30 and 31 inches. Preferably single breasted except for very tall and slender men who look decidedly better in a double breasted sack suit. No collar on waistcoat.

Trousers full over hips to fall straight from hips to bottom, cuffs permissible.

In the Limelight

Mme. Gadski will be the second attraction for the series of concerts given by the "St. Francis Musical Art Society." The date is Thursday evening the 14th. The subscription list or rather membership list is now completely filled and for next season there will be no chance to secure memberships excepting in cases of resignation. The directors have empowered Manager Greenbaum to proceed with securing the greatest talent available for the season of 1909 and 1910.

The unusual success achieved by Eugene Walter's drama, "Paid in Full," when it was seen here a few weeks since appears to act as a strong lever in awakening interest in "The Wolf" which will be seen here very soon. "The Wolf" is the second of Walter's plays.

The final performance of "Ben Hur" will be given at the Van Ness Theatre this Saturday night. The Klaw and Erlanger production has been making new records in point of attendance during the past two weeks.

A starry season is ahead for the patrons of the Van Ness. The notable list of bookings includes E. H. Sothern, Lillian Russell, Richard Carle, Marie Doro, Elthel Barrymore, John Drew, Billie Burke and Maude Adams.

Two leading women, Miss Gladys Hanson and Miss Virginia Hammond, will appear with the big company coming here in support of E. H. Sothern.

MENNEN'S
BORATED TALCUM
TOILET POWDER

"Baby's Best Friend"
and Mamma's greatest comfort. Mennen's relieves and prevents Chapped Hands and Chafing.
For your protection the genuine is put up in non-refillable boxes—the "Box that Lox," with Mennen's face on top. Sold everywhere or by mail 25 cents—Sample free.
Try Mennen's Violet (Borated) Talcum Toilet Powder—It has the scent of Freshcut Parma Violets. Sample free.
GERHARD MENNEN CO., Newark, N. J.
Mennen's Sen Yang Toilet Powder, Oriental Odor } No
Mennen's Borated Skin Soap (blue wrapper) } Samples
Specially prepared for the nursery. Sold only at Stores.

NEW YEAR GREETING
Start 1909 aright. Telephone us about wiring or repairing.
Telephone Douglas 1185 and 1186.
LEVY ELECTRIC CO.
HURRY UP ELECTRICIANS
LEVY ELECTRIC WIRING COMPANY
Electric Trains, Cars, Dynamos, Motors, Batteries, Machinery, Magic Lanterns
Moving Pictures, Telegraph and Telephones, Wireless Outfits, X-rays, Etc.
648 Sacramento St. San Francisco 1205 Polk Street

When you have a choice, take the best. For purity of design, harmony of color and quality, there can be no better wall paper made than that shown by
TAYLOR & SINCLAIR CO.
INTERIOR DECORATORS BUSH AT VAN NESS

The Tall Woman

(Continued from Page 10.)

the better of my weakness; to dissemble and hide that wretched fear; not to hasten my pace, but to keep on advancing slowly, even at the cost of years of health or life, and in this way, little by little, to go on getting nearer to my house, exerting myself to the utmost not to fall fainting on the ground before I reached it.

"'I was walking along in this way—I must have taken about twenty steps after leaving behind me the door-way where the woman with the fan was hidden, when suddenly a horrible idea came to me—horrible, yet very natural nevertheless—the idea that I would look back to see if my enemy was following me. One thing or the other I thought, with the rapidity of a flash of lightning: either my alarm has some foundation or it is madness; if it has any foundation, this woman will have started after me, will be overtaking me, and there is no hope for me on earth. But if it is madness, a mere supposition, a panic fright like any other, I will convince myself of it in the present instance, and for every case that may occur hereafter, by seeing that that poor old woman has stayed in that door-way to protect herself from the cold, or to wait till the door is opened; and thereupon I can go on to my house in perfect tranquillity, and I shall have cured myself of a fancy that causes me great mortification.

"'This reasoning gone through with, I made an extraordinary effort and turned my head. Ah, Gabriel!—Gabriel! how fearful it was! The tall woman had followed me with silent tread, was right over me, almost touching me with her fan, almost leaning her head on my shoulder.

"'I could never tell you all I thought in a single moment. If the truth must be told, I gave a scream and flew away like a child of four years who thinks he sees the Black Man. I did not stop running until I got out into Montera Street. Once there, my fear left me like magic.

"'Just then I saw a policeman coming up Caballero de Gracia Street, and I shouted to him without stirring from my place. I told him that there was a man dressed as a woman in Jardines Street. I directed him to go round by the way of Peligros and Aduana streets, while I would remain where I was, and in that way the fellow, who was probably a thief or murderer, could not escape us. The policeman did as I said. He went through Aduana Street, and as soon as I saw his lantern coming along Jardines Street I also went up it resolutely.

"'We soon met at about the middle of the block, without either of us having encountered a soul, although we had examined door after door.

"'"He has got into some house," said the policeman.

"'That must be so, I replied, opening my door with the fixed purpose of moving to some other street the next day.

"'A few moments later I was in my room; I always carried my latch-key, so as not to have to disturb my good Jose. Nevertheless, he was waiting for me that night. My misfortunes of the 15th and 16th of November were not yet ended.

"'What has happened? I asked him, in surprise.

"'"Major Falcon was here," he replied, with evident agitation, "waiting for you from eleven till half-past two, and he told me that, if you came home to sleep, you had better not undress, as he would be back at daybreak."

"'Those words left me trembling with grief and alarm, as if they had predicted my own death to me. I knew that my beloved father, at his home in Jaen, had been suffering frequent and dangerous attacks of his chronic disease. I had written to my brothers that, if there should be a sudden and fatal termination of the sickness, they were to telegraph Major Falcon, who would inform me in some suitable way. I had not the slightest doubt, therefore, that my father had died.

"'I sat down in an arm-chair to wait for the morning and my friend, and, with them, the news of my great misfortune. God only knows what I suffered in those two cruel hours of waiting.

"'Precisely at six Major Falcon came into my room, and looked at me in silence. I threw myself into his arms, weeping bitterly, and he exclaimed, caressing me:

"'"Yes, my dear fellow, weep, weep."

II.

"My fried Telesforo," Gabriel went on, "also rested a moment when he reached this point, and then he proceeded as follows:

"'If my story ended here, perhaps you would not find anything extraordinary or supernatural in it. You would say to me the same thing that men of good judgment said to me at that time: that every one who has a lively imagination is subject to some impulse of fear or other; that mine came from belated, solitary women, and that the old creature of Jardines Street was only some homeless waif who was going to beg of me when I screamed and ran.

"'For my part, I tried to believe that it was so. I even came to believe it at the end of several months. Still, I would have given years of my life to be sure that I was not again to encounter the tall woman. But, today, I would give every drop of my blood to be able to meet her again.'

"What for?

"'To kill her on the spot.'

"I do not understand you.

"'You will understand me when I tell you that I did meet her again, three weeks ago, a few hours before I had the fatal news of my poor Joaquina's death.'

DIVIDEND NOTICE

CENTRAL TRUST COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA, Market and Sansome Sts. Branches: 624 Van Ness Ave. and 3039 Sixteenth St. For the half year ending December 31, 1908, a dividend has been declared on deposits in the Savings Department of this Bank at the rate of four (4) per cent per annum, free of taxes, payable on and after Saturday, January 2, 1909. Dividends not called for are added to and bear the same rate of interest as the principal from January 1, 1909. B. G. TOGNAZZI, Manager.

DIVIDEND NOTICE

HUMBOLDT SAVINGS BANK, 783 Market Street, near Fourth—(Member of the Associated Savings Banks of San Francisco). For the half year ending December 31, 1908, a dividend has been declared at the rate of four (4) per cent per annum on all savings deposits, free of taxes, payable on and after Saturday, January 2, 1909. Dividends not called for are added to and bear the same rate of interest as the principal from January 1, 1909. W. E. PALMER, Secretary.

DIVIDEND NOTICE

SECURITY SAVINGS BANK (Member of Associated Savings Banks of San Francisco), 316 Montgomery Street. For the half year ending December 31, 1908, dividends upon all deposits at the rate of four (4) per cent per annum, free of taxes, will be payable on and after January 2, 1909. FRED W. RAY, Secretary.

DIVIDEND NOTICE

THE GERMAN SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY (Member of Associated Savings Banks of San Francisco), 526 California Street, Mission Branch, 2572 Mission Street near Twenty-second. For the half year ending December 31, 1908, a dividend has been declared at the rate of four (4) per cent per annum on all deposits, free of taxes, payable on and after Saturday, January 2, 1909. Dividends not called for are added to and bear the same rate of interest as the principal from January 1, 1909. GEORGE TOURNY, Secretary.

DIVIDEND NOTICE

THE SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY (Member of Associated Savings Bank of San Francisco), 101 Montgomery Street, corner Sutter Street. For the half year ending December 31, 1908, a dividend has been declared at the rate of four (4) per cent per annum on all deposits, free of taxes, payable on and after Saturday, January 2, 1909. Dividends not called for are added to and bear the same rate of interest as the principal from January 1, 1909. Money deposited before January 10th will draw interest from January 1, 1909. WM. A. BOSTON, Cashier.

DIVIDEND NOTICE

SAN FRANCISCO SAVINGS UNION (Member of Associated Savings Banks of San Francisco), northwest corner California and Montgomery Streets. For the half year ending December 31, 1908, a dividend has been declared at the rates per annum of four and one-quarter (4¼) per cent on term deposits and four (4) per cent on ordinary deposits, free of taxes, payable on and after Saturday, January 2, 1909. Depositors are entitled to draw their dividends at any time during the succeeding half year. A dividend not drawn will be added to the deposit account, become a part thereof and earn dividend from January 1st. LOVELL WHITE, Cashier.

DIVIDEND NOTICE

ITALIAN-AMERICAN BANK, corner Montgomery and Sacramento Sts., San Francisco, Cal. For the half year ending December 31, 1908, a dividend has been declared at the rate of four (4) per cent per annum on all savings deposits, free of taxes, payable on and after Saturday, January 2, 1909. Dividends not called for are added to and bear the same rate of interest as the principal from January 1, 1909. A. SBARBORO, President, A. E. SBARBORO, Secretary.

DIVIDEND NOTICE

THE HIBERNIA SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY, corner Market, McAllister and Jones Sts. (Members of Associated Savings Banks of San Francisco.) San Francisco, December 28, 1908. At a meeting of the board of directors of this society, held this day, a dividend has been declared at the rate of four (4) per cent per annum on all deposits for the six months ending December 31, 1908, free from all taxes, and payable on and after January 2, 1909. Dividends not drawn will be added to depositors' accounts and become a part thereof and will earn dividend from January 1, 1909. Deposits made on or before January 10, 1909, will draw interest from January 1, 1909. R. M. TOBIN, Secretary.

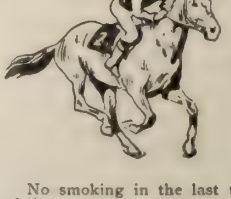
ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY SALE OF REAL ESTATE SHOULD NOT BE MADE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 4823, N. S. Dept. 10 Probate.

In the Matter of the Estate of OLOF NELSON, Deceased.

JOSEPH A. STULZ, Administrator of the Estate of OLOF NELSON, Deceased, having presented his Petition herein, duly verified, praying for an Order of the Sale of the whole of the real estate of the said decedent, or so much or such parts thereof as said Court shall judge necessary or beneficial for the reasons and purposes in said Petition mentioned and set forth:

And said Petition having been filed, it is now ordered by said Court that all persons interested in the Estate of said deceased be, and they are hereby directed to appear before said Court on Thursday, the 11th day of February, 1909, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Courtroom of Department No. 10, of said Superior Court in the Grant Building on the Southeast corner of Market and Seventh Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to show cause, if any they have, why an order should not be granted authorizing and directing said Administrator to sell the whole or so much of the real estate of said decedent as may be necessary.



It is further ordered that a copy of this Order be published at least once a week for four successive weeks in the Town Talk, a newspaper printed and published in the said City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

Dated, at San Francisco, this 4th day of January, 1909.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

EDWARD J. LYNCH, Attorney for Administrator, Mills Building, San Francisco, Cal.

Endorsed: Filed Jan. 5, 1909. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk. By H. G. BENEDICT, Deputy Clerk. 1-9-5

RACING

NEW CALIFORNIA JOCKEY CLUB

OAKLAND RACE TRACK

Six races each week day, rain or shine. First Race at 1:40 p. m.

For special trains stopping at the track, take Southern Pacific Ferry, foot of Market street; leave at 12 M.; thereafter every twenty minutes until 1:40 P. M.

No smoking in the last two cars, which are reserved for ladies and their escorts.

PERCY W. TREAT, Sec'y. THOS. H. WILLIAMS, Pres.

"Tell me about it, tell me about it!

"'There is little more to tell. It was five o'clock in the morning. It was not yet fully light, though the dawn was visible from the streets looking towards the east. The street-lamps had just been put out, and the policemen had withdrawn. As I was going through Prado Street, so as to get to the other end of Lobo Street, the dreadful woman crossed in front of me. She did not look at me, and I thought she had not seen me.

"'She wore the same dress and carried the same fan as three years before. My trepidation and alarm were greater than ever. I ran rapidly across Prado Street as soon as she had passed, although I did not take my eyes off her, so as to make sure that she did not look back, and, when I had reached the other end of Lobo Street, I panted as if I had just swum an impetuous stream. Then I pressed on with fresh speed towards home, filled now with gladness rather than fear, for I thought that the hateful witch had been conquered and shorn of her power, from the very fact that I had been so near her and yet that she had not seen me.

"'But soon, and when I had almost reached this house, a rush of fear swept over me, in the thought that the crafty old hag had seen and recognized me, that she had made a pretence of not knowing me so as to let me get into Lobo Street, where it was still rather dark, and where she might set upon me in safety, that she would follow me, that she was already over me.

"'Upon this, I looked around—and there she was! There at my shoulder, almost touching me with her clothes, gazing at me with her horrible little eyes, displaying the gloomy cavern of her mouth, fanning herself in a mocking manner, as if to make fun of my childish alarm.

"'I passed from dread to the most furious anger, to savage and desperate rage. I dashed at the heavy old creature. I flung her against the wall. I put my hand to her throat. I felt of her face, her breast, the straggling locks of her gray hair, until I was thoroughly convinced that she was a human being—a woman.

"'Meanwhile she had uttered a howl which was hoarse and piercing at the same time. It seemed false and feigned to me, like the hypocritical expression of a fear which she did not really feel. Immediately afterwards she exclaimed, making believe cry, though she was not crying, but looking at me with her hyena eyes:

"'"Why have you picked a quarrel with me?"

"'This remark increased my fright and weakened my wrath.

"'Then you remember, I cried, that you have seen me somewhere else.

"'"I should say so, my dear," she replied, mockingly. "Saint Eugene's night, in Jardines Street, three years ago."

"'My very marrow was chilled.

"'But who are you? I asked, without letting go of her. Why do you follow me? What business have you with me?

"'"I am a poor weak woman," she answered, with a devilish leer. "You hate me, and you are afraid of me without any reason. If not, tell me, good sir, why you were so frightened the first time you saw me."

"'Because I have loathed you ever since I was born. Because you are the evil spirit of my life.

"'"It seems, then, that you have known me for a long time. Well, look, my son, so have I known you."

"'You have known me? How long?

"'"Since before you were born! And when I saw you pass by me, three years ago, I said to myself, that's the one."

"'But what am I do you? What are you to me?

"'"The devil!" replied the hag, spitting full in my face, freeing herself from my grasp, and running away with amazing swiftness. She held her skirts higher than her knees, and her feet did not make the slightest noise as they touched the ground.

"'It was madness to try to catch her. Besides, people were already passing through the Carrera de San Jeronimo, and in Prado Street, too. It was broad daylight. The tall woman kept on running, or flying, as far as Huertas Street, which was now lighted up by the sun. There she stopped to look back at me. She waved her closed fan at me once or twice, threateningly, and then disappeared around a corner.

"'Wait a little longer, Gabriel. Do not yet pronounce judgment in this case, where my life and soul are concerned. Listen to me two minutes longer.

"'When I entered my house I met Colonel Falcon, who had just come to tell me that my Joaquina, my betrothed, all my hope and happiness and joy on earth, had died the day before in Santa Agueda.'"

III.

"I will spare you, my dear friends," continued Gabriel, "the arguments and remarks which I used to see if I could not calm Telesforo, for they are the same, precisely the same, which you are preparing now to advance to prove that there is nothing supernatural or superhuman in my story."

"Well, listen a few minutes longer, and you will see that I was mistaken at the time, as you are mistaken now. The one who unfortunately made no mistake was Telesforo. A few days after that conversation with Telesforo I was sent to the province of Albacete in my capacity as engineer of the mountain corps. Not many weeks had passed before I learned, from a contractor for public works, that my unhappy friend had been attacked by a dreadful form of jaundice.

"After an absence of five months I returned to Madrid the same day that the telegraph brought the news of the battle of Tetuan. I remember it as if it were yesterday. That night

"Those Lustrous Eyes are Murine Eyes"

MURINE EYE REMEDY

A Favorite Toilet Accessory

Has won many Friends as an Aid to the Restoration of Normal Conditions, Healthful Tone and Natural Brilliancy to Eyes that Need Care.

It has proven of great value in the Home as

An Eye Tonic

for Weak, Red, Inflamed & Itching Eyes & Eyelids.

As An Eye Insurance

Tourists, Automobilists and others exposed to Strong Winds, Dust and Reflected Sunlight, which produce Irritation, Granulation, Ulceration and Weak Eyes, will find in Murine a Safe, Soothing Eye Lotion affording "Reliable Relief."

The Finishing Touch

Bewitchingly Costumed
In Costliest Gown,
For the Social Event,
At the South End of Town.

The "Finishing Touch"
To the Toilet is seen
In the Act above Pictured
"Two drops" of Murine.

Try Murine for the "Automobile Eye"

UNION LUMBER COMPANY

Redwood and Pine Lumber

Railroad Ties, Telegraph Poles, Shingles, Split Shakes, Etc.

CROCKER BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

LARGEST COLLECTION ON THE COAST

DIAMONDS AND GEMS

BALDWIN JEWELRY CO.

1261 VAN NESS AVENUE AT SUTTER

TRUNKS AND SUIT CASES

KOESEL'S TRUNK FACTORY

41 ELLIS STREET, NEAR MARKET

GENERAL REPAIRING Phone Douglas 445

STATEMENT

Of the Condition and Value of the Assets and Liabilities

OF

THE HIBERNIA SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY

(A CORPORATION)

Member of the Associated Savings Banks of San Francisco

And Where Said Assets Are Situated

DATED DECEMBER 31, 1908

ASSETS

1—Bonds of the United States ($5,885,000.00), of the District of Columbia, guaranteed by the United States Government ($475,000.00), of the State of California ($250,000.00) and Municipalities thereof $1,598,800.00), the actual value of which is		$10,226,503.87
2—Cash in United States Gold and Silver Coin and Checks		1,643,665.00
3—Miscellaneous Bonds, the actual value of which is		6,322,960.00

They are:
"San Francisco and North Pacific Railway Company 5 per cent Bonds" ($475,000.00), "San Francisco and San Joaquin Valley Railway Company 5 per cent Bonds' ($108,000.00), "Southern Pacific Branch Railway Company of California 6 per cent Bonds" $249,000.00), "Northern California Railway Company 5 per cent Bonds" ($83,000.00), "Northern Railway Company of Caliifornia 5 per cent Bonds" ($29,000.00), "Los Angeles Pacific Railroad Company of California Refunding 5 per cent Bonds" ($400,000.00), "Los Angeles Railway Company of California 5 per cent Bonds" ($334,000.00), "Market Street Cable Railway Company 6 per cent Bonds" ($1,130,000.00), "Market Street Railway Company first Consolidated Mortgage 5 per cent Bonds" ($753,000.00), "Powell Street Railway Company 6 per cent Bonds" ($185,000.00), "The Omnibus Cable Cable Company 6 per cent Bonds" ($167,000.00), "Sutter Street Railway Company 5 per cent Bonds" ($150,000.00), "Ferries and Cliff House Railway Company 6 per cent Bonds" ($6,000.00), "The Merchants' Exchange 7 per cent Bonds" ($1,500,000.00), "San Francisco Gas & Electric Company 4½ per cent Bonds" ($484,000.00).

4—Promissory Notes and the debts thereby secured, the actual value of which is		33,894,892.12

The condition of said Promissory Notes and debts is as follows: They are all existing Contracts, owned by said Corporation, and are payable to it at its office, which is situated at the corner of Market, McAllister and Jones streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and the payment thereof is secured by First Mortgages on Real Estate within this State. Said Promissory Notes are kept and held by said Corporation at its said office, which is its principal place of business, and said Notes and debts are there situated.

5—Promissory Notes and the debts thereby secured, the actual value of which is		227,529.00

The condition of the said Promissory Notes and debts is as follows: They are all existing Contracts, owned by said Corporation, and are payable to it at its office, which is situated as aforesaid, and the payment thereof is secured by pledge and hypothecation of Bonds of Railroads and Quasi-public Corporations and other securities.

6—(a) Real Estate situated in the City and County of San Francisco ($172,202.41), and in the Counties of Santa Clara ($27,383.29), Alameda ($23,063.52), and San Mateo ($2,251.57), in this State, the actual value of which is		224,900.79
(b) The land and building in which said Corporation keeps its said office, the actual value of which is		958,108.05

The condition of said Real Estate is that it belongs to said Corporation, and part of it is productive.

7—Contingent Fund—Interest due and uncollected on Promissory Notes	$148,014.68
Interest accrued but not yet payable on United States and other Bonds	102,877.84
Proportion of Taxes for the Fiscal Year, 1908-1909, chargeable to next year	45,054.81	295,947.33
Total Assets		$53,794,506.16

LIABILITIES

1—Said Corporation owes Deposits amounting to and the actual value of which is		$50,137,447.14
2—Accrued Interest—Interest due and uncollected on Promissory Notes	$148,014.68
Interest accrued but not yet payable on United States and other Bonds	102,877.84	-250,892.52
3—Taxes—Proportion of Taxes for the Fiscal Year, 1908-1909, chargeable to next year		45,054.81
4—Reserve Fund, Actual Value		3,361,111.69
Total Liabilities		$53,794,506.16

THE HIBERNIA SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY,
By JAMES R. KELLY, President.

THE HIBERNIA SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY,
By R. M. TOBIN, Secretary.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO—ss.

JAMES R. KELLY and R. M. TOBIN, being each duly sworn, each for himself, says: That said JAMES R. KELLY is President, and that said R. M. TOBIN is Secretary of THE HIBERNIA SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY, the Corporation above mentioned, and that the foregoing statement is true.

JAMES R. KELLY, President.
R. M. TOBIN, Secretary.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 4th day of January, 1909.
CHARLES T. STANLEY,
Notary Public in and for the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

I bought the indispensable Correspondencia de Espana, and the first thing I read in it was the notice of Telesforo's death. His friends were invited to the funeral the following morning.

"You will be sure that I was present. As we arrived at the San Luis cemetery, whither I rode in one of the carriages nearest the hearse, my attention was called to a peasant woman. She was old and very tall. She was laughing sacrilegiously as she saw them taking out the coffin. Then she placed herself in front of the pall-bearers in a triumphant attitude and pointed out to them with a very small fan the passage-way they were to take to reach the open and waiting grave.

"At the first glance I perceived, with amazement and alarm, that she was Telesforo's implacable enemy. She was just as he had described her to me—with her enormous nose, her devilish eyes, her awful mouth, her percale handkerchief, and that diminutive fan which seemed in her hands the sceptre of indecency and mockery.

"She immediately observed that I was looking at her, and fixed her gaze upon me in a peculiar manner, as if recognizing me, as if letting me know that she recognized me, as if acquainted with the fact that the dead man had told me about the scenes in Jardines Street and Lobo Street, as if defying me, as if declaring me the inheritor of the hate which she had cherished for my unfortunate friend.

"I confess that at the time my fright was greater than my wonder at those new coincidences and accidents. It seemed evident to me that some supernatural relation, antercedent to earthly life, had existed between the mysterious old woman and Telesforo. But for the time being my sole concern was about my own life, my own soul, my own happiness—all of which would be exposed to the greatest peril if I should really inherit such a curse.

"The tall woman began to laugh. She pointed at me contemptuously with the fan, as if she had read my thoughts and were publicly exposing my cowardice. I had to lean on a friend's arm to keep myself from falling. Then she made a pitying or disdainful gesture, turned on her heels, and went into the cemetery. Her head was turned towards me. She fanned herself and nodded to me at the same time. She sidled along among the graves with an indescribable, infernal coquetry until at last she disappeared forever in that labyrinth of tombs.

"I say forever, since fifteen years have passed and I have never seen her again. If she was a human being she must have died before this; if she was not, I rest in the conviction that she despised me too much to meddle with me.

"Now, then, bring on your theories! Give me your opinion about these strange events. Do you still regard them as entirely natural?"

Taft's Secretary of State

(Continued from page 9.)

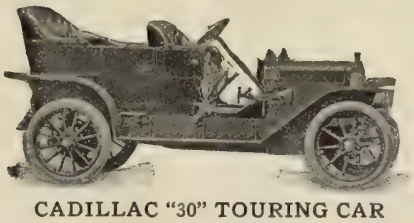
and postponed a final hearing indefinitely. Mr. Knox, however, had prepared for this contingency. He had secured the passage through Congress of an act allowing but sixty days in which to take an appeal to the United States Supreme Court, and also providing that in cases of this character, where the public interest is great, hearing shall be expedited, and a final decision speedily reached. The case was appealed and it was argued before the Supreme Court for the Government by Mr. Knox personally. On March 14, 1904, the court handed down its opinion, sustaining in every particular the contentions of the Government.

Senator Knox's dearest fad is horses, and the span he drives in Washington is said to have cost him several thousand dollars more than the Count of Monte Cristo paid for the span with which he once dazzled Paris. He also likes to play poker, golf and billiards. It is not of record that he has ever said or done a foolish thing in his public career. He carefully counts his words for public consumption. When a man becomes accustomed to receiving large sums of money for his opinion he becomes chary about venting them loosely. Mr. Knox is no more sensational than a safe-deposit vault. He has never coined but one phrase, or, more precisely, given a new application to an old phrase, that has met with temporary but widespread popularity. After the Norther Securities case had been decided in favor of the Government, capital was alarmed, and the then attorney-general promised that the Department of Justice would not "run amuck" against great corporations. The phrase was quickly caught up and had its brief day, but was presently overshadowed by the fresh coinage from the White House mint.

D. B. Farmer, one of the Pioneer Automobile men of Oakland, has joined the selling forces of the Thomas and Chalmers-Detroit cars in the trans-bay city and will devote his time to promoting the interests of the Pioneer Automobile Company with the Oaklandites. Farmer has had several years' experience in the motor trade, during which time he has handled nearly every make of car on the market.

TRY MURINE EYE REMEDY
For Red, Weak, Weary, Watery Eyes.
Murine Doesn't Smart—It Soothes Eye Pain.
Try Murine For Your Eyes.

W. M. Hale, a prominent motorist of Sacramento, is the latest purchaser of a Chalmers-Detroit 40 horsepower touring car. The Capital City automobile enthusiast took delivery of his car and expects to do a great deal of touring this winter.



Although the roads between this city and Eureka, Humboldt County, are far from enjoyable to the motorist at any season of the year, the roads within that county are declared to be well constructed and maintained. The Howard Automobile Company reports the delivery of four Buick automobiles to residents of that county. Dr. H. G. Gross of Eureka purchased two Buicks, a "White Streak" runabout and a two-cylinder touring car. L. B. Compton drives a Buick four-cylinder roadster and C. E. Gray bought a "White Streak."

Packard = Cadillac

All That is Best in Motor Car Construction

PACKARD '09 TOURING CAR

CADILLAC "30" TOURING CAR

30 horsepower, four cylinder, 5 passenger, $1550.00

Cuyler Lee

453 GOLDEN GATE AVENUE SAN FRANCISCO

ANNOUNCEMENT

1909

OLDSMOBILE

We beg to announce arrival
1909 Oldsmobile, December 15th

The following complete line of 1909 models will be on exhibition on the above date. Every one of these cars is representative of the factory that makes it:

Model X Special Runabout	$2000
Model D Palace Touring Car	2750
Model D Toy Tonneau	2750
Model DR Flying Roadster	2750
Model DR Detachable Tonneau	2750
Model Z Touring Car, 6-Cylinder	4200
Model Z Runabout, 6-Cylinder	4200

Besides Limousine and Landaulet Bodies.

The 1909 Oldsmobile contains all that has made the car famous in the past, together with the improvements in keeping with the largest and most extensive factory in the country. Recognized the world over for durability. Investigate.

PIONEER AUTOMOBILE CO.

524 Twentieth St., Oakland 901 Golden Gate Ave., San Francisco

Ninety-Third Half-Yearly Report

OF THE

SAN FRANCISCO SAVINGS UNION

Member of the Associated Savings Banks of San Francisco

Northwest Corner California and Montgomery Streets

SWORN STATEMENT

OF THE

CONDITION AND VALUE OF ITS ASSETS AND LIABILITIES

At the close of business December 31, 1908

ASSETS

Loans secured by first lien on real estate wholly within the State of California	$13,259,776.21
Loans secured by pledge and hypothecation of approved bonds and stocks	911,154.91
Bonds of the municipalities and school districts of the State of California, railroad bonds and bonds and stocks of local corporations, the value of which is	9,183,133.00
Bank premises	700,000.00
Other real estate in the State of California	724,524.70
Furniture and fixtures	500.00
Cash in vault and in bank	1,420,408.37
Total Assets	$26,199,497.19

LIABILITIES

Due depositors	$23,991,448.07
Capital paid up	1,000,000.00
Reserve and contingent funds	1,205,846.26
General tax account, balance undisbursed	2,202.86
Total Liabilities	$26,199.497.19

San Francisco, December 31, 1908.

(Signed) E. B. POND,
President.

(Signed) LOVELL WHITE,
Cashier.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO—ss

We do solemnly swear that we have (and each of us has) a personal knowledge of the matters contained in the foregoing report, and that every allegation, statement, matter and thing therein contained is true, to the best of our knowledge and belief.

(Signed) E. B. POND.
(Signed) LOVELL WHITE.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, this 31st day of December, 1908.

(Seal) (Signed) FRANK L. OWEN,
Notary Public in and for the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

For the half year ending December 31, 1908, a dividend has been declared at the rates per annum of four and one-quarter (4¼) per cent on term deposits and four (4) per cent on ordinary deposits, payable on and after Saturday, January 2, 1909.

Money deposited during first ten (10) days of January will receive interest from January 1st.

Auto Notes

There are no hills in San Francisco, according to Jack Costello. The well known automobile man has just taken delivery of a 1909 Thomas 6-cylinder touring car. "The earthquake leveled all the hills," said Costello yesterday. "All I do is to put on the high speed lever and go. There do not seem to be any hills for my car. We take them all just as fast as it is safe to travel. I do not know how fast the car will go because I am afraid to let her out. I have had the speedometer to 68 miles, and then I could not see the road. The machine can undoubtedly go faster, but not when I am at the wheel."

That the public in general throughout the United States has taken a greater interest in the Studebaker E-M-F "30" cars than any one of the other many makes, has been conclusively proven by Automobile Topics, one of the leading automobile magazines, through a subscriber's convenience plan which was tried during the months of October and November. The scheme of Automobile Topics consisted of offering to furnish subscribers with catalogues of any of the many automobiles that are on the market today, free of charge, simply upon request from a subscriber. Letters from all parts of the country requesting catalogues of different cars at once began to pour into the editorial rooms of Topics. In the December 19th issue of the magazine, the editors print a tabulated result of these inquiries and according to this tabb the studebaker E-M-F "30" cars have aroused more general interest than any one of the other popular cars on the market today. The rating of the Studebaker E-M-F "30" stood 24 as against 21, the latter figure being scored by three other makes. Automobile Topics will continue this feature for the benefit of their subscribers.

The Southern Pacific Company purchased a Studebaker "30" from the branch of the Studebaker Bros. Company of California last Monday to be used by the Kern Oil & Trading Company of Southern California in and around McKittrick. The machine, which is to be driven by M. E. Lombardi, will be taken overland to the district in which it is to be used.

Mr. Truxton Beale has purchased from Cuyler Lee the fourth Packard 3-ton Truck to be sold in San Francisco. The Packard Motor Car Co. has spent five years developing this truck which sustains the reputation of the name it bears. Express companies are close students of transportation and ways and means and this same truck is used in New York City by the Adams Express Co.

The first shipment of 1909 Oldsmobiles which have arrived at the Pioneer Automobile Company have created a great deal of interest along Automobile Row. The new 35 horsepower runabout, which sells for $2150, being of special interest as it is the latest addition to the well known Lansing factory to reach this city. The new car is rated at 50 miles per hous.

Andrew Carnegie, according to a letter which was received recently by the local Studebaker people, has personally endorsed the Studebaker automobile, saying he believed the company manufactures the best machine that is on the market today. The letter containing this information also stated that out of ten automobiles which the magnate owns, Mrs. Carnegie's favorite car was the Studebaker.

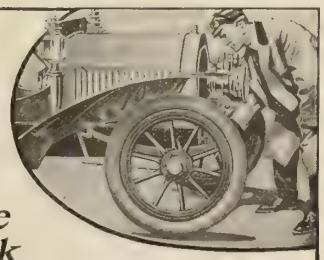
Mr. H. S. Deming of Santa Cruz has taken delivery from Cuyler Lee of his Packard "18" touring car. Mr. Deming is an enthusiastic motorist, driving his own car the greater part of the time and anticipates a great deal of pleasure with his Packard during the coming season.

Word received from Bert Dingley by the Pioneer Automobile Company says that business in the southern part of the State promises to be good next season. According to the well known racing driver the market for Thomas and Chalmers-Detroit cars should be good in 1909, a great many inquiries having already been made for particulars of the new cars.

It is not very often Santa Claus is impersonated by a young lady, but this Christmas Eve in San Francisco Miss Franc Merchante with a party of friends, in her Packard "18" touring car, visited the Infants Shelter with a load of toys and good things which make little hearts glad and little eyes glisten and which undoubtedly did all this for the little inmates.

M. W. Levy, whose wealth is estimated in the seven figures and more, is planning one of the most extensive automobile tours that has ever been undertaken by a Californian. In a few weeks he will leave for the islands where he with his family will spend several weeks in touring wherever it is possible for him to pilot his specially constructed Studebaker "40." On leaving the islands the well-known millionaire will take a steamer to Central America and will tour all through the portion of the country, Mexico, and the southern part of the United States, after which he will return to San Francisco by way of Los Angeles. Mr. Levy has been planing for his coming trip for several months and he and the members of his family are looking forward to it with the greatest anticipations.

Mr. Stewart S. Hawley of Oakland has just returned from Mexico and will now put into active service the '09 Packard "18" touring car just purchased from Cuyler Lee.



The Pioneer Automobile Company reports the following sales: F. A. Keith, a six-cylinder forty horsepower Thomas Flyer, Douglas Watson, a Chalmers-Detroit "30," and Charles Wheeler, a Chalmers-Detroit "30."

Mr. E. A. Waterman of Fresno has become the proud possessor of a Cadillac "30" demonstrator.

"Almost without exception, the products of fine engineering involve compromises," says Chester N. Weaver, manager of the local branch of the Studebaker Bros.' Company of California, "and next to a battleship, I believe a real touring car designed for the purpose, represents the most difficult of engineering compromises. It is easy enough to get power at the expense of convenience or lightness at the expense of comfort. If the real engineering advantages are disregarded it is a simple task to give the steering column a little more or a little less slant; to modify the form of the spring, the wheel base and track, or to put the dash here, there or anywhere to suit the casual critic on the street who usually voices the accumulation of various ideas which the last few automobile salesmen have communicated to him. It is quite another matter to take all these elements; to consider all these ideas and to mold from them a touring car really designed for touring. For a car of this character the primary considerations are comfort and reliability. There must be power enough and the car must be light enough to be easy on tires at a moderate cost. None of those elements should be unduly sacrificed to the other. In the designing room the ruling question should be: 'What shall we do to make the car serviceable and the best possible for the purpose intended?' The accentuation of any one element at the sacrifice of some other is the easiest and laziest kind of engineering. It is an entirely different matter to recognize all the essentials so that each will be presented in its proper proportion to meet to the best advantage the particular requirements for which the car is intended. If these essentials are not watched with the greatest care the car when completed will have become the victim of some engineer's vanity and the manufacturer may find himself with a car on hand encumbered with a useless novelty which was ingrafted on it as a selling measure.

Mrs. G. Nicbaum has just received her Packard "30" 1909 Landaulet from Cuyler Lee.

The Oil You Can Feel At the Crank

The slighest "feel" of the crank proves the perfection of ZEROLENE Auto Lubricating Oil. There is no carbon deposit to foul the cylinders and spark-plugs; no possibility of anything but perfect lubrication in any gasoline engine, regardless of type, temperature or season.

ZEROLENE

Auto-Lubricating Oil

differs from all other oils in being non-carbonizing, and in "working" with uniform certainty both in midsummer heat and in zero weather. ZEROLENE is the only oil with these characteristics, and is produced in only one place.

Absolutely free from all trace of acid.

Put up in sealed cans with patent spout that cannot be refilled. Also in barrels for garage trade. Sold by dealers everywhere.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY
(Incorporated)

Studebaker

Sturdiness, Speed and Style

—suggest a few reasons for the large number of STUDEBAKER automobiles seen in constant service throughout the country. One reasonable cause for the success of the STUDEBAKER concern is that they have been constructing vehicles for pleasure and commercial purposes for many decades and all false theories have been eliminated. Demonstrations at any time in any of our various gasoline and electric models.

Studebaker Bros. of California

Phone Douglas 3000 Mission at Fremont

Letters

A Villainless Novel

Stewart Edward White is credited with an intention of springing something entirely novel upon the literary world, a villainless novel. It is probable that Mr. White has put forth no such claim, since the gist of the interview from which the scare head was evolved makes him responsible only for saying that in his next venture he will set forth a plot in which there will be conflict but the characters will not be conscious of wrong-doing. It will probably be a romance of land-grabbing. Mr. White does not, himself, endorse the grabbing of territory, but is of the opinion that if we could move ourselves backward for about two generations, and, of course, obliterate the wisdom which experience has garnered in the meantime, we should see that wasteful as methods were, the waste was inevitable.

Vacation Journeys for Boys

Everett T. Tomlinson two years ago started four boys on a series of vacation journeys in their own country. They were recent graduates of the same preparatory school and came from approximately the four sections of the United States. Each was intensely partisan as regarded his own home district and densely ignorant of all the rest, and each determined to prove to his comrades the correctness of his own point of view. The result was that in the first volume of the series New England, New York and Virginia had their eyes opened to the importance of the Lake traffic, the size of the cities bordering on the inland waterways, and the magnificence of the west. In the second book the south and its history, together with the ideals and courtesies of the old-time gentlemen, were exploited. Now the four have camped in Oklahoma with real Indian guides and helpers and sailed down the Mississippi past Memphis, Port Hudson and other battlegrounds and heard true stories of heroism even if not at first hand. The boys are growing in dignity and though Scott is still reminded of "stories" and Larcum still given to bragging somewhat, there is a decided improvement in their speech and manners. Larcum, having no head for books, has been wisely put to work and holds an "important" office position in the railroad company of which his father is president. Mr. Tomlinson is succeeding in his object, which is to familiarize the boys of the present generation with the facts that their fathers and grandfathers learned without this sugar coating to the pill. Like most of the good boy juveniles the Four Boys series is published by Lothrop, Lee and Shepard.

"Friendship Village"

"Of the making of books there is no end." Solomon, in his wisdom, refrained from qualifying, however, and the good books, now as then, were few and far between. "Friendship Village" is decidedly one of those few—one of the rare volumes to be placed side by side with the immortal "Cranford," read and read again, taken in hand at odd minutes, to be glanced at, or only held while thoughts and memories are evoked. Miss Zona Gale tells us that there is no "Friendship" on any map, and that the dear, delightful characters live nowhere on this earth, and yet there will be few merging upon middle age who will not find shadowy recollections haunting them, and those who have lived in small communities, whether for longer or less time, under circumstances which have tended to accentuate surroundings will have their own "Oldmoxon House," and Proudfit family, their Liberty sisters, their "Mis" Holcomb-that-Was-Mame-Bliss," and let us hope, their Calliope March. "Friendship Village" is one of the books that must be read to be appreciated. It would be easy enough to outline the dedication of the new church, the Thanksgiving dinner, the odd Christmas celebration, all under the direction of the energetic Calliope. One could garble the account of Emerel Kitton's debut, and leave only the bare bones or turn the Lonesome Ones into a paragraph to be giggled over and forgotten, for there is not so much of plot or back bone to any of the incidents which, woven together, make up the village chronicles. It is the sympathetic touch, the ability to cross over to the other side and see things from the village standpoint, which makes the charm of the narratives. There is scarcely a page which does not conceal a smile. Who, for instance, could resist the appeal of "Mrs. Ricker and Kitton, washens, scrubben, work by the day or Our," who, having decided to give a party, conceived the brilliant idea of enjoying her funeral flowers betimes and so inserted her notice in the paper, "All that would give flowers when dead please send same anyhow and not expected to send same if we do die afterward." And there's "P. Bemus, Retail Sawmiller," and the Liberties who, having raised poultry "from egg to axe," could not bring themselves to the cannibalism of enjoying the fricassee, and the Married Ladies Cemetery Improvement Sodality, which held a rummage sale and—I do not mean to tell what happened there. Perhaps some casual browser over magazines will recall the description of a woman, always attired in red calico till "she looked like a tomato ketchup bottle, with her apron for the label." She's here, and so is "Mis' Banker Mason" with the black and white foulard she bought "when Gran-ma Mason first hurt her back, so if anything happened she'd be in part mourning, an' if anything didn't she' have a nice dress to wear out places. Ain't it real convenient, white standin' for both companies and the tomb, so?" And "Mis' Fire-Chief Merriman" who couldn't afford to cast aside her mourning while fashions were such that her best could be cut over and who yet, would not disregard the conventions and appear at "companies" in her weeds, despite the desire of her heart for the good things. The quaint usages and survivals of the Friendship Villagers side by side with trolley cars, automobiles, telephones and daily train service make a delicious contrast. Every book that is worthy of the name belongs by right of its individuality to a certain class of readers. Those who can put forth the proper claim in this instance will find themselves in possession of what must prove to them a perpetual delight, and if there is anything in heredity, to their heirs and assigns hereafter. Published by Macmillan.

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Action No. 13477.

EDWARD FRANCIS McKITTRICK, Plaintiff,
vs.
All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Lien Upon the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, Defendants, Greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Edward Francis McKittrick, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above-entitled Court and county, within three (3) months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Folsom Street, distant thereon one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet Northerly from the Northerly line of Twenty-second (22nd) Street and running thence Northerly along said line of Folsom Street twenty-four (24) feet; thence at a right angle Easterly one hundred and twenty-two (122) feet and six (6) inches; thence at a right angle Southerly twenty-four (24) feet and thence at a right angle Westerly one hundred and twenty-two (122) feet and six (6) inches to the said Easterly line of Folsom Street and point of commencement.

Being a portion of Mission Block Number 54.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit:

That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute; that his title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover his costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 29th day of December, A. D. 1908.
(Seal)
H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By M. P. BRUTEN, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 9th day of Janaury, 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiff: None.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Attorney for Plaintiff, Rooms 1255-57 Flood Bldg., 870 Market Street, San Francisco. 1-9-10

SUMMONS

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
In and for the City and County of San Francisco. Action No. 12782.

ERNESTINE KRELING and JAMES F. LEAHY, Plaintiffs,
vs.
All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Lien Upon the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants, Greetings.

You are hereby required to appear and answer the Complaint of Ernestine Kreling and James F. Leahy, Plaintiffs, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at the Southwesterly corner of Golden Gate Avenue and Steiner Street; running thence Westerly along the Southerly line of Golden Gate Avenue One Hundred and Thirty-seven (137) feet and Six (6) inches; thence at right angles Southerly One Hundred (100) feet; thence at right angles Easterly One Hundred and Thirty-seven (137) feet and Six (6) inches to the Westerly line of Steiner Street and thence at right angles Northerly along said line of Steiner Street One Hundred (100) feet to the point of commencement.

Being a portion of Western Addition Block Number Three Hundred and Eighty-one (381).

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiffs will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit, for a judgment of said Court as follows:

1st. Ascertaining and determining all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said real property and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, or whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description.

nd. Establishing the title of plaintiffs and of each of them to said real property and determining all adverse claims thereto, and adjudging that each of said plaintiffs is the owner in fee simple absolute of an undivided one-half of the said real property and every part thereof.

3rd. For such other and further relief as to the Court may seem proper, and for costs of suit.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 27th day of November, 1908.
(Seal)
H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By T. C. RYAN, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 12th day of December, A. D. 1908.

MEMORANDUM

The following persons are said to claim some interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiffs, to-wit:

French Savings Bank, a corporation, whose address is No. 108 Sutter Street, San Francisco, California.

CAMPBELL, METSON, DREW, OATMAN & MACKENZIE,
Attyns. for Plaintiffs, Balboa Bldg., 595 Market St., S. F. 12-12-10

Louis Crepaux

(Member of Paris Grand Opera)

Has removed to his new studio,

Delbert Block, 943 Van Ness avenue, cor. O'Farrell.

Reception hours: 11:30 to 12, 3:30 to 5. except Wednesdays. Wednesdays in Oakland, 1154 Brush street.

Emil Steinegger

PIANOFORTE PLAYING

924 Grove St (above Fillmore), San Francisco.

For appointments phone Merritt 2845

Thursdays, 2701 Regent St., Berkeley

Mackenzie Gordon

TENOR

TEACHER OF SINGING { in all its branches, from the rudiments of tone formation to the highest finish and Completion of Public Singing.

Oratorio, Opera and Concert

By appointment only Phone Franklin 3594

Studio: 1350 FRANKLIN ST.

Louis H. Eaton

Organist and Director of the Music Trinity Church

Teacher of

PIANO, ORGAN, SINGING

1678 Broadway Phone Franklin 2244

Donald Maclean

SINGING—Pupil Seagle and De Rezske

Henri Etlin

PIANO—First Prize Paris Conservatoire

STUDIO, 1613 GREEN ST. Phone, Franklin 3153

Samuel M. Shortridge

ATTORNEY AT LAW

CHRONICLE BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO

Tel. Douglas 2176

Robert B. McMillan

ATTORNEY AT LAW

Has removed his Law Offices to the

CHRONICLE BUILDING, Fifth Floor

Phone Kearny 5969 Rooms 517-518

Knight & Heggerty

ATTORNEYS AT LAW and

PROCTORS IN ADMIRALTY

MERCHANTS EXCHANGE BLDG., S. F.

Rooms 626 and 630

DOWN TOWN NOW

CALIFORNIA OPTICAL CO. are now in their new store, 181 Post St., near Grant Ave. The Fillmore Street store is closed.

PATRICK & CO.

RUBBER STAMPS

STENCILS, SEALS, SIGNS & ETC.

126 BUSH ST. SAN FRANCISCO

SUMMONS

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE STATE of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 19737. Dept. 10.

ELIZABETH J. ROBINSON, Plaintiff,

vs.

FREDERICK L. ROBINSON, Defendant.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Frederick L. Robinson, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County, or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's willful neglect of plaintiff on account of defendant's idleness, profligacy and dissipation, also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that unless you appear and answer as above required the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the Complaint, as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the Seal of the Superior Court of the State of California. in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 9th day of November, A. D. 1908.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By L. J. WELCH, Deputy Clerk.

ROBINSON & GETZ, Attorneys for Plaintiff,
45 Kearny Street, S. F. 11-21-10

SUMMONS.

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

GUSTAVE WEDELSTAEDT, Plaintiff

vs.

ELIZABETH WEDELSTAEDT, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Elizabeth Wedelstaedt, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above name plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed herein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's desertion and extreme cruelty; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the Complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 12th day of November, A. D. 1908.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By MILTON M. DAVIS, Deputy Clerk.

C. F. ADAMS, Attorney for Plaintiff,
378 Monadnock Bldg., S. F. 12-12-10

BONESTELL & CO.

PAPER

The paper used in printing this magazine is our Albion Book

California's Leading Paper House

116 to 124 FIRST ST. SAN FRANCISCO

Phone Kearny 1272

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of ALBERT JOHN SCHERZER, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Albert Scherzer and Ada C. Brown, Administrator and Administratrix, respectively, with the will annexed of the estate of Albert John Scherzer, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said Administrator and Administratrix with the will annexed at the office of Neal Power, room 204, No. 250 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned select as their place of business in all matters connected with said estate of Albert John Scherzer, deceased.

ALBERT SCHERZER,
ADA C. BROWN.

Administrator and Administratrix, respectively, with the will annexed, of the estate of Albert John Scherzer, deceased.

Dated San Francisco, December 16, 1908.

NEAL POWER, Attorney for Administrator,
250 Montgomery St., San Francisco.

SULLIVAN & SULLIVAN, and
THEO. J. ROCHE, Attorneys for Administratrix,
Humboldt Bank Bldg., San Francisco. 12-19-5

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of CHRISTIAN LUDWIG UMBACH, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Executrix of the last Will of Christian Ludwig Umbach, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within four (4) months after the first publication of this notice to the said Executrix at the law office of A. Comte, Jr., No. 333 Kearny Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned selects as her place of business in all matters connected with said estate of Christian Ludwig Umbach, deceased.

EMILY MARY UMBACH,

Executrix of the last Will of Christian Ludwig Umbach, Deceased.

Dated San Francisco, December 3, 1908.

A. COMTE, Jr., 333 Kearny St., San Francisco,
Attorney for Executrix. 12-12-5

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., San Francisco, Cal.

Guaranteed Capital	$ 1,200,000.00
Capital actually paid up in cash	$ 1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds	$ 1,479,043.00
Deposits December 31, 1908	$35,079,498.53
Total Assets	$37,661,836.70

Office Hours: 10 o'clock a. m. to 3 o'clock p. m., except Saturdays to 12 o'clock m. and Saturday evenings from 7 o'clock p. m. to 8 o'clock p. m. for receipt of deposits only.

OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohte; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourny; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.

MISSION BRANCH, 2572 Mission Street, between 21 st and 22nd Street. For receipt and payment of Deposits only.

HENRY P. TRICOU

NOTARY PUBLIC

508 CALIFORNIA STREET Phone Kearny 711

Residence, 852 Grove St. Phone Page 55

MEN

Afflicted with any private ailment consult the United Physicians and Surgeons. Strictly reliable specialists in Genito-Urinary, Blood and Skin diseases, and all reflex ailments of men. Prompt, efficient services; fees moderate; consultation free and confidential. Write or call. Hours. 9 a. m. to 9 p. m. Sundays, 9 to 2.

A word to the wise is sufficient.

United Physicians and Surgeons

517 Twenty-third St., Oakland

Near Telegraph Avenue.

10 Third Street, San Francisco

Next to Call Building

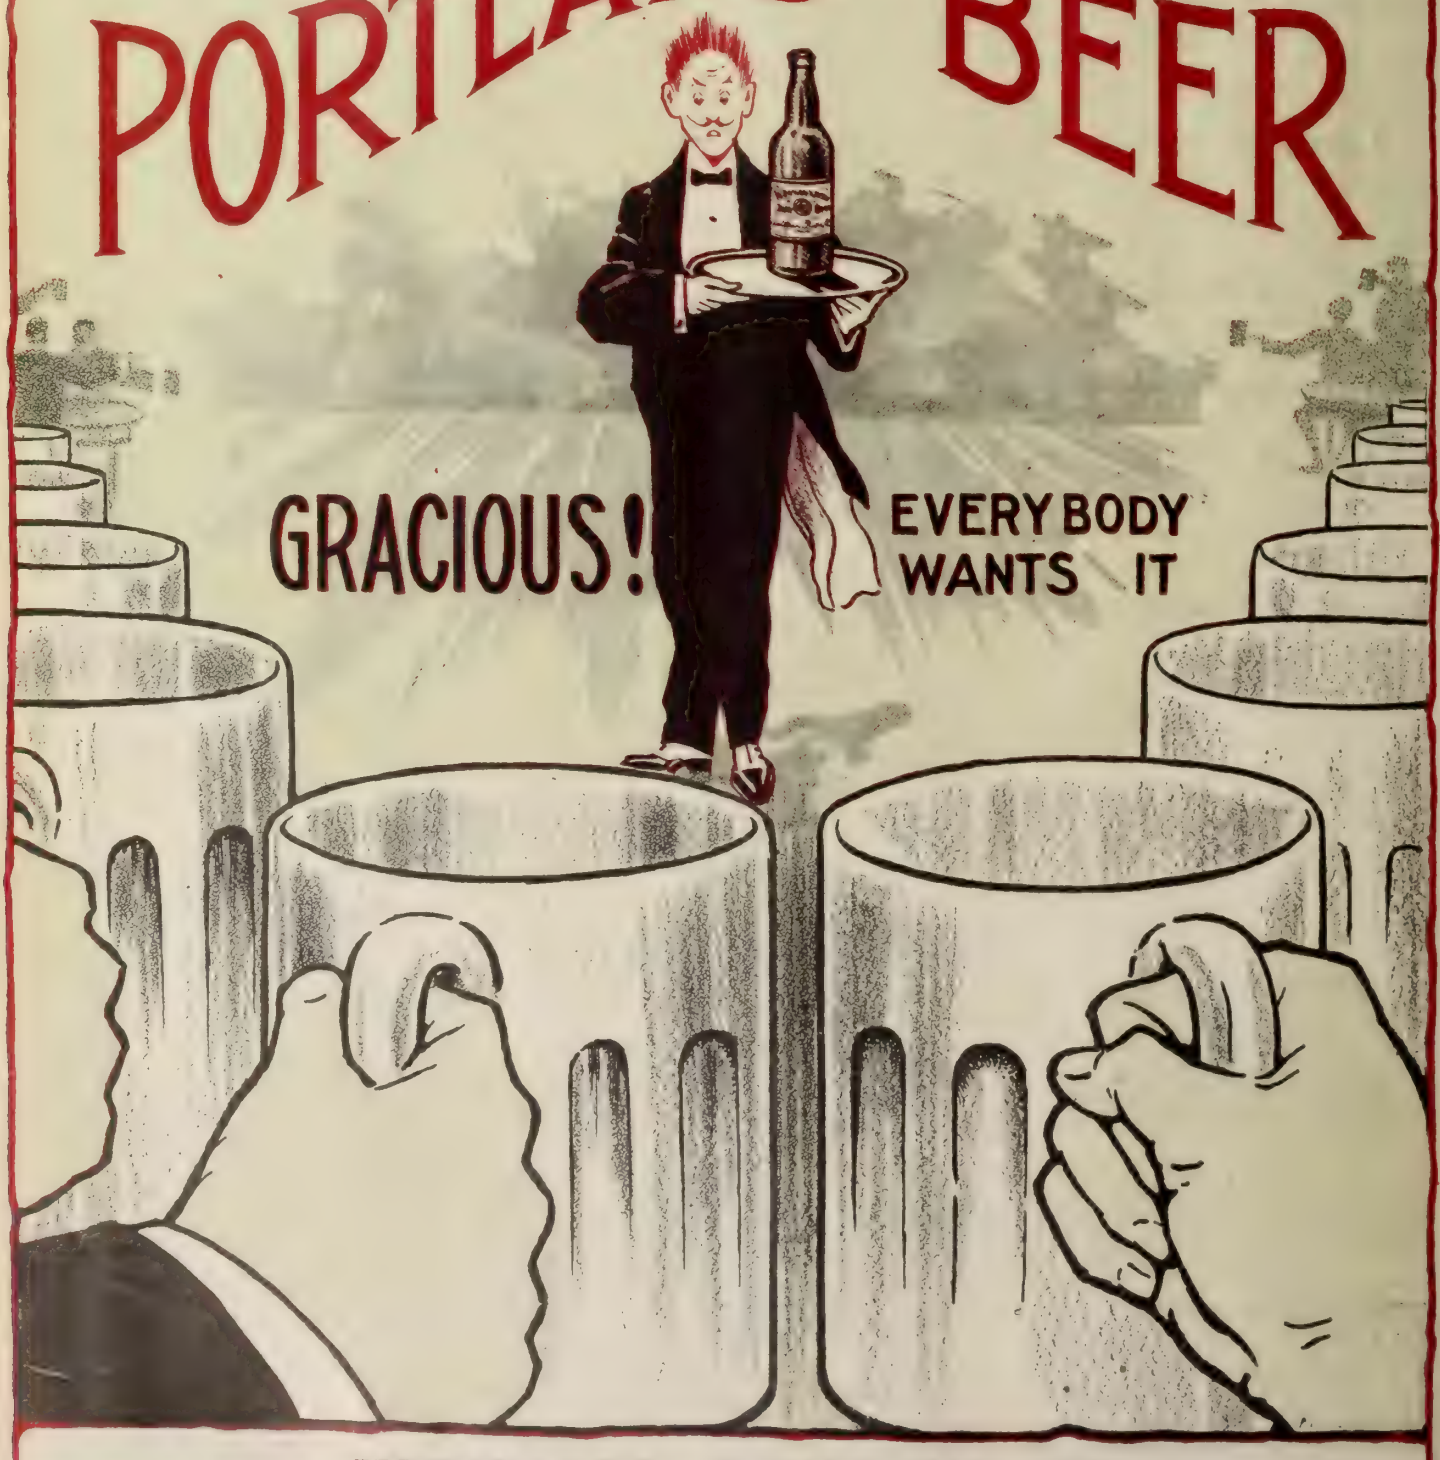
MAYERLE'S EYE WATER, by mail 65c

Orders for Eye Glasses, Opera Glasses, Lorgnettes, sent by mail, $5, $10, $15.

DANGER SIGNALS

Painful, Sore, Red, Inflamed, Burning, Smarting, Itching Scratching, Twitching, and Gluey Eyes, Heavy or Crusty Eyelids, Floating Spots, Cloudiness of Vision, Cross Eyes, Watery or Discharging Eyes, feeling like sand in the Eyes, Heavy and Crusty Eyelids are often Considered Dangerous Signals.

NEGLECTED EYESIGHT AFFECTS THE BRAIN



Mayerle's Glasses rest and strengthen the eyes and preserve the sight.

GEORGE MAYERLE

Graduate German Expert Optician, charter member American Association of Opticians and Vice-President Optical Specialist Association of America, 1149 Golden Gate Ave., between Webster and Buchanan sts. Phone Park 3153, San Francisco.

WEINHARD

PORTLAND BEER

BOTTLING AGENTS

WEINHARD BOTTLING CO.

1255 HARRISON ST., SAN FRANCISCO

TELEPHONE MARKET 977

Vol. XVII. No. 855. SAN FRANCISCO, JANUARY 16, 1909. PRICE, 10 CENTS

SAN FRANCISCO TOWN TALK

CALIFORNIA STATE

PIERCE ARROW

Four Speed Selective Transmission Side Lever Control

24 H. P. RUNABOUT

These cars have arrived and can be delivered immediately

We Have to Offer

24-H. P., 4-Cyl. Pierce Arrow Runabout
36-H. P., 6-Cyl. Pierce Arrow Runabout
48-H. P., 6-Cyl. Pierce Arrow Runabout
60-H. P., 6-Cyl. Pierce Arrow Runabout

The above cars can also be equipped with the following bodies:

2-Passenger Runabout Body
3-Passenger Runabout Body
4-Passenger Tourabout Body
4-Passenger Miniature Tonneau Body

Also Touring, Landaulet and Suburban Limousine Bodies.

Information gladly furnished Catalog on application

THE MOBILE CARRIAGE CO.

TELEPHONE FRANKLIN 1784

762-764 GOLDEN GATE AVENUE

Leading Hotels and Resorts

HOTEL ST. FRANCIS
UNION SQUARE

The Gymnasium with all types of baths (salt and fresh water) has just opened in the new wing

Under the management of JAMES WOODS

FAIRMONT HOTEL

Unique among the hotels of the world in situation, service and social prominence

Management of PALACE HOTEL COMPANY

HOTEL DEL MONTE

Near quaint old Monterey---125 miles from San Francisco.

Uniting all the pleasures of outdoor life under ideal conditions with the conveniences and luxuries of the best metropolitan hotels.

For rates, reservations, etc., address H. R. WARNER, Manager.

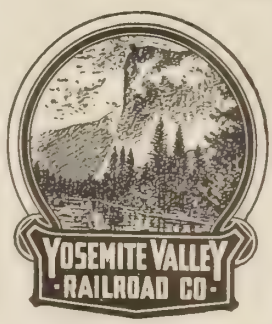
BYRON
HOT SPRINGS HOTEL

One of the world's most curative springs.

One of America's most comfortable and refined hostelries.

See Southern Pacific information bureau, James Flood Building, or any Southern Pacific agent or Peck-Judah Co., 789 Market street, or address Manager at hotel.

HOTEL DEL CORONADO
CORONADO, CAL.



Coronado is essentially an Hotel of quiet elegance. It has the most equable climate of which any knowledge exists. Hotel Del Coronado has unique facilities for out-of-door recreation. Polo, golf, tennis, boating, fishing and motoring on good roads. Rates $4 per day upward. For special information apply to MORGAN ROSS, Manager, Coronado, or H. F. NORCROSS, representative, Los Angeles.

HOTEL CARLTON

Telegraph Avenue at Durant
BERKELEY

A FIRST-CLASS TRANSIENT AND FAMILY HOTEL

MRS. W. F. MORRIS, Proprietor
formerly of Hotel Cecil, 960 Bush Street, San Francisco

YOSEMITE VALLEY
OPEN ALL YEAR

Why not plan a Holiday Trip to California's Wonderland for yourself and friends.

It is a quick, comfortable trip; daily train service. And Yosemite at this time is no less attractive than in other seasons. First class hotel service at El Portal and in the valley. For through tickets, see Southern Pacific or Santa Fe, or address

O. W. LEHMER, Traffic Manager, Y. V. R. R., Merced, Cal.

Hotel Westminster

Los Angeles, Cal.
Fourth and Main Sts.

American Plan, Reopened

Rates per Day $2.50 Rooms without Bath

Rooms with Bath $3.00, $3.50 and $4.00

European Plan

$1.00 per day and up, with bath $1.50 and up

F. O. JOHNSON - - Proprietor

You will find SWAIN'S

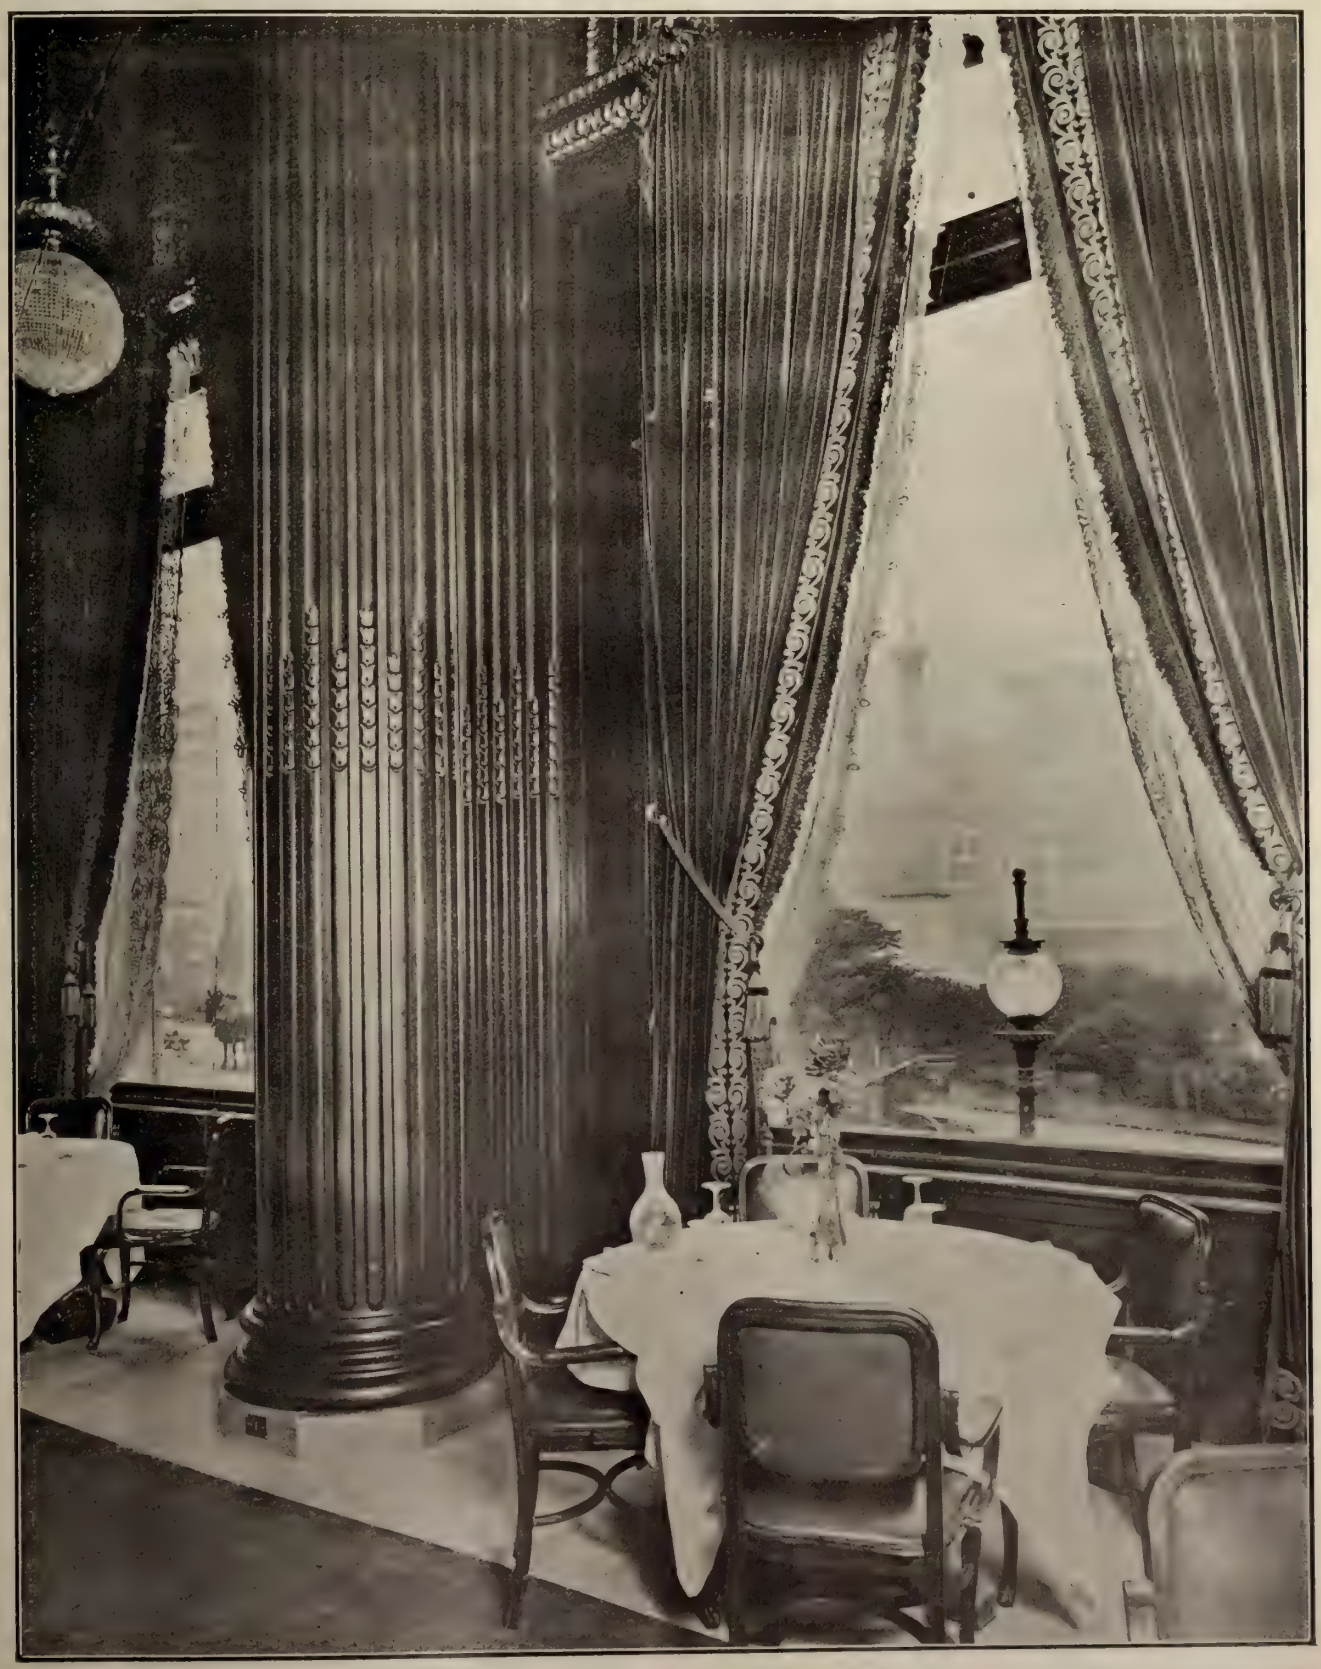
Bakery and Restaurant on the line at

1241 VAN NESS AVENUE, Near Sutter Street

AFTERNOON TEA for Shoppers with Music from 3 to 5 o'clock
BROWNLOW, the baritone, sings every evening from 6 to 8 o'clock

LEVY'S CAFE



Third and Main Streets, Los Angeles, Cal.

Much the Best Place to Get Fine Things to Eat and Listen to Choice Music at Popular Prices.

TOWN TALK

THE PACIFIC WEEKLY

Vol. XVII. San Francisco, January 16, 1909. No. 855.

A CORNER IN THE ST. FRANCIS

In the shadow of the Dewey Monument where San Francisco's epicures regale themselves.

TOWN TALK

Published Weekly by
TOWN TALK PUBLISHING COMPANY
Theodore F. Bonnet.....Editor
Ralph A. Grover.....Manager
88 First St., cor. Mission, San Francisco. Telephone Douglas 2612.

SUBSCRIPTION—One Year, in advance, $4.00; six months, $2.25; three months, $1.30; single copies, 10 cents. Foreign subscriptions (countries in Postal Union), $5.00 per year. For sale by all Newsdealers.
Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter.
The Trade in San Francisco supplied direct by us. Outside of San Francisco by the San Francisco News Co.
For foreign and local advertising rates address 88 First Street, San Francisco.
Los Angeles office, 734 Central Building.
We decline to return or to enter into correspondence as to rejected communications; and to this rule we can make no exception. Manuscripts not acknowledged within four weeks are rejected.

Roosevelt the Common Enemy

President Roosevelt seems determined to go out of office under a cloud—not one, but many. His defiance of the Congress of the United States has subjected him to an attack that will follow him even beyond the White House pale. Whatever prestige he may have gained among the unthinking masses will be dissipated in the fury of the people's representatives. President Roosevelt has done more to harmonize the apparently irreconcilable elements of Congress than any man that has occupied the exalted position which he has tried to lower to the level of a political caucus. The harmony that President Roosevelt has created in Congress, however, is the sort that unites warring factions against the common enemy.

A Companion of "Sleuths"

There was something savoring of cowardice in the President's use of the secret service to secure evidence against Congressmen and Senators whom he hated. If he suspected the integrity of the people's representatives there were many processes within his jurisdiction for ascertaining the truth, as "clean as a hound's tooth." He declined to use these processes; he turned aside from statesmanlike administration of the national executive; he stooped from the place where Washington and Jefferson and Adams and Monroe and Lincoln sat, to confer upon matters of State with low-browed, cunning men whose usual business is to apprehend counterfeiters and to ferret out the haunts of moonshining distillers. A pretty companionship for the President of the United States! a most delectable avocation for the ruler of eighty million people! He dared not bring his suspicions to the test of open accusation. He preferred to footpad his enemies and catch them as the agents of "divorce bureaus" procure evidence against erring wives and unfaithful husbands! This may have been work for the Department of Justice, but it was certainly not work for the President of the United States.

End of it All

Now the day of retribution has come. There remains but a month and a half of Rooseveltism for the American people. But in that brief time much will be done by those who have undertaken the doing. If, among those who have been dogged by Roosevelt's gumshoe men there are any guilty of the crimes that he has insinuated, they will suffer, perhaps; but there are others whom Roosevelt and his spies have "shadowed" who are above reproach, above all suspicion; and these will not permit this bullying policeman of the White House to cast upon them the first stain of suspicion. President Roosevelt has gone too far; he has wallowed too deep. His egomania has undone him. He is no longer an object of ridicule among men of sane judgment and good breeding—he is one to be execrated and regarded with such contempt as may be the portion of the man whose low intrigue is at last revealed in all its hideous deformity.

Our Over-Worked Judges

Ever vigilant and fearless, ever as distinterested as it is passionate in its devotion to the welfare of the city, the impeccable Bulletin protests against the proposition to increase the number of judges of the Superior Court which has no justification we learn from this exalted authority. The congestion of the court calendars is more apparent than real and that which is real "is due to the dilatory habits of counsel and to the easy-going ways of judges" who could clear their calendar if they "would do a good day's work, six days in the week, and take no more than a month for vacation in the summer." All of which we should believe to be quite true were it not for the records which show, among other things, that it took Judge Lawlor four years to settle the bill of exceptions in the case of Minnie Adams. That case became famous from the single circumstance that the defendant, a woman, who turned out to be innocent, was kept behind bolts and bars for four years while Judge Lawlor was settling a bill of exceptions which might have been settled in four days if the time had been given thereto. It must be assumed that this outrage was the result of congestion that was real as well as apparent, congestion over which Judge Lawlor had no control; for he is not one of the easy-going judges to whom the Bulletin refers. He is the Bulletin's favorite judge; preferred even to that other Daniel whose surname is Dunne. Judge Lawlor is a man of inexhaustible vitality and unlimited nervous force, and yet to get him to settle a bill of exceptions is the most prodigious task that ever a lawyer undertook. Last week the Court of Appeal set aside the verdict in the case of a man named Smith convicted of murder in the year 1905. Why, do you suppose, did it take Smith three years to get justice? Was it because of what are vaguely described as the law's delays? The sole reason was that Judge Lawlor was consuming time settling the bill of exceptions. This work of settling a bill of exceptions is drudgery, and therefore it is abhorred by Judge Lawlor who is temperamentally qualified for the kind of industry upon which the limelight plays. But far be it from us to suggest that Judge Lawlor from sheer laziness would let an innocent woman languish in jail for four years. Congestion in his court is a condition over which he has no control. Obviously the almost infallible Bulletin is in error.

Our Ignorant Judges

While there is much languor on the Bench in this city, and while not many giants of industry are to be found among the men that administer the law, the easy-goingness of the courts is less vexatious, less deplorable and insufferable than ignorance and love of popular applause, crowning and damning defects which are to be found in those departments which are devoted to the trial of criminal cases. Much of the dissatisfaction which exists with respect to the administration of justice is due to either or both of these defects, the complaint that is most generally heard being that our appellate judges are too fond of finding technicalities in the records, which complaint is based upon the assumption that it is usually as a result of the splitting of hairs that a case is reversed, whereas from the average decision of an appellate court it appears that the judges of those tribunals are more eager to affirm than to reverse a case, and that when a verdict in a criminal case is set aside it is because some elementary and inviolable principle of law was ignored by the trial judge. Even so intelligent an observer as the Examiner complains of the technicalities of the law, and it has suggested that the Legislature should cut them out because "in criminal business more than half the time of the courts is taken up in squabbles over matters of technicality." Now as a matter of fact criminal law is the simplest of all law, and it is in the criminal court that judges serve their apprenticeship. When the judge of a criminal court is a man of ordinary intelligence, grounded in the fundamentals of the science of law and disposed to perform no more than his function of seeing that accused men, however black the crime with which they are charged, are tried with impartiality and with due concern for all their rights, there is never any squabbling over technicalities. Has anybody ever heard of squabbling over technicalities in Judge De Haven's court? Does Judge De Haven experience any difficulty in complying with the spirit and the letter of the law? The fact is that with a conscientious and competent judge on the bench there is never any squabbling; the course of justice is smooth and the accused gets his deserts; but when the judge is either incompetent or disposed to indulge personal bias invariably much time is spent in differentiating tweedledum and tweedledee, the trial resolves itself into a contest not between the opposing attorneys but between one attorney and the judge and errors accumulate in the record.

Some Sample Cases

A great deal of misapprehension has been diffused with reference to the administration of justice in the criminal courts by ignorant critics who are laboring under the delusion that the criminal law is full of pitfalls and snares for unwary judges, which defy not only common sense but the highest order of intelligence. Now the most cursory examination of the records will disclose the fact that the pitfalls are made by the trial judges, sometimes unconsciously from purblind ignorance, and sometimes in a spirit of defiance when persuaded that they are gratifying public passion and that the appellate judges dare not interfere. An example of the perversity with which our courts are plagued is to be found in the records of the murder case tried before Judge Dunne upon which we animadverted some months ago. In that case Judge Dunne would not allow the defendant to show that he was a frail invalid at the time he committed the deed and that his assailant who was on top of him beating him to death at the time was a powerful man of great bulk. In other words Judge Dunne excluded testimony that was in every sense competent to establish the plea of self-defense. Now there was no mystery respecting the rule in that case. The technicalities of the matter were as obvious as the nose on Judge Dunne's face. For another example of juridical perversity take the case of Joseph Smith, which was tried before the Hon. William P. Lawlor in the spring of 1905. It was reversed last week by the Court of Appeal within thirty days after its submission. No congestion or easy-goingness in that court. But why did it take so long to reach the appellate court? The same old reason; Judge Lawlor was too busy to settle the bill of exceptions. This is what the record discloses: Joseph Smith killed Joseph McGowan on November 26, 1904; found guilty April 25, 1905; motion for new trial submitted July 3, 1905; taken under advisement by Judge Lawlor until October 21, 1905, when the motion was denied; sentence pronounced and notice of appeal filed October 24, 1905; bill of exceptions settled by Judge Lawlor December 31, 1907. In this case there was excuse for some of the delay, the records having been destroyed by the fire of April, 1906, but why had the records been slumbering in Judge Lawlor's hands from October, 1905, till April, 1906? Because Judge Lawlor was too busy to settle the bill of exceptions, a task that might have been performed in a few hours. Now let us ascertain what the technicalities were upon which the case was reversed. Upon the trial the defendant took the witness stand, and after giving his testimony he was cross-examined with reference to matters which were not the subject of discussion on the direct examination. The purpose of this cross-examination was two-fold: to prompt the jury to infer from certain circumstances that the defendant was possessed of murderous instincts and "to show," as the appellate court said, "that he was an immoral and dissolute person, and thus to excite in the minds of the jury a prejudice against him for matters in no way connected with the homicide for which he was being tried." We learn further from the opinion that this is the use to which the district attorney put this evidence: "He argued that defendant kept large quantities of whisky and brandy in his room 'with which to ply and debauch women who visited him at all hours of the night' and that 'he kept a regular harem there.'" In other words the bars were down, and the defendant, a man 70 years of age, was not only robbed of that most sacred of all Constitutional rights—the right of immunity from self-accusation, but he was tried by a jury that was led to believe him a monster of iniquity by reason of accusations against which he could not defend himself. Now is it to be supposed that the State is to be put to the expense of another trial of this case because of the pitfalls and the snares of the law? The rules which Judge Lawlor violated are known to every law student in his first year at school. They embody elemental principles of law, and they have been iterated and reiterated, explained, elaborated and emphasized in scores of decisions rendered in this State and in thousands of decisions rendered in other States. Was it out of sheer ignorance that Judge Lawlor made erroneous rulings in a case involving the life of a man? This is a question which we would not undertake to answer. We cite the case not for the purpose of reflecting discredit on Judge Lawlor, but to abumbrate a characteristic of juridical conduct in our trial courts, a characteristic of the conduct that leads to reversals and to ignorant criticism of those higher tribunals in which Constitutional rights are protected against the assaults of stupidity and criminal perversity. Some day perhaps we shall learn the folly of making a law school of our Superior Court and educating men for judges before

The Hub.
CHAS. KEILUS & CO
EXCLUSIVE
HIGH GRADE CLOTHIERS

No Branch Stores—No Agents.

"MY TAILOR" IS NO LONGER "IT." HE NOW INDIVIDUALIZES AND CATERS TO CLIENTS OF A PECULIAR FORM AND BUILD. NOW-A-DAYS AN AVERAGE MAN CAN COME INTO THIS SHOP AND BE FITTED ACCURATELY. GET A CHOICE OF NEW SHAPES THAT "MY TAILOR" NEVER SEES. WE HAVE "MY TAILOR" UP A TREE.

The Hub
This Label Chas Keilus & Co. Our Guarantee.
San Francisco.

Only prejudiced people have their clothes made. They have to pay more money than we charge, have lots of trouble with try-ons and other things, and even then, if they don't fit, "it's yours truly." Isn't it more comfortable and profitable to come to a shop like ours, make your selection, try it on; perhaps, with a trifle alteration, you're suited and fitted. If not, why then you know. The clothes belong to us; we fit because we must. "My tailor" can't afford to treat you like this.

JEWELERS' BUILDING
Post Street, Near Kearny, San Francisco.

they have been educated for the legal profession. It is men of this calibre that try the cases which are reviewed by our appellate courts, which, if anything, are entirely too indulgent, contenting themselves with merely reversing when they should censure and make clear to the public the mischievousness of conduct, which, if curbed oftener, would be the sooner mended.

A Problem of Minor Importance

Another scientist is giving his attention to the possibilities of prolonging human life to an almost indefinite length. One hundred and fifty years is in his estimation quite within the bounds of reasonable possibility, and so, perhaps, it may be: What would be infinitely more to the purpose would be some proof that a long life is in any way desirable. Why should any rational human being care to outlive his usefulness, and drag out an existence bereft of every interest save the one of continuing to draw breath? In these days of early superannuation, when the first gray hair is a calamity, as marking the beginning of the end—when a man of forty-five, vigorous and capable, is hopelessly barred from seeking employment under new masters unless he has money to invest in their enterprise, when one of the palliative excuses urged in behalf of the employment of children is that their labor and its consequent pitiful wage is needed for the support of their parents, what possible inducement can be urged for an indefinite continuation of mere life? One of the most horrible conceptions in literature is Dean Swift's depiction of the "Struldbrugs," those occasional unfortunates who were born with a distinguishing mark to show that they were exempt from the fate of mortals. They grew old, aged, ancient; they lost their senses and their faculties, but yet they lived. Amongst their contemporaries it was looked upon as the final catastrophe not to be permitted to die. The scientists who are engaged in devising ways and means of rendering existence more bearable are striving to better purpose than those who are giving their attention to the possibilities of prolonging our time on earth. From statistics we learn that suicide is alarmingly on the increase, which goes to show that civilization is yet far from millennial perfection, and that there is a steady decrease of the number of persons who are looking forward with satisfaction to the pleasures of old age.

The Library Delusion

E. E. Slosson has something to say in the January Outlook on the subject of "Books no Library Should be Without." Contrary to the usual view of writers on this and kindred topics Mr. Slosson has given no attention whatever to lists of hundred bests nor to any of the conventional schemes for making public libraries supply individual readers with either all they should be familiar with or all that any one of their innumerable patrons would like to read. On the contrary he defines the function of a public library as that not of a supplanter but of a supplement to private sources of literature, and he thinks that the commercial handlers of books have a just complaint when their business is made to suffer by the large number of copies of popular novels which are at the disposal of borrowers. He considers files of magazines and newspapers essentials, and also those expensive reference volumes which are too heavy a burden for the ordinary private purse, and which, owing to later discoveries and newer editions, need to be constantly renewed and brought up to date. Classics have their place on the library shelves, but there is no better reason for supplying the populace with free fiction than there is for distributing free tobacco. In point of fact public libraries are not so beneficial as they are generally believed to be. The Salvation Army long ago discovered the wisdom of keeping the reading rooms closed during the hours when work is to be sought; for the excuse of shelter and warmth and the appearance of occupation often proved too great a temptation for weak and idle human nature to resist. Any public reading room will furnish an object lesson, especially in inclement weather, when men and boys may be found sitting about in listless attitudes and literally going to sleep with books in their hands. To the casual looker-on they may appear to be laudably employed in improving their minds, but as a matter of fact it would be better for them, both mentally and physically, if they were abroad in the streets, buffeting the wind and feeling the rain in their face. From time to time we have had lay sermons preached on the iniquity of the female portion of the populace gorging on romance, but quite recently it has been observed that novels are not the only poison dealt out by the free reading room dispensary. Anarchistic socialistic literature is "on tap" likewise, and is being fed into crude minds and undeveloped brains like corn into a hopper. There is scarcely a magazine which has not taken some share in the orgy of muck-raking, and there is hardly an idle workman or a human failure of any description who is not ready to see in his own private grievance the persecution of his whole class. These men and youths who seemingly are so laudably occupied are in reality qualifying themselves for bad citizenship just as unmistakeably as if instead of filling their minds with poor arguments they were filling their stomachs with poor liquor. So long as the idea prevails that the function of a public library is to keep on hand everything and to dole it out on demand to every applicant, there can be no remedy. If the time ever comes when the public library slips into its proper place in the scheme of things, as a supplement to the private resources of the individual, no particular harm will result from cutting off at the fountain head the food on which much of the popular discontent, is nourished. Reading in itself is not more commendable than smoking or chewing gum, and when the reading matter is of the wrong kind, either because it is weak and flabby or because it is indigestible, it is decidedly a vice.

GIERSBERGER WINES
The wine of merit and quality all around the world. Compare it with the best wines and we are satisfied.
THEO. GIER WINE COMPANY
Phone Oakland 123 1225-1227 BROADWAY, OAKLAND

The GOLD MEDAL for quality in the Franco-British Exhibition has been awarded to
To His Majesty the King
By royal appointment
WHITE HORSE
WHISKY.
QUALITY THE SECRET OF SUCCESS
MACKIE & CO. DISTILLERS LTD.
LAGAVULIN DISTILLERY, ISLAY Established 1742
MALT-MILL " "
CRAIGELLACHIE " GLENLIVET
Note.—Any person proved guilty of re-filling our empty bottles with inferior whisky will be prosecuted.

Mist and Rain

(Translated From the French by F. P. Sturm)

Autumns and winters, springs of mire and rain,
Seasons of sleep, I sing your praises loud,
For thus I love to wrap my heart and brain
In some dim tomb beneath a vapoury shroud

In the wide plain where revels the cold wind,
Through long nights when the weathercock whirls round,
More free than in warm summer day my mind
Lifts wide her raven pinions from the ground.

Unto a heart filled with funereal things
That since old days hoar frosts have gathered on,
Naught is more sweet, O pallid, queenly springs,

Than the long pageant of your shadows wan,
Unless it be on moonless eves to weep
On some chance bed and rock our griefs to sleep.

Perspective Impressions

Newspaper Caption: "Mr. Taft in vaudeville." On his shape?

Marrying a rough diamond isn't so bad if he has lots of rocks.

"Are Christ-like people extinct?" asks the Examiner. Is this a smash at the Lincoln-Roosevelt League?

"Foraker," says a contemporary, "hurled the lie at the President." But Foraker is of the Ananias Club.

Senator Tillman doesn't seem to understand that there is only one man in the world whose motives are above impugnment, or that in pursuance of the "larger good" the anointed one is justified in the perpetration of any kind of wrong.

Mayor Taylor appears to be getting the double-cross in the house of his friends. Beware good easy man of the fate of Biggy!

We were afforded an excellent view of yellow journalism in the making the other day when we read in the despatches from Washington that a San Francisco managing editor had wired his correspondent to interview Manson and have him take the hide off the San Francisco delegation in Congress.

Where is the San Francisco Relief Fund? How much is there in the San Francisco Relief Fund? Is the San Francisco Relief Fund intact? Who is getting some of it? Do they need it? or does some manager of the fund need them? These are samples of impertinent questions which no honest man will ask.

CHAS. S. FEE AND FAMILY

Mr. Fee is the Passenger Traffic Manager of the Southern Pacific Company.

Professional Reformers

Relating to the Estimation in Which the People that Go about Picking Motes and Beams Out of Their Neighbors' Eyes are Held by Those Neighbors, and the Low Valuation that is Placed by the General Public on Their Efforts.

By Democritus

There must be a lot of people in California who imagine themselves competent by reason of their utter sinlessness, to cast not only the first stone at the rest of us, but to monopolize all the stone-throwing. The lobby of the State Legislature is full of these holy folk. They are there with all sorts of laws to compel their fellow citizens to be virtuous and unhappy—Sunday laws, anti-race track laws, divorce prohibition laws, anti-saloon laws, local option laws, prohibition liquor laws, and a law to cure the students of the Stanford University of the drink habit by forcing total abstinence on the unoffending citizens of the town of Palo Alto.

The Reverend Mr. Tufts is trying to lobby a "Sunday Rest bill" through the Legislature. This sanctified lobbyist pretends that his bill is not tainted with the fanaticism of sectarian prejudice. He says that it is a measure to compel people to rest one day in the week. Therefore he would close every business house and place of amusement on Sunday, because that is the day usually devoted to rest by the majority of those who work. And right here I lay for the Reverend Tufts to trip him by the heels. If all the places of amusement are closed on Sunday where will the man that has worked hard during the week find recreation on his "rest day?" Answer me that your reverence. To be sure, you say that we may go to the baseball games on Sunday—provided they are not conducted for the profit of the managers. But how are we to have baseball games if somebody doesn't pay for the services of good players? Are we to be amused by the antics of a lot of dubs on the diamond? Go to, thou foolish preacher. Cut out your baseball privilege, we'll none of it! You don't know a base hit from a base runner.

Mr. Tufts ignores the fact that everybody has one day of rest during the week. If he is forced to admit this fact his Sunday rest scheme perishes of inanition and if he still insists upon the passage of his bill he must acknowledge that it is a measure directly in the interest of the churches. As a matter of plain truth, that is precisely what this Tufts bill is. The preachers behind the Reverent Tufts are worried because the people do not fill the churches on Sunday instead of crowding the theaters and other places of amusement. If there were more people in the churches the income of the contribution plate might be larger and the salary of the preacher might be increased. Therein is the true "morality" of the Reverend Tufts' Sunday rest bill.

Why are not the Reverend Tufts and his fellow reformers honest in this Sunday business? Why do they seek to fool the people with worldly sophistry? I know why. If they should say that the real purpose of this bill is to close every avenue of recreation for the purpose of driving the people into the churches, they would invite the retort, "What rest or recreation can we find in the churches unless, perhaps, we go to sleep under the dull exordium of the average preacher?" And the Reverend Tufts or his brethren cannot combat my assertion that nine out of ten of the preaching tribe are commonplace, unimaginative, uninspiring and completely uninteresting. Neither he nor the others can say with truth that their congregations or the bulk of those whom this bill would compel to become part of the congregations would not prefer vaudeville, melodrama, comedy or tragedy to the sermons of the preachers.

Then why should we be forced to endure that which we do not like? And there is the Jew and the Seventh Day Adventist—have these no rights under the constitution of the country that the Sabbatarians are bound to respect? But perhaps the Reverend Tufts may be induced to make an exception in favor of the Jew and the Seventh Day Adventists. If he does I think I have him on the hip again. If he permits the Jew and the Seventh Day Adventist to work on Sunday why shall not I who am none of these, nor yet of the Reverend Tufts holy persuasion, entitled to the same privilege? Go to, again, most reverend sir; you have no right to discriminate between me and my Jewish neighbor nor between me and my Seventh Day Adventist fellow citizen. But most likely I wast my time and the space of this enlightened journal in debating these things with the clerics and preachers. I little think that their bill will pass this Legislature. And if it does pass the Legislature it will not be signed by the Governor. And if it is signed by the Governor it will not be sustained by the Supreme Court. And if the Supreme Court does sustain it nobody will pay any attention to it. The Reverend Tufts is nursing a dead letter law; it is a corpse before it is born.

For the information of the Reverend Tufts and his brethren, I will say that law is punitive rather than reformatory. Men are not made moral or even good by the laws. They are merely restrained from those evil ways that are sure to be found out. Laws are for the punishment of the wicked. Good men could live with their fellow citizens without laws. A good citizen never thinks of the law. A bad citizen is always thinking of the law. It is fear of the law that keeps the bad man straight. Therefore it is logical to assume that the law is only for the wicked. Now it is also logical to assume that the wicked cannot be reformed by laws. And it is a corrollary that the good do not need laws for any purpose. You cannot make a silk purse out of a sow's ear, nor can you make a sow's ear out of a silk purse. You cannot reform a bad man except by keeping him in the penitentiary for life or choking him at the end of a rope. But I don't suppose the Reverend Tufts intends to make the penalty of his reform measure a capital offense. If he does he is a more expansive idiot than I have surmised.

Reformers are a queer lot, take them by and large. In the first place, they are ridiculous in their assumption that they are better than the rest of us. In the second place, they incite in the minds of their fellow citizens the suspicion that back of their reform is an ulterior purpose—a motive of self interest. It is the common belief in this community, for example, that Reformer Rudolph Spreckels is trying to reform the United Railroads out of the control of Patrick Calhoun into the control of himself and Mr. Phelan; it is believed that Reformer Chester H. Rowell is trying to reform the politics of the Republican party out of the control of the "organization" into the control of Reformer Rowell and the San Francisco Call; it is believed that Reformer Phelan is trying to reform himself into the spot light while reforming the city administration to the purposes of Reformer Phelan's self interest; it is believed that Reformer Boke of Berkelev is trying to reform himself into a more lucrative salary than the one he receives as a law pedagogue from the State; and, finally, it is believed that Reformer Tufts is trying to reform the community into the habit of listening to the awful drivel of his pulpit and the pulpits of his brethren.

But we refuse to be reformed in that fashion. Rudolph Spreckels shall not control the franchises of the United

BROKERS AND DEALERS
IN HIGH GRADE
INVESTMENT SECURITIES

SUTRO & COMPANY
412 MONTGOMERY ST., SAN FRANCISCO

Requests for Information Either by Personal Interview or Correspondence will be Gladly Received and Promptly Attended to.

Railroads, whatever happens to Patrick Calhoun; Chester H. Rowell shall not control the politics of the Republican party, whatever may happen to the "organization;" James D. Phelan may cavort in the spot light, but he may not control the administration of this city; Reformer Boke may reform himself into a better job, but he cannot make us pay him a larger salary for the work he is doing for the State in the leisure of his reformatory labors; and, finally, Reformer Tufts cannot reform us into his church if we prefer to hear something better than he has to offer, in the theaters and other places of innocent and rational amusement.

It's getting to be a bad day for the professional reformers.

The Flaying of a Poet

And Incidentally the Rebuking of an Editor by a Critic Inspired with Love of Humanity and Prejudice Against Irrational Verse.

By Theodore Bonnet.

"Vex not thou the poet's mind with they shallow wit," said Tennyson; "Vex not thou the poet's mind, for thou canst not fathom it." But Tennyson was a poet, and he claimed for genius the divine right of being a law unto itself. Like all poets, he had contempt for those uninspired mortals, the dogmatic critics, who presume in their incredible conceit to pass judgment on the "language of the gods." With many poets before and since, Tennyson groaned over the world's insensibility to beauty and what George Eliot called "eagerness for materialistic explanation." From his experience with those critics who are without Promethean fire, he knew they could see nothing in poetry but the mechanics of rhetoric and technique of prosody and not always that. So he urged them to "vex not the poet's mind"; but in vain.

After the first poets came the criticasters, and the poets they have been after ever since and ever will be, until the end of time. The relation of poet and criticaster is that of the astronomer in his cloud-piercing observatory on the mountain top and the man in the street who dissents on the strength of the testimony of his naked eye. The poet with his delicate and subtle instrument of emotional expression floats into the empyrean and takes a bird's-eye view of the earth, and what he sees is scoffed at by the opinionated cynic in his gloomy den.

Even in this day and generation there are critics from the land of Philistia who would analyze in terms of physics the strange images that have dawned on the penetrating insight of a poet or "measure the air of Parnassus with cylinders of Torricellian glasses." In proof whereof I submit the following:

> For heaven's sake and our own, Mr. Bonnet, spare us any further Stirling drivel! Let him go and consort with negroes who have the sound of resonant words, but not pollute the surroundings of sane people. I give the verse you this week quote in the paper above and ask, Why is the sun wanton? How is he sure the buds are vestals or the undeveloped bosoms of daughters of Aphrodite? Who ever heard of fire being silken? And how can gold be glassy? Tell Sterling to go and boom-boom long words down by the shore of the booming sea and we may welcome the pleasing sound, but words were meant to convey reason, and judged by his words, Sterling should be in Napa asylum. Far be it from me to be harsh toward one who is a stranger to me, but I consider the degeneracy of his random thoughts a menace to humanity and a thing to be suppressed, not lauded.
>
> Yours, LOUISE C. MAUD.

Apparently Mrs. Maud is as great a stickler for prosaic truth in poetry as was that other cocksure and impatient critic, the immortal Jeffreys, who asserted that Wordsworth in his Lyrical Ballads appeared to be "in a state of low and maudlin imbecility." Jeffreys was as incapable of understanding Wordsworth as Mrs. Maud is of appreciating Sterling, and doubtless equally as indifferent to the shrewd words of Alexander Pope:

> I know there are, to whose presumptuous thoughts
> Those freer beauties, even in them, seem faults,
> Some figures monstrous and misshaped appear,
> Considered singly or beheld too near,
> Which, but proportioned to their light or place,
> Due distance reconciles to form and grace.

How eager have the poets been to set the critics right! From Horace to Bierce, hardly a poet of any consequence has failed to preach to them. Dryden kindly informs them that as poetry wasn't history nobody was obliged to interpret it literally. At the same time he observed that when we are not affected by the excellencies of poetry it is as unreasonable to conclude that they are bombast, unnatural and mere madness as it would be for a blind man to insist that there is no day. Examples of this unreasonableness in literature are quite common. The greatest poets have suffered from it, and therefore Sterling, who is abused oftener and more virulently than any other poet of the day, is having no unique experience. The fate of Keats holds no warning for his critics. Most of them are as cocksure as Mrs. Maud, who, I surmise, belongs to that class of critics which includes the average man. Now, the average man, though a lover of metrical compositions, has not cultivated the faculty to which poetry addresses itself. He likes some of the poems of some of the great poets and he concludes that he is capable of appreciating poetry. More than likely he has no conception of the rare beauties of poetry, but has taste only for the minor achievements of the immortal bards. Perhaps he is inclined to be critical; if so you will find that it pleases him to sneer at the excellencies of poetry which he does not understand, all unconscious of the fact that the common herd are not privileged to see and hear the things that poets see and hear; disposed, perhaps, after the manner of Mrs. Maud, to analyze in terms of astronomy, or numismatics, or botany, images that have gladdened the sensitive soul of a poet intoxicated with a vision of beauty.

"Why is the sun wanton?" asks Mrs. Maud. Well, let us satisfy this critical lady who would exclude from Poet Sterling's vocabulary one of the favorite epithets of the plectrum wielders. The word "wanton" is a most serviceable word; it is so pleasing of sound and so varied of meaning. Go back to its Gothic root and you will find that it is a fine old word, susceptible of an infinite variety of applications. The prosaic use it almost exclusively to express sportiveness of the carnal kind, but that is the remotest of its meanings, and yet in that signification it may aptly be applied to the eternal sun-god that fecundates mother earth and makes all nature glad. But it also means, according to the Standard dictionary, "to squander," "to frolic at random," "to rule unrestrainedly," and hence the passion which poets have for it. Poet Sterling imagined the vestal-bosomed buds unfolding to the wanton sun's desire. Now, what do they unfold to if not to the sun? and what is old Helios, the prodigal spender of light and heat, if not wanton? Perhaps it may be easier to convince Mrs. Maud that the poet has not been guilty of a tortured trope by reminding her that Washington Irving, in whom, perhaps, she has confidence, wrote of Phoebus sporting on the side of a green hill "like some wanton urchin." And perhaps when reminded that Wordsworth sang of the "enamored sunny light" Mrs. Maud will with-

(Continued on Page 29.)

J. C. WILSON

BROKER

Private Wire Chicago and New York
Member New York Stock Exchange, Chicago Board of Trade and Stock and Bond Exchange, San Francisco
LOCAL AND EASTERN STOCKS AND BONDS
Main Office, Mills Bldg. Tel. Kearny 482.
Branch Office, Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles.

Siesta

(Translated from the German of M. Von Borch)

It was a merry dinner-party that lingered over the desert in Senor Jose Francisco de Silvis's elegant bachelor apartments in the Rue Castiglione. Nearly all of them had met that night for the first time. The host himself was but slightly acquainted with his guests. He had met them at public resorts.

Senor de Silvis was a rich Brazilian who had come to Paris to spend some of his money. He was a vulgarian, eager to make acquaintances in the fashionable world. He was the loudest person at the table, and one could see that it was in his knowledge of German that he shouted across the table to a red-bearded physician: "Mein lieber Herr Doktor!—wie gehts' Ihnen?"

The temperature of the entertainment rose with the champagne. Fluent French and murdered French alternated with Spanish Portuguese. The ladies leaned back in their chairs and laughed. The party was soon sufficiently acquainted to cast aside all reserve. Jesting and witty words flew over the table from mouth to mouth. The "lieber Doktor" alone discussed seriously with his neighbor—a French journalist, with a red ribbon in his button-hole.

And there was still another present who did not allow himself to be carried away with the general gayety. He sat at the right of Mademoiselle Adele. On her left sat her new admirer, the corpulent Anatole, who had been eating voraciously of the truffles.

During the meal Mademoiselle Adele had attempted, by many harmless little devices, to enliven her neighbor on the right. But he remained quiet, answered courteously, but shortly and in a low voice.

She thought at first that he was a Pole; one of those most wearisome of creatures, who travel about and play the martyr. But she soon discovered that she had erred. That annoyed Mademoiselle Adele.

It was one of her many accomplishments to be able to distinguish, at the first glance, the many foreigners whom she encountered. And she was wont to declare that she could guess the nationality of a man as soon as he had exchanged ten words with her.

But this taciturn stranger was the source of much perplexity to her. If he had only been blond! Then she would at once have made him an Englishman, for he spoke like one. But he had black hair, a heavy dark mustache, and a fine petit figure. His fingers were remarkably long, and he had a peculiar way of crumbling the bread and playing with the desert-fork.

"He is a musician," whispered Mademoiselle Adele to her corpulent friend.

"Ah," replied Monsieur Anatole, "I fear that I have eaten too many truffles."

Mademoiselle Adele again whispered some good advice into his ear, whereupon he laughed and appeared smitten with love.

Meanwhile, however, she could not neglect the interesting stranger. After she had enticed him to drink several glasses of champagne, he became livelier and more talkative.

"Oh," she suddenly cried out, "I perceive by your speech that you are certainly an Englishman!"

The stranger blushed and hastily replied, "No, madam!"

Mademoiselle Adele laughed.

"Pardon me," she said; "I know, Americans are always vexed when one takes them for English."

"I am not an American either," returned the stranger.

This was too much for Mademoiselle Adele. She bent over her plate and seemed very much embarrassed. Then, indeed, she observed that Mademoiselle Louison, sitting opposite to her, was delighted with her blunder.

The strange gentleman understood this, and added, half aloud: "I am an Irishman, madam."

"Ah," uttered Mademoiselle Adele, with a grateful smile, for she was easily reconciled.

"Anatole—Irishman! What is that?" she whispered.

"They are the poor in England," he whispered in reply.

"So!—hem!" Mademoiselle Adele raised her eyebrows and cast a sly glance at her neighbor on the right. With one stroke he had completely swept away her interest in him.

De Silvis's dinner was excellent. They had been long sitting at the table. When Monsieur Anatole remembered the oysters, which had introduced the menu, they were to him like a pleasant dream. The truffles, on the contrary, continued to be to him a lasting reality.

The dinner proper was ended. Now and then some one lifted his glass again, or culled from the dish one of the choice fruits or little bon-bons.

Tender hearted, blond Mademoiselle Louison was lost in deep reverie over a grape which she had dropped into her champagne glass.

"Look," cried Mademoiselle Louison, turning her great, liquid eyes towards the journalist; "see how the white angels bear a sinner towards heaven!"

"Ah, charming!" cried the enraptured journalist in return.

Mademoiselle Louison's sublime idea made the circuit of the table, and was generally applauded. The frivolous Adele alone whispered to her corpulent admirer: "Really, 'twould take a whole host of angels to carry you to heaven, Anatole!"

The journalist, in the interim, knew how to grasp the opportunity and arrest the general attention of the company. Furthermore, he was happy at the prospect of escaping a wearisome political discussion with the German. And since he wore the red ribbon in his button-hole, and, in addition, had the matchless, important tone of a journalist, the entire party gave him audience.

He had much to relate. Every moment he spoke of the press as "we," while in the heat of his eloquence he talked of "these millions which we have raised with such enormous sacrifices."

But each of the others also had his story to tell. Innumerable traits, small or noble, were revealed on these days of festivities and pleasures. And all of them savored somewhat of self-sacrifice.

Mademoiselle Louison's best friend, an unimportant lady, whose place was almost at the foot of the table, related, despite Louison's protest, how three poor sewing-girls had come to her own lodgings, and how she had made them sew the whole night on her gown for the celebration at the Hippodrome. Moreover, in addition to their wages, she had generously given these poor girls coffee and cake!

Mademoiselle Louison became suddenly an important personage at the table, and the journalist began to show her the most marked attentions.

These many noble incidents of benevolence and Louison's liquid eyes inspired the entire company with a feeling of repose, satisfaction, and sympathy for mankind, which was most eminently fitting to the weariness following the fatigue of the meal.

Indeed, this feeling of comfort mounted even a few de-

(Continued on Page 30.)

HOTEL VICTORIA

N. E. cor. Bush and Stockton

CENTRALLY LOCATED .·. A MODERN AND UP-TO-DATE FAMILY HOTEL

Sun in every room. Elaborate furnishings. Excellent cuisine.
Large lobby and reception room. Grill room. Dining room.

American and European Plan.

Sinclair's Bad Drama

By Theodore Bonnet

After a conscientious and, let us fervently hope, an intelligent analysis of Upton Sinclair's play "Prince Hagen" I feel bound to say that it is not pregnant with mischief and cannot undermine public confidence in the institutions of our country. Moreover with all due deference to Mr. Sinclair, I feel that I may say without doing him injustice that he is not likely to vindicate his efficiency as a prophet of the socialist propaganda unless he quits the drama and takes to the cart-tail; not at any rate unless he has the industry and perseverance to study and master the technique of the art into which he has boldly blundered. It is evident that Mr. Sinclair has not the genius to contrive an effective technique. He must depend on the ancient principles of the drama, all of which he ignored either wilfully or from ignorance in his "Prince Hagen." He may have the power of invention essential to success in the field of dramaturgy, but of that I am not certain. It is not to be glimpsed in this play in which he tells us a story instead of presenting it through physical action. The play is bare of ingenious situation and stirring episode. It has some pretty fantasy, but that can hardly be said to be the product of Mr. Sinclair's inventive faculty, since it is in the nature of a parody on Wagner and decidedly reminscent of Ibsen. When Mr. Sinclair relies on his own intellectual energy he gives us babble and buncombe, philippic and puerility. He has not even succeeded in weaving his thesis into the web of his play. It is plastered on. It is apparent enough from his long-winded speeches that it is his purpose to flout the plutocracy, but nothing springs spontaneously from the action of the play to compel sympathy. The plot itself does not argue the soundness of the author's position. The rich are inveighed against, invective is hurled at them, the hero thunders platitudes at them, but they do nothing to compel the passionate hostility of the audience; the state of mind essential to concord between play and audience must be cultivated before entering the theatre. This is the wrong way about in drama. The playwright must appeal to the instincts, to the passions, to the prejudices of human nature, and this must be done not with oratory but by a series of logical situations. In other words a dramatist ought to be dramatic rather than declamatory. Hence Sinclair as a playwright is a disappointment. On attending the performance of "Prince Hagen" I supposed that I should make the acquaintance of a man who handled a serious problem artistically, a problem more pregnant and potent than the familiar one of sentiment and emotion? I expected to see a thesis play that taught a lesson, and quickened a thought pertinent to the life and affairs of the moment. Instead I witnessed an attempt to palm of sophistry in place of theatric incident and situation. I am not prejudiced against Mr. Sinclair for consecrating himself to the protest against the current contentment of the vast, and perhaps ignorant, majority. I have great respect for the opinion of the minority because I know that it is generally, almost always, right. With Mr. Sinclair's philosophy I have no quarrel; with his play I have no patience; for him as a pseudo literary artist I have nothing but censure. He has given us what purports to be a drama, and it is nothing but a series of monologues and dialogues in the course of which it becomes clear to the most languid apprehension, that the author, the self-constituted agent of the slaves of the Money Power is doing all the talking. In this drama all the principles of one of the sacred forms of literature are flagrantly violated, and to use an ancient simile it is as full of defects as an egg is of meat. Nor is there compensation for these in the author's fervor which spreads and boils in its climaxward course. His eloquence may hold countless thousands spellbound, but it cannot reconcile them to an incoherent play that promises much and requites attention with disappointment. To make a play the vehicle of an idea is a quite laudable ambition, but it is not to be achieved without a knowledge of how the parts are to be articulated. Mr. Sinclair has neglected to acquire this knowledge. As a consequence he has given us a play that creaks at every joint. Instead of leading us up to a catastrophe woven into the fiber of the drama, he makes one that has scarcely any relevancy to the preliminary episodes, and when it takes place it is of no consequence because it is not motived in anything in which we have any keen interest. The hero, crown prince of the Nibelungs of Das Rheingold, visits the glimpses of the moon, constitutes himself champion of the people and purposes rousing them into revolt against the magnates of Wall street. You expect great things of this prince for the space of two acts, but his master-stroke is merely the wrecking of a few fortunes in which you have not much interest, for all that you know of the iniquity of the ruined men is what you have been told in the very act in which they have been overwhelmed. The playwright does not compel your sympathy for his purpose by any dramatic episodes. He makes the fatal mistake of relying on narrative which is the art of the novelist, not of the dramatist. In drama salient episodes must never be related—they must be acted, and the action ought to be obvious enough to be apprehended by a deaf man with imagination. Mr. Sinclair also makes the mistake of making his hero do something that does not meet with your approval. He makes his hero ruin the father of the only woman in the play for whom you have any kind feeling. She is not much of a heroine, but there is a nice young man in love with her and naturally you hope to see them united. When the hero, to compel the sale to him of the girl, ruins her father you are not much impressed with his heroics. Of course Mr. Sinclair intended that you should concentrate your interest on the good designs of the people's champion, but that you don't is entirely his fault. The simple truth of the matter is that Mr. Sinclair is not at his ease in the drama. I doubt whether he ever made any study of the drama before plunging into the work of writing one. Surely he has made no study of the history or tradition of the drama, for he tells us that he has discovered that the drama is a good medium through which to preach to the people. He tells us this with the air of a man who had but yesterday stumbled on the Decalogue. And yet the stage has always been a pulpit, a forum for the discussion and dissemination of moral, economic and political ideas. Aristophanes in the "Birds" ridiculed the extravagant schemes of universal rule which Alcibiades had formed. In the "Clouds" he protested against the corrupt state of education and the speculations of the sophists. The academic groves that skirted the Grecian capital were fertile of such dramas. Coming down to more recent times we find Moliere writing thesis-plays, and Ibsen, Hauptman and Shaw doing little else. But none of these playwrights was laboring under the delusion that isolated bits of criticism, and stereotyped and electroplated sentiments make a play. Mr. Sinclair, it is but proper to state, told us of his discovery of the availability of the drama after the first act when he responded to a curtain call. I believe this was the first time in the history of the stage that the admires of a playwright deemed it advisable at so early a period to assure him of their approval. But perhaps if Mr. Sinclair had not been called out after the first act he would not have been called out at all. His timeliness as he emerged from the recesses of the stage sent my thoughts back to Goldsmith walking the streets of London in nervous trepidation on the first night of "She Stoops to Conquer."

CENTRAL TRUST COMPANY

of California, has removed to its new offices, corner Market, Sutter and Sansome Streets. A general banking business transacted.

CHAS. F. LEEGE, President B. G. TOGNAZZI, Manager

The Spectator

The Evans Tragedy

The cruelties which the press inflicts without the thumb-screw, or the iron boot, or the scorching of flesh, have been well illustrated in the case of Naval Constructor Holden A. Evans, who has been overwhelmed and prostrated by the most bitter misfortune that can afflict a strong, sensitive nature. Nothing could be more pathetic than the grief and misery of this man, separated from the wife that he loves, the mother of his children, with, so far as he knows, no prospect of the happiness that an affectionate parent most desires ever again imparting color and buoyancy to his existence. Mr. and Mrs. Evans are the protagonists of the kind of drama that appeals most powerfully to the tenderness of human emotions, but instead of stirring the sympathies of the press it excited only that incredible professional zeal for gratifying the vulgar love of sensation and scandal. And as usual, there has been a good deal of misrepresentation and cold-blooded obtrusion and inquiry. To apprehend what suffering all concerned have endured since the newspapers began their exploitation of the affairs of this unfortunate family, one must get behind the scenes. The Call's first story caused Evans to collapse. He was in a very weak condition at the time and was about to undergo a surgical operation. Mrs. Evans has pleaded to be let alone, but the reporters have pursued her. They wanted to know if she would marry young Osborn; also, whether she intended to return to the stage, and what she thought of her husband's proposition of reconciliation. In Vallejo the newspapers have been magnifying and inventing for the delectation of their union labor readers, for Evans in making a brilliant record as a naval constructor has incurred the fierce enmity of the unions. He has demanded of the mechanics the same standard of efficiency that is required in private yards, and he has installed much labor-saving machinery; all of which is prejudicial to the interests of the inefficient and the lovers of soft snaps. Members of Congress have been supplied with pamphlets abounding in the most malicious falsehoods respecting the character and methods of the faithful and honest naval constructor, and he has been harassed and villified and hounded not only to the destruction of his peace of mind but to the serious impairment of his health.

His Record

Constructor Evans is one of the most zealous and efficient of his country's servants. A man of great ambition, the kind of ambition that may insure the nation's safety in time of war—he has won his way entirely on his merits. He has never sought advancement by intrigue. By his ability alone he has won recognition. His early education was obtained by his own efforts and by his own efforts he gained admission to Annapolis. He first attracted public attention as the builder of the collier Prometheus, an achievement which vindicated the ability of the Navy Department to build vessels as cheaply as at contract prices and of superior quality. And it was right on the heels of this notable triumph that his domestic troubles plunged him into grief and misery. The newspapers have attempted to outline the psychology of this drama, but of course this is a task beyond the capacity of anyone who has not had the opportunity of intimate observation. Selfishness, want of forbearance, a tendency to brood over imaginary wrongs—these defects of temperament doubtless produced the fatal friction, but that the grievance of either is as deep-seated as the reporters would have us believe is, I am assured by an intimate friend of all concerned, far from the truth.

Husband and Wife

The newspapers have said that Mrs. Evans was "a music hall singer," the inference being inevitable that she possessed the kind of talent peculiar to the airy, fairy objects of the admiration of green-room Johnnies. The fact is that she is a woman of considerable ability as a vocal artist; and that during the three years of her stage career she appeared in the leading roles of light operas. She left the stage to marry Evans. She is refined and cultured and of very pleasing address, fond of gayety and inclined to the frivolties of life, but no more so than the average woman of sound mind and body. Until the newspapers took her in hand, nobody had ever questioned her principles of conduct. What her grievance was, what the source of the melancholy that brought tears to her eyes, how serious or how light her troubles, I do not know. Nobody, not even her husband, knows. All that is known is that Evans, bound to the wheel of labor, with no inclination to social diversions, suffering from headaches so acute that his finger nails drew blood in the palms of his clenched hands, was, perhaps, not the most agreeable of companions. Perhaps his wife, whom he indulged in her passion for social pleasures, never realized the extent of his suffering; perhaps—but why string out conjectures? Suffice it that discord entered the home, and that one fatal morning Mrs. Evans foolishly confided in her visitor, young Lieutenant Osborn, and that he kissed her. Evans witnessed the caress, and on the spot resolved to divorce his wife. Later it occurred to him that the wife in whom he had confidence, despite what he had witnessed, had suffered by his unavoidable neglect. At the same time he thought of his children, and he had the magnanimity and the courage to plead for a reconciliation. Indignant that his judgment of her conduct in all the circumstances was, as she conceived, harsh and unjust, Mrs. Evans, with the stubbornness that is woman's, was deaf to her husband's amiable overtures.

The Sympathetic Osborn

Now as to young Osborn, who has been described as a quarter deck dandy and a social butterfly. He in no way fits the description. He is an energetic, popular young officer who graduated fourth in his class at Annapolis and is far advanced in numbers for his age. He was made chief engineer of the Wyoming, or Cheyenne, as her name is now, and put in charge of the first oil-burning boilers in an American ship of war for the purpose of making a careful estimate of the amount of work this fuel is capable of, and the wear and tear on the boilers. He was given the sobriquet of "boy" because of his never-

REMOVAL NOTICE

OUR OFFICE after December 21, 1908, will be at 311 to 317 [illegible] Building, corner of Post and Market streets.

OUR WAREHOUSE will remain at the Southwest corner of Eddy and Hyde Streets, until April 18, 1909, on that date we shall remove to our old location, 147-151 Minna Street and 144-148 Natoma Street.

GLADDING, McBEAN & CO.

Seattle's Newest and Most Modern Hotel

"Twelve Stories of Solid Comfort"

Building, concrete, steel and marble.

Located, most fashionable shopping district.

210 rooms, 135 baths.

Library and bound magazines in reading rooms for guests.

Most refined hostelry in Seattle.

Absolutely fireproof.

English Grill.

Rates, $1.00 up

HOTEL SAVOY SEATTLE

failing high spirits. He is the only son of a prosperous banker in one of the thriving towns of Oregon. His friends say that he is filled with grief over the untoward occurrence; that he is sensible of his folly, and that in offering to marry Mrs. Evans, he was actuated by, what he conceived to be the imperative obligation of honor. Another construction of the matter is so much more agreeable to the lovers of romance and scandal, that of course Osborn will ever be regarded as the Don Juan of the navy, and Mrs. Evans must forever suffer the penalty of her imprudence.

Mrs. Blingum: Have you thanked God for all his blessings?
Little Tommy: "Yes, mamma, but I wish you had gotten me in duty free too."

President Jordan and the Demon

It is my opinion that President Jordan is committing a very grave error in attempting to procure a prohibitory liquor law for Palo Alto from the State Legislature. His reason for this law is avowedly to minimize the power of the Demon Rum at Stanford University. But why should the Legislature be called upon to exorcise the fiend? What's the matter with Proctor Clarke or the "moral atmosphere" of Stanford? Is it as bad as that? Is it impossible to keep the students of Stanford sober enough to absorb an education without making their drunkenness a penal offense? And if these young men are beyond the control of the university faculty why should the people of Palo Alto be punished for the bibulous sins of the student body? If the Demon is supreme at Stanford the university may as well be abolished. There is no hope for it. Stanford University is, after all, a private school, sustained financially in a large degree by the sale of brandy from the Stanford Vina ranch. Here are two reasons why the State should not interfere to save Stanford from the Rum Demon. As a private institution it has no right to inconvenience its neighbors for the promotion of its own comfort, dignity and prestige. As a dealer in the worst product of the Demon's still it stands in the presence of the State and its Legislature a brazen hypocrite when it asks protection for its students against its own vice. If President Jordan were honest in his effort to save the students from the demon he would enlarge his bill to a measure prohibiting the manufacture of brandy in California, thereby cutting off a large part of the income of the university. This Legislature is not over willing to assist in the self-interested schemes of reformers, and it will not hesitate to turn them down on the slightest opportunity. A legislature is not organized for the purpose of making men better by removing temptation; it is in session to enact or amend laws that shall punish wrong-doers and those who yield to the temptations that are unlawful. President Jordan is a fairly wise man and it is somewhat strange that he does not, apparently, comprehend these self-evident truths.

Only a Nine-Line Item

I observe that the Chronicle gave nine lines to the Colonial Ball and that the Examiner devoted an entire page to the affair, featuring it in the most elaborate style of the bavarde's art and announcing in conspicuous headlines that it was a "three-hundred" function, thereby implying that it was superlatively exclusive. I wonder why the Chronicle dismissed such an important "event" in a mere announcement that it had been "pulled off?" The rank outsider is inclined to the belief that nine lines of "mention" is about the magnitude of "real society's" opinion of the importance of the dance as a "social function." The Examiner's display is easily explained. The Examiner at this time is making extraordinary effort to beat its contemporaries all along the news firing line. It is "playing up" news in the most unexpected quarters; and this display is always a reflection on the news judgment of the Call's editorial staff. The people notice these things, and however broadly the ecumenical council of its contemporaries may sneer at the triviality of the Examiner's display, the mob invariably accepts the Examiner's dicta as to what is big news and what is not. It will be a long time, if ever, before the Call, for example, will attain such popular prestige. At present the Call is sustained and applauded by the league of justice, the good government league, and the Lincoln-Roosevelt league, because these self-interested citizens do not like the Examiner's policy towards the Graft Prosecution and the "reform movements" now rampant throughout the State. But in the course of time the excitement will simmer down to the mild proportions of Professor Boke and Chester H. Rowell and the Examiner will again have the right of way.

Madame Bavarde's Professional Opinion

I hear through the "social gossip" avenues of the daily newspapers that the "society reporters," all of whom are women, were commanded to perform their reportorial duties in connection with this Colonial affair attired in sober livery. It was given out by Mrs. C. O. Alexander, one of the executive patronesses of the ball, that all reporters should come to the dance dressed in black and that they should wear black hats. The reporters, of course, are unanimous in resentment of Mrs. Alexander's sumptuary regulation. Only Madame Bavarde herself upholds the Alexandrian edict. "If Mrs. Alexander had ordered the reporters to wear the costume of trained nurses she would have been well within her privilege as an executive patroness," says this eminent authority on social gossip and things functional. "Suppose the reporters were permitted to attend the ball in their best clothes, how would it be possible to distinguish the real thing from the merely professional? A reporter at a society affair stands in the same relation to those present as the person who takes care of the wraps and cloaks; a society reporter is tolerated at functions of this character because she is the medium through which the doings of the better classes is transmitted to the world. These reporters are necessary, it is true—I may even say that they are indispensable, but they are no more necessary than the caterer, the private detectives or the fiddlers. When I was younger I used to chafe against the menial necessity of my avocation; but unlike the other society reporters, I could always console myself with the knowl-

J.M. Jacobi & Co.
S.W. COR. MONTGOMERY & SUTTER STS
Perfect Clothes for Men
Growing business demands more room
January 20th we annex 45-47 Montgomery

Grand Prix and Highest Awards at all World Expositions
DEWAR'S
SCOTCH WHISKY
Makes the Best High Ball on Earth
SHERWOOD & SHERWOOD, Importers

edge that I belonged by right of climbing to the set whose doings I reported for the Bulletin. I was a society woman by adoption, and that is the next thing to being to the manner born. I perfectly agree with Mrs. Alexander, that all reporters should report society affairs in sober garb, so that everybody may know them and treat them accordingly. For myself, of course, it is different, as I have said, I am part of the social swim and when I report these doings I can wear my best clothes. Mrs. Alexander would not think of telling me to wear anything else. Mrs. Alexander and myself are on the most intimate terms."

"The hotel is so crowded, sir, that the best we can do is to put you in the same room with the proprietor."
"That will be all right; just put my valuables in the safe."

Chico Hurls a Mighty Sentence

Edward F. Cahill, editorial writer on the Call of this city, has been severely rebuked by Mrs. June C. Miller of Chico. The rebuke was merited by reason of Mr. Cahill's sarcastic remarks critical of the bad English of the Chico Normal School women's club uttered by them in a bunch of resolutions condemnatory of Dr. Frederick Burk's hostile attitude towards grammar in the abstract and Chico Normal School grammar in the concrete. Mrs. Miller swats Editor Cahill with a ragged chunk of Chico English, one section of which contains a sentence of ashlar proportions. This sentence is a wonderful combination of 253 words, two semicolons and nineteen commas. It is really nine sentences packed into one—as a woman packs a trunk for a long voyage. Most of the sentence is parenthetical, and when you have read to the end you have to go back and read the beginning to recall what it is all about. I have read the sentence repeatedly and analyzed it once, and I am forced to the confession that I have not yet caught the faintest glimmer of its import. Its original intention, if it had any, seems to be buried out of sight by the afterthought. Dr. Johnson never wrote a longer sentence, Hooker, Milton, Gibbon, or De Quincey never stretched their ideas to such interminable length. Only in the German may we hope to find anything like it for longsomeness. Only in the works of Immanuel Kant may we hope to find anything as extensive. It has been said of Kant that he viewed the sentence "as a rude mould or elastic form admitting of expansion to any possible extent, it is laid down as a rude outline, and then, by superstruction and epi-superstruction, it is gradually reared to a giddy altitude which no eye can follow." I hope that the members of the senior class of the Chico Normal School will not be required to parse this sentence as a condition precedent to graduation. But I do not pity Editor Cahill. He began it. He alone is responsible for what has happened to him. He would go up embattled against the Chico schoolmarm; and this is what he gets. May it teach him a lesson. And by the way, what has become of Dr. Burk? Where has that rash proponent of the theory that English is a grammarless tongue, betaken himself? Come on out into the open, doctor, and help us to fight some of your battles.

Mr. Phelan Turns a Somersault

Mayor Taylor's recent appointments do not seem to please anybody except Mayor Taylor. Especially obnoxious are his selections to the Bulletin and the Graft Prosecution. This is exceeding strange, after J. D. Phelan's fulsome panegyric of the double-salaried municipal executive in his famous libel on San Francisco published recently in Collier's Weekly. In that article Mr. Phelan said, in effect, that Mayor Taylor is the best Mayor San Francisco has ever had. Now the Bulletin intimates that he is the worst. The Bulletin is popularly supposed to be subsidized by Mr. Phelan. It is generally believed that he controls its editorial opinion. Everybody thinks that he has "renewed his lease." Then why this sudden change of tone by the town scold? What has Mayor Taylor done that he should be thus assaulted by Mr. Phelan's mouthpiece? What has he left undone that he should be thus berated by an organ whose loudest boast is that although it may be boughten, it stays bought? There is but one explanation. Mayor Taylor has not appointed the people that he was commanded to appoint. He has disobeyed orders. Nobody knows positively that his appointments are bad; that is only suspected. But if those appointments had been in accordance with Mr. Phelan's wishes or the wishes of the Graft Prosecution with which Mr. Phelan is connected in an advisory capacity, the Bulletin would not have criticised them. Mayor Taylor is sailing in dangerous waters. He must not lose sight of the fact that he is drawing two salaries and that one of them can be lopped from his income by a single stroke of the sword of justice wielded by Mr. Phelan or the Graft Prosecution. Moreover, it will be impossible for him to succeed himself as Mayor of San Francisco unless he makes his peace with those who are now opposed to him. And Mr. Phelan will not write any more panegyrics about him to Collier's Weekly.

Enraged Club Women

The Mayor's appointment of Mrs. Kincaid to be a school director is also denounced, but by others than the Phelan junta. The California Club is up in all its arms to protest against Mrs. Kincaid. It was the California Club that first suggested to Mayor Taylor the advisability of appointing a woman on the board, and by that suggestion the women of the California Club assumed a sort of proprietary interest in the office. But they reckoned without Mrs. Taylor. Mrs. Kincaid is an intimate friend of Mrs. Taylor, and it was decided behind the domestic curtains that Mrs. Kincaid should have the place. Whereat the women of the California Club are not only loud in their wail, but they are madder than so many wet hens. The tempestuousness of their petticoats may be heard from Hunter's Point to Land's End. Yet Mrs. Kincaid may make a very good School Director. And after all that is the only desideratum. The citizens of San Francisco don't care who sits on their Board of Education if he or she is competent to discharge the duties of the office. We may laugh at Mayor Taylor for submitting to

RHEUMATISM
AND ALL PAIN INSTANTLY RELIEVED BY
BAUME BETULAE
THE ORIGINAL APPLICATION BY ABSORPTION
SOLD BY DRUGGISTS FOR 50 CENTS A TUBE
AND AT OWL DRUG COMPANY STORES.

SMITH BROS.

From 10 to 50 per cent off on Books
From 10 to 50 per cent off on Office Supplies
From 25 to 50 per cent off on Framed Pictures
Wood for Art Burning, Half Price

DURING CLEARANCE SALE

10 per cent off on Leather Goods
10 per cent off on Bibles
10 per cent off on Picture Frames
Calendars for Half Price

STATIONERS
ART DEALERS

OAKLAND
462-464 THIRTEENTH ST. Between Broadway and Washington

BOOK SELLERS
PICTURES

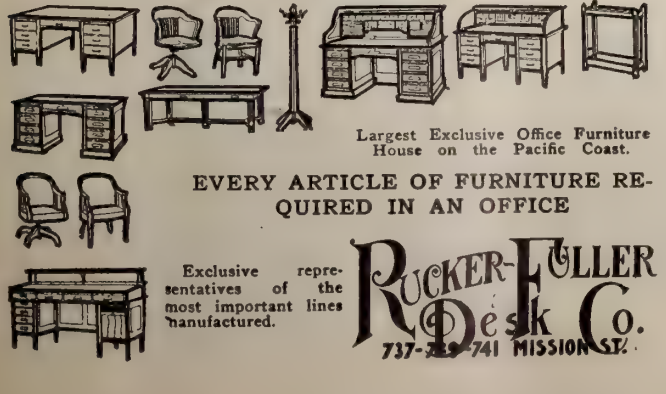
the tyranny of domestic intrigue; but otherwise we are content to receive what the good Mayor is pleased to send us, provided it is as good as the Mayor. And Mayor Taylor can better afford to laugh at the raging Fabiolas and Hypatias of the California Club than he can at the malevolent machinations of the Phelan clique.

Entering the asylum for inebriates, he asked:
"Do you treat drunkards here?"
"Yes, sir."
"Well, I'm one. Where's yer bar?"

A Shrewd Teacher

The principal of a school in one of our fashionable districts has proved herself to be not a captain of industry, but a major general of financial enterprise. She owned a piece of land in a somewhat unproductive section, but, by dint of hard work and intensive cultivation she managed to force it to yield a crop of fairly good prunes. Her genius was displayed when it came to turning the product into coin, for she hit upon a novel plan which left no uncertainties and no profit for railroad nor middleman. She simply telephoned to the parents of her pupils and asked each to purchase a box. There are other occasions than the receipt of a royal invitation, when a mere request politely worded has all the force of an imperative command. The anxious mothers reasoned that their children's welfare might be best secured by falling into line and so they bought and paid liberally, and the business-like pedagogue is chuckling over a nice, fat bank account.

Premature Obituaries



James Oliver Curwood is not the first literary man to die before his time. Some time during the fall he had occasion to go far into the Hudson Bay Company's territory, and on his return he stopped, when nearly back to civilization, to see a trapper friend who produced a paper nearly a fortnight old, in which there was published an obituary notice of the usual laudatory character. Mr. Curwood walked nearly thirty miles to the nearest railroad station and took a train for Winnipeg to prove that he was still in the land of the living and straighten out the personal and business complications which were the result of what Mark Twain, under similar circumstances, pronounced a highly exaggerated report. Joaquin Miller and Charles Warren Stoddard have both read their own obituaries. Some years ago, when Stoddard was so ill that the last sacraments of the chruch were administered, the Overland published a tribute to his memory, which, coming into the hands of the resurrected writer, he pronounced as "worth dying for." Mr. Curwood's annihilation, as far as it could be traced to any source, was the outcome of a garbled account of a small ruction between two of his Indian guides, in which one threw a stone which struck the other.

San Francisco "The City"

At Melrose station on the local Alameda county line of the Southern Pacific Railroad the other morning I asked the gentlemanly ticket seller for a ticket to San Francisco. The gentleman behind the window hesitated: "Where?" he asked. "San Francisco," I repeated. "Oh," said the gentleman; and he tossed me a piece of printed cardboard. It was but a trivial incident, yet it impressed itself upon my observation by reason of the circumstance that a man immediately following me at the window threw down a dime and said, "City," whereupon the gentleman with the tickets without question or hesitation flung out a transportation guarantee conveying the purchaser to San Francisco. Now why did the ticket seller hesitate when I asked him for a ticket to carry me to San Francisco; why did he ask me "Where?" I think I know. On the other side of the bay there is a very general opinion that there is but one city—San Francisco. That is why they call it "the city." Oakland, Alameda, Berkeley, Chicago and New York are only cities—each of them is "a city." Therefore, when you buy a ticket for "the city" the ticket seller takes it for granted that you wish to go to San Francisco, and that is why he does not ask you "Which city." This explanation, however, does not convey a very high compliment to Oakland and the other cities of Alameda county; and it is not particularly complimentary to San Francisco whose proper and distinctive appellation is thus reduced to a very common noun. Moreover, the custom of calling San Francisco "the city" endangers the perpetuity of the name. There is danger that San Francisco as the name of the metropolis of the Pacific Coast may be ultimately forgotten, or only vaguely remembered in the distorted sobriquet of "'Frisco."

He is a High-Brow

From a New York newspaper I learn that Bishop Dennis J. O'Connell who has been assigned to duty in this city is a man of exceptional culture and occupies a high position in the intellectual coterie of Washington, D. C. Few prelates of the Catholic church, it is said, have been so far-reaching in influence as Bishop O'Connell. With John W. Foster, Harrison's Secretary of State, he aided in the organization of the Archaeological Society and in the Society of American Arts and Sciences and in a half-dozen others of the same calibre. He is a member of the Cosmos Club and may be counted one of the few perfectly sane members. The others are faddists to the

TAFT & PENNOYER

Our Thirty-Second Annual

10% Discount Sale

Is Now in Full Swing

10% in name only---as the discounts range from 10% to 50%

This is the season of the year with us that the purchasing power of your DOLLAR is stretched to its utmost buying capacity. All our departments offer a TEN PER CENT REDUCTION on our regular prices; some of them 15 per cent; some 25 per cent; and in some cases where we have lines that we are desirious of closing out the reduction reaches 50 PER CENT. This statement cannot help but convince you that this month of JANUARY, 1909, will be an ideal month in which to shop and to buy generously.

CLAY STREET, 14th to 15th
OAKLAND

degree of mental toppling over. Could the Washington friends of Bishop O'Connell have the say he would receive a higher reward than a post on the Pacific Coast in a subordinate position.

Expectant Heir (before the will is read)—Grandfather's death was a sad and untimely one. To think that but a short time ago that noble old man trod the earth in perfect health; today his form is forever hushed in the long of eternity! Ah, me!

Expectant Heir (after the will is read)—That will can be broken on the ground of insanity. The old fossil was crazy for twenty years.

The Prize Platitude

And yet again the walking prize bane that, at an incredible wage, does the incredibly obvious for the blissfully ignorant readers of the Hearst "syndicate," in his Sabbathic desire to point his moral with a picture and adorn his tale with the talent of the dead, delivers himself ex cathedra, and is responsible for the following "evil speak" against the immortal Villon: "He might have done much for his fellows. The most he did was to relieve them of their purses when they were carousing in the inns that he frequented." "Why, that speech," you cry, "is nothing if not good!" Of course not. But who, for pity's sake, is it that in his own yellow way relieves us of our purses to the tune of a President's pay yearly, yet grants us no earthly relief from his platitudes? And was it, forsooth, for such "most" of Villon's that Stevenson made him the subject of an essay and the hero of a short story? that Justin McCarthy wrote a play around him? that Swinburne would have him writ foremost of all the celestial choir? that Lang must needs make him a sonnet? that Rossetti deemed it a labor of love to give us in equivalent English a question asked in quaint old French anent the snows? that—but why fill a needless tome. Write me Villon-wise a ballad of dead donkeys, and relieve me of my purse in your own way, and welcome; not, however, if I know it, of my five cents, for robbing the dead of fair name. Fair? No, fairest! That of the joy-maker. The "most" Villon did for his fellows was to make them things of beauty. That surely sounds moral enough to suit even the Sunday Examiner, does it not? What more can mortal do? To send delight winging down the centuries, in circles ever widening with the years, was that given to the moral giants of those sad-glad days of Villon's? Where now are the walking busi-banes that then were wont to spit out at the mere mention of Francois his name—they and their words? Mais ou sont les neiges d' antan? Which of you now so much holier than was he dares at this late date to grudge my mad-bad brother the two "cold comforts" he sneak-thieved from the silk "purse" of that poor frozen fille-de-joie? Had not Time long since assailed his mire-stained feet, and I'd, myself, do it with my tears, and may be inartistically bid you go do likewise. Thus were tears better shed, believe me, than in bewailing the "much" he might have done for his fellow men, but left undone, to relieve them in their cups of pursefuls of temptation.

The Moralist

[illegible]

Milo

Do you know what Quality means in a Turkish Cigarette? If not get a box of "MILO." Then, any other cigarette, and try same, side by side. You'll note the delicate, aromatic mildness of the "MILO." Mildness (yet with the richness in flavor) is what costs in Turkish Tobacco, and its just this that makes the Perfect Cigarette. You'll find it in No Other.

This perfection is obtained only by owning our own plantation in Turkey—the careful watchfulness from the seeding to the finished article.

Write to the Surbrug Company for samples and prices

THE SURBRUG COMPANY, New York City

A Pirate of the Literary Main

Robert J. Collier prints in his "national weekly" a full page of panegyric on his father, Peter Collier, who not only founded Collier's Weekly but, as estimated by his pride-bloated son, during the thirty years from 1879 to 1909, manufactured and sold some fifty-two million books deriving from his publications a revenue amounting to $80,000,000. The proud son of Peter Collier names some of the books "manufactured and sold" by his father. These were the works of Dickens, Cooper, Scott, Shakespeare, Thackeray, John Richard Green, Gibbon, John Lothrop Motley, William H. Prescott, Guizot and Menzel. That's enough of Robert on behalf of Peter; now let me say something. Peter Collier was indeed a "manufacturer" of books; and he was also a book pirate. He never paid a dollar of royalty to the owners of the copyright of any of the books he "manufactured." In other words he furnished the reading public of America with the stolen goods of literature. I will deal more fairly with old Collier than his son has dealt with the people of San Francisco in the matter of his reports of conditions prevailing in this city during the ascendancy of the graft prosecution—I will explain on his behalf that some of the stolen goods was foreign and therefore not subject to the copyright laws of this country; and all of the books by American authors had outlived their copyright limitation. No grass grew under Peter Collier's feet in the chase after a dead copyright; and he managed to get the better of his fellow pirates in his competition for the book trade in foreign thefts, by issuing cheap editions. Robert Collier, of course, attempts to convert this phase of his father's piracy into a conspicuous virtue by declaring that "they were books not for the few, but for the many"; as if he said that a pawnbroker is a public benefactor because he sells burglars' swag for less than the price charged by the dealer from whom it was stolen. How strange that a son should be so proud of such a father on such equivocal premises.

A Report Full of Meat

The Thirteenth Biennial Report of Commissioner J. D. McKenzie of the Bureau of Labor Statistics has just been issued, and is replete with information on every subject which has come under the supervision of that body. A summary of the work performed during the period covered by the report includes the gathering of statistical data relative to stores and factories, covering all the more important manufacturing, commercial and industrial activities of the various centers of population in the State; and agriculture in all its branches and divisions, including that of horticulture, viticulture, seed-farming and stock-raising, embracing the large valleys and districts devoted to these lines; transportation on water, and a thorough investigation of the shipping of the port of San Francisco; land systems of transportation, including steam and electric railways; labor organizations, employment agencies, child labor, orientals, including Chinese and Japanese. The investigations show the number employed, sex, wages, hours of labor, sanitary condition of work rooms and other detailed information. The work of the bureau is two fold, including the

NORTH GERMAN LLOYD

FAST EXPRESS SERVICE

PLYMOUTH—CHERBOURG—BREMEN, 10 A. M.

Kaiser Wm. II.....February 2 Kaiser Wm. II.....March 2
Cecilie ..... February 16 Cecilie ..... March 23

TWIN SCREW PASSENGER SERVICE

BREMEN DIRECT 10 A. M.

Roonderdam ..... January 14 Chemnitz ..... January 28
Prinz Eitel Wm. ..... January 19 Seydlitz ..... February 4

Calls at Plymouth and Cherbourg

MEDITERRANEAN SERVICE

GIBRALTAR—NAPLES—GENOA, AT 11 A. M.

K. Luise ..... January 16 *K. Kaiserin ..... February 11
K. Silvia ..... January 30 K. Luise ..... February 27

*Calls at Madeira, Gibraltar, Algier, Genoa (there proceeding on Orient Cruise). Good accommodations available to Genoa.

North German Lloyd Travelers' Checks

OELRICHS & CO., 5 Broadway, New York

ROBERT CAPELLE, G. A. P. C. 250 POWELL ST.

Opposite St. Francis Hotel, San Francisco. Telephone Kearny 6794 enforcement of laws as well as the inquiry into conditions. Extensive correspondence with city and county officials and with employers, as well as the personal observation of investigating agents, have formed the basis of the report and the numerous tabulated statements, make all this information available at a glance. The report is anything but a compilation of dry statistics and figures. The sections devoted to Child Labor, Social Statistics and Orientals are of special interest to the sociologist. In handling complaints of violation of laws, a policy of warning has governed the Bureau, prosecution being resorted to only in instances where a statutary effect could be produced. The policy of postponement

HOTEL METROPOLE, CATALINA
This hotel opened with the beginning of the winter season on January 9th.

and the slow working of the lower criminal courts making cost of other procedure prohibitory. The Bureau has been badily hampered by lack of funds, and the work accomplished out of the sum available after the necessary office expenses were met is extraordinary. It is interesting to observe that Mr. McKenzie has attended strictly to the enforcement of the child labor law.

If no Hetch-Hetchy, What?

There is a rumor afloat that the men and newspapers behind the Hetch-Hetchy project are only apparently behind it; that in reality they have a card up their sleeve which they intend to play at the psychological moment in favor of an enterprise far more important to themselves than to the public. This rumor must have been started by the Spring Valley Company or the personal enemies of Mr. Phelan who seem to regard him as a wizard of intrigue, a Machiavel of political deception. It seems absurd to attribute to him, as vagrant rumor doth, a simulated zeal for Hetch-Hetchy. Nevertheless it is soberly argued that Mr. Phelan must have known from the beginning that there were insurmountable obstacles in the way of the scheme to bring water to this city from Hetch-Hetchy. Aside from the difficulties to be encountered at Washington there were the interests of farmers to be considered and these are bound to lead to litigation which would indefinitely delay the consummation of the project. But how can it profit Mr. Phelan to boost a futile project? The absurd answer is, To get the people in the proper frame of mind, to start the machinery for the issuance of bonds, etc. In this connection it is suggested as significant that a new water scheme was sprung the other night in Berkeley, the headquarters of the sanhedrim which inspires the conduct of our municipal government. Judge J. A. Waymire bobbed up in Berkeley with a Truckee river water scheme which at present he is eager to sell to Alameda county, but which is available for San Francisco. And Judge Waymire's scheme was exploited in the Bulletin, the most vociferous of all the journalistic advocates of Hetch-Hetchy. There may be a lot of significance in all this but I must continue to pin my faith in the civic patriotism of Mr. Phelan. No foundling rumor can alienate my confidence in that unselfish philanthropist who goes about noiselessly in the shadows doing good.

"Will you be true to me while I am gone?"
"Of course—but don't be long gone, will you dear?"

A Legislative Mother-in-Law

Senator McCartney of Los Angeles has subjected himself to ridicule on behalf of his mother-in-law. There is no self-sacrifice in Senator McCartney's action—perish that thought! Neither was it because Senator McCartney loved his mother-in-law more than men usually love the mothers of their wives that he had her appointed one of the porters of the Senate; perish that thought also; it was because he wanted to save a porter's per diem for a very valuable constituent whose other occupation detained him in Los Angeles—not because he desired to pocket that $3 a day himself, because that would have been raw, petty graft, and Senator McCartney is so far above that sort of thing that it makes him dizzy to look down on the ordinary boodlers of the Legislature. Therefore perish all these unworthy thoughts, these miserable suspicions, these insidious, envious, jealous, scandalous impugnments

EL TOVAR HOTEL
On the rim of the Grand Canyon of Arizona reached by the Santa Fe via Williams.

of Senator McCartney's motives! According to his own explanation it was not his intention that his mother-in-law should guard the portals of the Senate or perform the menial duties usually devolving on black citizens and chocolate-hued constituents of grateful legislators. He merely wished to save that portion of his patronage allotment for a voter to whom he was under obligations. Perhaps Senator McCartney's mother-in-law didn't know that she was being utilized in this manner. Still, everybody is laughing at Senator McCartney of Los Angeles. From the whispering sycamores of Siskiyou to the "ribbed sea-sand" of San Diego's sun-kissed shore the people are laughing. Senator McCartney has contributed to the gayety of the commonwealth. Nothing that he shall do for the good of the State henceforth during this session will escape the suspicion that perhaps his mother-in-law is behind it. Of other legislation by other legislators we shall say, "Look for the woman," but whenever Senator McCartney offers a bill for the reform of things that require reform we shall say, "Look for Senator McCartney's mother-in-law."

The Financial Outlook

By R. E. Mulcahy

The past week has been one of irregularity in Wall Street securities. The investment buying that is generally in evidence in January was conspicuous this year by its absence; whatever buying for investment there was, spent its force in December. The market is showing signs of being top heavy, except in spots. The strong features have been Colorado Southern and Wisconsin Central, the former having passed into the hands of the Burlington Road. All kinds of rumors are afloat regarding Wisconsin Central, the most plausible one being the purchase of this road by the Canadian Pacific. Another rumon was to the effect that the United States Steel Company would in the end become its owner. The Harriman Group were subject to sharp fluctuations on account of the illness of Mr. Harriman, which turned out to be nothing serious. Union Pacific has shown considerable heaviness, and there appears to be plenty stock for sale on all fair advances. The fact that Harriman was not prominently considered at the annual meeting of the New York Central caused considerable selling of the Harriman issues. There was a decided decline in New York Central when it was learned that Harriman's candidate for the Presidency was not considered. The election of Mr. Brown is considered a good one. He was for many years vice-president of the C. B. & Q. Ry. before assuming the position of Senior Vice-President of the New York Central. Under Mr. Brown's management the property will show much improvement and higher prices for these securities are expected. There has been a fair amount of buying of Atchison common lately on the belief that the earnings hereafter will justify a higher rate of dividend. Baltimore and Ohio is tipped for a good advance as soon as market conditions show some improvement. The Industrial list while fairly active show no marked changes one way or the other, United States Steel Common being the exception. It is very sensitive to tariff legislation rumors. It is claimed by those well informed that Morgan and his following have been good buyers of the common stock under 52. It seems somewhat out of line to expect Congress to do anything radical at this time in the way of tariff reduction on steel products. It is a fair guess to say that steel securities are selling about low enough whether the tariff is reduced or not. The one chief feature hanging over the market at this writing is the possibility of Erie being placed in the hands of a receiver. Its finances are in a very bad way, yet something will happen to avoid the necessity of a receiver, there is too much at stake to allow a property like Erie to drop into such a condition.

The general market at this writing offers no special features other than of a scalping character, should a quick decline come it would afford a good opportunity to pick up some bargains.

MOTHERS BE CAUTIOUS

In selecting a food for the baby don't experiment. Baby can't stand much experimenting. Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk is acted upon by the infant stomach substantially the same as mother's milk. For 50 years it has made glad mothers and started thousands of babies on life's journey with health and happiness.

LIQUEUR

PÈRES CHARTREUX

GREEN AND YELLOW

GREEN AND YELLOW

The original and genuine Chartreuse has always been and still is made by the Carthusian Monks (Pères Chartreux), who, since their expulsion from France, have been located at Tarragona, Spain; and, although the old labels and insignia originated by the Monks have been adjudged by the Federal Courts of this country to be still the exclusive property of the Monks, their world-renowned product is nowadays known as "Liqueur Pères Chartreux."

At first-class Wine Merchants, Grocers, Hotels, Cafes,
Batjer & Co., 45 Broadway, New York, N. Y.,
Sole Agents for United States.

Telephone DOUGLAS 2487

R. E. MULCAHY, Manager

E. F. HUTTON & CO.

THE PIONEER HOUSE

BANKERS AND BROKERS

Members
New York Stock Exchange
New York Cotton Exchange
New York Coffee Exchange
Chicago Board of Trade

490 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Branch, ST. FRANCIS HOTEL

Two Private Wires to Chicago and New York

Washington, D. C., 1301 F Street
Los Angeles, 112 W. Third Street
New York, 31-33-35 New Street

Social Prattle

By TANTALUS

The Pity of It

Mrs. Henry T. Scott, it is reported, has left San Francisco with her feelings deeply lacerated. It is the public at large and the daily papers in particular, which have agitated the lady's emotions. Though it is quite the thing for people in society to bewail the publicity given to their doings and appearances, nobody takes the reiterated protests too seriously. Mrs. Scott's attitude would seem to prove the wisdom of this course, for it is precisely that she has been deprived of her full share of journalistic incense which has caused her dissatisfaction. Mrs. Joseph B. Crockett left for Europe in her party and as her guest, and most of the dinners and other entertainment given were in honor of both ladies, but one of the largest of these affairs was designed solely in order to pay homage to Mrs. Scott. By some cruel perversity of fate, the social chroniclers not only attributed all the magnificence of the occasion to Mrs. Crockett, but even failed to mention Mrs. Scott as amongst those present. "Hence these tears," for of what avail is it to be an exclusive of the exclusives if honors are to be withheld in this style?

Photo, Cramer. MRS. OSCAR MANSFELDT

The talented pianist who contributes to the artistic success of the Lyric "Pop" Concerts.

So Shocking!

Because of the jolly, unconventionality of the Cap and Bell Club entertainment, there is another uproar in "Bohemia." Some of the participants in the frolic were habited in tights, and some in the vulgar "pants" that men wear, and egg nog much stronger than circus lemonade was the beverage that contributed elasticity and joy to the hilarious occasion. Several of the members who disported themselves in bifurcated garmenture added age to their other iniquity, some of them having passed the meridian of life, a circumstance that rendered their transgression of dignity and decorum positively shocking to the prudes and puritans who fled the scene. And now, if threats are to be relied on, resignations will soon flood the secretary's desk, and the Cap and Bells ladies will soon be able to generate a bohemian atmosphere without fear of protest.

We Are So Squeamish!

A young matron at the Colonial ball last week deemed it expedient during the barn dance to hold up her dress as she did not care to have it sweep the floor after the style of the extravagant Mrs. Martin. Inadvertently she disclosed an expanse of dainty pink hosiery, and as a consequence a word of caution was whispered in her ear. How extremely prudish and how exceedingly decorous we are becoming! Barring this absurd display of authority the dance was a most enjoyable affair.

Photo, Arnold. MRS. J. A. MURRAY

The beautiful wife of the Monterey millionaire whose fortune recently excited the cupidity of a frenzied financier.

MISS ELSIE DE WOLFE
REPRESENTED BY
MRS. EDGAR DE WOLFE
INTERIOR DECORATION AND OBJETS D' ART
TEMPORARY OFFICE, GRANADA HOTEL TELEPHONE FRANKLIN 422

Mrs. Warfield
PIANO SCHOOL FOR CHILDREN AND BEGINNERS
Telephone Piedmont 3414 6409 Regent Street, Berkeley
Tuesday and Friday, Ebell Club, Oaklnd

There was a swing to it that many of our functions lack. The frozen formalities as a rule never thaw out sufficiently early in the evening for a thoroughly enjoyable time from the debutante point of view. But since Friday night the debutantes have declared themselves satisfied. The affair was distinctly for the enjoyment of the younger set, the majority of the married people contenting themselves with a view of the gay scene from the loges. It was a fact commented upon, however, that hardly one of the matrons missed a barn dance. The St. Francis ball room has a floor that unlocks and under sufficient pressure sways like a ship. This lends itself admirably to the barn dance, which while it lacks grace, is certainly always one of the jolliest dances of the evening. It is woefully incompatible, however, with the present style of costume, and hence the necessity of hoisting skirts. Mrs. Alexander, who was the original organizer of these dances, is to be congratulated on the skill with which she has carried out her plans so far. The decorations were entirely her own idea, planned and executed under her supervision. The entire effect was bautiful, that of a miniature forest. The genial Ned was there too in full girth and he beamed approval on his friendly rival notwithstanding the fact that his wine was once more barried in favor of Moet et Chandon, Imperial Crown Brut.

Her Niece Was Santa

Miss Jennie Flood was recently the hostess at an elaborate luncheon at which most of the guests were young married ladies, only two young girls being present. Miss Flood's home on Broadway was a Christmas gift from her brother. She admired the house, and as Mr. Flood was about to remove to San Mateo, on Christmas morning he delegated to his little girl the part of Santa Claus. She was directed to take an envelop to the dining room and place it beside her aunt's plate. When opened it was found to contain a deed to the house.

Fortune Kind to Shingle

When Princess Kowanonakoa passed through here last week on her way from Honolulu to the East she was accompanied by her sister, Beatrice. Announcement is shortly to be made confirmatory of the rumor of the engagement of her other sister, Muriel Campbell, to Robert W. Shingle of Honolulu. Miss Campbell, who is just of age, is a statuesque blonde with no trace of Hawaiian blood about her save the native grace. Mr. Shingle is a young man of exceptional business capacity. Ten years ago he went to the islands a boy of twenty-two on a reporter's salary of twenty dollars a week. His possibilities were discovered by Henry Waterhouse, a millionaire descendant of one of the early missionaries, who took him in hand, and on the death of Waterhouse a few years ago Shingle found himself at the head of the firm, which he reorganized, and now, at thirty-two, he is the president of the largest trust company in the islands. Miss Campbell's millions will thus fall indirectly into the hands of a man well able to administer them to the best advantage.

His Melancholy Lament

A good joke was told on a certain stock broker whose fame does not rest on his reputation for generosity. It seems that in a rare burst of holiday enthusiasm he invited his brother's family to share the Christmas dinner at his country home, and was so unusually pressing that the invitation was accepted by the husband and father and immediately transmitted by telephone to his wife at their own home on the other side of the bay. As there are some six or seven little olive branches on that particular bough of the family tree, their mother, very naturally, entered some objections to the trouble involved in getting them ready for the journey, first to the city and then to the suburbs—nurse and all the impedimenta—for only a few hours. The husband, however, insisted, and was impervious to arguments. "My brother and his wife really wish us all to go down to his place, and will not take 'no' for an answer," said he. In the meantime a certain demure and dignified little lady entered a crowded car in which the aforesaid stockbroker was occupying a seat. Without a glance in her direction, he chivalrously gave up his place and continued his conversation with his friend. "What are you going to do on Christmas?" queried the latter. "Oh, my God! was the frenzied response. "I had to invite my brother and his wife and all those children to dinner, and they are coming." The car stopped at the corner and the stock broker and his friend alighted, leaving the lady, still unnoticed, to proceed to her own home, where she found her sister awaiting her. "For goodness sake!" was her greeting, "here I am, obliged to go down to ——— for Christmas, and of course it means new frocks, new shoes, and all the rest of the bother. It is not worth going to all that expense for." It was an unexpected exhibition of both sides of the shield, and after the demure little shopper had relieved her feelings by a hearty laugh she recounted the street-car episode. Needless to say, during the dinner, when anecdotes and toasts were in order, this was too good a family story not to be told by the clever and quick-witted mother of "all those children."

The Footlight's Lure

Gossip is rife in army circles over the rumor that Mrs. Hughes may again appear on the operatic stage. Since her marriage to Dr. Hughes her home has been at Fort McDowell on Angel Island, but she makes frequent visits to town as the guest of "Little" Helen and Julia Thomas, who are her intimate friends. Mrs. Hughes passed her girlhood in San Francisco, where her grandfather was well known in early days for his musical talent, which she has inherited to a remarkable degree. Mrs. Hughes was Marguerite Schmidt-Fritsch. She left this city some ten years ago to commence a stage career, but scarcely had it begun when it was cut short by her early marriage. Now, in army sets it is whispered that she is again contemplating an appearance behind the footlights, but perhaps it is the cause of charity that is animating her affection for her first love. Mrs. Hughes' friends often lament that her musical gifts should be veiled from the dear public.

The Page-Pressley Wedding

The marriage of Miss Ellen Page to Dr. James Fowler Pressley will take place on Thursday evening, January 28, at half-past eight, at the residence of the bride's grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. John Nightingale, at the corner of Haight and Buchanan streets. Contrary to expectation, the wedding will be a very quiet one, only relatives and the very intimate friends of the bride and groom being

STILL ON THE MARKET

BROOKS HOMOEPATHIC COUGH AND CROUP SYRUP

FULL SIZE, 25 CENTS AT OWL DRUG STORES

TOWNSEND'S GLACÈ FRUITS

AND CHOICE CANDIES

Will discontinue their store at 1142-1144 Van Ness Avenue after Saturday night. All Our Choice Candies at Reduced Prices until then.

The location of our down-town store will be announced later.

Orders for our California Glace Fruits and Syrups during the the coming month will be given prompt attention at our factory, 117 San Jose Avenue, phone Market 378, or at the newstands of the Fairmont and St. Francis Hotels.

present. The decorations are to be elaborate, pink being the prevailing color scheme. The bride's robe will be a creation of hand-embroidered chiffon. She will be attended by her cousin, Mrs. Broderick, formerly Miss Florence Boyd, as matron of honor, in a handsome gown of pink chiffon. Philip Paschel will attend the groom. After a short wedding tour the young couple will take up their residence at the Hotel Manx. Miss Page is a lovely and attractive brunette with a genial and sunny disposition. She has a rich soprano voice which has been well trained. She is the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton Page. Her mother was Miss Florence Nightingale, and her father belonged to the Page family of Virginia. Mrs. Page died some years ago, and Mr. Page, soon after the fire. Miss Page has always resided with her grandparents, who are old and prominent residents of San Francisco. Dr. Pressley is the son of Mr. and Mrs. James Pressley of Santa Rosa.

The Omission of a Name

There was quite a buz of excitement at the Twentieth Century Musical Club's tea last Saturday, when it was found that Professor Perlet's name as accompanist did not appear on the program. The club has been under his direction for the last six months, and there was surprised comment at the omission, which became louder and more insistent until just before the last number, when Mrs. Tucker, vice-president of the club, stepped upon the plaform and offered the apologetic explanation that the omission was caused by an oversight. To some the apology was but an aggravation of the offense, and the clatter of the tea cups hardly drowned the clatter of the tongues after the musical program was completed. Professor Perlet was the musical director of the Savage Opera company and came here highly recommended. He has worked hard and faithfully with the club, and much of the success it has enjoyed is owing to his interested service.

A Treat for Music Lovers

An event which is anticipated with as much interest as the Musical Art Society's series of concerts is the interpretative study of the famous Debussy opera of "Pelleas and Melisande," to be given on the evening of February 3rd, in the Colonial ball room of the St. Francis by Miss Margaret Kemble, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Collen Burr Kemble of Berkeley. The opera, which was brought to New York with a French caste, is absolutely new here, and as it will not find its way west for some time, the musical set are eager to take advantage of this opportunity to familiarize themselves with it. Miss Kemble's entertainment will consist of a study of the opera, with an analysis of the motif, theme, and story, while the illustrative music will be rendered by three talented pianists. It will be a brilliant social as well as a musical occasion.

Some Minor Functions

Society has been showering its favors on Miss Florence Hopkins, one of the charming buds of the season. Miss Helene Irwin and Mrs. Dearborn Clark have given luncheons in her honor at the St. Francis during the week, and on Friday evening, January 28th, she will be the guest of honor at an elaborate dinner projected by the Walter Martins. There were a number of dinner parties given at the St. Francis preceding the Colonial Ball. One of the most elaborate was that of Mrs. James Coffin in compliment to her youngest daughter, Sarah, who appeared in society for the first time after a long period of mourning. Mrs. James Flood entertained in honor of Miss Florence Hopkins, and there were others arranged by Mrs. Newhall, Mrs. Robert Woods, and Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Woods.

Cupid's Pastime

A pleasant surprise of the week was the announcement of the engagement of Miss Eva Castle, daughter of Mrs. Frederick Castle, and A. P. S. Macquisten of Glasgow. Miss Castle is the sister of Mrs. Charles D. Farquharson and Mrs. T. L. Cunningham of London, and of Albert Arthur and Walter Castle of this city. The wedding will take place in February. The bride and groom will reside in Salt Lake City.

The Hotel Habit

No one in touch with the doings of society can help being impressed with the increasing prominence which a great hotel, such as the Fairmont, takes in the social life of the city. Nearly every phase of entertainment which was formerly given in private houses now occurs at the hostelry, for hosts and hostesses find it an anormous relief to be able to go to M. Reiter, the Maitre de Hotel, and by simply and succinctly stating their wants, have the whole burden lifted from their shoulders. When the time comes the event takes place and moves with an elegance and smoothness of service which it is impossible to obtain in any private house. The hotel is a great factor in the domestic economy of all who entertain, and with the perfection of the arrangements which are so easily made the Fairmont is not only becoming more important every season, but an encouragement to many who have hitherto felt the burden too great to be undertaken at home.

Two Pretty Weddings

One of the prettiest weddings which has taken place at the Fairmont was that whereby Miss Virginia Ackerman became the wife of Julius Clayburgh. The cere-

THE CHAFING DISH

The Chafing Dish is now becoming so generally used, and its necessity in the household so fully recognized, that we take pleasure in calling your attention to the fine line we handle, as well as every Chafing Dish necessary.

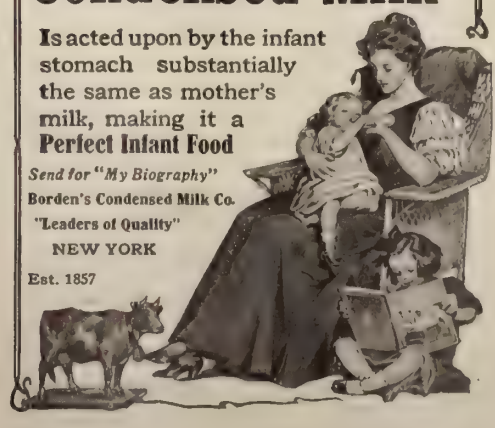
L. D. McLEAN CO.

IMPORTERS AND GROCERS

PHONE FRANKLIN 2810 1158-1168 Sutter St. San Francisco

BORDEN'S EAGLE BRAND Condensed Milk

Is acted upon by the infant stomach substantially the same as mother's milk, making it a Perfect Infant Food



Send for "My Biography"

Borden's Condensed Milk Co.

"Leaders of Quality"

NEW YORK

Est. 1857

mony, which took place in the ball room, underneath a gorgeous canopy of American beauty roses, was performed by Rabbi Nieto. An aisle the full length of the room was formed by streamers of satin ribbon of the same shade as the roses. After the ceremony a reception was held, followed by a dance an an elaborate supper. About two hundred guests were present. Another wedding was that of Miss Sophie Weil and Ferdinand Levy, which took place in the ball room before a large gathering of friends who remained for the reception, dance and elaborate wedding supper.

Not a Vacant Seat

The great demand for seats at the Gadski concert given in the Colonial ball room of the St. Francis on Thursday evening, revealed the interesting and gratifying fact that there were none available, every membership having been taken some time ago. The instant success of the St. Francis Musical Art Society, in a social as well as an artistic sense, was not foreseen, and, as a result, there is now a great demand for memberships which cannot be obtained, and for boxes and loges which are even more unattainable. No little amusement has resulted from the revelation that some prominent society people who, through their prestige, promoted the sale of these boxes, neglected to provide for themselves, and were much chagrined at their inability to secure loges. It is not surprising, however, that a city which will support grand opera for months, as San Francisco has done, should respond instantly to such concerts as are being presented under the management of the Musical Art Society. Something of the success is due, of course, to the fact that these are full dress affairs, and the brilliantly lighted room is a better place in which to display beautiful gowns and jewels than the unlighted auditorium of a theatre, but aside from this, the tributes which have been paid to Melba, Tetrazzini, Schumann-Heink and Gadski testify to a public sympathy with musical expression which few cities in America can match.

In the Social Spotlight

Mr. and Mrs. J. Elkeles announce the engagement of their daughter Blanche M. to Sidney D. Weisbaum of Hanford, Cal.

Mrs. Charles Stewart was the hostess at a delightful tea on Monday, January 4th, at the St. Francis Hotel in honor of her sister, Mrs. E. A. Sturges who left the following day for Honolulu.

Miss Linda Cadwalader has been visiting at Woodside during the past week as the guest of Miss Josselyn. She returned to the city on Monday last.

By the death of Mrs. Walter Rountree, formerly Miss Carrie Connor, the large family is again thrown into mourning. It is only recently that Mrs. Rountree's sister, Mrs. Bennett of Fruitvale, died. The family connection is extensive and includes Mrs. Butters, Mrs. Wetherel, Mrs. Woodworth, Mrs. Martinez and Mrs. Kruse, besides many in the army and navy circles.

The winter meeting of the Colonial Dames of America in the State of California was held at the residence of Mrs. J. H. Phillips, 2410 Steiner street, on January 5th.

The date of the marriage of Miss Mabel Toy and Francis W. Lucas has been set for early in March, to be followed by a lengthy trip to Japan.

Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Hammond and Miss Georgie Hammond have arrived in London. They will spend the next six months abroad.

Mrs. Z. P. Clark and Miss Elise Clark have rented their flat on Green street and taken apartments at the Loring on Van Ness avenue for the winter.

The marriage of Miss Mazie Crowley and Howard Taylor Blethen will take place in February.

Mr. and Mrs. Selby Hanna are at the Hershey Arms, Los Angeles. Late news of Mr. Hanna's health is very encouraging. They will spend several months traveling in Southern California.

Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Williams of New York are back in San Francisco renewing their acquaintance and meeting old friends. Mr. Williams is one of the "big" men on Hearst's New York Journal. During their stay at the Fairmont Mrs. Williams has been entertained extensively.

Miss Jeanne Callois was hostess of an informal tea on Friday and again on Monday in the Laurel Court of the Fairmont.

Miss Margaret Newhall has been forced to take the rest curt, and for the next month this charming young girl will be kept in absolute quiet and seclusion under the care of a trained nurse.

A delightful card party was enjoyed by the guests of the Hotel Carlton in Berkeley last Saturday night. Eight tables were place in the billiard room, at five of which bridge was played while at the other three five-hundred was the game. Following the distribution of the prizes an enjoyable supper was served.

On Tuesday evening last Mr. and Mrs. Stephen I. Sill entertained eighteen guests at dinner in the private dining room of the Hotel Carlton.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Huse, nee Wells, of Chicago, will arrive in the city early next month on their way to Japan. They will be the guests of Mr. and Mrs. George Wells, the parents of Mrs. Huse, during their stay in town.

Mrs. Charles Clinch and her son left during the week for Southern California, where they will join Mr. and Mrs. Selby Hanna and make a tour of the south extending over several weeks.

Mrs. Peter Dunn was the hostess of an elaborate luncheon at her home on Clay street on January 14th.

Walter McCreery, who is at the St. Francis, is canvassing for funds for the purpose of establishing winter sports at Burlingame and San Mateo, is succeeding beyond his most sanguine expectations. The hotel management led off with a subscription of one thousand dollars, and others have followed so generously that there is no room for doubt of the popularity of the idea.

Many San Franciscans spent the week following Christmas at Del Monte, and welcomed the New Year under quieter conditions than they could have enjoyed in the city.

Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Humphreys of Portland, Oregon, have been spending the holidays at the St. Francis.

Mrs. William Hood has taken the Hemphill house on Broadway, which she has opened as an attractive and exclusive private boarding house. Amongst those who have taken rooms there are Mr. and Mrs. Augustus Bray, Miss Butters, Mrs. Michael Castle, Mr. and Mrs. Cambron, Mr. and Mrs. Kinnersley, Miss Kate Scott, and a number of well-known bachelors. Since the fire Mrs. Hood has been living in Alameda.

Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Cooper have given up their house in town and taken a place at Burlingame for the summer.

IDEAL FARMS

"CERTIFIED MILK"

The most perfect product of the modern dairy

Certified to by the Medical Commission of the San Francisco County Medical Society

DISTRIBUTED BY

GUADALOUPE DAIRY CO. Phone Market 2590

STANDARD MILK CO. Phone Market 226

THE MOST DELIGHTFUL TOILET WATER IS

ED. PINAUD'S LILAC VEGETAL

It is one of the finest productions of ED. PINAUD'S famous Paris laboratory. There is no perfume adaptable to so many uses. It is fine for handkerchief, atomizer and bath, and a great favorite with men after shaving.

ED. PINAUD'S LILAC VEGETAL

is delightfully fragrant, having the exquisite odor of a bouquet of freshly cut flowers.

We should like you to try a miniature bottle. Please write to-day, enclosing 10 cts. (to pay postage and packing) and we will send you a liberal sample at once.

PARFUMERIE ED. PINAUD, Dept. S.F.

ED. PINAUD Bldg. Fifth Ave., New York

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Danforth and Miss Fannie Danforth have been visiting Santa Barbara for the past two weeks. They stopped at the Hotel Potter during their stay in the south.

Miss Mazie Coyle will leave for Santa Sarbara this week, where she will remain for the next two or three months for the benefit of her health. Later in the year she may decide to go east.

Late letters from Mrs. Russell Wilson report her safe arrival in the south of France, where she has been joined by Mrs. Miller, formerly Gertrude Benchley of this city. They will spend some time touring Europe, after which Mrs. Wilson will return to California in the late spring.

Mrs. Eddy, the mother of Mrs. Bruce Bonney and George Lewis, will return to California in a very short while, after a lengthy tour abroad.

Mrs. H. Clay Miller, Jr., was hostess at a tea recently in her attractive apartment at the Claremont. Most of her guests were from Sausalito and San Rafael, amongst them being Mrs. Frank Miller, Mrs. H. Clay Miller, Sr., Mrs. Frank Findley, Mrs. Nicholson, Mrs. Foster, Mrs. Starr Keeler, Mrs. W. Horne, Mrs. W. W. Watkins, Mrs. Orrin Wolfe, Mrs. Hickman, Mrs. Dallas, Mrs. Bonney and Mrs. Klink.

Mr. Alfred Poett, who died in Santa Barbara recently, is said to have been the Beau Brummell of his generation in his youth. He was an exceedingly handsome man. His intimate associates were Pelham Ames and Willis Kip. Mr. Poett was the father of Mrs. J. H. P. Howard, Mrs. Francis Edwards, Henry W. and Alfred Poett. His wife was the daughter of Mr. H. B. Williams, of the firm of Williams, Diamond & Co.

Mrs. Prentis Cobb Hale was the hostess at an elaborate tea last week, at which Mrs. T. T. Williams was the guest of honor. Mrs. Hale introduced an innovation imported from Japan, which has so much to recommend it in the matters of convenience and comfort that it is sure to be generally adopted. Unlike most of the fads and fancies of such occasions, which are apt to prove more trouble than they are worth, this is a matter so simple that the wonder is that no one has thought of it before. The tea was served on individual trays, each in itself a work of art. About forty guests were present, amongst them being Mrs. W. Sesnon, Mrs. Garrett McInerney, Mrs. M. Quick, Miss Ethel Shorb, Miss Maye Coluburn, Mrs. Peter Dunne, Mrs. Toy and Miss Maybell Toy.

Notable among the smart dinner parties which preceded the Gadski concert at the Hotel St. Francis was that given by Mr. and Mrs. Mayo Newhall.

Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Pillsbury and Mrs. Pillsbury's father, Charles H. Taylor, editor of the Boston Globe, have added much to the pleasure of local society since their arrival last week at the Hotel St. Francis. Last Friday evening they entertained at a beautifully appointed dinner in the white and gold room, early spring primroses and petunias being the decorative motive. Present were Mr. and Mrs. William Duval, Mr. and Mrs. Joheph D. Grant, Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Calhoun, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Martin, Mr. and Mrs. Clark, Walter Hobart, Miss Jennie Crocker and Knox Maddox.

Professor and Mrs. George W. Ritchey of Pasadena, Miss M. G. Wing, Mr. Frank Ansel and L. Spencer are to leave for the Continent next Tuesday on the Prinz Friedrich Wilhelm. On January 30th Mrs. Hugo Mansfeldt and Mr. and Mrs. George H. Lent will leave for the Mediterranean on the Koenig Albert.

Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Sill of Berkeley gave an elaborate banquet at the Hotel Carlton last Tuesday evening, where they entertained eighteen of their friends who afterward adjourned to the Sill residence on Shattuck avenue, where they spent several hours at cards. The guests included Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Schrock, Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Laymance, Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Curtiss, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Groft, Mr. and Mrs. Abe Leach, Mr. and Mrs. J. Walter Scott, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Button, and Dr. and Mrs. Mehrman.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Mills, whose wedding last week was a society affair in Berkeley, have taken rooms at the Carlton for the winter.

Mrs. J. D. Peters and her charming daughter, Anna, whose appearance was so flatteringly commented upon by the artist, Charles Dana Gibson, when he was here, returned home last Tuesday after a week at the Fairmont. The Peters will return to their apartment after the lapse of another week and remain until the next Greenway. About the first of February they will go east for an extended trip during which they will attend the inauguration of President Taft at Washington.

This is the time of year when nearly all roads lead to Hotel del Coronado. Arriving at this delightful resort are those fortunate ones from all sections of the world, who can afford to make their escape from winter's icy clasp. Even from San Francisco there are visitors to Coronado. James D. Phelan, Mrs. James D. McKee, S. P. Tobey and Mrs. E. W. Coughlan were there last week.

Amongst the distinguished guests who have registered at Del Monte during the week past are Mr. and Mrs. M. W. Burt, Washington, D. C.; Mr. and Mrs. Charles Brogen, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Menker, Mr. M. Strauss, Mrs. Robert A. Thomas of New York; Mr. J. L. Tottenham of England; Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Rhodes and Mrs. H. W. Rhodes of Pennsylvania; Mr. and Mrs. Manuel Dinkelspeil of New Orleans; Miss Hope-Robertson and Miss G. Hope-Robertson, who, with their brothers, Mr. L. Hope-Robertson and Mr. A. Hope-Robertson of Scotland, are making a tour round the world, and have come to California by way of the Philippines and the Hawaiian Islands.

ASK FOR
BLACK AND WHITE
SCOTCH WHISKEY
IT IS THE BEST
NONE BOTTLED IN AMERICA

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT
HEAR OUR ARTISTS AND ORCHESTRA DURING DINNER AND AFTER THEATRE
MISS ANITA GILL, Mezzo Soprano
MISS NADYNE PARKER, Lyric Soprano
THOMPSON'S ANNEX
O'Farrell near Fillmore

THE COSMOS
658 MARKET ST., OPPOSITE PALACE HOTEL
Table d' Hote Lunch, 50c.
Salad
Fresh Crab — Sliced Tomato
Soup
Cream of Onion — Sliced Tomato
Entrees
Tenderloin of Sole, Tartar Sauce — Salmon Trout, Maitre d'Hotel
Pot Roast with Noodles — Sheep's Feet Spanish
Vienna Schnitzel, Tomato Sauce — Leg of Lamb with Spanish
Tagliarini and Cheese — Roast Beef, au Jus
Dessert
Sliced Bananas and Cream — Water Melon — Ice Cream
Apple Pie — Squash Pie
Swiss Cheese — Roquefort Cheese — Brie Cheese

JULES' RESTAURANT 328 BUSH STREET
Below Kearny
Phone Kearny 1812
NOTICE
On New Year's Eve we will keep open until 2 o'clock a. m.
Make your reservations now.
Music

Luscious Old Red Wine
LA QUESTA
AGED IN THE WOOD AND MELLOWED IN THE BOTTLE
Pronounced by experts the best wine made in California
FOR SALE BY
L. D. McLEAN CO. — McCAW BROS.
L. N. WALTER, Cor. Devisadero and California
JULIUS BERENDSEN, 762 Devisadero Street
Served at The St. Francis, The Fairmont, Hotel Rafael, Peninsula Hotel, Jules, Chantilly, Berges & Frank's Old Poodle Dog, Thompson's, New Frank's, Union League Club and Cosmos Club.

Odd Things in the World

In Christiania the unvaccinated cannot vote.

In Southampton it is against the law to whistle in the street on Sunday.

Every judge in Baden is required by law to pass two weeks like a common prisoner in jail, before taking his seat on the bench.

Gheel, in Belgium, is a town of fools. Imbeciles are sent there as to an asylum, but instead of being confined they are allowed their liberty.

No century can begin on either Wednesday, Friday or Saturday. The months of January and October always begin on the same day of the week, as do April and July, September and October. February, March and November begin on the same day. This does not hold good for leap years, but every twenty years the calendar repeats itself.

There is no market for pins in China. A consignment sent there found no purchasers and a member of the legation at Washington explained that "Pins cause untidy habits. The right way to fasten things is with buttons and buttonholes; or with loops and frogs. To fasten things with pins is to make use of an untidy makeshift. To employ pins is to become lazy and slovenly."

Every year, at Knightlow, the quaint ceremony of collecting the Duke of Buccleugh's "Wroth silver" is observed. Before sunrise the steward of the estate reads the ancient charter at the wayside cross, which provides for a fine of twenty shillings or a white bull with red ears and a red nose for every penny unpaid. The "wroth money" is cast into a huge stone trough.

A custom of great antiquity is still maintained in the town of Oakham in Rutlandshire. Every peer of the realm passing near the castle, which was built by Walkelin de Ferrers, is expected to deliver a shoe from the foot of one of his horses, or to pay a fine in default. The fine usually takes the form of an ornamental horse shoe, often surmounted by the coronet of the peer presenting it. There are over three hundred shoes now in the possession of the local authorities, amongst which are those presented by Queen Elizabeth, King George IV, Queen Victoria and Queen Alexandria.

Icelanders have an effective plan of preventing horses from straying from any particular spot. If two equestrians without attendants happen to meet and desire to dismount they tie the head of one horse to the tail of the other. In this position it is impossible for them to move on, either backwards or forwards. If disposed to move at all it must be in a circle, and even in this there must be agreement between them to turn their heads in the same direction.

In rural England travelers frequently find that the clocks on the great barns strike thirteen instead of one. The custom is said to have originated through the discovery of one farmer, on taking an after-lunch stroll, that his men were idling and smoking though it was already half-past one. They made the excuse that they were waiting for the clock to strike, and professed surprise that they had not heard it. In order not to be victimized in future the proprietor had his clock so altered that when it was time to resume labor there would be thirteen strokes. "They never miss the twelve strokes that bid them lay off," said he, "and now they'll never miss the thirteen that bid them lay on again." It was such a good idea that the other farmers likewise adopted it.

VAN NESS THEATRE

Cor. Van Ness and Grove
Gottlob, Marx & Co., Mgrs.
Phone Market 500

Monday, January 18th,

MR. E. H. SOTHERN

Monday night and Saturday matinee -HAMLET.

Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday nights, the romantic drama by Laurence Irving RICHARD LOVELACE.

Friday and Saturday nights—LORD DUNDREARY.

Prices: $2.00 to 50c.
Coming—"The Wolf."

NEW ALCAZAR THEATRE

Cor. Sutter and Steiner
Class 'A' Building
Phone West 6036

BELASCO & MAYER, Owners and Managers.

Monday Night, January 18th Starts the Second and Last Week of David Belasco's Comedy of Heart

SWEET KITTY BELLAIRS

Adapted from Egerton Castle's Famous Story, "The Bath Comedy."

Prices: Evenings, 25c to $1.00. Matinees, Saturday and Sunday, 25c to 50c.

PRINCESS THEATRE

PHONE WEST 665

S. LOVERICH, MANAGER

Ellis Street, near Fillmore
Absolutely Class 'A' Building

Matinee, Saturday and Sunday

This and Next Week Only
KOLB & DILL
In Their Immensely Funny Success

THE POLITICIANS

Monday Evening, January 25th, Kolb and Dill in "Bankers and Brokers."

Prices—Evenings 25c, 50c, 75c, $1.00. Matinees (Except Sundays and Holidays, 25c, 50c, 75c

ORPHEUM

Ellis Street, near Fillmore
Absolutely Class 'A' Bldg
Phone West 6000

Week Beginning this Sunday Afternoon. Matinee Every Day.

ARTISTIC VAUDEVILLE.

JULIE HERNE & CO. in "A Mountain Cinderella"; JEWELL'S MANIKINS; BERT HOWARD AND EFFIE LAWRENCE; THE CHADWICK TRIO; THE JOSSELIN TRIO; EDWIN LATELL, return for this week only; MR. AND MRS. GENE HUGHES, in "A Matrimonial Substitute." NEW ORPHEUM MOTION PICTURES. Last week—immense sensation, the THREE YOSCARYS, Europe's Foremost Athletic Eccentrics.

Evening Prices: 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c. Box Seats, $1.00. Matinee Prices (Except Sundays and Holidays): 10c, 25c, 50c.

VALENCIA THEATRE

Valencia Street, between
Thirteenth and Fourteenth
Phone Market 17

The Only Steamed Heated Theatre in the City.

This and Tomorrow Afternoons and Evenings—Last Times of "Prince Hagen"

Commencing Monday Evening, January 18,

SHERLOCK HOLMES

William Gillette's Greatest Success.

Presented by the Valencia Stock Company, Including Robert Warwick and Blanche Stoddard.

Regular Matinees, Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday, Prices 25c to 50c.
Evenings, 25c to 75c. Box Seats, $1.00.

Monday, January 25: "Pretty Peggy."

AMERICAN THEATRE

Market St., nr. Seventh
Phone Market 381

One Week, Commencing Sunday Matinee, January 17th,
John Cort Presents America's Foremost Artist
FLORENCE ROBERTS
In her latest and greatest success,

THE HOUSE OF BONDAGE

By Seymour Obermer

Prices: Evenings, Orchestra, First 10 Rows, $1.50; Balance of Orchestra, 50c, 75, $1.00. Balcony, 25c, 50c and 75c. Matinees, 25c, 50c and 75c.

Mme. GADSKI'S CONERT

This Sunday Afternoon at 2:30

VAN NESS THEATRE.

Seats $2.50, $2.00, $1.50, $1.00 at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s, and on Sunday at theatre after 10 a. m.

GADSKI IN OAKLAND, Wednesday Afternoon, January 20th
Ye Liberty Playhouse.

KATHARINE GOODSON

One of the World's Great Pianists,

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE HALL.

Next Tuesday and Thursday Evenings, January 19th-31st, Sunday afternono, January 24th.

Seats $1.00 and $1.50 at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s, Sutter and Kearny, where complete programs may be obtained.

OAKLAND CONCERT NEXT FRIDAY AFTERNOON AT
Ye Liberty Playhouse.

Next—Mackenzie Gordan's Concerts. Second Lyric "Pop" Concert.

Stage

Another Belasco Comedy

"Sweet Kitty Bellairs" the Belasco adaptation of Eggerton Castle's "Bath Comedy" has been sumptuously presented all week at the Alcazar. Taking into consideration its requirements in scenery, costume, and length of cast, it is an elaborate production for a stock company and must be rated as one of the Alcazar's big successes. Moreover, in pleasing contrast to many shows from across the continent, all was new, clean, spick and span. There was no shop-worn scenery, grimy gowns or frayed finery. As to the play itself, it is as the program hints, a "comedy of hearts," but it is a comedy of manners also. Bath in the time of the third George was a hot bed of intrigue, envy, fashion and extravagance, and its frequenters were typical of the smart society of the day. In Belasco's play they step out of the past again in all their folly and fashion, bravery, and recklessness. The play is full of incident, and bright with witticisms, so that notwithstanding its length it does not drag. There is a critical second act where generous and reckless Kitty accompanied by Lady Standish goes at four o'clock in the morning to Lord Verney's lodgings, their object being to avert the duel between Lord Verney and Lord Jasper Standish. At an inconvenient moment Lady Standish faints, and is disposed of behind the curtains of the big four-poster. When her husband finds and recognizes her little satin shoe it looks as if there would be the devil to pay, but Kitty appears between the bed curtains, greets the company and coolly asks for her shoe. Now of course, no really discreet lady would under any circumstances make a visit to a gentleman's lodging at four a. m., even under the wing of a chaperon, and when the unconventional conduct of Mistress Bellairs becomes public gossip through the treachery of Captain Spicer there is fluttering in feminine dove cotes. From prologue to final tableau the play is alive with incident and mellowed by the sentiment that is dear to the heart of the playgoer. Miss Evelyn Vaughan has scored her greatest success in the role of the whimsical, witty and big hearted Kitty. Her gowns are what women term dreams, particularly the pinkish lavender confection worn in the first act. The different characters of the long cast are in good hands, and all play up in fine style to the charming Kitty. The drunken scene of Walling in Act II was well done and not overdone. Indeed, that this scene in its entirety is not overdone and does not smack of vulgarity is much to the credit of the Alcazar players. The prologue seemed to puzzle the audience a little. We are so unused to this introduction to the drama that people wondered what it meant.

—M. I. Connell.

Gadski Farewell Concert

The last concert by that magnificent artists, Mme. Gadski, will be given this Sunday afternoon, January 17th, at the Van Ness Theatre and seats are now on sale at Sherman, Clay and Co.'s Kearny and Sutter street store. On Sunday the box office will be at the theatre after 10 a. m. The program has been arranged with special care. Schubert will be the opening composer, the numbers being, "An die Musik," "Lachen und Weinene" and "Litanei." This group will be followed by Schumann's "Soldier's Bride," "Marienwurmchen" and "Fruehlingsnacht." The second part will include Braham's "Sapphic Ode" and "The Message," Grieg's "With a Water Lily" and "Good morning," "The Golden Birch," by G. Norman Smith, "Absent," by J. W. Metcalf and "May is Coming," by Frank La Forge." Part third will be the great "Immolation Scene" from Wagner's "Goetterdamerung." Mr. La Forge's piano numbers will be Schumann's Symphonic Studies and the C minor nocturne of Chopin. Prices are from $2.50 to $1.00. Next Wednesday afternoon Mme. Gadski will sing in Oakland at "Ye Liberty Playhouse," presenting an entirely different program from her San Francisco concerts, and including, by special request, the "Liebestod" from "Tristan und Isolde" in which Gadski has no peer. Seats for this event are on sale at the office of the theatre in Oakland.

E. H. Sothern Engagement

The Van Ness Theatre has secured an unusually strong attraction for the two weeks commencing Monday night in the person of Mr. E. H. Sothern. For his first week's engagement Mr. Sothern has selected three of the most important plays of his entire repertoire and their widely diversified dramatic appeal will be sure to popularize his engagement with all theatregoers. The schedule is as follows: Monday night and Saturday matinee "Hamlet," Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursdays, the romantic drama "Richard Lovelace," Friday and Saturday nights "Lord Dundreary." Since Mr. Sothern appeared here he has won honors in England where he played a Shakespeareian engagement with Miss Julia Marlowe. The critics pronounced him one of the elect few of Shakespeareian scholars.

At the Alcazar

A second week of "Sweet Kitty Bellairs" is announced by the Alcazar management, supplemented with a statement that the advance demand for seats is so heavy as to make a third week of the Belasco success not at all impossible. All the critics have agreed that "Sweet Kitty Bellairs" is one of the most pretentious productions ever undertaken by a stock theatre. With more than half a hundred people employed in an acting capacity, with a series of stage pictures that appeal by their elaborateness and beauty and with a musical setting that is at once appropriate and pretty, David Belasco's adaptation of Edgerton Castle's charming story of old Bath is surely well treated at the Sutter street playhouse.

JULIE HERNE

To appear at the Orpheum next week.

Katharine Goodson Great Pianiste

Manager Will Greenbaum predicts that Katharine Goodson, the English pianiste, will make as big a sensation among the piano students and teachers as Kreisler did among the violinists when he came here quite unknown, or as Tetrazzini did among the lovers of florid singing. Miss Goodson in Europe and the East is ranked with D'Albert, Ysaye, Paderewski and Joachim, but in the West she is little known. She is a pupil of the great Leschetizky and one of whom he is extremely proud. She has appeared with the greatest success in nearly every country in the world and this will be her third tour in the United States. At her first concert (next Tuesday night, January 19th) at Christian Science Hall she will play the following interesting program: Kinderscene, Op. 15, Novelette, E major, Schumann; Sonate, C sharp minor, Op. 27, No. 2, Beethoven; Adagio Sostenuto, Allegretto—Trio, Presto Agitato; Intermezzo, B minor, Rhapsodie, E flat, Brahms; Three Etudes, A flat, Op. 25, No. 1, A flat, Posth., No. 2, G flat, Op. 25, No. 9, Two Valses, G flat, Op. 70, A flat, Op. 42, Chopin; Prelude, C sharp minor, Rachmaninoff, Traumerie, Op. 9, No. 4, Richard Strauss; Rigaudon, Op. 23, No. 1, Arthur Hinton; Humoresque, Tschaikowsky; Rhapsodie, No. 2, Liszt. The second concert will be Thursday evening when another exceptional program will be given and the farewell concert will be given Sunday afternoon, January 24th. Seats are now on sale at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s store, Kearny and Sutter streets.

Goodson in Oakland

Katharine Goodson will play in Oakland at Ye Liberty Playhouse next Friday at half past three. Her program on this occasion will be made up from the gems of her three San Francisco programs. She will play two complete sonatas, Beethoven's Op. 27, No. 2, and Grieg's beautiful one in E minor. Seats for this concert will be ready Tuesday at the box office of Ye Liberty Playhouse.

"Sherlock Holmes" for the Valencia

"Prince Hagen," Upton Sinclair's fantastic drama which has set the entire community talking, will receive its final presentations at the Valencia Theatre Sunday afternoon and evening, and on Monday night that gripping and fascinating tale of detective life, "Sherlock Holmes," dramatized from A. Conan Doyle's spellbinding adventures of that mysterious man by William Gillette and played by him with such great success, will receive an elaborate production. The story, in brief, concerns Miss Alice Faulkner, who is kept a prisoner by James and Madge Larrabee in order that they may secure a package of letters written by the heir apparent of one of the prinicapilities of the German Empire to Miss Faulkner's sister. The German government has secured the service of Sherlock Holmes to locate and restore these letters, and when the Larrabees find the famous detective on their trail they secure the services of Professor Moriarty and his crew of thieves and cutthroats, that are designated the most infamous gang of lawbreakers in London. Moriarty has had bitter experiences with Holmes and decides to put him out of the way, so he enters the combat with great zest and earnestness. The fight between Holmes and the gang is a desperate one, but he easily outwits the men pitted against him and emerges the personification of coolness from every trap laid by the professional scoundrels. The cast of Sherlock Holmes will include all the favorites of the Valencia stock company, and as Conan Doyle's world-famed detective-hero, Robert Warwick will have one of the opportunities of his career. He is admirably adapted, both temperamentally and physically, to live the part and promises to surprise his most ardent admirers.

MRS. OSCAR MANSFELDT
PIANIST
TELEPHONE WEST 314 1801 BUCHANAN STREET

Florence Roberts at the American

It is declared that Florence Roberts has had no vehicle in her career that has offered her such salient opportunities or which embodied a theme so daring and original as "The House of Bondage," which she will present at the American, beginning Sunday matinee, January 17th. When it is said that the pivotal climax of the piece arises through a vital operation by a great surgeon upon the husband of the woman he (the surgeon) loves, some idea of the tremendous dramatic power of the piece may be imagined. Miss Roberts, in the role of the neglected wife of a brilliant English Parliamentarian, has a part that suits to a "T" her great gifts as an emotional actress. Her support is a very strong one, containing the names of Arthur Forrest, Thurlow Bergen, Hallet Bosworth, Harry Gibbs, Ann Warrington and Mary Bertrand.

KATHARINE GOODSON

The English pianiste who will give a concert next Tuesday evening.

Rudolph Barth, watchmaker and jeweler, now permanently located at 36 Kearny street.

The Dutch Comedians

Kolb and Dill are still appearing in "The Politicians" at the Princess Theatre to crowded and enthusiastic houses. Next week will most positively be the last of this delightful farce. Monday, January 25th, Kolb and Dill will appear in "Bankers and Brokers" which is pleasantly remembered as one of their greatest triumphs.

Orpheum Vaudeville

The Orpheum program for next week will be headed by Miss Julie Herne, a remarkably clever actress and a daughter of that famous playwright and actor, James A. Herne. Miss Herne will present a sketch written by herself and George D. Parker, called "A Mountain Cinderella," which depicts a thrilling incident in the Tennessee Mountains where the moonshiner is ever on the alert for the visit of the sheriff. Jewell's Manikins, the best mechanical exhibition of its kind on the stage will contribute an act called "Toyland Vaudeville," in which the puppets impersonate the Teddy bears, Madame Renz, Vesta Victoria and other famous stage folk. Bert Howard and Effie Lawrence, two of the most popular artists in vaudeville, will be guilty of a farce called "The Stage Manager," which provokes the audience to screams of laughter. The Chadwick Trio, which includes Ida May Chadwick, the champion female buck dancer of America, will appear in a farce entitled, "For Sale, Wiggins' Farm," which is said to be a vehicle which completely exhausts their versatility. The Josselin Trio, the premiere aerialists of the world, will introduce a novel and attractive act, called "Pictures in the Air," which was an immense success at the New York Hippodrome. That delightful monologist, Edwin Latell, will return for next week only, which will be the last of these wonderful acrobats, the Three Yoscarys and those admirable comedians, Mr. and Mrs. Gene Hughes. The latter will be seen in a new farce, called "A Matrimonial Substitute." A new series of Orpheum Motion Pictures will conclude the performance.

In the Limelight

At the Mackenzie Gordon concerts Mr. Eugene Blanchard, the young artist who recently returned from several years' study abroad with the great Sauer, will be heard in some splendid piano works.

Will Greenbaum announces a series of the Burton Holmes Travelogues as his closing attraction this season. They will be here about the last week in April.

"Girls" will be with us in the near future.

Guy Standing and Theodóre Roberts have made a tremendous hit in the drama, "The Right of Way," and are now heralded as real stars.

Sothern is to make his first appearance on any stage as Richelieu during the second week of his engagement at the Van Ness Theatre. His interpretation of the Cardinal should be an artistic triumph.

Andrew Robson, the well known actor, will be seen in the role of Jules Beaubein, the half breed in Eugene Walter's tremendous success, "The Wolf." This is the second notable hit from the pen of the author of "Paid in Full."

Lillian Russell's engagement in "Wildfire" is to be limited to one week at the Van Ness as the actress and her play are to go to London in the spring according to previous arrangements.

One of the most delightful musical offerings of the past several seasons is "A Stubborn Cinderella" in which a strong company will appear here next month. This piece is by the same people who wrote "The Time, The Place and The Girl" and "The Girl Question."

Darrell Standing, who appeared as "Professor Moriarty" in the original London performances of "Sherlock Holmes" with William Gillette, is lending his valuable aid in staging the intricate and powerful play at the Valencia. He has all of the multifarious and complicated details of the drama at his fingers' ends and his assistance is proving of great aid to the mechanical staff of the theatre.

"Pretty Peggy," the beautiful story of Peg Woffington and David Garrick, originally played by Henrietta Crossman, will follow "Sherlock Holmes" at the Valencia Theatre. From the standpoint of costumes and scenery the production will eclipse anything yet done by the enterprising management of this playhouse while every member of the stock company will have a splendid chance in the delightful characters provided by the author.

Many have been the expressions of satisfaction from the patrons of the Valencia Theatre since the installation of the steam heating plant both in front and behind the scenes at that playhouse, which is now as comfortable as it is commodious.

SCENE FROM "SHERLOCK HOLMES"
At the Valencia Theatre Next Week.

The Well-Dressed Man

What to Wear, When and Where

Written exclusively for Town Talk by J. M. JACOBI

For the benefit of those men who have neither the time nor inclination to study the art of Dressing correctly, we will publish a series of weekly Fashion Chats.

We will also start a query column, in which the reader may ask questions pertaining to dress. Such questions will be answered in the following issue.

Answer to Queries

Dr. J. W. B. In answer to your question whether a light sack suit may be worn to a vaudeville performance in ladies' company, will say "Yes" if you are well acquainted with the lady.

Mr. S. E. S. In answer as to whether white edging can be worn with vests. "Yes" on dark suits as the contrast is pretty.

THE ENGLISH WALKING COAT OR COLONIAL FROCK SUIT

The business cutaway frock or as it is more often termed "The English walking coat or colonial frock suit" has been in the ascendant for the last few years and promises to become a standard style second only to the sack sujt for general wear. It is a suit particularly adapted to be worn by men of higher position, business men, and professional men, for it lends its wearer dignity and therefore is of importance to the lawyer, doctor, banker, insurance man or broker. Owing to its present comparative uncommonness this suit is strongly advised as a change from the monotony of the sack, and from all indications it is almost a certainty that Spring will see this suit a most popular one.

The above model is one accepted by the American gentlemen and tells more than the usual description, its natural grace and dignity being so apparent. The skirts of the coat, however, should be a trifle shorter and more cutaway for a man of less than average height who shows some sign of corpulence. Either the simple sleeve finish or a lapover cuff is correct and it is a matter of individual taste which of the two one prefers. The outer breast pocket lower should be in this garment as well as in the sack. The side pockets should be set straight under the large flaps not diagonally (of course vertical pockets are never used).

The materials to be used for these suits can be of various kinds. For men who wish to use this suit for half day business or informal evening dress, an oxford grey either plain or with basket weave or a medium dark finish or unfinished worsted with hardly visible stripe or overplaid effect for men who wish to use it only as business or day suit. Tweeds or worsted cheviots plain effects or light checks or plaids for the average size men, for short men very thin stripe effects. However, the purchaser usually knows best what use he has for the suit he is purchasing and if he has taste he will naturally select the proper material.

No man can be too careful in the selection of his wearing apparel for it is constantly criticised. It is the expression of his sense of fitness, his position, his ambition, and his personalities just as much as the expression of the face. Let a lawyer address a jury unshaven, with a collar with saw edge, and ill-fitting suit, no matter how good a case he has or how great an orator he is the first thing he would have to do would be to prove to his jury that he is not what he looks. Now how much easier it would be on presenting his case to come into court well dressed.

Coat. Colonial frock or English walking coat.

Waistcoat. To match coat or fancy waistcoat.

Trousers. To match coat. To fall straight from hips to bottom. No cuffs.

Hat. Derby or alpine.

Shirt. Stiff or pleated. White or colored cuffs. Attached collar. Wing preferred.

Cravat. Four in hand, ascot or once over.

Gloves. Tan cape or reindeer.

Boots. Calf or kid, buttoned or laced, high or low.

Jewelry. Gold links or studs.

Two Happy Wives

"I am told that your husband plays billiards every night at the clubs—plays for money, too," said the anxious mother to her newly married daughter. "That's all right, mother," cheerfully responded the young wife. "He gives me all his winnings——"

"What? Do you——"

"And he always plays with Mr. Nextdoor."

"What difference can that make?"

"Mrs. Nextdoor makes her husband give her his winnings, too, and then she gives the money to me, and I hand her what my husband won from hers, and so we both have about twice as much money as we could get out of them otherwise."

The Reason Why

"And how are the tomatoes coming on?" asked Mr. Young husband of his little wife.

"Well, dear," began the lady nervously, "I'm rather afraid we shall have to buy them, after all."

Mr. Younghusband frowned. "But, my dear Maria," he expostulated, "I distinctly understood from you a couple of months or so ago that you had planted a whole row!"

"That's quite right, dear," explained Maria, "but I've just remembered that I forgot to open the tins!"

LARGEST COLLECTION ON THE COAST

DIAMONDS AND GEMS

BALDWIN JEWELRY CO.

1261 VAN NESS AVENUE AT SUTTER

The Flaying of a Poet

(Continued from Page 9.)

draw her objection to the application made by Sterling of this pretty word that all passionate poets love for its melodiousness and its flexibility. To mention a few: The author of "Night Thoughts" saw the dyes on a dove's neck wanton in the sun's rays; Pope sang of the "wanton ivy" twining, and Shelley, of "a wanton rivulet." Singular, isn't it—the viewpoint of the men whom the moon has touched with her own phantasy?

And now, as for being sure that buds are vestals—well, even a botanist will hardly argue to the contrary. Nor will I, though not a poet, pronounce "silken fires" a tax on credulity. I know that Baudelaire talks of "diamond fires" in "The Living Flame," and anyway, I cannot be induced to quarrel with a poet on account of his epithets. I know that his business is not with fact, but with feeling, and that he vindicates his imagination by epithets drawn from the hearts of the objects that excite his mad raptures. If poets, as I have been told, can see color in sound, I am sure it would be folly for me to dispute with one of them in a contest of vision. Besides, if it seemed to me that a poet in his gradiloquence was floating away into inanity, why should I call a halt when I know that even audacity leads to good poetry? The fact is that almost all great poets have ranted. The greatest ran the risk of uttering nonsense, and by many of them was it uttered. If they had been timid from over-exactness, from too much concern for the power of comprehension, much good poetry would have been lost to the world. What appears to be nonsense, however, is frequently veritable sublimity. When we do not recognize it as such it is because the most exquisite imagery is not obvious to everybody. Poetry bubbles spontaneously out of unfathomable profounds within the poet's soul where reflected are the lights and shadows of eternal things. We cannot penetrate these depths. The fancies that spring therefrom are but the images of realities, to be apprehended not by the physical senses but by our spiritual nature. Is it not presumptuous in those of us whose spiritual nature may be undeveloped to challenge the perceptions of the divinely inspired one? I have read poetry that I do not understand, but I have not the courage to pronounce it rot. It is only what he understands that the critic can conscientiously criticise.

Jeffreys asserted that Wordsworth's poetry abounded in "a hubbub of strained raptures and fanatical sublimities." The same criticism might with as much truth be uttered with respect to the works of any of the great poets. What could be more in the nature of a strained rapture than Keats' fanciful prospect of flitting into a star with his lyre and making "its silvery splendor pant with bliss?" Strained, perhaps, but poetry nevertheless; as much so as Swinburne's star "swooning with desire at the cold lips of the sleepless moon." Somewhat more subdued and vastly more impressive is Francis Thompson's star on a mountain top listening quietly. To all these raptures doubtless Mrs. Maud will take exception, and perhaps she will insist that at any rate so far as Sterling is concerned his "glassy gold" is unpardonable. To which I retort that it compares favorably as a performance of the imagination with Wordsworth's "unrejoicing berries" and Mathew Arnold's "impracticable hours," which did not quickly pass in his "Oberman Once More." It may be hard to understand, but this use made by Arnold of the word "impracticable' has been pronounced the happiest and most vigorous stroke in English poetry.

Following a poet when he is soaring on his viewless wings of fancy in the service of pure emotion is a hard job and one that no Philistine should ever undertake.

Auto Notes

Of all questions, that of strength and durability is probably the most important in the minds of all prospective purchasers of automobiles. In a recent discussion on the importance placed by customers on the possible strength and lasting qualities of respective machines, Calvin C. Eib, Sales Manager of the Pioneer Automobile Company, said: "The strongest chain is only as strong as its weakest link. The same thing applies to an automobile. Customers are always much interested in the general strength of a car they are interested in, and it is the duty of a salesman to explain the quality of the material used in each car. A machine may have a good appearing body and hood, and look in other respects like a fine car, but it is only after several thousand miles of testing that the car proves its grade. The best guarantee a customer can have of the best qualities of a car is the record and past history of the machine. A new car, that is to say, a machine that has not had a season's use by the average automobile owner is more or less an experiment and is at a disadvantage with the older and more representative makes. I always advise a prospective customer of a car to investigate it thoroughly, examine the quality of the bearings throughout the car, and determine the quality of steel used in the crank shaft. For instance, the Chalmers-Detroit (formerly the Thomas-Detroit) has the highest grade of nickel heat treated steel in the crank shaft, which has stood a test of thirteen tons. The annular bearings are the same as are used in the five thousand dollar foreign cars. These points, together with the fact that the body is hung between the axles, similar to the best foreign cars, are the reasons this car is recognized as one of the most durable on the market."

U. S.

Agricultural Classification Under the National Pure Food Law

No. 12279

Was Given to

HUNTER

BALTIMORE

RYE

Under which the Proprietors Guarantee it to be an Absolutely Pure Rye Whiskey. Ripe Refined in Quality and Mellow in Tone.

HENRY CAMPE & CO., INC.,
Distributors for California and Nevada
San Francisco, Cal.

A BURNING QUESTION

How to Keep Warm Frosty Mornings? Try the

HOME OPEN FRONT OIL HEATER

A PERFECT HEATER
PORTABLE
SAFE

Cheerful as an open grate fire. Most successful oil heater ever invented. Sold on a guarantee. If not satisfactory money refunded.

Made in Three Sizes

MANUFACTURED BY

W. W. MONTAGUE & CO.

Corner Turk and Polk Streets, San Francisco.

RACING

NEW CALIFORNIA JOCKEY CLUB

OAKLAND RACE TRACK

Six races each week day, rain or shine. First Race at 1:40 p. m.

For special trains stopping at the track, take Southern Pacific Ferry, foot of Market street; leave at 12 M.; thereafter every twenty minutes until 1:40 P. M.

No smoking in the last two cars, which are reserved for ladies and their escorts.

PERCY W. TREAT, Sec'y. THOS. H. WILLIAMS, Pres.

Siesta

(Continued from Page 10.)

gress higher, when they came to rest themselves in the soft armchairs of the little cool salon.

There was no other light here than the glow from the open fireplace. Its ruddy brightness stole softly across the English carpet and ascended to the golden cornices of the hangings; it played upon the gilded frames of the paintings, touched the piano which stood near the chimney; here and there it fell also upon a face, wonderfully illumining and reclaiming it from the darkness. Otherwise nothing was visible except the red, glowing tips of cigars and cigarettes.

The entertainment began to flag; only a whisper now and then, or the clink of a coffee-cup disturbed the silence.

"Is there no one present who can give us a little music?" inquired Senor de Silvis. "You are always wont to be so obliging, Mademoiselle Adele."

"Oh dear, no—not I!" cried Mademoiselle. "I've been eating too heartily!" at the same time, leaning back upon the sofa, she drew up her little feet, and, with a satisfied air, folded her hands across her breast.

But the stranger, the Irishman, emerged from his corner, and advanced to the piano.

"Oh! you're going to play something for us! Many thanks—Monsieur—hem, Monsieur—" Senor de Silvis had forgotten the name, a thing happening very often, indeed, with his guests.

"You see, he is a musician!" said Mademoiselle Adele to her friend. Anatole answered with a grunt of admiration.

There was something else. The others also perceived it at once, noticing the manner in which he sat down and struck a few chords here and there to awaken the instrument, as it were.

He then began to play—sportively, flightily, frivolously—just as the mood was upon him.

The melodies of the day melted away into gay waltzes and tuneful glees; all those insignificant popular tunes hummed by all Paris for the past week he snatched up and executed with spirit and fluency.

The ladies cried out with astonishment, sang a few bars in accompaniment, beat time softly on the floor. The entire company followed him with intense interest. He had gained their sympathy, and carried them away with him from the very beginning. The "lieber Herr Doktor" alone listened with that Sedan smile. Such things were too simple for him.

But soon there was something for even the German. He nodded now and then somewhat approvingly.

A bit of Chopin burst forth and wonderfully accorded with the general temperament—the pungent fragrancy filling the air, the gay women, the men so frank, so unconcerned, each strange to the other, lost in the obscurity of the dusky salon, each following his own most secret thoughts, borne along by the mysterious, half-distinct, half-confused music, while the light of the open fireplace brightened now, now sank back again, causing everything golden to glimmer with a faint, trembling glow.

And now there was still more for the doctor. From time to time he turned towards de Silvis and motioned to him whenever the harmonious sounds suggested "our Schumann," "our Beethoven," or, indeed, "our famous Richard."

Meanwhile the stranger continued playing, slightly inclined to the left, though without effort, in order to put more force into the bass. It sounded as if he had twenty fingers—all of steel. He knew how to assemble a multitude of tones, so that the instrument itself produced one powerful, united, distinct sound. Not stopping, not marking the transitions, by ever newly recurring surprises, imitations, happy combinations he fixed their attention so firmly that even the most unmusical person was forced to follow him with rapture.

Wholly unnoticed, the music changed its character. The artist played the deep tones uninterruptedly. He then inclined himself more and more upon the left, and there arose a wonderful commotion in the bass. The anabaptists of the Prophet approached with heavy steps; a knight from the Damnation de Faust mounted from the depths below with that desperate, hobbling, diabolical gallop.

More and more it rumbled and thundered in the deeper tones, and Monsieur Anatole began to feel the truffles anew. Mademoiselle Adele leaned half forward from the sofa; the music would not allow her to rest in peace.

Here and there the chimney-fire was reflected in a pair of black eyes staringly fixed upon the player. He had bewitched them; they could now no longer detach themselves from him; he led them ever deeper down, down, down, where the sound was muffled and gloomily muttered with lamentations and threats.

"He manages his left hand marvelously," said the doctor. But de Silvis did not hear him; like the others, he sat in breathless suspense.

A mysterious, oppressive fear stole out from the music and brooded over the whole assembly.

The artist seemed to clinch his left hand into a fist, which could never again relax, while with his right he cast hither and thither descants of sounds leaping aloft like sparkling flames. It sounded as if something dismal, horrible had been committed in the cellar, while those upstairs were dancing, laughing and amusing themselves under the resplendent candelabra.

There was heard a sigh, a low cry from one of the ladies who felt unwell, but no one took notice of it. The performer was now wholly occupied with the bass, on which he was playing with both hands. His tireless fingers rapidly mingled the

California Limited

The only exclusively first-class train to the East via any line.

Dining-car service under Fred Harvey management—that's the best on earth.

On your way East you can stop and visit

YOSEMITE VALLEY
AND
GRAND CANYON

No other line puts you in reach of both of these places. Our folders tell.

F. W. Prince, C. T. A.
673 Market St.

Santa Fe

ROBERTSON'S

A BOOK STORE

1539 VAN NESS AVENUE

CARD PLATES ∴ MONOGRAMS
WEDDING INVITATIONS

A. M. ROBERTSON

TRUNKS AND SUIT CASES

KOESEL'S TRUNK FACTORY

41 ELLIS STREET, NEAR MARKET

GENERAL REPAIRING Phone Douglas 445

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Dept. 10 No. 20497.

ANNA D. ROLLER, Plaintiff,

vs.

ALVA AARON and M. CLIFFORD AARON, Defendants.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Alva Aaron and M. Clifford Aaron, Defendants.

You are hereby directed to appear and answer the complaint in an action entitled as above brought against you in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, within ten days after the service on you of this summons—if served within this City and County; or within thirty days if served elsewhere.

And you are hereby notified that unless you appear and answer as above required, the said plaintiff will take judgment for any money or damages demanded in the complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, this 23rd day of December, A. D. 1908.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By L. J. WELCH, Deputy Clerk.

TOBIN & TOBIN, Attorneys for Plaintiff. 1-16-10

DIVIDEND NOTICE

CENTRAL TRUST COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA, Market and Sansome Sts. Branches: 624 Van Ness Ave. and 3039 Sixteenth St. For the half year ending December 31, 1908, a dividend has been declared on deposits in the Savings Department of this Bank at the rate of four (4) per cent per annum, free of taxes, payable on and after Saturday, January 2, 1909. Dividends not called for are added to and bear the same rate of interest as the principal from January 1, 1909. B. G. TOGNAZZI. Manager.

sounds together, so that cold chills ran up and down the backs of his hearers.

There was, however, a gradual ascension from the threatening, tumultuous lower sounds to the higher notes. The tones ran into each other, over each other, past each other, upward, ever upward, but never seeming to advance. There arose a wild tumult, a struggle to reach the top. They swarmed like little black demons, fighting, wrangling, full of raging wrath, feverish hurry, climbing, clinging, clinching with hands and teeth, each kicking, crushing the other with its feet, cursing, shrieking, praying—and, meanwhile, his hands glided along the keys so slowly, oh, so painfully slowly!

"Anatole," whispered Mademoiselle Adele, as pale as a ghost, "he is playing the 'Poverty!'"

"Oh, dear!—those truffles!" moaned Anatole, beginning to writhe with pain.

The salon suddenly became as bright as day. Two servants entered from behind the portiere with lamps and candelabra. At the same moment the strange musician stopped playing, with all the might of his steeled fingers striking a discord so impossible, so startling that the entire party instantly sprang to their feet.

"Away with the lamps!" cried de Silvis.

"No, no!" shrieked Mademoiselle Adele; "come in with the light. I'm afraid in the dark. Oh, the horrible creature!"

"Who was he?—yes,—who was he?" And they involuntarily thronged round their host. Nor did they notice that the stranger had slipped out behind the servants.

de Silvis tried to laugh it off by saying: "I think it was the devil. Come, let us go to the opera!"

"To the opera? Not for the world," cried Louison. "I won't listen to any music for a fortnight. Ugh! think of that crowd on the opera stairway!"

"Oh, my truffles!" howled Anatole.

The company broke up. They all suddenly realized that they were strangers in a strange place. Each one desired to steal away home and be alone by himself.

On accompanying Mademoiselle Louison to her carriage the journalist said: "There, you see, that's the result of allowing one's self to be persuaded to accept the invitations of one of those half-barbarians. One never knows what sort of a crowd one will meet."

"Oh, dear, yes! He has quite put me out of humor," replied Louison, plaintively, all the time lifting her liquid eyes appealingly toward him. "But won't you accompany me to Trinity? I know that a quiet mass will be read there at midnight."

The journalist bowed acquiescence, and took his place beside her in the carriage.

While Mademoiselle Adele and Monsier Anatole, on the other hand, were passing the English apothecary in Rue de la Paix, the latter bade the coachman stop, and said, "No," beseechingly to her, "I think I must be put down here and have them give me something for my truffles. You won't be angry with me? But, you see—the music—"

"Please do not let it trouble you in the least, my friend. To be frank, I think that neither of us is in a specially happy mood to-night. Well, good-night! Auf Wiedershen to-morrow!"

She leaned back in the cushions of the carriage. She felt relieved. She was alone. And the frivolous creature wept, as if she had been whipped! She was then driven home.

Of course Anatole was suffering extremely from the truffles, but it seemed to him that he felt better the moment the carriage rolled away.

Since the time that they had become acquainted they were never so satisfied with one another as at this very moment of parting.

But the one who had best recovered from the affair was the "lieber Herr Doktor," for, being a German, he had become inured as far as the music was concerned.

Notwithstanding this, however, he resolved to stroll off to the brasserie Muller in Rue Richelieu, to drink over it a good square pint of German beer, with a bit of ham, perhaps.

"The sale of self-propelled commercial vehicles depends largely upon the road conditions of the State," says A. C. Downing, electrical sales engineer for the Studebaker Bros. Company of California. "For instance, if the farmer had hard roads over which to transport his produce he could effect a saving of from 45 per cent to 75 per cent of the cost of transportation per ton-mile. Not only would a betterment of the roads effect a saving in the transportation expenses but, with the use of self-propelled commercial vehicles, transportation would become much more practical. It has been the experience of the transfer companies of the different cities that the pulling in railroad yards and on roads leading up to warehouses has been much heavier than other city work. It is hardly necessary to comment upon the effect of such roads on both the horses and the vehicles on some of the cobble stone streets in this city especially in the downtown business district. Of course, there are a number of streets of the square surfaced cobble stones, but there are also many equipped with the round cobble stones. Anyone can appreciate the meaning of the wear and tear of such driveways."

TRY MURINE EYE REMEDY
For Red, Weak, Weary, Watery Eyes.
Murine Doesn't Smart—It Soothes Eye Pain.
Try Murine For Your Eyes.

EXCURSION
BY RAIL AND SAIL

$165 Round Trip

S. S. "CORSE" sails about January 28th for Manzanillo, Mexico. Rail route thence through the heart of the Republic, passing the Colima Volcano, Lake Chapala and many other points of interest en route to El Paso, Texas.

Rate includes meals and berth on steamer, rail fare Manzanillo to Mexico City and rail and Pullman accommodations thence home.

Stopovers — Choice of routes from El Paso—Side trip to Grand Canyon.

Delightful steamer trip over tropic seas. Enchanting scenery.

Ask any agents

CHARGEURS REUNIS
210 Battery Street, San Francisco

SANTA FE
673 Market Street, San Francisco 334 S. Spring Street, Los Angeles

SOUTHERN PACIFIC
884 Market St., 14 Powell St., San Francisco 600 S. Spring St., Los Angeles

We have the wall paper in stock that made this room. We made this mantel; we furnished the rugs, floorings, electric fixtures.
Can we make you one?

TAYLOR & SINCLAIR CO.
INTERIOR DECORATORS BUSH AT VAN NESS

Letters

Stewart Edward White's Latest

Now that Stewart Edward White has given us "The Riverman," it seems as though we had been waiting for it all these years since "The Blazed Trail," and "Blazed Trail Stories" came into our hands. The exploits and adventures of Jack Orde begin where those of Harry Thorpe and Wallace Carpenter were laid down. Their task was to cut the timber and haul it to the river bank, there to await the spring thaw. Orde's was to break out the rollways, guide the logs on their course and deliver them to his employers at the mills. "The Riverman" is essentially a novel of action. Men engaged in such arduous tasks have no time for mincing words and balancing notions, and their reasons for doing this or that are given in the results achieved, not the preliminary discussion. The scenes of the story are laid in the Michigan woods and in New York, but except for a temporary showing of the hero in another environment, while he energetically pursues the course of true love, the New York portion is negligible. "The Riverman" is at home in the woods and on the river, where he shows to his best advantage. Orde, like every other man who makes a success of big enterprises, was good-humored, and at the same time firm and executive. The necessities of his occupation called for the same qualities demanded from a commanding general, and the men over whom he exercised a tolerant despotism were such as respected the firm hand, the unyielding master, who knew when and how to relax. There is plenty of excitement, from the first page, where Orde, in charge of the drive for our old friends, Morrison & Daly, finds himself opposed by a pious and quixotic old grist mill owner who, keeping strictly within the law, has it in his power to hang up the drive and virtually put to waste all the work of the winter woods, until the last, some eight years later, when the same capable general, having discovered the rascality of his partner in the business they had built up, of contracting for all the driving of the river, cutting and milling their own timber, and a lake carrying trade, parts with that scheming individual after treating him to "the worst licking you ever heard tell of." Even the most cold and sluggish-blooded city dweller must thrill at the feats of hardihood, the superhuman efforts put forth by the drivers, and the rough and ready solutions of problems in engineering for which there is no time to figure and plan and calculate, and the circumventing of enemies both in the shape of human rivals and the forces of nature. While Jack Orde, the practically efficient member of the firm of Newmark and Orde, is moving heaven and earth in the interests of his business, and looking ahead into the future for the benefit of his family, he is fighting a secret enemy in the dark for Newmark, cold, selfish, emotionless, has seen a way in which he can wreck the business and cripple Orde personally without being suspected of his treachery. He makes an unpleasant contrast to the river drivers as well as to his open-hearted partner, and it is almost a pity that the men whose lives he risked in order to line his already heavy pockets were deprived of the opportunity to act as an audience when he finally received his just deserts at the hands of the exasperated Orde. "The Riverman," like its predecessor, "The Blazed Trail," is one of the best portrayals of an industrial enterprise that I know of. Published by McClure.

"The Better Treasure"

This is a short story by Mary Raymond Shipman Andrews, which appeared in one of the monthly magazines, has been taken in hand by the Bobbs-Merrill Co., and transformed into a very attractive holiday offering. The story takes up the belief of two children in the myth that on the night before Christmas the animals are permitted to indulge in human speech. Before bed time they had been regaled by their mother with a tale of treasure revealed in this way, and knowing that their own means were straightened they determined to interrogate the family horse. Their innocent escapade in stealing from their beds at midnight was the means of preventing a crime and bringing about a family reconciliation, as is foreordained in all good Christmas tales. By means of illustrations and marginal decorations appropriate to the season, a respectable sized volume of seventy-five pages has been made, which is at the same time attrative and ornamental, as well as readable.

"American Highways and Byways"

Though Clifton Johnson's latest addition to his series of "American Highways and Byways"—The Pacific Coast—will not add much in the way of actual information to the coasters, it will probably prove as welcome to the residents of other sections as its predecessors have been to ourselves, and in any event, it furnishes pleasant reading. Mr. Johnson avoids the large cities and the beaten track of tourists and trippers, confining his jaunts and journeys to the more or less obscure settlements and the trails and field paths. He meets and chats with queer characters, old settlers, tramps, school children, traders and hotel clerks, who regale him with bits of local history, reminiscences, stories and shrewd comments, all of which are repeated for us in a leisurely jaunt from Arizona to the Sound, and a side excursion into Nevada. He listens to the discussions of the farmers as to the worth and worthlessness of California, and the good old times long past in Oregon, but leaves us to draw our own inference that to the man who knows what he wants to do and goes about it sensibly and systematically there is a fair assurance of success. It is hardly fair to blame all the real estate booming on the native Californians, for in truth the cleverest of the manipulators learned the business in the older States and brought their methods with them. But when people are afflicted with "land fever," it is precisely like any other form of gambling, they are not to be stopped nor stayed until they are "stone-broke." A Rooseveltian ancedote is worthy of quotation. One of the guides at the Grand Canyon remarked: "The speech that the President made here always struck me as funny. He told us to save the canyon for our children and our children's children. It'll be here. What under heaven does he think we were going to do with a gorge thirteen miles across and a mile deep—fill it up?" In order that those who please to follow in his footsteps may use this volume as a guide book, Mr. Johnson has added to each chapter a note enumerating other attractions near by and easily reached, with just enough brief description to whet appetite. There are over sixty full page illustrations from photographs, some of scenery and natural attractions and others of incidents of the road. Decidedly "The Pacific Coast" is a desirable possession and one which intending settlers would do well to read before falling under the spell of the man with land to dispose of. Macmillan is the publisher.

"Those Lustrous Eyes are Murine Eyes"

MURINE EYE REMEDY

A Favorite Toilet Accessory

Has won many Friends as an Aid to the Restoration of Normal Conditions, Healthful Tone and Natural Brilliancy to Eyes that Need Care.

It has proven of great value in the Home as An Eye Tonic for Weak, Red, Inflamed & Itching Eyes & Eyelids.

As An Eye Insurance Tourists, Automobilists and others exposed to Strong Winds, Dust and Reflected Sunlight, which produce Irritation, Granulation, Ulceration and Weak Eyes, will find in Murine a Safe, Soothing Eye Lotion affording "Reliable Relief."

The Finishing Touch

Bewitchingly Costumed
In Costliest Gown,
For the Social Event,
At the South End of Town.

The "Finishing Touch"
To the Toilet is seen
In the Act above Pictured
"Two drops" of Murine.

Try Murine for the "Automobile Eye"

UNION LUMBER COMPANY

Redwood and Pine Lumber

Railroad Ties, Telegraph Poles, Shingles, Split Shakes, Etc.

CROCKER BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

NEW YEAR GREETING

Start 1909 aright. Telephone us about wiring or repairing.

Telephone Douglas 1185 and 1186.

LEVY ELECTRIC CO.

HURRY UP ELECTRICIANS

LEVY ELECTRIC WIRING COMPANY

Electric Trains, Cars, Dynamos, Motors, Batteries, Machinery, Magic Lanterns Moving Pictures, Telegraph and Telephones, Wireless Outfits, X-rays, Etc.

648 Sacramento St. San Francisco 1205 Polk Street

Auto Notes

An interesting demonstration of the durability of the modern automobile when properly handled is that of the 1906 Thomas Flyer, owned by Charles C. Moore, the well known motorist and President of the Chamber of Commerce. The car, which was one of the first of this make to arrive in San Francisco, has been driven over 35,000 miles, being in service steadily since the purchase. Tours to all sections of the State, weekly trips to and from Santa Cruz over the famous Redwood road, and daily service in the city streets, is the usage the machine has had, and notwithstanding numerous offers to buy or trade, coaxing and persuasion by salesmen, the well known clubman has refused to part with the old Green Flyer. "I guess the only way you can get Mr. Moore to purchase a new car is for me to run this old Thomas into a train, or off the ferry boat," said the chauffeur. "The longer we use it the better it runs. I have had it overhauled once in the past year, and otherwise our expense bills consist of gasoline and oil. Judging from present indications, the old Flyer will be running the streets when the ambition of the Million Club is realized."

Four Studebaker suburban cars arrived in this city recently from the factory at South Bend, Ind. For the past several weeks the local branch of the Studebaker firm has experienced a big demand for this type of the Studebaker, especially from the interior part of the State. Chester N. Weaver, manager of the local branch of the Studebaker company, accounts for this in that the car can be interchangably used for both pleasure and utility purposes, making it an ideal automobile for those who live in the country.

The Howard Automobile Company received their demonstrator in the new $1900 40 horsepower four-cylinder touring car recently and are now busy demonstrating to the large number of prospective customers who have been rather impatiently awaiting the arrival of this new much talked about Buick.

T. R. Finley, a prominent Santa Maria attorney, has just changed from another make to Diamond Tires and Marsh Rims on his Pope-Hartford car.

E. W. Twiggs, a local automobilist, arrived yesterday from his ranch near Walnut Creek, making the trip in his Oldsmobile touring car. Twiggs reports the roads muddy and rough, and says that few motorists are using their machines in that territory.

Frank Staley, formerly vice-president of the H. T. Hearsey vehicle company of Indianopolis, Ind., arrived in this city a few days ago as a guest of the Studebaker Bros.' Company of California. Staley is one of the most enthusiastic Studebaker automobile drivers in the southern part of the United States.

The Howard Automobile Company received two carloads of the '09 Buick "White Streaks," three of them cars with tourabout seats on the rear; these, being the first cars of this type to reach the coast, they have created considerable excitement along Automobile Row. The cars are being delivered to the customers who have been waiting. The Howard Automobile Company report a number of carloads of "White Streaks" now enroute from the factory, and they are rapidly catching up on their advance orders.

J. H. Covell, a prominent business man of Watsonville, Cal., to whom the local Studebaker concern sold a Studebaker E-M-F "30" roadster a few weeks ago, has been so well please with his car that he has placed orders with manager John H. Fagal of the automobile department of the Studebaker company for two more roadsters and three touring cars.

The San Francisco to Los Angeles trip is one of the most attractive for motorists, according to Mrs. C. A. Waller who, accompanied by her husband and a party of friends, recently returned from an extended tour of the southern part of the State and Mexico in their Thomas Flyer. The tour, which consumed six weeks of motor travel, took the local automobile enthusiasts from this city to Tia Juana, Mexico, includings stops at Santa Barbara, San Diego, Del Monte, Pasadena and Tia Juana.

"We had a great trip," said Mrs. Waller yesterday. "We found the roads in fair condition with the exception of Santa Barbara county, where they are in terrible condition. The touring in the southern part of the State has the same features as in Mexico, with the possible exception of the heat, the roads in the two countries being very much alike. We spent some time in Los Angeles and made short tours to the surrounding country, later going to San Diego. In a great many places we had to travel on the low speed, going through the deep sand and mud on the return journey. Our car ran fine all the way and at the finish was running as smoothly as when we started."

Among the prominent local automobilists who will attend the New York Show is E. P. Brinegar of the Pioneer Automobile Company, who will leave this week for New York. Besides attending the Annual Motor Exhibition in the metropolis, the local agent of the Thomas, Oldsmobile and Chalmers-Detroit cars will visit the factories of these respective machines. The trip will consume about two weeks.

L. H. George of Oakland is the latest purchaser of a Chalmers-Detroit. Dr. D. D. Crowley, also of the trans-bay city, took delivery this week of a six-cylinder 40 horsepower Thomas Flyer. Dr. Crowley has been a strong devotee of horses for the last twenty years.

M. E. Lombard of Portland, Ore., arrived in this city last Saturday in his Studebaker "40" touring car which he drove down from the Oregon metropolis. During the down trip Lombard encountered some bad roads but his machine gave a splendid exhibition of its abilities and despite the conditions, which he says the roads must be in as a result of the rains of Friday and Saturday, left Monday morning for his home town in his automobile.

Charles R. Parmenter of the Pioneer Automobile Company was discussing the merits of the Chalmers-Detroit "30" horsepower car with a prospective customer on the floors of the company salesroom, when the demonstrator of a competitor passed in a well advertised rival of the Chalmers-Detroit. "That's the new ——— car, is it not?" said the customer to Parmenter, who admitted the identity. "I will tell you what I will do. If you will take this car and beat that one to the top of the Golden Gate hills, I will place my order at once," said the prospect. In describing the events of the next fifteen minutes, Parmenter said: "The other fellow was five blocks ahead of me when I drove out of the salesroom, but I took after him and caught him at Pierce street. Between Pierce and Scott streets I waited for him and he came with full speed. We raced along even for a short distance, when I opened the throttle and pulled away from him, taking the hill to Devisadero street, and even on to Broderick on the high speed. The other auto went all right until he had to change to his low gear, then I walked away from him. The customer who made the run with Parmenter and whose name is L. H. Scott, kept his word and the winning driver brought back the order for a Chalmers-Detroit touring car.

The Studebaker Suburban

The adaptable car. Can be interchangeably used for both pleasure and utility purposes. Designed along lines to meet the demands of those who reside in the suburbs or in the country.

Features These embrace a stylish four-passenger runabout; a smart roadster or a light combination passenger and baggage car. For a score of different uses the car immediately suggests itself. Changes are simple and can be made quickly. The Studebaker Suburban is really an ideal automobile. It will pay you well to inspect our new arrivals. Demonstrations at your convenience.

FREMONT AT MISSION — Studebaker — PHONE DOUGLAS 3000

ANNOUNCEMENT

1909

OLDSMOBILE

We beg to announce arrival 1909 Oldsmobile, December 15th

The following complete line of 1909 models will be on exhibition on the above date. Every one of these cars is representative of the factory that makes it:

Model X Special Runabout	$2000
Model D Palace Touring Car	2750
Model D Toy Tonneau	2750
Model DR Flying Roadster	2750
Model DR Detachable Tonneau	2750
Model Z Touring Car, 6-Cylinder	4200
Model Z Runabout, 6-Cylinder	4200

Besides Limousine and Landaulet Bodies.

The 1909 Oldsmobile contains all that has made the car famous in the past, together with the improvements in keeping with the largest and most extensive factory in the country. Recognized the world over for durability. Investigate.

PIONEER AUTOMOBILE CO.

524 Twentieth St., Oakland — 901 Golden Gate Ave., San Francisco

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 20725.

ADELE RAYNAL, Plaintiff,

vs.

HENRI RAYNAL, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Henri Raynal, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County; or if served elsewhere within ten days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's wilfull desertion; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 8th day of January, A. D. 1909

(Seal)

H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By W. R. CASTAGNETTO, Deputy Clerk.

P. A. BERGEROT, Esq., 110 Sutter Street, San Francisco, Cal.,
Attorney for Plaintiff. 4-16-10

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY SALE OF REAL ESTATE SHOULD NOT BE MADE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 4823, N. S. Dept. 10 Probate.

In the Matter of the Estate of OLOF NELSON, Deceased.

JOSEPH A. STULZ, Administrator of the Estate of OLOF NELSON, Deceased, having presented his Petition herein, duly verified, praying for an Order of the Sale of the whole of the real estate of the said decedent, or so much or such parts thereof as said Court shall judge necessary or beneficial for the reasons and purposes in said Petition mentioned and set forth:

And said Petition having been filed, it is now ordered by said Court that all persons interested in the Estate of said deceased be, and they are hereby directed to appear before said Court on Thursday, the 11th day of February, 1909, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Courtroom of Department No 10, of said Superior Court in the Grant Building on the Southeast corner of Market and Seventh Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to show cause, if any they have, why an order should not be granted authorizing and directing said Administrator to sell the whole or so much of the real estate of said decedent as may be necessary.

It is further ordered that a copy of this Order be published at least once a week for four successive weeks in the Town Talk, a newspaper printed and published in the said City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

Dated, at San Francisco, this 4th day of January, 1909.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

EDWARD J. LYNCH, Attorney for Administrator,
Mills Building, San Francisco, Cal.

Endorsed: Filed Jan. 5, 1909. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk. By H. G. BENEDICT, Deputy Clerk. 1-9-5

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Action No. 13512.

MARY A. DALY, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, Defendants, Greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of MARY A. DALY, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above-entitled Court and County, within three (3) months after the first publication of this SUMMONS, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situated, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

Parcel Number One. Commencing at a point on the Westerly line of Devisadero Street, distant thereon sixty-three (63) feet nine (9) inches Southerly from the Southerly line of Jackson Street; running thence Southerly along said Westerly line of Devisadero Street twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet six (6) inches; thence at right angles Northerly twenty-five feet (25) feet, and thence at right angles Easterly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet six (6) inches to the point of commencement. Being a portion of Western Addition Block Number 497.

Parcel Number Two. Commencing at a point on the Northerly line of Clay Street, distant thereon one hundred and ten (110) feet Easterly from the Easterly line of Devisadero Street, and running thence Easterly and along the said Northerly line of Clay Street twenty-eight (28) feet nine (9) inches; thence at right angles northerly one hundred and twenty-seven (127) feet eight and one-quarter (8¼) inches; thence at right angles Westerly twenty-eight (28) feet nine (9) inches; and thence at right angles Southerly one hundred and twenty-seven (127) feet eight and one-quarter (8¼) inches to the Northerly line of Clay Street and the point of commencement. Being a portion of Western Addition Block Number 463.

Parcel Number Three. Commencing at the Southeasterly corner of Bush and Powell Streets; running thence Easterly along the Southerly line of Bush Street forty-five (45) feet; thence at right angles Southerly sixty-seven (67) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Westerly forty-five (45) feet to the Easterly line of Powell Street; and thence Northerly along said Easterly line of Powell Street sixty-seven (67) feet and six (6) inches to the point of commencement. Being a portion of Fifty Vara Lot Number 314.

Parcel Number Four. Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Folsom Street, distant thereon one hundred and ninety (190) feet Southerly from the Southerly line of Precita Place; running thence Southerly and along said Easterly line of Folsom Street twenty-seven (27) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Easterly one hundred and ten (110) feet; thence at right angles Northerly twenty-seven (27) feet and six (6) inches; and thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and ten (110) feet to the Easterly line of Folsom Street, and the point of commencement. Being Lot Number 32, as per Kingston's Map of Lots Numbers 148 to 153, Precita Valley Lands, filed in the office of the County Recorder of the City and County of San Francisco, July 20, 1865, and recorded in Map-Book E and F of Maps, at page 29.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit:

That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute; that her title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 31st day of December, A. D. 1908.

(Seal)

H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this Summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 9th day of January, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiff: A. TURTURICI and E. TURTURICI, residing at _____, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, have and claim an interest in Parcel Number Four of the land in said Complaint and hereinabove described, under a certain Agreement of Sale.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Attorney for Plaintiff, Rooms 1255-1257 Flood Bldg., 870 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal. 1-9-10

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Action No. 13477.

EDWARD FRANCIS McKITTRICK, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Lien Upon the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, Defendants, Greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Edward Francis McKittrick, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above-entitled Court and county, within three (3) months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Folsom Street, distant thereon one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet Northerly from the Northerly line of Twenty-second (22nd) Street and running thence Northerly along said line of Folsom Street twenty-four (24) feet; thence at a right angle Easterly one hundred and twenty-two (122) feet and six (6) inches; thence at a right angle Southerly twenty-four (24) feet and thence at a right angle Westerly one hundred and twenty-two (122) feet and six (6) inches to the said Easterly line of Folsom Street and point of commencement.

Being a portion of Mission Block Number 54.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit:

That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute; that his title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover his costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 29th day of December, A. D. 1908.

(Seal)

H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By M. P. BRUTEN, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 9th day of Janaury, 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiff: None.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Attorney for Plaintiff, Rooms 1255-57 Flood Bldg., 870 Market Street, San Francisco. 1-9-10

SUMMONS

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
In and for the City and County of San Francisco. Action No. 12782.

ERNESTINE KRELING and JAMES F. LEAHY, Plaintiffs,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Lien Upon the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants, Greetings.

You are hereby required to appear and answer the Complaint of Ernestine Kreling and James F. Leahy, Plaintiffs, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at the Southwesterly corner of Golden Gate Avenue and Steiner Street; running thence Westerly along the Southerly line of Golden Gate Avenue One Hundred and Thirty-seven (137) feet and Six (6) inches; thence at right angles Southerly One Hundred (100) feet; thence at right angles Easterly One Hundred and Thirty-seven (137) feet and Six (6) inches to the Westerly line of Steiner Street and thence at right angles Northerly along said line of Steiner Street One Hundred (100) feet to the point of commencement.

Being a portion of Western Addition Block Number Three Hundred and Eighty-one (381).

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiffs will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit, for a judgment of said Court as follows:

1st. Ascertaining and determining all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said real property and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, or whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description.

nd. Establishing the title of plaintiffs and of each of them to said real property and determining all adverse claims thereto, and adjudging that each of said plaintiffs is the owner in fee simple absolute of an undivided one-half of the said real property and every part thereof.

3rd. For such other and further relief as to the Court may seem proper, and for costs of suit.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 27th day of November, 1908.

(Seal)

H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By T. C. RYAN, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 12th day of December, A. D. 1908.

The following persons are said to claim some interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiffs, to-wit:

French Savings Bank, a corporation, whose address is No. 108 Sutter Street, San Francisco, California.

CAMPBELL, METSON, DREW, OATMAN & MACKENZIE,
Attyns. for Plaintiffs, Balboa Bldg., 595 Market St., S. F. 12-12-10

Following on the Appointment by Royal Warrant to His Majesty last month, we notice Messrs. Mackie & Coy's "White Horse Cellar" Whisky has just been awarded the Gold Medal for quality at the Franco-British Exhibition.

Louis Crepaux

(Member of Paris Grand Opera)

Has removed to his new studio,

Delbert Block, 943 Van Ness avenue, cor. O'Farrell.

Reception hours: 11:30 to 12, 3:30 to 5. except Wednesdays. Wednesdays in Oakland, 1154 Brush street.

Emil Steinegger

PIANOFORTE PLAYING

924 Grove St (above Fillmore), San Francisco.

For appointments phone Merritt 2845

Thursdays, 2701 Regent St., Berkeley

Mackenzie Gordon

TENOR

TEACHER OF SINGING { in all its branches, from the rudiments of tone formation to the highest finish and Completion of Public Singing.

Oratorio, Opera and Concert

By appointment only Phone Franklin 3594

Studio: 1350 FRANKLIN ST.

Louis H. Eaton

Organist and Director of the Music Trinity Church

Teacher of

PIANO, ORGAN, SINGING

1678 Broadway Phone Franklin 2244

Donald Maclean

SINGING—Pupil Seagle and De Rezske

Henri Etlin

PIANO—First Prize Paris Conservatoire

STUDIO, 1613 GREEN ST. Phone, Franklin 3153

Samuel M. Shortridge

ATTORNEY AT LAW

CHRONICLE BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO

Tel. Douglas 2176

Robert B. McMillan

ATTORNEY AT LAW

Has removed his Law Offices to the

CHRONICLE BUILDING, Fifth Floor

Phone Kearny 5969 Rooms 517-518

Knight & Heggerty

ATTORNEYS AT LAW and

PROCTORS IN ADMIRALTY

MERCHANTS EXCHANGE BLDG., S. F.

Rooms 626 and 630

DOWN TOWN NOW

CALIFORNIA OPTICAL CO. are now in their new store, 181 Post St., near Grant Ave. The Fillmore Street store is closed.

SUMMONS

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE STATE of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 19737. Dept. 10.

ELIZABETH J. ROBINSON, Plaintiff,
vs.
FREDERICK L. ROBINSON, Defendant.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Frederick L. Robinson, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County, or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's willful neglect of plaintiff on account of defendant's idleness, profligacy and dissipation, also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that unless you appear and answer as above required the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the Complaint, as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the Seal of the Superior Court of the State of California. in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 9th day of November, A. D. 1908.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By L. J. WELCH, Deputy Clerk.

ROBINSON & GETZ, Attorneys for Plaintiff,
45 Kearny Street, S. F. 11-21-10

SUMMONS.

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

GUSTAVE WEDELSTAEDT, Plaintiff
vs.
ELIZABETH WEDELSTAEDT, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Elizabeth Wedelstaedt, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above name plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed herein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's desertion and extreme cruelty; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the Complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 12th day of November, A. D. 1908.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By MILTON M. DAVIS, Deputy Clerk.

C. F. ADAMS, Attorney for Plaintiff,
378 Monadnock Bldg., S. F. 12-12-10

BONESTELL & CO.

PAPER

The paper used in printing this magazine is our Albion Book

California's Leading Paper House

116 to 124 FIRST ST. SAN FRANCISCO

Phone Kearny 1272

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of ALBERT JOHN SCHERZER, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Albert Scherzer and Ada C. Brown, Administrator and Administratrix, respectively, with the will annexed of the estate of Albert John Scherzer, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said Administrator and Administratrix with the will annexed at the office of Neal Power, room 204, No. 250 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned select as their place of business in all matters connected with said estate of Albert John Scherzer, deceased.

ALBERT SCHERZER,
ADA C. BROWN.

Administrator and Administratrix, respectively, with the will annexed, of the estate of Albert John Scherzer, deceased.

Dated San Francisco, December 16, 1908.

NEAL POWER, Attorney for Administrator,
250 Montgomery St., San Francisco.
SULLIVAN & SULLIVAN, and
THEO. J. ROCHE, Attorneys for Administratrix,
Humboldt Bank Bldg., San Francisco. 12-19-5

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of MINNIE SINGER, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Administrators, with Will annexed, of the estate of MINNIE SINGER, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten (10) months after the first publication of this notice to the said Administrators, with Will annexed, at the law office of A. Comte, Jr., No. 333 Kearny Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned selects as their place of business in all matters connected with said estate of Minnie Singer, deceased.

CHARLES HUFSCHMIDT,
HENRY HUFSCHMIDT,
GEORGE F. HUFSCHMIDT,

Administrators with the Will annexed of the estate of Minnie Singer, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, January 16, 1909.

A. COMTE, Jr., 333 Kearny St., S. F.,
Atty. for Administrators with Will Annexed. 1-16-5

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., San Francisco, Cal.

Guaranteed Capital	$ 1,200,000.00
Capital actually paid up in cash	$ 1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds	$ 1,479,043.00
Deposits December 31, 1908	$35,079,498.53
Total Assets	$37,661,836.70

Office Hours: 10 o'clock a. m. to 3 o'clock p. m., except Saturdays to 12 o'clock m. and Saturday evenings from 7 o'clock p. m. to 8 o'clock p. m. for receipt of deposits only.

OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohte; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourny; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.

HENRY P. TRICOU

NOTARY PUBLIC

508 CALIFORNIA STREET Phone Kearny 711

Residence, 852 Grove St. Phone Page 55

MEN

Afflicted with any private ailment consult the United Physicians and Surgeons. Strictly reliable specialists in Genito-Urinary, Blood and Skin diseases, and all reflex ailments of men. Prompt, efficient services; fees moderate; consultation free and confidential. Write or call. Hours 9 a. m. to 9 p. m. Sundays, 9 to 2.

A word to the wise is sufficient.

United Physicians and Surgeons

517 Twenty-third St., Oakland

Near Telegraph Avenue.

10 Third Street, San Francisco

Next to Call Building

MAYERLE'S EYE WATER, by mail 65c

Orders for Eye Glasses, Opera Glasses, Lorgnettes, sent by mail, $5, $10, $15.

DANGER SIGNALS

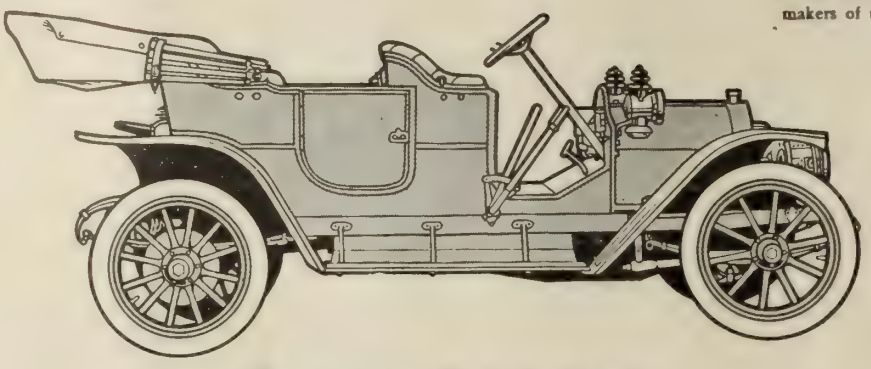
Painful, Sore, Red, Inflamed, Burning, Smarting, Itching, Scratching, Twitching, and Gluey Eyes, Heavy or Crusty Eyelids, Floating Spots, Cloudiness of Vision, Cross Eyes, Watery or Discharging Eyes, feeling like sand in the Eyes, Heavy and Crusty Eyelids are often Considered Dangerous Signals.

NEGLECTED EYESIGHT AFFECTS THE BRAIN

Mayerle's Glasses rest and strengthen the eyes and preserve the sight.

GEORGE MAYERLE

Granduate German Expert Optician, charter member American Association of Opticians and Vice-President Optical Specialist Association of America, 1149 Golden Gate Ave., between Webster and Buchanan sts. Phone Park 3153, San Francisco.



1000 Cars Already Delivered

Touring Cars
Tourabouts
Roadsters

Chalmers-Detroit "30"

"It's a Good Car"

A high-grade 4-cylinder, 5-passenger, 24-30 horse-power car, made by the makers of the Thomas-Detroit Forty.

Price $1500

"The only man who doesn't praise the Chalmers "30" is the man who doesn't own one."

806 of our $1500 "30's" have been delivered up to this date (October 31st, 1908). Not last year's models, but all of them built this year.

806 people are actually running these cars.

806 people know they are the best $1500 cars made, because they have proved them out by use.

806 people will tell you so if you ask them. And after all, are they not the best judges? Some are nearby you — some are your neighbors, perhaps. Ask them what they think. We will gladly abide by their judgment.

If you doubt our word, get hold of a mechanical engineer—let him examine and test the other cars and then ours. Take his word—we will rest our claim on that.

Our car is built by engineers who have designed more successful medium-priced cars than anyone else; engineers who put their names in print and stand back of their designs and statements with their reputations.

Any competent engineer will tell you that these men have now made the best low-priced car on the market.

Remember, 806 of these cars have been delivered already. They are our salesmen. Salesmen of other companies won't tell you the good points of our cars. They are not paid to do that. Don't expect them to do it. Advertising writers are paid enormous salaries to make other cars look good in print. Our cars look good to engineers—look good on the road—look good to people who use them—will look good to you if you will look. The proof of the pudding is in the eating. 806 people "are eating theirs now."

These Facts are Important

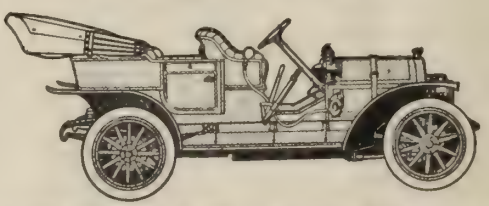
Our "30" car has the specifications known to belong to real touring cars. 110-inch wheel base, close coupled body, hung in the middle of the car, not away out over the rear axle to make room for a "big handsome hood" that don't make the car run, the hood isn't important—it's the engine under the hood. Ours is right, engineers will tell you so, multiple disc clutch, three speed transmission, floating rear axle, ¾ elliptic springs, quick detachable tires, etc.

One of our $1500 cars has been running 200 miles a day for 91 days. This run is from Detroit to Pontiac and back, and the car goes every day, rain or shine. 18,200 miles have been run so far without a miss, right on schedule, and it is still running. If you know anyone in Detroit, write to them to verify this statement. No other car at any price has ever done this before. That's the kind we sell. That's the kind 806 people are using now.

At the Sweepstake Races run over the Vanderbilt Cup course on Saturday, October 10th, our cars won first and second in their class, distancing everybody else, beating the next car 34 minutes, which means that our car was more than 25 miles ahead in a race of 150 miles. The "30" that won first averaged 48 miles per hour on this course, and the "30" that won second averaged 46 miles per hour.

The car that won the Vanderbilt Cup Race on Saturday, October 24th, averaged 64 miles per hour, which was record-breaking time. In comparison with this specially built racing car consider our "30", selling for $1500, averaging 48 miles per hour over this same course. We more than lapped every one of our competitors in the Sweepstake Race. Do you want any better evidence that our car is absolutely right, that our two-bearing crank shaft and our cylinders cast en bloc are the very best construction?

The consistent performance of the two cars shows it was not luck that won for us. One averaged 48 miles per hour, the other 46 miles. Further than that, the car that won second in this race was driven by a man who had never seen the car until an hour before he drove it in the race. We had to get a new driver because the driver we had was disqualified the day before the race because he hit a cow on the course. This car that hit the cow had only the radiator damaged and went into the race the next day and won second.



Our cars in this race were stock cars. There are 806 cars just like them running on the streets and roads of this country. We don't build special cars for racing purposes and build other cars to deliver to our customers. The cars we deliver to customers are the same cars that we enter in races.

In a Nutshell

We have sold 3047 cars to dealers, 806 of these have already been delivered. We are shipping from 15 to 18 cars a day.

The only man who doesn't praise the Chalmers "30" is the man who doesn't own one.

Chalmers-Detroit "Forty" Touring Car, $2750

The Chalmers-Detroit "Forty" is a dandy car, as a thousand users know. It is by all odds the best medium-priced car on the market.

The day of mere extravagance in automobile buying is over. People nowadays will not pay $4000 or $5000 merely for the purpose of saying that they spent that much for an automobile.

What more could you get for $4000 or $5000 than you can get in the Chalmers-Detroit "Forty" at $2750? More power, and more weight, perhaps. Why more power? The "Forty" will do anything that any other car will do. As far as more weight is concerned, it will merely add to the cost of upkeep.

The "Forty" is the speediest, quietest, most economical car of its class. It has won first place as a hill climber; it has won dozens of contests in speed and endurance.

So, far, we have delivered 178 of the 1909 "Forty." Our capacity for the year is only 500. Last year we ran about 200 short of the demand, and there is sure to be a shortage this year. So that if you want a "Forty" please place your order now, either for immediate delivery or for future delivery.

Made in two styles — touring car and roadster — $2750.

PIONEER AUTOMOBILE COMPANY

901 GOLDEN GATE AVE., SAN FRANCISCO

524 TWENTIETH ST., OAKLAND

Vol. XVII. No. 856. SAN FRANCISCO, JANUARY 23, 1909. PRICE, 10 CENTS

SAN FRANCISCO TOWN TALK

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

Sherman, Clay & Co. occupy this entire building at the corner of Kearny and Sutter Streets, San Francisco. This building has been given the honor of being called the Musical Headquarters of California.

MAIL ORDERS

For Music and Musical Merchandise of Every Description

If you ever find you cannot call at our store, if you live out of town, or are temporarily unable to visit us personally, by all means take advantage of the splendid facilities of our great mail order department.

We are equipped to give immediate and intelligent attention to all orders received by phone, telegraph or mail and are willing and prepared to send to any address catalogues, descriptive matter or lists.

Thousands of people order all their sheet music of us knowing that every order is promptly filled by expert mail order clerks.

Among the most frequently ordered articles by mail are the following:

Classical, Popular, Vocal and Instrumental Music — Band and Orchestra Music — Foreign and Domestic Editions

Scores of all the Operas — Collections of College Songs, Piano Pieces, Duets, Dances, Etc.

Late Songs as sung in all the the Theatres Send for lists of any of the above — Player Piano Music in rolls Send for catalog first

Talking Machines and Records Beautiful catalogs for the asking — Band Instruments Entire band outfitted by mail. Special catalog

Guitars, Mandolins, Banjos and Violins — Music Boxes, Music Cabinets, Etc.

We are Agents for

S. S. Stewart Banjos — Buffet Clarinets, Saxaphones and Oboes — Besson and Co. Band Instruments

Rittershausen Flutes and Piccolos — Neuner & Hornsteiner Violins — Victor Talking Machines — Steinway Pianos

A. B. Chase Pianos — Estey Pianos and others — Farrand-Cecilian Player Pianos — Estey Organs

Send for Catalogs of Anything — Be Specific---State What You Want — Teachers' Trade a Specialty

SHERMAN, CLAY & CO.

STEINWAY PIANOS — VICTOR TALKING MACHINES

KEARNY AND SUTTER, SAN FRANCISCO

Leading Hotels and Resorts

HOTEL ST. FRANCIS

UNION SQUARE

SERVICE

Under the management of JAMES WOODS

FAIRMONT HOTEL

Inseparably associated with the social life of San Francisco

Management of PALACE HOTEL COMPANY

HOTEL DEL MONTE

Near quaint old Monterey—125 miles from San Francisco.

Uniting all the pleasures of outdoor life under ideal conditions with the conveniences and luxuries of the best metropolitan hotels.

For rates, reservations, etc., address H. R. WARNER, Manager.

BYRON

HOT SPRINGS HOTEL

One of the world's most curative springs.

One of America's most comfortable and refined hostelries.

See Southern Pacific information bureau, James Flood Building, or any Southern Pacific agent or Peck-Judah Co., 789 Market street, or address Manager at hotel

HOTEL DEL CORONADO

CORONADO, CAL.

Coronado is essentially an Hotel of quiet elegance. It has the most equable climate of which any knowledge exists. Hotel Del Coronado has unique facilities for out-of-door recreation. Polo, golf, tennis, boating, fishing and motoring on good roads. Rates $4 per day upward. For special information apply to MORGAN ROSS, Manager, Coronado, or H. F. NORCROSS, representative, Los Angeles.

HOTEL CARLTON

Telegraph Avenue at Durant

BERKELEY

A FIRST-CLASS TRANSIENT AND FAMILY HOTEL

MRS. W. F. MORRIS, Proprietor

formerly of Hotel Cecil, 960 Bush Street, San Francisco

Hotel Westminster

Los Angeles, Cal.

Fourth and Main Sts.

American Plan, Reopened

Rates per Day $2.50 Rooms without Bath

Rooms with Bath $3.00, $3.50 and $4.00

European Plan

$1.00 per day and up, with bath $1.50 and up

F. O. JOHNSON - - Proprietor

YOSEMITE VALLEY

OPEN ALL YEAR

YOSEMITE VALLEY RAILROAD CO.

Why not plan a Holiday Trip to California's Wonderland for yourself and friends.

It is a quick, comfortable trip; daily train service. And Yosemite at this time is no less attractive than in other seasons. First class hotel service at El Portal and in the valley. For through tickets, see Southern Pacific or Santa Fe, or address

O. W. LEHMER, Traffic Manager, Y. V. R. R., Merced, Cal.

LEVY'S CAFE

Third and Main Streets, Los Angeles, Cal.

Much the Best Place to Get Fine Things to Eat and Listen to Choice Music at Popular Prices.

TOWN TALK

THE PACIFIC WEEKLY

Vol. XVII. San Francisco, January 23, 1909. No. 856.

RICHARD M. HOTALING

Who will play a special season of four weeks in legitimate drama at Ye Liberty Playhouse, Oakland, commencing February 1st.

TOWN TALK

Published Weekly by
TOWN TALK PUBLISHING COMPANY
Theodore F. Bonnet.....Editor
Ralph A. Grover.....Manager
88 First St., cor. Mission, San Francisco. Telephone Douglas 2612.

SUBSCRIPTION—One Year, in advance, $4.00; six months, $2.25; three months, $1.30; single copies, 10 cents. Foreign subscriptions (countries in Postal Union), $5.00 per year. For sale by all Newsdealers.

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter.

The Trade in San Francisco supplied direct by us. Outside of San Francisco by the San Francisco News Co.

For foreign and local advertising rates address 88 First Street, San Francisco.

Los Angeles office, 734 Central Building.

We decline to return or to enter into correspondence as to rejected communications; and to this rule we can make no exception. Manuscripts not acknowledged within four weeks are rejected.

The Liberty Bell

Several Pacific Coast cities are preparing to hold celebrations during the next few years, and there is a concerted movement to procure the Liberty Bell of 1776 as an attraction. It is suggested that the revered relic will have an appreciable influence on the morals of grafters and higher-ups, while the lesser fry of boodlers and criminals generally may be expected to curl up before it like caterpillars on a hot shovel. A guard of honor is to be provided, and already the municipal authorities of those communities through which it is only to pass en route are preparing for receptions at the railroad stations, with little girls in best white muslins, flags and flowers and military salutes. In the larger communities, where the bell is to sojourn for a time neither expense nor trouble is to be spared to do it honor. The bell is in the custody of the Mayor of Philadelphia, and heaven and earth are being moved to find arguments to persuade him to consent to the pilgrimage. Of course there is no one so narrow-minded and obstinate as to offer the slightest objection to having the inspiring relic brought to the Pacific Coast, but let us not delude ourselves by indulging the fatuous hope that it may send a benign effluence into the lives of our criminals of high and low degree and cause them to see the error of their devious ways. If the Liberty Bell possesses any efficacy as a moral agent Philadelphia has more need of it than any other American city. Within the sound of that bell there has been more graft than anywhere else in the United States.

Solving the Divorce Problem

Bishop Doane thinks he has found a solution to the divorce problem. It is the familiar one of visiting all divorced persons with the penalty of social ostracism, but while there is no denying the efficacy of the remedy, when it comes to the application one is reminded of the famous conference of rats which resolved to bell the cat. Who can be depended upon to do the ostracizing? It is an easy matter to sit down in a study and picture a social world strictly divided, with the goats in one flock and the sheep in the other. It is not quite so simple to bring others to the same way of thinking or to induce them to live up to what they are willing to profess when they see no immediate need to apply the doctrine. Divorce is virtually so universal that there are few families not affected by it, and while many might find it a great convenience to be able to ignore some objectionable in-law or poor cousin, it is quite another matter to be compelled to cold-shoulder a rich aunt from whom one cherishes expectations. Blood is thicker than water, and parents can be neither expected nor compelled to treat their own children with contumely, nor can children be encouraged to set themselves against parents at the behest of outsiders. "Honor thy father and thy mother" is an ancient command, and though it carries promise for the obedient it is not qualified by any restrictive clause. Social ostracism, to be effective, must have the approval of those classes to whom we naturally look for leadership. There must be some considerable body whose opinions carry weight with the majority of mankind, and whose actions bear testimony to their convictions. In this matter of family disruption where are we to look? Teachers and preachers, doctors and lawyers and lawgivers have been equally ready to take advantage of their opportunities to free themselves from irksome bonds. The judge on the bench who is called upon to listen to the testimony on which a household is to be disrupted may have been himself divorced. Society is in such a condition of progressive polygamy that prospective hostesses are often in despair when it comes to arranging their lists of guests lest yesterday's husband may be brought into contact with tomorrow's wife, and it is a dangerous proceeding to inquire for the welfare of a spouse who has been lost sight of for a few weeks, for the chances are that the preliminary steps towards a separation have already been taken, with corresponding progress in the direction of a new mating. It is true enough that people who cannot be reached by any other means will hesitate when their action may result in having gates of a social paradise closed in their face, but in the present condition of society there are enough already on the outside and with enough of the desirable things of this life distributed among them to make a new paradise of their own toward which the elect will cast longing eyes. As long as our laws sanction divorce it is difficult to see how the disapproval of a part, even if a large part, of the public is to affect the matter.

Tinkering With the Penal Code

It has been said that penal legislation is the keystone of a nation's public law. It has also been said that it requires long experience to find the proper means between a due protection of indicted persons and an equally due protection of society; "partly because it is one of the most difficult things in all spheres of action to induce irritated power to limit itself as well as to give an indicted person the full practical benefit of the theoretic sentence, easily pronounced like all theory, that the law holds every one innocent until proved not to be so." Such were the notions of old fogies who imagined that it was of primary importance to safeguard individual liberty and render it impossible to oppress the weak or fasten crime upon the innocent. Among these old fogies was Montesquieu who ascribed the very highest importance to well regulated and carefully elaborated penal trials. He asserted that it was "upon the excellence of the criminal laws that chiefly the liberty of the citizen depends." Among the most notable of the old fogies that preoccupied themselves in this elementary field of speculation were the Fathers of the Republic who consecrated themselves to the task of securing "the blessings of liberty to themselves and their posterity." They burnt the midnight oil poring over Magna Charta, the Petition of Rights, the Bill of Rights and the rules of the common law, and whatever they found in those historic instruments designed to safeguard individual liberty they carefully inserted in their own system, improved by clearer expression, strengthened by heavier sanctions and broadened into more general application. What a lot of zeal was wasted when our Constitution was in process of construction! Now that we have emerged from the primitive darkness that enveloped the untrained intellect of such men as Hamilton, Jefferson, Jay and Washington, it is really surprising to learn how little those immature statesmen knew of the principles of government and to what little purpose they studied the history of seven centuries of contest with arbitrary power on the other side of the Atlantic. Properly to apprehend the feebleness of the intellectual faculties that experimented in governmental matters in the early days of the Republic one must get in touch with those profound thinkers and erudite philosophers of the San Francisco Bar Association who have recommended to the Legislature the taking of certain steps toward reforming the penal code. It has dawned on these sages that the organic law of the nation is a tissue of false principles, and having faith in the sacramental efficacy of every code and constitutional amendment they have recommended several propositions which, if adopted, will render citizenship in California something quite different from citizenship under the Federal government. It is their beneficent purpose to place us as a community in such a state of security that we shall be able to unbar our doors and give the family plate an airing at night on the front steps. What other effect their amendments would have we are not prepared to say, though we believe we have an inkling thereto. For the present we are disposed only to celebrate the result of the calm deliberations of the fledgling statesmen. Here are some young men who have not yet had time to distinguish themselves in the practice of their profession, and who serve well to illustrate the superior mental capacity of the twentieth century lawyer. Trained for the bar along a royal road which leads through no byways of history and tradition, no circuitous paths marked by the mile posts of philosophic development but straight across from text-book to code, it is natural they should consider themselves qualified for revolutionary achievement. With that celerity of judgment which is a characteristic of quick education these young lawyers have pronounced the doom of several principles with which the fathers of the Republic and the old fogie law writers of England were ardently and blindly infatuated. It has been thought that there were no points so important in the penal trial of a free country as the principle that no one shall be held to incriminate himself and that the indictment as well as the verdict must be definite and clear; "certainly," says Francis Lieber, "none are more essential." "Certainly," says the young lawyers of the Bar Association, "none are more prejudicial to the interests of the people." And doubtless the young lawyers are right. While it is quite true that many volumes have been written in elucidation of the importance of these principles this only goes to show what a prodigious amount of bosh can be produced in support of error. The fact is, as we learn from our brilliant young luminaries of the Bar Association, the administration of justice is to be greatly improved not merely by extinguishing the principle of immunity from self-accusation and abolishing specific indictment, but by going further and empowering the majority of a jury to render a verdict and authorizing the court to instruct on the facts as well as on the law and prohibiting reversals except when it clearly appears that there has been a miscarriage of justice. After reflecting on these reformatory propositions urged by the learned, if briefless, representatives of the Bar Association, we find ourselves somewhat at a loss to account for their moderation. It is obvious enough that they would do away with the substance of trial by jury, but there are other loop-holes of escape for the citizen which they have entirely neglected. What about the principle which protects a man from being twice put in jeopardy of life or limb for the same cause? Is that pernicious principle to be countenanced? And then there is the principle of habeas corpus, and the Constitutional inhibition against cruel or unusual punishment. These things ought to be attended to before the State goes to the demnition bow-wows. Meanwhile it must be admitted that our brilliant young lawyers have attended to matters of vital interest. Succinctly stated their proposition is to abandon the accusatorial trial and adopt the inquisitorial trial as it was conducted under the most despotic of governments.

Public Taste

It is said that the question whether the public has a taste for plays dealing with salacious themes is one of vital interest to theatre managers. As it is at present evident that the public has a taste for good plays that do not deal with such themes we cannot see why the managers should feel that the question is one with which they should be seriously concerned. As a matter of fact public taste is comparatively passive and the pabulum offered in the theatre is swallowed without being judged or sifted. The public has a greedy but not a discriminating appetite; it does not differentiate the true from the false in the delineations of life; and the culture of the general is not yet sufficient to distinguish the pure from the meretricious. The public will accept with enthusiasm any play that tells an interesting story in an interesting fashion without much questioning whether the emotion is genuine and virtuous, or whether the interest is not aroused by unsafe and unwarrantable means. The dear old public when left to its own instincts is but little removed from primeval savagery in judgment, in taste, in inclination and desire. The majority would be glad to witness exhibitions of open wantonness were they sufficiently courageous to defy that embodiment of hypocrisy known as public opinion. It should be the object of theatre managers not to ascertain the predilection of public taste but to refine and educate it; but at present this matter is being attended to by the playwrights who are beginning to take a serious interest in their art, and who are finding it just as profitable to give us representations of men and women exalted by noble sentiments as to portray the shifts and devices of perverted offenders against the moral law. Less than a decade ago Thalia, lured from the path of dramatic purity, was consorting with riggish letters in the gutter. The inordinate favor of defiant viciousness was one of the most amazing phenomena of the day. Raciness that had been veiled in equivocality in "Pink Dominoes" and kindred comedies cast aside all pretense to delicacy, and in "The Truth," "Mlle. Fifi," "The Gay Lord Quex" and "Zaza," lust was exalted into love, adultery and seduction were represented as subjects of drawing room con-

---

No Branch Stores—No Agents.

DON'T BE LED TO BELIEVE THAT ALL READY-TO-WEAR CLOTHES BELONG TO THE SAME FAMILY. SOME CLOTHES ARE MADE ONLY FOR DEPARTMENT STORES. SOME ARE MADE SPECIALLY FOR HABERDASHERY SHOPS. THE KIND OF CLOTHES WE SELL ARE BY EXCLUSIVE MAKERS WHO WON'T SELL EITHER SHOP.

This Label Makes The Hub Chas Keilus & Co. San Francisco. You Feel Safe.

Some folks are under the impression that all ready-made clothes are the same. We beg to differ, for substantial reasons. In a shop like ours we only sell clothes. We don't know a thing about other goods. All we know is men's clothes, that's all. Our entire attention given to men's clothes, then how can a haberdasher or mixed merchant compare his clothes knowledge with ours—nothing doing. They are generally the "good things" for "poor makers."

JEWELERS' BUILDING

Post Street, Near Kearny, San Francisco.

versation, and the manners of the bagnio were paraded under pretense of mirroring life in the fens and slumps of society. Did public taste revolt against scenic bawdry on the stage? Not at all. The public clamored for the worst. What brought about the improvement in public taste? Education achieved through the medium of a playwright by the name of Ibsen. It was not the Ibsen drama that redeemed the public; Ibsen is still believed to be exclusively for highbrow consumption. It was the influence of Ibsen on the playwrights of all civilized countries, an influence which has had as great effect on the drama as Wagner had on music. Ibsen may not have contributed directly many salutary elements to the morality of our time, but he has impressed us with the availability of human consciousness as a field for dramatic exploitation. The public has not been educated up to the Ibsen drama, but it has been educated up to the drama of his imitators, which speaks in one breath to the cultured and the uncultured masses in more or less edifying strains and with some moral earnestness. The dear old public appreciates what it gets, but doesn't know why. The obtuseness of the public in such matters is well illustrated by its attitude toward the press. Years ago there were in this country several weekly journals devoted to the pictorial exploitation of crime and all sorts of sensational and indecent happenings. Everyone knew what they were, and they were never introduced into respectable families. The field occupied by these purveyors of filth and indecency was invaded some years ago by the daily press, which has become even more vulgar than the unspeakable Police Gazette, the brazenest of the hebdomadal trulls, and far more demoralizing because of its success in pretending to be unobjectionable and fit for universal perusal. As a consequence have the affections of the dear old stupid public been alienated from the yellow journals? Occasionally the daily press is reprobated for its vulgar and disgusting sensationalism, but it is obvious that the "palladium of our liberties" is giving the pee-pul precisely what they want. It is obvious because the most sensational newspapers are the most successful, and because some of the old-fashioned journals which survive in a few cities, though they are ably edited, are gradually dying of inanition. Are the publishers of our yellow journals concerned with the question whether the public has a taste for salacious themes? Indeed they are, and, the more salacious the better, is the motto of these molders of public opinion, many of whom are vociferous civic patriots and reformers, consumed with a passion for the welfare of the peepul and eager to safeguard the institutions of their country against all corroding influence. The acuteness of their moral sense is revealed by their plea in palliation of their conduct: The people want vulgarity and scandal and we give it to them; we are catering to the public taste. This is the plea of men who believe they are conscious of the sacred responsibilities of newspaper publishers under a democratic form of government and under a Constitution which guarantees the freedom of the press upon the theory that the primary object of a free press is to enlighten and instruct the sovereign people. It is the plea of men who lament the audacities of corrupt politicians and the immoralities of financiers, and preach the importance of awakening a public conscience to which they are constantly and insidiously administering copious lethal draughts.

GIERSBERGER WINES
The wine of merit and quality all around the world. Compare it with the best wines and we are satisfied.
THEO. GIER WINE COMPANY
Phone Oakland 123 1225-1227 BROADWAY, OAKLAND

Henpecking in Literature

The henpecked husband has always been a favorite subject for playwright and fictionist, and the woes and worries of the poor, down-trodden one, have excited mirth or wrath, according as the question has been treated. From Euripides and Socrates down to the hero of the latest best-seller, the roll has been called through fact and fiction, and we are expected to believe that but for the wives which fate decreed to the good and the great still greater and better things would have been accomplished by them. It is a question, however, whether in many, if not all instances, it was not the spurring of these restless mates which really drove the men to action. Charles Dickens lamented that no one knew the misery of being bound to a woman incapable of sharing or even comprehending his pursuits. Socrates has been compassionated for centuries because his philosophical ponderings were interrupted by a virago of a wife who insisted on propounding queries as to the forthcoming of the ingredients for the next meal and the wherewithal for cooking it. Much is made of the unfortunate circumstances of Thomas Carlyle, who, in truth, was all his life more or less of a big baby eager to be petted. He nagged his wife quite as effectively as she ever dominated him. The truth is that a very large majority of the unfortunate "Henry Pecks" were writing men with "temperament," which is to say, uncertain tempers; and with pen in hand they never hesitated to magnify and make copy of their passing emotions. Nor would a man like Dickens, who was typical, who could walk the streets and cry over a scene conjured out of his own imagination be very likely to miss any of the points of a real situation. It is an easy matter for the fictionist to represent the husband as a simple, honest, hard-working soul possessed of all the virtues, but in real life there is generally some opportunity to look at the other side of the shield. We may revel in Thoreau's "Walden" and "Week on the Concord and Merrimac" with a clear conscience, for we know that wife and children were not going hungry and shoeless while he loafed and invited his soul, but there are few who have read what little there was left of the journal and letters of Louise Alcott without seeing between the lines and reconstructing "Little Women" with "less of the gold and more of the gray." Perhaps a little pecking there might have been to the purpose, for Rebecca Harding Davis, in her reminiscences, has the courage to say that A. Bronson Alcott could have employed his time to better purpose by putting his small skill at carpentry to use in earning a support for his family than in wandering about giving rhapsodic, platitudinous "talks" which no one cared to listen to and which did not bring in a dollar. Occasionally the henpecked husband may be a capable man who lets a virago of a wife impose upon him, but the probabilities are in favor of his being some incapable, soft, useless creature, void of individuality, and without resistance enough to assert himself. Without the stimulus of the necessary peck in time, he would probably vegetate, and instead of accomplishing wonderful things as a result of the tranquility of his hand he would be more likely to degenerate into the condition of a town pauper, lacking the initiative even to become a tramp.

ROBERTSON'S
A BOOK STORE
1539 VAN NESS AVENUE
CARD PLATES .·. MONOGRAMS
WEDDING INVITATIONS
A. M. ROBERTSON

From Goethe

O'er yon upland
Spreadeth peace.
Scarce tree-bough stirreth,
Murmurs cease.
The woodbirds low-wards
Flit along,
To muteness hushing
Dulcet song.

Peace wingeth near?
Ah, watch!
Soon will she light her here.

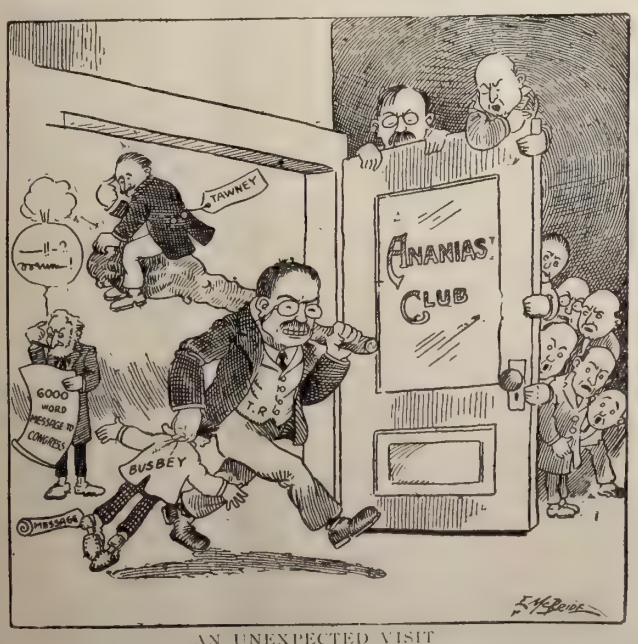
—Jennett Humphreys.

Perspective Impressions

It is unfortunate that the Japanese are so sensitive. Their honor appears to be less than skin deep.

Nothing is more inspiring than the spectacle of reconciliation. And yet there are men who are proud of their vindictiveness.

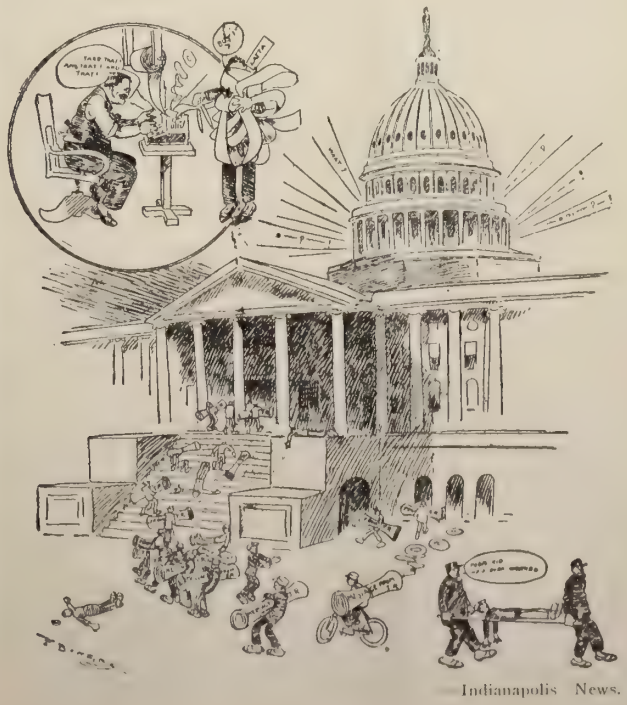
Much will be forgiven if he doesn't disappoint us by failing to go to Africa.



In all probability we shall learn that extracting water from a stone is not any more difficult than getting permission to pipe it from Hetch-Hetchy.

The reformers are making great headway at Sacramento. They have succeeded in exciting the resentment of some of our illustrious statesmen who seem to be disinclined to be intimidated.

The Examiner has taken the Hon. Franklin K. Lane to task for his "airy way of disposing" of the ship subsidy question. Tut! tut! the airy way is the easy way. Mr. Lane practiced law in an airy way and that is why he found it more advantageous to practice politics for a living.



Even the pessimist must confess that human nature cannot be so bad as he imagines when he reflects that man does not fight with half the courage for his own life that he exhibits in the protection of another's. Men who were not considered brave died fighting for their children; also for their country.

According to the Hon. Francis J. Heney, "If a man charged with crime was presumed to be innocent the law would not arrest a man, nor would it require an innocent man to furnish bail." Is it possible that when the learned Mr. Heney was studying law he did not learn that the principle of bail springs from the principle of the presumption of innocence?

AN UNEXPECTED VISIT

St. Louis Republic.

Indianapolis News.

In His Footsteps

Why It is Impossible to be a Good Christian Even for a Week Unless We Have Been Good Citizens for Many Years; and Why the Professing Christian Seldom Attains to Eminence in His Profession.

By Democritus

I have not heard that any San Francisco Christians are thinking of emulating the example of their brethren in the Eastern States in the effort to "live like Christ for a week." Some of our local Christians might attempt to live like Christ for a day but in the existing condition of popular sentiment upon matters of public import I doubt if any professing Christian however sincere, could weather the gales of opinion that blow from every point of the social compass. I am certain that before he had walked far in the footsteps of Him who said unto Peter, "Come!" he would find himself in the plight of that doubting apostle after he had descended from the ship in the sea of Gallilee—who, "when he saw the wind boisterous, was afraid; and beginning to sink, he cried saying, 'Lord, save me!'" incurring as did Peter the merited rebuke: "O thou of little faith, wherefore didst doubt?"

Here in San Francisco our professing Christians are trying to "live like Christ" only as it suits their convenience. If it is easy to love their neighbors none can be more Christlike; if the doing unto others as they would have others do unto them does not involve an acquittal by a jury of somebody whom the professing Christian has already pronounced guilty upon accusation, the Golden Rule will be observed with strict fidelity. But let the professing Christian's neighbors utter an opinion concerning the graft prosecution, for eminent example, contrary to the opinion of the professing Christian and see how long the professing Christian will "follow in His footsteps"; let the initiative of forgiving the sins of another rest with the professing Christian who has suffered by the sinning and see how reluctant he will be to reverse the conditions by forgiving the trespasses of the other as he would have Our Father which art in heaven forgive his.

I suppose there are persons in this community who think they are pretty good Christians; but I know that if any such there are they deceive themselves. The best men in this community are those who without making a parade of their religion, without trying to reform their ungodly neighbors, without passing snap judgments on the guilt or innocence of those accused of crimes and misdemeanors, attend strictly to the business of their own lives, sweeping and garnishing their own houses before they suggest that their neighbor abate the nuisance in his backyard, consulting a competent oculist as to the possibility of removing the mote from their own eye before they try to pluck the beam out of the eye of the man next door. The best men in this city do not go to church. They do not stand in the temple and the market place thanking their god that they are not like other men. They fear to judge their fellow men lest they be themselves judged. They live as virtuously as they can and when they have sinned they are sincerely repentant. They are law abiding citizens not because they fear the law or because they prefer to keep out of the penitentiary, but because they feel that they are themselves part of the law and are in that degree responsible for the common morality. These men are good citizens not because they are Christians but because they are human beings. It is not necessary to teach these citizens the precepts of any special creed. They know the right from the wrong and they are righteous because it is more satisfying to their consciences to do right than to do wrong. These men are a punishment unto themselves when they do wrong. Many professing Christians are able to satisfy their consciences with the knowledge that nobody yet knows how bad they are. It is not the wrongdoing that disturbs these men, but it is the possibility that they may be found out that keeps them awake o' nights.

Now let us see how impossible it is to be "like Christ" even for a week. I paraphrase from the instructions of Christ to his apostles: To be like Christ is to be as sheep in the midst of wolves and it is therefore necessary to be as wise as serpents and as harmless as doves. Beware of men, for they will deliver you up to grand juries and if you refuse to accept immunity from them on condition that you testify against the higher ups, they will scourge you in their synagogues. When they persecute you in this city, flee ye into another. Remember that a good man out of the good treasure of the heart bringeth forth good things whether he be a professing Christian or a candle-eating Tartar whose highest conception of a deity is a red camel with three humps. Forget not that every idle word that you shall speak you shall give account thereof in the day of judgment. Therefore read not the idle words in the newspapers nor heed the idle words of the attorneys for the prosecution. For by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned.

Be poor in spirit and inherit the kingdom of heaven. Mourn that ye may be comforted. Be meek and inherit the earth. Hunger and thirst after righteousness that ye may be filled. Be merciful that ye may obtain mercy. Be pure in heart that ye may see God. Be peacemakers that ye may be called the children of God. Permit yourselves to be persecuted for righteousness's sake so that yours may be the kingdom of heaven. For it has been said unto you that except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the reformers and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven. And above all don't forget that it has been written that whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause shall be in danger of the judgment; and whosoever shall say to his brother, Raca, (which is one of the short and ugly words of the Roosevelt vocabulary), shall be in danger of classification as an undesirable citizen; and whosoever shall say, Thou fool, shall be in danger of hell fire, or, more likely, of being smitten on the cheek by the fool, whereupon it is thy duty as a good Christian to turn to him the other also. And if any man shall sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also, for otherwise the lawyers will get both coat and cloak. Give to him that asketh thee, and from him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away. Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you. Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect.

It is not easy to be a complete Christian. It is much easier to be merely a professing Christian. The outward forms of Christianity as they are prescribed by the two-and-seventy jarring sects, are not difficult to observe. The church-going habit is usually acquired in early youth against the inclination of the youth, and even good habits are hard to break when once formed. Hypocrisy is another habit, but in most instances it is so natural to the wearer that he would feel insulted if told that he is a hypocrite. Bigotry has been so long the habit of the professing Christian that it is now regarded as a professional Christian virtue. If it were not for the laws that forbid cruel and unusual punishments all men would be compelled to be professing Christians, and gradually the profession would narrow to the sect operating the most excrutiating machinery of faith or the sect able to

J. C. WILSON
BROKER
Private Wire Chicago and New York
Member New York Stock Exchange, Chicago Board of Trade and Stock and Bond Exchange, San Francisco
LOCAL AND EASTERN STOCKS AND BONDS
Main Office, Mills Bldg. Tel. Kearny 482.
Branch Office, Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles.

expound its doctrines in arguments that convince by their physical as by their spiritual force.

From which I conclude that it is impossible to be like Christ for a week, a day, or even for half an hour. To be like Christ is to so order your life that no man may say you are a hypocrite, a bigot or a persecutor of heretics. To be like Christ is to think kindly of your neighbor even though he is unworthy of your kindness. To be like Christ is to do good even to those who are undeserving, and to do good without hope of reward. In this matter each man is a law unto himself. But no man may be a law unto another man. If every man were a good law unto himself there would be no need of other laws. It is because so many men are trying to impose their own laws upon their fellow men that communities of men are constantly in turmoil and mutual hatred. There are, therefore, no Christian communities, strictly speaking; and in those communities there are very few Christ-like citizens. Moreover, perhaps it is not necessary that we should be absolutely Christ-like. If we are good citizens within the common, human meaning of the term we shall be good enough for all ordinary citizenship in this world and measurably safe for salvation in the next.

Tapon

(From the Spanish of J. Lopez Valdemoro)

The fruit of a loveless marriage, Tapon was turned over to the care of a coarse and cruel woman living near the City of Andalusia where he was born. After the death of his parents he received pretty rough treatment, which, even as a baby he resented in no mild way as he possessed wonderful strength. One day when the nurse shook him in her rage he scratched her face and she dropped him. And thus was our hero converted into a hunchback.

It was his size that caused him to be dubbed Tapon (cork) which name stuck to him all his life.

At the age of twenty he grew to the size of a dog sitting on its haunches. It was then that the village priest took pity on him and rescued him from his cruel nurse. Thereafter he was employed in pumping the church organ, assisting the priest, and looking forward to the day when he might succeed to the position of the old sacristan. In the evening he took lessons from the village schoolmaster, who was astonished at the celerity of his mind.

Though inclined to mock him the boys of the village soon learned to respect his prodigious strength as well as the nimbleness of his wit. His sarcasms were fatal; his epigrams, shafts that always struck home. In other circumstances he might have won distinction in literature or in the field of politics, but as it was he concerned himself with little else than the affairs of the priest for whom he had a profound affection.

One desire constantly pricked him, but the consciousness of his physical deficiencies and of the material means at his disposal kept him from expressing it even before Father Antonio, the only person with whom he condescended to have dealings. He felt a continual longing to see the world, to extend his field of knowledge, to meet men of ability and to see wider horizons than the one he viewed from the tower of the church.

In the church he passed his hours of leisure, dreaming of the sea, the volcanoes, the great desert, the arid and solemn silences of the Pole. I said he had no passions, but this is not perfectly true; the truth is that his passions were directed toward no definite person or object. He loved science, he loved beauty and art, the infinite variety in art's expression; but his associates seemed to him uncouth, the images in the church were crude, the organist's repertoire was meager and the priest's library so small that he knew it all by heart.

One morning there appeared on the facade of the townhouse two hideous posters announcing the coming of the great equestrian-gymnastic-acrobatic company of Mister Cunigam, which was on its way to a neighboring city and would stop and give a single performance on Sunday.

That was a memorable event in Jauja. The country people flocked into the city, and from the time when they came out from high mass, natives and visitors—the village is a watering-place and it was the middle of August—besieged the door of the inn where the performance was to be given, demanding tickets.

Tapon, who had saved penny by penny from the gifts of the faithful and the drippings of the candles the respectable sum of thirty reales, decided to allow himself the pleasure of attending this notable and novel amusement.

The maneuvers of the trapeze-performers, which brought great applause, seemed to him dangerous without a net to break a fall; with the net, rather bold, and nothing more. The clowns, who almost caused the judge's wife to burst herself with laughter, were in his opinion devoid of genuine humor, foolish and tiresome. Neither did any of the other artists satisfy him completely. A Hercules appeared, tossed great balls of iron, and seemed able to crush the earth with a blow of his fist; and it was here that our hero lost control of himself and leaped into the arena, begging permission to try the same feats.

The judge, the absolute authority, notwithstanding the hisses of the public and the compassionate smiles of the ringmaster, ordered and commanded that Tapon enter the contest. Two youths of the company, buried in great coats of green percaline, dragged to our dwarf's feet with great difficulty the balls and heavy bar that served the athlete for his performance. Tapon easily and unassumingly did all that the "Second Samson" had done, and a little more of his own invention. The court shook with applause, while the Hercules withdrew abashed, reading in the eyes of the director of the company his immediate dismissal.

They drew out from the shed the climax of the performance, a great car on wheels; they removed the boards of the siding and revealed a small tiger, half asleep in a corner. Then, leaping like a dancer, appeared in the arena a girl of perhaps eighteen years, fair, slender and already mature in form. She wore a light skirt of blue satin bordered with gold and a tight-fitting bodice of the same material.

The girl, after bowing in three or four directions, with her feet gracefully crossed and raising the handle of her whip to her lips with studied coquetry, looked insistently at Tapon with an air of defiance and resolutely entered the cage.

The tiger jumped like a dog over the whip of his trainer and through little paper hoops; he climbed like a monkey up the bars of his prison; he stretched himself out, docile and submissive, at the feet of "Mliss," and finally, he ate from her hand.

As the timely rain awakens in the earth all the sleeping germs and bursts the seed to convert it into a flower that flatters the senses of sight and smell, and later into fruit that flatters the palate, the appearance of Mliss was for the poor hunchback a mysterious revelation of a new existence.

He moved uneasily in his seat, he devoured the girl

(Continued on Page 30.)

REMOVAL NOTICE

OUR OFFICE after December 21, 1908, will be at 311 to 317 Crocker Building, corner of Post and Market streets.

OUR WAREHOUSE will remain at the Southwest corner of Eddy and Hyde Streets, until April 18, 1909, on that date we shall remove to our old location, 147-151 Minna Street and 144-148 Natoma Street.

GLADDING, McBEAN & CO.

What the Press Thinks of Roosevelt

As Indicated By Some Peppery Excerpts From the Leading Journals of the United States.

These are strenuous days in Washington, D. C. A scandalous war of epithets precipitated by the Chief Magistrate of the nation is on and the whole country is watching it with mixed emotions. The sentiments of the people with respect to the disturbance are not very accurately reflected in the daily prints of San Francisco. The reports from Washington are not impartial. Throughout the country public feeling has revolted against the idol of the masses, and in the circumstances it is instructive to consult the press of other sections. Newspapers that once discussed President Roosevelt only in terms of laudation now confess that he has "gone too far," and has misused his great power. Even so conservative a journal as the Springfield Republican, which has hitherto upheld the course of our ruthless President, has come to the conclusion that he has come out of the Tillman controversy by no means improved in reputation, and that Senator Foraker's arraignment of him in relation to the Brownsville affair "constitutes altogether the hardest single blow that has so far been struck at Mr. Roosevelt's title to consideration, as an orderly and law-abiding and justice-loving chief executive." Foraker's charge of lawlessness against the President, in the opinion of the Republican has been fully substantiated. Furthermore it appears that he has misused public funds. "The President," says the Republican, "made the country ring with his denunciations and prosecutions and efforts at detection of offenders against the law in as well as out of Congress. And now he himself appears as quite indifferent to law when it stands in the way of the pursuit of his own purposes and his vindications. Is it not about time that Mr. Roosevelt began to give some attention to his own course of conduct?"

The Richmond News-Leader says that the President is "unable to absorb any idea of good taste or of his personal responsibility to the public." The Providence

HA! A CLUE!

New York World.

News Democrat has censured him for using the coarse words of the bully and costermonger. The Pittsburg Post thinks he has "prostituted not only his personal dignity—if he ever possessed such a thing—but that of the high office he has been permitted to hold. Another conservative journal, the New York Times, acquits Senator Tillman of wrongdoing and implies that the evidence against him was distorted. Another conservative journal, the Indianapolis News, deploring the row between Congress and the President, says that a temperamental characteristic of the latter is to repudiate his own utterances. The News adds that his passion having led him into undignified situations, "for the next eight weeks the American people will have, presumably, to sit in humiliated silence while the national dignity is trailed in the mud."

One of the few New York journals that have always dealt temperately with President Roosevelt is the Evening Post which explains that he is hated by Congress because Congress does not believe in his moral sincerity. "It thinks him hypocritical," says the Post and that veracious journal adds:

"He has lectured it and the country on truthfulness, yet nine out of ten Congressmen believe Mr. Roosevelt himself to be habitually untruthful. He has posed as a champion of fair play, yet Congressmen believe him to fight foul. They picture him as living in and delighting in an atmosphere of suspicion, intrigue and calumny. His talk of the square deal they scoff at as sheer pretense. They say that he protects favorites, such as Paul Morton and the Steel Corporation, while furiously prosecuting his enemies or those whom he thinks he can make political capital by attacking. In short, Congress is thoroughly convinced that all the superior moral exhortation which it has had from President Roosevelt has come from a man who allows in himself the thing he condemns in others. Mind, we do not say that Congress is right about it. We only state what it believes to be true. Congressmen may be deceived, but there can be no question that this is what they honestly think about the President."

The New York Sun which has never been friendly to the President has lately whacked him harder than ever before. It lately reviewed his career in a simple series of quotations from letters so arranged as to make his mendacity clear. This subtle biographic sketch is brought down to the "Final Branding" by Congress and closes with this quotation:

"FOR BRUTAL AND CRUEL CONDUCT TOWARD A HELPLESS WOMAN."

New York World.

"Close to the rider's side,
Though to the farthest earth he ride,
Disgrace once mounted rides beside."

The Tillman incident is discussed by the Sun as follows:

"If the evidence collected by the spies who hounded the man whom Mr. Roosevelt hated was sufficient to warrant his prosecution under the laws of the United States, then Mr. Roosevelt not only failed in his sworn duty but he also gave the lie to his own professions as contained in a message addressed to Congress five days ago, when he said:

'If I had proof of such corruption affecting any member of the House in any matter as to which the Federal Government has jurisdiction action would at once have been brought, as was done in the cases of Senators Mitchell and Burton and Representatives Williamson, Herrmann and Driggs, at different times since I have been President. This would simply be doing my duty in the execution and enforcement of the laws without respect to persons.'

"If, on the other hand, the investigations of the spies of personal hatred afforded no ground for official proceedings against Mr. Tillman, but merely revealed circumstances discreditable to him short of criminality, then the publication of the results of the spying by Mr. Roosevelt for the gratification of private spite is an offence difficult to characterize adequately. It is an abuse of official power fairly deserving impeachment; it is a personal abuse of official opportunity combining the elements of cowardice and audacity, and without precedent, we believe, in the career of any gentleman who has ever inhabited the White House."

The Sun also discussed the Roosevelt charge that Tillman franked a typewriter through the mails:

"Theodore Roosevelt is in any event in no position to attack Senator Tillman for the use of public property for private purposes. No President since the foundation of the Government ever used public property for his private benefit in a more open and audacious manner than the present President. Mr. Roosevelt has made the United States Navy the plaything of his children. With him a public trust has always been a family picnic. Nearly every college boat race at New London has witnessed the use of a Government ship by the President for the use of his family and friends at the expense of the Treasury of the United States. A considerable portion of the American navy has by Presidential order paraded at the expense of the taxpayer in front of the President's summer cottage in order that he and his friends can vary the monotony of midsummer by a parade of warships and the welcome sound of the Presidential salute. Until Congress provided for his unofficial travels Mr. Roosevelt, in the same spirit of economy, compelled railroads to furnish him and his friends with free transportation, notwithstanding the rigid prohibition by the interstate commerce laws of any preference to any citizen. The unprecedented use of the American embassies in Europe to glorify the Roosevelt family, while exciting the hilarity of the European royal families, shocked those Americans at home and abroad who, knowing the facts, beheld the dignity of American character lowered by the insufferable snobbery of aping the etiquette of royal courts. When Mr. Roosevelt went to Panama one vessel would not suffice for his glorification, but it must needs be escorted by a convoy of two other warships, that his appearance in Panama might be regal in character. The very medals which have been struck off by the Panama Commission as a reward for faithful service bear Mr. Roosevelt's face in relief."

According to the Sun's Washington correspondent the Senate Committee on Appropriations has discovered that Roosevelt has spent the enormous sum of $20,000,000 in secret investigations. Where all the money went is a source of wonder at the capitol, but it is known that much was spent in investigation of the "domestic affairs of citizens." Says the correspondent:

"A very repulsive aspect of the special agents scandal relates to the mails and the post offices. The thought of opening and otherwise tampering by special agents with letters in post offices makes men and women shiver. European experts in such work have taught how easily letters can be opened and closed again while in the post offices and leave no trace of the felony. Those here with knowledge of such doings explain how not so very long ago special agents of the Treasury worked with special agents of the Post Office to extract from letters to importers, while in Government custody, evidence of false invoices used in customs entries. * * * Americans have not yet been called on to express their opinions of a Postmaster-General who with premeditation permitted a special agent, or any other agent, to open letters in his custody and inspect their contents. English historians have told us of what came to Sir James Graham, a Home Secretary, sixty or seventy years ago, who made use of a power for the opening of private letters claimed to have been vested in the Administration. The friends of Mazzini, then an exile in London, believed that the contents of his letters had by the British Government been thus revealed to Austria and Sardinia, with the result that persons implicated had been put to death. The Home Minister did not deny that he had issued a warrant to inspect Mazzini's letters, and contended that his right so to do had been specially reserved to the Administration on its responsibility. The reports of Parliamentary committees upheld his contention, but every one seems to have been ashamed of the act, and British criticism of it has been severe ever since."

One of the severest of Mr. Roosevelt's critics is the New York World which has not been intimidated by the President's employment of the power of the Government for the punishment of Mr. Pulitzer. Apropos of the charge against Tillman that he franked a typewriter the World says that the President was not at all excited over the franking of Republican campaign literature. Of the accusations against Tillman in connection with the Oregon land deal the World says: "There is no other instance in American history in which a President ever so contemptibly abused his official power or sought to injure a political enemy by an act so wanton and despicable. No other President, from Washington to McKinley, would have been morally capable of it—not even Andrew Johnson."

The Spectator

A Thunderbolt for Willets

Has anything happened to William Willetts Jr. of Far Rockaway? I write while the words are still hot on his lips, with the "smoking pistol" still in his hand, as we say in the passionate tragedies of the newspapers. I cannot, therefore, be sure that I am not writing the obituary of William Willetts Jr. of Far Rockaway, Long Island. William Willetts Jr. represents a constituency in the national Congress. He is a Democrat. He has spoken to his fellow countrymen on "The Passing of Roosevelt." He has bitten the biter; he has flayed the flayer with the knife of the slayer; he has turned the vocabulary of the short and ugly word against the invector; he has hoist the engineer with his own petard; he has turned the tables on the god of the machine. It was awful. It was unpardonable. I fear that Willetts has paid the penalty of his temerity, and I shudder to imagine what sort of horrible fate overtook him. What Willetts said about Roosevelt is almost too sacrilegious for repetition. I venture, however, to give this mild sample of his quality: "He is a mammoth of jocularity," said Willetts of Far Rockaway; "and he has got a laugh with every appearance, a gargoyle that has been funny from the hour it left its native quarry." Think of that; a Gargoyle; our Exalted One a Gargoyle! This is not lese majeste; it is profanation. A Gargoyle! Does Willetts of Far Rockaway realize what he said when he called the hero of San Juan a Gargoyle? I wot not. Editor Laffan and Editor Pulitzer and Editor Delevan Smith have said things about Him that were bad enough in all conscience; but these editors exercised a wiser discretion than is seemingly within the scope of Representative Willetts' abnormal activities. They have thus far escaped the wrath of our national Jehovah; how long they will be permitted to go at large, no mere man can tell; but just now they are loose on the range, branded cattle of the Bar X Roosevelt ranch, but otherwise unharmed and foot free. But Willetts! Poor Willetts must by this time have been roped, tied, slaughtered, skinned and sold to the hide man.

Our Discreet Teachers

Though the various women's clubs have all given out views for publication on the subject of Mrs. Mary Kincaid's appointment to a seat on the board of education and a nice, fat salary of four thousand a year, it is a significant fact that the teachers, whose fortunes will be directly affected have not a word to say. No process of hypnotic suggestion will induce them to commit themselves, or to take any chances on having unguarded remarks carried abroad. They are a cautious and wary lot, taught to be so by experience. Teachers are protected in their positions by a law of tenure of office

Rudolph Barth, watchmaker and jeweler, now permanently located at 36 Kearny street.

BROKERS AND DEALERS
IN HIGH GRADE
INVESTMENT SECURITIES

SUTRO & COMPANY
412 MONTGOMERY ST., SAN FRANCISCO

Requests for Information Either by Personal Interview or Correspondence will be Gladly Received and Promptly Attended to.

which prevents summary removals at the arbitrary will of the powers above them, but there are always means at hand to subdue the recalcitrant and none is willing to be the one to place her head in the mouth of the lion to prove that the animal will not bite. Nevertheless, there is an undercurrent of dissatisfaction and uneasiness and a disposition to hark back to those other days under the Phelan administration, when the department was kept in a ferment by the petty nagging and small interferences of the public servants who were then in control of the department. While everyone hopes that the lightning will forbear to strike, or that if it does, the bolt will descend far away from her own vicinity, it is admitted that there is no counting on immunity, and that for safety's sake it will be wisest to do nothing which may attract it. Generally speaking, the women who are employed as teachers in San Francisco do not seem to be overwhelmingly in favor of having one of their own sex over them. Any expectations which they cherished from such an innovation were effectively destroyed by their experience under Mrs. Kincaid's former regime. Instead of finding that a woman on the board of education would stand between them and the inevitable frictions, they discovered that the one woman could think up more pin pricks and narrow-gauge interferences as a means of making her power felt than they had ever experienced under any of the "tough old boards" composed of a dozen men. It was the most powerful argument against the granting of women's suffrage that ever was presented to an considerable body of intelligent citizens.

"My dear," said an affectionate wife to her husband, "I am so glad that you have given up drinking. It is a terribly degrading habit, and I am delighted that my denunciations of it have had their effect."

"Yes," said hubby, puffing away at his Regina, I bet Fawkins five baskets of wine on it, that I could leave off till New Year's day, and I'm going in to win."

A Spreckels Eulogist

The interesting story of the career of the late Claus Spreckels, written by the San Francisco correspondent of the New York Sun, has been published by that journal. It is in the nature of an appreciation of the Sugar King. The author evidently is an ardent admirer of all successful captains of industry, and from his viewpoint Claus Spreckels was an ideal citizen, a man eminently worthy of imitation. At any rate he was "the most interesting of the self-made men who have built up San Francisco and made it a city unlike any other in the country." It is most instructive to read this biographic sketch revealing as it does sentiments that are typical of the age and shedding a light as it does on the spirit that moves communities, the spirit for which great moralists and reformers have much enthusiasm. Claus Spreckels himself, it must be remembered, in his latter days was a reformer. The Sun's correspondent tells us that such was his genius as a captain of industry that early in his career he cornered "for a year the entire supply of sugar cane from the Hawaiian Islands"; also that he "entered into close relations with the railroad company from which he got rebates." As a result "no competitor could bring sugar from the East either by rail or water, as the freight rates charged cut all the profits," and "then Spreckels calmly divided up the country with the Havemeyers." Furthermore "for years to prevent any competition Spreckels sold sugar in St. Louis three cents a pound cheaper than in San Francisco where it was refined."

His Fighting Qualities

The Sun's correspondent, who, by the way, writes like Lincoln Steffens and appears to be a moralist of the Steffens brand supplies us also with this information: "The amount of money that Claus Spreckels squeezed from California in the fifteen years of his monoply runs into millions. * * * Independent wholesale grocers tried to free themselves from the Spreckels yoke but they were soon whipped into line or driven into bankruptcy. Spreckels had spies out in every direction and it was impossible for any dealer to elude their vigilance. Some grocers conceived the idea of bringing sugar out here in sailing vessels around the Horn. It required three months, and if a vessel encountered severe storms the voyage often consumed four or five months. Thus these dealers ran out of sugar before their supplies arrived. When they went to Spreckels to get supplies to tide them over he refused to sell them a barrel of sugar unless they would sign a contract not to bring any more around the Horn." All this, it should be remembered, is in laudation of the man who hated the grafters of San Francisco, who stood behind his son Rudolph and told him that the necessary funds would be forthcoming, and who, in the interest of morality, compelled his son John D. Spreckels to yield the columns of the Call to the service of the brother whom John D. hated and despised.

His Methods in Hawaii

Unquestionably Claus Spreckels was a great man. "He did more than any other San Francisco man," says the Sun's correspondent, "to build up this city where he made his great wealth." Incidentally "he gave a fine music stand to Golden Gate Park." And incidentally the founder of the Spreckels fortune "for years was the power behind the throne in Hawaii." "In those days," says this eulogist, "King Kalakaua was easy going and never cared how he secured money to carry on his government and cater to his own pleasures. Spreckels advanced him large sums and took Government land in payment. He also secured concessions from the Government for the labor contracts which filled the sugar plantations with all kinds of servile labor. When the European labor markets were exhausted the system of 'Blackbirding' in the South Sea Islands was begun. Natives of the Fiji, Gilbert, Marquesas and other islands were brought to Hawaii on long term contracts and very few returned to their island homes. Unscrupulous traders frequently kidnapped scores of these poor creatures and sold them into virtual slavery. The missionaries started an investigation of this sugar plantation slavery, but the inquiry never resulted in any reform, as it could not be proved that the plantation managers knew anything about the slave hunting that they actually encouraged." Here it is evident that the panegyrist nods. The planta-

HOTEL VICTORIA

N. E. cor. Bush and Stockton

CENTRALLY LOCATED .·. A MODERN AND UP-TO-DATE FAMILY HOTEL

Sun in every room. Elaborate furnishings. Excellent cuisine. Large lobby and reception room. Grill room. Dining room.

American and European Plan.

Seattle's Newest and Most Modern Hotel

"Twelve Stories of Solid Comfort"

Building, concrete, steel and marble.

Located, most fashionable shopping district.

210 rooms, 135 baths.

Library and bound magazines in reading rooms for guests.

Most refined hostelry in Seattle.

Absolutely fireproof. English Grill.

Rates, $1.00 up

HOTEL SAVOY SEATTLE

tion managers did not actually encourage slave hunting. They knew nothing about it. They would not tolerate such an infamy.

His Philanthropic Railroad Enterprise

The Sun's correspondent gives us among other things an interesting version of the San Joaquin Valley railroad enterprise which must be inaccurate since it is at variance with the account given by that veracious chronicler and indefatigable reformer, the Hon. Julius Jacobs. Says the Sun man: "Spreckels gained the reputation here of the fighter among the big California millionaires, all of whom were noted for pugnacity and staying power. Two incidents illustrate his fighting quality. The Southern Pacific Company refused to give Spreckels certain freight rates into the San Joaquin Valley. The old man believed he had a right to the rates because of the large amount of his shipments, so when the railroad officials refused to consider his application he lost his temper. Hammering the desk of the general freight manager he said: 'I will build a railroad into that valley and in two years I will make you wish you had given me those rates.' The managed laughed at him because he knew the difficulties that his own road had in securing rights of way. But Spreckels went at things in his own original way. He organized the San Joaquin Valley Railroad Company and he appealed to the farmers to give him right of way, as he declared he was building this new railroad to fight their ancient enemy, the Southern Pacific. Any one who has read Frank Norris's 'The Octopus' knows the feeling of the San Joaquin ranchers against the railroad. They gave Spreckels his roadway for practically nothing and they helped him build the road. It proved a great success, but when the Southern Pacific admitted that it was beaten and gave Spreckels the rates he had demanded he promptly turned over his railroad to the Santa Fe which made it the terminal of its line."

Such a Temper!

We are also told by this amiable biographer that "great wealth did not change old Claus Spreckels one jot. He was always approachable in his office, just as he was twenty years before; but woe to the man who stirred his anger. The old man's face would flush a fiery red, his small blue eyes would flash and he would pour out a flood of maledictions that generally swept its object through the office door into the hall." Now it is in this paragraph that the Sun's correspondent shows that he doesn't know beans from sweet peas. It is the most obvious thing in the world that great wealth did change old Claus Spreckels; for we learn from this biographic sketch that when he came to San Francisco he worked as a clerk in a grocery store. Now who ever heard of a grocery clerk flushing a fiery red with anger or pouring out a flood of maledictions strong enough to sweep anybody through a door? Mr. Spreckels must have been as mild a mannered grocery clerk as ever weighed a pound of sugar. Otherwise he couldn't have held his job. Great wealth inclines the best of men to a fiery redness on slight provocation. You can sometimes estimate the size of a man's pile by the depth of the redness which suffuses him on certain occasions. The grocery clerk always has his temper well in hand.

When Johnson Bolted

Reformer Callan's self-elimination from the Republican caucus at which the re-election of Senator Perkins was agreed upon reminded me that six years ago there was a walk-out when Perkins's re-election was decided upon, and that on that occasion the Hon. Grove L. Johnson was among the outwalkers. But like the cat Mr. Johnson came back. Indeed Mr. Johnson returned immediately. As soon as the door closed upon him and his associates he rapped for admittance, entered and voted for Perkins.

"I thought you were a bolter," said one of the Assemblymen to the Sacramento attorney.

"I was," said Johnson. "Didn't you see me bolt? I agreed with those fellows to walk out, but I didn't promise to stay out."

"Why does a woman always get off a car backward?"

"Because she's never quite sure she may not change her mind and want to get on again."

A Club Faction Rebuked

The members of the Bohemian Club have resolved that their home must cease to be the battle-ground of the warring graft prosecution partisans, which it has been ever since Jimmy Phelan used the big stick to club recalitrant directors into submission for the greater glory of that sterling young patriot, the Hon. Rudolph Spreckels. Last Tuesday there was a spirited contest in the club over the election of a nominating committee. There were two tickets in the field. One ticket on which were the names of Frank P. Deering, George H. Mastic, Thomas M. Pennell, John C. Dornin and Raphael Weil represented the element that is in favor of purifying the club atmosphere and stimulating a more healthy club spirit. The other ticket was chosen by the Phelan faction, and with characteristic political ingenuity the name of Mr. Raphael Weil was printed thereon. Indeed it was made to appear that Mr. Weil headed the ticket, though he had affirmed his allegiance to his colleagues on the other ticket saying that he believed they represented an element that could be depended upon by reason of its exemption from partisan feeling to promote the interests of the club. The other men on the faction ticket were Paul Cowles of the Associated Press, Willard T. Barton, Thomas A. Rickard and W. H. Smith Jr. According to club gossip this ticket was to be relied upon to make Jimmy Phelan president of the club and put Fred Sanborn into the Board of Directors. It was badly beaten. Some of the members who voted against the Phelan ticket explained that there was a time when they favored encouraging Mr. Phelan's active participation in the affairs of the club, believing that he could be depended upon to show his appreciation of the honors bestowed, but as it has appeared that he hasn't sufficient faith in the club to finance its building operations they can conceive of no reason why his ambition should receive consideration.

J.M. Jacobi & Co.
S.W. Cor. MONTGOMERY & SUTTER Sts
Perfect Clothes for Men
Growing business demands more room
January 20th we annex 45-47 Montgomery

The GOLD MEDAL for quality in the Franco-British Exhibition has been awarded to
To His Majesty the King
By royal appointment
WHITE HORSE
WHISKY.
QUALITY THE SECRET OF SUCCESS
MACKIE & CO. DISTILLERS LTD.
LAGAVULIN DISTILLERY, ISLAY
MALT-MILL " "
CRAIGELLACHIE " GLENLIVET
Established 1742
Note.—Any person proved guilty of re-filling our empty bottles with inferior whisky will be prosecuted.

He Writes With His Tongue

My favorite editor, Mr. Arthur Brisbane, receives a really "princely salary." Heretofore the term "princely salary" applied to the meager income of a newspaperman has been a cruel irony intended as a merry jest. Now it is proper to speak of "a princely salary" in the newspaper business. Editor Brisbane receives from Mr. Hearst every day in the year the sum of $200. At the end of each week he has received from Mr. Hearst $1400, and at the end of every year he may reckon that he has received $73,000. This upon the authority of an able panegyrist of the name of William Inglis in a recent biographical sketch published in Harper's Weekly. Biographer Inglis says that while he was interviewing the newspaperman that receives a bigger salary than the President of the United States Editor Brisbane dashed off three able editorials on the long distance phonograph and sent the cylinders to the office. He also read Voltaire until four o'clock in the morning and did not come down to breakfast until noon. He slept, as is his daily custom, in a shed on the roof where the air is fresh and invigorating and non-tuberculositic. But Biographer Inglis hastens to inform us that this is not what Mr. Hearst pays $200 a day for. Neither is it entirely for Editor Brisbane's superlative genius, although if Editor Brisbane were not equipped with genius Mr. Hearst would have less use for him. Editor Brisbane, it appears, not only writes editorials for the Hearst newspapers, but he manages the entire "string." That is certainly worth $200 a day. Some experts declare that anyone who can manage a string of Hearst newspapers one day and not lose his mental grip ought to get much more than $200 for his day's work. But there is Editor Brisbane who pulls the string every day in the year and generously consents to cost Mr. Hearst only $200 a day, notwithstanding that in his own right he possesses wealth sufficient to pay himself a salary far exceeding the stipend he receives from Mr. Hearst. With Editor Brisbane's executive worth to Mr. Hearst I have no concern. I am wholly absorbed in the Brisbane cylindrical editorial output. I am pained to learn that these wonderful editorials are spoken and not written. I had pictured my favorite editor with tongue a-check and legs tied in a knot industriously plowing a sheet of paper with a gray goose quill preparatory to planting the seeds of his verbiage in the fallow understanding of his readers. To know that Editor Brisbane declaims this living thought into an insensate, irresponsive, mechanical phonograph and ejects the cylinders as he would eject the spent cartridges of his duck gun, is a sad disillusion for me. I am almost tempted to express my disappointment in good round Latin; but on afterthought I feel that a dead language cannot do justice to the subject. Therefore in plain, idiomatic English I am constrained to remark, "So passes the glory of the world; so sinks the god of day in the darkness of eternal night!" A talking editor is no more to me than a scribbling orator, and henceforth I class Editor Brisbane with those mute inglorious Ciceros whose speeches are not uttered until they are printed in the Congressional Record.

"What," asked the young physician, "is the secret of your success?"

"I make it a rule to find out what a patient wants to do," answered the wise old doctor, "then I order him to do it."

Milo

Do you know what Quality means in a Turkish Cigarette? If not get a box of "MILO." Then, any other cigarette, and try same, side by side. You'll note the delicate, aromatic mildness of the "MILO." Mildness (yet with the richness in flavor) is what costs in Turkish Tobacco, and its just this that makes the Perfect Cigarette. You'll find it in No Other.

This perfection is obtained only by owning our own plantation in Turkey—the careful watchfulness from the seeding to the finished article.

Write to the Surbrug Company for samples and prices.

THE SURBRUG COMPANY, New York City

The Extreme of Coincidence

Les extremes se touchent: The French have reason. On the 19th of January, 1809, there met in time, if not in space, extremes which up to our age had seemed to set the saying at naught, namely, the extreme of science and the extreme of poetry. On that date, in brief, were born, in Old England, the epoch-making Charles Darwin, and in New England, the epoch-making Edgar Allan Poe; one, the personification of pure science; the other, of pure poetry. Extremes from face to finger-tips, they, none the less, served the same mistress, Truth, and, strangely enough, the poet with the greater devotion. Darwin loved Science, not wisely, but too well; that is to say, to the exclusion of poetry; until finally Shakespeare was a mere name, a tinkling symbol, and things of beauty no joy at all. Poe loved Art no less well, but more wisely; nor was the "beauty" of a mathematical problem solved lost upon him. Science had passed into his soul; fact had undergone alchemic change, and came out poetry. No man yet can adequately sing the "Poetry of a Machine Age." No infant prodigy that un-Spartan parents ever up to date left unexposed, can possibly "cram" science and disgorge poetry—artistic fiction, for that matter. Yet is there untold poetry in science. There is poetry, no end of it, in the passing strange coincidence of the birthday of Darwin and of Poe a wonderful century since; so much indeed as to forestall the spring. Such meetings of the widely parted, extremes so touching, move even me, that ought to know better—nay, that do—to timely—untimely song; as follows:

DARWIN-POE

(Born January 19, 1809)

Truth Darwin dreamed of, worked for, fought
For, won; and, winning, set men, slaves of folly, free:
Like Marcus, emperor of Truth was he;
Nor all the years shall bring his reign to naught.
Poe, Beauty's self: Truth glorified he sought;
And, finding, left to man for legacy:
A Darwin of diviner empery,
Time spares the pure perfection that he wrought.

The blood of martyred Science, shed to-day,
To-morrow blooms, a deathless flow'r of art:
Truth lodges in the head, but must away
At daybreak, hastening to its home, the heart,
Science and Song in passionate interplay,
United, not antipodal apart.

The Square Deal in Lawlor's Court

"Business men generally and as a class are barred, apparently, from the Calhoun jury," says the Evening Globe, which adds, "One hundred of the first venire were discharged outright by Judge Lawlor without chance for the examination by the attorneys." From the same authority I learn that "an examination of the wholesale dismissal by Judge Lawlor of the first venire reveals some interesting facts," since it shows that "business men were dismissed outright by the judge almost to a man." Judge Lawlor explains "his unique personal preliminary inquiry," says the Globe, "by saying that it is 'in the interest of time.'" Which doubtless it is. Judge Lawlor is temperamentally a time-saver. He hates to see time wasted. His wholesale dismissal of business men may seem unique to the Globe, but it is the privilege of

NORTH GERMAN LLOYD

FAST EXPRESS SERVICE

PLYMOUTH—CHERBOURG—BREMEN, 10 A. M.

Kaiser Wm. II.....February 2 Kaiser Wm. II.....March 2
Cecilie .. ..February 16 Cecilie .. ..March 23

TWIN-SCREW PASSENGER SERVICE

BREMEN DIRECT—10 A. M.

Brandenburg .. ..January 14 Chemnitz .. ..January 28
P. Frdh. Wm. ....January 19 Neckar .. ..February 4

Calls at Plymouth and Cherbourg.

MEDITERRANEAN SERVICE

GIBRALTAR—NAPLES—GENOA, AT 11 A. M.

K. Luise .....January 16 *K. Kurfuerst .....February 11
K. Albert .....January 30 K. Luise .....February 27

*Calls at Madeira, Gibraltar, Algiers, Genoa; thence proceeding on Orient Cruise. Good accommodations available to Genoa.

North German Lloyd Travelers' Checks.

OELRICHS & CO., 5 Broadway, New York.

ROBERT CAPELLE, G. A. P. C. 250 POWELL ST.
Opposite St. Francis Hotel, San Francisco. Telephone Kearny 6794.

the court to excuse jurors. To be sure the probability is that what is in the interest of time is not in the interest of Calhoun, but that is merely a coincidence. Judge Lawlor having disregarded the suggestion that personal bias influences him in this case he will see that Calhoun gets a square deal. The supposition is that if business men were not excused but compelled to undergo examination in the jury box the prosecuting attorney would have to use up his peremptory challenges much sooner than otherwise and that Calhoun would have a much better chance of securing what he conceives to be a jury of his peers, but as men may honestly differ with respect to the principles of the square deal Judge Lawlor's attitude should not be questioned; not at least unless it should appear that the Judge has been refusing to excuse members of Cornelius's carmen's union by wholesale.

Calhoun the Conspirator

From the impeccable Bulletin I learn that Calhoun's attorneys will probably try to prove that the street-car strike was the result of a conspiracy on the part of the leading patriots of the Graft Prosecution. This is not the first time I have heard there was such a conspiracy, but never having investigated the matter I was far from a conviction on the subject until the Bulletin emitted a shriek of indignation by way of expressing the feelings that were stirred by so foul an aspersion of the character of its owners and lessors. In anticipation of the proof to be offered by Calhoun the Bulletin with characteristic earnestness assured its wonderfully enlightened readers that Cornelius, the pet of the Administration, the protege of the Graft Prosecution, did all in his power to avert the strike, and that Calhoun himself conspired to have his own property ruined in the hope of stirring up sympathy for himself. This is indeed startling news the accuracy of which cannot be questioned considering the source. Besides the Bulletin ought to know because one of its editors, the Hon. E. J. Livernash, was associated with Cornelius during the strike, and Mr. Livernash, as mild a mannered man as was ever shaved by a non-union barber, is always against strikes and industrial rows, though as an attorney for labor unions such things must be profitable to him. It is extremely gratifying to learn that Livernash and Cornelius were opposed to the strike, and that Calhoun was responsible for it. But in the circumstances I am inclined to question the sincerity of our civic patriots in their efforts to send Calhoun to jail, since it must be obvious to them that he belongs in an insane asylum.

First Duke: Well, do you think Miss Van Gullion intends to buy you?

Second Duke: My dear boy, I don't know. Some days I think she does; at other time I fear she is merely shopping.

Why They "Flunked"

My vindication has come at last. It was a long time on the way, but it is none the less welcome on that account. Besides, it comes in such unquestionable shape that I am glad to speak of it: call it just, wise, royal authority. For many moons I have been insisting that the sororites and feminine Greeks of the State University were frittering their precious youth in the acquirement of things unessential to their intellectual endowment and equipment. I have inveighed with much emphasis and no little rancor against the use of the university as a social ladder for the climbing of social scientists. I have frequently said that many of these young women were only pretenders; that their presence in the university was a hollow mockery, a delusion and a snare for the entrapment of "social prestige." Now comes President Wheeler of the State University to corroborate my statements. He has discovered that the wholesale failure of the women students to pass the midyear examinations is due to their addiction to "social functions" and their neglect of "social science." He says they have been content to drift through the term. They have allied themselves with other interests, most frequently those of society. They have made themselves unfit for the examinations. When the crisis arrives, they dig and cram in vain. Some of them "shy the examinations" hoping to escape the ignominy of the inevitable "flunk." I repeat, I am glad that I am backed in my animadversions by such eminent and unimpeachable authority as the supreme pundit of the university. I feel that I am not alone in my opinion that these young women are not only superfluous but that they are a positive detriment to the educational purposes of the university. I am glad to know that President Wheeler agrees with me that the university is not a "finishing school" for young ladies, a training school for buds and debutantes, a house of mirth for vivacious co-eds, a vestibule to the salons of Siskiyou, San Diego and San Francisco, or a retail market for the sale of Greek letter pins, the meaning of which is wholly Greek to the wearers. However, since the young women have achieved their purpose of attending the university, I don't suppose they care particularly what either President Wheeler or myself may think of them. In the time to be it will be sufficient for them that they may say, "Oh, yes, I was at the university—class of 1911. I knew Miss Gotrocks quite well; we belonged to the same sorority; she was one of the sweetest girls in our class and you'd never know she was loaded with money. Yes, indeed, I've been quite intimate with her since we left the university; she's one of my dearest friends." What more is required? She

Largest Exclusive Office Furniture House on the Pacific Coast.

EVERY ARTICLE OF FURNITURE REQUIRED IN AN OFFICE

Exclusive representatives of the most important lines manufactured.

RUCKER-FULLER Desk Co.
737-741 MISSION ST.

California Limited

The only exclusively first-class train to the East via any line.
Dining-car service under Fred Harvey management—that's the best on earth.
On your way East you can stop and visit

YOSEMITE VALLEY
AND
GRAND CANYON

No other line puts you in reach of both of these places. Our folders tell.

F. W. Prince, C. T. A.
673 Market St.

Santa Fe

moves in the same "circle" with Miss Gotrocks. Neither of them can point with pride to a degree, but both of them can wear a "college pin" and that is a better guarantee of a university career than a degree.

Broker: "Look here, boy, what makes you so excited this morning. Been reading dime novels again?"
Office Boy: "Naw. Been reading one of de President's messages."

A Community Libeler Rebuked

The Reverend George E. Burlingame has been writing about San Francisco in the Baptist Standard of Chicago. The Reverend George E. Burlingame is one of our preachers, as I gather from the report of what he has said about us; but I must confess my ignorance of his presence "in our midst" until informed by the Baptist Standard. That he is uncomplimentary to the city in which he gains a livelihood goes almost without saying it, for it is a peculiar circumstance that most of our preachers always denounce us as a community every time they speak of us. If we are to believe our preachers San Francisco is only a shade less infamous than Sodom and superlatively more wicked than Gomorrah. Preacher Burlingame says that "from its origin in 1846 to this hour, San Francisco has maintained a unique position among American cities as being entitled to the preeminence in godlessness and immorality." He is kind enough, however, to ascribe most of our disposition to iniquity to our glorious climate. "The charming climate," he says, "assuring 275 rainless days in the year, with a mean average temperature of 55 degrees and a minimum of 36 degrees, fixed the character of popular Sunday observance as a day of feasting and carnivals and reveling and sport." I will not, at this time, quote further from the diatribe of this libeler. Most of what he writes is review and commentary upon the history of the city in its earlier day, upon which he bases the assertion that in our later history the powers of darkness are more appalling in their syndicated strength, and the muddied current is a broader and a deeper stream than that which swirled around Portsmouth square in the 50's when the town was infested by "excitement-craving, money-seeking, luxurious-living, reckless, heaven-earth-and-hell-daring citizens." I will therefore hasten to my confession that in all probability nothing that I could offer in refutation of Preacher Burlingame's anathema would serve its purpose. My denial of his wanton slander though corroborated with confirmations strong as proofs of holy writ, would not convince him of his error, and for all others with knowledge of the true conditions they are unnecessary. I wish, however, that he had been more specific in his statements. His generalizations and his inferences are too broad. It is quite easy to libel a community in its mass; but it is perilous to substantiate the libel in detail. I will admit also that San Francisco is no better than she ought to be; that she is no better than other cities of equal cosmopolitan population, with the saving reservation that San Francisco is no worse than those other cities. I halt there. San Francisco is in my opinion, no better and certainly no worse than other cities, but in her annals is one hideous crime that stands out with appalling vividness against the background of all the other iniquities of her history—one premier atrocity that lifts her supreme among all the cities of the world as a place where it was possible to nurture and bring to maturity a fiend incarnate as malignantly ferocious and as steeped in depravity as Theodore Durrant. When Preacher Burlingame writes again of San Francisco's godlessness, immorality and utter degradation let him be specific in his proofs of what he utters; let him tell the readers of the Baptist Standard that of all the wickedness perpetrated in San Francisco that which was accomplished by Theodore Durrant was the crime consummate. I will not ask him to tell the readers of the Baptist Standard that Theodore Durrant was a teacher in a Baptist Sunday school, a member of the Immanuel Baptist Church, and that he killed two young girls in a Baptist church in circumstances of such unmitigated horror that even the court of justice wherein he was condemned could not listen to the monstrous tale. I will only ask that Preacher Burlingame explain in his next discourse that one reason why San Francisco bears a name so unenviable among men is because it once registered among its citizens a monster whom we called Theodore Durrant—a creature so black and deformed by iniquity that the gates of hell itself are barred against his soul howling its eternal agony in a place of torment specially provided to meet the exigencies of his case.

McCreery the Missionary

Walter McCreery is meeting with much encouragement in carrying out his plans to make California a rendezvous for winter sports. He is now in Europe, getting in touch with the prominent players of polo, golf and tennis, and already he has been assured of the participation of some of the "big guns" amongst the athletic heroes of the British Isles. Burlingame is to be made the center of the carnival of contests, and handsome prizes will be offered, such as will appeal to the foreign champions, and act as a drawing card. With the cooperation of the commercial organizations of the city, Mr. McCreery advanced his plans very substantially in the brief time which he has spent in working up the project. The suggestion was readily taken hold of, and

Grand Prix and Highest Awards at all World Expositions

DEWAR'S

SCOTCH WHISKY

Makes the Best High Ball on Earth

SHERWOOD & SHERWOOD, Importers

SMITH BROS.

From 10 to 50 per cent off on Books
From 10 to 50 per cent off on Office Supplies
From 25 to 50 per cent off on Framed Pictures
Wood for Art Burning, Half Price

DURING CLEARANCE SALE

10 per cent off on Leather Goods
10 per cent off on Bibles
10 per cent off on Picture Frames
Calendars for Half Price

STATIONERS
ART DEALERS

OAKLAND
462-464 THIRTEENTH ST. Between Broadway and Washington

BOOK SELLERS
PICTURES

its popularity has proved that all the necessary local support will be forthcoming. California at large will profit by the scheme. Every winter there will be attracted to the State moneyed men who cannot but be struck with the other opportunities which California offers besides the winning of loving cups and trophies. With their families they will visit the well known points of interest, and with the lure of California's climate, California's natural wonders, and California's opportunities for good investments, many of the visitors and tourists may be converted into permanent residents. The California Promotion Committee is co-operating in the movement, and Rufus Jennings has placed its machinery at Mr. McCreery's command. Encouraging messages are expected as soon as he will have had time and opportunity to get his campaign well under way in England.

"Do you love your wife as much as you think you do?"
"I love her almost as much as she thinks I do."

Hotaling in Repertoire

Richard M. Hotaling is again to make his appearance in the unfortified City of Oakland. The young millionaire has signed with Manager Bishop for another engagement at Ye Liberty Theatre, and he will appear there in repertoire during the month of February. He will present Richelieu, A Midsummer Night's Dream, Julius Caesar and the First Violin. From this announcement it is evident that Mr. Hotaling has been engrossed in study since his last professional engagement, when he demonstrated that he was temperamentally and technically qualified for successful achievement in the poetic drama.

School Children Coming to California

If the plans of "Tom" Richardson, manager of the Portland Commercial Club, are carried out, one hundred and fifty pupils from the eighth and ninth grades of the Chicago public schools will visit the far west during next summer. While on a recent trip to Chicago, Mr. Richardson appeared at a meeting of two hundred members of the Ways and Means Committee of the Chicago Association of Commerce, the big commercial organization of the middle west, and proposed that the organization defray the expenses of such a trip of two months' duration. The plan is to select one pupil from each of the Chicago schools who, on the return, will give at least two talks before the school, descriptive of the trip. It is proposed that representatives of the Chicago dailies shall accompany the party. In a letter to the California Promotion Committee, Mr. Richardson, who is also secretary of the Oregon Development League, explains that the purpose of the trip is to show the boys and girls of the lake city how things are grown on the Pacific Coast, both naturally and by means of irrigation. "We want them to realize," he writes, "that Chicago's future greatness is based on the west. Ninety-five per cent of the travel of Chicago's two million people is eastward, aside from commercial travelers. We want our share." The California Promotion Committee is taking up the suggestion with the more than two hundred commercial organizations affiliated with it in all parts of the State. It has urged them to put themselves in communication with Mr. H. A. Wheeler, Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, 77 Jackson Boulevard, Chicago, outlining the interesting and instructive sights to be seen in each locality, and the arrangements which will be made to entertain the visitors, for, naturally, California's cities, towns and rural districts will be an important part of the itinerary. According to Mr. Richardson's plan, the expenses of the party are to be defrayed by Chicago. Business houses with Chicago connections are also requested to place themselves in communication with the Chicago firms and urge them to co-operate with Chairman Wheeler of the Chicago Committee in carrying the plan through. Discussing the idea at headquarters in the California Building, a representative of the California Promotion Committee said: "Great good will result from such a trip, for, not only will the boys and girls who come to the west become better citizens thereby, with a fuller realization of the resources of this wonderful country of ours, but it will mean splendid advertising for California through a medium that reaches thousands and thousands of homes of people who may be attracted to California as a result, either as tourists or settlers. The California Promotion Committee will do everything in its power to further the efforts put forth and bring the campaign to a successful culmination."

New Cabinet Officer Proposed

The suggestion of C. F. Grunsky that a new department be added to the Federal Government, with a Secretary of Public Works as its head, is of special interest to the Pacific Coast, where so much of the reclamation and improvement of natural resources is yet to be achieved. Mr. Grunsky has been long concerned with California rivers in his professional capacity as a civil engineer, and it was in a report made by him to President Rufus P. Jennings of the River Improvement and Drainage Association of California that his suggestion was made. After reviewing the cumbersome methods now pursued, he says: "The work done by the Geological survey, the work of the Reclamation Service, the work of the army engineers, at least in so far as it relates to improvements not connected with military operations, and some work of other departments, should all be under the direction of one head, a cabinet officer. There is a great and immediate need for a Secretary of Public Works. Under a Department of Public Works all of the public improvements should be co-ordinated, and the larger problems of the country should receive proper attention.

CENTRAL TRUST COMPANY
OF CALIFORNIA
Has removed to its new offices Corner Market, Sutter and Sansome Streets
A General Banking Business Transacted
CHAS. F. LEEGE, President B. G. TOGNAZZI, Manager

TAFT & PENNOYER
Our Thirty-Second Annual
10% Discount Sale
Is Now in Full Swing
10% in name only---as the discounts range from 10% to 50%
This is the season of the year with us that the purchasing power of your DOLLAR is stretched to its utmost buying capacity. All our departments offer a TEN PER CENT REDUCTION on our regular prices; some of them 15 per cent; some 25 per cent; and in some cases where we have lines that we are desirous of closing out the reduction reaches 50 PER CENT. This statement cannot help but convince you that this month of JANUARY, 1909, will be an ideal month in which to shop and to buy generously.
CLAY STREET, 14th to 15th
OAKLAND

The Financial Outlook

By R. E. Mulcahy

Since giving my advice the first of this month, to liquidate holdings and await the future, the market has had not a few recessions, though without spectacular features. The decline has been orderly, indicating that influential bankers are in full control and willing to see the speculative situation in Wall Street readjusted, it cannot be said that big interests are entirely dormant, as a quiet accumulation of certain stocks is in progress for some coming great deal in the railway world, such as we believe, will be found in connection with New York Central and the Harriman System later on. Probably the chief factor relative to industry and the security market is the tariff subject, the whole commerce of the country is being held up awaiting this readjustment of the tariff. The great steel and copper business is running from hand to mouth only, and the same may be said of minorities of trade. Wall Street looks upon this element of the financial outlook as a forerunner of lower securities. We doubt this position and do not consider it logical in view of the nearness of the tariff adjustment. The incoming administration will use every effort to place before Congress a tariff bill at the June session, and one that will meet the requirements of all interests combined in this country, a bill that will pass both branches of Congress. Mr. Taft has no desire to delay business operations longer than necessary and we believe this vital matter will be carried through in due course, meantime, we must expect continued temporary stagnation in metal lines and industry generally speaking. However, at the first sign of harmony among the lawmakers in Washington in the coming tariff solution such will be quickly reflected in Wall Street circles. A very bullish factor, and as a strong basis of speculative values in good stocks is the increasing drug in the money market with abnormally low rates prevailing, this commodity must be employed and will seek stocks on any sign, even nominal recessions from the present basis of values. With bankers in a waiting attitude as to the immediate future, we may expect a market devoid of any particular feature, except for some specialties, while somewhat lower prices is not impossible, yet I am not anticipating a material decline.

The questions now before the public with the probable merger of the Union Pacific, Southern Pacific and New York Central, in view is, What will the Pennsylvania do to meet these conditions? Will it not force the Pennsylvania to reach the Pacific Coast? If so, is Harriman strong enough to keep the Atchison road out of the Pennsylvania control? It is unreasonable to suppose a property like the Pennsylvania would live under such a handicap. The ear-marks of a great change in the railway systems of this country are too much in evidence to be mistaken. The centralization of control, in so far as railway operation is concerned is rapidly nearing a point of action when one board of governors will dictate the policy of the greater portion of the railroads of the United States. The New York Central and Pennsylvania properties will be foremost in these changed conditions. There are many good reasons why such changes should come about. I hear from very reliable sources that Hawley has been a heavy buyer of Rock Island Stock recently. He, no doubt, has some plan in view that may be a surprise to Wall Street. When he turned over the control of Colorado Southern to the Burlington it was a big surprise even to the Harriman interests, who lost a valuable feeder. The Atchison and Rock Island properties will figure largely in any changes that may come. The Gould lines will continue as they always have, absolutely independent. It is a sure thing the Pacific Coast will be benefited, no matter what changes are made. The Pacific Coast Railways are now placed in a position where they must develop their local territory. It will result in increasing the Coast population to very large figures within the next five years. The country west of the Rocky Mountains is attracting very general attention at the hands of the monyed interests of the East. Millions will come from the East for the development of power plants; these interests will cause the building of a great number of branch transportation lines to be operated by electricity. An immense new area will be added to production through these advantages.

Total importation of Scotch Whiskys into New York during December, 1908:

Black and White	4305 cases
Dewars	2512 cases
King William	1575 cases
Robinson Sanderson & Son (Mountain View)	400 cases

SUNSET ROUTE EXCURSION

Personally conducted over the Coast Line—100-mile seashore ride along the the Pacific—through orange groves of Southern California and rice and cotton fields of the sunny south to the great

Mardi Gras Carnival

New Orleans, January 6th to February 23d

Leave San Francisco February 15, 1909.

ROUND TRIP, $80

Tickets good for thirty days, stopover returning. Write to agents for details and descriptive literature.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC

Telephone DOUGLAS 2487 — R. E. MULCAHY, Manager

E. F. HUTTON & CO.

THE PIONEER HOUSE

BANKERS AND BROKERS

Members
New York Stock Exchange
New York Cotton Exchange
New York Coffee Exchange
Chicago Board of Trade

490 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Branch, ST. FRANCIS HOTEL

Two Private Wires to Chicago and NewYork

Washington, D. C., 1301 F Street
Los Angeles, 112 W. Third Street
New York, 31-33-35 New Street

Social Prattle

By TANTALUS

A Tragic Episode

The principle which is responsible for the spoiling of the soup when there are too many cooks employed in its concoction is already asserting itself in the matter of the Colonial dances which are under the circumspection of quite a host of hostesses. The last dance came within an ace of being a dead cold frost, a fact that may be attributed to the precautions that have been taken to insure the acme of exclusiveness. When the society was organized for the purpose of giving Colonial dances it was deemed advisable to bar therefrom everybody who had not been properly branded, and with that end in view it was decided that nobody should be invited against whom objection should be urged by any of the patronesses. Now there is nothing so easy as to frame an objection

MRS. HUGO MANSFELDT

Who is to leave in a few days on a trip to Europe.

especially when responsibility is divided as in the Colonial society. The objection on which a girl may be barred from a dance may be inspired entirely with personal prejudice, and sometimes a mother's personal prejudice is the result of nothing more than the consciousness of her own daughter's inferior charms. Some mothers are so selfish that they would safeguard their daughters against all rivalry, and in doing so would have not the slightest consideration for the feelings of others. Whether this selfishness has operated in the Colonial society I do not know, but I am told that the line has been drawn for unaccountable reasons, and that the drawing thereof has provoked quite a disturbance. Owing to the humiliation of one very charming girl who lives in the interior of the State a great storm was raised. A gentleman had purchased for her an invitation, she had a gown made for the occasion, and at the eleventh hour, when she was arrayed in all her finery and keyed up with joyous anticipation, her escort arrived with the tragic news that the money for her invitation had been refunded. Here is an episode for a stirring drama. Think of the poignant cruelty of it! Presented on the stage it would move the coldest audience to long for the punishment of the perpetrators of so wanton a deed. But in society the story of it serves only as a bit of interesting gossip. However the management of the Colonial dances may be expected to mend its ways. Before the last dance an indignation meeting was held in the University Club and those present resolved that they would not attend, but all did not keep their word.

Photo, Bushnell. MRS. "LARRY" ADAMS

Who has returned from her trip abroad.

The Purple is There

Mrs. Parker Whitney has set a new style in mourning wear. After her father's death she affected the deepest black, but now she has reached that period of affliction when second mourning is permissible. Second mourning is usually assumed to mean some mitigation of the gloom in garmenture, black and white, soft shades of lavender or purple and such combinations, but Mrs. Whitney, while keeping the letter of the law, has ingeniously managed to evade its spirit. One of her dress hats is

MISS ELSIE DE WOLFE
REPRESENTED BY
MRS. EDGAR DE WOLFE
INTERIOR DECORATION AND OBJECTS D' ART
TEMPORARY OFFICE, GRANADA HOTEL TELEPHONE FRANKLIN 422

nominally black and purple. The black hat is trimmed with purple pansies, but the purple is restricted to the borders of the petals, and is so slight in comparison with the enormous yellow centers of the blossoms that at a very short distance it is not noticeable. Some stickler for "the proprieties" remarked that that was not a mourning hat. "Oh, yes," replied a friend, "those are really purple pansies; the yellow is only put in to brighten them." Others who find mourning garb irksome are thinking of adopting the style, and ere long yellow blossoms in mourning hats will be as much a matter of course as the black band on a colored sleeve, which, by the way, is only the badge of mourning which foreign families expect their liveried servants to wear when there is bereavement in the household of their masters.

Of the Innumerable Parrott Clan

An important addition to the bachelor colony has been made in the person of Marc de la Lande. He is another of the Parrott connection, a son of Madame de la Lande, who was May Parrott, the second daughter of Mrs. Abby M. Parrott. The de la Landes have made their home in France ever since their marriage, and in consequence the children are but slightly known to their mother's old friends on this coast. Marc de la Lande came out with the Vicomte de Dampierre to be present at his cousin's wedding, and they say he is so pleased with his glimpse of California that he has decided to make quite a long visit with his grandmother, Mrs. Parrott. Shortly after his arrival an intimate friend of the family, giving a debutante dinner, included Marc in her list of guests though she had not yet met him. Mrs. Parrott, in speaking of her grandson to this lady, referred to him as "a mere boy," and when the invitation was accepted, she, having lost track of the flight of time, had some inward misgivings, expecting to have on her hands a callow youth in his first teens, who would be unadapted to the rest of the company, but she was agreeably surprised when he presented himself, for the "mere boy" can boast some six feet two of height, and other physical qualities in proportion, with the polish and bearing of a man of the world. Added to that, he is bright, clever, and full of fun, and will some day inherit the title of Vicomte now borne by his father. So many California girls marry foreign titles that perhaps this is another opportunity. Marc de la Lande is half American—half Californian at that, and may be he could be persuaded to settle eventually in his mother's old home in San Mateo.

No Ostentation There

The key note of the de Guigne-de Dampierre wedding was simplicity, the more marked because of the tendency of late on the part of our social leaders to attempt to dazzle by the brilliancy of their functions. Not only was the bride unattended, but there were neither groomsmen nor ushers, the old family butlers showing the guests to their seats in the church. Captain A. H. Payson, who acted as best man, and Christian de Guigne, who gave his daughter into the hands of the groom, formed the whole extent of the bridal party. Only about ninety of the intimate friends of the family were present. The first plans were for a large and elaborate wedding, but the business affairs of Vicomte de Dampierre will require his presence in France and in consequence, the original date for the wedding was set forward a month. There was an informality about the reception at the de Guigne homestead, Minnehaha, which made the affair unusually lively even for a wedding. The honeymoon trip projects a visit to Santa Barbara, Coronado and the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, with a return to California for a week, after which the de Dampierres will leave at once for France, where they will make their home for the first six months. In November they are to return to San Mateo where six months will be spent at the bride's home. Marie de Guigne has always been one of the best loved and admired girls in her set, and already before her departure plans are being discussed for her welcome and entertainment when she comes home again.

A Conspicuous Absentee

By the way Mrs. Payson was conspicious by her absence from the de Guigne-de Dampierre wedding reception. She witnessed the marriage ceremony from a rear pew in the church and made her exit at the close of the nuptial mass. After the wedding breakfast she appeared on her own front porch from whence she signalled across the intervening lawn to the guests, some of whom responding to her invitation held an informal chat with her. Which reminds me that after the big earthquake, when St. Matthew's Church in San Mateo was virtually demolished and mass was celebrated for months in the de Guigne stable Mrs. Payson never entered the building to attend services. Nevertheless she complied with her religious obligations at a point about thirty feet from the entrance to the improvised chapel. There on a camp stool, in solitary state, she followed the services.

An Episode in Society

One of our popular society belles has gained a reputation for originality and piquant unconventionality which is said to have made her deliciously attractive to the men, though the chaperons sit up and gasp for breath at some of her doings. What the same line of conduct would be called in any one but a wealthy society favorite is quite another matter and beside the point. It was at supper at a recent dance that the latest display of refinement was given. An eligible partner who had been unable to approach the popular young lady earlier in the evening, seized his belated opportunity to claim a dance. Leaning across the table he proffered his request for the favor. With thumb to nose and twiddling her fingers after the manner of a street urchin, "Sixth for you," she shouted down the whole length of the table, and unconcernedly went on with her supper.

Such Shocking Manners

The ill behavior of the young bachelors of society has been a theme of discussion amongst hostesses for several years, but if the experiences of the present season are any indication all the strictures passed have not served to awaken conscience or bring about any improvement. Several of the otherwise most attractive young men are decidedly inconsiderate, and one in particular is on the black books of two of the matrons because of his unpardonable breach of etiquette. It has become quite a common occurrence for young men to accept dinner invitations and then to leave their hostesses as chaperons, with young girls stranded on their hands, while the partners provided for them proceed to have a good time in their own way, completely ignoring the social amenities. In the particular instance referred to the same young man was a guest at dinner before the Colonial ball and the last Friday Night, and in each case he considered his

MRS. OSCAR MANSFELDT
PIANIST
TELEPHONE WEST 314 1801 BUCHANAN STREET

IDEAL FARMS
"CERTIFIED MILK"
The most perfect product of the modern dairy
Certified to by the Medical Commission of the San Francisco County Medical Society
DISTRIBUTED BY
GUADALOUPE DAIRY CO. Phone Market 2590
STANDARD MILK CO. Phone Market 226

duty discharged when he escorted the debutante who fell to his lot as far as the ball room door, where he deserted her to her own devices, not even claiming the supper dance, which was his by right. It is scarcely a plausible excuse, that he has but lately returned from the wilds, where his polish has been rubbed off, and it is not unlikely that the matrons who go to so much trouble to make things agreeable may discover some practical retaliatory measure which will result in a return to the courtesy that marked the social intercourse of bygone generations when a gentleman was expected, as a matter of course, to put himself last and sacrifice even his comfort to the pleasure of a lady.

Is Cupid Concerned?

Society is regretting that Helen Bowie has reconsidered her decision to spend the winter in San Francisco with her aunt, Mrs. Jessie Bowie-Detrick. Everyone is wondering at the sudden abandonment of the first plan and there have been some whispers of a very ardent attachment upon which Mrs. Bowie-Detrick has not beamed entire approval, and some hints that it is on account of this difference of opinion that Miss Helen has concluded to return to the shelter of the maternal roof at Palo Alto. There is no necessity, however, thus to give wing to conjecture, for, with the younger sister married and the boys away at school, Mrs. Bowie would have been very much alone, and filial affection may have outweighed the delights of a gay winter.

A Wealthy Widow's Marriage

The marriage of Mrs. Mary Woods Allen Naher, one of Stockton's wealthiest widows, to McDonald Douglas, the popular clerk of the Hotel Savoy, caused a gasp of astonishment from the society dames and a sigh of regret from the bachelors of the Slough City, eligible in years but not in income. Mrs. Douglas comes from one of the most exclusive and plutocratic families in the San Joaquin Valley. When her father, John Woods, died, he divided his millions and his Roberts Island rancho between his two daughters, Mary and Jessie, who is now Mrs. George Wilhoit. Mary's first marriage, with the popular clubman, George Allen, proved a failure. Then followed the first divorce in the conservative ranks of Stockton's smart set. Later on, the fair divorcee married Fred Naher, a wholesale liquor merchant and widower.

The Preston Dinner

One of the most elaborate of the many beautiful dinners given at the Fairmont recently was that by Mrs. Edgar Preston. The guests were seated at a circular table in the Laurel Court which was lavishly decorated with brilliant poinsettia blossoms. The same color scheme was carried out in the shaded lights, and the place cards were amongst the most novel seen this season. Each card was beautifully decorated and held by a small bird in all the bright plumage of nature. Mrs. Preston brought them over from Paris with her. Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. H. M. A. Miller, Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Spencer, Miss Maud O'Connor, Worthington Ames, Mr. and Mrs. George Spence, Mr. and Mrs. George Sperry, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Deering. Other dinners given during the week were those of Mr. and Mrs. Percy T. Morgan, Mrs. I. Lowenberg, Mrs. Andrew Welch and Mr. and Mrs. Fred Sharon.

The Carolans Are Back

Guests at the Fairmont who happened to be in the lobby when the Francis Carolans arrived from a belated journey on the obstructed Overland are still gasping over the tremendous amount of hand luggage that the party brought with them. At first sight one would have imagined that they had contracted the European habit of carrying everything with them, but a glimpse of a couple of immense vans which followed them to the hotel disposed of that idea. The Carolans have been abroad for several months. They are accompanied by Miss Page Brown, and will remain at the Fairmont for a few days before proceeding to Burlingame. Now that the Carolans are back I am confident that I shall soon hear all the latest gossip of the London theatre, for of course Mrs. Carolan was Mrs. "Pat" Campbell's constant companion in London.

Southern Families to be United

An engagement recently announced is that of Miss Nina Crittenden and Austin Carrington Scott. The prospective bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James L. Crittenden of Oakland. Mr. Scott is the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Harrison Scott, and a nephew of the late Mrs. Monroe Salisbury. His brother married an adopted daughter of Admiral Sampson. Both families are prominent in the exclusive southern set, where their connections are large, including the Robinsons, Van Wycks and Thorntons. The young people were jealously guarding their secret, for it will probably be all of two years before the marriage takes place, so they felt seriously annoyed when their engagement became known to the public.

A Russian Princess in Berkeley

Professor Jerome B. Landfield, formerly of the University of California, has returned to Berkeley, accompanied by his bride, the Princess Lobanoff-Rostovsky, daughter of the Grand Chancellor of all the Russias, and for the present they are registered at the Hotel Carlton, where they are receiving the congratulations of friends, after a honeymoon of a year and a half spent in travel on four continents. Professor Landfield was for three years

TRADE MARK
Quality
McLean's
Service
1158-1168 SUTTER ST. SAN FRANCISCO

You may be partial to some particular brand of wines or liquors. We carry in this department nearly every favorite kind of champagne, whiskey, cordial and liqueur. Quality is proved only by test, and we hope you will make it as critical as we do in our selections.

L. D. McLEAN CO.
IMPORTERS AND GROCERS
PHONE FRANKLIN 2810 1158-1168 Sutter St. San Francisco

Luscious Old Red Wine

LA QUESTA

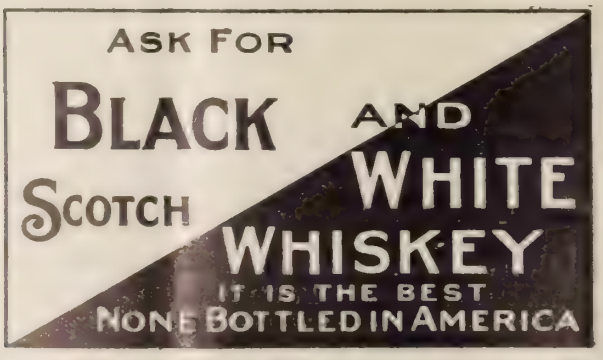
AGED IN THE WOOD AND MELLOWED IN THE BOTTLE

Pronounced by experts the best wine made in California

FOR SALE BY

L. D. McLEAN CO. McCAW BROS.
L. N. WALTER, Cor. Devisadero and California
JULIUS BERENDSEN, 762 Devisadero Street

Served at The St. Francis, The Fairmont, Hotel Rafael, Peninsula Hotel, Jules, Chantilly, Berges & Frank's Old Poodle Dog, Thompson's, New Frank's, Union League Club and Cosmos Club.



associate professor of history under Henry Morse Stephens, head of that department at the State University. He was much sought after by the social elect of the bay communities, and was the object of so many elaborate functions that his friends say he was driven to flight in order to escape the persistent lionizing. The marriage of the Princess Lobanoff-Rostovsky and Professor Landfield took place in St. Petersburg about eighteen months ago, since which time they have been traveling through India, Japan and Egypt, and spending the last three months of their European tour in England. Professor Landfield laughs at the absurd story circulated some time ago, that Ambassador Whitelaw Reid had refused to introduce them at the Court of St. James. "Because of my wife's position and rank she needs introduction to no court in the world. She has the inherent right to appear at any court function whatsoever, and as far as the question of our requesting an introduction of Ambassador Reid is concerned, it is made of whole cloth. We saw the Reids but seldom during our stay in London, and at no time did I ask the favor of an introduction. We had our circle of friends and seldom went outside it." They have no definite plans for the future, but will probably remain in Berkeley for some time, exchanging their quarters at the Hotel Carlton for a private residence.

Greenway's Activities

Debutantes and matrons are alike anticipating the coming Greenway Assembly which will be held in the white and gold ball room of the Fairmont on Friday evening, January 29th. It is rumored that, not content with the triumph of his first Assembly on December 18th, Mr. Greenway is planning to introduce new features which will serve as a fillip to the jaded appetities of society folk, who demand new attractions continually. The last affair presented a rare display of costuming and jewels but it is rumored that the return from Europe of several of Mr. Greenway's staunchest friends will help to make the second Assembly a greater success than the first. Many of the debutantes who went to the first dance of the club in fear and trembling lest they should be unable to fill their cards are now considering whom they will favor on the coming night, for dancing men there are in abundance, so many, in fact as to insure for everyone a good time. Society is already looking past the coming Friday night to the Mardi Gras Ball with which the Assembly will close its season on February 18th. As there has been nothing of this nature in San Francisco since the last affair at the Hopkins' Art Institute, it will have all the charms of novelty to the younger set, and it is generally believed that even the famous Mardi Gras Balls of New Orleans will be eclipsed. The fact that the Kermess, which is to be held at the Central Theatre for charity immediately preceding the Assembly will be a fancy dress affair will probably stimulate many to evolve costumes which can be made to serve for both occasions.

Pelleas and Melissande

Miss Margaret Kemble, a young artist who has been devoting her talents to musical interpretation, and in particular to the study of the modern musical drama, is to be the first to introduce the famous Debussey opera of "Pelleas and Melissande" to the music lovers of San Francisco. While the affair is under the patronage of a number of prominent society women, it will be notable in the musical history of the city and will be attended by students who are interested in the development of music in the west. The opera itself will not find its way to us for a long time, but Miss Kemble announces an interpretative study of the lyric drama, with piano numbers and violoncello solos by Arthur Weiss. Mr. Weiss, who earned local fame through his music for the Bohemian Club jinks last year, has found time for more serious study, and will give two of the exquisite solos in the famous French composition. The Debussey opera, like many of the fragments from the modern composers, is original in quality, full of subtle harmonies and curiously original rhythms. Many of the lesser Debussey songs are popular in Paris, but the latest opera created a furore in New York last season under the direction of Oscar Hammerstein. The music is described as "tenuous, vaporous, intangible," since Debussey has achieved his fame solely as a musical poet of half-lights and shadows. If Miss Kemble succeeds in presenting the elusive charm of the music she will but sustain the reputation she has already earned in her previous renderings of Beethoven and more modern compositions. Amongst the society sponsors for the Debussey interpretation, which is to take place at the St. Francis on the evening of February 3rd, are Mrs. William G. Irwin, Mrs. Walter S. Martin, Mrs. George A. Newhall, Mrs. Rudolph Spreckels, Mrs. Charles Stetson Wheeler, Mrs. James Ellis Tucker, Mrs. George H. Mendell Jr., Mrs. Eleanor Martin, Mrs. Eugene Lent, Mrs. Walter McGavin and Mrs. M. C. Sloss. The patronesses from Oakland and Berkeley who are interested in the affair are Mrs. Isaac L. Requa, Mrs. Oscar Fitzalan Long, Mrs. Charles Egbert and Mrs. Frank Havens. The patrons are Charles Templeton Crocker, R. M. Tobin, Dr. Harry Tevis, Henry T. Scott and J. Downey Harvey.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

HEAR OUR ARTISTS AND ORCHESTRA DURING DINNER AND AFTER THEATRE

MISS ANITA GILL, Mezzo Soprano
MISS NADYNE PARKER, Lyric Soprano

THOMPSON'S ANNEX
O'Farrell near Fillmore

THE COSMOS
658 MARKET ST., OPPOSITE PALACE HOTEL

Table d' Hote Lunch, 50c.

Salad
Fresh Crab — Sliced Tomato

Soup
Cream of Onion — Sliced Tomato

Entrees
Tenderloin of Sole, Tartar Sauce — Salmon Trout, Maitre d'Hotel
Pot Roast with Noodles — Sheep's Feet Spanish
Vienna Schnitzel, Tomato Sauce — Leg of Lamb with Spanish
Tagliarini and Cheese — Roast Beef, au Jus

Dessert
Sliced Bananas and Cream — Water Melon — Ice Cream
Apple Pie — Squash Pie
Swiss Cheese — Roquefort Cheese — Brie Cheese

You will find SWAIN'S
Bakery and Restaurant on the line at
1241 VAN NESS AVENUE, Near Sutter Street
AFTERNOON TEA for Shoppers with Music from 3 to 5 o'clock
BROWNLOW, the baritone, sings every evening from 6 to 8 o'clock

JULES' RESTAURANT 328 BUSH STREET
Below Kearny
Phone Kearny 1812
MUSIC SUNDAYS
OPEN EVENINGS, INCLUDING SUNDAY
DINNER With Wine, 75c.
DINNER, SUNDAYS AND HOLIDAYS With Wine, $1.00.

In the Social Spotlight

Mrs. M. E. Kirkwood is visiting her friends, Miss George and Mrs. Fenn, who are Del Monte for the winter.

The Hanging Committee of the Del Monte Art Gallery held their regular meeting on the 16th, and rehung the gallery. A few good canvasses were added to the collection by William Keith, Hanson Puthuff, Calthea Vivian and Alice Best. Dr. Genthe replaced his group of photographs by a very interesting collection of studies made during his recent trip to Japan. The artists who came down were Gottardo F. Piazzoni, Will Sparks, Florence Lundborg and J. K. Steele.

A few of the recent arrivals at the Tavern of Tamalpais were Mrs. E. J. Smith, Mrs. M. F. Bagley, W. D. Conover, Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Murphy, San Francisco; R. E. Haas, Moscow, Russia; H. Haas, Basle, Switzerland.

Arrivals at the Hotel del Coronado from San Francisco and vicinity for the week ending January 17th, were Mrs. F. Y. Bennett, Mrs. H. S. Meyers, Mrs. P. K. Gordon, Mr. Gus Seyfried, Mr. Fred W. Gregory, Mr. W. W. Erskine, Mr. A. H. Castle, Mr. and Mrs. M. Abraham, San Francisco; Miss N. Hyland, San Jose; Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Mitchler, Oakland.

The Wellington Greggs, who have been occupying apartments at the Fairmont since their return from Europe are planning to reopen their house at San Mateo in the near future. Miss Enid and Miss Ethel Gregg have been much sought after socially this winter.

Mrs. Henry Foster Dutton was hostess at a delightful luncheon in the Laurel Court of the Fairmont, complimentary to Mrs. Fletcher Ryer. After the manner so much in vogue there, the guests were seated at a large round table which was decorated with beautiful flowers. Amongst those present were Mr. Fletcher Ryer, Mrs. Joseph Tobin, Mrs. R. P. Schwerein, Mrs. Thomas Eastland, Mrs. Clem Tobin, Mrs. Wakefield Baker, Mrs. Porter, Mrs. Vail, Mrs. Mortimer Smith, Miss Mary Joliffe, Miss O'Connor, Miss Jennie Blair, Miss Enid Gregg, Miss Spauling, and Miss Margaret Stowe of Santa Barbara.

Among the prominent guests registered at the Fairmont this week are Mr. and Mrs. Randolph Hearst, Mr. and Mrs. George Wilson and A. W. Tovey.

The cordial greeting which society accorded to Signor de Grassi on his appearance in the Colonial ball room of the St. Francis was not only a tribute to his genius but in part a felicitation upon his approaching marriage to Miss Winifred June Morgan, which is to take place in St. Paul's Episcopal Church in Oakland. While in Southern California the de Grassis will be entertained by Mrs. Gilbert Perkins, formerly Miss Clara Huntington, who is a life long friend of the bride.

As usual, the arrival of the Manchuria brought a full complement of guests to the Fairmont. The average business man hardly realizes what it means to San Francisco to have these great steamship coming in twice a month with their hundreds of passengers. Amongst those who arrived on this occasion were Mr. and Mrs. H. Holmes of Honolulu; J. K. Roosevelt, New York; Dr. Nord, Tien Tsin, China; Mr. and Mrs. R. L. James, Frank James, Miss Mollie James, Urbana, Kentucky; Miss Adair and maid; Miss Nellie Port and maid, London.

Guests at the Fairmont from Southern California are Ed. A. Dickson, George B. Anderson, M. J. Connell, Colonel J. B. Lankershim of the Lankershim Hotel, and Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Fleischman, all of Los Angeles. Mr. and Mrs. Dan H. Steele of San Diego are stopping for a few days en route for the East on a business trip.

Mr. J. F. Stimson of New York is visiting his friend, Mr. W. H. Smith, who is spending the winter at Del Monte. Mr. Stimson is an enthusiastic golf player and expects to remain for a month or more.

Frank Miller of Riverside, accompanied by his daughter, Miss Allis, is at the Fairmont. Mr. Miller is one of the best known hotel men of the country, "The Mission Inn," being celebrated everywhere as a monument to his ability.

Mrs. Thomas Gardiner has sent out cards announcing the marriage of her daughter, Florence Alethia, to Mr. Alfred G. Mitchler, which took place in Oakland on the fifth of January. The bride is a sister of George Gardiner, who married pretty Edith Findley. Mr. Mitchler is a brother of Mrs. Horace Sperry of this city.

Mrs. W. H. Beatty, wife of Chief Justice Beatty, returned last week from an extended visit to the south, where she went for the benefit of her health. Most of the time was spent between South Carolina and Kentucky.

Mrs. J. B. Schroeder has taken a house at 1960 Baker street for the winter. Her daughter, Mrs. Crabtree, is visiting her mother.

Mr. and Mrs. Horace G. Hellmann will leave early next month for Valparaiso, Chili, on a lengthy visit to Mrs. Hellmann's sister, who has resided there for many years.

Mr. H. E. Law, who has been one of the most important factors in the rebuilding of San Francisco, has taken permanent apartments at the St. Francis.

A SKIN OF BEAUTY IS A JOY FOREVER

DR. T. FELIX GOURAUD'S

ORIENTAL CREAM

OR MAGICAL BEAUTIFIER

Purifies as well as Beautifies the Skin. No other cosmetic will do it.

Removes Tan, Pimples, Freckles, Moth Patches, Rash and Skin Diseases, and every blemish on beauty, and defies detection. It has stood the test of 60 years; no other has, and it is so harmless we taste it to be sure it is properly made. Accept no countefeit of similar name. The distinguished Dr. L. A. Sayre said to a lady of the haut-on (a patient): "As you ladies will use them, I recommend 'Gouraud's Cream' as the least harmful of all the skin preparations."

For sale by all Druggists and Fancy Goods Dealers.

GOURAUD'S ORIENTAL TOILET POWDER

For infants and adults. Exquisitely perfumed. Relieves Skin Irritation, cures Sunburn and renders an excellent complexion. Price 25 Cents, by Mail.

GOURAUD'S POUDRE SUBTILE

Removes Superfluous Hair. Price $1.00, by mail

FERD. T. HOPKINS, Prop'r, 37 Great Jones St., New York City.

MENNEN'S

BORATED TALCUM

TOILET POWDER

"Baby's Best Friend"

and Mamma's greatest comfort. Mennen's relieves and prevents Chapped Hands and Chafing.

For your protection the genuine is put up in non-refillable boxes—the "Box that Lox," with Mennen's face on top. Sold everywhere or by mail 25 cents—Sample free.

Try Mennen's Violet (Borated) Talcum Toilet Powder—It has the scent of Fresh-cut Parma Violets. Sample free.

GERHARD MENNEN CO., Newark, N. J.

Mennen's Sen Yang Toilet Powder, Oriental Odor } No
Mennen's Borated Skin Soap (blue wrapper) } Samples
Specially prepared for the nursery. Sold only at Stores.

DO YOU have any difficulty in arranging your hair? Is it contrary and hard to manage? If so, it lacks the qualities that should accompany perfect hair-health. To overcome the difficulty use

ED. PINAUD'S

(Eau de Quinine)

HAIR TONIC

which makes the hair silky and fluffy—qualities that add greatly to its attractiveness.

Try a sample bottle. Note how elastic and springy it makes the hair — how quickly it frees the scalp from dandruff, which is the cause of nearly all hair and scalp trouble.

After a fair trial of ED. PINAUD'S HAIR TONIC you will easily understand why it is infinitely superior to all other hair preparations.

Let us send you a trial bottle of ED. PINAUD'S HAIR TONIC. Simply send us 10 cents. (to pay for postage and packing) and we will forward it at once.

PARFUMERIE ED. PINAUD, DEPT. S. F.

ED. PINAUD Bldg. Fifth Ave., New York

Mrs. Robert Dunsmuir, who has been visiting her mother, Mrs. Shoobert, at Red Gables, Sausalito, will soon leave for Boston, where she is to reside next year.

Mrs. William Gardiner of New York, formerly Roberta Clay, arrived during the week on a visit to her parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Clay of Berkeley. She will remain in California several months.

Mr. Frank Finley will arrive from Boston at the end of this month, having been absent for six months on a business trip. Mrs. Finley and her young son returned to their home in Sausalito several weeks ago.

Mrs. Frank Miller, who is now occupying "The Hutch" in Sausalito, recently gave a luncheon at her quaint little home. Amongst those entertained were Mrs. Lewis Beedy, Mrs. Wm. Klink, Mrs. Frank Findley, Mrs. H. Clay Miller Jr., Mrs. Orrin Wolfe and Mrs. Watkins.

Mr. and Mrs. M. L. Hickman have issued invitations for a dancing party which will take place at their home in Sausalito on the second of February in celebration of the forty-ninth anniversary of their wedding. Both Mr. and Mrs. Hickman are fond of young company, and are constantly entertaining the young set, who are eagerly anticipating this event.

Mrs. Joseph Manuel Masten has issued invitations for two large and elaborate bridge parties to take place on January 27th and 28th at her home on Washington street. Mrs. Masten is one of the most popular young matrons, a gracious hostess noted for her originality. The prizes, as usual, will be unique and artistic.

Registered at the Hotel Green, Pasadena, are Mr. Barclay McGowan, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Hannan, Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Davis, Mrs. J. B. McKee, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Mozart, Mrs. Augusta Smith, and J. R. Molard, all from San Francisco.

The Gadski concert in the Colonial ball room of the St. Francis last week was a brilliant social event. The membership list alone, and the success of the first, the Nordica concert, insuring a full attendance of society. The display of handsome gowns was even more notable than on the former occasion. Most of the tables in the white and gold room were reserved for dinner parties, and the boxes and loges were occupied by the representative families of San Francisco. Mr. and Mrs. George A. Newhall entertained several guests, amongst whom were Mr. and Mrs. Walter S. Martin, Miss Jennie Crocker, Charles Templeton Crocker, and Mr. and Mrs. Joseph D. Grant. Amongst other groups of smart people were those who enjoyed the hospitality of Mrs. Phoebe Hearst, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Frye, Mr. and Mrs. William G. Irwin, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Stetson Wheeler, Mr. and Mrs. C. O. G. Miller, and Mr. and Mrs. H. M. A. Miller. Artistically, the Gadski concert attained a very high plane of excellence. In staging its series of concerts the St. Francis Musical Art Society has proved that San Francisco's appreciation of the muses has only awaited a proper temple in which to express itself.

Mrs. Charles J. Foster and Mrs. Edward Van Bergen have issued invitations for a dancing party which will take place at their residence, 2512 Pacific avenue, on Saturday evening, February 6th. On this occasion the charming young hostesses will be Miss Marie Louise Foster and Miss Mina Van Bergen. Invitations will be only for those in their early teens, the prominent small buds from San Rafael, Ross Valley, and this city.

The Claremont Improvement Club celebrated its first anniversary by a banquet at the Hotel Carlton on Thursday evening last, when officers for the ensuing year were elected. The club was organized on January 7th, 1908, with a membership of sixteen. Sixty-eight participated in the festivities which marked its firs birthday.

A pleasant dinner at the St. Francis, preceding the Gadski concert, was given by Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Clark, who had among their guests Mrs. John Casserly, Mrs. Raoul Duval, Miss Pomeroy, Edwin Tobin, Count Charles du Parc, Mr. Harvey and Colonel Pickering.

Mrs. Clarence Nicholson, formerly Maud Miller, will soon leave for Manila, on a visit to Dr. and Mrs. Breechman, U. S. A. Mrs. Breechman will be remembered as the interesting Ruth Miller.

NEW YEAR GREETING

Start 1909 aright. Telephone us about wiring or repairing.

Telephone Douglas 1185 and 1186.

LEVY ELECTRIC CO.

HURRY UP ELECTRICIANS

LEVY ELECTRIC WIRING COMPANY

Electric Trains, Cars, Dynamos, Motors, Batteries, Machinery, Magic Lanterns Moving Pictures, Telegraph and Telephones, Wireless Outfits, X-rays, Etc.

648 Sacramento St. San Francisco 1205 Polk Street

When you have a choice, take the best. For purity of design, harmony of color and quality, there can be no better wall paper made than that shown by

TAYLOR & SINCLAIR CO.

INTERIOR DECORATORS BUSH AT VAN NESS

Mrs. Warfield

PIANO SCHOOL FOR CHILDREN AND BEGINNERS

Telephone Piedmont 3414 6409 Regent Street, Berkeley

Tuesday and Friday, Ebell Club, Oakland

THE BEAUTIFUL HOTEL DEL CORONADO

Where people of wealth and leisure from all parts of the world escape the rigors of the winter season and enjoy all sorts of athletic diversions.

Stage

Sothern's Hamlet

When I first made the acquaintance of Sothern's Hamlet at the Columbia Theatre some years ago I believed it hardly possible for an actor to achieve a more perfect realization of the Prince of Denmark, but I find that I was mistaken. Mr. Sothern himself has proved that I was in error. In Mr. Sothern we have the most conscientious, painstaking and ambitious artist that the American stage has known since the days of Edwin Booth, and it is to these qualities we owe that improvement in his craftsmanship which I have remarked and which doubtless has been discerned by others. Not many years ago Mr. Sothern was a matinee idol, thrilling girlish hearts in romantic dramas and fattening his bank account wherever he went, but to him pecuniary success was not wholly satisfying. He longed for opportunities in the so-called legitimate drama, and finally ventured to test his qualifications for serious, intellectual work in that complex and most difficult role which he selected for the opening of his engagement at the Van Ness Theatre. From the first it was evident that he had not invited criticism without deliberation and study. At the very outset he seized the character and interpreted it with infinite subtlety and detail. And now we see that his art has broadened and deepened, that his conception has mellowed and that his interpretation has become firmer and stronger. He gives us the morbid, vacillating instrument of revenge in all his complexity and changefulness—just as Shakespeare drew him. I have never seen an artist more faithfully interpretative of a masterpiece. With the exception of Booth no stage Hamlet ever moved me as Sothern's does. Booth lingers vividly in memory as the ideal Hamlet, but between the dead and the living tragedians comparison is impelled by reason of similarity of conception and treatment, the only difference being a tendency to realism rather than to poetry in Sothern's delineation. This is the only flaw in Sothern's craftsmanship. It is a concession to the modern notion that poetry is nothing more than an ornament of the drama whereas it serves the purpose of heightening emotion as music and every element of beauty always does. However, the dominant note of Sothern's performance is sincerity, and he does not sacrifice to realism so much of the beauty of the role as to weaken perceptibly the appeal to emotion. His realism stirs our intellect and touches our heart. There is no effort in his performance to convince his audience that he solved the psychology of the role. He is content to realize for us a perturbed and febrile spirit, a man laboring under hysterical excitement, one who assumes and lays aside the antic disposition as the mood seizes him or as seems most suitable to his dark design. He moves in an atmosphere of tragedy, affecting us with the deeping gloom of his tortured soul until he plunges us into the final catastrophe.

—Theodore Bonnet.

Sothern's Repertoire

In wonderful contrast to Sothern's Hamlet are the two other roles in which he appears—Richard Lovelace and Lord Dundreary. In each of these Mr. Sothern scored a distinct triumph this week. For his next and final week's engagement, commencing Monday night, Mr. Sothern has selected the following repertoire: Monday and Tuesday nights, Lord Dundreary; Wednesday night, Hamlet; Thursday night, Richard Lovelace, and Friday night and Saturday matinee and night, (for the first time by him on any stage), Richelieu.

Sunday's Goodson Concert

The last concert of that magnificent artist, Katharine Goodson, will take place on Sunday afternoon, January 24th, at Christian Science Hall, and the program offered is one of the most attractive ever placed before music lovers in San Francisco. The Grieg Sonata in E minor, Op. 7, will open the program, and will be followed by a group of very old numbers by Scarlatti, Rameau, Corelli and Exaudet. Raff's charming "Rigaudon," and Schumann's "Faschinschwark" in its entirety will complete the first part. The second portion of the offering will include a Mendelssohn "Lied," in F minor, Op. 22; "Arabesque" by Lezchetizky, "Espenlaub" by Emil Sauer and Liszt's "Rhapsodie," No. 12. Seats are on sale at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s Sutter and Kearny street store until 5:30 on Saturday and on Sunday at the hall after 10 a. m., where 'phone orders will be carefully attended to.

Jefferson in "Rip Van Winkle"

Florence Roberts and her strong supporting company will give their last performances of "The House of Bondage" at the American Theatre this Saturday afternoon and evening and at the Sunday matinee Thomas Jefferson, a worthy son of a worthy sire, will begin an engagement limited to one week in the great American classic, "Rip Van Winkle." There is nothing, even in Shakespearian realms, that has appealed so steadily and so strongly to the treatre-going public as has this story of the drunken vagabond of the Catskills. In tragedy, genteel comedy, farce, burlesque or comic opera, there has been no production that could ever hold a candle to the wonderful career which "Rip Van Winkle" has enjoyed. Its perennial popularity is due entirely to the exquisite art, delicate feeling and irresistable humor with which the Jeffersons have delineated the jovial old vagabond hero. There is heart in every line the artist speaks and there is tenderness and love and all the sweetest and gentlest qualities of humanity in the delightful old toper's make-up. It is a role to which no actor, unless he be a Jefferson, can apparently give full justice, for this family has lived and breathed the very atmosphere of the character all their lives. Thomas Jefferson pours his own heart and soul and all the genial attributes of his own nature into the part and so mixes and moulds them with his glorious gilding art that the result calls for all the admiration and affection that an audience is capable of giving. It is a marvelous resurrection from Washington Irving's story of the hero of the village of Falling Water, a masterpiece of acting as spendid and perfect in its way as the best that any of the old masters ever put on canvas. It is as popular with the public today as it was four decades ago and those playgoers count themselves lucky who are able to renew their acquaintance with it every few seasons.. Corinne, in "Lola from Berlin," the latest musical comedy, will follow Mr. Jefferson's engagement at the American.

HARRISON HUNTER

Who will appear in the tragic comedy "The Van Dyck" next week at the Orpheum.

"When Knighthood Was in Flower"

Although William Gillette's thrilling dramatization of "Sherlock Holmes" has made such a hit at the Valencia Theatre that it could easily run for another week, the final performances will be given Sunday afternoon and evening, and on Monday night Paul Kester's famous historical romantic play, "When Knighthood Was in Flower," dramatized from the novel of the same name by Charles Norris, will be given a sumptuous production. The story centers around the love of Mary Tudor, Princess of England and sister of King Henry VIII, for Charles Brandon, a captain of the guards. Through the machinations of the King and Cardinal Wolsey she is betrothed to Louis of France, an old and repulsive monarch, but she consults a soothsayer and refuses to marry until she can choose a husband for herself. She elopes with Brandon, but the pair are overtaken by the King, who sentences the captain of the guard to the block. Mary promises to marry Louis, however, and Brandon is released. The Princess goes to Paris and keeps her word, marrying Louis, who shortly afterwards most obligingly dies. Francis D'Angouleme, the Dauphin of France, makes violent love to Mary and wants her for his own, but Brandon arrives at the critical moment and weds the woman of his heart. On their return to England King Henry is furious, but Mary succeeds in overcoming his prejudices and the monarch appoints the chivalrous young husband Duke of Suffolk. The four acts of the play are crowded with stirring events and the interest is never allowed to flag for a moment. Robert Warwick as heroic Charles Brandon will have a dominating role which he should fill admirably, and Blanche Stoddard, as sweet and plucky Mary Tudor, will have a part that will fit her like a glove. Thomas MacLarnie will have a splendid opportunity of showing his versatility as King Henry VIII, and Darrell Standing will have another strong character bit in Cardinal Wolsey.

The Constabular Band is Coming

When President-elect Taft was at the head of affairs in the Philippines, he took considerable interest in the famous "Constabular Band," which seems to be a permanent institution in every Spanish city. Many favored discontinuing the organization after the American control was established, but Taft stood by the splendid body of musicians, and the band became better than ever. As a compliment, officials and merchants in Manila have arranged to send the great musical organization to assist in the inauguration ceremonies on March 4th at Washington, and the band will arrive here on the transport Buford and proceed to the capital. Manager Will Greenbaum, with his usual energy, has prevailed on the "powers that be" to permit him to present the band for a few concerts here before it leaves, so we shall hear this world-famous organization before any other city in the United States. Watch for the date, which will be some time about the middle of February.

Dr. Louis D. Mead has opened offices at 626-627 Butler Building, Union Square.

A Frank Playwright

Eugene Walter, the young playwright who suddenly leaped into fame last year through the instantaneous success of two of his plays produced in quick succession, won the New York critics and public by his audacity as well as his genius as a playwright. Audacity is the right word, for Mr. Walter had the courage to come right out and call his second great play, "The Wolf," a melodrama. That is just what it is, and so are many of the greatest dramatic successes of recent years, though they are not generally so called by their sponsors, for while the more intellectual of theatregoers really like melodrama, they want it disguised under another name. Walter made New Yorkers admit that they like melodrama under any name, and that "The Wolf" is one of the most worthy of melodramas. It will come to the Van Ness Theatre Monday, February 1st.

Princess Theatre

Kolb and Dill will conclude their fourth and last week of "The Politicians" Sunday night at the Princess Theatre and next Monday night they will appear in another comic story with music, called "Bankers and Brokers." The book is by Aaron Hoffman and the music by J. A. Raynes. Briefly summarized the story of "Bankers and Brokers" is as follows: Pluckus and Pickus (Klob and Dill) two German merchants, visit a fake brokerage office which is absolutely bankrupt and under the persuasion of the managing partner, B. Dunne Goode, purchase an interest in the enterprise. The amusing complications that arise from their management of the business and the continual influx of old unpaid bills and creditors result in much amusement for the audiences. In their endeavors to make a success of their business they are particularly unfortunate but at length a client of the firm sells them some apparently worthless oil stock which turns out to be valuable, but not until after they have parted with it. It passes from one character to the other and Pluckus and Pickus frantically pursue each purchaser only to be informed when they have overtaken him that he has just sold it. Finally they arrive in Florida in search of Orpheus Dippe, an anarchist, who is also pursued by the other personages in the play through whose hands the stock has passed and who are as anxious as Pluckus and Pickus to regain it. Senor Santos Coloza, a foreign stock broker, finally gets possession of the certificates and throws the red envelope which is supposed to contain them down a well. Pickus has the secret of their whereabouts revealed to him by a Sea Nymph who appears at the top of the well. He dons a diving suit and descends it and is immediately followed by a large alligator. He is rescued just in the nick of time by Pluckus. Santos sells the stock to B. Dunne Goode for a nominal sum. The alligator emerges from the well with the red envelope in his mouth which Pluckus and Pickus secure and sell. The piece contains a number of new and catchy lyrics.

THOMAS JEFFERSON

As he will appear in "Rip Van Winkle" the role immortalized by his father.

Second "Pop" Concert

The second of the "Pop" concerts at Lyric Hall will be given Sunday afternoon, January 31st, when the Lyric String Quartette, assisted by Gyula Ormay, pianist, and Laurence H. Strauss, tenor, will give an entire "Afternoon with Dvorak." This Bohemian composer is one of the most important figures in the history of modern music and has been equally successful as a composer of opera, oratorio, symphony, chamber music and songs. The program for the "Pop" will include a string quartette, the quintette for strings and piano, and a group of his charming and little known songs. Seats are 50 cents and $1.00, and may be secured at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s next Thursday.

Kitty Holds the Board

That gem of clever acting and artistic staging, "Sweet Kitty Bellairs," will be started on its third consecutive week at the Alcazar next Monday evening. The unabated public eagerness to witness it makes the management decline to predict just when its run will end. No play in Alcazar history, with the exception of "The First Born" when first presented, created more of a furore than this Belasco triumph. That it would exceed the customary stay of seven days was assured after its initial performance, for everyone who then saw it went forth to sound its praises, and so it was with each succeeding audience. In play presentation, as in everything else, nothing succeeds like success. While the work of Evelyn Vaughan in the title part is more largely responsible than anything else for the play's retention on the stage a third week, the work of the other acting principals, the luxurious costumery and the scenic effects and the clever situations and bright lines of the play itself must be taken into consideration as important factors. "The Crisis," one of James K. Hackett's most notable successes, is announced to follow "Sweet Kitty Bellairs" at the Sutter street playhouse.

Orpheum Vaudeville

Harrison Hunter, who is described as "an artist to the tips of his fingers," will make his first vaudeville appearance in this city this Sunday afternoon at the Orpheum. He will appear in a tragic comedy, entitled "The Van Dyck," which is an adaptation by Cosmo Gordon Lennox from the French original of Eugene Fournier Perinque and has proved a great success in London and in this country. The Harvey Family, long recognized as the greatest wire artists in the world, will be another novel feature of the program. The troupe consists of three ladies and two gentlemen. Their performance is said to be most wonderful. The Sisters Murray, Marion and Victoria, will also appear in this show. They were formerly conspicuous in the support of Fritzi Scheff in "Mlle. Modiste" and were very popular. Next week will be the last of the Chadwick Trio of which Ida May Chadwick's portrayal of Tillie Wiggins and her marvelously clever buck and wing dancing are the chief features. With this program Howard and Lawrence, Jewell's Manikins, The Josselin Trio and Julie Herne and her company in the interesting and very successful one act play, "A Mountain Cinderella," will close their engagements.

Mr. Eugene Walter, the author of "The Wolf" and "Paid in Full" was practically unknown to the play-going public a few months ago, but his two plays, both splendid Broadway attractions, served to introduce him not alone to the public but also to success.

BLANCHE STODDARD

The cheerful leading lady of the Valencia Stock Company.

In the Limelight

The matinee this week at the Van Ness Theatre will be devoted to Sothern's production of "Hamlet." It will be repeated for the last time next Wednesday night.

The long and successful engagement of Robert Warwick as leading man at the Valencia Theatre is drawing to a close. His final appearances in San Francisco will be made in "When Knighthood Was in Flower" and "A Contented Woman." His successor will make his debut in this city in "The Prince Chap," that delightful play made famous by Cyril Scott. His identity will be made known next week.

Now that the suffragettes are stirring up things so in Sacramento, the forthcoming production of "A Contented Woman," Charles Hoyt's always amusing and interesting satire of woman's suffrage, will be greeted with particular interest at the Valencia Theatre, week after next. Blanche Stoddard as the young wife who is elected Mayor will take a long jump from the character of Mary Tudor, in next week's "When Knighthood Was in Flower."

One of the early attractions for the Van Ness Theatre will be the noted musical success "A Stubborn Cinderella." It was pronounced the "classiest" and most delightful hit of the season and had a run of nearly six months at the Princess Theatre, Chicago. A strong company of musical comedy stars will be seen here in the production which follows "The Wolf" at the Van Ness.

"The County Chairman," another of George Ade's typical comedies, will receive an early production at the Valencia Theatre. The success of "The College Widow" was so great that the Chairman will undoubtedly be another winner.

E. H. Sothern has had constructed in New York a complete and magnificent series of scenic pictures for the production of "Richelieu." The first appearance of this star as the Cardinal will take place next Friday night. It will be an important event in theatrical history.

Auto Demonstrations Not So Numerous

The question of demonstration, which has always been a serious one to the automobile agents, is gradually being solved and as the general public becomes more acquainted with the automobile, the demonstration habit becomes less annoying. This is especially true of the agents for old reliable cars. "We do not have to give one-half as many demonstrations to sell a car as we did last year and preceding seasons," said Calvin C. Eib, sales manager of the Pioneer Automobile Company. "It is nothing unusual for a customer to come into the salesroom and place an order for a Thomas or Chalmers-Detroit, seldom asking for more than a ride around the block. The confidence of the people in the high class cars, with old reputations, has made it much easier to sell cars than in the past. During the early years of the automobile industry on this coast, and even up to the last season, the demonstration cranks, or the people who wanted long rides of from 50 to 100 miles to try a car, were the bane of the automobile agent's business. It was not confined to the people who really wanted to buy and who insisted on long tours to test the machine, but there was a class of free riders who came in pretending to be in the market for a car, got the dealer to take his car for a run to Del Monte, Santa Cruz and numerous other points. These people always finished their 'test' of the car with the remark that they 'would decide later on.' Not infrequently one of these persons would get a demonstration from every agent in the city and without a penny's cost to himself. This has practically been done away with. The makers of the high class cars are so well known that a reliable agent's word to the effect that his car is what it is represented to be, is sufficient for the prospective purchaser of a car. We receive a number of orders for cars through the mail, which is the strongest proof of the confidence of the motor buying public in the makers of cars and the responsibility of our firm."

R. T. Prosser, formerly with the Harrison Automobile Company in Los Angeles, has joined the selling forces of the Pioneer Automobile Company, local agents for the Thomas, Oldsmobile and Chalmers-Detroit cars. Prosser reports that the prospects for a good automobile trade in the southern part of the State are bright, most of the agents having enlarged their allotment for the coming season.

Mr. W. F. Hunt of San Jose was in the city Monday and took home an '09 Buick White Streak. He drove down on this side of the bay and reports the roads to be in very bad condition. He says it will take the roads at least a week to dry up after the rainy weather lets up.

Mr. Cuyler Lee is in New York City attending the Automobile Show.

KATHARINE GOODSON

THE GREAT PIANIST

Last Concert This Sunday Afternoon at 2:30

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE HALL.

Seats $1.50 and $1.00 at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s.

Mason and Hamlin Piano Used

Greenbaum's Second "POP" Concert

LYRIC HALL, Sunday Afternoon, January 31st.

Dvorak Program by Lyric Quartette, Gyula Ormay and Lawrence H. Strauss. Seats, 50c and $1.00.

MACKENZIE GORDON

Assisted by EUGENE BLANCHARD, Pianist, and FREDERICK MAURER, Accompanist.

Tuesday Evening and Sunday Afternoon, February 9th and 14th.

Oakland Friday Afternoon, February 12th.

VAN NESS THEATRE

Cor. Van Ness and Grove
Gottlob, Marx & Co., Mgrs.
Phone Market 500

Beginning Monday, January 25th. Second and Last Week

MR. E. H. SOTHERN

Monday and Tuesday Nights, "LORD DUNDREARY."
Wednesday Night, "HAMLET."
Thursday Night, "RICHARD LOVELACE."
Friday Night and Saturday Matinee and Night. First Time on Any Stage, Mr. Sothern as "RICHELIEU."
Next Attraction, "THE WOLF," a New Play by the Author of "Paid in Full."

NEW ALCAZAR THEATRE

Cor. Sutter and Steiner
Class 'A' Building
Phone West 6036

BELASCO & MAYER, Owners and Managers.

Monday Night, January 25th, Starts the Third and Last Week of David Belasco's Comedy of the Heart

SWEET KITTY BELLAIRS

Adapted from Egerton Castle's Famous Story, "The Bath Comedy."
Prices: Evenings, 25c to $1.00. Matinees, Saturday and Sunday, 25c to 50c.

PRINCESS THEATRE

PHONE WEST 663
S. LOVERICH, MANAGER

Ellis Street, near Fillmore
Absolutely Class 'A' Building
Matinee, Saturday and Sunday

Last Two Nights, Kolb & Dill in "THE POLITICIANS."
Beginning Next Monday Night
KOLB & DILL
In Still Another Story With Music,

BANKERS AND BROKERS

Prices—Evenings 25c, 50c, 75c, $1.00. Matinees (Except Sundays and Holidays, 25c, 50c, 75c

ORPHEUM

Ellis Street, near Fillmore
Absolutely Class 'A' Bldg
Phone West 6000

Week Beginning this Sunday Afternoon. Matinee Every Day.

ARTISTIC VAUDEVILLE.

THE VAN DYCK, a Tragic-Comedy by Cosmo Gordon Lennox with MR. HARRISON HUNTER; THE HARVEY FAMILY, Europe's Most Famous Aerialists; THE MURRAY SISTERS, American Girls with American Songs; THE CHADWICK TRIO; BERT HOWARD AND EFFIE LAWRENCE; JEWELL'S MANIKINS; JOSSELIN TRIO; NEW ORPHEUM MOTION PICTURES. Last week—great success, JULIE HERNE & CO. in "A Mountain Cinderella."

Evening Prices: 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c. Box Seats, $1.00. Matinee Prices (Except Sundays and Holidays): 10c, 25c, 50c.

VALENCIA THEATRE

Valencia Street, between
Thirteenth and Fourteenth
Phone Market 17

The Only Steam Heated Theatre in the City.

Sunday Afternoon and Evening Last Times of "Sherlock Holmes."

Commencing Monday Evening, January 25th, Magnificent Production of

WHEN KNIGHTHOOD WAS IN FLOWER

Paul Kester's Famous Historical Romantic Play.

Presented by the Valencia Stock Company, including Robert Warwick. Blanche Stoddard as Mary Tudor.

Regular Matinees, Wednesday and Sunday, Prices 25c to 50c.
Monday, February 1st: "A Contented Woman."

AMERICAN THEATRE

Market St., nr. Seventh
Phone Market 381

One Week, Commencing Sunday Matinee, January 24th,

THOMAS JEFFERSON

In the Great American Classic

RIP VAN WINKLE

That delightful character which Irving created and the Jeffersons have made famous.

Prices, Evenings, 25c, 50c, 75c, $1.00. No Higher. Matinees, 25c, 50c, 75c.
Next: Corinne in "Lola From Berlin."

YE LIBERTY PLAYHOUSE

Oakland, Cal.
Direction
H. W. Bishop

Monday Night and All Next Week,

THE WRONG MR. WRIGHT

A Comedy by George H. Broadhurst.

Prices, Evenings, 25c, 50c, 75c. Matinees, Saturday and Sunday, 25c and 50c.
Next: RICHARD M. HOTALING in a four weeks' season of legitimate drama.

The Well-Dressed Man

What to Wear, When and Where

Written exclusively for Town Talk by J. M. JACOBI

For the benefit of those men who have neither the time nor inclination to study the art of Dressing correctly, we will publish a series of weekly Fashion Chats.

We will also start a query column, in which the reader may ask questions pertaining to dress. Such questions will be answered in the following issue.

THE TUXEDO OR DINNER SUIT AND ITS DUTIES

Probably the most popular subject on which more printer's ink has been spilled than any other is the "Tuxedo." Strange to say, as yet no positive answer can be given to the question, when and where is this suit to be worn. There was a time when a gentleman wearing a "Tuxedo," who found himself unexpectedly thrown in the presence of ladies, was compelled to either withdraw or present his excuses to his hostess for his mode of dress—not so now, for it is quite a common thing for anyone to find the dinner jacket or "Tuxedo" at evening functions. Now what brought about this change? The answer is "Vox populi." Being a more comfortable garment than the dress coat some people had courage to go contrary to convential dress opinion created by Chesterfieldcans and prominent sartorial art critics and wore the "Tuxedo" suit in the presence of ladies at formal or informal affairs. The number of these brave people have been constantly increasing and its popularity is assured. Now after reading the different opinions and comments this conclusion has been reached: That it depends a great deal upon the set one travels in as to what one should wear, for the old adage, "When in Rome do as the Romans do," holds good in this. If the set is ultra fashionable the dress suit will be worn out much quicker than the dinner suit. The dinner suit by men of this set should only be worn at stag dinners or family dinners, where everybody knows one another well or perhaps at an informal vaudeville house party. But generally speaking the "Tuxedo" may be worn when in the company of intimate friends whether at the theatre and supper afterwards, or at the home dinner or when spending an informal eve with one's friends, just as long as the affair is of an informal nature, and while it is a fact that the full dress suit is always correct in the presence of ladies after 6 p. m., it is not always essential.

Materials and Details. Dinner suits are made of either black or oxford grey worsteds. Coat to have peaked lapel faced with "Barathea" silk, self collar, no pockets at side, and one buttonhole at botom.

Waistcoat. To have either "V" or half "U" shaped opening, material either the same as coat or fancy. If so a grey or black and white and tie to match. Trousers to have braid at side.

Coat. Dinner jacket.

Waistcoat. To match material of coat or fancy half "U" or "V" shape.

Trousers. To have braid at side to match material or coat.

Shirt. White, plain or pleated.

Collar. Wing or fold.

Cravat. Black or to match fancy waistcoat.

Gloves. Gray suede, or mocra grey reindeer. Chamois and tan permissible.

Jewelry. Studs and links of gold, pearl or moonstone, fob.

Hat. Black derby or alpine.

Boots. Pumps, ties or patent calf to button.

Hose. Black lisle or silk.

Answer to Queries

E. D. I. As to what is correct to wear with "Tuxedo," one or three studs for the shirt front? Also why does one constantly see men of standing and position wear the "Tuxedo" in the presence of ladies, when most authorities claim that it is a dinner coat to be used at banquets, men being present only? The above article will answer.

An important feature, and one formerly used only on the highest priced foreign cars, is the short coupled body, which makes it possible for the entire body to hang between the front and rear axles, results in exceptionally easy riding qualities. In fact, the advantage of the riding and the appearance, are the main reasons for the adoption by the foreign and a few of the American designers of the short coupled body. The fact that the Chalmers-Detroit is the only one of the medium priced cars to adopt this style of body has been the cause of numerous mistakes as to the identity of the car. Many people seeing the Chalmers for the first time have asked what French or German car it was. The short coupled body will undoubtedly prove an important factor in the manufacturing of automobiles next season.

LARGEST COLLECTION ON THE COAST

DIAMONDS AND GEMS

BALDWIN
JEWELRY CO.

1261 VAN NESS AVENUE AT SUTTER

A BURNING QUSETION

How to Keep Warm Frosty Mornings? Try the HOME

OPEN FRONT OIL HEATER

A PERFECT
HEATER
PORTABLE
SAFE

Cheerful as an open grate fire. Most successful oil heater ever invented. Sold on a guarantee. If not satisfactory money refunded.

Made in Three Sizes

MANUFACTURED BY

W. W. MONTAGUE & CO.

Corner Turk and Polk Streets, San Francisco.

Tapon

(Continued from page 9.)

with his restless, dilated pupils, as if he were surrounded by darkness and sought to catch a ray of light.

When Mliss had bowed to the public for the hundredth time, the crowd left the circus, the candles fastened to the post were extinguished and the court gradually recovered its habitual calm; but Tapon still sat chained to his seat, looking toward the door where had disappeared the object of his first dreams.

"What are you doing here? You're stuck as tight as your name," said a belated spectator.

"Ah, that's so!"

That night Tapon did not close his eyes.

At dawn he entered the church and, under the dim light of the lamp before the altar of the Patroness of the village, he knelt and bent his broad forehead till it touched the cold stones. When he had finished his prayer he raised himself as high as he could on the tips of his toes, looked at the image with eyes bathed in tears and said to it in the most affectionate and familiar tone:

"Farewell, Mother! Remember Tapon, who brushed the dust from thee so often. I promise to return before I die—if it is thy will."

Six days from that time Tapon was part of the company of Mister Cunigam, in the capacity of a clown. All the warnings, entreaties and promises of the priest were useless; the matter was settled. Tapon, having attained his majority, was absolutely free; so that, according to the infallible opinion of the municipal judge, there was no legal way of forcing the orphan to abandon his purpose.

The arrangement offered no difficulties; he stipulated at the start only that Mister Cunigam pay his expenses, offering in return to make the public laugh heartily; moreover, he offered to act as stable-boy; and, given his strength and agility, which he had proved in the contest with the "New Sampson," it seemed likely that he would be very useful.

It took only a few months to convince the director of the company that he had made the best bargain of his life in employing the dwarf. Announcing Tapon on the bills was an infallible method of securing a full house. He trained peacocks, making them dance jigs and sing in chorus while he directed them with a rod from whose extremity hung bells and colored ribbons. He brought on a little donkey which would respond to his voice and gesture like the most intelligent horse. A white pig followed him through the whole performance like a pet dog, attacking everything that approached the clown. There could be no pantomime without him, and he was at the same time author, stage manager and principal actor in them all. Finally, he had no rival in jugglers' tricks.

At different times he was offered, in Spain and other countries, six times the salary he received from Mister Cunigam, but he persistently refused to leave the company, calmly eluding all the intrigues and machinations that rival managers employed to capture him.

In the meantime the tiger trainer grew into a magnificent woman. Who were her parents? How had she happened to enter the company? What were her thoughts and plans for the future? No one knew but Cunigam, who was impenetrable. The girl had gradually enslaved the director with her physical charms and come to rule this family of mountebanks like an absolute monarch. Her whims were laws which must not even be questioned, and when Cunigam tried to evade them or offered a feeble resistance, Mliss always answered:

"So this is what I get for sacrificing my life to you, for refusing all the good offers I've had!"

And it must be admitted that she told the truth, for she mocked with savage virtue at the insistent gallantries of numberless adorers whom her charms had fascinated.

Tapon was always the messenger who carried the bouquets, jewelry and articles of dress that her admirers sent the Amazon; he covered his feelings with an iron mask, and when he saw her indifferently tear the perfumed billets, it seemed to him that heaven was standing wide open.

As everything on this world's old crust feels the passage of years, the tiger grew and, becoming a vicious beast who threatened to recover his natural instincts, made the performances of his trainer difficult and dangerous.

Goaded by impotence, jealousy, by constant association with the object of his passion, by professional rivalries, the first impulse which had compelled the dwarf to leave his village and his adopted family became a desperate, hungry love which struggled in the depths of his being, mad and furious as some wretch buried alive in a sepulcher, who makes Titanic efforts to lift the frozen stone that weighs on his breast.

As for Mliss, who felt a genuine affection for him, although she was a woman she did not suspect the real reason for the sacrifices of all kinds which the wretch Tapon made for her.

The company, after having traveled over half the world, came a second time to Andalusia, and by a caprice of fate gave some performances in the Province of Cordova. They had to pass through Jauja on their way to another city of more importance, and the director determined that they should take advantage of the presence of the bathers and give an exhibition there.

Tapon opposed an arrangement which would force him to appear in the village dressed as a clown, but Mliss laughed at his scruples.

"Man, do you think that those boors are so thick-skulled

RACING

NEW CALIFORNIA JOCKEY CLUB

OAKLAND RACE TRACK

Six races each week day, rain or shine. First Race at 1:40 p. m.

For special trains stopping at the track, take Southern Pacific Ferry, foot of Market street; leave at 12 M.; thereafter every twenty minutes until 1 40 P. M.

No smoking in the last two cars, which are reserved for ladies and their escorts.

PERCY W. TREAT, Sec'y. THOS. H. WILLIAMS, Pres.

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 13833.

MARY HORGAN, a Widow, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Liens Upon the Real Property Herein Described or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in or lien upon the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, Greeting:

You are are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Mary Horgan, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the Court of the above entitled City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the northerly line of Fulton street, distant thereon one hundred and forty-six (146) feet ten and one-half inches (10½) inches westerly from the intersection of the westerly line of Baker street with the northerly line of Fulton street, and then running thence westerly along the said line of Fulton street twenty-five (25) feet, thence at right angle northerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet and six (6) inches, thence at a right angle easterly twenty-five (25) feet, and thence at a right angle southerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet and six (6) inches to the northerly line of Fulton street and point of commencement. Being Block No. 592, a portion of the Western Addition.

You are hereby notified that unless you appear and answer the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to wit: For a judgment of said Court as follows:

1st. Ascertaining and determining all estate, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said real property and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, or whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description.

2nd. Establishing the title of plaintiff to said real property and determining all adverse claims thereto, and adjudging that plaintiff is the owner in severalty and in fee simple absolute of said real property and every part thereof.

3rd. For such other and further relief as to the Court may seem proper and for costs of suit.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 14th day of January, A. D. 1909.

(Seal)

H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By T. C. RYAN, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 23d day of January, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon said real property adverse to plaintiff: The Hibernia Savings and Loan Society, whose address is on the Northwest corner of Jones and McAllister streets, San Francisco, California.

JOSEPH H. TAM, Attorney for Plaintiff,
511 Balboa Building, San Francisco, Cal. 1-23-10

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 13834.

DENNIS J. HORGAN, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Lien Upon the Real Property Herein Described or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in or lien upon the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, Greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Dennis J. Horgan, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Scott street, distant thereon northerly from the northerly line of Haight street one hundred and thirteen (113) feet and six (6) inches; thence running northerly along said easterly line of Scott street twenty-four (24) feet; thence at right angles easterly one hundred and ten (110) feet; thence at right angles southerly twenty-four (24) feet, and thence at right angles westerly one hundred and ten (110) feet to the easterly line of Scott street and the point of commencement. Being a part of the Western Addition Block number four hundred and thirty-nine (439), and also right of way over passage extending the length of the above described property and a width of those three (3) feet six (6) inches on the South of the same.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to wit: For a judgment of said Court as follows:

1st. Ascertaining and determining all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said real property and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, or whether the same consists of mortgages or liens of any description.

2nd. Establishing the title of plaintiff to said real property and determining all adverse claims thereto, and adjudging that plaintiff is the owner in severalty and in fee simple absolute of said real property and every part thereof.

3rd. For such other and further relief as to the Court may seem proper and for costs of suit.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 14th day of January, A. D. 1909.

(Seal)

H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By T. C. RYAN, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 23d day of January, 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in or lien upon said property adverse to plaintiff: The German Savings and Loan Society, whose address is No. 526 California street, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

JOSEPH H. TAM, Attorney for Plaintiff,
511 Balboa Building, San Francisco, Cal. 1-23-10

that they can't appreciate the difference between a church sexton and a finished artist? What prouder experience could you wish than to have your townsmen admire the skill of the best clown in Europe?"

Tapon thought differently, but Mliss wished it and there was nothing to do but obey.

"I will do it," he said. "It is the last sacrifice that remained for me to make you."

These words, which escaped him against his will, were spoken with passionate intensity and revealed to the trainer the secret which had been kept so long. Mliss, incapable of appreciating this sublime passion at its full value, far from being grateful, was at first offended and then, shortly after, laughed loudly in the director's room at the dwarf's expense.

They reached Jauja two hours before the time for the performance to begin. It seemed as if the village youths would beat down the door of the room into which Tapon had locked himself, determined not to appear till the time came for his part of the performance.

Even the priest went to the improvised circus, in secular clothes, anxious to see his ancient protege, whose doings reached him frequently through the newspapers that were read in the apothecary's shop. He wished also to reprove him affectionately for his indifference and his persistent silence; for Tapon, fearing perhaps that the pen would betray what the lips were able to keep silent, never wrote to his protector in good or evil fortune.

The first numbers on the program were rendered and finally Tapon's turn arrived. He appeared in a loosely-fitting dress of black silk, which concealed his hump admirably. When he held his legs together he looked like a very portly bottle; across his front appeared in great white letters the label: "Pepe's Sherry." His cap was an enormous cork like that of a champagne bottle. From time to time he inflated his cheeks and produced with his mouth a characteristic noise; then, leaping into the air, he would lift his cap with notable grace.

He was received with a torrent of applause, and every now and then some one of the spectators called out to him from the seats an affectionate salute, a jest, a compliment or an allusion that recalled his boyhood. He always answered imperturbably, as he had done years before, returning the shaft with enviable ingenuity, or answering the compliment with the most exquisite courtesy.

First, with the help of a Japanese fan, he sent into the air a swarm of little papers cut in the form of butterflies of various colors. Then he played with a great rubber ball which he made bounce from his neck, back and elbows, and sent once or twice into the most compact group of the audience, with consequent great confusion. Then he presented Sancho, the educated donkey, who was just too fine for anything, according to Jesualda, who in spite of her years attended the performance, enjoying the credit which was due her for the hump and the stunted stature of Tapon. Finally, with a flute in the form of a radish, he executed some ditties which were at that time in great vogue in Andalusia.

It is impossible to describe the enthusiasm he produced, nor was it easy to count the number of times he found it necessary to appear in the center of the circus, cork-cap in hand, to salute his old acquaintances.

Meanwhile the tiger had shaken off his drowsiness and was in such a mood that it was safer to give him a wide berth. Mliss, smiling and affecting serenity, more beautiful than ever because of her secret uneasiness, which accentuated the brightness of her eyes, the carmine of her cheeks and the rise and fall of her bosom, came with her usual leaps into the arena. She wore a dress similar in form to the one Tapon had admired the first time he saw her; but the skirt and bodice were this time of black satin bordered with silver, and the collar was of Brazilian diamonds.

My friend the acrobat did not tell me this; I saw it, as I saw all that followed.

All the employees of the circus surrounded the cage, except the dwarf, who stood in the ring, his arms crossed on the breast of his ample green frock, and looked steadily at Mliss.

The tiger, roaring uneasily, obeyed his trainer with a bad grace, and she never turned her back to him.

The trick of the paper hoops came, and he broke two; he jumped short at the third, tearing the hoop from the hands of Mliss. She dealt him a blow, followed by a vigorous interjection. The beast crawled into the corner of the cage, roaring fearfully. Then, extending his fore paws, his head sunk between them, he showed his frightful jaws, his eyes were like two brilliants struck by the sun of the desert, and his tail shook the solid bars of the cage.

The public, in anxious suspense, followed the movements of the tiger, who feinted like a playful cat about to leap upon a bird.

All over the circus cries were heard: "No, no! Come out! Leave the cage!"

Mliss, near the cage door, seemed undecided. She gave a side glance at the director, and he made signs to her to withdraw. But now, determined to please the public, with an impulse of foolish vanity, her hand grasping the door, she advanced a step and stamped on the floor with a gesture of defiance.

A shriek went up from the audience. The girl lay under the claws of the tiger like a ball of twine in the clutch of a cat.

But a savage shout was heard above the shrieking and added itself to the general confusion. Tapon, quick as lightning and as destructive, rushed to the cage, knocking over two or three artists who were frozen with terror, tore loose an iron bar with one jerk, opened the door and struck the beast a tremendous blow on the head.

The director dragged his dear one out of the cage and closed the door instantly to prevent the tiger's escaping. The beast had lost one victim, but they had given him another to glut his rage. The unhappy dwarf had no way of escape.

While his blood, poured forth in streams, spread over the cage, the animal tore at his flesh; the more courageous spectators invaded the arena, while a large number of them abandoned the court and fled. Tapon, shouting above the confusion, called with a superhuman effort:

"Are you hurt, dearest Mliss?"

All this lasted but a few minutes; a gendarme thrust his musket between the bars and tried to touch the tiger's head with the muzzle. The wretched Tapon, grasping the bars with both hands, turned his head toward that side and saw Mliss trying to prevent the guard from firing.

Then that hero, in a very weak voice, into which he tried to compress the little life that remained to him, cried, as he looked fixedly at the gendarme:

"Don't kill him, fool! He is her fortune! And what—good would it do?"

A dull report accompanied the dwarf's last breath, and his body rolled over on the bloody floor with the body of the beast.

The morning of the next day, filtering a pale light through the thick curtain that covers the skylight of the church, dwelt lovingly on the coffin of the Brotherhood of Charity, in which lay poor Tapon, completely enveloped in a white shroud.

Under it could be imagined, rather than seen, a human form, whose head, inclined to one side, looked toward the altar of the Patroness.

The exhausted lamp, sputtering vigorously, was on the point of going out; the little parish bell mingled its voice with the bells of the herds on their way to the fields, and the candles, caressed by the morning breeze, were shedding thick tears—the only tears at this funeral.

Tapon had kept his promise; he had come again to the Patroness of Jauja.

Another shipment of Thomas Flyers arrived this week. The new lot consists of two 60 horsepower touring cars and one runabout.

"Those Lustrous Eyes are Murine Eyes"

MURINE EYE REMEDY

A Favorite Toilet Accessory

Has won many Friends as an Aid to the Restoration of Normal Conditions, Healthful Tone and Natural Brilliancy to Eyes that Need Care.

It has proven of great value in the Home as An Eye Tonic for Weak, Red, Inflamed & Itching Eyes & Eyelids.

As An Eye Insurance Tourists, Automobilists and others exposed to Strong Winds, Dust and Reflected Sunlight, which produce Irritation, Granulation, Ulceration and Weak Eyes, will find in Murine a Safe, Soothing Eye Lotion affording "Reliable Relief."

The Finishing Touch

Bewitchingly Costumed
In Costliest Gown,
For the Social Event,
At the South End of Town.

The "Finishing Touch"
To the Toilet is seen
In the Act above Pictured
"Two drops" of Murine.

Try Murine for the "Automobile Eye"

UNION LUMBER COMPANY

Redwood and Pine Lumber

Railroad Ties, Telegraph Poles, Shingles, Split Shakes, Etc.

CROCKER BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Letters

A Volume of Essays

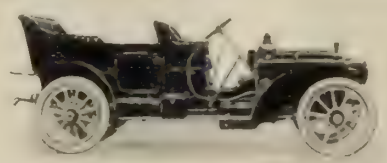
The author of those capital contributions to the Ladies Home Journal given as "The Ideas of a Plain Country Woman," turns out to be Mrs. Juliet Strauss of Rockville, Indiana. The essays have been recently put forth in book form, and deserve a wide circulation because of their sterling plain sense. Of all the discussions of the girl question, the woman question and the child question from every possible point of view, Mrs. Strauss is the only one who has kept her feet to the earth and her head out of the clouds, and recognized the world not as a broad field for experiments in reform but a place to be lived in and made the best of as we find it. She hardly holds a place as an "advanced thinker" just now, but ere long some of the vanguard of the wild-eyed revolutionists will find themselves marching behind her, for reforms and fashions move in comparatively small circles. After traveling what appears to be a very long journey, a pause to take note of progress is apt to reveal familiar landmarks. Like a traveler lost on a plain, the persistent advocate of novelty in dress or in manners, is apt to discover the halting place very near the start.

"The Mascot of Sweet Briar Gulch"

This is another of the Bobbs-Merrill Co.'s attractive "little books." It is a short story by Henry Wallace Phillips, best remembered as the author of "Red Saunders." Jim Felton was working a claim by himself at Sweet Briar Gulch. By all the laws of theory and calculation it should have proved rich, but Jim was working doggedly without luck. Back east there was a girl whose cool head ruled her warm heart, and until Jim had something substantial to show she would not agree to marriage. When courage had about reached its lowest ebb there was thrown almost into the lone miner's arms a wretched little waif whom he adopted, and Ches, despite his slum raising, proved himself both man and mascot. Incidental to the main events there is a rural mail carrier who happens along on his route and relieves the monotony, and the lively description he gives of the adventures of the postal inspector detailed to accompany him and investigate the complaints that the mails are delayed is well worth the price of the book. Illustrations, real ones, not mere pictures, are by F. Graham Cootes.

Adventures in San Francisco

In "The Adventures of Louis Blake," Louis Becke has returned to a familiar and perhaps a favorite theme, the adventures of three Australian born boys who, in early youth assume the making of their own career. The three lads were all well employed in San Francisco, but by a singular turn of the wheel of fortune, all lost their employment on the same eventful day. The two elder ones found occupation among the mining camps of Nevada, but it was the youngest, Louis, for whom romance and adventure was reserved. The period is about the same that occupied the author's attention in "Breachly, Black Sheep." To the present generation neither "Breachley" nor "Louis Blake" is apt to be more than a story, but to those of approximately middle age, who are blessed with recollections, either volume is as interesting as a meeting with a long-lost schoolmate, who opens the floodgates of reminiscence. Few now recall the tide of feeling that swept against England and all things British in the days when the Alabama claims were yet unsettled, or the partisanship during the French and German war. It is like turning over the pages of an old photograph album to be reminded of the various military companies with their foreign flags and fantastic uniforms, which used to parade our streets and give Sunday picnics. Bancroft's Building, where Louis Blake was employed, burned down years before the great fire, was such a conspicuous landmark in its day that merchants used to give their addresses as so many doors north or south, or opposite to it, specifying the "building with all the little horned heads." The "Magdalena Bay Concession," with which Louis Blake cast in his fortunes, was one of the first colossal swindles of its kind, and perhaps nothing saved it from being the worst but the revocation of the privilege. Even the names of the old ships, the "Moses Taylor," the "Magellan Cloud," the "Pocahontas," the "Montana," come back like echoes. There is a resume of the celebrated Fair-Crittenden tragedy, of which these Blake boys were eye-witnesses, and if there is an occasional slight inaccuracy, in history or geography, it is just as apt to be due to art as to ignorance, for the boy, Blake, who relates the story, was but seventeen at the time, and would be unlikely to remember, after thirty or forty years, of active and adventurous life the minute particulars of affairs not his own. After leaving San Francisco, bound to Magdalena Bay as assistant purser on one of the company's "fleet," being set adrift on the coast of lower California in an open boat by the mutinous crew, and eventually working his way near to his destination only to discover that the whole scheme, in the words of Captain Guest, was "bust up," young Blake continued with that whaling captain, putting to use his already acquired knowledge of sailorism and navigation, and eventually carried out an old plan of engaging in trade amongst the south sea islands, the most profitable branch of which was in the recruiting of laborers, in plain English, "blackbirding." Here again we come on familiar names and incidents, for "Bully Hayes" is no myth, and the war between the rival chiefs of Samoa was, so to speak, at our door. There is a side glimpse at one of the Cocos Island treasure hunts, and a bird's eye view of the foreign situation, a fairly comprehensive picture of the South Pacific of that day. This is a tale without a love motive. The girl-element, white and "native" alike, is ignored. Indeed, in such an active life it is hard to see where room could have been spared for philandering; so, for those who find interest only in the sentimental situation, "Louis Blake" will have no attraction. It will appeal more to men than to women, both for that reason and for the life which it portrays. Published by the J. B. Lippincott Co.



STUDEBAKER SUBURBAN

The ideal automobile. Can be interchangeably used for pleasure and utility and is particularly adapted for those who reside all or a part of the time in the suburbs or the country. With the double seat in the rear you have a light, stylish, four-passenger runabout. With the single or rumble seat in the rear, a smart runabout or roadster. With seats in rear removed, a light combination passenger and baggage car. You will use it every day in many different ways. Demonstrations at your convenience.

Fremont at Mission — Studebaker — Phone Douglas 3000

Packard — Cadillac

All That is Best in Motor Car Construction

PACKARD '09 TOURING CAR

CADILLAC "30" TOURING CAR

30 horsepower, four cylinder, 5 passenger, $1550.00

Cuyler Lee

453 GOLDEN GATE AVENUE SAN FRANCISCO

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Dept. 10. No. 20497.

ANNA D. ROLLER, Plaintiff,

vs.

ALVA AARON and M. CLIFFORD AARON, Defendants.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Alva Aaron and M. Clifford Aaron, Defendants.

You are hereby directed to appear and answer the complaint in an action entitled as above brought against you in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, within ten days after the service on you of this summons—if served within this City and County; or within thirty days if served elsewhere.

And you are hereby notified that unless you appear and answer as above required, the said plaintiff will take judgment for any money or damages demanded in the complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, this 23rd day of December, A. D. 1908.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By L. J. WELCH, Deputy Clerk.

TOBIN & TOBIN, Attorneys for Plaintiff. 1-16-10

Auto Notes

Automobile roads in nearly all of the north of the bay counties are said to be in a dangerous condition by F. H. Martin, one of the traveling salesmen for the Studebaker Bros.' Company who has been driving a Studebaker suburban in that part of the State for the past several weeks. "The roads are in worse shape than they ever were before," said Martin when he returned to San Francisco last Saturday. "In some places the roads are buried under three feet of water and it is impossible to get from St. Helena to Crystal Springs with a machine at the present time. I met a number of autoists while on that road and in nearly every instance they were stalled hopelessly."

A trip through snow and ice from Willits to Eureka has just been completed by A. B. King, an automobilist of Eureka, in his Chalmers-Detroit 40 horsepower runabout. The 152 miles of rough mountain road was covered with mud, snow and ice, the tires of the car being cut practically to pieces by the ice. King found the roads in such condition that the stages could scarcely make the trip, but he had no trouble in putting his car over the curve. With the use of chains and its own power, the Chalmers-Detroit arrived in Eureka in perfect condition.

The exhibit of the Cadillac Motor Car Co. of Detroit at the Madison Square Garden Automobile Show will consist of three types of their new $1400 Cadillac "Thirty," a five passenger touring car, a four passenger demi-tonneau and a three passenger roadster. These models are equipped with four cylinder motors of 30 horsepower, selective type sliding gear transmission, three forward speeds and reverse, direct shaft drive. Two sets of double acting and compensating brakes. Lubrication of motor is by automatic splash system with single sight feed on dash. Cooling is by water with forced circulation by gear driven gear pump through vertical tube radiator and copper jacketed cylinders. The wheel base is 106 inches and is regularly equipped with 32x3½ inch tires. The Cadillac Company will also show a runabout of its well known ten horsepower one-cylinder type at $850 with removable double rumble seat.

Mr. C. E. Mathewson, Pacific Coast manager of the Diamond Rubber Company, has just left to take in the New York Automobile Show; also to visit the factory at Akron, Ohio.

A new style in motor car painting is set by the very swagger Packard "Thirty" touring car finished in genuine Scotch plaid. The predominating colors are red, yellow and green, embellished with black and gold. Among the other notable Packard cars is a runabout in light green and orange; a limousine in brilliant green and black, upholstered in gray and green "wolfing" cloth; and a landaulet in French grey and black.

The Studebaker Bros.' Company of California has undertaken the construction of another automobile to be built along lines similar to the handsome car which was sold to Allen Herbert, the Honolulu and San Francisco capitalist. The body of the car will be of solid mohogany, the mouldings to be carved out of the solid panel. This is done in order to insure against warping. The theory of automobile buildings is that this feature also adds strength. The upholstering will be of the longgrain green leather. Other trimmings of the car will also be in green. When completed the machine will present a decided striking appearance. The engine of the car will develop 30 horsepower.

Another doctor joins the ranks of Buick owners. Dr. A. K. Crawford of Oakland took delivery of an '09 Buick White Streak from the Howard Automobile Company on Tuesday and he will use the new car in his practice, both across the bay and on this side.

E. P. Brinegar of the Pioneer Automobile Company left yesterday for New York to attend the Annual Automobile Show. After a visit to the factories of the Thomas, Oldsmobile and Chalmers-Detroit cars, the local motor agent will return.

One of the first gasoline automobile ambulances to be seen on this coast will be put out by the Studebaker Bros.' Company of California. The local organization of the Studebaker company has a force of men at work at the present time on a vehicle of this description and when it is completed and put on the streets in this city will prove an innovation. Several features of the automobile ambulance which the Studebaker company is building will make it of special interest. Its design will be thoroughly American in every detail, perfect sanitation and ventilation being aimed at in every respect. The wheel base measures 136 inches and the motor will be of the Model "D" forty horse-power type. The ignition will be simplified and the magneto will be of the most improved pattern on the market today. The car will be thoroughly equipped in a strictly up-to-date manner. There will be two doors in the rear and a third door on the side immediately back of the chauffeur's seat. The cots, of which there will be two, will be so arranged that the physician will be able to reach both quickly and easily through the side door. Interior finishings will be in mahogany and the exterior part of the body will be painted in maroon and dark green, one of the most pleasing combinations that is known to the trade. The chassis will be painted a dark maroon. According to Chester N. Weaver the Studebaker concern will undoubtedly find an immediate market for the gasoline ambulance. Several of the leading hospitals of the State have already entered bids for the completed vehicle and expressed considerable interest in the ambulance.

Mr. Mal G. Johnson who went to Los Angeles on the 2nd inst. to manage the Howard Automobile Company's branch in that city reports the outlook in the southern part of the State to be exceedingly bright for this year. He is getting Buick White Streaks at the rate of two carloads per week and is at least three weeks behind on orders. The Los Angeles automobile dealers are all busy preparing for the big Automobile Show that is to be held in that city the last week in this month. They all expect to do a big business at this show.

Among the latest sales reported by the Pioneer Automobile Company are J. E. Neumann, 6-cylinder Thomas Flyer, S. M. Phillips, Sacramento, Chalmers-Detroit 40 horsepower touring car and an Oldsmobile Runabout to L. J. Francis, Oakland, and Samuel Jackson a Thomas Flyer.

TRY MURINE EYE REMEDY
For Red, Weak, Weary, Watery Eyes.
Murine Doesn't Smart—It Soothes Eye Pain.
Try Murine For Your Eyes.

Running A Car By Ear

The trained ear of the experienced automobilist instantly detects the superiority of ZEROLENE Auto Lubricating Oil in the even, contented "pur-r" of the engine that tells the story of perfect lubrication. No matter what the type of gasoline engine or season of the year, ZEROLENE invariably gives perfect lubrication under all conditions.

ZEROLENE

Auto Lubricating Oil

is produced in only one place in the world. It is non-carbonizing, and keeps cylinders and spark plugs in perfect condition. It is practically friction, carbon and trouble proof.

Absolutely free from all trace of acid.

ZEROLENE is put up in sealed cans with patent spout that cannot be refilled. Also put up in barrels for the garage trade. Sold by dealers everywhere.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY
(Incorporated)

ANNOUNCEMENT

1909

OLDSMOBILE

We beg to announce arrival
1909 Oldsmobile, December 15th

The following complete line of 1909 models will be on exhibition on the above date. Every one of these cars is representative of the factory that makes it:

Model X Special Runabout	$2000
Model D Palace Touring Car	2750
Model D Toy Tonneau	2750
Model DR Flying Roadster	2750
Model DR Detachable Tonneau	2750
Model Z Touring Car, 6-Cylinder	4200
Model Z Runabout, 6-Cylinder	4200

Besides Limousine and Landaulet Bodies.

The 1909 Oldsmobile contains all that has made the car famous in the past, together with the improvements in keeping with the largest and most extensive factory in the country. Recognized the world over for durability. Investigate.

PIONEER AUTOMOBILE CO.

524 Twentieth St., Oakland 901 Golden Gate Ave., San Francisco

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 20725.

ADELE RAYNAL, Plaintiff,

vs.

HENRI RAYNAL, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Henri Raynal, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's wilfull desertion; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 8th day of January, A. D. 1909.

(Seal)

H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By W. R. CASTAGNETTO, Deputy Clerk.

P. A. BERGEROT, Esq., 110 Sutter Street, San Francisco, Cal.,
Attorney for Plaintiff. 1-16-10

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY SALE OF REAL ESTATE SHOULD NOT BE MADE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 4823, N. S. Dept. 10 Probate.

In the Matter of the Estate of OLOF NELSON, Deceased.

JOSEPH A. STULZ, Administrator of the Estate of OLOF NELSON, Deceased, having presented his Petition herein, duly verified, praying for an Order of the Sale of the whole of the real estate of the said decedent, or so much or such parts thereof as said Court shall judge necessary or beneficial for the reasons and purposes in said Petition mentioned and set forth:

And said Petition having been filed, it is now ordered by said Court that all persons interested in the Estate of said deceased be, and they are hereby directed to appear before said Court on Thursday, the 11th day of February, 1909, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Courtroom of Department No. 10, of said Superior Court in the Grant Building on the Southeast corner of Market and Seventh Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to show cause, if any they have, why an order should not be granted authorizing and directing said Administrator to sell the whole or so much of the real estate of said decedent as may be necessary.

It is further ordered that a copy of this Order be published at least once a week for four successive weeks in the Town Talk, a newspaper printed and published in the said City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

Dated, at San Francisco, this 4th day of January, 1909.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

EDWARD J. LYNCH, Attorney for Administrator,
Mills Building, San Francisco, Cal.

Endorsed: Filed Jan. 5, 1909. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk. By H. G. BENEDICT, Deputy Clerk. 1-9-5

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Action No. 13512.

MARY A. DALY, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, Defendants, Greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of MARY A. DALY, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above-entitled Court and County, within three (3) months after the first publication of this SUMMONS, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situated, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

Parcel Number One. Commencing at a point on the Westerly line of Devisadero Street, distant thereon sixty-three (63) feet nine (9) inches Southerly from the Southerly line of Jackson Street; running thence Southerly along said Westerly line of Devisadero Street twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet six (6) inches; thence at right angles Northerly twenty-five feet (25) feet, and thence at right angles Easterly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet six (6) inches to the point of commencement. Being a portion of Western Addition Block Number 497.

Parcel Number Two. Commencing at a point on the Northerly line of Clay Street, distant thereon one hundred and ten (110) feet Easterly from the Easterly line of Devisadero Street, and running thence Easterly and along the said Northerly line of Clay Street twenty-eight (28) feet nine (9) inches; thence at right angles northerly one hundred and twenty-seven (127) feet eight and one-quarter (8¼) inches; thence at right angles Westerly twenty-eight (28) feet nine (9) inches; and thence at right angles Southerly one hundred and twenty-seven (127) feet eight and one-quarter (8¼) inches to the Northerly line of Clay Street and the point of commencement. Being a portion of Western Addition Block Number 463.

Parcel Number Three. Commencing at the Southeasterly corner of Bush and Powell Streets; running thence Easterly along the Southerly line of Bush Street forty-five (45) feet; thence at right angles Southerly sixty-seven (67) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Westerly forty-five (45) feet to the Easterly line of Powell Street, and thence Northerly along said Easterly line of Powell Street sixty-seven (67) feet and six (6) inches to the point of commencement. Being a portion of Fifty Vara Lot Number 314.

Parcel Number Four. Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Folsom Street, distant thereon one hundred and ninety (190) feet Southerly from the Southerly line of Precita Place; running thence Southerly and along said Easterly line of Folsom Street twenty-seven (27) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Easterly one hundred and ten (110) feet; thence at right angles Northerly twenty-seven (27) feet and six (6) inches; and thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and ten (110) feet to the Easterly line of Folsom Street, and the point of commencement. Being Lot Number 32, as per Kingston's Map of Lots Numbers 148 to 153, Precita Valley Lands, filed in the office of the County Recorder of the City and County of San Francisco, July 20, 1865, and recorded in Map-Book E and F of Maps, at page 29.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit:

That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute; that her title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 31st day of December, A. D. 1908.

(Seal)

H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this Summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 9th day of January, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiff: A. TURTURICI and E. TURTURICI, residing at ————————, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, have and claim an interest in Parcel Number Four of the land in said Complaint and hereinabove described, under a certain Agreement of Sale.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Attorney for Plaintiff, Rooms 1255-1257 Flood Bldg., 870 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal. 1-9-10

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Action No. 13477.

EDWARD FRANCIS McKITTRICK, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Lien Upon the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, Defendants, Greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Edward Francis McKittrick, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above-entitled Court and county, within three (3) months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Folsom Street, distant thereon one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet Northerly from the Northerly line of Twenty-second (22nd) Street and running thence Northerly along said line of Folsom Street twenty-four (24) feet; thence at a right angle Easterly one hundred and twenty-two (122) feet and six (6) inches; thence at a right angle Southerly twenty-four (24) feet and thence at a right angle Westerly one hundred and twenty-two (122) feet and six (6) inches to the said Easterly line of Folsom Street and point of commencement.

Being a portion of Mission Block Number 54.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit:

That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute; that his title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover his costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 29th day of December, A. D. 1908.

(Seal)

H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By M. P. BRUTEN, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 9th day of January, 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiff: None.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Attorney for Plaintiff, Rooms 1255-57 Flood Bldg., 870 Market Street, San Francisco. 1-9-10

SUMMONS

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
In and for the City and County of San Francisco. Action No. 12782.

ERNESTINE KRELING and JAMES F. LEAHY, Plaintiffs,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Lien Upon the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants, Greetings.

You are hereby required to appear and answer the Complaint of Ernestine Kreling and James F. Leahy, Plaintiffs, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at the Southwesterly corner of Golden Gate Avenue and Steiner Street; running thence Westerly along the Southerly line of Golden Gate Avenue One Hundred and Thirty-seven (137) feet and Six (6) inches; thence at right angles Southerly One Hundred (100) feet; thence at right angles Easterly One Hundred and Thirty-seven (137) feet and Six (6) inches to the Westerly line of Steiner Street and thence at right angles Northerly along said line of Steiner Street One Hundred (100) feet to the point of commencement.

Being a portion of Western Addition Block Number Three Hundred and Eighty-one (381).

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiffs will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit, for a judgment of said Court as follows:

1st. Ascertaining and determining all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said real property and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, or whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description.

2nd. Establishing the title of plaintiffs and of each of them to said real property and determining all adverse claims thereto, and adjudging that each of said plaintiffs is the owner in fee simple absolute of an undivided one-half of the said real property and every part thereof.

3rd. For such other and further relief as to the Court may seem proper, and for costs of suit.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 27th day of November, 1908.

(Seal)

H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By T. C. RYAN, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 12th day of December, A. D. 1908.

The following persons are said to claim some interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiffs, to-wit:

French Savings Bank, a corporation, whose address is No. 108 Sutter Street, San Francisco, California.

CAMPBELL, METSON, DREW, OATMAN & MACKENZIE,
Attyns. for Plaintiffs, Balboa Bldg., 595 Market St., S. F. 12-12-10

Following on the Appointment by Royal Warrant to His Majesty last month, we notice Messrs. Mackie & Coy's "White Horse Cellar" Whisky has just been awarded the Gold Medal for quality at the Franco-British Exhibition.

Louis Crepaux

(Member of Paris Grand Opera)

Has removed to his new studio,

Delbert Block, 943 Van Ness avenue, cor. O'Farrell.

Reception hours: 11:30 to 12, 3:30 to 5. except Wednesdays. Wednesdays in Oakland, 1154 Brush street.

Emil Steinegger

PIANOFORTE PLAYING

924 Grove St (above Fillmore), San Francisco.

For appointments phone Merritt 2845

Thursdays, 2701 Regent St., Berkeley

Mackenzie Gordon

TENOR

TEACHER OF SINGING { in all its branches, from the rudiments of tone formation to the highest finish and Completion of Public Singing.

Oratorio, Opera and Concert

By appointment only Phone Franklin 3594

Studio: 1350 FRANKLIN ST.

Louis H. Eaton

Organist and Director of the Music Trinity Church

Teacher of

PIANO, ORGAN, SINGING

1678 Broadway Phone Franklin 2244

Donald Maclean

SINGING—Pupil Seagle and De Rezske

Henri Etlin

PIANO—First Prize Paris Conservatoire

STUDIO, 1613 GREEN ST. Phone, Franklin 3153

Samuel M. Shortridge

ATTORNEY AT LAW

CHRONICLE BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO

Tel. Douglas 2176

Robert B. McMillan

ATTORNEY AT LAW

Has removed his Law Offices to the

CHRONICLE BUILDING, Fifth Floor

Phone Kearny 5969 Rooms 517-518

Knight & Heggerty

ATTORNEYS AT LAW and

PROCTORS IN ADMIRALTY

MERCHANTS EXCHANGE BLDG., S. F.

Rooms 626 and 630

DOWN TOWN NOW

CALIFORNIA OPTICAL CO. are now in their new store, 181 Post St., near Grant Ave. The Fillmore Street store is closed.

PATRICK & CO

RUBBER STAMPS

STENCILS, SEALS, SIGNS & ETC.

126 BUSH ST. SAN FRANCISCO

SUMMONS

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE STATE of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 19737. Dept. 10.

ELIZABETH J. ROBINSON, Plaintiff,

vs.

FREDERICK L. ROBINSON, Defendant.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Frederick L. Robinson, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County, or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's willful neglect of plaintiff on account of defendant's idleness, profligacy and dissipation, also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that unless you appear and answer as above required the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the Complaint, as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the Seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 9th day of November, A. D. 1908.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By L. J. WELCH, Deputy Clerk.

ROBINSON & GETZ, Attorneys for Plaintiff,
45 Kearny Street, S. F. 11-21-10

SUMMONS.

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

GUSTAVE WEDELSTAEDT, Plaintiff

vs.

ELIZABETH WEDELSTAEDT, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Elizabeth Wedelstaedt, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above name plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed herein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's desertion and extreme cruelty; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the Complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 12th day of November, A. D. 1908.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By MILTON M. DAVIS, Deputy Clerk.

C. F. ADAMS, Attorney for Plaintiff,
378 Monadnock Bldg., S. F. 12-12-10

BONESTELL & CO.

PAPER

The paper used in printing this magazine is our Albion Book

California's Leading Paper House

116 to 124 FIRST ST. SAN FRANCISCO

Phone Kearny 1272

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

No. 7022, Dept. 10.

Estate of ADOLPHE ROOS, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, executors of the last will and testament of Adolphe Roos, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said executors at Heller, Powers & Ehrman, 713 Union Trust Building, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, which said office the undersigned select as their place of business in all matters connected with said estate of Adolphe Roos, deceased.

GEORGE H. ROOS,
LEON L. ROOS,

Executors of the Last Will and Testament of Adolphe Roos, Deceased.

Dated: San Francisco, Cal., January 23, 1909.

HELLER, POWERS & EHRMAN,
Attorneys for Executors,
Union Trust Bldg., San Francisco. 1-23-5

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of MINNIE SINGER, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Administrators, with Will annexed, of the estate of MINNIE SINGER, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten (10) months after the first publication of this notice to the said Administrators, with Will annexed, at the law office of A. Comte, Jr., No. 333 Kearny Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned selects as their place of business in all matters connected with said estate of Minnie Singer, deceased.

CHARLES HUFSCHMIDT,
HENRY HUFSCHMIDT,
GEORGE F. HUFSCHMIDT,

Administrators with the Will annexed of the estate of Minnie Singer, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, January 16, 1909.

A. COMTE, Jr., 333 Kearny St., S. F.,
Atty. for Administrators with Will Annexed. 1-16-5

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., San Francisco. Cal.

Guaranteed Capital	$ 1,200,000.00
Capital actually paid up in cash	$ 1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds	$ 1,479,043.00
Deposits December 31, 1908	$35,079,498.53
Total Assets	$37,661,836.70

Remittance may be made by Draft, Post Office, or Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Money Orders, or coin by Express.

Office Hours: 10 o'clock a. m. to 3 o'clock p. m., except Saturdays to 12 o'clock m. and Saturday evenings from 7 o'clock p. m. to 8 o'clock p. m. for receipt of deposits only.

OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohte; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourny; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS—N. Ohlandt, Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohte; Ign. Steinhardt, I. N. Walter, J. W. Van Bergen, F. Tillmann, Jr., E. T. Kruse and W. S. Goodfellow.

MISSION BRANCH, 2572 Mission Street, between 21st and 22nd Street. For receipt and payment of Deposits only. C. W. Heyer, Manager.

MEN

Afflicted with any private ailment consult the United Physicians and Surgeons. Strictly reliable specialists in Genito-Urinary, Blood and Skin diseases, and all reflex ailments of men. Prompt, efficient services; fees moderate; consultation free and confidential. Write or call. Hours 9 a. m. to 9 p. m. Sundays, 9 to 2.

A word to the wise is sufficient.

United Physicians and Surgeons

517 Twenty-third St., Oakland

Near Telegraph Avenue.

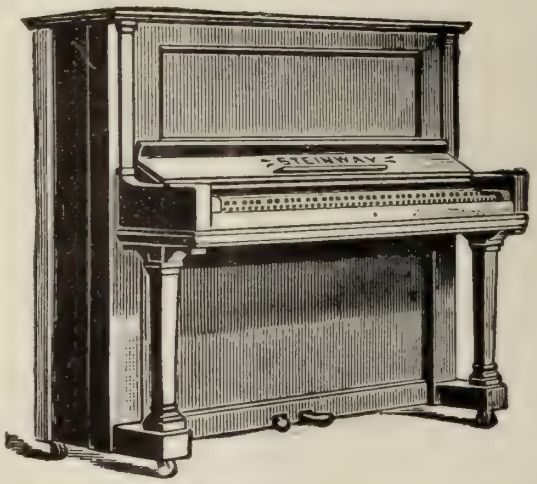
10 Third Street, San Francisco

Next to Call Building

MAYERLE'S EYE WATER, by mail 65c

Orders for Eye Glasses, Opera Glasses, Lorgnettes, sent by mail, $5, $10, $15.

DANGER SIGNALS



Painful, Sore, Red, Inflamed, Burning, Smarting, Itching, Scratching, Twitching, and Gluey Eyes, Heavy or Crusty Eyelids, Floating Spots, Cloudiness of Vision, Cross Eyes, Watery or Discharging Eyes, feeling like sand in the Eyes, Heavy and Crusty Eyelids are often Considered Dangerous Signals.

NEGLECTED EYESIGHT AFFECTS THE BRAIN

Mayerle's Glasses rest and strengthen the eyes and preserve the sight.

GEORGE MAYERLE

Granduate German Expert Optician, charter member American Association of Opticians and Vice-President Optical Specialist Association of America, 1149 Golden Gate Ave., between Webster and Buchanan sts. Phone Park 3153, San Francisco.

The Steinway Vertegrand. Price, $575.00.

You may look into a piano with experienced eyes and try it with trained fingers, but what do these tests tell you but its present condition.

Do they tell you what the piano will be five, three, two---even one year hence?

Veneers and varnishes are so pretty, the newness is so appealing, the mechanism so pleasing, that a sixth sense would be required to tell you what you need to know.

You must rely on the reputation of the maker and the honor of the dealer.

What name is so universally honored and respected as that of Steinway?

What name can offer you equal assurance of worth in the individual piano and more absolute protection against any form of loss than "Steinway?"

So jealously do Steinway and Sons guard their reputation and the fame of their instruments that this store is like a part of the Steinway business.

A purchase of Sherman, Clay & Co. has the unqualified guaranty of the House of Steinway in New York

The quiet dignity that pervades the selling of Steinways everywhere gives no impression from surface conditions that theirs is the largest piano business in the world and that the demand for Steinways is often beyond the output.

Everyone ultimately wants a Steinway, so those who can afford it get one at the start.

$575 buys a Steinway Vertegrand, like the picture above. This piano is in effect a grand in an upright case. By all means see it.

Catalog mailed on request

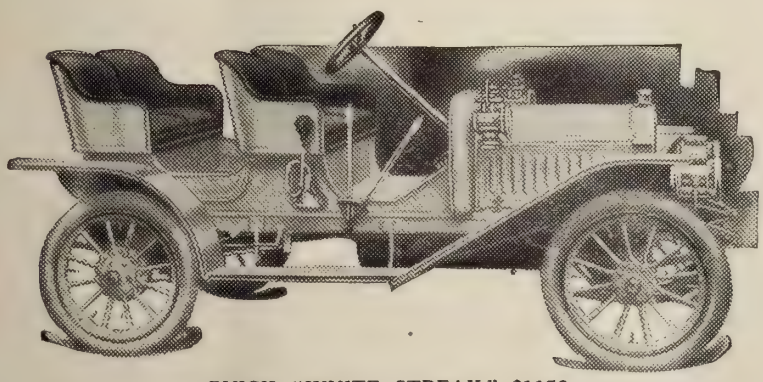
Steinway and Other Pianos

Sherman Clay & Co.

Victor Talking Machines

KEARNY AND SUTTER STS., SAN FRANCISCO

BROADWAY AT 13th, OAKLAND



1635 VAN NESS, SAN FRANCISCO

Vol. XVII. No. 857. SAN FRANCISCO, JANUARY 30, 1909. PRICE, 10 CENTS

SAN FRANCISCO
TOWN TALK

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

1909 BUICK

BUICK "WHITE STREAK," $1150.

BUICK "40," $1900.

1909 Buick "White Streaks" $1150 f. o. b. San Francisco.

Four cylinder, shaft drive, double ignition with magneto.

See and ride in this famous car. Its power, speed and quietness will be a revelation.

Prompt deliveries. Phone for a demonstration.

HOWARD AUTO COMPANY

Telephone Market 1576 489 GOLDEN GATE AVENUE

Leading Hotels and Resorts

HOTEL ST. FRANCIS
UNION SQUARE

The Gynasium and Baths are open in the new wing.

Turkish, Russian and Electric Light Baths. Hydrotherapeutic and massage departments.

The most modern establishment of this character in the world.

Under the management of JAMES WOODS

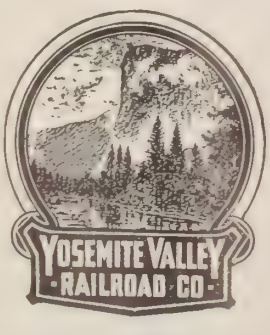
HOTEL DEL MONTE

Near quaint old Monterey---125 miles from San Francisco.



Uniting all the pleasures of outdoor life under ideal conditions with the conveniences and luxuries of the best metropolitan hotels.

For rates, reservations, etc., address H. R. WARNER, Manager.

HOTEL DEL CORONADO
CORONADO, CAL.

Coronado is essentially an Hotel of quiet elegance. It has the most equable climate of which any knowledge exists. Hotel Del Coronado has unique facilities for out-of-door recreation. Polo, golf, tennis, boating, fishing and motoring on good roads. Rates $4 per day upward. For special information apply to MORGAN ROSS, Manager, Coronado, or H. F. NORCROSS, representative, 334 S. Spring St., Los Angeles.

YOSEMITE VALLEY
OPEN ALL YEAR

Why not plan a Holiday Trip to California's Wonderland for yourself and friends.

It is a quick, comfortable trip; daily train service. And Yosemite at this time is no less attractive than in other seasons. First class hotel service at El Portal and in the valley. For through tickets, see Southern Pacific or Santa Fe, or address

O. W. LEHMER, Traffic Manager, Y. V. R. R., Merced, Cal.

FAIRMONT HOTEL

A notable Hotel in a notable City. Patronized by those notable in the world's business, politics, finance and society

Management of PALACE HOTEL COMPANY

BYRON
HOT SPRINGS HOTEL

One of the world's most curative springs.

One of America's most comfortable and refined hostelries.

See Southern Pacific information bureau, James Flood Building, or any Southern Pacific agent or Peck-Judah Co., 789 Market street, or address Manager at hotel.

HOTEL CARLTON

Telegraph Avenue at Durant
BERKELEY

A FIRST-CLASS TRANSIENT AND FAMILY HOTEL

MRS. W. F. MORRIS, Proprietor
formerly of Hotel Cecil, 960 Bush Street, San Francisco

Hotel Westminster

Los Angeles, Cal.
Fourth and Main Sts.

American Plan, Reopened

Rates per Day $2.50 Rooms without Bath

Rooms with Bath $3.00, $3.50 and $4.00

European Plan

$1.00 per day and up, with bath $1.50 and up

F. O. JOHNSON - - Proprietor

LEVY'S CAFE

Third and Main Streets, Los Angeles, Cal.

Much the Best Place to Get Fine Things to Eat and Listen to Choice Music at Popular Prices.

TOWN TALK

THE PACIFIC WEEKLY

Vol. XVII. San Francisco, January 30, 1909. No. 857

THE YOSEMITE

In this winter's mantle of snow the famous valley is said to be more beautiful than it has been in years. In consequence the tourist travel over the Southern Pacific and Santa Fe via Merced is very heavy.

TOWN TALK

Published Weekly by
TOWN TALK PUBLISHING COMPANY

Theodore I. Bonnet. . . . . Editor
Ralph A. Grower . . . . . Manager

88 First St., cor. Mission, San Francisco. Telephone Douglas 2612.

SUBSCRIPTION—One Year, in advance, $4.00; six months, $2.25; three months, $1.30. Single copies, 10 cents. Foreign subscriptions (countries in Postal Union), $5.00 per year. For sale by all Newsdealers.

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter.

The Trade in San Francisco supplied direct by us. Outside of San Francisco by the San Francisco News Co.

For foreign and local advertising rates address 88 First Street, San Francisco.

Los Angeles office, 731 Central Building.

We decline to return or to enter into correspondence as to rejected communications, and to this rule we can make no exception. Manuscripts not acknowledged within four weeks are rejected.

Our Naval Program

Once more we are threatened with the kind of controversy which can be settled only by infallible artillery in the mad, exciting game of legitimate and splendid murder. How far we are removed therefrom it is hard to say, but it is well to remember that it is the lighted match dropped by the tramp which fires the straw. Where there is inflammable material there is always danger of a conflagration. But whether or not war with Japan is imminent it is certain that rumors of war are a most efficacious stimulant to naval growth. Consequently mere rumors of war are not to be deplored here in San Francisco where we are soon to have transport docks and a Government warehouse, and where in the near future will be established the naval base for Pacific waters. With all these material and inspiring facts in mind we are pleased to learn from the Congressional Record that the naval appropriation bill reported to the House last week authorizes expenditures aggregating $135,662,888. Of this amount the sum of $38,000,000 is made available for new construction of battleships, torpedo boats, submarines and other vessels, and for the purchase of armor and armament. Two battleships, each with a displacement of 26,000 tons are authorized, as well as five torpedo boat destroyers, four submarine boats, four colliers and one subsurface boat. An appropriation of $3,000,000 for ammunition is authorized. Five hundred thousand dollars is provided to keep the Government powder factory going, and $26,000 for modernizing turrets, which will enable the Secretary of the Navy to modernize all the battleships with large turrets, including the ones that are now under construction. From the naval program outlined at Washington it is evident that our statesmen are waking up and that they are determined to keep abreast of the World Powers.

Ships Under Construction

In view of the rumors of war it is interesting to learn that many of the war vessels under construction are rapidly approaching completion. Last week the Bureau of Construction and Repair reported the percentage of completion for vessels under construction on January 1st. From this we learn that of the battleships the Michigan is within less than fifteen per cent of completion; that more than seventy-five per cent of the work on the South Carolina has been done; that the North Dakota is within thirty per cent of completion, and that the Delaware is much more than half finished. There are four torpedo boat destroyers nearing completion and three more than half finished. There are also six submarine torpedo boats that will soon strengthen the navy. In addition to these reports from Washington there comes the additional news that our navy is not to be weakened by the withdrawal of the marines as ordered by that ardent lover of innovations and distinguished epoch-maker, the Hon. Theodore Roosevelt. At a recent meeting of the House Naval Committee Rear-Admirals Schley, Brownson, Bradford, Goodrich, Potts, Badger and Gove, gave testimony to the effect that the illustrious land warrior, President Roosevelt, to the contrary notwithstanding, the marines were indispensable to the naval establishment because of their mobility, their habits of life at sea with the sailors and their knowledge of naval customs. For landing at short notice, it was also said they were indispensable, and for naval purposes certainly superior to the infantry of the army. By unanimous vote the committee rescinded the revolutionary action of his High Mightiness of the White House.

A Defect and a Remedy

Assemblyman Grove L. Johnson's bill to permit a litigant to challenge a judge peremptorily is not approved by the Examiner. It is designed, we are told, "not only to put the judge on trial but to convict him." Hence the absurdity of it. This is the Examiner's logic. Furthermore: "A judge is on the bench to lay down the law and that law is the same whatever his personal opinion of the litigants may be," and "If he makes an error that does a material injury he will be promptly reversed on appeal." Assemblyman Johnson's bill, as viewed by our feeble light, is designed to insure a man a square deal, which he is not likely to get if the judge who is trying his case is determined from prejudice and personal bias that he shall be given less than justice. Now as a matter of fact it is within the power of a judge to do material injury without fear of being reversed. Everything that a judge does is not disclosed by the record on appeal. It is within the power of a judge to indicate to the jury by his tone and manner his opinion with respect to the guilt or innocence of a defendant. It is within the power of a judge to prejudice a jury against counsel for the prisoner at the bar. It is within the power of a judge to excuse "for cause" men who have been summoned for examination as to their qualifications for jury duty, and in the exercise of this discretion it is possible for him to aid the prosecuting attorney in packing the jury-box with the "right kind" of men. A shrewd trial judge may deftly skirt the limits of discretion in so many matters as to make the acquittal of an innocent man an impossibility. The truth of these assertions any candid trial judge, any reputable attorney of experience, will affirm. In the circumstances why should there be any objection to Assemblyman Johnson's bill? It will not be denied that it should be beyond the power of a judge to tip the scales of justice with the weight of his bias; and since it is obvious that at present a judge cannot be restrained from so doing and that it is possible for a judge to preside over the trial of a man for whom he has the most intense hatred, is it not apparent that there exists in our system of justice a very grave defect that should be remedied? And is it not also apparent that the remedy is contained in Assemblyman Johnson's bill? It is proposed by Assemblyman Johnson to give a man accused of crime the right to challenge peremptorily one judge. He now has the right to challenge peremptorily ten jurors and yet if he had the right to challenge fifty jurors he still might suffer irremediable injustice at the hands of his enemy on the bench.

Ignoring the Constitution

The Chronicle soberly argues that as we have departed from the letter and spirit of the Constitution in our mode of choosing a President there should be no objection to our doing likewise in choosing Senators. If this be sound logic then it is rational to argue that by the coition of two wrongs right is generated. It is true that we have abandoned the constitutional method of choosing a President, but upon reflection it will not be found that the result argues the advisability of going further and ignoring the Constitution in all matters. It is the strongest proof of the symmetry and far reaching wisdom of the Constitution that its intent has never been disregarded without evil result. One of the results of the change in our electoral system is that we elevate incompetent men to the office of Vice-President; another result is that we make it possible for a President to name his successor. Neither of these results is of a trivial character. The electoral scheme has failed more signally to accomplish the ends for which it was designed than any other feature of the Constitution. It is the feature over which democracy has ridden rough shod and the result has been disastrous to democratic principles, for the right of the citizen in a presidential election is practically limited to a choice between two persons previously selected by party conventions. In other words democracy has been cheated of its purpose as always has been the case. The electors are now mere registering machines to cast the party votes for the choice of the conventions. Our quadrennial presidential elections are just what the men of 1787 supposed they had made impossible. It was intended by them that the President and the Vice-President should be chosen by the electoral college acting independently and in the exercise of the judgment of the members. It was intended that the electoral college should consist of men wholly uncommitted to particular persons and free to vote for the fittest man. The purpose of the framers was to provide for the selection of a body of well-informed patriots whose choice was not to be constrained by pledges nor limited by nominating conventions. With this plan democracy was dissatisfied, and democracy having had its way the Constitution is ignored and we are now glimpsing the road to imperialism. We have an autocrat as President, one who nominated his successor, and as a result of the growth of democracy at the expense of the principles of a representative system we have seen verified the words of Von Holst: "Under no form of government is it so dangerous to erect a political idol as in a democratic republic; for once erected it is the political sin against the Holy Spirit to lay hands upon it." Perhaps the next step will be taken when the office of President is occupied by another man of Caesarian impulses immune from restraint and the Senate is composed of demagogues elected by direct vote of the people who will be inclined to titillate the emotions of their constituents.

The Framers and the People

The Chronicle while professing to be a Republican paper affirms that Senators ought to be chosen by direct vote of the people. "That," says the Chronicle, "is the desire of the majority of the people and it will ultimately prevail by constitutional amendment." If the Chronicle has correctly taken the pulse of the people then there should be no delay in calling a Constitutional convention and having the desired amendment submitted to the people. If we are disposed to speed on our democratic way to the disaster against which the Fathers, in their ignorance perhaps, endeavored to safeguard us, let us do so with our eyes open. A proposed Constitutional amendment will at least have the effect of stimulating inquiry with respect to the principle involved, and the people will be able to decide intelligently whether it is to their interest to wander still farther beyond the limitations placed upon them by the Constitution. At present the election of Senators by direct vote of the people is favored mostly by persons who are ignorant of the most elementary principles of government, and who perceive only the possible beneficient effect on the sinister methods of our practical politicians. What effect it will have on the nation itself is a consideration too remote for their perceptive faculties. They have not had the advantage of experience which was enjoyed by the people who voted for the Constitution. Those people had experience of the more democratic form of government in their respective States, by the Constitutions of which, it was at first believed, great improvements had been made on popular models both ancient and modern. Against these Constitutions complaints were made. There was too much democracy in them and as a consequence government was unstable and measures were too often decided not according to the rules of justice and the rights of the minority but by the superior force of an interested and overbearing majority. To guard against this state of affairs in the federal Government was the primary object of the framers of the Constitution, and it was their absorbing design to safeguard the people against themselves. It was their maxim, one of them tells us in the Federalist, that though the people can never wilfully betray their own interests, they may possibly be betrayed by their representatives, and consequently they deemed it of the highest importance that with the exception of the House of Representatives the officers of no department of the government should be chosen directly by the people. They had very little confidence in the judgment of the people. They knew that when men seek office at the hands of the people they cajole and deceive the people, and that servants chosen by the people are inclined to respond to the will of the people even when the people are laboring under delusions. They believed that stability of the government was insured by the dissimilar modes of constituting the several component parts of the government, and what they conceived to be their most important achievement is thus described in the fifty-ninth paper of the Federalist: "The House of Representatives being to be elected immediately by the people, the Senate by the State Legislatures, the President by electors chosen for that purpose, there will be little probability of a common interest to cement these different branches in a predilection for any particular class of electors." This achievement we have rendered negligible by disregarding the Constitution in our mode of choosing a President, and in this connection it is instructive to hark back to the Constitutional convention and ponder the

The Hub.
CHAS. KEILUS & CO
EXCLUSIVE
HIGH GRADE CLOTHIERS

No Branch Stores—No Agents.

OUR KIND OF CLOTHES ARE NOT THE COMMONPLACE READY MADE FOUND IN THE AVERAGE SHOP. THEY HAVE THE HIGHEST DEGREE OF EXPERT MODERN TAILORING, FASHIONED BY "CREATORS" WHOSE ART FOAM WITH MERIT. THE CLASS OF TRADE WE SERVE NEVER QUESTION OUR PRICES. THEY LOOK FOR CORRECTNESS.

This Label The Hub Chas Keilus & Co. San Francisco. Personates Merit.

When clothes will permit of big reductions their former prices must have been anticipated for "sale" occasions or the clothes are not correct. We scrutinize every pattern and fabric to put in use every precaution to satisfy our kind of good smart dressers. We don't have to cut and slash prices, as our clothes are marked honestly at first. Our clothes values are as good as your money. It's safe to trade where there's no price manipulations.

JEWELERS' BUILDING
Post Street, Near Kearny, San Francisco.

fact that while the plan of presidential election was under consideration the proposition to elect by direct vote of the people found little favor. There were men wedded to the principles of democracy in that convention, but the undoubted purpose of all was to remove the election of President as far from the people as possible. The convention voted three times to elect the President by both Houses of Congress and each time they reconsidered. Once they voted to elect by the State Legislatures, and finally by independent electors. All the while they were wary of the gullible mob, but by the mob they have been circumvented and now the manipulators of the mob, the demagogues of journalism, and the demagogues of politics, are striving to disintegrate still further the foundation upon which this nation was reared by changing the character of the Senate, a body constituted as it is, the Federalist tells us, expressly for the purpose of defending "the people against their temporary errors and delusions," to interfere in critical moments "when the people stimulated by some irregular passion or some illicit advantage, or misled by the artful misrepresentations of interested men may call for measures which they themselves will afterwards be the most ready to lament and condemn; to suspend the blow meditated by the people against themselves until reason, justice and truth can regain their authority over the public mind." Nay! nay! says the demagogue; in some States men buy their way into the Senate, therefore let us reduce the Senate to the level of the House of Representatives; let us make the Senate more immediately amenable to the will of the mob.

The Yankee and His Forbears

Day Allan Willey, in Putnam's for January, descants mournfully on the passing of the Yankee and the filling of his place by foreigners and urges that strenuous efforts should be put forth to reconstruct the New Englander. We have been of the opinion that the complete assimilation of the Yankee was one of the glorious consummations devoutly to be wished. The principal characteristic of the Yankee is puritanism, which is a synonym of bigotry and intolerance and the sooner we get it out of our system the better. A great deal of misapprehension has been propagated with reference to the Yankee through the medium of school books that emanated from New England. He has been glorified as the descendant of the Pilgrim Fathers and the inheritor of all the virtues that came over on the Mayflower. He has been credited with superior qualities upon the same principle that imputes to the sons of the California forty-niners an addiction to evil habits and an indifference to the amenities of social intercourse. But as a matter of fact if we are to judge Californians and New Englanders by the character of their respective forbears we shall be forced to the conclusion that if there is any particular type of American that should be specially fostered it is the one to be found in this State. The worst that can be said of our Argonauts was that, being more inclined to the doctrine of Mohammed that "Cleanliness is next to godliness" than to Sabbatarian strictness, they turned the holy day into universal wash day, and, their tubs of suds disposed of, they proceeded to make the welkin ring. Instead of inculcating religious principles they established a code of honor. Instead of burning witches they hanged men for indulging a passion for the property of others. There was no principle more respected in California in early days than the principle of personal liberty; there was none in New England that was more shamefully violated. The Yankee we are told derived his ideas of freedom from his great exemplars, the Plymouth immigrants, which is singular considering that those pious gentlemen set up the doctrine "that the negro had no rights of manhood; that the white man might buy, own and sell him and his offspring forever." They applied a similar doctrine to the Indians, and when without cause or provocation they fell upon the Pequods, those that they did not massacre they made slaves of without distinction of age or sex. Of the California pioneers it must be said that it was not characteristic of them to pick a quarrel on moral grounds. They were never disingenuous. In this respect they differed from the New Englanders who went to war with the Narragansetts because they had a pious dread that they might be held responsible for the false religion of the Indians, though they discussed beforehand the probability of the Lord delivering into their hands "men, women, and children enough to exchange for negroes." New England conscience, like New England thrift and piety, is lauded vociferously whenever the licentiousness of Californians is under discussion, and yet there is more political corruption in that little section of the country than anywhere else. It is notorious that the purchasable vote of Rhode Island is larger than that of any other of the forty-six States. New England conscience never yet prevented anyone from doing what he wanted. It only prevents the evil-doer from getting any pleasure out of his evil deeds.

Perverting Juvenile Taste

Though the protest against the "crude, vulgar clownish, idiotic" colored supplements has echoed from all sides, as yet nothing has been said concerning the Katzenjammer, Foxy Grandpa, Happy Hooligan, and Gus and Mike dolls, which are widely advertised as the funniest things yet. Seemingly the juvenile taste has been so corrupted by long association with the pictures that the "little mothers" of the twentieth century are willing to accept the hideous dolls as charming novelties. In this connection it is worth chronicling by way of comparison that a doll factory established in Tennessee for the sole purpose of manufacturing black piccaninnies, in the belief that negro parents would hail them with joy, has met with failure notwithstanding that it had the endorsement of such eminent folk as Dr. Booker Washington, Charles W. Chestnut, and the host of white people who stand back of them. The avowed object of the establishment was to make colored effigies which would reproduce the forms and features of the negroes as they are, not in cheap caricature. It was the negro women themselves who sounded the death knell of what would have seemed a sound commercial undertaking. They did not hold meetings by way of protest nor fly to the newspapers for support. Neither did they rely on law or religion, but simply refused to consider the black dolls when they set out to purchase toys for their infants. They had esthetic discrimination enough to demand pretty puppets and to refuse anything else. If the negro dolls which were manufactured under a fond delusion ever find a market it will be amongst the white children, whose less discriminating guardians see no objection to stimulating the perverted taste which enjoyed the vulgar pictures. It passes all understanding why any mother should place in the hands of her offspring such hideous caricatures as Mamma Katzenjammer and the "kids," when the chances are she is attending courses of "New Thought" lectures and trying hypnotic suggestion and inhibition as a corrective of ill behavior. All the nonsense that has been preached on the subject of heredity, prenatal influence and artistic environment does not appear to have made much practical advance on the rule-of-thumb common sense of past generations.

Rudolph Barth, watchmaker and jeweler, now permanently located at 36 Kearny street.

Reversibility

(Translated from the French of Baudelaire by F. P. Sturm)

Angel of gaiety, have you tasted grief?
  Shame and remorse and sobs and weary spite,
  And the vague terrors of the fearful night
That crush the heart up like a crumpled leaf?
Angel of gaiety, have you tasted grief?

Angel of kindness, have you tasted hate?
  With hands clenched in the shade and tears of gall,
  When Vengeance beats her hellish battle-call,
And makes herself the captain of our fate,
Angel of kindness, have you tasted hate?

Angel of health, did ever you know pain,
  Which like an exile trails his tired footfalls
  The cold length of the white infirmary walls,
With lips compressed, seeking the sun in vain?
Angel of health, did ever you know pain?

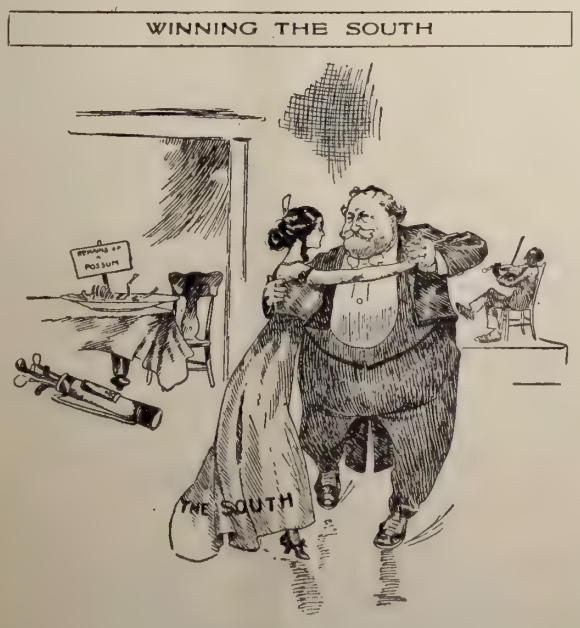
Angel of beauty, do you wrinkles know?
  Know you the fear of age, the torment vile
  Of reading secret horror in the smile
Of eyes your eyes have loved since long ago?
Angel of beauty, do you wrinkles know?

Angel of happiness, and joy, and light,
  Old David would have asked for youth afresh
  From the pure touch of your enchanted flesh;
I but implore your prayers to aid my plight,
Angel of happiness, and joy, and light.

Perspective Impressions

Men do not grow better merely by development of the understanding; but some grow worse.

George Bernard Shaw says that Poe did not live in this country; he merely died here. Well, how about Keats and Byron? They didn't even die in England.



Another college professor has reversed our Supreme Court to the elation of Mr. Spreckels's journalistic Hessians, who as yet have neglected to take notice of the fact that in the Lawyers' Report Annotated, the only work that counts, the court has been affirmed.

Perhaps there is nothing of significance in the circumstance that James B. Connolly of Collier's, who proved himself a contemptible coward in the wreck of the Republic, is one of the many curious individuals who, by some occult process, were drawn hither to celebrate the deeds of Rudolph Spreckels and his understrappers.

Little minds are so well satisfied with themselves that they soon fossilize.

From Secretary Garfield we learn that millions of acres of Government land have been stolen during President Roosevelt's administration. Doubtless for the reason that the Secret Service men were engaged in getting in touch with the love affairs of our Congressmen.

Alfred Henry Lewis regards as a stupendous piece of absurdity Congressman Rainey's charge against Senator Lodge with reference to the purchase of two steamboats for work in connection with the Panama Canal. We have yet to learn Mr. Lewis's opinion of the charge made by Mr. Roosevelt that Senator Tillman franked a typewriter. If there is any more absurd spectacle than that which Mr. Lewis is presenting in the role of apologist for this preposterous Administration it has not yet been called to our attention.

WINNING THE SOUTH

—Indianapolis News.

WIPING OUT THE SECTIONAL LINE

Bartholomew in Minneapolis Journal.

The Limelight

Containing Such Random Thoughts as Might be Suggested by Casual Contemplation of the Inordinate Vanity and Supernal Egotism of Certain Little Men Whose Actions Incite Inquiry as to the Quality of Meat They Feed Upon That They Have Grown So Great.

By Democritus

Let this be an essay apropos of nothing in particular; a random shot, so to speak, at folly as it flies.

Let me speak of the obvious; of those things that are in the minds of all men; of the themes that are on the lips of the multitude; of that which cavorts and capers and flings its heels aloft in the limelight.

What is the limelight? It is the fierce light that beats upon an egotist. It is the spot light of notoriety revealing the players that strut their brief hour on the world's stage to provoke the laughter of clapperclawing groundlings, to rouse the scorn of wise men and to make the judicious grieve.

Who are in the limelight? Phelan for one; Lawlor for another; Spreckels, too; Roosevelt all the time. A motley bunch.

Vanity, vanity, all is vanity. Listen to Phelan at this moment proclaiming himself from Washington as adviser-in-ordinary to his imperial highness Theodore Roosevelt, great tycoon of the American nation and ahkoond of all the Americas. What is Phelan saying? He is telling his fellow egotist that his policy of suppression as applied to the citizens of California is a wise policy; that we of California don't know what is good for us; that our legislature will dutifully heed the commands of Roosevelt because they realize how much wiser is this man Roosevelt than all the wisdom that may abide in the population of California—while Mr. Phelan is in Washington.

And Lawlor—still another Daniel come to judgment; how the limelight beats upon the bench where Lawlor sits! Surely the vanity of Lawlor, inordinate though it be, must suffer surfeit of a glutted appetite at the banquet spread for him by the press and the graft prosecution. His picture is in every newspaper every day featuring his countenance in every expression of his varying mood, from grave to graver, but never gay; from solemn to severe, but never lively. Never in all his checkered career has Lawlor been so conspicuous in the limelight; never has his amour propre been so tickled with the adulation of great writers who "sign their stuff" to give it the weight of personal and indisputable authority. Never again will he achieve such greatness, nor have such greatness thrust upon him. But trust Lawlor to make good while the limelight shines upon him. To be sure, it is but the reflected light of Patrick Calhoun, but Lawlor doesn't realize that. He thinks it is himself that is shining.

Spreckels is in the limelight, but it is a dimmer, more religious light. Spreckels doesn't caper and cavort like Phelan and Roosevelt; neither does he blink solemnly in the fierce glare, like Lawlor. Spreckels carries his own torch to light his way through devious subterranean paths that lead to a sordid end. Spreckels is in the limelight, but he would prefer to be in the dark.

All these are limelighted by the man in the gallery. They are, in truth, interlopers. They have come on from the wings unannounced, unbidden, without waiting for their cues. Wherever the limelight flared there was Phelan; wherever Lawlor could get into the limelight there Lawlor hurried despite the recall of the prompter; wherever the limelight searched in dark corners of the stage there it revealed Spreckels serving his own interests. Phelan and Lawlor seek the limelight; the limelight seeks Spreckels.

But Roosevelt is in the limelight of his own calcium; he is the limelight. Roosevelt said, "Let there be limelight"; and there was limelight. He turned on the limelight at San Juan and it has glared upon him ever since; he turned on the limelight when he dug the Panama canal; he turned on the limelight when he ordered Japan to stop pummeling Russia; he turned on the limelight when he undertook to dictate to Congress. As Buddha is the light of Asia so is Roosevelt the light of America. When Roosevelt is no more it will be quite dark in this nation.

Men are not necessarily heroes because they are in the limelight. No man is really a hero except to the reporters, and only a hero in the newspapers because the reporters pretend to believe that the people delight to honor a hero. Even the reporters are not hero worshippers; but they strive to fill a long felt want. Finding nothing better or more genuine than Roosevelt, Phelan, Lawlor and Spreckels, they do their best to reflect the limelight that should beat upon a hero. They are the mirrors that are held up to nature.

There will be no limelight in history for Phelan, Spreckels and Lawlor. When the fierce light that is now beating upon these men is quenched it will be as if there had never been a Phelan, a Spreckels or a Lawlor. This generation may remember that they once existed; but the next generation will inquire, "Who in thunder were Phelan, Spreckels and Lawlor?" And the third generation will not know that there was ever a Phelan, a Spreckels, or a Lawlor. The only book that will contain their names will be the city directory; and even in the city directory Phelans and the Lawlors will not be posterity of ancestral Phelans and Lawlors that were once in the limelight. Spreckels may be such an ancestor; but he will be a dim one lurking in the shadows of congenial obscurity.

Roosevelt will live in history, but in a subdued light growing less by degress until it flickers in the socket and goes out. When the memory of Roosevelt is as old as that of Washington, historians will be compelled to append footnotes to their histories to explain the reason for the presence of Roosevelt in the history. In three generations the necessity of Roosevelt will be by no means obvious. The actor that passes out of the limelight, or from whom the limelight is turned is forgotten as soon as the audience leaves the theatre.

What is limelight? It is the glory of self esteem. It is the light of today that can never be the light of other days. It is the light of the dead mackerel of notoriety temporarily snatched from the sea of oblivion to illuminate the cellar of the temple of fame. It is an artificial light for an artificial purpose. It shines only for the person that stands in it. It beats upon the clown as upon the hero and its chief merit is its impartial reveal-ment of the fact that one is a clown and the other a hero.

Limelight is useful in the human economy. It enables us read the character of some men more clearly. It shows distinctly the deformities and excrescences of the actors—wrinklings of their fleshings and the grease paint on their faces. It sometimes penetrates to the dark corners of their souls to show us the queer things that live there; the springs of action and the motives that inspire the actors. Limelight is useful in this function, but it is not necessary. We could dispense with it without losing anything in value. We have not demanded the limelight. Usually it is flashed against our protest. The things that it reveals are not always so attractive or beautiful that we care to prolong the illumination. Too much limelight is bad for the eyes.

J. C. WILSON

BROKER

Private Wire Chicago and New York

Member New York Stock Exchange, Chicago Board of Trade and Stock and Bond Exchange, San Francisco

LOCAL AND EASTERN STOCKS AND BONDS

Main Office, Mills Bldg. Tel. Kearny 482.

Branch Office, Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles.

The Lady With the Fan

(From the French of Anatole France)

In the country of Soung lived Tchouang-Tsen, a wise Chinaman who did not believe in the eternity of things. For him the only road to content led away from those sins which men are bound to commit when in hot pursuit of superfluous wealth and vain honors. Now it must have been that this philosopher derived great satisfaction from fidelity to his principles, for when he died the people honored him as one of the elect deemed worthy of esteem and emulation. The fact is that during his time on earth he took much pleasure out of the beauties of nature and in the indulgence of his passion he wandered about dreaming of countries wherein he lived in fancy.

Now it so happened that one bright morning he was sauntering along the flowery slopes of the mountain called Nan-Hoa, and he came to a cemetery, where, according to the usage of the country, the dead sleep under little mounds of earth. When he saw these tombs which extended as far as the eye could reach, the philosopher began to meditate upon the ultimate destiny of man.

"Alas!" he said, "here is the point where all paths terminate. When one has once taken his place among the dead he never returns."

It must be admitted that this idea was not original, but after all it sums up the philosophy of Tchouang-Tsen, and that of the Chinese in general. These people know but one life, and that is the one in which you can look upon the sun shining upon the peonies. The equality of all mortals after death consoles them or drives them to desperation according to whether they are by temperament disposed to be serene or inclined to melancholia. Besides, in this life, they have a lot of little red and green gods to amuse them, who sometimes resurrect the dead and play other amusing tricks. But Tchouang-Tsen, who belonged to the proud class of philosophers, never bent the knee to these porcelain dragons.

As he wandered about among the tombs, lost in thought, he met a young woman who was clothed in mourning; that is to say, she had on a long, white, seamless dress of coarse cotton. Seated by a grave, she moved her fan to and fro over the upturned earth.

Curious to know what was her motive in thus fanning a newly made grave, Tchouang-Tsen bowed low and courteously to the young lady and said: "Might I ask, madame, who the person is who lies within this tomb, and why you take so much trouble to fan the earth which has been heaped upon him? I am a philosopher. I am always looking for cause and effect, and I cannot understand the reason for your strange actions."

The young lady continued to move her fan to and fro. She blushed, bowed her head and murmured some words which the sage could not hear. He asked the question several times but could get no answer. The young woman seemed to pay no attention to him, and it was as if all the strength of her soul were concentrated in the hand which was moving the fan slowly but incessantly to and fro.

Tchouang-Tsen withdrew regretfully. While he knew that all is vanity in this world, his philosophic mind inclined him to seek out the reasons for human actions and especially reasons for those of women; for this class of humanity inspired him with a deep, malevolent curiosity. He walked slowly away, turning back now and then in spite of himself to watch that fan which never stopped, and looked like the wing of a huge butterfly.

Suddenly there appeared before him an old woman whose presence he had not hitherto remarked, and she made sign to him to follow her. He did so and when they came within the shade of a tomb that was higher than the others, she said to him:

"I heard you ask my mistress a question which she did not answer. But I will satisfy your curiosity, because I am naturally obliging and also in the hope that you will give me enough money to buy from the priest a magic paper which will prolong my life."

Tchouang-Tsen took from his purse a coin and handed it to the old woman, and thereupon she spoke as follows:

"This lady whom you saw by the tomb is Lady Lu, widow of a writer who was called Tao, and who died some fifteen days ago after a long illness and was buried there. They loved each other very tenderly. Although knowing that death was upon him, Tao could not be content to leave her. And the thought that he must forsake her in the very flower of her youth and beauty was insupportable to him. He resigned himself, however, to the inevitable, for he was a man of very loving character, and well he knew that he must bow to the decree of fate. Weeping at the bedside of Tao, whom she had not left a moment during his illness, Lady Lu called the gods to witness that she would not survive him, that she would share his coffin as she had shared his bed.

"But Tao said to her: 'My lady, do not swear that.'

"'At least,' she sobbed, 'if I must survive you, if I am condemned by the evil spirits to continue to see the light of day after your eyes have closed to it, know that I will never consent to become the wife of another, and that I will have but one husband as I have but one soul.'

"But Tao said to her: 'My lady, do not swear that.'

"'Oh! my lord Tao, my lord Tao! Permit me at least to swear that I will live at least five years before I marry another.'

"But Tao said to her: 'My lady, do not swear that. Swear that you will be faithful to my memory as long as the earth upon my tomb has not dried.'

"Thereupon Lady Lu swore a solemn oath, and the good Tao closed his eyes forever.

"The sorrow of the widow was beyond words to describe. Her eyes were reddened by tears. She scratched her pink and white cheeks with her sharp little nails. But everything passes away. Her torrent of tears grew smaller and smaller. Three days after the death of lord Tao she began to take notice. She heard that a young disciple of her husband desired to tell her how much he sympathized with her. In common decency she could not refuse to receive him.

"She sighed deeply as he came in. This young man was very fashionably dressed and was likewise very good looking. He spoke very little about the late lord Tao and very much about the lady herself; he confessed that he loved her, and she did not seem to object very much. In the meantime, she passes whole days seated by the tomb of her husband, trying to dry up the earth with her fan."

When the old woman had finished her story the wise Tchouang-Tsen meditated profoundly: "Youth is short; the prick of desire gives wings to young men and young women. After all, it must be acknowledged that Lady Lu is an honest woman who will not break her word."

And it would be a very good example for some of our European women to follow.

Seattle's Newest and Most Modern Hotel

"Twelve Stories of Solid Comfort"

Building, concrete, steel and marble.

Located, most fashionable shopping district.

210 rooms, 135 baths.

Library and bound magazines in reading rooms for guests.

Most refined hostelry in Seattle.

Absolutely fireproof.

English Grill.

Rates, $1.00 up

HOTEL SAVOY SEATTLE

The San Francisco Fiesta

Being a Brief Recital of Historical Episodes that May be Pictured in the Pageants to be Planned for the Portala Celebration.

The Downtown Association and the Rotary Club have hit upon a fine pretext for an annual carnival and fiesta in San Francisco—that of the commemoration of the discovery of San Francisco peninsula by Captain Gaspar de Portala. This scheme will have the effect of stimulating interest in the history of California. There is probably no history with which Californians are more unfamiliar than that of their own State. And by the way there is a good deal of this history upon which historians do not agree. With reference to this very Gaspar de Portala who discovered the peninsula there is dispute over the record of his achievements as an explorer. While it is admitted that he discovered the peninsula there are some authorities that credit him with having discovered the bay, and there are others that hold that it was a Captain Farges who made that important discovery. How Portala could have discovered the peninsula without discovering the bay it is not easy to perceive.

Captain Portala was Governor of Lower California in 1767 when King Charles of Spain expelled the Jesuits from the Missions on this coast and turned their property over to the Franciscans of Mexico who were then under the directorship of Father Junipero Serra. In 1769 it was decided by the Franciscans to extend their missions northward and for that purpose two expeditions were organized, one under command of Portala and the other commanded by Don Fernando Riveray Moncada. The first expedition under Portala reached San Diego in May. Two months later the march was resumed and the cross was planted at Monterey. Here Father Serra remained while Portala pushed northward until he reached the sand dunes on this peninsula and according to R. Guy McClellan who wrote a history of the State in 1872 the bay was then discovered. McClellan says this fact is well established by the writings of Father Palou who kept the records of the missions at that period.

According to another version Portala's expedition reached no farther than what is now the site of Palo Alto or possibly Menlo Park. Here he camped and Ortega, a lieutenant of the expedition, penetrated somewhat farther north and west, but made no report of water extending inland from the ocean. This expedition, being short of provisions turned back to Monterey and another under Captain Farges explored the region to the eastward through what is now Alameda County finally arriving in full view of the Golden Gate from the hills of Berkeley. To Captain Farges, therefore, is accorded by one authority the historical honor of discovering the bay of San Francisco. But that circumstance though it be established need not detract from the glory that is due from this generation to sturdy Captain Gaspar de Portala who pioneered the priests of Monterey to the site of the mission of St. Francis on the Laguna de las Dolores.

There is one thing quite certain with reference to the bay of San Francisco, and that is that it was not discovered, as was once asserted, by that bold pirate Francis Drake who sailed along this coast in his sturdy ship the Golden Hind in 1579. He sailed as far north as the Oregon line, and buffeted by northern gales was driven south and sought refuge in what is now known as Drake's Bay. He took possession of the country in the name of the Queen of England and called it New Albion, at the same time erecting a monument commemorative of the event. He was not aware that the Spaniards had already taken possession in the name of their sovereign. The first authentic account that we have of California is derived from the records and writings of the early Spanish navigators who, after having explored and settled the greater part of South and Central America turned their attention to the exploration of the coast of Lower and Upper California. As early as 1521 Cortez fitted out an expedition for the purpose of discovering the fabled treasures of California which were not only of silver and gold but also of precious stones. His expedition came as far as Lower California. Then came Juan Rodriguez Cabrillo in 1542. He sailed as far north as Cape Mendocino. In 1602 General Sebastian Viscayno sailed past the Golden Gate but without breaking the seal. The harbor that Francis Drake entered was for many years supposed to be our bay, but the strongest evidence inclines against that view. It is now believed that the first vessel to ripple the waters of the bay was the San Carlos which entered the Golden Gate in 1775.

There is no reason why every episode in the history of San Francisco should not be pictured in the pageants to be planned for this Portala celebration. That was the manner in which Canada celebrated her tercentennial last year in Quebec and Montreal; and the result was of such artistic and historical merit that it won commendation all over the world; the pageants were pictured in all the illustrated newspapers, and the best writers were employed in describing the festival. The history of San Francisco will lend itself to picturesque display quite as readily as the history of Montreal or Quebec, and if portions of the history of California are included in the San Francisco fiesta it will surpass anything that has ever been devised by any other city that has undertaken to embody its history in living pageantry. We certainly have ample material. All that is needed is the artistic ability to use it effectively, and if what we are constantly saying about ourselves is only half true we have far more than a sufficiency of talent and not a little genius for this sort of thing. San Francisco is well adapted for a fiesta of this kind. It possesses the historical background; it is unique in itself; it has the civic and the popular spirit necessary to inspire a celebration of this character; and our October climate is one of the halcyon periods that we have boasted with such fervor as to compel the attention of the world. All that will be needed to make our Portala festival a complete success will be the elimination of our parochial jealousies and our petty personal spites and envy. It is hoped that by the time we are ready to take hold of this matter in earnest these bickerings and sputterings will be themselves part of the history of the city—another of the bad dreams that have occasionally afflicted us—and that those who have bickered and sputtered will be so little regarded that they will be denied place even in the humblest capacity on the most insignificant of committees.

ROBERTSON'S
A BOOK STORE
1539 VAN NESS AVENUE
CARD PLATES .·. MONOGRAMS
WEDDING INVITATIONS
A. M. ROBERTSON

HOTEL VICTORIA
N. E. cor. Bush and Stockton
CENTRALLY LOCATED .·. A MODERN AND UP-TO-DATE FAMILY HOTEL
Sun in every room. Elaborate furnishings. Excellent cuisine.
Large lobby and reception room. Grill room. Dining room.
American and European Plan.

In the Flood Zone

Though the heavy floods which are devastating the Sacramento and San Joaquin valleys are commanding more general attention because of their extent, they are not a new or unusual condition at this time of the year. The peculiar conformation of California is such that the principal rivers of the great central valley must carry off all the storm waters from both mountain ranges as well as the additional volume from the melting snows. This condition is not to be remedied except by concerted action and extensive public operations. The silt from mining operations, as well as the soil from the agricultural regions, washed into the rivers, has the natural tendency to cause shallowness in the river beds, as well as to form sand bars and shoals at individual points, and whenever conditions are such that the volume of water is unusually great, it must rise above the banks and artificial barriers erected, to the great loss of those whose holdings lie within the flood area. The losses since 1904 from this cause are estimated at twenty million dollars, an average of four million dollars a year, a catastrophe which, if reported as the result of one single visitation of any kind, would be sufficient to call for special relief measures.

Since the heavy flood of 1904 the people have awakened, and much has been done towards the solution of the problem, of control. One of the main difficulties heretofore has been the lack of unanimity on the part of the various reclamation districts. Properly, the whole work should have been undertaken by the national government, instead of which the lands have been deeded to the State upon consideration that it should undertake the task, and the State committed the further error of selling the tracts to individual owners for a money consideration, leaving each holder of a one hundred and sixty acre tract to act upon his own responsibility. The result has been chaos. Each owner has attempted to reclaim and protect his own tract, regardless of the effect which his work might have upon the river itself, above or below the particular holding. Though levees and jetties have been constructed and attempts made to keep a narrow channel clear, all efforts have been of such a local character as virtually to nullify each other and to all intents and purposes nothing has been accomplished.

The people are now practically united in approving of the plan of the Dabney Commission submitted in 1904, which provides for a completed levee system of the whole river, and the creation of one district to be known as the Sacramento Drainage District, instead of the numerous smaller reclamation districts acting often in opposition to each other. This will place the control of the entire valley in the hands of one body of men elected by the land holders.

ALL GONE TO SMASH

Another provision is for the introduction of a bill in the House of Representatives calling for an appropriation of $400,000 for carrying out the recommendation of the California Debris Commission in the matter of the improvement of navigation and the assistance of flood control by dredging, and also the introduction of a bill in the present State Legislature calling for an appropriation of $400,000 to be used in connection with the national appropriation.

UP TO THE EAVES IN DRIFTWOOD

The River Improvement and Drainage Association of California, which has taken the matter up, is of the opinion that the object lesson the State is receiving will influence the people to support the legislative measures now pending. It is a matter of absolute necessity that adequate measures shall be taken to improve the river and provide for the flood control, that such disasters may be averted in the future.

According to dispatches from Washington there is to be no river and harbor bill, despite the custom, at the present session of Congress, and Congressman McKinlay has advised the River Improvement and Drainage Association of California, the organization which secured the introduction of the bill in Congress and in the Legislature with the co-operation of the officials, that to make possible a successful culmination of his efforts to have a special appropriation bill passed it will be necessary to have the State appropriation made at the present session of the Legislature. The appropriation contemplates the improvement of the navigation of the Sacramento, San Joaquin and Feather rivers as recommended in the special report of the California Debris Commission of June 30, 1907, composed of Lieutenant-Colonel John Biddle, Major C. H. McKinstry and Captain Thomas H. Jackson of the corps of engineers of the U. S. army. It is pointed out by the River Improvement and Drainage Association that the accomplishment of the improvements covered by the proposed appropriations is but a step toward gaining the end toward which it has been working since its organization at the time of the floods of 1904. The ultimate aim is the carrying out, with some necessary modification of the "Dabney" plan which outlines a comprehensive solution of the problem and which has been generally accepted as embodying the best methods. The cost of carrying out the plan has been estimated at $23,776,022. From even a narrow commercial standpoint the expenditure would seem to be a matter of sound economy.

SACRAMENTO RIVER IN FULL FLOOD

The importance of the proposed undertaking is evident from the fact that there are some 1200 square miles of very fertile land subject to overflow from every considerable flood in the Sacramento Valley and contiguous parts of the San Joaquin, and about 1700 from extraordinary floods. A large part of this valuable territory cannot now be utilized except in a precarious way by costly methods and with uncertain results, while much of it cannot be used at all under existing conditions. The problem presented for solution is to devise means for preventing the inundation of these lands by conveying the flood waters that must pass through this territory harmlessly into Suisun Bay; and to correct the existing faults of the river channels with a view to avoiding the floods and promoting the interests of navigation. It is proposed to confine the flood waters by means of levees; to correct the alignment of the river by cut-offs where necessary; to increase the channel capacity by mechanical means; to collect the hill drainage in intercepting canals and convey it into the river at selected points; to provide escapeways over the levees for surplus flood waters. Many other schemes of solution have been suggested. All were examined and discussed and rejected by the Dabney Commission. In this connection it is interesting to reflect on the development made in the Yazoo Basin of the Missippi since the waters of that river have been rendered harmless.

NOT AT HOME

AN ISLAND FARM OF TEN ACRES (SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY)

The Spectator

Flood Recollections

Though there have been innumerable heavy winters, broken levees and flood disasters in California since its settlement, to the old inhabitants "the year of the flood" invariably means the year 1862, which stands out from all the rest like "the big wind" of Ireland, as a date from which to reckon time. Stories of "the flood" are almost folklore in pioneer families, and many a child delights to listen to grandma's tale of being taken out of the upstairs window into a boat and rowed up-town to safety, while the barn, with the chickens atop, and perhaps even the family cow, set sail for "the bay." Middle-aged men and women have distinct recollections of the impassible streets of San Francisco in those days of primitive and impressionistic pavements and sewers, and of the committees that visited the houses soliciting cooked food and dry clothing of any kind for the immediate relief of flood victims. In its way the Sacramento disaster of that year was quite as complete as the fire of 1906.

A Kind Judge

The rainfall for the years preceding 1862 had been scant, and in the late fall the cattle were suffering for feed. A wealthy jurist owned a large tract of tule land in the vicinity of Rio Vista, and though tule would furnish but poor subsistence for flocks and herds, it was possible for them to sustain life for the limited period which, it was hoped, would intervene before the first grass. In this emergency, the judge was sought out and importuned to permit some of the farmers to turn their stock in on his river land. He readily consented and was profusely thanked by the distracted rachmen who assumed that they were profiting by an act of neighborly kindness. When the heavy rains came and the river rose they proceeded to drive their stock to higher levels but to their surprise and indignation they were met with demands for pasture rental, and as their purses were depleted by their heavy losses on the dry year crops, few of them were able to comply. In consequence they had no recourse but to watch their cattle drown in the tule swamp.

Salome on the Barbary Coast

Though the Salome dance has not yet been announced at any of our first class theatres San Francisco is not so far behindhand as some of us have imagined. I am told that there are as many as three Salome dancers in San Francisco, and that they have been "scoring triumphs" (to borrow a press agent expression), for many weeks. Furthermore, I am told that for realism they far surpass any of the Salome dancers of the East. Indeed their realism has reached a point that should be considered beyond police forbearance, and yet they are tolerated under this immaculate Administration which is doing so much toward improving our morals and our sentiments. Though these dancers are of the Barbary Coast where the night life is more exciting than it was even in the old days, yet the applause which they receive is not entirely from the denizens of the slums. Their ill fame has penetrated even to the homes of our provincial aristocracy, and fashionable lovers of the sub rose in their eagerness to gratify a prurient curiosity condescend to rub shoulders with the vulgar throng that contributes to the stifling atmosphere of the city's slumps.

Superintendent—"Children, this is the Rev. Dr. MacSnorter, from Gowanus, who will address you with a few brief remarks. Children, he has come all the way to try and save your souls from Hell. You are not paying attention. Now, can any little boy or girl tell me where this gentleman is from.

Chorus of Children—"From Hell."

The Firing of Anderson

George Baker Anderson has been incontinently thrust out of the lobby of the Legislature. Lobbyist Anderson was lobbying "for the people." He sloshed around on the floor of the house like a tumble-bug on a hot skillet. He announced himself a "reformer" of large proportions and threatened the members of the Assembly with every ill that can befall an Assemblyman who betrays the trust reposed in him, unless these representatives obeyed the commands, the behests and the edicts of "the people's lobbyist." The Assemblymen naturally imagined that they had to deal with a crazy man, so they threw him off the floor bodily and ejected him from the lobby boots and breeches.

Financing a Lobby

I learn from the Evening Globe of this city that George Baker Anderson is "one of the leeches that fed on the blood" of the Lincoln-Roosevelt League. He edited a weekly paper in Los Angeles "for circulation among the members of the League," and, as I am informed by the Globe, "in this paper E. T. Earl caused to be published certain articles that he would not risk in his own paper, the Los Angeles Express, for fear of libel." Edwin T. Earl, it appears, is the Rudolph Spreckels of Los Angeles—a reformer of magnitude and puritan of the puritans; a pharisee and a holy man whose phylacteries adorn wrist and forehead even as those of Caiphas and Annas, his son-in-law. Another holy man of politics in Los Angeles is Dr. John R. Haynes, a millionaire in his own right upon whose leg all the impecunious reformers pull whenever they need money. These are the "people" for whom George Baker Anderson was lobbying. Chester H. Rowell, of course, had a share in the lobby and Rudolph Spreckels was probably a silent partner. But they selected a very poor agent when they sent George Baker Anderson to do their lobbying at Sacramento. An intelligent Chinese raisin picker of Fresno would have performed better service, for the reason that the Chinese would have acted with more discretion. It is possible that this Legislature will make many mistakes; it is human to err; but in kicking "the people's lobbyist" out of the people's lobby, they made no mistake—unless it would have been more to the ultimate good of the commonwealth to have taken him into the highest place of the capitol and cast him headlong to the floor of the people's lobby.

BROKERS AND DEALERS
IN HIGH GRADE
INVESTMENT SECURITIES

SUTRO & COMPANY
412 MONTGOMERY ST., SAN FRANCISCO

Requests for Information Either by Personal Interview or Correspondence will be Gladly Received and Promptly Attended to.

J. M. Jacobi & Co.
S. W. COR. MONTGOMERY & SUTTER STS

Perfect Clothes for Men

Growing business demands more room
February 1st we annex 45-47 Montgomery

Mentor to Telemachus

I observe that Mr. James D. Phelan has been attempting to direct the deliberations of the California State Legislature. It is reported in the daily press that Mr. Phelan sent a dispatch from Washington, D. C., "advising new bill forbidding land ownership to all foreigners." In the next sentence of his advisory telegram he gives a reason for his advice. "No objection here," he says; meaning that the Exalted One has graciously permitted us to amend our bill denying the right of land ownership to Japanese and other Asiatics. It will be inferred therefore, that our Most Prominent Citizen is not only on hand-kissing intimacy with the Exalted One, but that he is close in the confidence of Him Who Must Be Obeyed. The telegram also "suggests" "commission to correct statistics of Japanese invasion." If the Exalted One hears of this Our Most Prominent Citizen will be yanked up for lese majeste and promptly degraded from his prominence to the lowest level of undesirable citizenship. In the first place the Exalted One would resent the insinuation that the "statistics" upon which he has formulated his own decree that absolutely nothing shall be done by the California Legislature, are incorrect or that they require revision by a commission or anybody else. Then to call it a "Japanese invasion" is lese majeste in the double degree—lese majeste not only to our own Exalted One, but also lese majeste to the Exalted One's royal cousin, the Mikado of Japan. An invasion! By all the Shinto gods! by Hachiman, god of war, and by Jingo, mother of Hachiman! this would be too, too much if Mr. Phelan had called it an invasion without first obtaining permission from our own Mikado. Mr. Phelan had to save his face with his own people, already suspicious of his loyalty to their interests. Unless he said something in his telegram of advice that could be construed as a personal insult to the Japanese and the Mikado, it might be still further suspected that Mr. Phelan was a traitor to California. It may be that the Exalted One himself suggested the word "invasion." But what nerve must operate to impel Mr. Phelan, a so-called Democrat, to advise a Republican Legislature! O vanity, thy other name is assuredly Phelan!

Emulating the Foolish Ostrich

I wonder if Mr. Phelan and the Exalted One think they are fooling anybody with their advice "forbidding land ownership to all foreigners?" Everybody knows that all foreigners except Chinese and Japanese can become citizens of the United States and thereby escape the penalty of the law. Wherein, then, does a law "forbidding land ownership to all foreigners" mend matters? Are the Japanese such crass idiots that they will not perceive the subterfuge? And does Mr. Phelan think he is fooling anybody in California with his permitted "advice?" Is Mr. Phelan a human ostrich with his head in the sand of Roosevelt's Japanese "policy" while the better part of him is conspicuously aloft to advertise his absurd presence to all the world holding both its sides with laughter? Such would seem to be the attitude of Mr. Phelan.

Policeman (to unskillful rider)—Go back! No thoroughfare here. Can't you read that sign?
Rider—I can, but my horse can't

PLANT NOW
Burbank's Crimson Winter Rhubarb
Daisy and Pansy Plants
Send for 1909 Catalogue
TRUMBULL SEED CO.
61 CALIFORNIA ST. SAN FRANCISCO

Frank and James Are Out

Apparently the conservative hand of Frank J. Sullivan is no longer at the helm of the Mutual Savings Bank. At the last meeting of the stockholders of that institution he was not re-elected to the board of directors, and he is no longer the attorney for the bank. Has Mr. Sullivan abandoned the bank to its fate? or has friction between himself and his brother-in-law, the Hon. James D. Phelan, caused an explosion? Curiosity has been filliped. Speculation is brisk. Conjecture has on its seven league boots. Wiseacres who affect an intimacy with the hidden springs of current history assert that the expected has happened, that the ties that bind have been severed, that the breach between the brothers-in-law has widened and that there is no hope of a reconciliation. According to rumor, the indulgent and amiable Sullivan, distinguished for his guilelessness as well as for his loyalty has had his eyes opened. It is to be hoped for Mr. Phelan's sake that the breach is not irreparable. He never had a better friend than Frank J. Sullivan. In all the crises of his political career Sullivan stood by him and piloted him to safe harbors. It was Sullivan who extricated him from the most embarrassing situation of his life, and yet it has always been remarked as singular that the sycophants at Mr. Phelan's heels seemed to take great pleasure in mocking his brother-in-law. One of the stories explanatory of the breach is that Phelan objected to Sullivan's loyalty to the Rev. Father Yorke at whose meetings he occasionally presides. Some of Mr. Phelan's friends find it hard to account for his attitude in this matter since it is notorious that Sullivan has long been the only connecting link between the young millionaire and the Catholic Church.

The Sorrows of a Civic Patriot

The Hon. James D. Phelan on the firing line at Washing, getting closer and closer to the great heart of the people by his tireless devotion to their interests, is an inspiring spectacle. There is not a more gallant civic patriot in all the country than Mr. Phelan, and yet how poorly is he requited for his loyalty to the people! From all sides rebuffs and hard knocks are crowding upon Mr. Phelan, and his legitimate and laudable ambition wherever it shows signs of sprouting is attacked by the voracious worms of envy and malevolence. As in the case of Job Mr. Phelan's misfortunes are coming with crushing force and with almost supernatural exuberance. Disappointed at Sacramento by faithless Democrats who denied him the tribute of a complimentary vote for Senator, the pole to which his final aspirations point, he was thrown into a state of dejection which was deepened by the action of his favorite club in freezing him off the building committee to make room for an enemy. Then came what he conceived to be an opportunity of having himself elected President of the Park Commission. Commissioner Metson, one of the numerous citizens who hold Mr. Phelan in contempt

Grand Prix and Highest Awards at all World Expositions
DEWAR'S
SCOTCH WHISKY
Makes the Best High Ball on Earth
SHERWOOD & SHERWOOD, Importers

had sent in his resignation, believing that by his presence he embarrassed an unfriendly Administration. As not long ago Mr. Metson had offered to donate $5,000 to the Bohemian Club on condition that Mr. Phelan be removed from the building committee, the latter with alacrity moved that the resignation be accepted. Commissioner Kirkpatrick remarked that he hoped to see Mr. Lloyd elected to the Presidency which Metson had already resigned. Mr. Phelan said that he was in favor of not filling the vacancy until the new commissioner, Mr. Brandenstein had qualified. "I will second your motion to accept Mr. Metson's resignation," said Mr. Kirkpatrick, "if you will second my nomination of Lloyd for the Presidency." This Mr. Phelan agreed to do. Thereupon Mr. Metson's resignation was accepted and the deadlock was broken. And then Mr. Phelan changed, or rather modified his mind, an organ that exhibits many of the most engaging qualities of the chameleon. He refused to second the nomination of Lloyd, and the matter went over.

His Plan Miscarried

But even in this matter the gallant young patriot suffered disappointment. The Hetch-Hetchy water fight was on in Washington, and Mr. Phelan sounded a clarion call for himself to take command of the city forces at the nation's capital. On through snow and ice he rushed until caught in the storm king's grip in the Sierras and while there Lloyd was elected to the office which the absent millionaire so passionately craved. Some days later, on his arrival in Washington, he received news by wire of the defeat of his nominating committee in the Bohemian Club. Made vertiginous but not overwhelmed, more concerned for the people's interests than for his own, Mr. Phelan braced himself for the ordeal before the Committee on Public Lands. Bravely he fronted the committee, and argued the people's cause. It was probably the last place in the world where Mr. Phelan would look for a smash from Fate's unerring fist, and yet from the despatches in the Chronicle of January 21st we learn that the young patriot was swatted hard.

"We felt secure," said Mr. Phelan in his address to the committee, "in being represented here by City Engineer Manson and Dr. Gianinni."

"Here," according to the Chronicle, "the chair introduced with emphasis, 'and by your very efficient and faithful and energetic members of Congress.'"

And Mr. Phelan, still according to the Chronicle, "looked confused, but bowed and assented to the correction." It is news of this kind that harrows up the feelings of Mr. Phelan's friends, for they know that he is a sensitive soul, and they do not at all agree with Mr. T. T. Williams's famous dictum uttered many years ago to the effect that he is a "nickel-plated Mick."

Another Ananias Club Proposed

"Tom" Williams, by the way, has a faculty of keen observation and a talent for forceful expression, both of which gifts he vindicated in the Examiner last Monday when he blazed into indignation against our college professors. Mr. Williams is now a resident of New York, being the business manager of the most successful of all Mr. Hearst's publications, the Evening Journal. He is now on a visit to San Francisco, having been summoned hither by Mr. Hearst along with several other of the stars of newspaperdom, and as a result the Examiner is setting so fast a pace for its contemporaries these days that the inferiority of the weakest of them, the poor, senile Call has become more lamentably apparent than ever. Though a resident of New York Mr. Williams keeps in touch with affairs in his old home for which he has a very deep affection, and it has occurred to him that something should be done to discourage the pernicious activities of our insulated college professors, who, in their cloistered nooks over the bay and down the peninsula, attract attention to themselves by pouring calumny on this community. "The fact that a man is a university professor," says Mr. Williams, "gives him a sort of reputation for accuracy on exactly the same basis that the wearing of a plug hat and frock coat will impress bystanders with the idea that the owner is a gentleman until they find out to the contrary." Mr. Williams thinks that we ought to organize an Ananias

The GOLD MEDAL for quality in the Franco-British Exhibition has been awarded to

To His Majesty the King
By royal appointment

WHITE HORSE WHISKY.

QUALITY THE SECRET OF SUCCESS

MACKIE & CO. DISTILLERS LTD.
LAGAVULIN DISTILLERY, ISLAY — Established 1742
MALT-MILL " "
CRAIGELLACHIE " GLENLIVET

Note.—Any person proved guilty of re-filling our empty bottles with inferior whisky will be prosecuted.

California Limited

The only exclusively first-class train to the East via any line.
Dining-car service under Fred Harvey management—that's the best on earth.
On your way East you can stop and visit

YOSEMITE VALLEY
AND
GRAND CANYON

No other line puts you in reach of both of these places. Our folders tell.

F. W. Prince, C. T. A.
673 Market St.

Santa Fe

Milo

Do you know what Quality means in a Turkish Cigarette? If not get a box of "MILO." Then, any other cigarette, and try same, side by side. You'll note the delicate, aromatic mildness of the "MILO." Mildness (yet with the richness in flavor) is what costs in Turkish Tobacco, and its just this that makes the Perfect Cigarette. You'll find it in No Other.

This perfection is obtained only by owning our own plantation in Turkey—the careful watchfulness from the seeding to the finished article.

Write to the Surbrug Company for samples and prices.

THE SURBRUG COMPANY, New York City

Club for the men that habitually slander San Francisco. Let us make it a Greek Letter fraternity.

"I had a horrible dream last night," said Huddleston when he came down to breakfast the other morning.

"What was it?" asked his wife.

"I dreamed that I was in Purgatory, and was made to do all the things I had told my friends I would do if I were in their places."

The Man of Reason Appears

For the first time since I began the discussion of matters pertaining to the graft prosecution I have met with an adversary who has the courage of his logic. That he has not the courage of his convictions and is therefore constrained to fill the noxious and humiliating role of a cowardly anonymous letter writer is a matter of less consequence to me than to himself. Even in the ugly shape in which he approaches me I welcome him as a defender of the graft prosecution who is inclined, however feebly, to make a concession to reason and dissent from my views on something more than a preconceived notion of the uprightness of the men who have shamefully prostituted justice in this city. Here indeed is a man who does something more than make faces at me. He reasons; not shrewdly but after a fashion. True he belongs in that category of persons to whom the only appropriate style of reasoning is a substantial kicking, a posteriori arguments alone being intelligible to their perverted senses, but as he only signs himself "Observer" I am unable to address him except in the more polite style of controversy.

The Burning Insult

"The trouble with your paper," he writes at the close of his argument, "is that you are a special pleader for the higher-ups. You can't write an unbiased editorial on the graft prosecution. I suppose your bread is buttered on the other side." This is the kind of withering annihilation that one might expect from Berkeley. Here is a man who suggests an interesting problem in psychology. He takes the trouble of writing a letter for the purpose of conveying what he believes to be a smashing insult, and yet shrouds himself in anonymity. He probably believes that I advocate what I do not approve, and for that reason feels that I am an odious character. Yet he does not realize that were I exactly what he conceives, and no worse, I should still be infinitely superior to the poor creature by whom this cowardly letter was penned. Compassionating him as I do I will take notice of what he believes to be a refutation of the statement made by me last week that the principle of bail springs from the principle of the presumption of innocence. "When a man is arrested for a crime," he says, "the law does not presume him innocent. Otherwise why is he arrested? Is a man arrested without there being prima facie evidence against him? All this talk about the law presuming a man innocent until proven guilty is rot. The law presumes a man guilty but has to prove it to the satisfaction of the jury. How do you figure out that the principle of bail springs from the principle of the presumption of innocence. Don't men get out on bail after conviction by a jury even?" All of which is a pretty faithful reproduction of the logic of the Hon. Francis J. Heney.

Professional Authority Invoked

As I doubt whether any argument I may employ in support of my position would persuade "Observer" of the error of his views, and as from his dogmatic style I suspect that he is a college professor, I will rely wholly on the views and rhetoric of Professor Francis Lieber of Columbia College, New York, who has been dead so many years that he cannot be suspected of being subsidized by the higher-ups. As a rule I have not much respect for the dicta or logic of university law professors who are generally incompetent lawyers engaged in teaching as a result of intellectual infirmities, but of the value of Lieber as an authority there can be no question. This is what he says in his chapter entitled "Bail. Penal Trial," in his work on Civil Liberty and Self Government: "The law of all nations not wholly depraved in a

GREEN AND YELLOW

GREEN AND YELLOW

LIQUEUR

PÈRES CHARTREUX

DAINTY DELICIOUS
EXQUISITE CORDIAL OF THE CENTURIES

At first-class Wine Merchants, Grocers, Hotels, Cafes.
Batjer & Co., 45 Broadway, New York, N. Y.,
Sole Agents for United States.

SMITH BROS.

From 10 to 50 per cent off on Books
From 10 to 50 per cent off on Office Supplies
From 25 to 50 per cent off on Framed Pictures
Wood for Art Burning, Half Price

DURING CLEARANCE SALE

10 per cent off on Leather Goods
10 per cent off on Bibles
10 per cent off on Picture Frames
Calendars for Half Price

STATIONERS
ART DEALERS

OAKLAND
462-464 THIRTEENTH ST. Between Broadway and Washington

BOOK SELLERS
PICTURES

political point of view, adopts the principle that a man shall be held innocent until proved by process of law to be otherwise. Indeed the very idea of a trial implies as much. Theoretically, at least, this is acknowledged by all civilized nations, although often the way in which judicial affairs are conducted, and in many countries the very mode of trying itself, are practically denials of the principle. But even in the freest country there is this painful yet unavoidable contradiction, that while we hold every person innocent until by lawful trial proved to be guilty, we must arrest a person in order to bring him to a penal trial; and, although by the law he is still considered innocent, he must be deprived of personal liberty until his trial can take place, which cannot always follow instantly upon arrest. To mitigate this harshness as much as possible, free nation's guarantee the principle of bailing in all cases in which the loss of the bailed sum may be considered as a more serious evil than the possible punishment. The amount of bail must depend upon the seriousness of the charge, and also upon the means of the charged person. If judges were allowed to demand exorbitant bail, they might defeat the action of this principle in every practical case. It was therefore enacted in the first year of William and Mary, and has been adopted in all our constitutions, that no 'excessive bail' shall be required."

"Oh, mamma," she cried, rushing into her mother's room, and flinging her arms around the parental neck, "he loves me! He loves me!"

"My dear child, I'm so glad! Has he told you? Has he asked you to be his wife?"

"No, but he's down in the library learning to play chess with papa."

Sentiment Against Immunity

Apparently from what has occurred so far in Judge Lawlor's court in relation to the impanelment of a jury for the trial of Patrick Calhoun, Mr. Heney and his associates have not succeeded in persuading many persons that they acted wisely or in accordance with just principles when they bargained for the testimony of boodlers and brigands with the lure of immunity. It is most surprising that a propaganda so vociferous, so liberally financed, so generously endorsed by pious pulpiteers and incorruptible college professors—poor in purse but rich in learning—should have made so few converts in this great and impressionable city. Have the people no faith in the newspaper organs of this propaganda? Have they no confidence in the prophets who have been telling them that boodling, blackmailing public servants are minor criminals? The testimony given in Judge Lawlor's court seems to warrant the conclusion that the people are most exasperatingly stubborn. They seem to sympathize with the victims of official greed and iniquity. And this is one of the reasons why it is so difficult to get a jury to try Patrick Calhoun.

CARROLL COOK

COUNSELLOR AT LAW

Announces to members of the Bar, friends and the public, his term of office as Judge of the Superior Court of the State of California (which he has filled for 12 years) having expired, that he has resumed the practice of his profession and has opened offices in the

CHRONICLE BUILDING

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

where he will engage in the general practice of the law, in both State and Federal courts and in the Supreme Court of the United States.

In criminal cases he will act as counsel in any part of the State, or in any State or territory of the United States or Mexico.

Offices: Chronicle Building, Rooms 1603-1605
Telephone Douglas 90

Moore Protects Lawlor

From the reports in the daily prints it is evident that Judge Lawlor is conscious of the fact that he occupies a very embarrassing position as presiding officer of the Calhoun trial. At the outset it was intimated to him that he was not regarded by the defendant as entirely impartial, but this intimation had no effect on the stern and entirely self-satisfied jurist. He had undertaken the trial of Mr. Calhoun, and his alert scruples were not to respond to the misgivings of the defendant. Since the work of impaneling the jury began it has seemed to some observers that Judge Lawlor's attitude was not entirely consistent with impartiality, but the judge has stuck manfully to his task realizing the while that this trial will prove in the nature of a test of the quality of his conscience which all who run may read. The newspapers are publishing pretty full reports of the proceedings, and readers are given abundant opportunity of judging of the fairness and therefore of the moral stamina of the man on the bench. And occasionally they are enlightened by that brilliant veteran of the bar, Mr. A. A. Moore, who, apparently, has resolved to safeguard Judge Lawlor against such inadvertencies as might start unfounded suspicion. As for example when Judge Lawlor last Tuesday objected to Attorney Byington's style of examination saying, "It is seductive and it is well calculated to cause the juror to adopt the point of view entertained by counsel." Thereupon the sagacious Mr. Moore: "I could not have expressed it so well your honor, but those were the ideas that were oppressing me during every cross-examination that Mr. Heney has made today." Mr. Moore's naivete is delicious and doubtless it is appreciated by the absolutely fair man on the bench.

The Retort Pertinent

It would not be a bad idea if some of our gilded youths could learn to distinguish between real wit and the impudent smartness which passes in their own circle for the genuine article. When they attempt to cross swords with their mental superiors they are more than apt to find themselves outpointed and left unarmed. An instance of this was exemplified the other day when a

TAFT & PENNOYER

Our Thirty-Second Annual

10% Discount Sale

Closes Saturday Night

10% in name only—as the discounts range from 10% to 50%

This is the season of the year with us that the purchasing power of your DOLLAR is stretched to its utmost buying capacity. All our departments offer a TEN PER CENT REDUCTION on our regular prices; some of them 15 per cent; some 25 per cent; and in some cases where we have lines that we are desirious of closing out the reduction reaches 50 PER CENT. This statement cannot help but convince you that this month of JANUARY, 1909, will be an ideal month in which to shop and to buy generously.

CLAY STREET, 14th to 15th
OAKLAND

young attorney by the name of Doyley from one of the interior towns happened to be seated in the lobby of a large hotel in conversation with a friend. A young millionaire, more noted for the size of his hands than for the volume of his brains, sauntered up and was introduced. That he had but just emerged from the bar room may furnish explanation, though hardly an excuse, for, as soon as he caught the name of Doyley he acknowledged the introduction by a very supercilious nod and then drawled: "Doyley? Yes, yes, one of the things we wipe our hands on." Doyley flashed one look at him and taking in his most prominent personal peculiarity, he answered without a moment's hesitation: "Hands, yes, but not hams."

The Financial Outlook

By R. E. Mulcahy

Nothing of striking importance has been seen in Wall Street securities during the week passed. The Harriman and Hill issues have been very quiet; the greatest activity was shown in such stocks as Chesapeake and Ohio, Wabash, Norfolk and Western, Rock Island and Southern Railway, and stocks of this character. Steel Common advanced $4 per share on buying by inside interests, a very large short interest had accumulated also which had something to do with the advance. It is said Lawson was caught heavily short and was run in. The fact that the Steel Company announced its willingness to sell to its employees Common Stock at 50, guaranteeing them from loss at that price proved a bull card. It is generally believed that no measure of tariff reduction will be allowed to be passed by Congress that will lessen the Companies earnings to any great extent. Many reliable market authorities who were talking lower prices for steel securities a month ago have completely changed their position and are now predicting 100 for Steel Common. The last quarterly earnings were $26,-252,000.

The most depressing thing that Wall Street has had to contend with lately is the severe weakness of Consolidated Gas which shows a net decline of $50 per share since the first of the year. Its influence seems to be waning as the Street is not disposed to look upon it as bearing any relative influence over the rest of the market. The strength shown in the Rock Island issues of late is causing more than passing interest. For more than two years the surplus earnings of the Company have been used in betterments, resulting in placing the fiscal condition of the property in first class condition. Everything seems to indicate an early announcement of the Rock Island's intentions of building their own line to the Coast. They would have no trouble in buying one or two small roads now in operation in California, which would aid them in reaching San Francisco very materially. It is absolutely necessary for the Rock Island to reach the Coast over its own line to maintain its present system. It is a noteworthy fact that all roads and ideas point to the Pacific Coast which has the call over all other sections of the country.

The crop prospects throughout California never have been so prosperous as at present. While some material damage has resulted from the recent rains the amount of good that will result to other sections of the State will be so much greater than the damage done that transportation companies will not be able to move the increased production this year. It is no idle talk to say that California is God's country, and for this reason every section of these United States has its eyes upon her resources and future prospects. Locally there have been some rumors of a possibility of the United Railways securing control of the Ocean Shore Road. In the event of this happening electricity would be substituted for steam, a change of this kind would prove very beneficial to the territory along the Ocean Shore line. Electric transportation would afford much better service than a steam road and would result in great benefit in many ways.

A general canvass made recently throughout the jobbing interests of San Francisco, with branches at Sacramento, Stockton and Los Angeles report December and January showing large gains as compared with the same months of the previous year, this in the face of weather conditions which kept country people at home.

Savings Banks are seeking good loans. The time is practically at hand when owners of our large buildings recently erected will receive an income from them; this will brighten up matters materially, and cause a broadening of building activity resulting in the general employment of labor, this will result in greater circulation of money, helping every branch of trade. The future could not look brighter.

HUNTER WHISKEY

HAS GAINED PUBLIC FAVOR BECAUSE IT IS A PERFECTLY PURE RYE WHISKEY, RICH, RARE AND MELLOW

HENRY CAMPE & CO., INC.,
Distributors for California and Nevada
San Francisco, Cal.

Telephone DOUGLAS 2487

R. E. MULCAHY, Manager

E. F. HUTTON & CO.

THE PIONEER HOUSE

BROKERS

Members
New York Stock Exchange
New York Cotton Exchange
New York Coffee Exchange
Chicago Board of Trade

490 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Branch, ST. FRANCIS HOTEL

Two Private Wires to Chicago and NewYork

Washington, D. C., 1301 F Street
Los Angeles, 112 W. Third Street
New York, 31-33-35 New Street

Social Prattle

By TANTALUS

The Vanderbilt Divorce

From a personal letter from New York I learn that there is not much likelihood of the junior Willie K. Vanderbilts patching up their differences. Which reminds me that divorce runs in the family on both sides of the house. At the same time I am reminded of a good story that was told when the domestic scandal of the elder William Kissam Vanderbilts was being exploited by the newspapers. Two Irishmen employed in digging a trench were overheard one day at the noon hour as they were discussing the Vanderbilt divorce along with their lunch. "I'm not rich," said one of them, "but I thank God that there's never been any divorce scandal in my family."

When the Elder Vanderbilts Separated

The separation of the senior William K. Vanderbilts occurred in 1893. They had sailed for the Mediterranean on their yacht Valiant with "Ollie" Belmont as a guest. The pleasure trip was brought to a sudden close and two years later Mrs. Vanderbilt brought suit for divorce accusing her husband of infidelity and naming as co-respondent a woman identified with the gay life of Paris. It was understood at the time that Vanderbilt himself supplied the co-respondent in accordance with an agreement with his wife. Mrs. Vanderbilt then married "Ollie" Belmont and six years ago her ex-husband married Mrs. Louise Rutherford. At the time of his marriage the New York Sun said of him: "During the time of his domestic troubles and the pendency of proceedings for divorce he bore himself with most admirable self control though the circumstances must have been mortifying to him, and, according to report, peculiarly exasperating. His treatment of his divorced wife, so far as concerns financial provision was princely, magnanimous, to a degree that even makes it remarkable in history."

Photo, Habernicht MISS EVA CASTLE

Whose engagement to A. P. S. Macquisten, was recently announced.

A Shock to Her Friends

The parents of Mrs. Willie K. Vanderbilt Jr., the James G. Fairs, were also divorced with the aid of a "dummy" affinity, but neither ever remarried. Though Mrs. Vanderbilt's sister, Mrs. Oelrichs, was never divorced, she was not on friendly terms with her husband at the time of his death. Indeed they had been separated several years. Birdie Fair was believed to be most happily married, and her friends have been deeply affected by the news that her husband's affections have been alienated by a beautiful actress. The latter, by the way, in her youth was a street singer in Italy.

Photo, Maurer MISS HARRIET MEEK

Whose engagement to Mr. Stuart Hawley has been announced.

He's a Gay Rogue

The only surprise in connection with the Ashton Potter divorce is that Mrs. Potter procrastinated in the matter for such a great length of time. It has been rumored in society for many months that a final separation had taken place and that the fickle army officer had de-

MISS ELSIE DE WOLFE
REPRESENTED BY
MRS. EDGAR DE WOLFE
INTERIOR DECORATION AND OBJECTS D' ART
TEMPORARY OFFICE, GRANADA HOTEL TELEPHONE FRANKLIN 422

MRS. OSCAR MANSFELDT
PIANIST
TELEPHONE WEST 314 1801 BUCHANAN STREET

termined on marrying another as soon as he regained his liberty. It was in Switzerland that he lost his heart to an affinity. The Potter heart is a very flabby organ, and Dame Society first formed the acquaintance of the scion of a distinguished family when he came hither en route to the Philippines. He was well equipped with letters to the notables of the fashionable herd, but he was not very cordially received, and instead of footing it along the flowery path of wedlock he steered a zigzag course along the cocktail route. However he met and captivated Mamie McNutt and they spent a very hilarious and happy honeymoon in Manila. Shortly before his marriage a young woman in this city made a bungling attempt to end her life and it was rumored that her heart had been broken by the gallant lieutenant.

More Divorce Rumors

Rumors of an irreconcilable conflict in a Burlingame household have been winging their flight up from that fashionable colony for several months, and when madame recently journeyed Eastward it was said that patience, the most enduring of her virtues, had finally been exhausted. The sensation of the Burlingame New Year's ball, I hear, was the husband's manifestation of a sentimental interest in a young matron whose husband had to come to her rescue.

The Retort Invincible

Stories of the lack of culture amongst our nouveau riche are often so ludicrous that it is a strain on credulity to believe them. Here is one of the latest—and best. Not long ago a scion of one of these gilded households determined to rent the family mansion on Broadway for a boarding house, and in his capacity of cicerone to the lessee he was most pompous and assertive in expatiating on the treasures to be consigned to her care. Now, it happens that the prospective landlady is a woman of real culture and refinement driven by adverse circumstances to the necessity of earning her own living, and the bizarre and tawdry ornaments and furnishings were a nightmare to her artistic soul. One of the chief gems of the collection was an absurd statue of "Mary had a little lamb" done in Carrara marble. That its arms had been broken off in the earthquake detracted nothing from its perfections in the eyes of the owner, for thinking that she discerned in this defect a plausible excuse for its removal, the lady remarked: "But its arms are broken." Drawing himself up, with dignified condescension, the patron of art made answer, "So were the arms of Venus de Milo!"

Anticipating an Announcement

Society has been taking note of the marked attentions paid by Walter Dillingham of Honolulu to Miss Helene Irwin at the Colonial ball and several recent large dinner parties, and wondering if Cupid is concerned. Walter Dillingham is a brother-in-law of Margaret Hyde-Smith-Dillingham, who is Miss Irwin's most intimate friend. It was while visiting at the Irwin home that Margaret Hyde-Smith met Harold Dillingham, and at about the same time the penchant of Walter Dillingham for the pretty daughter of the house began to be noticed. But Mrs. Irwin's friends claimed that she had other designs for Helene, and at any rate, she departed with her for Europe, where they remained for over a year. Walter Dillingham arrived in San Francisco some weeks ago, just a day or two previous to the return of the Irwins, and the coincidence has been sufficient to whet curiosity as to the probability of an engagement.

Miss Blair's Impression

The balls which have been given this season have caused so much hard feeling that society is almost hoping next year will see a return to teas. Hardly had the gossip over the intentional slighting of one girl at the Hopkins ball and the elimination of a prominent society family from the Henry Scott and Colonial affairs died down when Miss Jennie Blair gave grievous offense to Mrs. Alexander. At the close of the last Colonial Mrs. Alexander inquired sweetly of the auburn-haired heiress: "Well, Jennie, what did you think of it." "A very nice dance for very young people," was the too candid response of the veteran.

Heard on the Side

The young men are doing their best in their own way to make the modish, directoire gown unpopular. As one sweet young debutante entered the ball room at the Colonial, one beau was heard to remark to another, "Ah, I see Miss ——— is wearing a maternity gown tonight." At the Scott ball, as the guests picked their way down and up the poorly lighted stairs which led from the ball room to the supper room, one voice was heard in the remark: "Isn't this like the bottomless pit?" Whereupon, the second, something of a wag, observing a sheath gown that passed in the night, made answer, "Oh, not so bottomless."

Why the Boys Applauded

Masculine comments on feminine drapery are often illuminating. Some years ago, when the "Mother Hubbard" was the newest thing, and not yet relegated to its proper place as a house gown, one of the high school misses had her graduating frock cut in the latest mode. As she was not known to be especially popular or widely acquainted, the volume of applause that greeted her on every occasion when she took part in the exercises rather

NORTH GERMAN LLOYD S. S. CO.

SHORT ROUTE TO EUROPE

From New York Every Thursday by the Four Luxurious Express Steamers "Kaiser Wilhelm II." "Kronprinz Wilhelm." From Bremen Every Saturday.

From New York Every Thursday by the Twin-Screw Passenger Steamers "Bremen" (new) Largest German Steamer, "Main" Last Trip Before Her Retirement. From Hamburg Direct to Plymouth, Cherbourg and Southampton Every Saturday S. S. "Berlin" (Twin-Screw) Largest Passenger Steamer to the Mediterranean. From Genoa Direct "Koenig Albert," etc.

TRAVELERS' CHECKS

ROBERT CAPELLE — General Pacific Coast Agent

250 POWELL STREET — Near Geary St. and St. Francis Hotel

Good Things to Eat

Are made with good ingredients.
All that is good in milk is contained in

BORDEN'S
PIONEER BRAND
EVAPORATED MILK
(Unsweetened)

Send for Recipe Book

Borden's Condensed Milk Co.
"Leaders of Quality"
NEW YORK
Est. 1857

mystified her classmates, who lost no time in interrogating their brothers, cousins, and boy friends generally. Then the murder was out. The ushers had been picked from amongst the high school lads who, not knowing the girl at all, were struck by the peculiarity of the costume, and the word was passed round amongst them to "clap for the girl in the nightgown." The audience, of course, took their cue from the ushers, no doubt, imagining that they were helping along in some excellent if obscure cause.

To Interpret Debussey

Though it may be many moons before we shall hear the opera of "Pelleas and Melissande" in which Mary Garden won new laurels in New York, it will serve as the motive of a rare musical treat at the St. Francis on the evening of February 3rd when Miss Margaret Kemble will give an interpretative study of the Debussey masterpiece with piano accompaniment and 'cello solos by Arthur Weiss. Miss Kemble is a talented artist who has devoted much study to the modern music drama. She will appear under the patronage of the leaders of society.

Photo, Genthe MISS MARGARET KEMBLE

Who will give an interpretative study of "Pelleas and Melissande" under the patronage of society at the St. Francis.

A Kissing Scene

Cupid is having a busy winter, if we are to believe all that we hear, but rumor is persistently active in one case at least, in which there is a more than blind conjecture for a guide. It was a little episode that occurred during the last Colonial, when the pleasures of the dance were at their highest. The interested parties were so absorbed in each other that they evidently forgot that the stairway was a public promenade between the ball room and the loges. More than one couple halted on the downward way to the dancing floor to witness a kissing scene in the midst of a "too real even to seem strange" Gibson setting. They affirm that it was by no means a one-sided affair either, and now they are eagerly watching for the announcement of an engagement which has been more or less anticipated ever since one family moved to town and a young man has been seen haunting their apartments on Washington street. However, before Lent it is promised that we shall know not only all about this particular affair but four others. Two of them concern debutantes of the present season, one of whom is known for her vivacity and the other for her cleverness and tact. The latter is the niece of a well-known artist.

Perpetual Mourning

It used to be held almost as a superstition, in another generation, when mourning garb was insisted upon as a social convention and the gradations of first and second mourning, to say nothing of the degrees of crape, and blackness without crape were fixed by rule, that once in mourning there was little hope of emerging. The Hyde-Smith girls could not be blamed if they were to assert that this is their fate, for they seem to have spent their lifetime in going in and out of black. Mrs. Baldwin Wood is again appearing in the somber garmenture which she laid away at the time of her marriage, and her greeting to each of her friends as she meets them is, "Well, I'm in mourning again." This time it is for her aunt, Miss Mary Smith, that Gertrude has laid aside her trousseau frocks. It is the same aunt, by the way, who, some years ago, promised to divide her large fortune amongst the three Hyde-Smith children, Gertrude, Margaret and Bayard, on condition that they would drop the hyphenated first syllable and call themselves plain Smith. The girls did make the effort, but without avail, for their friends had become so accustomed to the old way that it held in spite of them. However it has made no material difference, for the late Miss Smith remembered them all substantially in her will. Gertrude is rapidly regaining her health and is looking very radiant and happy. She had just begun to attend the big functions when the news of her aunt's death arrived, but it is hoped that the period of outward mourning will be short, as she is one of the most popular of the young matrons.

TRADE MARK Quality McLean's Service 1158-1168 SUTTER ST. SAN FRANCISCO

You may be partial to some particular brand of wines or liquors. We carry in this department nearly every favorite kind of champagne, whiskey, cordial and liqueur. Quality is proved only by test, and we hope you will make it as critical as we do in our selections.

L. D. McLEAN CO.

IMPORTERS AND GROCERS

PHONE FRANKLIN 2810 1158-1168 Sutter St. San Francisco

Luscious Old Red Wine

LA QUESTA

AGED IN THE WOOD AND MELLOWED IN THE BOTTLE

Pronounced by experts the best wine made in California

FOR SALE BY

L. D. McLEAN CO. McCAW BROS.

L. N. WALTER, Cor. Devisadero and California

JULIUS BERENDSEN, 762 Devisadero Street

Served at The St. Francis, The Fairmont, Hotel Rafael, Peninsula Hotel, Jules, Chantilly, Berges & Frank's Old Poodle Dog, Thompson's, New Frank's, Union League Club and Cosmos Club.

A Premature License

The date for the wedding of Ethel Hartson and Captain Thomas Caldwell Turner, U. S. Marine Corps, has been definitely set for February 10th. It is to be a pretty home wedding at the residence of Miss Hartson's aunt, Mrs. E. B. Cope, and in connection with it there is an amusing story told at the expense of the young couple, who have had to endure a lot of good natured bantering from their intimates because of the precipitate haste with which they procured the license. On the eighth of January, at a small dinner given in their honor, the date for the ceremony was made known, but, as there had been unavoidable postponements in their plans once or twice before, some one laughingly remarked that there were grave doubts whether the marriage ever would take place. The next morning, in order to circumvent unkind fate as far as possible, the interested parties hied themselves to the City Hall and applied for the essential document, exactly one month in advance of their need. The busy reporters of the daily press, of course, copied the record, with the result that everyone who reads the newspapers made the discovery immediately, and they have had to bear with equinamity the teazing of their friends. Miss Marguerite Butters and Miss Julia Dixon are to be bridesmaids at the wedding, and Captain Matthews and Lieutenant Glassford of the navy will be the ushers. After the honeymoon the young couple will make their home at Mare Island, where Captain Turner is stationed for the present.

The Greenway Assembly

The interest aroused in the Greenway for the 29th was unusual. Everyone who attended the last Assembly has been loud in its praises, and there was in consequence, much pleasurable anticipation of the one this week. The debutantes, fearful lest they should have their dances untaken, were so delightfully surprised that nothing could persuade them to forego this one. The record made by the last Assembly has set a mark for beautiful entertainments which it will be hard to pass for some time to come, unless indeed, Mr. Greenway establishes another. Those who assume to speak say that he was on his mettle, and that such a thing was as likely as not to be brought about. A great many handsome dinners were planned for January 29th at the Fairmont, preceding the ball. These occasions always bring out beautiful costumes and jewels and are a matter of interest to the onlookers as well as to the participants. Amongst those scheduled to entertain were Mrs. Andrew Welch; Mrs. Weller, who decided to give a dinner in honor of her daughter, Miss Anna, one of the season's most popular debutantes; Mrs. Robert Hayes Smith, who will entertain twenty or her friends; Mrs. Fred Sharon, who will give a dinner in honor of Miss Florence Breckenridge. Thornwell Mullally and Mr. Greenway will also gave small dinners.

A Coronado Polo Tournament

The annual championship polo tournament and race meet of the Southern California Polo and Pony Racing Association will be held towards the end of March on the field and track of the Coronado Country Club at Coronado Beach. The following officials will have charge of the race meet, which will be for ponies and galloways only: T. H. Williams, president of the California Jockey Club, Presiding Judge; Walter H. Dupee and T. A. Driscoll, Associate Judges; Alvin B. Daniels, Perceval Thompson and W. E. Pedley, Time Keepers; Major Colin G. Ross, Frank T. Hudson, H. Gordon Pattee, Alexander Hamilton, Francis J. Carolan, Walter Scott Hobart, Charles W. Clark and Rufus Spaulding, Stewards; Frank Belcher, B. N. Smith Jr., and William Shackford, Clerks of the Course; Joshua Hammond, Clerk of the Scales; and D. J. Emmons, Starter. The most important trophy to be contended for in the pony races in which only amateur riders will take part is the remarkably handsome Spreckels Racing Cup. This was won in 1906 and 1908 by Dr. E. J. Boeseke of Santa Barbara with his fast gray pony, Blue Knot, and in 1907 by Charles W. Clark of San Mateo with Joe Ross. The race this year will be specially interesting, entries having been promised by the following well known owners of racing ponies; R. N. Carman, Charles Gates, Thomas H. Williams, Charles W. Clark, Dr. E. J. Boeseke and Alexander Hamilton. If Dr. Boeseke should score a third victory the splendid trophy will become his property. The winner of each annual race receives a miniature solid silver replica of the big trophy.

Husband and Wife in Pest House

The friends of the Rev. William Remson and his bride were startled and shocked by the news which reached them from Stockton during the week. Mr. Remson, who is the rector of the Episcopal Church of Stockton, was taken ill about the first of January and the physicians called in attendance pronounced his malady smallpox. Mrs. Remson, who was Miss May Foulkes, insisted on accompanying her husband to the pest house, where she has been for a fortnight. Mr. Remson's attack is said to be very light, and he is rapidly recovering. As yet Mrs. Remson has shown no symptoms of infection. All the friends of both families, and the clerical brethen of Mr. Remson have been contributing comforts and cheer in their endeavor to lighten the deplorable situation.

ASK FOR
BLACK AND WHITE
SCOTCH WHISKEY
IT IS THE BEST
NONE BOTTLED IN AMERICA

NOTHING LIKE IT IN THE WORLD

For many years ED. PINAUD'S LILAC VEGETAL has been recognized as the best all-round perfume obtainable. It is especially popular because of the great vogue that Lilac perfume now enjoys in Paris and other fashionable centres. You should try this exquisite perfume. A single drop imparts the fragrance of the living flower. For handkerchief, atomizer and bath it is unequalled.

ED. PINAUD'S LILAC VEGETAL

is also used by men of refinement as an after-shaving preparation. It is rapidly displacing witch hazel and bay rum for this purpose. Delightfully refreshing to the tenderest skin. Let us send you a miniature bottle. Write us to-day, enclosing 10 cts. (to pay postage and packing), and we will forward a sample at once.

PARFUMERIE ED. PINAUD, DEPT. S.F.
ED. PINAUD BLDG. Fifth Avenue, New York

If you want beautiful, healthy hair, use

ED. PINAUD'S (Eau de Quinine) HAIR TONIC

For 100 years the standard hair tonic of the world.

Some Teas

Among the many pretty afternoon teas given in the Laurel Court of the Fairmont during the week were Mrs. John McMullin's "Army Tea" in honor of Colonel and Mrs. Doughtery and the Misses Morrison of San Jose; Miss Bessie Zane's informal tea in honor of a dozen or more of her girl friends; Mrs. James Otis's tea for twenty-five friends; Mrs. Andrew Welch's affair for her young friends, and Mrs. Davis's elaborate tea in honor of Miss Marjorie Shepard, to which about twenty of the younger army set were invited. Mrs. W. E. Dean was hostess at a large tea on January 27th, at which seventy-five guests enjoyed her hospitality.

Navy Ladies Aggrieved

There is decided dissatisfaction amongst both maids and matrons at Mare Island over the lack of discretion shown occasionally by marine officers in their choice of the women whom they invite as guests. Against one young married officer in particular they are very much aggrieved. Time was when it was considered as much of a distinction to be invited to the navy dances as it was to be included in the Greenway list, and the ladies of the service naturally feel aggrieved that the affairs are losing caste on account of the indiscrimination of those who should know better. While disclaiming any inclination to be listed in the "Book of Snobs," they maintain that the least that can be expected of an officer—and a gentleman—is that he should refrain from bringing within the official precincts those whose pasts are conspicuously shady, and one result of much council held over the tea cups is the report that there is to be a general revision of the visiting list at the navy yard.

In the Social Spotlight

One of the most beautiful banquets given in San Francisco was that tendered to Bishop Nichols on Monday night by his friends and members of the church. More than a hundred and twenty-five guests sat down in the red room, including prominent churchmen from all parts of the State. After the banquet Dr. Elwood Worcester of Boston, the father of the Emanuel movement by which many almost miraculous cures have been effected, told of his work and his efforts to help humanity. Dr. Worcester has been a guest of the Fairmont during his stay in San Francisco.

One of the largest and brilliant affairs of the near future will be the reception and ball to be given by Islam Temple of the Mystic Shrine in honor of Edwin J. Alderman, the Imperial Potentate of the order in the United States. More than two thousand invitations have been issued.

Under the simple signature of L. Takahura, Tokyo, Japan, is concealed the identity of one of the foremost financiers and captains of industry in the Mikado's realm. Mr. Takahura is one of the high officials in the great Japanese steamship line, Toyo Kisen Kaisha. He is en route to South America, where the company contemplates establishing another direct steamship line. Mr. Shirashi, president of the Toyo Kisen Kaisha, is also a guest at the Fairmont, having been there for a considerable time.

The "Service Set" at the Fairmont was augmented during the week by the arrival of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Hatton, Walter McLean, Constructor; Mrs. C. W. Fisher; Constructor and Mrs. Coburn, Paymaster and Mrs. Hatch, Ensign and Mrs. A. C. Stott, Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Ray, Captain and Mrs. E. B. Underwood, all of the U. S. N.

An interesting party from the East is now sojourning at the Fairmont. It includes Colonel Henry O. Clark, Mrs. Clark, Miss Lois Clark, and the Misses Clara and Elsie Clark of East Orange, New Jersey; General and Mrs. C. L. Marsh of Edenburg Falls, Vermont, and General H. W. Allen of Burlington, Vermont. The three gentlemen served together in the Fifth Vermont Regiment during the Civil War, and while scattered and living in different towns, they still keep up the pleasant custom of taking an annual trip together.

Mr. and Mrs. Francis Carolan, who have just returned from Europe, have taken apartments at the Fairmont for the winter and will reopen their beautiful Burlingame home, "Crossways," in the spring. They have with them as their guest Miss Page Brown of New York, who is already making a host of friends for herself.

Mr. and Mrs. George T. Mayre have taken apartments at the Fairmont for the remainder of the winter.

Edgar R. Bowring of St. Johns, New Foundland, is at the Fairmont.

Mrs. Oscar Mansfeldt, who is on her way to Europe, was the guest at a number of teas during the few days before her departure. The one given by Miss Aloise Gebhardt was a very lively affair at which there were fully as many men present as women. It was quite a gathering of the clans, and a list of those present would read like a page from the Blue Book. Miss Gebhardt had the honor of giving the farewell entertainment on Saturday afternoon. On Friday afternoon Mrs. Mansfeldt was the motif of a tea given in the Laurel Court of the Fairmont by Mrs. Jafet Linderberg. Fourteen guests were entertained at a round table at which the season was anticipated, for primroses, the flower of February, were the decorations used on the occasion.

Among the guests from at home and abroad registered at Del Monte during the past week are the following: Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Bloomingdale, Mr. Lester Osterman, Mr. J. Herman, Mr. Frank de Grassi, Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Downes, New York; Signor and Madame de Grassi, Captain H. Engalls, San Francisco; Mr. and Mrs. William Babcock, San Rafael; Mr. and Mrs. George W. McGill, Canada; Mrs. Albert Keep and her niece, Miss Ethel Merrick, Chicago; Miss G. Waring and Miss C. Gassiot, London; Mr. W. Oenmichen, Dresden; Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Hagar, Portland; Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Darling, Duluth, Minn.; Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Prescott, Washington, D. C., Mrs. Fred Wolean, Boston.

The almost unprecedented length and severity of the rain storm along the coast has kept many travelers stormbound at Del Monte, but the indoor attractions seem to have counterbalanced the outside gloom. The annual excursion from Walla Walla, Washington, stopped at Del Monte on Wednesday and were fortunate in having a fine morning for the Seventeen-

Largest Exclusive Office Furniture House on the Pacific Coast.

EVERY ARTICLE OF FURNITURE REQUIRED IN AN OFFICE

Exclusive representatives of the most important lines manufactured.

RUCKER-FULLER Desk Co.

737-741 MISSION ST.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

HEAR OUR ARTISTS AND ORCHESTRA DURING DINNER AND AFTER THEATRE

MISS ANITA GILL, Mezzo Soprano

MISS NADYNE PARKER, Lyric Soprano

THOMPSON'S ANNEX

O'Farrell near Fillmore

THE COSMOS

658 MARKET ST., Opposite Palace Hotel

Table d' Hote Lunch, 50c.

Salad

Fresh Crab — Sliced Tomato

Soup

Cream of Onion — Sliced Tomato

Entrees

Tenderloin of Sole, Tartar Sauce — Salmon Trout, Maitre d'Hotel

Pot Roast with Noodles — Sheep's Feet Spanish

Vienna Schnitzel, Tomato Sauce — Leg of Lamb with Spanish

Tagliarini and Cheese — Roast Beef, au Jus

Dessert

Sliced Bananas and Cream — Water Melon — Ice Cream

Apple Pie — Squash Pie

Swiss Cheese — Roquefort Cheese — Brie Cheese

You will find SWAIN'S

Bakery and Restaurant on the line at

1241 VAN NESS AVENUE, Near Sutter Street

AFTERNOON TEA for Shoppers with Music from 3 to 5 o'clock

JULES' RESTAURANT 328 BUSH STREET

Below Kearny

Phone Kearny 1812

MUSIC SUNDAYS

OPEN EVENINGS, INCLUDING SUNDAY

DINNER With Wine, 75c.

DINNER, SUNDAYS AND HOLIDAYS With Wine, $1.00.

mile Drive. These parties are made up of the enterprising and wealthy citizens of the Northwest, who combine business with pleasure in studying the resources of California while advertising their own fruitful country. On this occasion about eighty guests enjoyed the hospitality of Del Monte, one of the prettiest features of their entertainment being the profusion of violets with which their table was decorated and the great bunches given to the guests.

Miss Genevieve Harvey returned to Del Monte on the first of the week after a visit to the city, where she was entertaind by Mrs. Elinor Martin, and to Burlingame, where her sister, Mrs. Oscar Cooper, has taken a house for the summer.

Mr. A. F. Davidson, Mr. Henry Schoenberg, Mr. C. L. Robinson and Miss Frances Scannell, all of San Francisco, registered at Del Monte last week.

When Mrs. C. J. Foster and Mrs. Van Bergen sent out cards for their dance, which is to take place on Saturday evening, February 6th, they intended to invite only those in their early teens, but they have been prevailed upon to extend their list and in consequence, the guests, which will number about one hundred and fifty, now include the debutantes of the season, the popular belles, and many desirable young men from the cities across the bay. Mrs. Foster and Mrs. Van Bergen will entertain their guests at the California.

Mrs. William Plummer was hostess at one of the most delightful teas of the season, given last week at her residence in Sausalito, in honor of Mrs. Orrin Wolfe, formerly Mabel Watkins, who is here from Alaska on a visit to her parents, Captain and Mrs. Watkins of Sausalito.

Mr. and Mrs. G. Marcus will sail on February 8th from Hamburg.

Mrs. Frank Kerrigan will be hostess at a bridge party on February 12th.

Mrs. Fred Knight will give a card party on February 4th.

Mrs. George Cadwalader and Miss Linda Cadwalader gave an informal tea during the week, at their home on Devisadero street.

Mr. Knox Maddox gave a small luncheon recently at the St. Francis to Mr. and Mrs. Horace Pillsbury and Miss Linda Cadwalader.

Mrs. Charles Meinik and Miss Meinik have returned from a long residence abroad and are stopping at the Hotel York on California street.

Mrs. Walter Hobart, with her three interesting children, have gone East, where they will remain for some time.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Van Dyck Johns have returned from a four months' trip to Baltimore, and are now residing in their flat on Pacific avenue.

Mrs. Horace Hellman gave a prettily appointed tea at her home on Gough street last Thursday in honor of Mrs. Meinik and her daughter, who were warmly welcomed by their old friends, all prominent in the Pioneer set.

Mrs. Wm. Horne was hostess at a bridge party in San Rafael last week, given in honor of Mrs. Starr Keeler. Mrs. Keeler was formerly Grace Taft, a relative of President-elect, and a brilliant and interesting woman. The Keelers were formerly residents of Sausalito, but have now located permanently in San Rafael.

Mrs. George Hill Stoddard made Miss Mazie Crowley the motif of a pleasant tea at the Fairmont on Monday afternoon. Miss Crowley's marriage to Howard T. Blethen will take place early in February.

Mrs. Norris Davis is at the Adler Sanitarium where she is slowly recovering from an operation for appendicitis.

The Francesca Club will take rooms in the Shreve Building and move down town as soon as the premises are in order.

Mrs. Noble Eaton gave a bridge party on Wednesday evening, January 27th, at her home on Vallejo street.

Mrs. Howard Bickell was hostess at a bridge party given at her home on Jackson street during the week.

Miss Marian Miller was the youthful hostess at an informal but none the less enjoyable dance given at the home of her parents, the C. O. G. Millers, on Pacific avenue last Friday evening. The barn dance does not seem to languish in its popularity amongst the youngest set.

Owing to the Italian disaster Mrs. Walter E. Hedges postponed her departure on the appointed date, but she will leave on the Corona which sails from New York on February 18th. At Nice Mrs. Hedges will join Miss Helene Robson, going thence to Paris, where Mrs. Marguerite Hanford will join the party, and all three will spend some time in travel. It will probably be a year before Mrs. Hedges and Mrs. Hanford return to California.

Miss Emily Carolan has returned from New York where she has been the guest of her sister, Mrs. Timlow.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Poett are visiting Mrs. Poett's mother, Mrs. Carolon, on Buchanan street.

John A. Britton, president of the San Francisco Gas and Electric Company, has brought his family over from Oakland to take permanent quarters at the St. Francis.

REMOVAL NOTICE

OUR OFFICE after December 21, 1908, will be at 311 to 317 Crocker Building, corner of Post and Market streets.

OUR WAREHOUSE will remain at the Southwest corner of Eddy and Hyde Streets, until April 18, 1909, on that date we shall remove to our old location, 147-151 Minna Street and 144-148 Natoma Street.

GLADDING, McBEAN & CO.

CENTRAL TRUST COMPANY
OF CALIFORNIA

Has removed to its new offices Corner Market, Sutter and Sansome Streets

A General Banking Business Transacted

CHAS. F. LEEGE, President B. G. TOGNAZZI, Manager

A BURNING QUESTION

How to Keep Warm Frosty Mornings? Try the

HOME OPEN FRONT OIL HEATER

A PERFECT HEATER
PORTABLE
SAFE

Cheerful as an open grate fire. Most successful oil heater ever invented. Sold on a guarantee. If not satisfactory money refunded.

Made in Three Sizes

MANUFACTURED BY

W. W. MONTAGUE & CO.

Corner Turk and Polk Streets, San Francisco.

MEET KING REX

and his throng of

MARDI GRAS

Merrymakers at New Orleans

Krewe of Nereus..Jan. 25	Knights of Momus Feb. 18
Falstaffians .....Feb. 5	Krewe of Proteus..Feb. 22
Elves of Oberon..Feb. 11	Rex' Arrival .....Feb. 23

Your Direct Way from San Francisco via Los Angeles and El Paso —along Pacific Shores—by the Old Missions—Southern California Orange Groves—The Salton Sea—Palisades of the Rio Grande—Rice and Cotton Fields of the South.

Drawing-room Sleepers; Berths; Sections; Drawing Rooms. Dining Service unequaled. Observation Car; Open-Air Rotunda; Ladies' Parlor; Gentlemen's Cafe; Library.

Personally Conducted Tourist Excursion Parties to Chicago, St. Louis, Cincinnati, New Orleans and Washington.

Write for "Wayside Notes Along the Sunset Route"—Tells in detail of the attractions of the Southern Route.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC

TICKET OFFICES

884 Market St. 14 Powell St. Market-St. Ferry Depot
Third and Townsend Sts. 13th and Franklin Sts., Oakland

Stage

Ellen Terry Discusses Irving

Speaking of Ellen Terry's autobiography, Mr. A. B. Walkley in the London Times says that to no one of her stage comrades does she give such long and sympathetic analysis as to Henry Irving. "Just as she reveals herself, so Miss Terry reveals her great chief, in his strength of character, of brain, and, above all, of will; in his childlike simplicity and his equally childlike subtlety; his remoteness and reserve, and the life-long loneliness that these brought him; his hesitations and his greatness; his fine courtesy and his domineering self-assertion. * * * For those in the future who want to know Henry Irving the man, her book will be a necessary document." One should add the actor also, for Miss Terry definitely pictures each character impersonated by him during her quarter of a century at the Lyceum Theatre. Henry Irving, indeed, was no happier in his great "leading lady" than in his present interpreter. The dominant personality of Irving "looms across" those years at the Lyceum, writes Miss Terry, "reducing all events, all feelings, all that happened and all that was suggetsed, to pigmy size." Before that time she had seen very little of him, and he less of her. "I never thought that he would become a great actor," she tells us. "He had no high opinion of my acting." They had played together during one short engagement, in Garrick's "boiled-down version" of "The Taming of the Shrew," not successfully. Irving, as Petruchio, was in fact a melancholy failure. She continues: "Even up to the last five years of his life, Henry Irving was striving, striving. He never rested on old triumphs, never found a part in which there was no more to do. Once when I was touring with him in America, at the time when he was at the highest point of his fame, I watched him one day in the train—always a delightful occupation, for his face provided many pictures a minute—and being struck by a curious expression, half-triumphant, half-despairing, asked him what he was think about. 'I was thinking,' he answered slowly, 'how strange it is that I should have made the reputation I have as an actor, with nothing to help me, with no equipment. My legs, my voice—everything has been against me. For an actor who can't walk, can't talk, and has no face to speak of, I've done pretty well.'"

"The Wolf"

With the coming of "The Wolf" to the Van Ness next week a distinct dramatic novelty is promised. It is by Eugene Walter who is also the author of "Paid in Full" both plays running simultaneously at Broadway theatres last season. The locale of "The Wolf" is laid in the Hudson Bay vicinity, and portrays a group of rugged characters typical of Canada's frontier—as picturesque as they are human. The principal characters are Mac Tavish, a hard headed Scotchman, whose wife has long since left him on account of his nagging, leaving him a beautiful daughter, Hilda, the counterpart of her mother and the central figure in the drama; Jules Beaubien, a young French-Canadian, a wholesome character, brave, sturdy, true, and frankly in love with Hilda; William McDonald, an American civil engineer, forwarding the construction of a new railroad, who is the rival of Beaubien for the conquest of Hilda, though unworthy, for he has a wife and children in the States and regards Hilda as a prey for his caprice; George Huntley, a light hearted but sturdy youth, who delights in tantalizing his colleagues; and B'Atiste Le Grand, a quiet but revengeful French romad, brooding over his lost love, the sister of Beaubien, who has been betrayed and driven to suicide by her disgrace before the opening of the play. The story depicts the manœuvres between Beaubien and McDonald to win Hilda—the former for his wife and the latter for his mistress. B'Atiste discovers that the villainous McDonald was the very man responsible for the misery and death of his beloved Annette, and wishes to kill him at once, but Beaubien, as brother of the dead girl, reserves that revenge for himself. While the play as a whole is one of sylvan simplicity, it presents many phases from Ibsenesque problem to farcical scenes, but with melodramatics predominating throughout, especially in the last act, which the New York critics declared to be one of the most thrilling ever written, and yet perfectly natural, plausible and true to life.

Greenbaum Concerts

The second of the most successful season of the chamber music concerts ever given in this city will take place on Sunday afternoon, January 31st, at Lyric Hall, when Will Greenbaum's splendid Lyric Quartette will give "An Afternoon with Dvorak," assisted by the gifted young tenor, Laurence H. Strauss, and Gyula Oranya, a pianist of extraordinary talent. The program includes the "American Quartette," op. 96, three beautiful songs, "Like a Linden Tree am I," "The Lark," and "I know that Hope Doth Smile," and a quintette for strings and piano, which is one of the most beautiful works in the literature of chamber music. Seats are 50 cents and $1.00, and may be secured at the hall any time after 10 a. m. on Sunday, and until then at Sherman, Clay and Co.'s. The third concert will be given on Sunday, February 28th, when a very novel program will be given, including the only string quartette ever composed and published by a woman.

"The Crisis" at the Alcazar

"The Crisis," which is announced as the Alcazar's attraction for the coming week, is a dramatization of Winston Churchill's famous story, which has long been rated among the "best sellers," and for two seasons was used as a starring vehicle by James K. Hackett. It deals with that intense period of American history at the time of Lincoln's first election to the presidency, when the civil war began, and the scenes are laid in the city of St. Louis, then in a state of ferment. The hero is Stephen Brice, a Northerner, born in Boston and educated at Harvard. At his father's financial ruin and death he takes his mother and goes to St. Louis to study law in the office of Judge Whipple, an old family friend. The judge is an ardent Yankee and hates slavery, and Stephen creates a sensation immediately upon his arrival, while waiting to see him, by buying a slave girl at an auction, bidding from the window of the judge's office against Virginia Carvel and thereby incurring her scorn and strong resentment, for she is intense in her hatred for all Yankees, anyway. The purchase costs Brice every dollar he has, and his sole object is one of impulse, merely buying the slave girl for the purpose of setting her free. Virginia's cousin, Clarence Colfax, who loves her, is a hot-headed young Southerner, and as chance brings her and Stephen Brice together as the play goes on, seeks to affront and insult him at every opportunity. Stephen Brice's manliness and nobility of nature, however, eventually gain Miss Carvel's admiration, and during the dark days of struggles that follow chance brings it into his power to save her cousin's life and her father from being captured in the enemy's lines, as well as rendering other valuable services to her and those who are dear to her. He is her hero, he has always been—in spite of her loyal Southern convictions—and the beautiful play ends with peace and happiness for them. In the costumes of a half-a-century ago, and with sterling dramatic material to interpret, the Alcazar players can be depended upon to make "The Crisis" an extremely interesting offering.

MACE GREENLEAF

The new leading man at the Valencia who will be seen in "The Prince Chap."

Hotaling Back to His Old Love

"Dick" Hotaling will return to the stage next week. He will open at Ye Liberty Theatre in Oakland Monday night in Richelieu, supported by Bishop's players. As an actor Mr. Hotaling is obliged to overcome an handicap—that of being a millionaire. In consequence of this troublesome circumstance which is accepted as implying that he is a dilettante, Mr. Hotaling is regarded by some as an amateur of art, a mere dabbler in histrionics to be admired for his predilection but not to be taken seriously. Now as a matter of fact Mr. Hotaling has considerable histrionic ability. As a matter of fact he is equipped with more of the qualities requisite for the realization of stage characters than are to be found in many actors who rely on their histrionic talent for a living; he has brains and temperament and affection for his art; he is a student of the drama of the traditions of the stage, and were he not a millionaire the probability is that he might achieve high rank among the interpreters of the classic drama.

At the Valencia

"When Knighthood Was in Flower," staged and costumed in sumptuous fashion and splendidly acted, will be presented for the last times at the Valencia Theatre this Sunday afternoon and evening, and on Monday night the versatile members of this hard-working stock company will take a long jump from the sock and buskin period of King Henry VIII and come to the extremely up-to-date time of "A Contented Woman," Charles H. Hoyt's great satire on Woman's Suffrage, and by far the best play ever written by that delightful author. The action takes place in Denver, where members of the fair sex are allowed the ballot, and the story centers around the candidacy of Benton Holme and his wife, Grace, who are running against each other for mayor. Mrs. Holme is urged to run against her husband by Aunt Jim, who literally wears the trousers of her family, holding her weaker half, Uncle Toby, under absolute subjection. Both of the candidates use all of the methods of the thoroughly up-to-date politician in making their canvas and the typical ward heeler and all of his associates are greatly in evidence throughout the play. Mrs. Holme tries on over a dozen styles of hat, wondering which will best serve to catch the woman vote, and her husband is put to his wits' end to devise ways and means of capturing the coveted office. After a strenuous campaign Mrs. Holme carries the day and finds that she does not want the mayoralty after all. Of course things are finally straightened out in the customary good-humored Hoyt fashion and everything ends satisfactorily to all parties concerned. "The Prince Chap," which will serve to introduce Mace Greenleaf, the new leading man of the Valencia stock company to a San Francisco audience, will follow "A Contented Woman."

GIERSBERGER WINES
The wine of merit and quality all around the world. Compare it with the best wines and we are satisfied.
THEO. GIER WINE COMPANY
Phone Oakland 123 1225-1227 BROADWAY, OAKLAND

The Gordon Concerts

On Friday morning the sale of seats for the two Mackenzie Gordon concerts will open. The dates for the concerts are Tuesday night, February 9th, and Sunday afternoon, February 14th. Complete programs will be ready at the box office. On Friday afternoon, February 12th, Gordon will give his first recital in Oakland at Ye Liberty Playhouse. Eugene Blanchard will be the piano soloist and Fred Maurer the accompanist at all the Gordon concerts. Singers with voices like this artist are

ANDREW ROBSON
Who plays the leading role in "The Wolf" next week at the Van Ness Theatre.

LAURENCE H. STRAUSS

Tenor at the Second "Pop" Concert next Sunday afternoon at Lyric Hall.

rarely found and he is unquestionably one of the greatest interpreters of song now living. Mr. Greenbaum is being congratulated for taking him under his artistic direction.

Corinne at the American

Thomas Jefferson will be seen in his inimitable characterization of "Rip Van Winkle" for the last times at the American Theatre this Saturday afternoon and evening, and at the Sunday matinee Corinne, the singing comedienne who has a remarkable record of brilliant achievements in farce, musical comedy, comedy drama and comic opera and who is a great favorite in San Francisco, will begin a week's engagement in a character said to be absolutely different from any she has ever portrayed. The vehicle is a musical play, "Lola from Berlin," by John J. McNally, the well-known author, who has made a distinct departure from the line of work with which his name has been so long associated. The purpose of the managers, star and author has been to create something unique and the many interesting characters tell an agreeable story of modern life, rich in quaint humor, punctuated with wit and illustrated with songs and ensembles that consistently belong to the situation in which they are placed. The lyrics and music are of the liveliest and catchiest style imaginable. The company engaged to support Corinne includes such well-known musical comedy artists as Mark Sullivan, Hazel Carlton, Franklin Vail, Henry Carl Lewis, Lillie May White, Osborn Clemson, Anna Mortland, Stephen Stott, Adele Irish and Pearl Revare, together with a comely chorus of singing and dancing girls. The locale of the play affords ample opportunity for a lavish and brilliant production and the one originally provided by Klaw and Erlanger and used in the run of the piece at the Liberty Theatre, New York City, will be shown here intact. Corinne will be followed at the American by a lavish production of Martin V. Merle's powerful love story of early Rome, "The Light Eternal."

Mrs. Warfield

PIANO SCHOOL FOR CHILDREN AND BEGINNERS

Telephone Piedmont 3414 6409 Regent Street, Berkeley

Tuesday and Friday, Ebell Club, Oakland

Another Greenbaum Surprise

Manager Greenbaum anticipates scoring another big hit when he introduces Mme. Frieda Langendorff, the contralto, on Thursday night, February 18th, and Sunday afternoon, the 21st. Greenbaum has certainly furnished some surprises, like Blanche Arral and Katharine Goodson, and he expects to give us his third "find" this season. Langendorff has a big reputation abroad, but as she has been on the stage only seven years, it is natural that her fame should not have reached here. After her appearance at the St. Francis Musical Art Society's affair on the 17th, Manager Greenbaum predicts that things will be different. Recitals by mezzos and contraltos are somewhat rare, like those by tenors, but we are promised some works from Tchaikowsky never before heard in this city. Miss Flora Karp-Heilbron, a pianist from Vienna, will also make her debut here on these occasions. Fred Maurer has been secured as Langendorff's accompanist.

Great Bill at the Orpheum

The program at the Orpheum for the week beginning this Sunday matinee, it is said, will reach the highest possible standard of vaudeville. Six out of the eight acts to be presented will be entirely new and every one of them will be worthy of headline honors. Johnnie McVeigh and his College Girls will present an act called An In-

LOUISE LANGDON

Who will appear with Frank Byron in "The Dude Detective" next week at the Orpheum.

VAN NESS THEATRE

THE WOLF

NEW ALCAZAR THEATRE

THE CRISIS

PRINCESS THEATRE

S. LOVERICH, MANAGER

BANKERS AND BROKERS

ORPHEUM

VALENCIA THEATRE

A CONTENTED WOMAN

AMERICAN THEATRE

LOLA FROM BERLIN

YE LIBERTY PLAYHOUSE

RICHELIEU

The Dutch Comedians

Kolb and Dill continue to pack the Princess Theatre at every performance. In their latest production, "Bankers and Brokers," they maintain their hold on popular favor. They are admirably supported by Gilda Leller and an excellent company. Next week will positively be the last of "Bankers and Brokers." It will be presented Monday evening, February 9th, by "Lonesome Town," which will be given with the complete production used by the favorite comedians in New York.

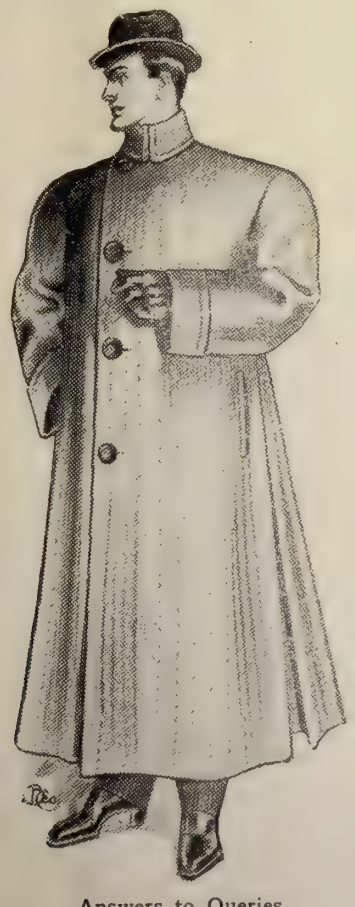
In the Limelight

MACKENZIE GORDON

The Well-Dressed Man

What to Wear, When and Where

Written exclusively for Town Talk by J. M. JACOBI



For the benefit of those men who have neither the time nor inclination to study the art of Dressing correctly, we will publish a series of weekly Fashion Chats.

We will also start a query column, in which the reader may ask questions pertaining to dress. Such questions will be answered in the following issue.

"CHIN OR PROTECTOR COAT"

This overgarment of which you will find an illustration below is without doubt the newest and handsomest garment in the overcoat line designed in years. It combines the double breasted oversack, the ulster or storm coat, the rain or traveling coat all "in one." It can be worn as a Dress overcoat or auto coat. If worn as dress overcoat it does away with the reefer and protects your linen from becoming damp or soiled.

The innovation of having either an inverted pleat or strap at side gives one ease and comfort on either alighting or leaving a car as well as in walking. The collar on this coat produces a military effect. The fabrics used in this garment should all be rainproofed and are, in good garments of Scotch or English textures.

Answers to Queries

A. S. In answer to what is the correct cut for full dress vest—the "V" or "U" shape. The "V" and half "U" shape divide the honors, about even, but owing to the difficulty of making a "V' shape fit perfectly, the half "V" shape is preferable.

Mr. I. L. J. In answer to your question, "Does a Tuxedo tie have to match the fancy waist coat exactly?" While it is good style to have tie match the waist coat, if the waist coat be light grey, a tie about 10 shades darker would present a prettier contrast.

Dr. Louis D. Mead has opened offices at 626-627 Butler Building, Union Square.

LARGEST COLLECTION ON THE COAST

DIAMONDS AND GEMS

BALDWIN JEWELRY CO.

1261 VAN NESS AVENUE AT SUTTER

IDEAL FARMS

"CERTIFIED MILK"

The most perfect product of the modern dairy

Certified to by the Medical Commission of the San Francisco County Medical Society

DISTRIBUTED BY

GUADALOUPE DAIRY CO. Phone Market 2590

STANDARD MILK CO. Phone Market 226

When you have a choice, take the best. For purity of design, harmony of color and quality, there can be no better wall paper made than that shown by

TAYLOR & SINCLAIR CO.

INTERIOR DECORATORS BUSH AT VAN NESS

Odd Things in the World

In Norway there is a law which forbids any one from cutting down a tree unless he plants three saplings in its place.

In the village of Waddeston, Buckinghamshire, England, on any morning or evening of the year a person may claim a drink of new milk from a cow especially kept for the refreshment of wayfarers. The animal is known as the "alms cow," and if she dies, another must be supplied by the parish.

Amongst Laplanders a priest always performs the marriage ceremony if such an official is available, but if circumstances prevent the orthodox ritual the father of the bride strikes a spark with flint and steel and pronounces the young couple duly wedded. Upon the death of either, the flint and steel are buried with the body, that the departed may have the means to make a fire and keep warm while on the long journey.

A striking feature of the Spanish royal wedding processions is the empty black coach of Juana-la Loca, the historic queen who refusing to believe that her husband was dead, watched for weary weeks beside his coffin awaiting his awakening. The gloomy state coach is of course never occupied but is a symbolic reminder to the new queen of the reverential fidelity which tradition demands of her.

The ancient civic ceremony of throwing the dart is carried out every third year in Cork Harbor, the only place where the ceremonial survives. Proceeding to the mouth of the harbor the Lord Mayor casts a silver dart into the sea, and as he does so proclaims his jurisdiction as admiral of the port over the harbor and all its inlets and creeks. The naval authorities look on with unconcern for the custom long ago lost any significance. Throwing the dart is now only an occasion for a civic outing.

According to a curious old custom still prevalent in Brittany, immediately after the priest has pronounced the binding words the groom strikes his wife in the face, saying: "This is how you will fare if you make me angry," and then kissing her he says: "This is how you will fare if you treat me well."

In Holland births, marriages and deaths are made known by a "windmill language." When a Dutch miller marries he stops his mill with the arms in a slanting position and the sails unfurled. His friends and guests frequently do likewise in token that they are assisting with their presence on the occasion. A birth is announced by stopping the mill with the arms at a more acute angle than for a wedding and with only the two upper sails unfurled. When a miller dies the wheel is turned until the arms form an upright cross. All the sails are furled and they are left in this position until after the funeral.

In the old Devonshire town of Honiton the citizens are immune from arrest until sundown of one day, for, while the horse fair is in progress the arm of the law is powerless. It is a continuation of a quaint and picturesque ceremonial which has been handed down since the time of Henry III. When the horse fair begins, the town crier, in the gorgeous dress of an eighteenth century beadle, appears carrying a pole, at the end of which is a large gilt glove decked with flowers. Having rung his handbell three times, the crier, in his three-cornered hat, announces: "Oyez, oyez, oyez! the fair has begun; the glove is up; no man can be arrested till the glove is down. God save the king." Each sentence is chorused by the children and at the conclusion of the proclamation they scramble for nuts. At sunset the glove is taken down and the laws restored.

MRS. C. C. CLAY'S THOMAS LIMOUSINE ON THE DRIVEWAY OF HER FRUITVALE HOME, "LEVEL LEA."
Miss Alice Albright at the wheel with Miss Madeline Clay and Mr. Fred Farnham in the rear seat.

Auto Notes

Following the absorption of the Garford motor company of New York by the Studebaker automobile company has come the absorption of the Metropolitan motor car company of Cleveland, Ohio. The Studebaker company will use the entire garage of the company which it has absorbed and besides carrying a complete line of the Studebaker gasoline cars will have the Studebaker electrics and a line of Studebaker E-M-F "30" cars.

Mr. Carl Christensen, the Buick agent in Oakland, is busy demonstrating to prospective buyers the new '09 Buick White Streak with double tourabout seats on the back. He took delivery of this car from the Howard Automobile Company on Monday last.

Mrs. Don Rey of Galt arrived in this city Monday from Paso Robles, somewhat the worse for mud and rain, but triumphant, for she had been warned not to attempt the trip in her automobile. With the lady, were her husband, two sisters and W. W. Bottimore. Still disregarding warnings, the party left Tuesday for Galt in the Chalmers-Detroit which has already given them such good service, and for which they proudly boast a 3,700 mileage on a little over 200 gallons of gasoline, with Diamond Tires. Mrs. Don Rey has owned the car about five months and drives it most of the time herself. On this trip, however, Mr. Bottimore was at the wheel, having driven from Galt to Paso Robles. He reports having lent assistance to two fellow motorists by pulling their cars out of difficulty notwithstanding that two other cars were obliged to have the assistance of horses.

One of the most striking exhibits at the big automobile show in New York City is a green Studebaker tourabout of the 1909 model, according to an account of the automobile show which is nearing its close in the eastern metropolis. The tourabout is shown in connection with several other Studebaker cars at the Madison Square Garden exhibition. The Studebaker usual attention to detail is manifested in the extreme care shown in the painting and upholstering of the cars on display. According to a letter received yesterday by manager John H. Eagal of the automobile department of the Studebaker Bros.' Company of California, the most casual glance at the models of Studebaker cars exhibited, demonstrates that the automobiles of this make continue to be worth the attention of the discriminating buyer.

An unexpected demand for motor boats is the result of the present floods in the Sacramento and San Joaquin Valleys. S. M. Phillips is among the interior automobile agents who have sent anxious inquiries to the Pioneer Automobile Company for information regarding the best line of motor boats to sell.

According to the Sacramento agent of the Oldsmobile and Chalmers-Detroit cars, the factory that would turn out an automobile with a motor boat attachment would be a big success in Sacramento Valley. "I do not have any trouble demonstrating with my Oldsmobile, when the water is only up to the top of the hood, but when the tonneau resembles a bath tub it is about time to have a motor boat attachment," says the hustling capital city agent.

The chief of police of St. Louis, the captain of detectives and members of both the police and detective forces of the Missouri metropolis have expressed themselves as highly pleased with a Studebaker automobile patrol which they have been using for the past several weeks. The Studebaker car was bought with a special appropriation and when put to service in St. Louis was not only an innovation, according to newspaper reports but demonstrated that its use is highly preferable to the horse drawn vehicle. The Studebaker patrol automobile is built on standard chassis with standard battery equipment. Heavy wire netting encloses the entire section in which the prisoner is carried with the exception of the back. Storm curtains are provided to entirely enclose the passenger section during inclement weather. Two seats run lengthwise in the back section of the patrol, one on each side and a padded back rest also runs the full length of the seats.

Mr. Ed. Christensen of the firm of Sudden & Christensen took delivery of another Buick yesterday. This is his third car of this make. His latest purchase is an '09 Buick White Streak fitted with double tourabout seats on the rear. He intends using this car as a business runabout and will continue to use his Buick 40 as a pleasure car.

The Annual Automobile Show in New York is a greater success this year than ever, according to E. P. Brinegar of the Pioneer Automobile Company, one of the local representatives who is at present in the eastern metropolis. The show is creating more interest and is drawing larger crowds than in past seasons. In his communication to Calvin C. Eib, the representative of the Thomas, Oldsmobile and Chalmers-Detroit cars says: "Madison Square Garden is crowded. There are more different makes and models of machines in the show than ever before. While there are a great many of the high priced cars shown, probably the sensations of the exhibition are the new moderate priced motor cars, such as the Chalmers-Detroit and Oldsmobile. The 30 horsepower Chalmers-Detroit which is being shown in several different models is attracting a great deal of interest. The main reason for this is the short coupled body, short hood and general foreign appearance of the Detroit cars. In fact, this type of machine seems to predominate in the interest of the public. All of the exhibitors are selling their cars and a number are placing agencies all over the country. Judging from the interest in the show this certainly looks to be a banner year for the automobile business." The local dealer will visit the Thomas, Oldsmobile and Chalmers-Detroit factories before returning

TRY MURINE EYE REMEDY
For Red, Weak, Weary, Watery Eyes.
Murine Doesn't Smart—It Soothes Eye Pain.
Try Murine For Your Eyes.

To be the owner of a Studebaker automobile is positive proof that you are familiar with the trend of opinion in the selection of a car. Our display of machines is the most comprehensive on the Pacific Coast. It is an auto show in itself. Demonstrations at your convenience in any of our many types of automobiles. We can make immediate deliveries upon your acceptance of a car.

Fremont at Mission

Studebaker

Phone Douglas 3000

ANNOUNCEMENT

1909

OLDSMOBILE

We beg to announce arrival 1909 Oldsmobile, December 15th

The following complete line of 1909 models will be on exhibition on the above date. Every one of these cars is representative of the factory that makes it:

Model X Special Runabout	$2000
Model D Palace Touring Car	2750
Model D Toy Tonneau	2750
Model DR Flying Roadster	2750
Model DR Detachable Tonneau	2750
Model Z Touring Car, 6-Cylinder	4200
Model Z Runabout, 6-Cylinder	4200

Besides Limousine and Landaulet Bodies.

The 1909 Oldsmobile contains all that has made the car famous in the past, together with the improvements in keeping with the largest and most extensive factory in the country. Recognized the world over for durability. Investigate.

PIONEER AUTOMOBILE CO.

524 Twentieth St., Oakland 901 Golden Gate Ave., San Francisco

NEW YEAR GREETING

Start 1909 aright. Telephone us about wiring or repairing.

Telephone Douglas 1185 and 1186.

LEVY ELECTRIC CO.

HURRY UP ELECTRICIANS

LEVY ELECTRIC WIRING COMPANY

Electric Trains, Cars, Dynamos, Motors, Batteries, Machinery, Magic Lanterns Moving Pictures, Telegraph and Telephones, Wireless Outfits, X-rays, Etc.

648 Sacramento St. San Francisco 1205 Polk Street

Letters

A Popular Author

A new book by Joseph Conrad is always the best of good news to the appreciative. Mr. Conrad, whose full name is Joseph Conrad Korzeniowski, dropped the surame out of regard for the tongues of his English shipmates. He is a native of Poland and though the incidents of his life have never been shrouded in mystery he is, none the less, the subject of a variety of mythical biographies. Amongst other legends there is one that he was a street waif of Paris and another that he was a newsboy, while a third describes him as a runaway who heard the call of the sea and left home and family secretly. In fact Mr. Conrad had a good education, his father having been the editor of a newspaper in Warsaw. After the death of his parents he was taken in charge by an uncle, and with the full knowledge and consent of his relatives he entered the French navy at the age of sixteen. A change in the law which made only natives of the country eligible to naval service was the cause of his joining the English merchant marine, in which service he learned the perfect command of the language which has earned for him the title of "wizard with words."

Romance of a Christian and a Jew

"The Tether," a powerful romance by Ezra S. Brundo, has for its plot a situation closely approximating that chosen by Mrs. Lowenberg in her "Irresistible Current," but with a culmination the direct opposite. There is far more tragedy in "The Tether" than in Miss Emma Wolf's "Heirs of Yesterday," but the two authors are apparently of the same mind, that a Jew is a Jew not because he professes a certain belief or rejects another, not because he worships according to a certain ritual or observes certain dietary laws or keeps certain anniversaries, but because he has inherited a history of the ages which he can no more abandon than he can change the shape of the earth. David Sphardi, the hero of Mr. Brudno's novel, was a poor Jewish youth engaged in peddling small articles from door to door, when he came under the influence of Helen Truesdale, an artist a few years older than himself. This Miss Truesdale became interested in the boy and began to teach him English, afterwards encouraging him to attend the Boston Latin school unknown to his father, who was violently opposed to the acquirement of learning because a brother of his own, lured by books, had forsaken the ancient faith. But the elder Sphardi was won over out of love for his only son, and later the youth attended Harvard likewise. All this time he was slowly but surely drifting away from Judaism, though concealing the fact from the old man. In course of time he won a place for himself in literature and likewise, the heart of a Christian girl; that is to say, Mildred Dalton was Christian to the extent of making no claim to be anything else, and David had long since ceased to be a Jew. As far as the young people themselves were concerned true love had a smooth course, but the opposition of the Daltons to a Jew as a husband for Mildred was no greater than that of the elder Sphardi to the idea of his son marrying a Christian. The objection on both sides was purely on the ground of religion. In this juncture Mildred and David determined to elope, confident that forgiveness afterward would be easier to obtain than countenance in advance. A few trivial wayside incidents reflecting on Jews in general were sufficient to change the current of the girl's ideas, and at the eleventh hour she discovered that after all she cared more for her social position and what "they" would say than she did for her lover, so she returned to her father's house and to new conquests. David likewise returned, to find his father death-stricken, and to plunge himself into the heart of work for and with his own people in an agony of remorse and atonement, to become an advocate of the Zionistic movement, and to die a tragic failure, "Strangled in his own tether." Mr. Brudno decides nothing and solves no problem. He has not attempted to do so. He has told a story from which we may each make our own inferences. While David was attending school and college he was accepted by the Truesdales and their associates, people of social position and wealth, on his own merits. No question of religion or race was ever raised. At Harvard he was admitted to a society which systematically excluded other Jews and after leaving college he was still a member of the Truesdale circle. It was not until he became a suitor for Miss Dalton's hand that they showed him any coldness, and we are left to infer that had he read Miss Truesdale rightly, and ignored her slight advantage in years, he would have found a forgotten faith no barrier. Possibly, and perhaps. The bird in the hand never possesses all the charms of the one yet on the wing. It was only when Mildred Dalton was sure of David that she considered the other aspect of the situation, and though her sudden change of heart culminated the tragedy of the story, a looker on at life would have grave doubts that one who could so speedily fall in love would be apt to remain there long. Mr. Brudno has put his finger on the pulse of the Jewish problem, in so far as

THE NATURAL FLAVOR

Of the richest and purest cow's milk is retained in Borden's Peerless Brand Evaporated Milk (unsweetened). It is especially adapted for use either plain or diluted on breakfast fruits or cereals. In coffee and chocolate it is much better than fresh cream. It enriches all milk dishes.

"Those Lustrous Eyes are Murine Eyes"

MURINE EYE REMEDY

A Favorite Toilet Accessory

Has won many Friends as an Aid to the Restoration of Normal Conditions, Healthful Tone and Natural Brilliancy to Eyes that Need Care.

It has proven of great value in the Home as An Eye Tonic for Weak, Red, Inflamed & Itching Eyes & Eyelids.

As An Eye Insurance Tourists, Automobilists and others exposed to Strong Winds, Dust and Reflected Sunlight, which produce Irritation, Granulation, Ulceration and Weak Eyes, will find in Murine a Safe, Soothing Eye Lotion affording "Reliable Relief."

The Finishing Touch

Bewitchingly Costumed
In Costliest Gown,
For the Social Event,
At the South End of Town.

The "Finishing Touch"
To the Toilet is seen
In the Act above Pictured
"Two drops" of Murine.

Try Murine for the "Automobile Eye"

TRUNKS AND SUIT CASES

KOESEL'S TRUNK FACTORY

41 ELLIS STREET, NEAR MARKET

GENERAL REPAIRING Phone Douglas 445

THROUGH TROPIC CLIMES

Atlantic Steamship Lines

New Orleans--New York Service

In connection with the Sunset Route between San Francisco, Los Angeles and New Orleans

Largest American coastwise steamers—elaborately furnished staterooms—electric lighted throughout. Perfect dining service.

First cabin, $35.00; round trip, $60.00
Second cabin, $27.50.
Includes berths and meals en route.

SEE AGENTS

SOUTHERN PACIFIC

we admit it to be a problem, when he makes Sphardi regret that he has an Oriental mind and an Occidental brain, for it is just therein that the kernel of the nut is hidden. One of the most interesting and enlightening chapters of "The Tether" is that devoted to an elucidation of the attitude of the Jews towards each other, the servile adoration of mere wealth and the snobbishness of its worshippers, the cliques and clans who, while denouncing the Christian caste lines yet draw amongst themselves others even more rigid. "The Tether" is not a sweetly pretty romance on which to idle away a spare hour, but it is one to be reckoned with, decidedly one of the most important of the year's issue. Those who are familiar with "The Fugitive," "The White Terror and the Red," and "The Little Conscript" will know better than to look for trivialities from this author. Published by the J. B. Lippincott Co.

A Book For Children

For the little girls under ten, "Barbara and the Five Little Purrs," will prove a welcome gift. The Purrs were five Persian kittens who, with their mother, were the pets of a little girl who romped and played with them and taught them tricks. Elizabeth Lincoln Gould has been wise enough to keep within the limits of credulity, and therefore, when Madame Purr and her babies hold mewing conversations, she leaves them intelligible to each other, but Barbara has to guess at their meanings, as other little girls would. The pussies are so different in character that their antics furnish variety, and the fifty illustrations by Josephine Bruce, together with good print and paper make this a most desirable book, not too elegant to be put into a child's hand nor too ornamental to make comfortable reading. Neither is it "written down" below the point of intelligence. Children's books have been, for years, such abominable twaddle that it is a pleasure to encounter even an occasional one which does not assume that all children are natural imbeciles. This is one of the H. M. Caldwell Co.'s special offerings and the price is likewise a consideration, 75 cents—just about one-half what is asked for an attractive looking book for a young child.

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY REALTY SHOULD NOT BE LEASED

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 4714, N. S. Dept. 10.

In the Matter of the Estate of MICHAEL FLOOD, Deceased.

Upon reading and filing the petition of GEORGE W. LEE, the Administrator of the estate of MICHAEL FLOOD, deceased, praying that he, as such Administrator, be authorized, empowered and directed to lease a portion of that certain building belonging to said estate of MICHAEL FLOOD, deceased, which said premises thereby proposed to be leased are described as follows, to-wit: All of that certain Store, designated and known as No. 753 Polk Street, on the Southwest corner in that certain four story brick building erected and being on the following described proneрty of said estate, which real property is situated, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows, to-wit:

Commencing at a point formed by the intersection of the Westerly line of Polk Street with the Southerly line of Ellis Street; thence running Westerly along the last named line Seventy-seven and Six-twelfths (77 6-12) feet; thence at right angles Southerly and parallel with Polk Street One Hundred and Twenty (120) feet; thence at rights angles Easterly and parallel with Ellis Street Seventy-seven and Six-twelfths (77 6-12) feet; thence at right angles Northerly One Hundred and Twenty (120) feet to the point of commencement.

It is ordered, that all persons interested in said estate appear before the above Court on Monday, the 8th day of February, A. D. 1909, at the hour of 10 o'clock a. m., at the Courtroom of said Court, situate in the Grant Building, S. E. corner of 7th and Market Streets, in said City and County, to show cause, if any they can or have, why said premises particularly above described, should not be leased for the purpose of securing for the same the total sum of Fifteen Hundred and Sixty ($1560.00) Dollars divided into monthly payments, for the term of two years.

For all further particulars reference is hereby made to the petition on file herein.

It is further ordered, that a copy of this Order be published for at least once a week for two successive weeks in Town Talk, a newspaper of general circulation published in said City and County.

Dated, this 21st day of January, A. D. 1909.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

Endorsed: Filed Jan. 22, 1909. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk. By H. G. BENEDICT, Deputy Clerk.

JEREMIAH V. COFFEY and EDWARD I. COFFEY,
Attorneys for Administrator, 557 Mills Bldg., San Francisco. 1-30-3

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 7042, New Series. Dept. Nine. Probate.

In the Matter of the Estate of GEORGE BASTIAN, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned William Bastian, Executor of the last will and testament of the above named George Bastian, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within four (4) months after the first publication of this notice, (which first publication occurs on the 30th day of January, 1909), to the said William Bastian, executor of the last will and testament of said George Bastian, deceased, at the office of his attorney, John J. Barrett, room 1255 Flood Building, Number 875 Market Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned selects as his place of business in all matters connected with said estate of said George Bastian, deceased.

WILLIAM BASTIAN,
Exesutor of the last will and testament of said George Bastian, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, California, January 30th, 1909.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Attorney for said Executor,
Rooms 1255-1257 Flood Building, San Francisco, Cal. 1-30-5

UNION LUMBER COMPANY

Redwood and Pine Lumber

Railroad Ties, Telegraph Poles, Shingles, Split Shakes, Etc.

CROCKER BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 13833.

MARY HORGAN, a Widow, Plaintiff,
vs.
All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Liens Upon the Real Property Herein Described or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in or lien upon the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, Greeting:

You are are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Mary Horgan, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the Court of the above entitled City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the northerly line of Fulton street, distant thereon one hundred and forty-six (146) feet ten and one-half inches (10½) inches westerly from the intersection of the westerly line of Baker street with the northerly line of Fulton street, and then running thence westerly along the said line of Fulton street twenty-five (25) feet, thence at right angle northerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet and six (6) inches, thence at a right angle easterly twenty-five (25) feet, and thence at a right angle southerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet and six (6) inches to the northerly line of Fulton street and point of commencement. Being Block No. 592, a portion of the Western Addition.

You are hereby notified that unless you appear and answer the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to wit: For a judgment of said Court as follows:

1st. Ascertaining and determining all estate, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said real property and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, or whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description.

2nd. Establishing the title of plaintiff to said real property and determining all adverse claims thereto, and adjudging that plaintiff is the owner in severalty and in fee simple absolute of said real property and every part thereof.

3rd. For such other and further relief as to the Court may seem proper and for costs of suit.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 14th day of January, A. D. 1909.

(Seal)

H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By T. C. RYAN, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 23d day of January, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon said real property adverse to plaintiff: The Hibernia Savings and Loan Society, whose address is on the Northwest corner of Jones and McAllister streets, San Francisco, California.

JOSEPH H. TAM, Attorney for Plaintiff,
511 Balboa Building, San Francisco, Cal. 1-23-10

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 13834.

DENNIS J. HORGAN, Plaintiff,
vs.
All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Lien Upon the Real Property Herein Described or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in or lien upon the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, Greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Dennis J. Horgan, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Scott street, distant thereon northerly from the northerly line of Haight street one hundred and thirteen (113) feet and six (6) inches; thence running northerly along said easterly line of Scott street twenty-four (24) feet; thence at right angles easterly one hundred and ten (110) feet; thence at right angles southerly twenty-four (24) feet, and thence at right angles westerly one hundred and ten (110) feet to the easterly line of Scott street and the point of commencement. Being a part of the Western Addition Block number four hundred and thirty-nine (439), and also right of way over passage extending the length of the above described property and a width of those three (3) feet six (6) inches on the South of the same.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to wit: For a judgment of said Court as follows:

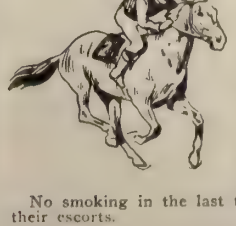
1st. Ascertaining and determining all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said real property and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, or whether the same consists of mortgages or liens of any description.

2nd. Establishing the title of plaintiff to said real property and determining all adverse claims thereto, and adjudging that plaintiff is the owner in severalty and in fee simple absolute of said real property and every part thereof.

3rd. For such other and further relief as to the Court may seem proper and for costs of suit.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 14th day of January, A. D. 1909.

(Seal)



H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By T. C. RYAN, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 23d day of January, 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in or lien upon said property adverse to plaintiff: The German Savings and Loan Society, whose address is No. 526 California street, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

JOSEPH H. TAM, Attorney for Plaintiff,
511 Balboa Building, San Francisco, Cal. 1-23-10

RACING

NEW CALIFORNIA JOCKEY CLUB

OAKLAND RACE TRACK

Six races each week day, rain or shine.
First Race at 1:40 p. m.

For special trains stopping at the track, take Southern Pacific Ferry, foot of Market street; leave at 12 M.; thereafter every twenty minutes until 1:40 P. M.

No smoking in the last two cars, which are reserved for ladies and their escorts.

PERCY W. TREAT, Sec'y. THOS. H. WILLIAMS, Pres.

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 20725.

ADELE RAYNAL, Plaintiff,
vs.
HENRI RAYNAL, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Henri Raynal, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County, or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's wilfull desertion, also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 8th day of January, A. D. 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By W. R. CASTAGNETTO, Deputy Clerk.

P. A. BERGEROT, Esq., 110 Sutter Street, San Francisco, Cal.,
Attorney for Plaintiff. 1-16-10

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY SALE OF REAL ESTATE SHOULD NOT BE MADE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 4823, N. S. Dept. 10 Probate.

In the Matter of the Estate of OLOF NELSON, Deceased.

JOSEPH A. STULZ, Administrator of the Estate of OLOF NELSON, Deceased, having presented his Petition herein, duly verified, praying for an Order of the Sale of the whole of the real estate of the said decedent, or so much or such parts thereof as said Court shall judge necessary or beneficial for the reasons and purposes in said Petition mentioned and set forth:

And said Petition having been filed, it is now ordered by said Court that all persons interested in the Estate of said deceased be, and they are hereby directed to appear before said Court on Thursday, the 11th day of February, 1909, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Courtroom of Department No. 10, of said Superior Court in the Grant Building on the Southeast corner of Market and Seventh Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to show cause, if any they have, why an order should not be granted authorizing and directing said Administrator to sell the whole or so much of the real estate of said decedent as may be necessary.

It is further ordered that a copy of this Order be published at least once a week for four successive weeks in the Town Talk, a newspaper printed and published in the said City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

Dated, at San Francisco, this 4th day of January, 1909.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

EDWARD J. LYNCH, Attorney for Administrator,
Mills Building, San Francisco, Cal.

Endorsed: Filed Jan. 5, 1909. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk. By H. G. BENEDICT, Deputy Clerk. 1-9-5

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Action No. 13512.

MARY A. DALY, Plaintiff,
vs.
All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, Defendants, Greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of MARY A. DALY, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above-entitled Court and County, within three (3) months after the first publication of this SUMMONS, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situated, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

Parcel Number One. Commencing at a point on the Westerly line of Devisadero Street, distant thereon sixty-three (63) feet nine (9) inches Southerly from the Southerly line of Jackson Street; running thence Southerly along said Westerly line of Devisadero Street twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet six (6) inches; thence at right angles Northerly twenty-five feet (25) feet, and thence at right angles Easterly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet six (6) inches to the point of commencement. Being a portion of Western Addition Block Number 497.

Parcel Number Two. Commencing at a point on the Northerly line of Clay Street, distant thereon one hundred and ten (110) feet Easterly from the Easterly line of Devisadero Street, and running thence Easterly and along the said Northerly line of Clay Street twenty-eight (28) feet nine (9) inches; thence at right angles northerly one hundred and twenty-seven (127) feet eight and one-quarter (8¼) inches; thence at right angles Westerly twenty-eight (28) feet nine (9) inches; and thence at right angles Southerly one hundred and twenty-seven (127) feet eight and one-quarter (8¼) inches to the Northerly line of Clay Street and the point of commencement. Being a portion of Western Addition Block Number 463.

Parcel Number Three. Commencing at the Southeasterly corner of Bush and Powell Streets; running thence Easterly along the Southerly line of Bush Street forty-five (45) feet; thence at right angles Southerly sixty-seven (67) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Westerly forty-five (45) feet to the Easterly line of Powell Street; and thence Northerly along said Easterly line of Powell Street sixty-seven (67) feet and six (6) inches to the point of commencement. Being a portion of Fifty Vara Lot Number 314.

Parcel Number Four. Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Folsom Street, distant thereon one hundred and ninety (190) feet Southerly from the Southerly line of Precita Place; running thence Southerly and along said Easterly line of Folsom Street twenty-seven (27) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Easterly one hundred and ten (110) feet; thence at right angles Northerly twenty-seven (27) feet and six (6) inches; and thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and ten (110) feet to the Easterly line of Folsom Street, and the point of commencement. Being Lot Number 32, as per Kingston's Map of Lots Numbers 148 to 153, Precita Valley Lands, filed in the office of the County Recorder of the City and County of San Francisco, Jan. [illegible], and recorded in Map Book F and F of Maps, at page 29.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit:

That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute; that her title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 31st day of December, A. D. 1908.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this Summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 9th day of January, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiff: A. TURTURICI and E. TURTURICI, residing at ————————, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, have and claim an interest in Parcel Number Four of the land in said Complaint and hereinabove described, under a certain Agreement of Sale.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Attorney for Plaintiff, Rooms 1255-1257 Flood Bldg., 870 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal 1-9-10

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Action No. 13477.

EDWARD FRANCIS McKITTRICK, Plaintiff,
vs.
All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Lien Upon the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, Defendants, Greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Edward Francis McKittrick, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above-entitled Court and county, within three (3) months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Folsom Street, distant thereon one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet Northerly from the Northerly line of Twenty-second (22nd)• Street and running thence Northerly along said line of Folsom Street twenty-four (24) feet; thence at a right angle Easterly one hundred and twenty-two (122) feet and six (6) inches; thence at a right angle Southerly twenty-four (24) feet and thence at a right angle Westerly one hundred and twenty-two (122) feet and six (6) inches to the said Easterly line of Folsom Street and point of commencement.

Being a portion of Mission Block Number 54.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit:

That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute; that his title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description, that plaintiff recover his costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 29th day of December, A. D. 1908.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By M. P. BRUTEN, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 9th day of January, 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiff: None.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Attorney for Plaintiff, Rooms 1255-57 Flood Bldg., 870 Market Street, San Francisco. 1-9-10

SUMMONS

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
In and for the City and County of San Francisco. Action No. 12782.

ERNESTINE KRELING and JAMES F. LEAHY, Plaintiffs,
vs.
All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Lien Upon the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants, Greetings:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the Complaint of Ernestine Kreling and James F. Leahy, Plaintiffs, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at the Southwesterly corner of Golden Gate Avenue and Steiner Street; running thence Westerly along the Southerly line of Golden Gate Avenue One Hundred and Thirty-seven (137) feet and Six (6) inches; thence at right angles Southerly One Hundred (100) feet; thence at right angles Easterly One Hundred and Thirty-seven (137) feet and Six (6) inches to the Westerly line of Steiner Street and thence at right angles Northerly along said line of Steiner Street One Hundred (100) feet to the point of commencement.

Being a portion of Western Addition Block Number Three Hundred and Eighty-one (381).

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiffs will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit, for a judgment of said Court as follows:

1st. Ascertaining and determining all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said real property and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, or whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description.

nd. Establishing the title of plaintiffs and of each of them to said real property and determining all adverse claims thereto, and adjudging that each of said plaintiffs is the owner in fee simple absolute of an undivided one-half of the said real property and every part thereof.

3rd. For such other and further relief as to the Court may seem proper, and for costs of suit.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 27th day of November, 1908.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk
By T. C. RYAN, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 12th day of December, A. D. 1908.

The following persons are said to claim some interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiffs, to-wit:

French Savings Bank, a corporation, whose address is No. 108 Sutter Street, San Francisco, California.

CAMPBELL, METSON, DREW, OATMAN & MACKENZIE,
Attyns. for Plaintiffs, Balboa Bldg., 595 Market St., S. F. 12-12-10

Following on the Appointment by Royal Warrant to His Majesty last month, we notice Messrs. Mackie & Coy's "White Horse Cellar" Whisky has just been awarded the Gold Medal for quality at the Franco-British Exhibition.

Louis Crepaux

(Member of Paris Grand Opera)

Has removed to his new studio,

Delbert Block, 943 Van Ness avenue, cor. O'Farrell.

Reception hours: 11:30 to 12, and 3 to 4, except Wednesdays. Wednesdays in Oakland, 1154 Brush street.

Emil Steinegger

PIANOFORTE PLAYING

924 Grove St (above Fillmore), San Francisco.

For appointments phone Merritt 2845

Thursdays, 2701 Regent St., Berkeley

Mackenzie Gordon

TENOR

TEACHER OF SINGING { in all its branches, from the rudiments of tone formation to the highest finish and Completion of Public Singing.

Oratorio, Opera and Concert

By appointment only Phone Franklin 3594

Studio: 1350 FRANKLIN ST.

Louis H. Eaton

Organist and Director of the Music Trinity Church

Teacher of

PIANO, ORGAN, SINGING

1678 Broadway Phone Franklin 2244

Donald Maclean

SINGING—Pupil Seagle and De Rezske

Henri Etlin

PIANO—First Prize Paris Conservatoire

STUDIO, 1613 GREEN ST. Phone, Franklin 3153

Samuel M. Shortridge

ATTORNEY AT LAW

CHRONICLE BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO

Tel. Douglas 2176

Robert B. McMillan

ATTORNEY AT LAW

Has removed his Law Offices to the

CHRONICLE BUILDING, Fifth Floor

Phone Kearny 5969 Rooms 517-518

Knight & Heggerty

ATTORNEYS AT LAW and

PROCTORS IN ADMIRALTY

MERCHANTS EXCHANGE BLDG., S. F.

Rooms 626 and 630

DOWN TOWN NOW

CALIFORNIA OPTICAL CO. are now in their new store, 181 Post St., near Grant Ave. The Fillmore Street store is closed.

PATRICK & CO

RUBBER STAMPS

STENCILS, SEALS, SIGNS & ETC.

126 BUSH ST. SAN FRANCISCO

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Dept. 10—No. 20497.

ANNA D. ROLLER, Plaintiff,

vs.

ALVA AARON and M. CLIFFORD AARON, Defendants.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Alva Aaron and M. Clifford Aaron, Defendants.

You are hereby directed to appear and answer the complaint in an action entitled as above brought against you in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, within ten days after the service on you of this summons—if served within this City and County; or within thirty days if served elsewhere.

And you are hereby notified that unless you appear and answer as above required, the said plaintiff will take judgment for any money or damages demanded in the complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, this 23rd day of December, A. D. 1908.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

By L. J. WELCH, Deputy Clerk.

TOBIN & TOBIN, Attorneys for Plaintiff. 1-16-10

SUMMONS.

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

GUSTAVE WEDELSTAEDT, Plaintiff

vs.

ELIZABETH WEDELSTAEDT, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Elizabeth Wedelstaedt, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above name plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed herein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's desertion and extreme cruelty; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the Complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 12th day of November, A. D. 1908.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

By MILTON M. DAVIS, Deputy Clerk.

C. F. ADAMS, Attorney for Plaintiff,
378 Monadnock Bldg., S. F. 12-12-10

HENRY P. TRICOU

NOTARY PUBLIC

508 CALIFORNIA STREET Phone Kearny 711

Residence, 852 Grove St. Phone Page 55

BONESTELL & CO.

PAPER

The paper used in printing this magazine is our Albion Book

California's Leading Paper House

116 to 124 FIRST ST. SAN FRANCISCO

Phone Kearny 1272

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

No. 7022, Dept. 10.

Estate of ADOLPHE ROOS, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, executors of the last will and testament of Adolphe Roos, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said executors at Heller, Powers & Ehrman, 713 Union Trust Building, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, which said office the undersigned select as their place of business in all matters connected with said estate of Adolphe Roos, deceased.

GEORGE H. ROOS,
LEON L. ROOS,

Executors of the Last Will and Testament of Adolphe Roos, Deceased.

Dated: San Francisco, Cal., January 23, 1909.

HELLER, POWERS & EHRMAN,
Attorneys for Executors,
Union Trust Bldg., San Francisco. 1-23-5

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of MINNIE SINGER, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Administrators, with Will annexed, of the estate of MINNIE SINGER, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten (10) months after the first publication of this notice to the said Administrators, with Will annexed, at the law office of A. Comte, Jr., No. 333 Kearny Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned selects as their place of business in all matters connected with said estate of Minnie Singer, deceased.

CHARLES HUFSCHMIDT,
HENRY HUFSCHMIDT,
GEORGE F. HUFSCHMIDT,

Administrators with the Will annexed of the estate of Minnie Singer, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, January 16, 1909.

A. COMTE, Jr., 333 Kearny St., S. F.,
Atty. for Administrators with Will Annexed. 1-16-5

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., San Francisco, Cal.

Guaranteed Capital	$ 1,200,000.00
Capital actually paid up in cash	$ 1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds	$ 1,479,043.00
Deposits December 31, 1908	$35,079,498.53
Total Assets	$37,661,836.70

Remittance may be made by Draft, Post Office, or Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Money Orders, or coin by Express.

Office Hours: 10 o'clock a. m. to 3 o'clock p. m., except Saturdays to 12 o'clock m. and Saturday evenings from 7 o'clock p. m. to 8 o'clock p. m. for receipt of deposits only.

OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohte; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourny; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.

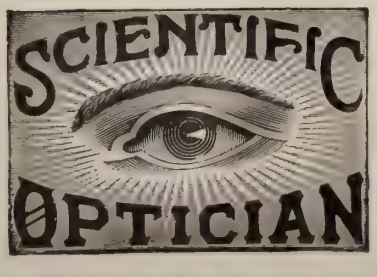
BOARD OF DIRECTORS—N. Ohlandt, Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohte; Ign. Steinhardt, I. N. Walter, J. W. Van Bergen, F. Tillmann, Jr., E. T. Kruse and W. S. Goodfellow.

MISSION BRANCH, 2572 Mission Street, between 21st and 22nd Street. For receipt and payment of Deposits only. C. W. Heyer, Manager.

MEN

Afflicted with any private ailment consult the United Physicians and Surgeons. Strictly reliable specialists in Genito-Urinary, Blood and Skin diseases, and all reflex ailments of men. Prompt, efficient services; fees moderate; consultation free and confidential. Write or call. Hours 9 a. m. to 9 p. m. Sundays, 9 to 2.

A word to the wise is sufficient.



United Physicians and Surgeons

517 Twenty-third St., Oakland

Near Telegraph Avenue.

10 Third Street, San Francisco

Next to Call Building

MAYERLE'S EYE WATER, by mail 65c

Orders for Eye Glasses, Opera Glasses, Lorgnettes, sent by mail, $5, $10, $15.

DANGER SIGNALS

Painful, Sore, Red, Inflamed, Burning, Smarting, Itching, Scratching, Twitching, and Gluey Eyes, Heavy or Crusty Eyelids, Floating Spots, Cloudiness of Vision, Cross Eyes, Watery or Discharging Eyes, feeling like sand in the Eyes, Heavy and Crusty Eyelids are often Considered Dangerous Signals.

NEGLECTED EYESIGHT AFFECTS THE BRAIN

Mayerle's Glasses rest and strengthen the eyes and preserve the sight.

GEORGE MAYERLE

Graduate German Expert Optician, charter member American Association of Opticians and Vice-President Optical Specialist Association of America, 1149 Golden Gate Ave., between Webster and Buchanan sts. Phone Park 3153, San Francisco.

Diamond
WRAPPED TREAD TIRES

The Proof of the Pudding is in the Eating---

J. A. Bunting, Jr., Oakland.—"Over 15,000 miles on one of your tires certainly speaks volumes for the durability of the Diamond."

W. W. Robinson, Los Angeles.—"Have used your tires on my car 5476 miles without puncture. Do not feel that I shall ever have any tire trouble.

Geo. A. Forderer, San Francisco.—"Diamond tires covered 11,200 miles in San Francisco with the original Syracuse air in them.

C. A. Dundas, Riverside.—"One set of Diamond Tires on my car has covered 12,000 miles in state and local rent service. Can't praise them too much."

Letters like these coming in constantly

Its Just the Same---North, East, South or West---Everything Verifies Our Claim

Diamond
TIRES ARE THE BEST

THE DIAMOND RUBBER COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO LOS ANGELES

Vol. XVII. No. 858. SAN FRANCISCO, FEBRUARY 6, 1909. PRICE, 10 CENTS

SAN FRANCISCO
TOWN TALK

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

YOUR RELIGION

may not call for a dish of oatmeal porridge every morning, but if it does your stomach will call for because it is the only steam-cooked oatmeal---the only oatmeal that presents all the rich nutriment in the oats in a digestible and palatable form---the oatmeal that is all oatmeal---no hulls, no dirt, no grit. Ready for the table after fifteen minutes cooking. Of course, it costs a few cents more than ordinary raw rolled oats, but you'll be glad to pay it. Always ask the grocer for H-O.

H-O

Your Grocer Sells It

Made by the H-O Mills, Buffalo, N. Y.
The Famous Mills That Make Good Things to Eat

Leading Hotels and Resorts

HOTEL ST. FRANCIS
UNION SQUARE

The Gynasium and Baths are open in the new wing.

Turkish, Russian and Electric Light Baths. Hydro-therapeutic and massage departments.

The most modern establishment of this character in the world.

Under the management of JAMES WOODS

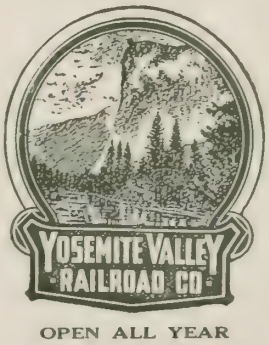
HOTEL DEL MONTE

Near quaint old Monterey---125 miles from San Francisco.



Uniting all the pleasures of outdoor life under ideal conditions with the conveniences and luxuries of the best metropolitan hotels.

For rates, reservations, etc., address H. R. WARNER, Manager.

HOTEL DEL CORONADO
CORONADO, CAL.

Coronado is essentially an Hotel of quiet elegance. It has the most equable climate of which any knowledge exists. Hotel Del Coronado has unique facilities for out-of-door recreation. Polo, golf, tennis, boating, fishing and motoring on good roads. Rates $4 per day upward. For special information apply to MORGAN ROSS, Manager, Coronado, or H. F. NORCROSS, representative, 334 S. Spring St., Los Angeles.

OPEN ALL YEAR
WINTER AND SUMMER

YOSEMITE VALLEY
NOW REACHED BY RAIL

Why not see Yosemite this Winter. It is a magnificent sight. First class hotel service at the Park Line and in the Valley. A delightful place to spend a few days or weeks. People returning pronounce it beyond description. For further particulars see agent of Southern Pacific or Santa Fe, or address O. W. LEHMER, Traffic Manager, Y. V. R. R., Merced, Cal.

FAIRMONT HOTEL

The social center of a most sociable city

Management of PALACE HOTEL COMPANY

BYRON
HOT SPRINGS HOTEL

One of the world's most curative springs.

One of America's most comfortable and refined hostelries.

See Southern Pacific information bureau, James Flood Building, or any Southern Pacific agent or Peck-Judah Co., 789 Market street, or address Manager at hotel.

HOTEL CARLTON
Telegraph Avenue at Durant
BERKELEY

A FIRST-CLASS TRANSIENT AND FAMILY HOTEL

MRS. W. F. MORRIS, Proprietor
formerly of Hotel Cecil, 960 Bush Street, San Francisco

Hotel Westminster
Los Angeles, Cal.
Fourth and Main Sts.

American Plan, Reopened

Rates per Day $2.50 Rooms without Bath

Rooms with Bath $3.00, $3.50 and $4.00

European Plan

$1.00 per day and up, with bath $1.50 and up

F. O. JOHNSON - - Proprietor

LEVY'S CAFE
Third and Main Streets, Los Angeles, Cal.

Much the Best Place to Get Fine Things to Eat and Listen to Choice Music at Popular Prices.

TOWN TALK

THE PACIFIC WEEKLY

Vol. XVII. San Francisco, F bruary 6, 1909. No. 858

MISS HELEN GRANTLEY

Who will appear in Israel Zangwill's dramatic episode "The Never Never Land" next week at the Orpheum.

TOWN TALK

Published Weekly by
TOWN TALK PUBLISHING COMPANY
Theodore F. Bonnet.....Editor
Ralph A. Grover.....Manager
88 First St., cor. Mission, San Francisco. Telephone Douglas 2612.

SUBSCRIPTION: One Year, in advance, $4.00, six months, $2.25, three months, $1.50, single copies 10 cents. Foreign subscriptions (countries in Postal Union), $8.00 per year. For sale by all Newsdealers.

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter.

The Trade in San Francisco supplied direct by us. Outside of San Francisco by the San Francisco News Co.

For foreign and local advertising rates address 88 First Street, San Francisco.

Los Angeles office, 734 Central Building.

We decline to publish, or enter into correspondence as to rejected communications, and to this rule we can make no exception. Manuscripts not acknowledged within four weeks are rejected.

Frightened by a Specter

California's attitude in this matter of legislation to regulate Japanese encroachment upon social and industrial conditions within the jurisdiction of the law-making power, is humiliating in the extreme. While it is admitted that the legislature is competent to pass laws restricting the privileges of residents of the State, citizens and all others, it is threatened that if our legislature enacts certain laws restrictive of privileges now enjoyed by the Japanese dire consequences will be visited upon us. From Washington comes the demand that we shall enact no laws which discriminate against Japanese residents, coupled with gracious permission to enact laws restrictive of the privileges of all aliens within our borders. Our sovereignty as a State and our legal rights to exercise that sovereignty under the provisions of the Constitution is not denied; but we are told that if we persist in the effort to manage our own affairs in our own way our action will disturb an international status which was established without our consent and without thought of its ultimate effect upon our interests. We are commanded to enact no legislation that will interfere specifically with Japanese aliens, but we are permitted to enact laws that will drive millions of alien capital out of the State. In theory this method of sitting on both horns of the dilemma is idiotic; in practice it would be ruinous. And in the meantime, the disposition of our legislature to yield its prerogatives while sacrificing the sovereign powers of the State, is cowardly; for those who pursue this timorous policy know that the threats are mere bluffs and that if the statesmen in Washington who are writhing in the throes of a conniption fit induced by contemplation of our proposed "drastic" legislation, are really as frightened as they say they are, it is a fright engendered by shadows conjured from their own consciousness.

The Encroachments of the Japanese

The Japanese question is becoming a very serious one to the people of this State, far more serious than the one which grew out of Chinese immigration. At first it was thought that the question concerned only the labor interests, and that for protection it was merely necessary to restrict the immigration of Japanese wage earners, but the fact is that we have more reason to dread an influx of capital than of labor. The influence of Japanese capital is already being felt in mercantile and agricultural circles. The Japanese farmer is beginning to crowd out the white farmer. Some of the finest of the small farms in the Sacramento Valley are now owned by Japanese, and small Japanese merchants are cutting down the profits of white merchants. It is gradually dawning upon us that even capital may be rendered obnoxious by reason of its complexion. While there is yet much to be done toward the development of the resources of this State it is surely not desirable that a very large proportion of those resources should fall into the hands of the Japanese. Kipling has described the Russian as a delightful person till he tucks his shirt in. So is the Japanese a delightful person as long as he wears a kimono. As an Oriental he is charming, like the Russian of Kipling. But when he insists upon being treated as the most westerly of Eastern people instead of the most easterly of all the people of the Far East he not only "becomes a racial anomaly extremely difficult to handle," but he becomes intolerable.

What Would Happen to Japan

It is almost certain that we shall come to blows with Japan over some of the questions constantly arising between the two countries, but there is no immediate danger. Japan is at the present time virtually bankrupt, and it is not likely that the money lenders of London or Berlin would finance Japan for a war with this country. Even if these financiers were inclined to loan the money Japan could offer no substantial security for its repayment. She is already mortgaged to the neck, and of all her national assets only the camphor forests of Formosa remain. A war tax upon the Japanese people would probably be paid with such alacrity as the productive resources of the country would permit, but it would reduce the people to starvation long before the war had assumed proportions of magnitude. Some money might be raised on the Philippines from the bucket shop speculators of the European bourses; for it is the intention of Japan in the event of an outbreak of hostilities with this country to seize the Philippines, thus compelling us to fight her on her own dung hill. This money, however, would not help Japan to any great extent. And in this connection it may be said that the fear of a Japanese invasion of the American mainland is absolutely groundless. To occupy any of the States of the Pacific Coast would require an army of half a million men, and Japan could never transport that number across six thousand miles of ocean; and if she should attempt the foolhardy enterprise she would find a million soldiers in opposition as soon as she landed. Japan is not a fool nation if she is a braggart and a bully. She is well aware that a bankrupt nation with a population of not more than 50,000,000 cannot wage a war with a rich nation whose population is nearly 90,000,000. Japan is also aware that on the instant of a declaration of war on America Russia would throw an army into Manchuria. Russia is only waiting for just such an opportunity. And Japan knows that Russia would wage a war of extermination. There would be no cessation until the Czar's terms of peace were dictated in Tokio. A war with this country would mean the annihilation of Japan. There are wise statesmen in Japan who realize this contingency; and while it may be their policy to bluster and bully and frighten our timid statesmen in Washington, they will pull in their belligerent horns at the first intimation of the American people that they have stood all they intend to stand of these tomfooleries of diplomacy and these noisy Chinese tactics of the Japanese Pistols and Bobadils. All of which is cumulative proof of the humiliating conditions under which California is laboring at this time. We are kowtowing to a phantom—as the Japanese themselves kowtow to the invisible presence of harmless gods in their Shinto temples.

A Tyrant Glimpsed

There is a good deal of talk these days about various matters connected with the criminal law. In the opinion of certain gentlemen of superior intelligence who have banded themselves together for the patriotic purpose of improving our system of government the criminal law abounds in imperfections which may be remedied by extinguishing some of the ancient safeguards of individual liberty and augmenting the prerogatives of our trial judges. In other words these enlightened citizens are of the opinion that we should ignore the teachings of centuries of experience, and retrace our steps to those periods in which life and liberty were rendered precarious by reason of the tyrannical powers vested in the courts. Doubtless they are convinced that human nature has changed; that cruel men who feast on human misery and derive delight from the infliction of punishment are never more to be found on the Bench. Their confidence in human nature is admirable, but it is not the kind of confidence that should be recklessly indulged when the criminal code is being reformed. There may be many imperfections in the criminal code, but progress toward perfection is not to be made by substituting judicial discretion for ancient landmarks. It is discretion that breeds despots. Judges of the type of the hideous Jeffreys, the brutal Saunders and the villainous Scroggs passed away with the despotisms that created them. It is a well known fact that the appetite which is gratified in the criminal courts by infliction of punishment on delinquents is one that grows by what it feeds upon. And perhaps nothing is more strongly conclusive of the tendency toward the development of a cruel nature in a criminal judge than that he should seek a wider discretion than the law allows with a view to increasing his fame by the wholesale eradication of the vices and crimes of society. This suggestion we offer to the zealous reformers of our civic organizations in the earnest hope that it may be seriously pondered, for it is not improbable that their reform measures were recommended to them by an illustrious jurist whose zeal for the purging and purifying of a decadent society being beyond restraint overthrows his judgment, breaks the barriers of his shrinking modesty, blazes in every sentence he utters. It renders him absolutely unconscious of any infirmity for which the ordinary individual might feel the need of forbearance and forgiveness. No judge of sensitive, sympathetic, gentle nature, would wish to have any greater responsibility put upon him in the trial of men accused of crime than he is obliged to assume under our present system. There have been men on the bench who far from relished the measure of responsibility imposed. Even the infamous Jeffreys favored the mitigation of the rights of the British penal code, for it is of record that he, as far back as the seventeenth century, declared it a cruel anomaly that a prisoner was allowed counsel in a case involving a few shillings but not in a case involving life and death. And here we are in the twentieth century being urged to adopt laws which will render counsel for a prisoner negligible. Indeed one of the amendments proposed would bar counsel from examining jurors as to their qualifications. Is it not obvious to the dullest perceptive faculties that if there is a judge craving greater responsibility in criminal cases, wishing to have autocratic power in the selection of jurors; absolute discretion in determining the rules of evidence, and almost complete immunity from review, he may be of the very kind of material out of which the most cruel and bloodiest despots of the bench have been fashioned?

Our Degenerate Jury System

It has been said that trial by jury cannot be corrupted unless the whole body of the people be corrupt. This dictum is grounded in the assumption that jury duty is imposed on all qualified units of the community. Such is the principle of trial by jury, but it is flagrantly violated by the law of this State, and consequently corruption of trial by jury in California is not necessarily conclusive of the corruption of the body of the people. As a matter of fact—in this city at least—trial by jury has become a delusion and a sham. It has been converted into an instrument of injustice and oppression, and so widespread is the knowledge of this fact that we regard it as most singular that the good and zealous citizens who are now recommending measures of reform to the Legislature have given no thought to the lamentable degeneracy of the most sacred of all our institutions; the one that, with all the imperfections that are inseparable from things human, has borne the test of a longer experience and borne it better than any other juridical institution that ever existed among men. If our reformers had given thought to this subject they might have reflected that the failure of trial by jury in California has been due mainly to the circumstance that it has depended rather upon the discretion of juridical officers than upon the automatic operation of a system regulated upon fundamental principles. Under our system the judges of the Superior Court annually put the names of twenty-four hundred men into the jury box, and from that box all juries are drawn until the list, from various causes is exhausted, and then special venires are summoned by the Sheriff. It does not require superior acumen to perceive that this system is not in consonance with the fundamental principle of trial by jury. It vests the Sheriff and judges with powers which they should not have and which they have often abused. The fruit of this system is the professional juror whose name appears in the box every year, who votes to please the judge or some officer of the court knowing that should he fail to do so he would lose his job. In consequence of this system there are many thousands of citizens who are never called upon to do jury duty. Now here is something that clamors for reform, but no judge has been found recommending a salutary amendment. Let us have this matter attended to at once. Let us have a jury list made up every year as in New York from the assessment roll and the great register; a list on which shall appear the name of every elector who pays taxes. Let us provide that those who are exempt under the law from jury duty must claim exemption immediately after the list is made up, and that upon the proper showing their names shall be stricken off by some officer empowered to attend to the purging of the list. Let us provide that no man shall serve on more than

The Hub.
CHAS. KEILUS & CO
EXCLUSIVE
HIGH GRADE CLOTHIERS

No Branch Stores—No Agents.

THE MODERN CLOTHES SHOP WITH MEN'S GARMENTS ONLY IS THE BEST ESTABLISHMENT FOR GOOD DRESSERS TO COME. OUR CLOTHES MUST BE RIGHT BECAUSE, THAT'S ALL WE HAVE TO DEPEND UPON FOR BUSINESS. OUR MAKES ARE NOT "HAWKED" ABOUT IN EVERY CLOTHES SHOP. EVIDENTLY, WE'RE EXCLUSIVE.

This Label The Hub Chas Keilus & Co. San Francisco. Personates Merit.

How do you know when you trade in haberdasher-clothier-tailor-shops who also make clothes to measure but that your order is taken from stock and handed to you and are charged a made-to-order price for them? We make no pretensions to make-to-order. This is an exclusive men's clothes shop, where every garment is ready and in sight. Nothing else here to detract clothes attention.

JEWELERS' BUILDING
Post Street, Near Kearny, San Francisco.

one jury until the entire list shall have been exhausted. Surely if we have learned anything from recent experience it is the possibility of monstrous injustice being done by corrupt judges who will not hesitate to pack juries in the interest of powerful friends who wish to punish their enemies.

The Passion for Atmosphere

It is reported that a celebrated Russian artist is going to paint a portrait of Minnie Maddern Fiske as Rebecca West, and that in order to be properly imbued with the Ibsen atmosphere he is memorizing the entire play of "Rosmersholme," before taking up his brush and pallette. Of course this is merely one of the "yarns" of the advance agent, and yet it is exactly in line with the stories of painstaking authors who sometimes spend as much as a whole hour of their busy lives in looking up and verifying important points which they have introduced, or in interviewing people who can provide them with exact information, not to mention their extensive travels into the suburbs to supply themselves with correct local color. It is to be noted, however, that the writers whose work has a lasting quality seldom, if ever, deliberately set out in search of color or atmosphere. In artistic novel writing the story comes first and the setting is a matter of taste, fancy and imagination. Many of our contemporary novelists are merely journalists or pamphleteers engaged in preaching against social anomalies. They are masquerading as story-tellers, and they seek to mend rather than mirror life. They can do almost everything except tell a story. They conceive it to be of the highest importance that it should be generally known that they are sticklers for facts, and as they thus reveal their conception of what constitutes a good novel it is easy to understand why they write bad ones. It is the historian's business, not the novelist's, to gather facts; and though the writing of some of the best romances in literature entailed much study, and abound in proofs of the authors' familiarity with scenes, manners and customs therein depicted, the charm and merit of the works are due to the creative faculty rather than to the power of concentration in laborious research. Scott's novels are full of local color, and they are noted for their accuracy of detail, but as literature they are remarkable for the number, the spirit and the individuality of the characters presented, for vivid situations of human interest and the many incidents which were conceived in the highest spirit of romance and tragedy. The works of Dickens abound in local color and atmosphere, but Dickens manufactured more than he found ready to hand. One of his strongest pieces of descriptive work is that of the Paris mob in "A Tale of Two Cities" and that was something which he never saw. But Dickens saw many things which were not seen by others. It was his power of observation in detail which enabled him to contrive color and atmosphere. The writer who has not this power might search for color all his life without finding any, and if he should find it he might not be able to give a representation of it because, not being of sufficiently keen sensibility, he had failed to have it borne in on his mind. It was said of Dickens that he could walk aimlessly down a crowded street and tell you all that was in it; what each shop was, the names on the signs, and how many scraps of orange peel there were on the pavement. It is supposed of him that when he met a person talking in a peculiar way he petrified him in the act and went on fancying hundreds of reduplications of the act. It was no great feat for a man with this combination of imagination and sagacity to give us impressive caricatures of strange types. This is of course a rare combination, and it is not essential to successful novel writing. Of primary importance is a firm grasp of the common facts of life. Without that it is of no avail to steep oneself in atmosphere or to accumulate a large fund of data. A knowledge of the manners and customs of a people is of less advantage to a novelist than the ability to throw himself into a fictitious world and to soar there without effort and with unceasing enjoyment.

A Consequence of the System

Though the apprehension of that organized band of Berkeley High School thieves has been scare-headed like an earthquake calamity the plain and ugly truth is that to any one who has been at all conversant with schools and their management for the last decade or so there is nothing more in the revelation than was naturally to be expected. Having made a fetich of schooling and exalted mere school attendance into the chief of the virtues, every effort has been put forth to cajole and flatter boys and girls into enrolling themselves at high schools and colleges whether they had any natural inclination to study or not. Scholastic requirements have been reduced to within measurable distance of the zero point, while athletic clubs, fraternities and sororities and "student" activities have been encouraged until the public schools more resemble amusement clubs than anything else. All this while expenses have piled up. Some of the Greek letter societies, whose exclusive membership is recruited from children of fourteen years and thereabouts, entirely dependent upon the parental purse for their maintenance, have an initiation fee of five dollars, with monthly dues of from fifty cents to a dollar, a larger sum than is asked by some of the fraternal orders which pay sick and death benefits. The standard of dress has advanced likewise, and both boys and girls today expect, as a matter of course, to be decked out in finery for everyday wear which their parents, even their elder brothers and sisters, did not dream of possessing until they could earn it, and there is scarcely a week that passes without some "meet" or other divertisement which they feel that they must attend. Discipline has been so relaxed that like scholarship it is virtually eliminated. Some years ago the State Board of Education handed down a decision that teachers might request, but most not command, and that pupils were within their right if they refused compliance, provided that the manner of refusal did not in itself constitute a fault. Parents are always overready to uphold their own, and as a result we have seen impudent youngsters hiring public halls in which to hold indignation meetings every time that any objection has been made to the least of their doings. Corporal punishment went by the board years ago, and suspension and expulsion have been deemed encroachments on the "rights" of free-born Americans. It is no infrequent occurrence for teachers to call the attention of parents to the conduct of their children in the matter of truancy or absenting themselves from classes, only to have it intimated to them in language plain and more or less forcible that the matter does not concern the pedagogue. Every teacher knows well that excuses are forged and report blanks signed by unauthorized proxies, and knows equally well that in nine cases out of ten rather than admit that the child was in the wrong

BROKERS AND DEALERS
IN HIGH GRADE
INVESTMENT SECURITIES
SUTRO & COMPANY
412 MONTGOMERY ST., SAN FRANCISCO
Requests for Information Either by Personal Interview or Correspondence will be Gladly Received and Promptly Attended to.

the forged document would be acknowledged. From teachers we learn that thefts in both public and private schools are the rule rather than the exception and that as the tender-hearted governing boards are opposed to lacerating the feelings of culprits, in every instance where teachers and principals have made an effort to stamp out the crime they have found themselves in danger of seeing their own heads fall into the basket, while the "innocent" pupils have been upheld and to that extent encouraged. One of the most powerful influences in keeping persons to the narrow and straight path, one especially potent with children whose habits are yet in their formative state, is the opinion of the community of which they form a part. The chances are that had these three youths of good family felt reasonably certain that their "pranks" would have subjected them to the contempt of their classmates when they were suspected and exposed at school they would not have progressed to the stage when it became necessary to turn them over to the tender mercies of the criminal authorities. The whole tendency of our modern school system is to prolong the period of irresponsibility and create a favored class who need not feel themselves bound by the rules which regulate the conduct of the rest of the world. Boys of seventeen and eighteen years, who are spending laborious days in apprenticeships to mechanical trades, or ambitiously studying the details of business, have none of these scholastic delusions in the matter of property rights. Neither do they look for abundant mercy in the place of strict justice when they overstep the rigid line.

The Willow

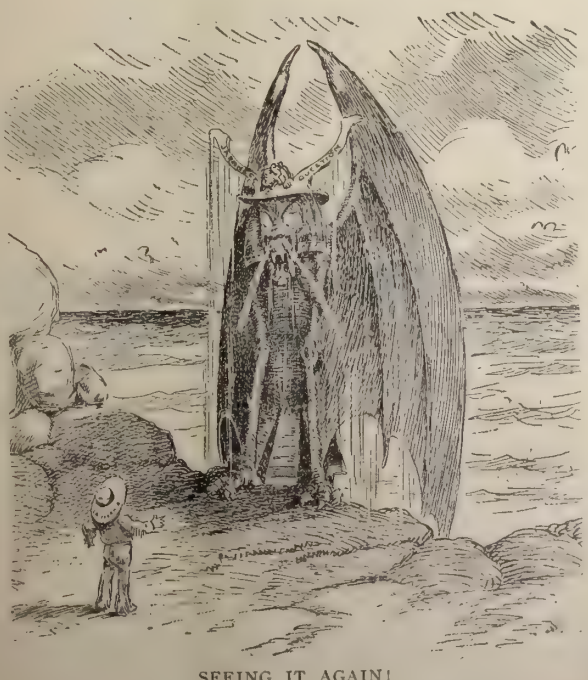
Tsourai-Touki

'Tis ever fates decree
That what we love the most falls to another,
Like yon willow tree,
Whose roots are in my fields,
Yet o'er my neighbor's wall its verdure yields.

Perspective Impressions

Apparently Hobson has an incurable case of Japhobia.

The habit of seeing things as they are is what gives a man a reputation for cynicism.



Many of the so-called learned men of the world are the laughing-stock of the wise.

If the stockholders of Spring Valley really want to perpetuate their holdings they should boost for Hetch-Hetchy which presents more obstacles to municipal ownership than any other project that has yet been suggested.

A good deed is worthy of our admiration when it is the spontaneous offspring of an unselfish, chivalrous heart.

By this time President Roosevelt has probably concluded that he was somewhat impetuous in undertaking to crush a newspaper with the machinery of "My Government."

Sinclair says he didn't say it. Nevertheless he admits that he wrote that unpardonable play, Prince Somethingorother which is even worse than what Annie Laurie says he said.

SEEING IT AGAIN!

—New York World.

TIME PAYS THE DEBT

—New York World.

Nemesis Will Pursue Them

Predicting a Probability Upon the Possibility that Pitiless Prosecutors May Ply Their Profession Twenty Years Hence in Exposure of Crimes Forgotten of Men, for the Profitable Enhancement of the Prosecutors' Beneficent Purposes.

By Democritus

Three boy students of the Berkeley High School have been expelled for thievery. Two of these boys confessed upon accusation; the other tried to brazen out an indignant denial until he could no longer withstand the plain and incontrovertible proofs of his guilt.

Much sympathy has been expressed in the public prints on behalf of these boys, and especially on behalf of the boy that refused to acknowledge his crimes. We are told by those who regard the thievery of these boys as "only boyish pranks" that they ought to be forgiven and reinstated; and one of the advocates of this proposition, a woman of course, has even gone so far as to advise that they be set up in the school as "models" for the pupils who do not steal and whose home training has taught them the enormity of stealing. It is urged that these boys may serve as "examples" for the rest of the school. It is inferred that the other boys and girls of the school will "look up" to these unfortunate lads and in this contemplation firmly resolve that they will never become thieves.

The morality of this teaching is very dubious. Honest men do not take dishonest men for "examples" even when it is assured that the dishonest men have reformed. But aside from that aspect of the case no obstacle should be thrown in the way of this reformation. It is in the interest of society that every facility should be afforded for the reformation of those who have gone wrong and been caught in their wrong doing. Whether they should be forgiven and reinstated is a question for debate; but there is no question as to their inutility as exemplary factors, unless we regard them as "horrible examples."

But there should be no effort to perpetuate the shame of these boys or to prolong their punishment through a lifetime. They should be permitted to live down their disgrace and to prove that their repentance is sincere. They have suffered the penalty and they should be allowed to go their way in the hope that they may justify the good opinion of those who have expressed confidence in their ability to resist evil.

It is not likely, however, that these boys will ever escape the shadow of their crime. Twenty years from now, when everybody has forgotten their youthful indiscretion, they may be called to serve on a jury to weigh the evidence in a case involving the life or the liberty of a fellow citizen. In that day it may occur to the special prosecutor to "dig up" the record of these talesmen. He may send his gumshoe men into the byways of society with instructions to find something that will disqualify these men from sitting on that jury, having ascertained, perhaps, that their verdict would not be favorable to the prosecution unless the evidence of that branch of the case should show the guilt of the accused beyond a reasonable doubt. Then it might happen that these gumshoe men might stumble upon the records of the Berkeley High School in which was written the statement that in January, 1909, twenty years previously, these men, then boy students at the school, were expelled for thievery.

The gumshoe men would, of course, bring the records to the special prosecutor and he would read them, and he might say in a loud and exultant voice: "Ah ha! I have the proofs and I will spring it on them in open court, so that these talesmen cannot escape. I will resurrect this corpse of their crime and I will expose it to the full view of all the world. I will do this, not so much in malevolence or with the intention of heaping disgrace on these men, as for the purpose of making the world believe that the defense in this case deliberately plotted to secure these talesmen for jurymen. This record shows that thy were expelled from the Berkeley High School for thievery; therefore it must be plain to everybody that they desire to sit on this jury for the purpose of acquitting the defendant or for the purpose of accepting a bribe from the defendant to acquit him. It doesn't matter that during twenty years these men have lived upright lives; it doesn't matter that they are respected in the community; it doesn't matter that everybody has forgotten the only crime each of them ever committed—it shall be sufficient for my purpose to shame them in the eyes of their fellow citizens to the end that I may win renown as a special prosecutor and render a service to the State."

Then, in open court, in the hearing of all men, in the presence of reporters of the myriad-tongued press, under the eyes of a just judge this special prosecutor might offer this record of the Berkeley High School for the inspection of these talesmen and ask them if it was true.

I am reciting no allegory. I am predicting no impossible situation. I am, in the hope of deterring others, telling these boys and their parents and their sympathizers and all the citizens of this community what may happen to the three boys expelled from the Berkeley High School for thievery, if, twenty years from this date they are so unfortunate as to be called on a jury in process of impanelment in a court that permits a zealous special prosecutor to examine talesmen in the manner I have described; and I base my prediction on what has actually happened in the courts of San Francisco within the memory of men now living. I am framing up no fairy story. I am citing no fake precedent. What I have related as a possibility in the case of these boys has occurred in San Francisco; and it may happen again.

It is true that the special prosecutor in the future case upon which these Berkeley boys may be called as jurymen might be a tender-hearted sympathetic gentleman. In that contingency there would be no effort to attempt to prejudice the cause of the defendant by subtle and plausible innuendo. And it is also probable that the judge of the court would be like unto that special prosecutor—one not only learned in the law but one in whose heart flows the milk of human kindness. Then, of course, it would happen that these men after their twenty years of good behavior would be quietly dismissed from the jurybox and no man would be the wiser for the real reason of their dismissal. They would go away from that tribunal of justice where the quality of mercy is not strained, unashamed and still strong in their determination to live the lives of honest men and upright citizens.

To err is human; to forgive is divine.

Wash ye, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings; cease to do evil; learn to do well; seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow. Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool.

So much for the admonition of the prophet.

These Berkeley High School boys must beware of the special prosecutor in all the days of their after lives. Other men may forgive them but the special prosecutor may never forget that they have confessed their guilt. Other men may be willing to let them live in the peace of a sincere repentance; but the special prosecutor may dog them to the brink of their graves, and even there he may proclaim their crimes if his beneficient purposes demand the proclamation. There is no escape from the special prosecutor when he sets out upon the trail of his quarry. Caiaphas was a special prosecutor, and so was Annas, his father-in-law; Judas was a witness under contract of immunity, and so was Barbabbas—yet Barabbas was a robber.

Special prosecutors, like history, are constantly repeating themselves. There were special prosecutors in Babylon before the flood; and there will be special prosecutors at the final judgment when those that have been special prosecutors shall themselves be prosecuted.

"Technicalities So-Called"

As They Are Viewed By a Man on the Bench Who Has Great Reverence for Those Fundamental Principles of Justice Which Are Derided by the Pundits and Intellectual Giants of Our Omniscient University Faculties.

By Theodore Bonnet

It is rather late to take up Professor Wigmore of Chicago for discussion. My only excuse for doing so is that I have just come across the January number of the West Publishing Company's Docket, a journal exclusively of interest to the legal profession, which, in this number happens to present matters of interest to laymen as well as to lawyers in San Francisco; matters in which interest has been revived by a letter written by Professor Wigmore to the Hon. Francis J. Heney for publication in those journals to which it was most grateful. We have been assured that Professor Wigmore is a great man. This assurance was necessary to give weight to the professor's letter, which otherwise might have been regarded as of no more importance than an epistle from Professor Boke to the feminine illuminati of the League of Justice or from the Hon. E. P. E. Troy to his next of kin the illustrious and most righteous editor of the Bulletin.

It has been said that no lawyer need pine in absolute obscurity while he has sufficient money to pay for the publishing of a book. It was through book covers that our own dearly beloved T. Carl Spelling emerged from the dark backward of abysmal obscurity into the white light that beats upon the lawyer of rank and celebrity. In that same royal road through which T. Carl plodded his joyful way, Professor Wigmore of Chicago University came to his reward. Professor Wigmore wrote a work on Evidence. I am told that from the lawyer's standpoint it has merit, but as a matter of fact every law book is of some benefit to lawyers, for all works on law are more or less a compilation of precedents, and they serve to expedite the research which usually falls to the lot of the browsing clerk. The fact that Justice Brewer endorsed Wigmore's work is of no significance, because Brewer is a universal endorser. Good, easy man, reluctant to turn down an applicant for an endorsement, he has been known to endorse patent contrivances for almost every conceivable purpose agreeable to man or beast. Nevertheless it is not to be disputed that Wigmore's book is worthy of endorsement. My only concern with Wigmore springs from the fact that the ingenious prevaricators who have conspired to defame our Supreme Court, and who to that end have been procuring, presumably for hire, criticisms suitable to their purpose, induced the Middle West college professor to contribute to the fund of animadersion. I have no knowledge of the process by which Wigmore was lured into the unsavory fold, but I do know that he ought to be ashamed of the company he is in. For whatever may be his opinion of the opinion of our Supreme Court in the Schmitz case, if he is a man of healthy instincts he should not relish the idea of aiding and abetting a dishonest enterprise. Nor should it please him to learn, if he is an honest controversalist of well conditioned mind, that though his opinion was exploited by the conspirators they have malevolently suppressed the fact that the decision from which he dissented has been affirmed and endorsed in the Lawyers' Reports Annotated, a work which has the endorsement of the legal profession of the United States.

But I will be candid enough to confess that I have no more faith in Professor Wigmore's instincts than I have in his logic. I am sceptical of him because he has made it clear that he is a typical college professor; that with the characteristic intrepedity of the dogmatic pedagogue he has assumed that there can be no question of the correctness of his position. He has come to us with the air of a man who has a monopoly of the truth, a man of all-grasping erudition, of a plethoric fulness of thought, an extraordinary compass of understanding and an adamantive chain of logic. Wigmore knows that he knows better than the seven men on our Supreme Bench. Whence gained he the superiority of insight? This is something his letter does not disclose. What it does disclose is that he deduces truths from principles peculiar to himself. This much I can see though I am not a lawyer. I can also see that Professor Wigmore has no sense of humor. Monodynamic men—men of a single talent seldom have. If Professor Wigmore had a sense of humor he would not take himself seriously.

But to come to the West Company's Publishing Docket. I learn from that publication that the disposition to take "judicial notice" has been so far indulged of late that it is becoming a serious joke in the legal profession. Now Professor Wigmore dissents from our Supreme Court principally for the reason that it failed to take judicial notice of something it was not empowered to take judicial notice of, something that inferentially it was prohibited from taking judicial notice of, something that Mr. Heney and Mr. Johnson neglected to incorporate in the indictment. Says the Docket:

"The Supreme Court in one of the States has decided that it will take judicial notice that the football season in American institutions of learning begins in the fall and ends on Thanksgiving Day. Inasmuch as the annual Army-Navy game was played this year two days after the season, 'judicially closed,' it leaves a horrid doubt as to the real standing of West Point and Annapolis as institutions of learning, which would seem to warrant an application for a rehearing on that point. However that may be it is encouraging to see the court throwing aside the musty volumes of precedents and getting down to modern sources of information, like the newspapers and the sons of its members in attendance at the university. Perhaps next year some progressive court will judicially decide who are entitled to places on the All-American eleven."

Here's another paragraph that may interest Professor Wigmore:

"The rapid advance of sumptuary legislation in the past few years, whether viewed with approval or otherwise, has resulted in bringing out many things of interest from a legal point of view. There is, of course, no longer any doubt of the power of the State to regulate, or even prohibit, the sale of intoxicating liquor as a beverage. We now have numerous decisions as to whether the courts will take judicial notice of the intoxicating qualities of beer and wine, and the Kansas Supreme Court recently decided that proof of the intoxicating qualities of a "Manhattan Cocktail" was unnecessary. Jamacia Ginger has likewise been tabooed; but the Supreme Court of one of the Southern States said "No" when asked to put a similar official stamp of disapproval on Hop Jack. The ingredients of so large a number of beverages have been stated by learned tribunals that barkeepers ought to be able to mix their drinks according to judicial formulas."

But of far greater interest to Professor Wigmore than these paragraphs should be the discussion in the Docket of "Technicalities So-Called" by Arthur G. Powell, Judge of the Georgia Court of Appeals, who, in all probability was never a teacher of law in a university. Here are some excerpts from Judge Powell's article:

"Technicalities, as the term is generally employed, bear very much the same relation to the administration of the law that conventionalities bear to social life. Strip the law of technicalities or social life of conventionalities, and the weak, the pure, the fair-minded and the good find themselves at once the victims of surprises, unfair attacks, and improper advances which neither justice nor society has found any other method of restraining. As truly as conventionalities distinguish, as well as protect, the amenities of polite life from the indecorum and vulgarity of the ill-bred and the impure, so do technicalities distinguish, as well as protect, the dignity and the majesty of the courts from the brutal, uncivilizing spirit of the mobs, "night riders," and lynchers.

(Continued on Page 29.)

CENTRAL TRUST COMPANY
OF CALIFORNIA
Has removed to its new offices Corner Market, Sutter and Sansome Streets
A General Banking Business Transacted
CHAS. F. LEEGE, President B. G. TOGNAZZI, Manager

The Confession

(Translated from the French of Francois Coppee)

One stormy evening in midwinter the old Abbe Faben was slowly climbing the hill of the rue Mouffetard on his way to the old and poor parish church of Saint Medard. He was trying to protect himself from the rain and sleet with the help of his old umbrella. He could not but feel that he was giving himself needless trouble, and he half regretted having quitted the cosy fire in his little apartment in the rue L'Homard, and the book he had left lying open on the table. But it was Saturday night, a night on which the old widows who abounded in the neighborhood would frequently come to procure absolution in order to partake of the communion the next day. The abbe was none the less annoyed because this particular Saturday happened to be the semi-monthly payday, and on such occasions the rue Mouffetard ordinarily swarmed with men, and men not at all too friendly to his cassock. One may be almost a saint and yet not find it very pleasant to listen to jeering remarks or to have to run the gantlet of mocking glances.

The stormy weather on this occasion, however, proved to be somewhat of a blessing in disguise, the streets being quite deserted, and the good priest reached his church without mishap. He dipped his thumb in the holy water, crossed himself, bowed for a moment at the altar, and then wended his way toward the confessional. He had not come in vain; someone was waiting for him. A male penitent! A rare exception at Saint Medard! The abbe glanced at the hobnailed shoes of the kneeling man and concluded that he must be a working man but lately come to town, who had not yet lost all the good habits of his youth. The usual round of little venial sins and misdemeanors, probably, to which he had become so accustomed. And so the vicar sat down leisurely and, after taking a pinch of snuff, quietly drew aside the little curtain of green serge.

"Monsieur the Cure," stammered a hoarse voice, evidently attempting to speak in a low tone.

"I am not the cure, my friend; only one of the vicars. Repeat the Confiteor, and call me father."

The man slowly repeated the prayer, which he evidently found hard to recall. Then he began again hoarsely: "Monsieur the Cure—pardon, my father—excuse me if I do not do it correctly. It is twenty-five years since I have gone to confession—not since I left the village. You know how it is in Paris. I was no worse than the others and I said to myself, God is too good-natured to bear me any ill-will, and oh today, what I bear on my conscience today is too heavy to carry any longer alone, and you must listen to me, Monsieur the Cure—I have killed a man!"

The abbe sprang to his feet. A murderer! The head which had been so near his own had conceived and planned the crime; the hands now clasped at his little wickets were perhaps still smeared with blood. In his agitation, not wholly free from terror; the abbe fell back on his bench and could only say mechanically: "Confess your sins, my son! The mercy of God is infinite."

"Then listen," said the man in a voice, broken with sorrow. "I will tell the whole story. I am a bricklayer. I came to Paris more than twenty years ago, with a townsman of mine, a friend of my childhood. We had gone birdnesting and fishing together; we had gone to school together—something like a brother His name was Philippe, mine is Jacques. He was a tall, handsome fellow. I have always been clumsy and homely. There was not a more skilled workman than he. I have never been able to do fine work. And good he was, and brave, and open handed. I was proud of him, proud to walk by his side, proud to have him tap me on my back and call me a fool. I admired him. I loved him. And when we came to Paris, what luck! The same builder hired us both. But after that he went out in the evenings a great deal without me. Why not? He was young, he was free, he loved pleasure. As for myself, I had to save money; my mother was still living, old and infirm.

"I found lodgings with a fruit-seller who boarded a few bricklayers. Philippe lived elsewhere; the food did not suit him, and to tell the truth it was not very good. But the fruit-seller was an old widow and apparently needed my board-money. And then—I might as well own it—I had fallen desperately in love with her daughter. Poor Catherine! You will hear later, Monsieur the Cure, what became of her.

"I lived there three years, unable to tell her of my feelings. I have told you that I was but a second-class workman, and the little I earned was barely sufficient to supply my own needs after caring for my mother. But she was called to heaven one day, and after that it seemed more easy. I saved a little money and, when I thought there was enough to start housekeeping, I spoke to Catherine. She said neither yes nor no. Well, I did not expect her to jump at the chance. I knew I was not very attractive. Still, she spoke to her mother, who thought much of me, as a sober, steady, good-natured fellow, and the marriage was agreed upon.

"I had a few, oh, such happy weeks! Of course, I could see that Catherine was not in love with me, but by dint of kindness and tender care I hoped to make her love me later.

"Naturally, I told Philippe all about it, and insisted on his making Catherine's acquaintance. Perhaps you have already guessed the rest, Monsieur the Cure. Philippe was so gay, so amiable, so handsome, and Catherine fell deeply in love with him. She has a good, loyal heart, that woman, and as soon as she realized the state of her feelings she told me so frankly. But I shall never forget that day! It was her birthday and I had bought a little gold chain which I had put in a small box with pink cotton. We were alone; she had just helped me to my supper, when I drew out the box and showed her the chain. She broke into tears. 'Forgive me, Jacques,' said she. 'Keep this for the woman who will become your wife. I cannot. I love another. I love Philippe.'

"Sorrow, my father? I had more sorrow than I thought I could bear. But what was I to do? I loved them both. Their marriage would make them both happy, and so, as Philippe had always been careless about money, I loaned them my savings to start housekeeping.

"So they were married and things went swimmingly for awhile. When their little boy was born, I was godfather and named him Camille in remembrance of my mother.

"But soon afterward Philippe began to be dissipated. He was not fitted for married life; he preferred pleasure and drink. You live in a poor quarter, Monsieur the Cure; you must know the story by heart—the workman who gradually becomes idle and drunken, who goes on sprees of two or three days at a time; who returns home with empty pockets only to beat his wife. That is what Philippe came to in less than three years. Of course, I spoke to him and he promised to do better. But it did not last long and he grew tired of my preaching. One day, he went so far as to say something about Catherine—about Catherine, who is as honest and true as a saint! Well, he remembered how deeply I had been in love with her, and he suggested things that I should

(Continued on Page 30.)

J. C. WILSON

BROKER

Private Wire Chicago and New York
Member New York Stock Exchange, Chicago Board of Trade and Stock and Bond Exchange, San Francisco

LOCAL AND EASTERN STOCKS AND BONDS

Main Office, Mills Bldg. Tel. Kearny 482.
Branch Office, Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles.

Byron

Herbert Trench

Byron, what clash in thee of sea and wind,
Wrecking and squandering all we treasure most!
What riches of ungovernable mind
Washed up along some bleak despairing coast!
Rare liquor doth besiege the furious capes,
The iron steeps are splashed with blood of grapes,
All the perfumed cargo of thy heady wine
Flung to inhabitants of rocks and fogs
To grope for, and get drunk out of their clogs
While chaos—tinging fades the fiery juice divine.

The Spectator

Which Connelly?

There are two Connollys of note I am told, and it is not quite clear which of them is alleged to have proved the coward on the occasion of the most recent collision between two Atlantic liners. If, as seems to be the case, James B. Connolly is the one referred to in the despatches he is about the last man whom one would suspect of a disposition to show the white feather at sea. He is a noted athlete and the winner of one of the prizes in the first modern Olympic revival. Moreover, he is the son of a Gloucester skipper, and he made winter voyages to the Grand Banks. He has shipped across the Atlantic in cattle steamers and fished with the North Sea trawlers, all by way of venturesome experience. He made the voyage in the Fleur de Lys, the smallest of the yachts which entered the competition for the Kaiser's Cup a few years ago, when Tommy Bohlin, known to the readers of the Connolly stories as Tommy Ohlsen, the crack sail-carrier, was skipper and of whom it is said that his standing orders when he turned in during a gale were: "Call me if it moderates," and of whom one of his admiring colleagues, in a profession where courage must be extraordinary to attract attention at all, where everyone is heroic as a matter of course, exclaimed: "The sight of Tommy in a blow—man, man! 'Tis like another anchor." Mr. Connolly once joined the navy, but the occasion was not, as our daily papers have stated, the voyage of the big fleet, nor did the officers make any objection to his presence. It is true that he was one of the correspondents with the Atlantic fleet, but there was no concealment of his occupation and no secrecy about his correspondence. It was several years ago that he joined one of the vessels as an enlisted man and did regular duty as a member of the crew. His desire was to make observations of the naval sailors when off guard, with the intention of some day using his notes for literary purposes. When the men discovered his identity they ceased to act naturally in his presence, and the object of his voyaging being thus defeated, he gave up the task, which is more than half to be regretted since our sailors will inevitably become material for fiction sooner or later, and they could not ask for a more sympathetic depictor than the man who has made Tommy Ohlsen and Wesley Marrs and the other Gloucester men more vividly real than the historic admirals and commodores.

She (readjusting her dress)—"Do you think, Doctor, that anyone will ever see the scar?"
Doctor—"That depends on you, my child."

REMOVAL NOTICE

OUR OFFICE after December 21, 1908, will be at 311 to 317 Crocker Building, corner of Post and Market streets.

OUR WAREHOUSE will remain at the Southwest corner of Eddy and Hyde Streets, until April 18, 1909, on that date we shall remove to our old location, 147-151 Minna Street and 144-148 Natoma Street.

GLADDING, McBEAN & CO.

The Rebuff and the Result

According to a local railroad official when Mr. E. H. Harriman worked himself into the directory of the New York Central system he gratified the dearest wish of his heart. Mr. Harriman, so the story goes, never forgot a rebuff which the Vanderbilts administered to him in the early years of his control of the Union Pacific. When he and his associates took over the Union Pacific from the Government in 1898 he was considered to be only an insignificant member of the syndicate. The others were such men as the Vanderbilts, the Goulds, the Ameses of Boston, Kuhn, Loeb & Co., and other fairly well known bankers and financiers. It was Mr. Harriman's design to sell the Union Pacific to the Vanderbilts, who then, as now, controlled the Chicago and Northwestern. The great idea was to perfect the best transcontinental line, and up to the present there has never been suggested a transcontinental line stronger in both resources and directorship than the line Mr. Harriman projected at that time. The Vanderbilts then, as now, were not ambitious for the extension of their system and rejected Mr. Harriman's offer. What some of Mr. Harriman's friends described as the most critical period in his career followed. He had thought and had even convinced himself that the Vanderbilts could not refuse the proposition which he laid before them. When they did so he was thrown back upon his own resources to carry out the plans he had formulated for the Union Pacific and to secure the financing that was requisite for the completion of these plans. Now he is a member of the Central board as the representative of $14,000,000 of stock owned by the Union Pacific and much more in the hands of himself and his associates. He will be able to dictate to the Vanderbilts.

Burlingame's Bigotry

The Rev. George E. Burlingame, a Baptist preacher of this city, whose exaggerated and slanderous statements in the Baptist Standard of Chicago concerning the moral conditions existing in San Francisco have been the subject of rebuke at my hands heretofore, is still harping on the same string, but in another tune. In his

HOTEL VICTORIA

N. E. cor. Bush and Stockton

CENTRALLY LOCATED .·. A MODERN AND UP-TO-DATE FAMILY HOTEL

Sun in every room. Elaborate furnishings. Excellent cuisine.
Large lobby and reception room. Grill room. Dining room.

American and European Plan.

first libel he said that we are an ungodly community because we prefer the theatre to the church and the cafe to the conventicle; in this later review of religious conditions he complains because we are mostly addicted to the Catholic Church and refuse to be saved by the "evangelical" plan. He finds that with a Roman-Catholic population of from 200,000 to 240,000 the influence of this church in San Francisco "is all-powerful in every department of life, political, educational, and institutional," but our critic disbelieves that "its influence is making for the evangelization ot the city, or that it is the strongest factor in the effort for moral uplift." This is the bigotry that burned Michael Servetus for heresy over a slow fire of green twigs at the instigation of John Calvin; that lighted the faggots for Thomas Cranmer; and drove Roger Williams, founder of the first Baptist church in America, out of the communion of the Salem saints into the wilderness because he denied the right of the magistrates to punish Sabbath-breaking. Parson Burlingame is not honest enough to explain why he believes that the Roman-Catholic church of this city is not an evangelizing influence and why, in his opinion it is not "the strongest factor in the effort for moral uplift." If instead of bearing false witness against the city in which he lives and against his neighbors and fellow citizens Dr. Burlingame had dared to tell the whole truth he would have informed the readers of the Chicago Baptist Standard that his opinion of his Roman-Catholic brethren in Christ was based on the fact that the clergy of this church have refused to take the dictation of the graft prosecution as their attitude in this factional quarrel between Rudolph Spreckels and Patrick Calhoun. Yet this is the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. The so-called "evangelical" churches of this city have arrayed themselves almost unanimously in the Spreckels interests; the Roman-Catholic churches have refused to lend their pulpits to the denunciation of men whom the Spreckels prosecutors have accused. The Catholic clergy have drawn the line at wholesale anathema, announcing that their mission is to save the souls of men, not to damn them upon the indictment of Mr. Spreckels or even upon the testimony of self-confessed felons and immunity-chatteled creatures of the graft prosecution. Therein lies the animus of the Burlingame animadversion upon the Roman-Catholic church of this city.

Source of Some of our Vice

Of course the chief objection of Parson Burlingame to existing conditions in San Francisco is the perverse habit of our people in refusal to accept the brand of salvation offered by the "evangelical" churches; but underlying this envious and venal attitude towards his fellow citizens generally is a hereditary bitter hatred of the "Papist." He dared not attack his enemy openly and he would not tell the truth regarding the object of his hatred. But in ignorance that is inexcusable or with audacity that is unpardonable he cites Oakland and Alameda as shining examples for the guidance of San Francisco in all things that go to the "moral uplift" of communities. He says in his screed of slander that "Oakland and Alameda are cities of many homes, and evangelical religion is far more in evidence in all these trans-bay cities than in the metropolis. They are in a large measure," he avers, "bedrooms for San Francisco, and profit by the greater city's ...ss; but their recent remarkable development both economically and religiously, promises a new force which must influence and affect helpfully the effort to evangelize and redeem their sister city by the Golden Gate." If Parson Burlingame had said that San Francisco is the "bedroom" of Oakland and Alameda he would have approached nearer the fact. Ask the libertines of Oakland and Alameda where they go to commit their debaucheries and to celebrate their orgies; ask the libertines of San Francisco to name the source of all exotic libertinage. If Oakland and Alameda, or Berkeley, holiest city of them all, did not dump their vice into the cesspool of metropolitan wickedness Parson Burlingame would not have the face to offer those cities as virtuous exemplars and "a new force for the evangelization and redemption of their sister city by the Golden Gate." Those cities are obviously sweeter and cleaner because their garbage is sewered through the metropolitan cloaca; and San Francisco is worse than it ought to be because it is the pit into which the "trans-bay cities" cast their social refuse. San Francisco is the Field of Evil Counsel for all that is evil in our "sister cities."

Unimportance of Sinclair's Opinion

Upton Sinclair says he is sorry he is married. Well, what of it? Who cares? The domestic infelicities of Upton Sinclair are neither interesting nor edifying. But when Upton Sinclair attacks marriage as an institution and declares that women are merely the chattel slaves of men and that these women are wives merely for their board and lodging and clothes, the rest of us who are not sorry we are married sit up and take notice of what Upton Sinclair is saying. But after all, what's the use? It's only the difference between Upton Sinclair at large and Upton Sinclair in a padded cell. If Upton Sinclair had gibbered his opinion within the pale of Stockton or Napa or Agnews we should not give it a second thought; but it happens that Upton Sinclair uttered his opinion in a cafe, over his celery salad or his shredded wheat biscuit, and gave it out for publication in a newspaper of general circulation. It is not the utterance that forces our attention; it is the publication. What Upton Sinclair says doesn't matter the worth of a plugged bawbee; its value is dependent wholly on the prominence that some newspaper gives to his saying. Let the gods be praised that there is only one Upton Sinclair, and that when he is no more the tribe will be utterly extinct.

Roosevelt the History Maker

If there is any one branch of human knowledge in which Theodore Roosevelt thinks he is better informed than other men it is in American history. So confident is he that he knows about all that is worth knowing on this somewhat extensive subject, that he has even written a few books containing recondite facts culled from the vast store of Roosevelt data with commentary at once pertinent and enlightening. The editor of Collier's Weekly, however, has, after long and patient vigil,

J.M. Jacobi & Co.
S.W. COR. MONTGOMERY & SUTTER STS
Perfect Clothes for Men
Growing business demands more room;
February 8 we annex 45-47 Montgomery

Seattle's Newest and Most Modern Hotel

"Twelve Stories of Solid Comfort"
Building, concrete, steel and marble.
Located, most fashionable shopping district.
210 rooms, 135 baths.
Library and bound magazines in reading rooms for guests.
Most refined hostelry in Seattle.
Absolutely fireproof.
English Grill.
Rates, $1.00 up
HOTEL SAVOY SEATTLE

caught the Omniscient One asleep at the historical switch. It appears that Mr. Roosevelt, by special edict, named a salt mountain in the desert of eastern Utah after the great explorer Robert Cavalier de la Salle. As graciously explained by the infallible repository of things historical in the United States, the name was chosen to serve for all time as a reminder of men and events connected with our progress from pioneer days. Now it happens that this mountain has always been known as La Sal. It was named by Father Silvestre Velez de Escalante, the first white man to cross the great Colorado river of the west. That was in August, 1776. The confusion of "La Sal" which is the Spanish for "salt" and La Salle which is the name of a Frenchman, would have been natural enough in an ordinary citizen of the republic making no pretension to superior accuracy of historical lore; even a professional historian could be pardoned for an error of this sort, but there is absolutely no excuse for Theodore Roosevelt. However, it is not probable that Mr. Roosevelt will permit this error to lie against him. He will issue another edict expunging Escalante's designation from the record. He will ordain that the name of the mountain was never La Sal. Rather than submit to this aspersion of his historical accuracy Mr. Roosevelt will make the history to conform with the Roosevelt inaccuracy. History is not as the historians have written it, but as Roosevelt makes it; and those historians who write history hereafter must indite it as they find it after Roosevelt has ordered it.

Geraldine—Years have passed since we have met, my dear, and you don't look a day older.

Fanny—Nor you! Your form is the same, and your eyes and your cheeks—and your hat!

When a Boodler is Credible

Nearly every citizen summoned as a juror in the Calhoun case confesses to a prejudice against the testimony of the boodle Supervisors. This is very exasperating to the learned and patriotic gentlemen engaged in the prosecution of the railroad magnate, for it is with the aid of this testimony that they expect to win many laurels and the warm approval of their conscience. Apparently Mr. Heney has very little respect for the stubborn citizens who have not been converted to his point of view, but he condescends to argue the matter with them, and he is generously indulged by the amiable man on the bench. Mr. Heney's faith in the testimony of the Supervisors is one of the most curious of the many curious phenomena of the graft prosecution. It has survived many vicissitudes. It has vindicated Mr. Heney's power of discrimination and faculty of discernment. The Supervisors have varied their testimony, but Mr. Heney always knows when they are telling the truth. Two of the Supervisors who were promised immunity recanted the testimony which they gave under contract and they were promptly indicted. The indictment refreshed the memory of one of them and he amplified his contract testimony which was accepted by the prosecution as the truth. The other, Mike Coffey, refused to renew his contract testimony, and he is now being prosecuted. At the same time he is being sued by an attorney for services rendered in procuring him immunity. Thus we see that Mike is in an anomalous position. From all these circumstances I am less inclined to marvel at the citizens who distrust the Supervisors than at the public officials who have converted them into instruments of justice. I am also inclined to marvel at what appears to be a most remarkable deal in the interest of justice. It appears that the Supervisors purchased immunity with testimony, and that the contract calls for a certain kind of testimony, the kind that will meet with the approbation of the prosecution. If they give approved testimony then they are to be regarded as credible witnesses. If they permit what remains of their conscience to dictate in the matter then they must go to jail. Now the question is, When are they most worthy of belief—when they are testifying as free agents, or when they are testifying to avoid indictment? To qualify as a juror in the Calhoun case must a citizen be of the opinion that a boodler is not to be distrusted except when he prefers going to jail to giving contract testimony? Is it impossible for a man to be a good juror unless he feels that the prosecuting officers should have the power of dictating the kind of testimony which the principal witness should give? These questions are merely speculative interrogatories which perhaps bespeak my profound ignorance of the whole situation.

The Versatile Mitchell

John W. Mitchell, lawyer, politician, raconteur, art critic and bon vivant, may now justly be credited with being also a financier. This announcement will be received with incredulous smiles by Mr. Mitchell's acquaintances, who have long since been convinced that he lacked one of the essential qualities of a financier. Temperamentally Mr. Mitchell is more inclined to spend money than to save. He has a very ardent passion for the good things of life, and he will not be denied. But to enjoy the good things of life is impossible if one has not some genius for commanding them. Mr. Mitchell is not without this genius. He has put through a big deal in Los Angeles whereby the Bank of Southern California has been reorganized and vitalized with new blood. Colonel Lankershim has withdrawn from the presidency and been succeeded by J. M. Neeland of the Panama American Railroad. George I. Harn, President of the United States Banking Company of Mexico has also become interested in the bank which, as a consequence is now regarded as one of the most important financial institutions in Southern California. After engineering this deal Mr. Mitchell came to town to attend the Cabinet dinner in honor of T. T. Williams at the Fairmont, and there he sustained his reputation as a post-prandial spellbinder in what was perhaps the greatest bunch of after-dinner talkers that ever assembled in California. On that unique occasion there responded to the call of the always felicitous James H. O'Brien, toastmaster, Chief Justice Beatty, Judge Van Fleet, Justice Henshaw, Justice Melvin, Judge Lennon, Judge Kerrigan, Judge

Milo

Do you know what Quality means in a Turkish Cigarette? If not get a box of "MILO." Then, any other cigarette, and try same, side by side. You'll note the delicate, aromatic mildness of the "MILO." Mildness (yet with the richness in flavor) is what costs in Turkish Tobacco, and its just this that makes the Perfect Cigarette. You'll find it in No Other.

This perfection is obtained only by owning our own plantation in Turkey—the careful watchfulness from the seeding to the finished article.

Write to the Surbrug Company for samples and prices.

THE SURBRUG COMPANY, New York City

The GOLD MEDAL for quality in the Franco-British Exhibition has been awarded to

To His Majesty the King
By royal appointment

WHITE HORSE WHISKY.

QUALITY THE SECRET OF SUCCESS

MACKIE & CO. DISTILLERS LTD.
LAGAVULIN DISTILLERY, ISLAY — Established 1742
MALT-MILL " "
CRAIGELLACHIE " GLENLIVET

Note.—Any person proved guilty of re-filling our empty bottles with inferior whisky will be prosecuted.

Graham, Samuel M. Shortridge, George A. Knight, John J. Barrett, Arthur Fisk, Editor Thomas E. Flynn, Louis Rosenthal, Editor Joseph Baker, Robert Devlin, Louis Sloss, Livingstone Jenks and W. W. Naughton.

Ferrero the Lion

The lion of the hour in New York is Guglielmo Ferrero, the Italian historian who has excited the interest of the students of history in all countries by his work, "The Greatness and Decline of Rome," four volumes of which have been published. He has discovered no new sources of information, but he has given us a study of Roman history and of the principal characters therein from the viewpoint of a philosopher and a student of human nature. He is a scholar and he knows his subject through and through. Moreover he is a man of the world and he has studied the political development of all countries, he has familiarized himself with the springs of action in all the principal characters of modern history, and the knowledge that he has thus gained has been brought to his aid in his interpretation of the motives and designs of the ancients. Needless to say he has thrown a new color on Roman history and has given us new and novel versions of many transactions with which we are all more or less familiar. Since his arrival in this country Ferrero has written for some of the newspapers his impressions of this country and they are conclusive of a remarkable keenness of perception and soundness of judgment.

GUGLIELMO FERRERO

The Italian historian who has thrown a new light on the great figures of Ancient Roman.

"Pardon me, Madame, I think I have seen you somewhere."
"Quite likely, I go there very often."

Queen Lil's Just Claim

Ex-Queen Liliuokalani of the Hawaiian Islands, now seventy years of age and childless, is again journeying on to Washington there to make another personal appeal to Congress and the American people for some compensation for loss of the crown lands of Hawaii of which she was deprived in 1893. The treatment which this woman has received at our hands is hardly creditable to this country. "The lawful government of Hawaii," said President Cleveland in a message to Congress, "was overthrown without the drawing of a sword or the firing of a shot, by a process every step of which is directly traceable to and dependent for its success upon the agency of the United States, acting through its diplomatic and naval representatives." And yet we have failed to return to the ex-Queen of the island kingdom the lands of which she was deprived, or to pay her the appraised value thereof! The crown lands were entirely separate from the general public lands of the kingdom. They comprised about 1,000,000 acres the present value of which is about $12,000,000. All the lands of Hawaii were divided into three groups by Kamehameha III. One part went to the chiefs and people; another part became general public lands, and the other became a trust fund or property for the personal use and benefit of the monarch and his successors to the throne. A life interest in the crown lands became vested in each monarch as successor to the trust, and it was a private income which the monarch could use as he saw fit. The income from the crown lands at the time the government was overthrown was more than $65,000 a year. This sum went directly to the occupant of the throne, in addition to the privy purse, amounting to $20,000 a year for maintaining the royal household. Some of the confiscated territories are now occupied by the United States for military and naval purposes. The Queen is willing to accept the small sum of $250,000 as reinbursement.

Largest Exclusive Office Furniture House on the Pacific Coast.

EVERY ARTICLE OF FURNITURE REQUIRED IN AN OFFICE

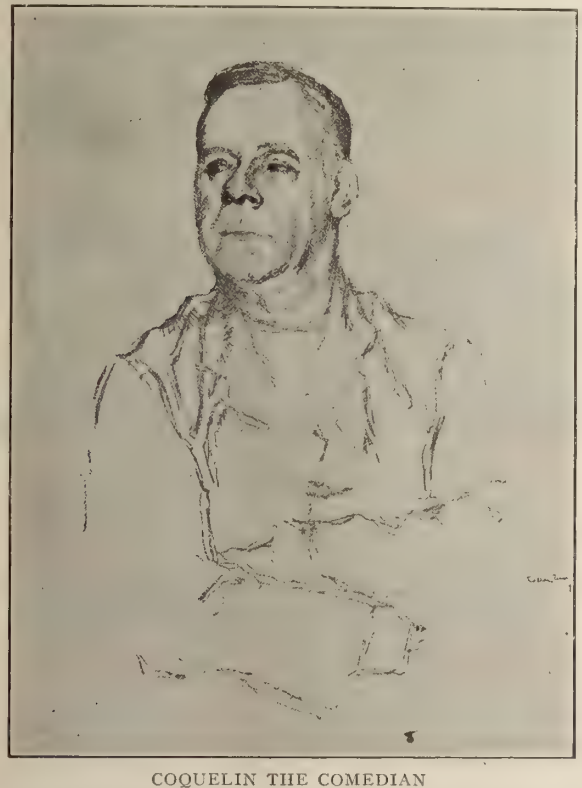
Exclusive representatives of the most important lines manufactured.

RUCKER-FULLER Desk Co.
737-741 MISSION ST.

California Limited

The only exclusively first-class train to the East via any line.
Dining-car service under Fred Harvey management—that's the best on earth.
On your way East you can stop and visit

YOSEMITE VALLEY
AND
GRAND CANYON



No other line puts you in reach of both of these places. Our folders tell.

F. W. Prince, C. T. A.
673 Market St.

Santa Fe

The World's Greatest Actor

Benoit Constant Coquelin, who died last week, had no peer on the French stage, and therefore it is not hazardous to assume that he was without a rival in the world; for it is admitted that the histrionic talent of no country is comparable with that of France. Since Coquelin's death I have read that it was in Rostand's play that he achieved his fame, and that to the author of Cyrano de Bergerac he was indebted for his great triumps. Now as a matter of fact Coquelin occupied the foremost position among French actors before Rostand ever wrote a play. He made his debut on December 6, 1860, as Gros Rene in Moliere's Depit Amoureux, and he made his way rapidly into general favor. He played every classic role in the whole range of French drama and left his imprint upon them all. Though essentially a comedian he was effective in every line of histrionic work. In no part was he a failure. It has been said that Moliere, Racine, Beaumarchais and Alexander Dumas never had a better interpreter. If he excelled in any particular role it was that of Tartuffe. As for M. Rostand, it would be nearer the truth to say that the indebtedness if there be any between playwright and actor is on the former. I see that M. Rostand has written another masterpiece, but I am not impressed. When his Cyrano was brought out it was heralded as the greatest masterpiece of the dramatic literature of France. One enthusiastic critic ranked it with the plays of Shakespeare, but at this writing apparently it was nothing more than a best-seller. Then came L'Aiglon, another masterpiece which also appears to have petered out; and now we are to have Chanteclere, another masterpiece. The fact is that Rostand is the cleverest living writer of melodramas, and that he can produce a better imitation of poetry than any other versesmith in France.

COQUELIN THE COMEDIAN

The Editor—Ah, I love to get out in the bracing air. It gives me ideas.

The Business Manager—Then why do you always write your editorials in your office?

A Star of the Financial World

Of Frank A. Vanderlip, whose election to the presidency of the National City Bank of New York was announced in the press despatches the other day, probably less than a score of men in local financial circles had any previous knowledge. Doubtless many wondered that so obscure an individual had been elevated to so important a position. The National City Bank is the biggest bank in the country. It has a capital of $25,000,000, a surplus of $25,000,000 and deposits of $183,000,000. It figures in all the very biggest financial deals that are put through in this country. The president of this bank is always one of the most influential men in Wall street. Who, then, is this Vanderlip, who has never been discussed by the yellow journals or the muck rakers? Where did he spring from? I first heard of him when he was financial editor of the Chicago Tribune. In later years he started a paper of his own, the Chicago Economist. When Lyman J. Gage, a Chicago banker, was appointed Secretary of the Treasury in McKinley's first Cabinet he made Vanderlip his private secretary. While he was in that position it was discovered that there was little in regard to the theory of finance that he did not know. He soon became assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

How He Handed the War Loan

The Spanish war loan of 1898 gave Mr. Vanderlip his opportunity. Congress had voted a popular loan of $200,000,000, and to Mr. Vanderlip was entrusted the work of floating the bond issue. The bill was passed on

ASK FOR
BLACK AND WHITE
SCOTCH WHISKEY
IT IS THE BEST
NONE BOTTLED IN AMERICA

TAFT & PENNOYER

Our Thirty-Second Annual

10% Discount Sale

Closes Saturday Night

10% in name only---as the discounts range from 10% to 50%

This is the season of the year with us that the purchasing power of your DOLLAR is stretched to its utmost buying capacity. All our departments offer a TEN PER CENT REDUCTION on our regular prices; some of them 15 per cent; some 25 per cent; and in some cases where we have lines that we are desirious of closing out the reduction reaches 50 PER CENT. This statement cannot help but convince you that this month of JANUARY, 1909, will be an ideal month in which to shop and to buy generously.

CLAY STREET, 14th to 15th
OAKLAND

Saturday, June 11th. How the business was done Mr. Vanderlip has since described: "At 9 o'clock the following morning we began to receive circulars of explanation and subscription blanks from the printing office. I put 500 men at work. Within a day the mails were taking our printed matter to every national, State and private bank in the country, to every postmaster, to every express office and to 24,000 editors of newspapers. The subscription closed at 3 o'clock on the afternoon of July 14th. There were 320,000 subscribers and they asked for $1,400,000,000 in bonds. During the last two days we received 50,000 letters! Some of the letters contained money, thousand dollar bills, for instance, and were not even registered. Under the law the offers of syndicates, corporations and associations were thrown out. We could not tell before hand, of course, where the line would be drawn below which all subscriptions would be allotted. The purpose of Congress was to sell the bonds in small lots. Three hours after a loan was closed every subscription from a corporation as well as each individual subscription for $50,000 and over was in the post office with a letter of rejection. In seven hours we knew that persons who had asked for $4,500 or less would exhaust the loan, so the line was drawn right there. Half the bonds, we learned, would go to 230,000 persons, none of whom had asked for more than $500. Undoubtedly it was the greatest clerical undertaking, all things considered, since the establishment of the Government." Subsequently in the Treasury Department Mr. Gage made Mr. Vanderlip his ranking assistant and turned over to him much of the most important executive work. The relations between the Department and New York bankers were in his hands almost entirely and in this way his work came under the direct observation of the leading bankers of New York. He resigned in 1901 to enter the banking business in New York and became a protege of James Stillman who sent him to Europe to study financial conditions, and the workings of the European monetary system. He is regarded today as the greatest authority on finance in the United States.

"William Jones, the patient who came in a little while ago," said the hospital attendant, "didn't give his occupation."

"What was the nature of his trouble?" asked the resident physician.

"Injury at the base of the spine."

"Put him down as a book agent."

A Hymn, a Parody and a Song

Mrs. Ella Wheeler Wilcox has written a parody on Julia Ward Howe's "Battle Hymn of the Republic." Mrs. Wilcox calls her parody "The Hymn of the Republic." It is not better than Mrs. Howe's Battle Hymn although neither the Hymn nor the Battle Hymn are in any sense poems; but Mrs. Wilcox's parody is metrically nearer to Kipling's "Song of the Banjo" than is Mrs. Howe's famous verse. "Mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord," sings Mrs. Howe. "I have listened to the sighing of the burdened and the bound," parodies Mrs. Wilcox. And thus the Banjo "With my 'Pilly-willy-wingy-wingy popp!' (O it's any tune that comes into my head!) So I keep 'em moving forward till they drop; So I play 'em up to water and to bed." The same number of feet; the same interval of accent. Count 'em. There was something stately in Mrs. Howe's lines which is entirely lacking in the Wilcox parody; and there is nothing of the vivacity and go that characterizes the Song of the Banjo. I consider the Wilcox parody infinitely inferior in sense and rime to the original, and its "human interest" does not begin to reach the depth that is sounded by the Song of the Banjo. Perhaps this defect is owing to Mrs. Wilcox's congenital humorlessness. Perhaps it is because she takes herself too seriously. "God is calling to the masses," she insists; "to the peasant and the peer; (two "p's" for alliteration to artful aid and an easy rime); He is calling to all classes that the crucial hour is near; (which is neither good verse nor good prose, and wholly incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial) for each rotting throne must tremble and fall broken in the dust, with the leaders who dissemble and betray the people's trust." Whereupon the Banjo answers joyously: "With my 'Hya! Heeya! Heeya! Hullah! Haul!' (O the green that thunders aft along the deck!) Are you sick o' towns and men? You must sign and sail again, for

MEET KING REX

and his throng of

MARDI GRAS

Merrymakers at New Orleans

Krewe of Nereus..Jan. 25	Knights of Momus Feb. 18
Falstaffians .....Feb. 5	Krewe of Proteus.Feb. 22
Elves of Oberon..Feb. 11	Rex' Arrival .....Feb. 23

Your Direct Way from San Francisco via Los Angeles and El Paso —along Pacific Shores—by the Old Missions—Southern California Orange Groves—The Salton Sea—Palisades of the Rio Grande—Rice and Cotton Fields of the South.

Drawing-room Sleepers; Berths; Sections; Drawing Rooms. Dining Service unequaled. Observation Car; Open-Air Rotunda; Ladies' Parlor; Gentlemen's Cafe; Library.

Personally Conducted Tourist Excursion Parties to Chicago, St. Louis, Cincinnati, New Orleans and Washington.

Write for "Wayside Notes Along the Sunset Route"—Tells in detail of the attractions of the Southern Route.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC

TICKET OFFICES

884 Market St. 14 Powell St. Market-St. Ferry Depot
Third and Townsend Sts. 13th and Franklin Sts., Oakland

VALENTINES

Every kind at every price from a penny to several dollars .·. Comics till you'd die a-laughing .·. Love songs that make your heart ache .·. Novelties, old stand-bys, in fact, so many kinds that we can't even begin to describe them.

SMITH BROS. VALENTINE HEADQUARTERS OAKLAND

462-464 THIRTEENTH STREET, Between Broadway and Washington

it's Johnny Bowlegs, pack your kit and trek!'" I am convinced that Mrs. Wilcox's Hymn of the Republic is entirely unnecessary. Mrs. Howe's Battle Hymn of the Republic will satisfy every patriotic need; and Kipling's Song of the Banjo will supply the comedy element that Mrs. Wilcox cannot express however hard she may try.

She—How is it that handsome men marry homely women?
He—I guess they need the money.

On to the Phillippines

Brigadier-General Daniel H. Bush came to town the other day en route for the Philippines where he will take command of one of the departments, probably the department of Luzon. This is the fourth time that he has been assigned to the Philippines. When he was appointed a brigadier-general last winter he was colonel of the Twenty-fourth Infantry. He has spent a total of seven years in the islands. Brigadier-General John J. Pershing, recently in command of Fort William McKinley in the Philippines and now on leave in the United States, has been assigned to duty as commanding officer of the Department of Mindanao, vice Brigadier-General Hasker H. Bliss, who has been ordered to Washington for duty as assistant chief of staff.

The Financial Outlook

By R. E. Mulcahy

There have been very small changes in Wall Street values since last week. The market appears to be in a waiting position. Market leaders are not disposed to do much until President-elect Taft has taken hold, fearing President Roosevelt might break out in a new spot before his hunting expedition is under way. The tariff is also a check to speculation. From well informed quarters it is reported a schedule satisfactory to the Steel Corporation has been agreed upon, which will be taken up by Congress in the immediate future for consideration. Measures affecting other industrial properties are receiving the attention of Congress. With these conditions prevailing it is the part of wisdom that no overloading of new commitments should be undertaken.

The general market gives every evidence that stocks are in strong hands and are not for sale. The public holdings are not large otherwise, the long looked for decline would have materialized ere this. The principal weakness has been for sale freely on every bulge; this is true of Smelters common. The declines have not been as great in the latter as in Amalgamated Copper. The supply of copper ore is probably larger than the public is aware of. Producers seem to offer their supplies freely at the market price instead of asking above the ruling price, as is generally the case when supplies are normal.

The railway equipment industrials have shown firmness; rumors are going the rounds of increased dividends being announced by several of these concerns, especially American Car and Foundry, American Locomotive and Railway Steel Springs. Any of these companies could increase its dividends according to published resources and earnings. Their management, however, are showing a regard for the future preferring to build up a large surplus to withstand any reverses the commercial interests of the country might run into. The precaution displayed by these industrial concerns is very commendable and warrants a greater regard for their securities. A more staple industry than the American Locomotive and American Car and Foundry Companies cannot be found. Their products will always be in demand; railways will constantly have to replenish their rolling stock, making the demand for new supplies continuous. This condition guarantees the life of the Industrial Equipment Companies. Their securities must and will sell higher. Now that Mr. Harriman practically dictates the policy of the New York Central, the railway world is wondering just what he has in the cellar to treat his friends to; will he have a fatherly love for poor Erie and arrange an entrance into New York City over the Central terminals, or will he be worsted in an effort of this character by the Vanderbilts who practically control all the terminals used by the Central? The Erie will soon have its Jersey tunnels bored which will give it ample facilities for handling its already overtaxed suburban traffic. This condition has been one of Erie's greatest drawbacks, causing the blocking of traffic to such an extent that serious delays resulted, also adding greatly to the company's operating expenses. It also retarded the growth of the country through which the Erie looks for its suburban revenue. It does not require any great imagination to foresee some wonderful changes in the operation of railroads in the very near future. Harriman is the czar of the railway world today. He carries his crown very gracefully. He is the greatest, the most progressive developer the country has ever seen. His methods have proved more beneficial than those of any financier up to the present age. He forces development throughout the country through which he is interested as no other man has done; this means the country from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The Pacific Coast owes much and will continue to be a debtor to the railways for its prosperity and future. The railway building prospects throughout the Pacific Coast seem like a dream. Day by day bright clouds are appearing in the horizon signalling renewed prosperity for California as well as other sections of the Pacific Coast. The railways have much to do with these conditions of advancement.

Rudolph Barth, watchmaker and jeweler, now permanently located at 36 Kearny street.

HOTEL ARGONAUT

Society of California Pioneers Building

FOURTH STREET NEAR MARKET — San Francisco — CENTRE OF THE CITY

Catering to Family and Commercial Trade

400 Rooms $1.00 per day and up Dining room seats 500 guests

Special 50c Luncheon from 11:30 to 2 p. m.

Weekly and monthly rates on application. Free bus meets all trains and steamers.

Telephone Douglas 3393 EDWARD ROLKIN, Manager

Telephone DOUGLAS 2487 R. E. MULCAHY, Manager

E. F. HUTTON & CO.

THE PIONEER HOUSE

BROKERS

Members
New York Stock Exchange
New York Cotton Exchange
New York Coffee Exchange
Chicago Board of Trade

490 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Branch, ST. FRANCIS HOTEL

Two Private Wires to Chicago and NewYork

Washington, D. C., 1301 F Street
Los Angeles, 112 W. Third Street
New York, 31-33-35 New Street

Social Prattle

By TANTALUS

One of the Graces

Will wonders never cease? I wonder. Well, what is it now? Oh, nothing new under the sun; nothing much—merely too much for me, and Solomon, like the way of an American maid with a European manikin. How comes Mrs. Adair to be at Millbrae, visiting Mrs. Whitelaw Reid, and the Bavardes, to whom speech is golden, to be keeping brazen silence? Just think of it! Mrs. Adair, widow of John George Adair, of Rathdair, Queen's County, Ireland, and two or three other of the most beautiful places that Isle of Beauty and the Unblessed boasts; to say nothing of 16 Curson Place, London, where she entertains who's who in a style what's what; that is to say, royalty, royally, being Queen Alexandra's friend, a friend of one dare not say how many years' standing. Enough, that the friendship began when the one was known the world over as the Beautiful Princess of Wales, and the other as the fairest of the Three American Graces, the other two being her sisters, Mrs. Post and Mrs. Rodgers. For, like the majority of beautiful British women, Mrs. Adair is an American, daughter of General Wadsworth, who died bravely fighting to uphold an opinion of his which, happily, he held in common with one Abraham Lincoln, whose centenary we celebrate next week. Be our interest in Mrs. Adair what it may, she still has much interest in us—has, or had, the last I heard, large interests in the Aqua Vita Ranch, one of the biggest cattle concerns in Texas, for that matter, in the world. Furthermore be it known that in a whole city full of noted entertainers, namely, London, Mrs. Adair is notable for the art wherewith she conceals the difficult art of entertaining, her hospitality being poetry,—and poets are born, not made,—she being, as it were, entertained of her guests, they owning the house. As Pindar sang her Grecian prototype, she is the guardian of vernal sweetness, the friend and protector of everything graceful and beautiful, ever associated with the gentle decorum, the purity and happiness of life; with cheerful amusement, good-will, and gladness among men. Of the three sisters, rivals only in the minds of mortals subject to error, I take her to be the one yclept Euphrosyne.

Photo. Boyer DORIS WILSHIRE

One of the debutantes of the season.

In the Offing

Our smart set hasn't had a genuine thrill for many a moon. Its members having had to choose between being dangerous or dull have preferred to be dull, and despite the eternal vigilance of the gossips nobody has been caught off the reservation of prim respectability, but according to the very latest report the situation is far from hopeless. If smoke is really an infallible indication of combustion there ought to be quite a glare on the fashionable horizon ere long. But as George Bernard Shaw says, you never can tell. What appears to be smoke may turn out to be nothing more than a passing cloud. Society may be doomed to pursue the even tenor of its eventless way with nothing more to supply it with diversion than the rival activities of Mrs. Alexander and Mr. Greenway.

Photo, Genthe HELENA BREWER

One of the debutantes of the season.

A Dearth of Male Partners

The social rivalry which has resulted in the giving of so many large balls this season, coupled with the hints and stories of the internal warfares, the unnecessary slights and the strict drawing of social lines, has had, seemingly, and unexpected effect. Possibly it was only

MISS ELSIE DE WOLFE
REPRESENTED BY
MRS. EDGAR DE WOLFE
INTERIOR DECORATION AND OBJECTS D' ART
TEMPORARY OFFICE, GRANADA HOTEL TELEPHONE FRANKLIN 422

MRS. OSCAR MANSFELDT
PIANIST
TELEPHONE WEST 314 1801 BUCHANAN STREET

unforseen accident which kept so many men away from the last Greenway, for, as a rule, men are content to let women manage these matters in their own way, asking only that there shall be outward peace in which to enjoy social pleasures. They find cares enough in the business world not to crave additional ones in their hours of ease. At all events, whatever may have been the cause, the result was unfortunate for the last Greenway, where so many men were conspicuously absent that the superfluity of girls was emphasized, and even the most popular of the debutantes, whose proud boast heretofore has been that they never missed a dance were obliged to accept the inevitable and play the part of wall flowers. One of the very prettiest girls in San Francisco, finding her dances unclaimed, preferred to retire to the seclusion of the dressing room, where she was soon joined by others, equally intent on escaping from observation. The debutantes of this winter, who were so jubilant over the prospects of plenty of partners from which to choose felt the sudden drop in the thermometer keenly, and are rejoicing that the last two large balls of the season will be masqued affairs which will give them the opportunity of disguising any chagrin or disappointment meted out to them by an unkind fate under the kindly screen of masque and costume. There is no plausible reason on the surface why the genial Greenway should have met with such a Waterloo. The Fairmont ball room was at its best, the decorations were beautiful, and the supper would have tempted an epicure. Anticipations were of the highest, and the numerous dinner parties which preceded it might have been taken as an assured guarantee that it would go off with all the swing for which the Greenway affairs are noted, yet, as a ball is proved a failure. If Mr. Greenway was disturbed by the condition he bore the disappointment with equanimity, and did his best to retrieve the situation.

The Beautiful But Brazen Mrs. Atherton

That Pinero and Grundy in the more salacious of their comedies have pretty accurately reflected the manners of London's smart set we have learned from the testimony in more than one divorce suit, and now that the Stirling case is on trial we find that the playwrights have most faithfully reproduced types of characters that contribute to the gaiety of the fashionable herd. Take Mrs. Atherton, for example, the lady who is accused of having been intimate with Mr. Stirling. Here is a woman with a past whose counterparts abound in the risque British drama. This is not the first time she has figured in a racy scandal. Years ago I supposed that by her escapades she had incurred the penalty of social ostracism, but I learn from the despatches that she is as much in the swim as ever. Mrs. Atherton is a remarkable woman. She is known as the most beautiful woman in England. Imagine a woman with a wealth of chestnut hair, features almost perfect but not too severe, complexion radiant with health, hands exquisite as few women possess and the figure of a modern divinity. Then too much would not be said. Even women who dislike her confess her personal charm, while there is not a man who ever met her that she has not favorably impressed. Of commanding intellectual bent, she cloaks the determination of her character beneath a manner of exceptional attractiveness. She is the third daughter of Sir Edward Dean Paul and sister of the present baronet. She married in 1892 Col. Atherton, commanding the Twelfth Lancers, one of the finest soldiers in the British army. She created a personal sensation when she went to South Africa as one of Sir Frederick Treves's "plague of women," bent on nursing wounded officers. It was in South Africa and on the return voyage that a Duke, one of the youngest and wealthiest of British peers, was ready to cast his coronet and his gold at her feet. Society looked eagerly for a divorce suit, which was avoided only by the most powerful intervention. The young Duke's fiancee cancelled the engagement, which, however, the efforts of her mother and family succeeded in renewing. Col. Atherton finally divorced her in 1906, the Hon. Yarde Buller being named as co-respondent. The names of many members of the peerage were bandied about, and one of them was fully expected to marry her. Yarde Buller married Denise Orme of the musical comedy stage and Mrs. Atherton failed in her breach of promise case against him because the promise was made by him while she was still a married woman. She still remains unmarried, the queen of many subjects.

When Leader Meets Leader

Notwithstanding all the talk there has been of rivalry between Ned Greenway and Mrs. Alexander they are really the best of friends. Mr. Greenway is always a guest at the Colonial dances and Mrs. Alexander always contributes to the color and grace of the Assemblies. The two distinguished leaders met last Friday night at the Fairmont and Mrs. Alexander took occasion to express a matter of curiosity. "I wonder," she said, "when the newspapers will leave you and me alone!"

"Perhaps when you quit writing for them," said the Czar and he beamed on Mrs. Alexander with his blandest smile.

He'd Show Them

It seems incredible that girls of the higher social classes, who have enjoyed the benefits of travel and intercourse with the world can never learn the discretion of holding their tongues from personal comment on their fellow travelers. Two California girls had an unpleasant experience in Europe recently. A distinguished looking German entered the same compartment of the train, and noting the extremely snug fit of his trousers, they began to comment to each other, using French as the medium of their remarks. Amongst other witticisms, they professed a great curiosity as to how he donned the garments, and, as he was leaving the train, he politely presented a card on which he had written his perfect willingness to gratify them if they would honor him with a visit.

Did it on a Wager

The dance given on Saturday evening by the Gamma chapter of Alpha Sigma was a brilliant success. This sorority is composed of the most exclusive young girls in the city who are attending the Girls' High School. The costumes were elaborate and the supper dainty. Dancing was continued until midnight. During the progress of the ball Miss Elsie Draper walked in attired in a very handsome light blue robe surmounted by a huge black hat covered with ostrich plumes. She took her seat by the chaperones, but when the first notes of a waltz began Miss Draper and her escort joined the dancers. One of the ladies quietly requested her to remove her hat, which she did without demur, offering apologetically: "I know of course it is not the thing to do, and that it is never allowed at the Greenway dances, but I did this on a wager." And apropos of Greenway, he

"Art and refinement are displayed by tasteful attire"

Vogel's

Makers of

LADIES' GOWNS and FANCY COSTUMES

Phone Franklin 2802 1321 SUTTER STREET, near Van Ness Ave.

NORTH GERMAN LLOYD S. S. CO.

SHORT ROUTE TO EUROPE

From New York Every Tuesday by the Four Luxurious Flyers: "Kronprinzessin Cecile," "Kaiser Wilhelm II," "Kronprinz Wilhelm," "Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse."

From New York Every Thursday by the Twin-Screw Passenger Steamers: "George Washington" (new), Largest German Steamer, 722½ feet long—27,000 Tons Register, "Prinz Friedrich Wilhelm" (new).

To Mediterranean Ports, etc., etc., Every Saturday: S. S. "Berlin" (new), 19,200 Tons Register, Largest Passenger Steamer to the Mediterranean, "Prinzess Irene," "Koeniz Albert," etc.

TRAVELERS' CHECKS

ROBERT CAPELLE 250 POWELL STREET

General Pacific Coast Agent Near Geary St. and St. Francis Hotel does not permit the uninvited to sit in the boxes and gaze down on his guests at a dance, so, when, on this occasion, he crossed the floor with Miss McMullin and escorted her to a box where they might observe the dancers, it is no wonder that a prominent lady present commented upon his breach of propriety.

Pond in Yokohama

Late news from Yokahama is to the effect that Edward Pond is in business out there. His partner is Augustus Moulder, the divorced husband of Lottie Clark, who subsequently married Leslie Wright and is reported to have divorced him also. Mayor Pond is said to make an allowance of several hundred dollars a month to his son's wife for her support and that of her two young sons.

Our Gibson Girl

The news that Mrs. J. D. Peters and Miss Anna Peters will leave on February 10th for Old Point Comfort to arrive there at about the same as the fleet, revives interest in the gallant naval man from New Orleans, whose attentions were so marked while the fleet was visiting San Francisco, and must be dampening to the spirits of that prominent lawyer and club man who has been hovering round the same shrine.

The Clark Estate

The threatened contest of the will of Mrs. Charlotte F. Clark, who died last week leaving a considerable estate, brings into prominence another family genealogy. Jeremiah F. Clark, who died some fifteen years ago, was a lawyer well known locally. He was paralyzed for some years before his death. It is his widow whose property now threatens to furnish "pickings" for the legal fraternity. Her daughter, Edith Clark, married Charles G. Lyman, an army officer, who resigned his commission several years ago. They have one son. Charlotte married Augustus Moulder, but divorced him after one child was born to them, and subsequently married Leslie Wright, whom she is reported to have parted from within the year. Edward Clark, the son, came into unpleasant notoriety some years ago by marrying "the sweet pea girl," a woman who attracted attention to herself by her antics in connection with the Durrant and other notorious criminal trials. It is she who is threatening now to put in a claim for a share of the estate.

The Rosses of Ross Valley

The sad death of Ross Makin, an engineer on the Ocean Shore railroad, who was washed from a rock on January 30th near Santa Cruz while gathering mussels and drowned in spite of the efforts of his fireman to rescue him, recalls the vicissitudes of another pioneer family, who were at one time immensely wealthy—the Rosses, after whom the Marin County valley took its name. Mrs. Ross at one time owned all the land extending from Ross Valley to Sausalito, including what is now known as Kentfield, but it has long since passed out of their hands, having been cut up into building lots and sold, so that there is little now to remind one of the days when Ross Valley was occupied by only the most exclusive and wealthy. Mrs. Makin, the wife of the dead engineer, was a Miss Ross, as was, likewise, Mrs. Worn. Mrs. Worn quarreled with her mother, and at her death Mrs. Ross left all her property to young Makin, and there was the inevitable contest of the will and a compromise settlement. Anna Worn was adopted by the Butler family of Ross Valley, but after she was grown she returned to her mother, and in time, married a Mr. Perry. There are three children in the family. The Misses Belle and Grace Worn, the well known decorators, also belong to the connection.

A Cut-Up Dinner

Of the many handsome dinners which preceded the last Assembly, that given by Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Welch in the gray room of the Fairmont continues to be the most discussed. Some novel and startling features were introduced which served to break up the least hint of formality, and render it a most enjoyable affair. Mrs. Welch is a clever woman, and it is to her that the credit is due. She has a genius for introducing individual touches, so that her affairs are not only totally unlike each other but just as different from those of every one else. The entertainment of Friday night proved to be an Indian dinner. The decorations took the form of Indian baskets, ferns and pussy willows, and the color scheme was carried out to the minutest particular, even the candies appearing in the forms and sizes of Indian beads. The dinner partners were apportioned by matching the beadwork fobs and bracelets which were presented to each guest on entering the dressing room, and the place cards were of leather ornamented in Indian bead work. Mrs. Welch has the rare faculty of bringing together people who are congenial to each other and placing them to the best advantage. During the course of the dinner an alarm clock went off under the chair of one guest, and ere long, a fire alarm was heard from another quarter, so it is needless to hint that the last vestige of formality was eliminated.

The "Pop Concert

An encouraging sign of increased interest in the Lyric "Pop" Concerts was manifested by the large attendance at the second of the series. There was hardly a vacant seat, and as a rule vacant seats are all too prominent when chamber music is in question. It was a Dvorak afternoon, the entire program being devoted to this composer. The quartette for strings (op. 95) was the open-

PHONE FRANKLIN 2810

You may be partial to some particular brand of wines or liquors. We carry in this department nearly every favorite kind of champagne, whiskey, cordial and liqueur. Quality is proved only by test, and we hope you will make it as critical as we do in our selections.

L. D. McLEAN CO.

IMPORTERS AND GROCERS

1158-1168 Sutter St. San Francisco

Luscious Old Red Wine

LA QUESTA

AGED IN THE WOOD AND MELLOWED IN THE BOTTLE

Pronounced by experts the best wine made in California

FOR SALE BY

L. D. McLEAN CO. McCAW BROS.

L. N. WALTER, Cor. Devisadero and California

JULIUS BERENDSEN, 762 Devisadero Street

Served at The St. Francis, The Fairmont, Hotel Rafael, Peninsula Hotel, Jules, Chantilly, Berges & Frank's Old Poodle Dog, Thompson's, New Frank's, Union League Club and Cosmos Club.

ing number. It was at once apparent that much practice had been bestowed upon this selection for it went with a beautiful smoothness and unity. The Lento was particularly pleasing and evoked a round of applause. A group of Dvorak songs followed, Mr. Laurence H. Strauss being the vocalist, accompanied by Mr. Gyula Ormay. Mr. Strauss has a pleasing tenor, which though not full nor resonant was equal to the demands of his number. He sings with taste and finish, a clear enunciation being one of his characteristics. In response to an encore Mr. Strauss gave two very charming songs in French. The quintette for strings and piano (op. 8) occupied the final place on the program. Its four characteristic movements are full of a wild and romantic spirit, evinced in strange chords and trickey rhythm. It was successfully played by the Lyric quartette ably assisted by Mr. Ormay, and evidently pleased the audience notwithstanding that it is well off the beaten track of music. Mr. Greenbaum deserves well of the public for the excellent programs he offers at the "Pops," and for the capable artists who interpret them. It is to be hoped that his efforts are widening the circle of those who appreciate the music of the string quartette.

San Franciscans Off for Europe

Among the passengers who left New York on January 28th by the Hamburg-American liner Moltke were a large party of prominent San Franciscans, including Mrs. John D. Spreckels, Claus Spreckels Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Robert Oxnard, Mrs. W. D. K. Gibson and daughter, Mrs. Sarah Stetson Winslow, Miss Ruth L. Winslow, Miss Marie Louise Winslow, Mr. C. E. Benjamin, Mr. Edward G. Vinzent, Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Rossier, Mr. R. H. Turner, Dr. and Mrs. A. L. Langfeld, Mr. and Mrs. William Goegel, Miss Edna Goegel, Miss Gladys Goegel, Mrs. L. B. Tuttle, Miss D. R. Tuttle, Mr. Thomas Luke Ryan, Mr. Pierce J. Ryan, and Rev. and Mrs. G. Avery Reeder. They are bound on an eighty-days- pleasure cruise which will include Madeira, Spain, Algiers, Italy, Malta, Egypt, the Holy Land, Constantinople, Greece, Corfu and other Mediterranean points of interest.

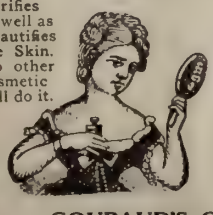
The Coming Kermess

The bachelor contingent of San Francisco society has already evinced its practical interest in the coming Kermess by engaging, three weeks in advance, every seat in the front line, generally designated as the "bald-headed row," at the Central Theatre, and that, not only for the opening night, but for all four of the performances. No doubt they will prove an inspiration for the fair dancers, and at any rate, they are looking forward to the affair with quite as much enthusiasm as the participants themselves, and promise to lead the applause with ardor. Most of the boxes are engaged and so many season tickets have been taken that the Kermess promises to be as grand a success fiancially as it assuredly will be in other respects. Miss Stewart has excluded from the Norman Cafe a number of those in the social limelight who have presumed that their social position gave them an ex-officio right to be present at the rehearsals. She wants the general effect to be absolutely new when it is presented to the audience, and, very wisely, has politely but firmly, made her wishes known. In spite of this, however, the other day, a number of the youthful elect strolled in and preempted seats, prepared to spend a pleasurable afternoon. As they proved impervious to a gentle invitation that their presence was undesired, Miss Stewart moved the class she was instructing to a small room adjoining, a hint so broad that the intruders accepted it and withdrew themselves. As many of those who have been selected to take part are really accomplished in the art of dancing, and all have been chosen with a special consideration of their gracefulness, the affair promises to be a revelation of artistic beauty. The Children's Hospital, the charity which is to be the beneficiary, will probably be substantially aided by the receipts.

An Artistic Success

Miss Margaret Kemble's rendering of the story of "Pelleas and Melissande" on Wednesday in the Colonial ball room of the St. Francis proved quite worthy of the high expectations which had been aroused. Miss Kemble's many friends in society may be credited with the responsibility for the overflowing audience, but the artistic success was all her own. Hereafter she will need no introduction. Her interpretation of the somewhat cryptic theme of Maeterlinck was a revelation of psychological lights and shades that delighted her hearers, and the charm of the affair was completed by the interpretative piano and violoncello selections, the latter by Arthur Weiss.

Madam Olga, the Paris milliner, is now in New York selecting a stock of Eastern and European novelties—millinery to be displayed upon her early return at her new location, 237 Post street.



A SKIN OF BEAUTY IS A JOY FOREVER

DR. T. FELIX GOURAUD'S

ORIENTAL CREAM

OR MAGICAL BEAUTIFIER

Purifies as well as Beautifies the Skin. No other cosmetic will do it.

Removes Tan, Pimples, Freckles, Moth Patches, Rash and Skin Diseases, and every blemish on beauty, and defies detection. It has stood the test of 60 years; no other has, and it is so harmless we taste it to be sure it is properly made. Accept no counterfeit of similar name. The distinguished Dr. L. A. Sayre said to a lady of the haut-on (a patient): "As you ladies will use them, I recommend 'Gouraud's Cream' as the least harmful of all the skin preparations."

For sale by all Druggists and Fancy Goods Dealers.

GOURAUD'S ORIENTAL TOILET POWDER

For infants and adults. Exquisitely perfumed. Relieves Skin Irritation, cures Sunburn and renders an excellent complexion. Price 25 Cents, by Mail.

GOURAUD'S POUDRE SUBTILE

Removes Superfluous Hair. Price $1.00, by mail

FERD. T. HOPKINS, Prop'r, 37 Great Jones St., New York City.

GO TO YOUR DEALER TO-DAY

DON'T PUT IT OFF—ASK HIM FOR

ED. PINAUD'S HAIR TONIC

(Eau de Quinine)

and begin AT ONCE to get the splendid benefits that come from the use of this wonderful French hair tonic.

THE SIGNS OF APPROACHING BALDNESS are falling or brittleness of the hair, dandruff, itching scalp and excessive oil secretion.

DON'T DELAY

until it is too late--it is as easy to start the good work to-day as it is to-morrow or next week--remember, the sooner you begin to use this delightful preparation the sooner

YOU WILL GET THE BENEFIT

The hair responds quickly to cultivation, you will be surprised to find how soon it will improve. The benefit is lasting, too.

THE HAIR BECOMES BEAUTIFUL with the lustre of perfect health--it is easier to arrange--it assumes the refined silky appearance so much admired by everybody.

ED. PINAUD'S HAIR TONIC is sold by first-class dealers everywhere.

PARFUMERIE ED. PINAUD,

ED. PINAUD Building, New York

In the Social Spotlight

One of the many pretty luncheons given at the St. Francis last week was that by Mrs. Joe Ehrman in honor of her niece, Miss Babette Newman.

Quite a number of city people spent their time at Del Monte during the week just past. Amongst them were Mr. and Mrs. A. M. McDearmott, who motored down with their small son; Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Booth and Mrs. Booth's sister, Miss Blanche Davis; Mr. Stanley Fay and Miss Edna Fay; Dr. and Mrs. C. F. Mann.

Mrs. George Cadwalader and Miss Linda Cadwalader gave another delightful tea on Sunday afternoon at their charming home on Devisadero street.

The guests of the Hotel Carlton in Berkeley enjoyed a delightful dance last Wednesday evening, and on the coming Saturday evening there will be a progressive bridge party. These social affairs have come to be a regular feature of the life at this popular hostelry.

One of the notable events in club circles for the month of February will be the presentation of Miss Katherine Jewell Everts by the Association of Collegiate Alumnae in a charming comedy entitled "My Lady's Ring" at the Fairmont on the afternoon of February 6th. The affair, which will be for the benefit of the Stanford Women's Club House; has excited great interest both because of the object and for the rare dramatict treat which is promised.

Among the recent arrivals at Tamalpais Tavern from San Francisco were Mr. Charles Frank, Miss Eva Coleman, Louise Bauer and D. E. Hayes. From Chicago: Mr. J. H. Frank, Miss Mable Frank, H. B. Hunt, Mr. and Mrs. Philip Lamon, Mrs. H. H. Hunt, G. C. Kingham. From Blackheath, England: W. S. Higham.

Mrs. Virginia Aldrich Beede, who went to Los Gatos several months ago for the benefit of her health, has been steadily improving. She is an interesting woman and has been greatly missed socially this winter, as she always does her full share of the entertaining, especially in the exclusive Southern set.

Mrs. L. R. Meade will be the hostess at a tea on February 6th in the Laurel Court at the Fairmont. Miss Maybell Toy will be the guest of honor.

Miss Marie Churchill was hostess at an informal tea on Sunday afternoon at the residence of her parents on Devisadero street. The guests included several of the debutantes, and army and navy officers.

Mr. and Mrs. Laurence Scott of Burlingame spent the week end at the St. Francis.

Mrs. M. H. De Young entertained at dinner the participants in the dance which is to be given under Mrs. De Young's chaperonage in the Kermiss for charity from February 15th to February 20th. Amongst those who were guests at the dinner and will take part in the dance were Miss Enid Gregg, Miss Florence Cluff, Miss Marian Marvin, Miss Doris Wilshire, Miss Emily Johnson, Miss Frances Stewart, Miss Kathleen De Young, Edward M. Greenway, Sam Hopkins and Charles De Young.

Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Newmark, prominent socially in Los Angeles, have decided to make San Francisco their home, and are now occupying apartments at the St. Francis.

Mr. Brooke M. Wright, youngest son of the late Judge Seldon S. Wright, who has been living in Tacoma, Washington, for the past two years, has been sent as special correspondent to report the doings of the State Legislature now in session at Olympia for the Tacoma News. Young Wright is a graduate of the University of Virginia and a brilliant and able writer. His mother, Mrs. Selden S. Wright, is also a writer, having contributed to various papers and periodicals at home and abroad.

Society has been eager to make pleasant the visit of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Allen Keys of Salt Lake City at the St. Francis, so many of our local people having enjoyed the hospitality of these gracious hosts in Utah. An elaborate dinner was given by Captain and Mrs. Samuel V. Haw, and informal teas and receptions occur every day.

Amongst the recent arrivals at Byron Hot Springs were Mr. J. Ferris, Miss Mabel Young, Miss Ethel Young, San Francisco; Mr. John Kelly, Coalinga; George Swanston, Sacramento; Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Holloway, Honolulu; Mrs. M. Welcker, Mrs. C. M. Johnson, Miss C. M. Johnson, Mrs. Henry Glass, Berkeley; the Misses Armstrong, Davis; Mr. Arthur W. [illegible] J. Pantosky, Oakland.

Mrs. F. T. Low and Miss Low have taken apartments at the Fairmont for the winter. Mrs. Low is the widow of a former governor of this State and has a wide acquaintance amongst the older families.

Among the interesting guests at the Carlton are General and Mrs. Woodruff and their daughter, Mrs. Roger Williams, and Mrs. Wayland Trask, who came up from Los Angeles last week with her daughter, Miss Dorothy Trask. Miss Trask is attending the University of California and is a member of the exclusive Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority.

THE POTTER

SANTA BARBARA

AMERICAN PLAN

Rooms Single	Has	Rates Double
$4.00	Its Own	$7.00
$5.00	Squab Ranch	$9.00
$6.00	Live Stock Farm	$11.00
$7.00	Poultry Ranches	$12.00
$8.00	Vegetable Gardens	$13.00

Private Country Club
Race Track and Polo Grounds
Private Livery Wireless Telegraph
Art Gallery and Picturesque Golf Links
Good Table Good Living Cheerful Service
Rates Graduated to All Reasonable Requirements
Accommodations for One Thousand Guests
Artesian Well and Refrigerating Plant
Conservatories and Green Houses
A Whole Mile of Geraniums

We	Open all the Year Round	No
Produce	30,000 Fine Rose Bushes	Better
All of Our	Children's Grove	Table on
Own Staple	Zoo 60,000	the Whole
Delicacies	Pigeons	Pacific Slope

and
Would Be Pleased to Send You Booklet

MILO M. POTTER, Manager

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT
HEAR OUR ARTISTS AND ORCHESTRA DURING DINNER AND AFTER THEATRE
MISS ANITA GILL, Mezzo Soprano
MISS NADYNE PARKER, Lyric Soprano
THOMPSON'S ANNEX
O'Farrell near Fillmore

THE COSMOS

658 MARKET ST., OPPOSITE PALACE HOTEL

Table d' Hote Lunch, 50c.

Salad
Fresh Crab — Sliced Tomato
Soup
Cream of Onion — Sliced Tomato
Entrees
Tenderloin of Sole, Tartar Sauce — Salmon Trout, Maitre d'Hotel
Pot Roast with Noodles — Sheep's Feet Spanish
Vienna Schnitzel, Tomato Sauce — Leg of Lamb with Spanish
Tagliarini and Cheese — Roast Beef, au Jus
Dessert
Sliced Bananas and Cream — Water Melon — Ice Cream
Apple Pie — Squash Pie
Swiss Cheese — Roquefort Cheese — Brie Cheese

You will find SWAIN'S
Bakery and Restaurant on the line at
1241 VAN NESS AVENUE, Near Sutter Street
AFTERNOON TEA for Shoppers with Music from 3 to 5 o'clock

JULES' RESTAURANT 328 BUSH STREET
Below Kearny
Phone Kearny 1812
MUSIC SUNDAYS
OPEN EVENINGS, INCLUDING SUNDAY
DINNER With Wine, 75c.
DINNER, SUNDAYS AND HOLIDAYS With Wine, $1.00.

Stage

Hotaling's Richelieu

I have been reading a talented critic who, apparently, went to Ye Liberty Theatre in Oakland for the purpose of defying Mr. Richard Hotaling to make good in the role of Richelieu. I am surprised to find that he ridicules Mr. Hotaling for being funny in this role. This critic is evidently laboring under the delusion that Bulwer's cardinal is a grave and reverend churchman who never provokes a laugh. A similar delusion has possessed many actors. But Macready, the first Richelieu, the actor for whom the play was written, and who produced the play under the supervision of the author, availed himself of opportunities to move his audiences to laughter. As a matter of fact Hotaling's conception of the role is in strict accordance with the best traditions of the drama. He ignores none of the expedients which he is expected to seize to raise a laugh or cause a thrill. In his performance there are to be met many memorable moments of absolutely perfect skill and of refined intelligence. There is scarcely a line or a word that does not receive approximately its value. Incidents and episodes receive a nice adjustment of light and shadow, and on the whole the performance is creditable, more creditable than some performances which have been given in this city by high salaried actors. If Hotaling came to us as a Frohman star from out the magic circle of Broadway instead of as a millionaire dilettante, one whom we must regard as incredible as an actor, our critics would be very likely to rhapsodize on his artistry. But in the circumstances he must not expect to impress them very deeply. Nor for that matter should he expect to impress anybody very deeply in that early Victorian melodramatic mixture of bad Hugo and worse Dumas which is noted principally for its clumsy workmanship, its anachronisms and its general falsification of history.

The Play at the Van Ness

"The Wolf" is a play that grips. It is a fragment torn bleeding out of life, the sylvan, almost savage life of the Canadian woods. As a drama it is tense, nervous, closely constructed. There are but six characters, all principals, and the action observes closely but not perfectly the classic unities of time and place. There is a savage sort of poetry in many of the lines, and the outcome of the dramatic action satisfies that primitive sense of justice inherent in all minds, no matter how complex our civilization. "The Wolf" is William McDonald, an American engineer, whose prey for the moment is Hilda, the half Swedish daughter of McTavish, Scotchman and hater of women and Swedes. Jules Beaubien, young French Canadian loves Hilda in simple, manly fashion. Jules, besides his rivalry with the engineer for the possession of Hilda, has an older and darker grudge, namely, the ruin and desertion of his dead sister Annette. With this double motive the play is a duel to the death between the Canadian and the American,—always tense and thrilling, sometimes false and melodramatic, as in the second act where one feels the falsity of the situation when McDonald's ruse wins the father's consent to his daughter's abduction. The interest is cumulative up to the climax, a duel with knives fought in the dark to an accompaniment of howling wolves. It is breathless, and compelling. Andrew Robson as Jules is flexible and strong with a strain of savage poetry that suits his environment. Alfred Swenson has conceived the Wolf on right lines, his portrayal needs a little filling out. Louis Haines as the flippant and slangy George Huntly supplies the comedy element. His boyish make-up and cherubic expression go a long way towards the success of the part. Ben Lamar as the half mad Scot and Conrad Cantzen as the equally half mad courier des bois Batiste are excellent, though both are handicapped by dialect. Lorie Palmer is the only woman in the cast. As the sad ill treated Hilda, a sort of frontier Iphegenia, she is interesting without adventitious aids from costume or make up. She plays the character with earnestness but with a certain lack of shading. In "The Wolf" and "Paid in Full" Eugene Walter has proved himself to be one of the most powerful of later playwrights.

Zangwill at the Alcazar

"Merely Mary Ann," the Alcazar's attraction for the coming week, is a modern version of the old fairy tale of Cinderella. It was written by Israel Zangwill and for three months, with Eleanor Robson in the title role, it packed the Duke of York's Theatre in London at every performance and the dramatic critics unanimously pronounced it the best thing that ever came to them out of America. Prior to its going to England it had been presented in all the big cities of the United States, and was a notable success in San Francisco about six years ago at the old Columbia Theatre. Mary Ann is a "slavey" in a London apartment house and the story concerns itself chiefly with her and one of the boarders, a young composer named Launcelot. It is made evident from the first that Launcelot is a man of honor and the household drudge a girl of innate refinement. There are many opportunities in the first part of the play for the exploitation of whimsical humor, quaint romanticism and a kind of very modern chivalry. The character of Mary Ann is not transformed from rusticity, and the humor, tenderness and womanly modesty are shown with exquisite delicacy. Many playgoers will delight in having placed before them a straightforward story with its "old-fashioned" sentiment, and denouement. Miss

GRACE EDMOND

Prima donna of "A Stubborn Cinderella" at the Van Ness Theatre commencing Monday, February 8th.

JANE KELTON

Who will play the Princess Artemia in "The Light Eternal" at the American Theatre.

Evelyn Vaughn is well fitted by temperament and physique to give effective portrayal to the character around whom the play revolves, and Mr. Lytell and the other Alcazar players are equally well cast in this comedy.

"A Stubborn Cinderella"

At the Van Ness Theatre next Monday night for a two week's engagement comes the much talked of musical comedy "A Stubborn Cinderella," coming here almost direct from the new Princess Theatre, Chicago, where it has been running for the past five hundred consecutive performances. This quality musical play, with a Southern California atmosphere, two of its scenes being laid in our State, has been creating a theatrical sensation in Chicago for the past year where it has been playing to capacity business. It has been termed the marvelous music play, with twenty song hits and a beauty chorus of sixty. Homer B. Mason heads the cast, appearing as the energetic young American college man, "Mac." Since leaving vaudeville for the musical comedy line, Mr. Mason has made "good" in every instance, and is a decided hit in this part. He is ably assisted by Miss Grace Edmund, as Lady Leslie, whose beautiful soprano voice is heard to advantage in several numbers. Ethel Dovey, Jack Raffael, Marguerite Keeler, and many others are in the company. The play develops in three acts. The first scene shows the campus of Columbus University, the second a railroad wreck in the West, and the third a view of the Natatorium at Hotel Coronado, San Diego. A number of distinct song hits are sung, the best one perhaps being "When You First Kiss the Last Girl You Love," and many others. Mr. Mort H. Singer producing "A Stubborn Cinderella" has provided a most capable company for the engagement here, and a big chorus of show girls who wear dazzling costumes and sing well will be seen.

"The Light Eternal"

The delightful comedienne, Corinne, and her clever supporting company will make their last appearances in "Lola from Berlin" at the American Theatre this Saturday afternoon and evening and at the Sunday matinee Martin V. Merle's beautiful romance of early Rome, "The Light Eternal," will be presented on an elaborate scale. The play is a familiar one to San Franciscans, having received its first professional production here after it had scored a great success at the author's alma mater, Santa Clara College, where it was acted by the students. Since then it has been used as a starring vehicle by James Neill and Edythe Chapman. Mr. Merle has been a close student of the time, place and people he has drawn together in his drama. His stage pictures are telling and effective in the extreme. The play contains more elements of success than most of the so-called masterpieces founded on Biblical themes, and everywhere it has been presented it has called forth from every walk of life the highest praise. Harry Beresford in "Who's Your Friend" comes next to the American Theatre.

Mackenzie Gordon's Concerts

The principal musical events of the coming week will be the concerts by that magnificent tenor Mackenzie Gordon, an artist who in addition to possessing a beautiful voice perfectly trained, has the ability of interpreting his songs so that the meaning of both composer and author reaches the mind and heart of his auditors. Artists like Mackenzie Gordon are indeed rare and no music lover can afford to miss hearing the remarkably varied and interesting offerings he will present at Christian Science Hall next Tuesday night and the following Sunday afternoon. Assisting Mr. Gordon as solo pianist will be Eugene Blanchard, a young Californian, who recently returned from Vienna. His numbers will include some works never before heard here in public. They are songs from the French, Spanish, German, English, Scotch and Irish, including such universal favorities as "Day is Gone," "Prieslied" from Der Meistersinger; "Land o' the Leal," "Hame," "Lolita," and "E Lucevan de Stelle," from La Tosca. The piano numbers by Mr. Blanchard, from Chopin and Tchaikowsky, are equally interesting. Seats are on sale at Sherman, Clay and Co.'s store, Kearny and Sutter street. Gordon will sing in Oakland Friday afternoon the 12th at Ye Liberty Playhouse, giving a special program. Seats at the theatre Monday.

MACKENZIE GORDON

To appear at Christian Science Hall Tuesday, February 9th and Sunday Afternoon, February 14th.

"The Prince Chap"

Hoyt's highly amusing political satire, "A Contented Woman," with its hundreds of laughs and bright specialties, will be played for the last times at the Valencia Theatre this Sunday afternoon and evening and on Monday night "The Prince Chap," Edward Peple's beautiful love romance and brilliantly successful play, which ran for nearly a year in New York and half a year at the Criterion Theatre, in the English metropolis, and which will make you smile and then cry, and then smile again, will receive its first production by a stock company in San Francisco. "The Prince Chap" will serve to introduce to San Francisco Mace Greenleaf, the new leading man of the Valencia stock company, who comes highly praised by the press and public of other cities. Another important member of the cast will be little Bebe Daniels, one of the cleverest child actresses on the stage. In addition to the usual Wednesday and Sunday matinees, there will be a special performance on Friday afternoon, in honor of Lincoln's Birthday. George Ade's best comedy drama, "The County Chairman," will follow "The Prince Chap" at the Valencia.

The Langendorff Concerts

A recital by a great mezzo or contralto is a rare occurrence in the musical life of this city, where we seem to tempt only sopranos to visit us, but manager Will Greenbaum now announces a really fine mezzo in Mme. Frieda Langendorff from the Royal Opera at Dresden and other great European centers. At Bayreuth Mme. Langendorff was coached by the great Frau Wagner herself, and appeared there in half a dozen of the Wagnerian roles. As a concert singer Mme. Langendorff is said to be very fine. Both Mme. Gadski and Frank La Forge agree that she has a wonderfully beautiful voice of enormous range. In her programs she will introduce some of the aris from the Tchaikowsky operas. She will give three performances: on Thursday evening, February 18th, and Sunday afternoon the 21st in this city, and on Friday afternoon there will be a matinee concert at Ye Liberty Playhouse in Oakland. Mme. Langendorff has also been engaged to give the third concert of the St. Francis Musical Art Society. With this singer Mr. Greenbaum will also introduce a new pianiste, Mme. Flora Karp Heilbron, a young Vienese artist, who met one of our Californian musical students at Stuttgart, with the result that they have thrown their life's fortunes together and San Francisco is the richer by the addition of a really great pianiste and a splendid

SCENE FROM "THE PRINCE CHAP"

The delightful play in which Mace Greenleaf will make his first San Francisco appearance at the Valencia Theatre next week.

volumetic. Mme. Heilbron will play some interesting numbers including a set of Variations by Chopin, which seem to have been overlooked by most pianists.

Princess Theatre

Kolb and Dill are in the last month of their record breaking engagement at the Princess Theatre, and there is every indication that their unprecedented popularity will continue till the termination of their season. In "Bankers and Brokers" they have another clever and diverting vehicle for the exercise of their great comic talent. In spite of the immense success of this play it will be withdrawn the Sunday evening in order that they may revive next Monday night "Lonesome Town" which is pleasantly remembered as one of their happiest efforts. This comedy with music it will be remembered was written by that unfortunate but brilliant playwright, Judson Brusie, and is based on the story of "Watts" a boom town in Southern California. It abounds in absurd and amusing complications and is possessed of exceptionally witty dialogue and amusing denouements. It will be interspersed with new musical numbers specially written for the occasion by J. A. Raynes and will be most perfectly staged by that thoroughly competent director, Charles Sinclair. Kolb and Dill will appear respectively as Chico Charley and Bakersfield Bill, a couple of tramps, who succeed in convulsing their audiences with laughter every time they put in an appearance. The production will be the same that was used by Kolb and Dill during their remarkably prosperous New York season. The Princess new musical comedy company will make their first appearance Monday evening, March 1st. Full particulars will be shortly announced.

Zangwill at the Orpheum

In next weeks' Orpheum program there will be an intense, dramatic episode, entitled "The Never Never Land," by Israel Zangwill. The cast will include Helen Grantley, a beautiful and gifted young actress who has won fame in the cast. She will be supported by Harry Hilliard and James M. Colville. "The Never Never Land" is best outlined in the following description written by Mr. Zangwill himself: "At the moment of death the dying sometimes see and live over again a tragic event in their lives. Upon this basis I have built up this weird dramatic situation in which the vision that comes before the soul of a dying woman is shown upon the stage and the eventful happening of her past enacted half a century before the curtain rises is again revealed to her in all its dramatic and passionate intensity." Dick Crolius of "Biff" Donovan fame in Peaches will present a brief race track incident, entitled "Shorty" which is described as a vaudeville slang masterpiece. Mr. Crolius's engagement will be limited to one week only. Other new acts in the coming program will be the always welcome and popular Farrell-Taylor Trio in their highly diverting black face offering of music and comedy, "That Minstrel Man," and Leon T. Rogee, a graduate of the Hungarian Conservatoire of Music, who imitates the 'cello, trombone and other musical instruments with marvelous accuracy. Next week will be the last of Byron and Langdon, Johnny McVeigh and his College Girls, Charles Wayne & Co., and of Seldom's beautiful and classic poems in marble.

ONE OF THE MANY INTERESTING SCENES IN "MERELY MARY ANN"
At the Majestic Theatre, Evelyn Vaughan in the title role

The Famous Phillippine Constabulary Band

The people of San Francisco will be missing a great opportunity if they fail to appreciate the achievement of manager Will Greenbaum in inducing the Board of Trade of Manila to allow the famous Philippine Constabulary Band to give a series of concerts here before proceeding to Washington, where it is to be a musical feature of the Taft inaugural ceremonies. The band is the greatest musical organization controlled by the United States Government and the biggest band in the world that is permanently kept up, being composed of members from all the Philippine tribes, who are most musical by nature, and it is, of course the only organization of its kind in the world. It will be the only really complete band that has ever played in this city. There are eighty-four actual performers besides the leader, and sixty-two of them form a symphony orchestra. Many of the men are able performers on a dozen different instruments. Under the supervision of Taft, then Governor of the Philippines, the constabulary force was organized to assist the regular army in maintaining peace and order. The corps formed a band, and Captain Walter Loving, an American negro, educated at the Boston Conservatory of Music, was appointed conductor. Loving, who had gone to the islands as bandmaster of one of the colored regiments, became immediately a factor in the musical life of Manila. Under his directorship the Constabulary Band soon began to attract public attention and every visitor to Manila went away to talk of its wonderfully fine performances. When Sousa heard it he said: "This is one of the finest military musical organizations in the world, if not the very finest." The symphony orchestra which it includes is to play at the Inaugural Ball. The band will play here for three nights, Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, February 14, 15, and 16. On Tuesday afternoon a concert will be given in Ye Liberty Playhouse, Oakland.

MACKENZIE GORDON

TENOR

Assisted by EUGENE BLANCHARD, Pianist, and FRED. MAURER, Accompanist.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE HALL

Next Tuesday Evening, February 9, and Sunday Afternoon February 14.

Seats $1.50, $1.00, 75c at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s—NOW.

OAKLAND—FRIDAY AFTERNOON, February 12th at 3:30

YE LIBERTY PLAYHOUSE

Seats Ready Monday Morning.

EXTRA—MME. FRIEDA

LANGENDORFF

MEZZO-SOPRANO FROM EUROPE'S LEADING OPERA HOUSES

Assisted by Mme. Flora Karp Heilbron, Pianist, Thursday Evening, February 18 and Sunday Afternoon, February 21.

Seats $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, ready Monday February 15th.

OAKLAND CONCERT—FRIDAY AFTERNOON, February 19th.

Baldwin Piano Used.

Will L. Greenbaum Announces

THE BIGGEST BAND EVER HEARD HERE!

Sousa says: "One of the Best Bands in the World."

THE FILIPINO

CONSTABULARY BAND

85 Splendid Musicians, including a Symphony Orchestra of 62.

CAPTAIN LOVING—CONDUCTOR.

DREAMLAND RINK

Sunday, Monday and Tuesday Nights, February 14, 15, 16.

Prices: 50c, 75c, $1.00. Seats ready Thursday, February 11th, at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s.

OAKLAND—TUESDAY AFTERNOON, February 16, "Ye Liberty."

SACRAMENTO—WEDNESDAY NIGHT, February 17, "Cluine Theatre."

VAN NESS THEATRE

Cor. Van Ness and Grove
Gottlob, Marx & Co., Mgrs.
Phone Market 500

Two Weeks Beginning Monday, February 8th, Matinee Saturday Only

The Quality Musical Play

A STUBBORN CINDERELLA

With HOMER B. MASON and a Notable Cast.

One Year Princess Theatre, Chicago—60 Singing and Dancing Girls.

Prices: $1.50 to 50c.

NEW ALCAZAR THEATRE

Cor. Sutter and Steiner
Class "A" Building
Phone West 6036

BELASCO & MAYER, Owners and Managers.

Monday Night, February 8th, and All Week, the Play that Made Eleanor Robson Famous, MERELY MARY ANN

Israel Zangwill's Pretty Story of a Modern Cinderella.

Prices: Evenings, 25c to $1.00. Matinees, Saturday and Sunday, 25c to 50c.

Extra Matinee Lincoln's Birthday, Friday, February 12th.

PRINCESS THEATRE

PHONE WEST 663

S. LOVERICH, MANAGER

Ellis Street, near Fillmore

Absolutely Class "A" Building

Matinee, Saturday and Sunday

Last Two Nights KOLB & DILL in "Bankers and Brokers."

Beginning Monday Night

KOLB & DILL

In Their New York Production of Judson C. Bruise's Merry Musical Farce

LONESOME TOWN

Prices—Evenings 25c, 50c, 75c, $1.00. Matinees (Except Sundays and Holidays, 25c, 50c, 75c

ORPHEUM

Ellis Street, near Fillmore
Absolutely Class "A" Bldg.
Phone West 6000

Week Beginning this Sunday Afternoon. Matinee Every Day.

ARTISTIC VAUDEVILLE.

HELEN GRANTLEY & CO., in ISRAEL ZANGWILL'S POWERFUL DRAMATIC EPISODE, "THE NEVER NEVER LAND"; DICK CROLIUS & CO., Presenting "Shorty," a Brief Race Track Incident; (One week only), FARRELL-TAYLOR & CO., in "That Minstrel Man"; LEON T. ROGEE, The Human Orchestra; JOHNNY McVEIGH AND HIS COLLEGE GIRLS; BYRON & LANGDON; CHARLES WAYNE & CO.; NEW ORPHEUM MOTION PICTURES. Last Week SELDOMS' VENUS, Incomparable representation of World's Plastic Statuary.

Evening Prices: 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c. Box Seats, $1.00. Matinee Prices (Except Sundays and Holidays): 10c, 25c, 50c.

VALENCIA THEATRE

Valencia Street, between
Thirteenth and Fourteenth
Phone Market 17

The Only Steam Heated Theatre in the City.

Sunday Afternoon and Evening, Last Times of "A Contented Woman."

Commencing Monday, February 8, Special Matinee Friday, Lincoln's Birthday, First Production in Stock of

THE PRINCE CHAP

Edward Peple's Beautiful Love Story.

Presented by the Full Strength of the Valencia Stock Company and Introducing Mace Greenleaf as Leading Man.

Regular Matinees, Wednesday and Sunday, Prices 25c to 50c.
Evenings, 25c to 75c. Box Seats, $1.00.

Monday, February 15th—"The County Chairman."

AMERICAN THEATRE

Market St., nr. Seventh
Phone Market 381

One Week, Commencing Sunday Matinee, February 8, Elaborate Production of

THE LIGHT ETERNAL

Mertin V. Merle's Beautiful Love Romance of Early Rome.

Prices, Evenings, 25c, 50c, 75c and $1.00. No Higher. Matinees, 25c, 50c, 75c.

Next Harry Beresford in "Who's Your Friend?"

YE LIBERTY PLAYHOUSE

Oakland, Cal.
Direction
H. W. Bishop

Commencing Monday Night and all next week, Matinees Saturday and Sunday

RICHARD M. HOTALING

And Bishop's Players in

JULIUS CAESAR

Mr. Hotaling Will Alternate in the Role of Brutus and Casius.

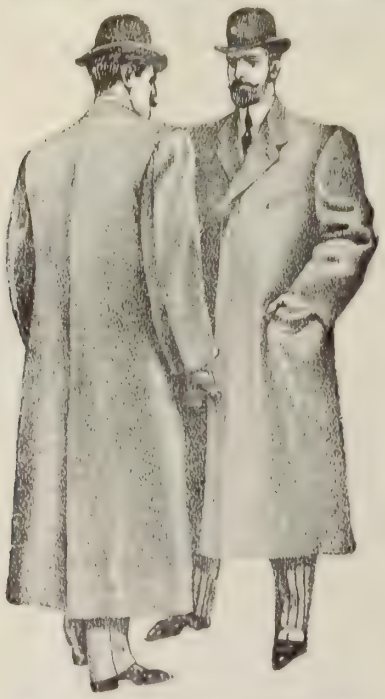
Prices, Evenings, 25c, 50c, 75c. Matinees, Saturday and Sunday, 25c and 50c.

Next—Hotaling in "The First Violin."

The Well-Dressed Man

What to Wear, When and Where

Written exclusively for Town Talk by J. M. JACOBI



For the benefit of those men who have neither the time nor inclination to study the art of Dressing correctly, we will publish a series of weekly Fashion Chats.

We will also run a query column, in which the reader may ask questions pertaining to dress. Such questions will be answered in the following issue.

TALK ON OVERCOATS NO. 2

Various Kinds of Overcoats and Their Duties

There is such a variety of overcoats suitable for various occasions that it is difficult to prescribe any certain style and again it depends upon individual taste and upon the size of the pocket book. For the economical or limited purse, as one overgarment is an absolute necessity, we shall begin with the indispensable garment particularly adapted to California. This overcoat is about 50 inches long, and is made of various fabrics from a light Scotch tweed to a dark worsted or vicuna, but dark patterns are preferable. If there is to be only one overcoat in the ward robe, the material should be cravanette or rain proofed, so that the garment may do service as rain coat as well. This will provide for all seasons an overcoat proper at any occasion.

"Chesterfield" overcoat is the name of the most important overgarment, for one might do without a top coat, paddock, ulster, chin or protector coat and yet would not cause a great inconvenience, but not so with the "Chesterfield," for it combines all the elements of utility and comfort and there has never been another designed to take its place. This coat is about 42-44 inches long, for the man of average height, 5 feet 8 inches, and should be either one-quarter or all silk lined, with either collars of the same material, or velvet collars. The garment should hang loose from the shoulders as a form fitting "Chesterfield" is out of the question at the present time.

Materials should be of Scotch tweeds, medium light to a darker shade or an oxford cheviot or vicuna cloth which is ever popular.

Then there is the top coat, which of late has not been popular but which might again pop up in spring. Another overgarment which does not seem to be a favorite at present is the double breasted oversack. The inverness will always be considered as a full dress overcoat, and will, like the pollhot always be worn by a few but the great majority of people prefer the long dark oversack as full dress overcoat. English slip ones are made up on little cotton fabrics and are rubberized. They are more or less popular every season.

HOTEL TOURAINE

Delaware Avenue at Chippewa Street

BUFFALO, N. Y.

ABSOLUTELY FIRE-PROOF

250 Rooms with Bath and Long Distance Telephone

Excellent Music and Grill Room

European Plan, $1.50 per day up

With Bath Connection

Send for Booklet — C. N. OWEN, Proprietor

LARGEST COLLECTION ON THE COAST

DIAMONDS AND GEMS

BALDWIN JEWELRY CO.

1261 VAN NESS AVENUE AT SUTTER

IDEAL FARMS

"CERTIFIED MILK"

The most perfect product of the modern dairy

Certified to by the Medical Commission of the San Francisco County Medical Society

DISTRIBUTED BY

GUADALOUPE DAIRY CO. Phone Market 2590

STANDARD MILK CO. Phone Market 226

Mrs. Warfield

PIANO SCHOOL FOR CHILDREN AND BEGINNERS

Telephone Piedmont 3414 — 6409 Regent Street, Berkeley

Tuesday and Friday, Ebell Club, Oakland

"Technicalities So-Called"

(Continued from Page 9.)

"I do not say unhesitatingly and unequivocally—and my colleagues in the appellate court of which I happen to be a member thoroughly agree with me in the opinion—that mob law receives its strongest stimulus and encouragement, and justice receives its severest shocks, from those loosely conducted, speedy criminal trials in which the protesting prisoner is forced to face the jury in the midst of public excitement aroused, and as yet unabated, from the commission of some outrageous crime of which he may or may not be guilty. In such cases the chances of ascertaining the truth, if it happens to be upon the side of the defendant, is small; and he is wise if he shields himself behind every technicality which the law has raised as a barrier against undue haste, against unfairness, intentional and unintentional, and against the determination of the questions involved by any other form of logic than that which the wisdom of the ages has approved as being the safest and the best.

"The law, if it is wise—and we of the bench and bar would be untrue to our trust if we did not believe it to be so—neither creates nor recognizes any technicality which the experience of the ages has not shown to be promotive of that which should be the end of all judicial investigation, the ascertainment of the truth. A court proceeding contrary to all established order and technicality may reach a correct result, the verdict rendered may be the truth of the case, the sentence imposed may be the well-deserved punishment of a particular defendant; so, too, the mob may lynch a guilty rapist. It is in the dignity and in the certainty, in the orderliness and in the caution, with which the courts proceed to results, rather than in the source of their creation, that they are distinguished in principle, and even in expediency, from mobs and other lawless administrators of public vengeance and so-called speedy justice.

"There are two methods of determining guilt or innocence and of administering punishment. The one proceeds cautiously, according to the carefully guarded forms and precedents, which long experience has shown to be safest and truest of result. This is called law. The other disregards form and precedent, decides by impulse rather than by technical procedure, acts quickly, and leaves future developments to verify or disprove the correctness of its decision; and this is called mob law, or lynch law, or night riding. A quiet, unexcited body of men, who take a person accused of a capital crime, and, after calmly weighing the proofs for and against his innocence, giving him an opportunity to be heard, and finding that he is unquestionably guilty, swing him to a limb, is in spirit less a mob than a court which, at a session speedily called in response to the demands of the excited populace, forces the suspected criminal to trial, waves aside or grudgingly grants his demand for orderly procedure and calm, dispassionate investigation, determines his guilt by impulsive finding guised thinly by a semblance of deliberation, and thereupon sentences him to death. We may say in passing that there is no less courthouse lynching as to certain classes of misdemeanors than as to graver felonies—only the result to the defendant is not so serious. If a man is to be lynched, even where his guilt is unquestionable, let the mob do it. Do not demand it of the courts."

Now Professor Boke and Professor Wigmore and all you other scholastic reasoners, will you please be good.

In the Limelight

Following "A Stubborn Cinderella" at the Van Ness Theatre will be heard Victor Herbert and Henry Blossom's great success, "The Red Mill."

The members of the Valencia Theatre stock company are awaiting with great impatience the production of "The County Chairman," a week from Monday.

Richard Carle in his latest success, "Mary's Lamb," "The Red Mill," and "A Stubborn Cinderella" will be the three and only musical attractions to be seen at the Van Ness Theatre during the remainder of the season.

"The Half Breed," a striking story of life in Arizona by Oliver Morosco and Harry Cottrell and in which Mace Greenleaf, the new leading man at the Valencia, scored a great hit in Los Angeles, is booked for an early presentation at that playhouse.

Lillian Russell will be seen here next month in her latest triumph, the racing comedy called "Wildfire."

The Valencia Theatre management is making great preparations for a stupendous production of Barrie's delightful fantasy, "Peter Pan," next month. Lloyd Carleton, former stage manager for Maude Adams and patentee of the flying devices used in the play, will be brought from New York especially to produce the piece and Tony Kenna, the house electrician who acted as head of the lighting department during Miss Adams's tour, promises that the effects in his department will be perfect.

Homder B. Mason who comes in the leading role of "A Stubborn Cinderella" is one of the cleverest people now in the front rank of musical comedy. His performance has been voted a complete success.

Little Bebe Daniels, who will play the younger Claudia in "The Prince Chap," is one of the best child actresses on the stage. She achieved one of her first successes in "Her Own Way", when Miss Blanche Stoddard was playing Georgiana Carley.

MENNEN'S
BORATED TALCUM
TOILET POWDER

"Baby's Best Friend"
and Mamma's greatest comfort. Mennen's relieves and prevents Chapped Hands and Chafing.
For your protection the genuine is put up in non-refillable boxes—the "Box that Lox," with Mennen's face on top. Sold everywhere or by mail 25 cents—Sample free.
Try Mennen's Violet (Borated) Talcum Toilet Powder. It has the scent of Fresh-cut Parma Violets. Sample free.
GERHARD MENNEN CO., Newark, N. J.
Mennen's Sen Yang Toilet Powder, Oriental Odor } No Samples
Mennen's Borated Skin Soap (Blue wrapper) }
Specially prepared for the nursery. Sold only at Stores.

ROBERTSON'S
A BOOK STORE
1539 VAN NESS AVENUE
CARD PLATES ∴ MONOGRAMS
WEDDING INVITATIONS
A. M. ROBERTSON

When you have a choice, take the best. For purity of design, harmony of color and quality, there can be no better wall paper made than that shown by

TAYLOR & SINCLAIR CO.
INTERIOR DECORATORS BUSH AT VAN NESS

The Confession

(Continued from Page 10)

to avoid need to repeat to you. That day we nearly came to blows. After that I kept away from the house, and I only saw Philippe at rare intervals when we happened to work on the same building.

"However, I did not entirely lose sight of Catherine and the child. Frequently, on Saturday evenings, when I knew Philippe was out on a spree, I would roam about the neighborhood and perchance meet my godson. I would get him to talk, and, if it appeared that the poverty at home was very great, he would be sent back with some money in his pocket. So the years went by. I think Philippe knew or suspected that I helped his wife, but he made no objections; it made it easier for him.

"But I must be brief. Catherine's son has grown up, he is now twenty years old, good and brave like his mother. He is not a laborer—he has studied; he learned drawing at the night schools, and he is now in an architect's office, with a fair salary. So, although the father's drunkenness still disturbed the home, things were beginning to look better.

"Night before last, Monsieur the Cure, I was coming out of my lodgings and I met Camille on his way to see me. He was as pale as a ghost.

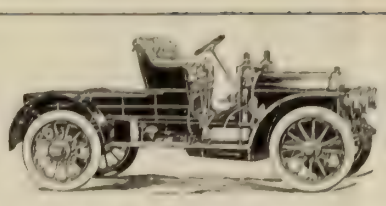
"'What is the matter?' said I.

"'Only this,' said he. 'I was at the drawing for the conscription this morning, and I drew No. 10, one of the worst possible—a number that sends one out to die of fever in the colonies. Even at the very best it is for five years—five years to leave mother alone with my father, who has never been drinking so hard or been so cruel! Oh, but it will be her death!'

"Think what a night I passed, Monsieur the Cure! The poor woman's work of twenty years gone for naught, just because a poor boy draws a bad number out of a bag! When I rose I seemed to have become an old man over night. But one has to work to live, and so I went to my daily toil, and climbed up the scaffolding to the fourth story, on which we are now working. I was laying bricks when someone tapped me on the shoulder. It was Philippe. He had only worked when it pleased him of late, and evidently had come to do a day's work to get some money for drink. There is a good demand for labor just now, and the boss is willing to take anyone that comes along. I had not seen Philippe for an age. I hardly knew him, he was such a physical wreck.

"'Well,' said I, 'the boy has drawn a bad number!'

"'What of that?' answered Philippe rudely. 'Are you, too, going to bother me with that affair? The boy will do as the others do; he will serve his country. Parbleu! I know what it is that they both would like—to have me die! If I were dead, he would not have to go. But I am still strong and hearty, and Camille is not yet the only son of a widow!'



"The son of a widow! Oh, Monsieur the Cure, why did he speak that word! The thought came like a flash, but it stayed by me all the morning, as we worked side by side. The boy away for five years, perhaps never to return! Catherine alone with that drunken brute! A neighboring church clock struck eleven, the workmen climbed down for luncheon. Philippe and I alone were left. As he stepped to the ladder to go down, he turned toward me with a harsh laugh and said: 'You see I am pretty steady still; Camille is not yet the only son of a widow!'

"The blood rushed to my head; I seized the ladder on which Philippe was standing—a slight push, and over he went. He was dead when they picked him up. No one thought of anything but an accident. But now Camille is the only son of a widow; he will not have to go.

"That is what I have done, Monsieur the Cure. That is what I have to confess to you and to God. I am sorry; I want to be forgiven. But I would do it again, perhaps. Now I am going to America. Take this gold chain, Monsieur the Cure. I have kept it all these years. Sell it, and give the money to the poor."

Did the abbe absolve him? We do not know. But we do know that the chain was not sold. The old priest put the money equivalent in the box, and hung the chain as an ex voto in the chapel of the Virgin, where he often prays for the soul of the poor bricklayer.

"In a close study of the wonderful growth of the automobile industry during the year just closed, no feature is more noticeable than the specialization idea which has virtually been forced upon the discriminating buying public," says Colonel George Studebaker of the Studebaker automobile company of South Bend, Ind. "Our concern has been accustomed to making horse drawn vehicles for various purposes ranging from the laundry wagon to the luxurious laundelette for a long time, but we did not appreciate the extent to which the automobile buyer is discriminating until we received our specification books for the past year. Now we comprehend that the word 'automobile' has almost as many different definitions as the word 'vehicle.' In keeping pace with the demand for individual need, the Studebaker automobile company has been following the plan of specialization which made the firm's vehicle business the most comprehensive in the world. This is truly an age of auto specialization and in both the commercial and pleasure phases of our automobile department this specialization idea will be borne out."

SUBURBAN

Equipped as Baggage and Passenger Car

For business or pleasure the STUDEBAKER SUBURBAN is the most serviceable automobile on the market today. When you buy a STUDEBAKER SUBURBAN you practically become the possessor of three cars. With the double seat in the rear you have a stylish, four-passenger touring car; with the single seat in the rear, a smart runabout or roadster; with the seats removed a combination baggage and passenger car. Changes are simple and may be made quickly. Demonstrations at your own convenience.

Fremont at Mission — Studebaker — Phone Douglas 3000

Packard = Cadillac

All That is Best in Motor Car Construction

PACKARD '09 TOURING CAR

CADILLAC "30" TOURING CAR

30 horsepower, four cylinder, 5 passenger, $1550.00

Cuyler Lee

453 GOLDEN GATE AVENUE SAN FRANCISCO

RACING

NEW CALIFORNIA JOCKEY CLUB

OAKLAND RACE TRACK

Six races each week day, rain or shine. First Race at 1:40 p. m.

For special trains stopping at the track, take Southern Pacific Ferry, foot of Market street, leave at 12 M.; thereafter every twenty minutes until 1:40 P. M.

No smoking in the last two cars, which are reserved for ladies and their escorts.

PERCY W. TREAT, Sec'y. THOS. H. WILLIAMS, Pres.

GIERSBERGER WINES

The wine of merit and quality all around the world. Compare it with the best wines and we are satisfied.

THEO. GIER WINE COMPANY

Phone Oakland 123 1225-1227 BROADWAY, OAKLAND

Auto Notes

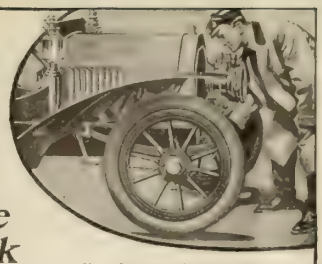
Delivery was made last Saturday afternoon by the Studebaker Bros.' Company of California of a Studebaker E-M-F "30" car to Dr. W. R. Lovegrove of this city. The delivery of the car to Dr. Lovegrove is specially significant in that it was Dr. Lovegrove who a few weeks ago paid L. W. Neustadter a handsome premium for the latter's place in line of early delivery of the new Studebaker car. Dr. Lovegrove's machine is one which is in the full sense of the word completely equipped. Dr. Lovegrove's aim in buying a car was not only to get one which was a good hill-climber, speedy and safe, but to also furnish it with everything which tended to comfort and accommodation.

At the recent auto show which was held in New York City, to which several representative San Francisco automobile men went and at the individual automobile show which is in progress at the present time at the Studebaker building in New York City, one of the most interesting types of cars shown is the new Studebaker town car with coupe body. The car is one of the new 1909 Studebaker machine and closely resembles a taxicab except that in its appointment it is almost equally as luxurious as the Studebaker limousine, one of which was recently purchased by Miss Lillian Russell and George M. Cohan. According to advices from New York City, the Studebaker town car is destined to become one of the most popular cars of the year.

Mr. Cuyler Lee has just returned from New York. He visited Chicago, Detroit, Philadelphia, Boston and returned to New York in time to be present at the annual dinner which the Packard Co. gives to its dealers and to see the automobile show.

The fact that women have always wielded an important influence in the purchase of automobiles, is admitted by all manufacturers and representatives of motor cars. In no place has this been demonstrated more than in San Francisco. Not only were the women of this city the first organizers of a women's motor club in America, but they have assisted through their influence and enthusiasm a great many projects for the benefit of the local automobilists. Undoubtedly one of the main reasons for the general feminine fondness for the modern gasoline vehicle is the simplicity and ease with which it is operated. The past season has shown that the less complicated the car, the more numerous are the women owners and drivers. This is especially noticeable on the cars of medium price. The women owners who drive their own Chalmers-Detroit cars, for instance, form an important part of the hundreds of purchasers of these cars. Among the local women who operate their own Chalmers-Detroit cars are Mrs. A. H. Kohn, Mrs. Seymour, wife of Dr. Seymour, Mrs. H. L. Morton, Mrs. L. Huffman, Mrs. J. S. Whitmore, Miss Hazel Phelps and Mrs. W. Hunt. No more enthusiastic or expert motorists tour the State highways than these fair devotees of the automobile sport.

Recent rains have inflicted greater damage to the automobile roads of California along the coast than has been done in several years, according to A. L. King and Frank B. Dickson, both of the Studebaker Bros.' Company of California, who returned last Saturday to this city after a severe and trying trip to San Luis Obispo and return. "Autoists were pitted against very heavy odds all the way down the coast," said King is discussing the arduous trip, "and their predicaments ranged all the way from punctures to almost complete submersion in the mire. But, there is one thing about autoists," added Dickson, "as a general rule they are a happy lot and never fail to see the humorous side of the difficulties they suddenly find themselves in, even under the most trying circumstances. It's the California spirit, I suppose, as this characteristic was found among the woman autoists we met as well as the men."



Mr. A. A. Dahlke of Oakland, Mr. W. H. Wood, San Francisco, and Mr. S. L. Goldstein, San Francisco, have each just received a Packard "18" touring car from Cuyler Lee.

In explaining the unusual demand for automobiles in the Rocky Mountain farming districts, M. C. Ramsey, the Studebaker agent at Grand Junction, Colo., says: "Farmers in this vicinity are optimistic to a degree over the prospect assured by the deep snow which now covers the mountains. The extensive plans of the irrigating promoters will permit them to hold this water and to use it when and where they wish to. This feature assures a tremendous beet sugar crop as well as other crops for several years. As a result of this a big boom in all lines of business is certain. The automobile industry will naturally get its share and as the farmers are rapidly learning that the automobile is the most economical vehicle after all, the majority of them are beginning to place their orders for as early deliveries as possible, knowing that they will be well able to afford them. The farmers here are in exactly the same position that the central west is when it has a positive guarantee of big wheat and corn crops for five years." Ramsey recently doubled his orders for Studebaker E-M-F "30" and other Studebaker cars.

Mr. Spencer C. Buckbee, San Francisco, just received his Packard "18" Landaulet, of special finish and design, being the second Packard "18" Landaulet to be delivered on the coast.

TRY MURINE EYE REMEDY
For Red, Weak, Weary, Watery Eyes.
Murine Doesn't Smart—It Soothes Eye Pain.
Try Murine For Your Eyes.

The Oil You Can Feel At the Crank

The slighest "feel" of the crank proves the perfection of ZEROLENE Auto Lubricating Oil. There is no carbon deposit to foul the cylinders and spark-plugs; no possibility of anything but perfect lubrication in any gasoline engine, regardless of type, temperature or season.

ZEROLENE
Auto-Lubricating Oil

differs from all other oils in being non-carbonizing, and in "working" with uniform certainty both in midsummer heat and in zero weather. ZEROLENE is the only oil with these characteristics, and is produced in only one place.

Absolutely free from all trace of acid.

Put up in sealed cans with patent spout that cannot be refilled. Also in barrels for garage trade. Sold by dealers everywhere.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY
(Incorporated)

ANNOUNCEMENT

1909

OLDSMOBILE

We beg to announce arrival
1909 Oldsmobile, December 15th

The following complete line of 1909 models will be on exhibition on the above date. Every one of these cars is representative of the factory that makes it:

Model X Special Runabout	$2000
Model D Palace Touring Car	2750
Model D Toy Tonneau	2750
Model DR Flying Roadster	2750
Model DR Detachable Tonneau	2750
Model Z Touring Car, 6-Cylinder	4200
Model Z Runabout, 6-Cylinder	4200

Besides Limousine and Landaulet Bodies.

The 1909 Oldsmobile contains all that has made the car famous in the past, together with the improvements in keeping with the largest and most extensive factory in the country. Recognized the world over for durability. Investigate.

PIONEER AUTOMOBILE CO.

524 Twentieth St., Oakland 901 Golden Gate Ave., San Francisco

NEW YEAR GREETING

Start 1909 aright. Telephone us about wiring or repairing.

Telephone Douglas 1185 and 1186.

LEVY ELECTRIC CO.

HURRY UP ELECTRICIANS

LEVY ELECTRIC WIRING COMPANY

Electric Trains, Cars, Dynamos, Motors, Batteries, Machinery, Magic Lanterns Moving Pictures, Telegraph and Telephones, Wireless Outfits, X-rays, Etc.

648 Sacramento St. San Francisco 1205 Polk Street

Letters

"Helen Grant" a Post-Graduate

Amanda M. Douglas's heroine, "Helen Grant," whose experiences have been related for the edification of the larger girls while she has been pursuing her course through preparatory school and college, has now taken a post-graduate course at college and is about to launch on her career as a teacher. Most of the characters who appeared in the former volumes are still in view, with some new and interesting types. Helen Grant is of the better class of collegians, one who neither shirks her duties nor forgets the social amenities, and has a helpful hand for others in distress, and one who would make a safe ideal for most young girls to copy. The whole series has been in contrast to the average school-girl books, which glorify insubordination and impudence under the guise of independence, and leave girls with an idea that the world is all theirs and those who oppose them should be annihilated. In the present dearth of even fairly presentable books for girls of from twelve to sixteen "Helen Grant" is to be commended. Published by Lothrop, Lee and Shepard.

"A Full-Back Afloat

A. T. Dudley has added another volume to his Phillips-Exeter series, "A Full-Back Afloat." The book is complete in itself, and except for the perpetuation of the name of Dick Melvin, and the first chapter, technically and intricately descriptive of an inter-collegiate foot ball game, it has no connection with previous events. Doubtless the boys themselves will appreciate the introduction, but the real story has no connection with school or sport. Melvin had decided to spend his long summer vacation in Germany, intent on getting some practical knowledge of the language. He could manage the continental living expenses if he could contrive to secure transportation, and being a husky and determined youth, he shipped aboard a cattle steamer, thus securing his transatlantic fare both ways and the large sum of ten dollars in addition to his meals en route. It was a rough gang that he found himself amongst, and before long he discovered that roughness was not by any means their worst quality. On the evening before he set sail the home of one of Melvin's class mates had been broken into an one of their most valuable treasures stolen. Melvin had no suspicion of the identity of the thief, but some of his property had been appropriated and he determined to recover his own by fair means or foul. While instituting the search he came across the Morton loot and had no hesitation about taking possession. Then began a game of hide and seek, Melvin to keep possession and the thieves to retrieve the property, each, of course keeping a noncommittal countenance towards the other. It is this search together with the description of the work of feeding and caring for the cattle on the ten-days trip which makes the story, and a welcome variation it is from the smart-alecky foolishness which has formed the staple of juvenile literature for lo, these many years. Lothrop, Lee and Shepard are its sponsors.

Correspondence Exploited

Notwithstanding a deep-rooted aversion to every compilation and publication of private correspondence, no matter how carefully edited or what apologies and excuses are offered for such vandalism, I must confess to having derived some enjoyment from the small volume entitled "The Friendly Craft," put forth under the sponsorship of Elizabeth Deering Hanscom, Professor of English at Smith College. The letters which are here brought together are largely from American sources, and range from the earliest colonial times to the present day. They have all been selected with a view to presenting either some picture of bygone times or some particular aspect of society or events as seen by the writer, thus we have glimpses of politics, society, education, religion, and pretty much all else, through the eyes of General Washington, Governor Bradford, Samuel Sewell, Benjamin Franklin, Aaron Burr, Alexander Hamilton, and, to come nearer to our own times, the New England School of poets and historians, Bayard Taylor, Charles Godfrey Leland and Thomas Bailey Aldrich. Nor is the other sex forgotten, for Dolly Madison, Abigail Adams, Mrs. Hariet Beecher Stowe, Celia Thaxter and Margaret Fuller are likewise represented. To those who feel no prejudice against reading the correspondence of others, even though they may be no longer able to protest. "The Gentle Craft" will, doubtless be a welcome addition to library shelves, but so many of the epistles, even in their edited and expurgated form, contain injunctions to destroy, or not to show to others that to those who still retain old-fashioned prejudices in the matter of locked drawers and sealed letters the undoubted pleasure that is derived must be tainted with a suspicion of furtiveness. It is all a matter of the point of view. If one has been brought up under the impression that everything belongs to everyone, there need be no hesitation. If, on the other hand, there is an acknowledgment of the mine-and-thine, there can never be freedom to enjoy without the latent question of right. Published by the Macmillan Co.

The St. Raphael, 60 Seventh St., opp. main postoffice, San Francisco: apartments $20, single rooms $10, month.

"Those Lustrous Eyes are Murine Eyes"

MURINE EYE REMEDY

A Favorite Toilet Accessory

Has won many Friends as an Aid to the Restoration of Normal Conditions, Healthful Tone and Natural Brilliancy to Eyes that Need Care.

It has proven of great value in the Home as

An Eye Tonic for Weak, Red, Inflamed & Itching Eyes & Eyelids.

As An Eye Insurance

Tourists, Automobilists and others exposed to Strong Winds, Dust and Reflected Sunlight, which produce Irritation, Granulation, Ulceration and Weak Eyes, will find in Murine a Safe, Soothing Eye Lotion affording "Reliable Relief."

The Finishing Touch

Bewitchingly Costumed
In Costliest Gown,
For the Social Event,
At the South End of Town.

The "Finishing Touch"
To the Toilet is seen
In the Act above Pictured
"Two drops" of Murine.

Try Murine for the "Automobile Eye"

UNION LUMBER COMPANY

Redwood and Pine Lumber

Railroad Ties, Telegraph Poles, Shingles, Split Shakes, Etc.

CROCKER BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

THROUGH TROPIC CLIMES

Atlantic Steamship Lines

New Orleans--New York Service

In connection with the Sunset Route between San Francisco, Los Angeles and New Orleans

Largest American coastwise steamers—elaborately furnished staterooms—electric lighted throughout. Perfect dining service.

First cabin, $35.00; round trip, $60.00

Second cabin, $27.50.

Includes berths and meals en route.

SEE AGENTS

SOUTHERN PACIFIC

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY REALTY SHOULD NOT BE LEASED

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 4714, N. S. Dept. 10.

In the Matter of the Estate of MICHAEL FLOOD, Deceased.

Upon reading and filing the petition of GEORGE W. LEE, the Administrator of the estate of MICHAEL FLOOD, deceased, praying that he, as such Administrator, be authorized, empowered and directed to lease a portion of that certain building belonging to said estate of MICHAEL FLOOD, deceased, which said premises thereby proposed to be leased are described as follows, to-wit: All of that certain Store, designated and known as No. 753 Polk Street, on the Southwest corner in that certain four story brick building erected and being on the following described property of said estate, which real property is situated, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows, to-wit:

Commencing at a point formed by the intersection of the Westerly line of Polk Street with the Southerly line of Ellis Street; thence running Westerly along the last named line Seventy-seven and Six-twelfths (77 6-12) feet; thence at right angles Southerly and parallel with Polk Street One Hundred and Twenty (120) feet; thence at rights angles Easterly and parallel with Ellis Street Seventy-seven and Six-twelfths (77 6-12) feet; thence at right angles Northerly One Hundred and Twenty (120) feet to the point of commencement.

It is ordered, that all persons interested in said estate appear before the above Court on Monday, the 8th day of February, A. D. 1909, at the hour of 10 o'clock a. m., at the Courtroom of said Court, situate in the Grant Building, S. E. corner of 7th and Market Streets, in said City and County, to show cause, if any they can or have, why said premises particularly above described, should not be leased for the purpose of securing for the same the total sum of Fifteen Hundred and Sixty ($1560.00) Dollars divided into monthly payments, for the term of two years.

For all further particulars reference is hereby made to the petition on file herein.

It is further ordered, that a copy of this Order be published for at least once a week for two successive weeks in Town Talk, a newspaper of general circulation published in said City and County.

Dated, this 21st day of January, A. D. 1909.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

Endorsed: Filed Jan. 22, 1909. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk. By H. G. BENEDICT, Deputy Clerk.

JEREMIAH V. COFFEY and EDWARD I. COFFEY,
Attorneys for Administrator, 557 Mills Bldg., San Francisco. 1-30-3

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 7042, New Series. Dept. Nine. Probate.

In the Matter of the Estate of GEORGE BASTIAN, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned William Bastian, Executor of the last will and testament of the above named George Bastian, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within four (4) months after the first publication of this notice, (which first publication occurs on the 6th day of February, 1909), to the said William Bastian, executor of the last will and testament of said George Bastian, deceased, at the office of his attorney, John J. Barrett, room 1255 Flood Building, Number 870 Market Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned selects as his place of business in all matters connected with said estate of said George Bastian, deceased.

WILLIAM BASTIAN,
Executor of the last will and testament of said George Bastian, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, California, February 6th, 1909.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Attorney for said Executor,
Rooms 1255-1257 Flood Building, San Francisco, Cal. 2-6-5

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY SALE OF REAL ESTATE SHOULD NOT BE MADE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 5103, N. S. Dept. 10, Probate.

In the matter of the Estate and Guardianship of JOHN M. COLE, Jr., an Incompetent Person.

CATHERINE COLE, guardian of the person and estate of JOHN M. COLE, Jr., an incompetent person, having presented her petition herein duly verified, praying for an order of the sale of the whole of the real estate of the said incompetent, for the reasons and purposes in said petition mentioned and set forth;

And such petition having been filed, it is now ordered by said Court that the next of kin of said incompetent person, and all persons interested in the estate of said incompetent person, be, and they are hereby directed to appear before said Court on Tuesday, the 2nd day of March, 1909, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the courtroom of Department 10 of said Superior Court, in the Grant Building, on the Southeast corner of Market and Seventh Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to show cause, if any they have, why an order should not be granted directing, empowering, and authorizing the said guardian to sell the whole or so much of the real estate of said incompetent person as may be necessary.

It is further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least once a week for three successive weeks in Town Talk, a newspaper of general circulation, printed and published in the said City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

Dated this 29th day of January, 1909.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

EDWARD J. LYNCH, Attorney for Guardian,
Mills Building, San Francisco, Cal.

Endorsed: Filed Jan. 29, 1909. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk. By H. G. BENEDICT, Deputy Clerk. 2-6-4

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY ORDER OF SALE OF REAL PROPERTY SHOULD NOT BE MADE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 2133. Dept. No. 10.

In the Matter of the Guardianship of the Estates of RANDOLPH WILSON SMITH, and ROBERTA GENEVIEVE SMITH, Minors.

EMILY MAY SMITH, guardian of the estate of the above named minors, having filed herein her verified petition praying for an order directing the sale of certain real property belonging to the estates of said minors, and more particularly described in said petition, and it appearing to the Court from said petition that it is necessary and will be beneficial to said minors, and each of them, and to their respective estates, that said real property should be sold, and good cause appearing:

It is hereby ordered that the next of kin of said minors and each of them, and all persons interested in their or either of their estates, appear before the above entitled court, Department No. 10 thereof, at its Courtroom in the Grant Building, situated on the corner of Seventh and Market Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, on the 2nd day of March, 1909, at the hour of 10 o'clock a. m. of said day, to show cause why an order should not be granted for the sale of said real property; and

It is hereby further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least once a week for three (3) successive weeks next preceding said day, in Town Talk, a newspaper printed and published in said City and County.

Dated, January 30th, 1909.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

W. H. ORRICK, Attorney for Guardian,
617 Balboa Building, San Francisco, Cal. 2-6-4

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 13833.

MARY HORGAN, a Widow, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Liens Upon the Real Property Herein Described or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in or lien upon the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, Greeting:

You are are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Mary Horgan, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the Court of the above entitled City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the northerly line of Fulton street, distant thereon one hundred and forty-six (146) feet ten and one-half inches (10½) inches westerly from the intersection of the westerly line of Baker street with the northerly line of Fulton street, and then running thence westerly along the said line of Fulton street twenty-five (25) feet, thence at right angle northerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet and six (6) inches, thence at a right angle easterly twenty-five (25) feet, and thence at a right angle southerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet and six (6) inches to the northerly line of Fulton street and point of commencement. Being Block No. 592, a portion of the Western Addition.

You are hereby notified that unless you appear and answer the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to wit: For a judgment of said Court as follows:

1st. Ascertaining and determining all estate, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said real property and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, or whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description.

2nd. Establishing the title of plaintiff to said real property and determining all adverse claims thereto, and adjudging that plaintiff is the owner in severalty and in fee simple absolute of said real property and every part thereof.

3rd. For such other and further relief as to the Court may seem proper and for costs of suit.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 14th day of January, A. D. 1909.

(Seal)

H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By T. C. RYAN, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 23d day of January, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon said real property adverse to plaintiff: The Hibernia Savings and Loan Society, whose address is on the Northwest corner of Jones and McAllister streets, San Francisco, California.

JOSEPH H. TAM, Attorney for Plaintiff,
511 Balboa Building, San Francisco, Cal. 1-23-10

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 13834.

DENNIS J. HORGAN, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Lien Upon the Real Property Herein Described or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in or lien upon the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, Greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Dennis J. Horgan, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Scott street, distant thereon northerly from the northerly line of Haight street one hundred and thirteen (113) feet and six (6) inches; thence running northerly along said easterly line of Scott street twenty-four (24) feet; thence at right angles easterly one hundred and ten (110) feet; thence at right angles southerly twenty-four (24) feet, and thence at right angles westerly one hundred and ten (110) feet to the easterly line of Scott street and the point of commencement. Being a part of the Western Addition Block number four hundred and thirty-nine (439), and also right of way over passage extending the length of the above described property and a width of those three (3) feet six (6) inches on the South of the same.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to wit: For a judgment of said Court as follows:

1st. Ascertaining and determining all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said real property and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, or whether the same consists of mortgages or liens of any description.

2nd. Establishing the title of plaintiff to said real property and determining all adverse claims thereto, and adjudging that plaintiff is the owner in severalty and in fee simple absolute of said real property and every part thereof.

3rd. For such other and further relief as to the Court may seem proper and for costs of suit.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 14th day of January, A. D. 1909.

(Seal)

H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By T. C. RYAN, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 23d day of January, 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in or lien upon said property adverse to plaintiff: The German Savings and Loan Society, whose address is No. 526 California street, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

JOSEPH H. TAM, Attorney for Plaintiff,
511 Balboa Building, San Francisco, Cal. 1-23-10

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 7058, New Series. Department Ten.

In the Matter of the Estate of JOSEPH CHAPMAN DYAS, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned EDWIN JOSEPH DYAS, Administrator of the estate of Joseph Chapman Dyas, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said Joseph Chapman Dyas, deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten (10) months after the first publication of this notice (which first publication occurs on the 6th day of February, 1909); to the said Edwin Joseph Dyas, administrator of the estate of said Joseph Chapman Dyas, deceased, at the office of of his attorneys, John J. Barrett and Frank I. Barrett, room 1255 Flood Building, Number 870 Market Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned selects as his place of business in all matters connected with said estate of said Joseph Chapman Dyas, deceased.

EDWIN JOSEPH DYAS,
Administrator of the estate of said Joseph Chapman Dyas, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, California, February 6th, 1909.

JOHN J. BARRRETT and FRANK I. BARRETT,
Attorneys for Administrator, Room 1255 Flood Bldg., S. F. 2-6-5

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 20725.

ADELE RAYNAL, Plaintiff,
vs.
HENRI RAYNAL, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Henri Raynal Defendant

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's wilfull desertion; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 8th day of January, A. D. 1909

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By W. R. CASTAGNETTO, Deputy Clerk.

P. A. BERGEROT, Esq., 110 Sutter Street, San Francisco, Cal.,
Attorney for Plaintiff. 1-16-10

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY SALE OF REAL ESTATE SHOULD NOT BE MADE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 4823, N. S. Dept. 10 Probate.

In the Matter of the Estate of OLOF NELSON, Deceased.

JOSEPH A. STULZ, Administrator of the Estate of OLOF NELSON, Deceased, having presented his Petition herein, duly verified, praying for an Order of the Sale of the whole of the real estate of the said decedent, or so much or such parts thereof as said Court shall judge necessary or beneficial for the reasons and purposes in said Petition mentioned and set forth:

And said Petition having been filed, it is now ordered by said Court that all persons interested in the Estate of said deceased be, and they are hereby directed to appear before said Court on Thursday, the 11th day of February, 1909, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Courtroom of Department No. 10, of said Superior Court in the Grant Building on the Southeast corner of Market and Seventh Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to show cause, if any they have, why an order should not be granted authorizing and directing said Administrator to sell the whole or so much of the real estate of said decedent as may be necessary.

It is further ordered that a copy of this Order be published at least once a week for four successive weeks in the Town Talk, a newspaper printed and published in the said City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

Dated, at San Francisco, this 4th day of January, 1909.
THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

EDWARD J. LYNCH, Attorney for Administrator,
Mills Building, San Francisco, Cal.

Endorsed: Filed Jan. 5, 1909. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk. By H. G. BENEDICT, Deputy Clerk. 1-9-5

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Action No. 13512.

MARY A. DALY, Plaintiff,
vs.
All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, Defendants, Greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of MARY A. DALY, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above-entitled Court and County, within three (3) months after the first publication of this SUMMONS, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situated, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

Parcel Number One. Commencing at a point on the Westerly line of Devisadero Street, distant thereon sixty-three (63) feet nine (9) inches Southerly from the Southerly line of Jackson Street; running thence Southerly along said Westerly line of Devisadero Street twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet six (6) inches; thence at right angles Northerly twenty-five feet (25) feet, and thence at right angles Easterly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet six (6) inches to the point of commencement. Being a portion of Western Addition Block Number 497.

Parcel Number Two. Commencing at a point on the Northerly line of Clay Street, distant thereon one hundred and ten (110) feet Easterly from the Easterly line of Devisadero Street, and running thence Easterly and along the said Northerly line of Clay Street twenty-eight (28) feet nine (9) inches; thence at right angles northerly one hundred and twenty-seven (127) feet eight and one-quarter (8¼) inches; thence at right angles Westerly twenty-eight (28) feet nine (9) inches; and thence at right angles Southerly one hundred and twenty-seven (127) feet eight and one-quarter (8¼) inches to the Northerly line of Clay Street and the point of commencement. Being a portion of Western Addition Block Number 463.

Parcel Number Three. Commencing at the Southeasterly corner of Bush and Powell Streets; running thence Easterly along the Southerly line of Bush Street forty-five (45) feet; thence at right angles Southerly sixty-seven (67) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Westerly forty-five (45) feet to the Easterly line of Powell Street; and thence Northerly along said Easterly line of Powell Street sixty-seven (67) feet and six (6) inches to the point of commencement. Being a portion of Fifty Vara Lot Number 314.

Parcel Number Four. Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Folsom Street, distant thereon one hundred and ninety (190) feet Southerly from the Southerly line of Precita Place; running thence Southerly and along said Easterly line of Folsom Street twenty-seven (27) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Easterly one hundred and ten (110) feet; thence at right angles Northerly twenty-seven (27) feet and six (6) inches; and thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and ten (110) feet to the Easterly line of Folsom Street, and the point of commencement. Being Lot Number 32, as per Kingston's Map of Lots Numbers 148 to 153, Precita Valley Lands, filed in the office of the County Recorder of the City and County of San Francisco, July 20, 1865, and recorded in Map-Book E and F of Maps, at page 29.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit:

That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute; that her title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 31st day of December, A. D. 1908.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this Summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 9th day of January, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiff: A. TURTURICI and E. TURTURICI, residing at _____, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, have and claim an interest in Parcel Number Four of the land in said Complaint and hereinabove described, under a certain Agreement of Sale.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Attorney for Plaintiff, Rooms 1255-1257 Flood Bldg., 870 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal. 1-9-10

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Action No. 13477.

EDWARD FRANCIS McKITTRICK, Plaintiff,
vs.
All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Lien Upon the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, Defendants, Greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Edward Francis McKittrick, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above-entitled Court and county, within three (3) months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Folsom Street, distant thereon one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet Northerly from the Northerly line of Twenty-second (22nd) Street and running thence Northerly along said line of Folsom Street twenty-four (24) feet; thence at a right angle Easterly one hundred and twenty-two (122) feet and six (6) inches; thence at a right angle Southerly twenty-four (24) feet and thence at a right angle Westerly one hundred and twenty-two (122) feet and six (6) inches to the said Easterly line of Folsom Street and point of commencement.

Being a portion of Mission Block Number 54.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit:

That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute; that his title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover his costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 29th day of December, A. D. 1908.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By M. P. BRUTEN, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 9th day of January, 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiff: None.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Attorney for Plaintiff, Rooms 1255-57 Flood Bldg., 870 Market Street, San Francisco. 1-9-10

SUMMONS

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
In and for the City and County of San Francisco. Action No. 12782.

ERNESTINE KRELING and JAMES F. LEAHY, Plaintiffs,
vs.
All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Lien Upon the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants, Greetings.

You are hereby required to appear and answer the Complaint of Ernestine Kreling and James F. Leahy, Plaintiffs, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at the Southwesterly corner of Golden Gate Avenue and Steiner Street; running thence Westerly along the Southerly line of Golden Gate Avenue One Hundred and Thirty-seven (137) feet and Six (6) inches; thence at right angles Southerly One Hundred (100) feet; thence at right angles Easterly One Hundred and Thirty-seven (137) feet and Six (6) inches to the Westerly line of Steiner Street and thence at right angles Northerly along said line of Steiner Street One Hundred (100) feet to the point of commencement.

Being a portion of Western Addition Block Number Three Hundred and Eighty-one (381).

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiffs will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit, for a judgment of said Court as follows:

1st. Ascertaining and determining all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said real property and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, or whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description.

nd. Establishing the title of plaintiffs and of each of them to said real property and determining all adverse claims thereto, and adjudging that each of said plaintiffs is the owner in fee simple absolute of an undivided one-half of the said real property and every part thereof.

3rd. For such other and further relief as to the Court may seem proper, and for costs of suit.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 27th day of November, 1908.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By T. C. RYAN, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 12th day of December, A. D. 1908.

The following persons are said to claim some interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiffs, to-wit:

French Savings Bank, a corporation, whose address is No. 108 Sutter Street, San Francisco, California.

CAMPBELL, METSON, DREW, OATMAN & MACKENZIE,
Attyns. for Plaintiffs, Balboa Bldg., 595 Market St., S. F. 12-12-10

Following on the Appointment by Royal Warrant to His Majesty last month, we notice Messrs. Mackie & Coy's "White Horse Cellar" Whisky has just been awarded the Gold Medal for quality at the Franco-British Exhibition.

Louis Crepaux

(Member of Paris Grand Opera)

Has removed to his new studio,

Delbert Block, 943 Van Ness avenue, cor. O'Farrell.

Reception hours: 11:30 to 12, and 3 to 4, except Wednesdays. Wednesdays in Oakland, 1154 Brush street.

Emil Steinegger

PIANOFORTE PLAYING

924 Grove St (above Fillmore), San Francisco.

For appointments phone Merritt 2845

Thursdays, 2701 Regent St., Berkeley

Mackenzie Gordon

TENOR

TEACHER OF SINGING { in all its branches, from the rudiments of tone formation to the highest finish and Completion of Public Singing.

Oratorio, Opera and Concert

By appointment only Phone Franklin 3594

Studio: 1350 FRANKLIN ST.

Louis H. Eaton

Organist and Director of the Music Trinity Church

Teacher of

PIANO, ORGAN, SINGING

1678 Broadway Phone Franklin 2244

Donald Maclean

SINGING—Pupil Seagle and De Rezske

Henri Etlin

PIANO—First Prize Paris Conservatoire

STUDIO, 1613 GREEN ST. Phone, Franklin 3153

Samuel M. Shortridge

ATTORNEY AT LAW

CHRONICLE BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO

Tel. Douglas 2176

Robert B. McMillan

ATTORNEY AT LAW

Has removed his Law Offices to the

CHRONICLE BUILDING, Fifth Floor

Phone Kearny 5969 Rooms 517-518

Knight & Heggerty

ATTORNEYS AT LAW and

PROCTORS IN ADMIRALTY

MERCHANTS EXCHANGE BLDG., S. F.

Rooms 626 and 630

LA GRANDE AND WHITES LAUNDRY CO.

Office and Works

234 TWELFTH STREET Bet. Mission and Howard

Phone Market 1690 SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

PATRICK & CO.

RUBBER STAMPS

STENCILS, SEALS, SIGNS & ETC.

126 BUSH ST. SAN FRANCISCO

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Dept. 10—No. 20497.

ANNA D. ROLLER, Plaintiff,

vs.

ALVA AARON and M. CLIFFORD AARON, Defendants.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Alva Aaron and M. Clifford Aaron, Defendants.

You are hereby directed to appear and answer the complaint in an action entitled as above brought against you in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, within ten days after the service on you of this summons—if served within this City and County; or within thirty days if served elsewhere.

And you are hereby notified that unless you appear and answer as above required, the said plaintiff will take judgment for any money or damages demanded in the complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, this 23rd day of December, A. D. 1908.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

By L. J. WELCH, Deputy Clerk.

TOBIN & TOBIN, Attorneys for Plaintiff. 1-16-10

SUMMONS.

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

GUSTAVE WEDELSTAEDT, Plaintiff

vs.

ELIZABETH WEDELSTAEDT, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Elizabeth Wedelstaedt, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above name plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed herein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's desertion and extreme cruelty; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the Complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 12th day of November, A. D. 1908.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

By MILTON M. DAVIS, Deputy Clerk.

C. F. ADAMS, Attorney for Plaintiff,
378 Monadnock Bldg., S. F. 12-12-10

HENRY P. TRICOU

NOTARY PUBLIC

508 CALIFORNIA STREET Phone Kearny 711

Residence, 852 Grove St. Phone Page 55

BONESTELL & CO.

PAPER

The paper used in printing this magazine is our Albion Book

California's Leading Paper House

116 to 124 FIRST ST. SAN FRANCISCO

Phone Kearny 1272

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

No. 7022, Dept. 10.

Estate of ADOLPHE ROOS, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, executors of the last will and testament of Adolphe Roos, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said executors at Heller, Powers & Ehrman, 713 Union Trust Building, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, which said office the undersigned select as their place of business in all matters connected with said estate of Adolphe Roos, deceased.

GEORGE H. ROOS,
LEON L. ROOS,

Executors of the Last Will and Testament of Adolphe Roos, Deceased.

Dated: San Francisco, Cal., January 23, 1909.

HELLER, POWERS & EHRMAN,
Attorneys for Executors,
Union Trust Bldg., San Francisco. 1-23-5

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of MINNIE SINGER, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Administrators, with Will annexed, of the estate of MINNIE SINGER, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten (10) months after the first publication of this notice to the said Administrators, with Will annexed, at the law office of A. Comte, Jr., No. 333 Kearny Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned selects as their place of business in all matters connected with said estate of Minnie Singer, deceased.

CHARLES HUFSCHMIDT,
HENRY HUFSCHMIDT,
GEORGE F. HUFSCHMIDT,

Administrators with the Will annexed of the estate of Minnie Singer, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, January 16, 1909.

A. COMTE, Jr., 333 Kearny St., S. F.,
Atty. for Administrators with Will Annexed. 1-16-5

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., San Francisco, Cal.

Guaranteed Capital	$ 1,200,000.00
Capital actually paid up in cash	$ 1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds	$ 1,479,043.00
Deposits December 31, 1908	$35,079,498.53
Total Assets	$37,661,836.70

Remittance may be made by Draft, Post Office, or Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Money Orders, or coin by Express.

Office Hours: 10 o'clock a. m. to 3 o'clock p. m., except Saturdays to 12 o'clock m. and Saturday evenings from 7 o'clock p. m. to 8 o'clock p. m. for receipt of deposits only.

OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohte; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourny; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS—N. Ohlandt, Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohte; Ign. Steinhardt, I. N. Walter, J. W. Van Bergen, F. Tillmann, Jr., E. T. Kruse and W. S. Goodfellow.

MISSION BRANCH, 2572 Mission Street, between 21st and 22nd Street. For receipt and payment of Deposits only. C. W. Heyer, Manager.

MEN

Afflicted with any private ailment consult the United Physicians and Surgeons. Strictly reliable specialists in Genito-Urinary, Blood and Skin diseases, and all reflex ailments of men. Prompt, efficient services; fees moderate; consultation free and confidential. Write or call. Hours 9 a. m. to 9 p. m. Sundays, 9 to 2.

A word to the wise is sufficient.

United Physicians and Surgeons

517 Twenty-third St., Oakland

Near Telegraph Avenue.

10 Third Street, San Francisco

Next to Call Building

MAYERLE'S EYE WATER, by mail 65c

Orders for Eye Glasses, Opera Glasses, Lorgnettes, sent by mail, $5, $10, $15.

DANGER SIGNALS

Painful, Sore, Red, Inflamed, Burning, Smarting, Itching, Scratching, Twitching, and Gluey Eyes, Heavy or Crusty Eyelids, Floating Spots, Cloudiness of Vision, Cross Eyes, Watery or Discharging Eyes, feeling like sand in the Eyes, Heavy and Crusty Eyelids are often Considered Dangerous Signals.

NEGLECTED EYESIGHT AFFECTS THE BRAIN

Mayerle's Glasses rest and strengthen the eyes and preserve the sight.

GEORGE MAYERLE

Granduate German Expert Optician, charter member American Association of Opticians and Vice-President Optical Specialist Association of America, 1149 Golden Gate Ave., between Webster and Buchanan sts. Phone Park 3153, San Francisco.

Gadski

Steinway

Sherman Clay & Co.

KEARNY AND SUTTER STREETS, SAN FRANCISCO

BROADWAY AT 13th, OAKLAND 1605 VAN NESS, SAN FRANCISCO

San Francisco, Cal., January 20th, 1909.

Messrs. SHERMAN, CLAY & CO.,
Kearny and Sutter Streets, San Francisco, Cal.

Gentlemen: Allow me to express my appreciation for your kindness in placing such beautiful Steinway Grand Pianos at my disposal during my San Francisco visit, both at my private apartments and at the public concerts.

I like to take advantage of this opportunity to reiterate my high regards for the Steinway Piano, the superiority of which I have always conceded by never using any other instrument, either publicly or privately, during all my American tours, notwithstanding many offers to make a change.

Yours cordially,

(Signed) JOHANNA GADSKI TAUSCHER.

Vol. XVII. No. 859. SAN FRANCISCO, FEBRUARY 13, 1909. PRICE, 10 CENTS

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

SAN FRANCISCO TOWN TALK

A NOCTURNE

Electric Grill Room of the Hotel St. Francis, San Francisco

Leading Hotels and Resorts

HOTEL ST. FRANCIS
UNION SQUARE

A luxurious hairdressing department has been opened on the second floor.

Manicuring, facial massage, shampooing, etc.

Under the management of JAMES WOODS

FAIRMONT HOTEL

The social center of a most sociable city

Management of PALACE HOTEL COMPANY

HOTEL WASHINGTON

JOHN H. LANGTON, Manager

SEATTLE, WASH.

A magnificent modern structure involving over One Million and a Half Dollars. Conducted on Most liberal ideas of Experience. Its appointments and service cannot be excelled in the United States. The management cordially invites your patronage.

THE PERRY
Madison St. and Boren Ave.
SEATTLE, WASH.

EVERY MODERN CONVENIENCE

Absolutely fire proof. European plan, the highest grade. Under new management. Centrally located and commanding a view of the Olympics, Cascade Mountains, Mt. Rainier and Puget Sound. J. S. McTERNAN, Manager.

HOTEL WASHINGTON ANNEX

SEATTLE, WASH.

Best Rooms Best Service

Strictly First-Class

J. H. DAVIS - - - - - Proprietor

PLAY GOLF
AT
HOTEL DEL MONTE

On the finest 18-hole course in the country

Through parlor car leaves San Francisco daily 3 p. m. For literature, week-end rates and reservations address H. R. WARNER, Manager, or Peck-Judah Co., 789 Market St., S. F.

HOTEL SORRENTO

Corner
Madison St. and Terry Ave.
SEATTLE

European and American Plan

Roof Garden, Tea and Dining Rooms on Top Floor overlooking Sound, Lakes and Mountains.

Langford & Henderson, Proprietors
J. G. Wright, Manager

BYRON
HOT SPRINGS HOTEL

One of the world's most curative springs.

One of America's most comfortable and refined hostelries.

See Southern Pacific information bureau, James Flood Building, or any Southern Pacific agent or Peck-Judah Co., 789 Market street, or address Manager at hotel.

HOTEL CARLTON

Telegraph Avenue at Durant
BERKELEY

A FIRST-CLASS TRANSIENT AND FAMILY HOTEL

MRS. W. F. MORRIS, Proprietor
formerly of Hotel Cecil, 960 Bush Street, San Francisco

TOWN TALK

THE PACIFIC WEEKLY

Vol. XVII. San Francisco, February 13, 1909. No. 859

THE WASHINGTON

This is the largest and most elegantly appointed hotel in Seattle. The site of this hotel was formerly at the altitude of the roof of the building. It was leveled by the hydraulic process.

TOWN TALK

Published Weekly by
TOWN TALK PUBLISHING COMPANY
Theodore F. Bonnet.....Editor
Ralph A. Grover.....Manager
88 First St., cor. Mission, San Francisco. Telephone Douglas 2612.

SUBSCRIPTION One Year, in advance, $4.00; six months, $2.25; three months, $1.30; single copies, 10 cents. Foreign subscription (countries in Postal Union), $5.00 per year. For sale by all Newsdealers.

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter.

The Trade in San Francisco supplied direct by us. Outside of San Francisco by the San Francisco News Co.

For foreign and local advertising rates address 5 Third Street, San Francisco.

Los Angeles office, 731 Central Building

Seattle office, 913 Third Avenue. Theo. S. Hansford Special Representative.

We decline to return or to enter into correspondence as to rejected communications; and to this rule we can make no exception. Manuscripts not acknowledged within four weeks are rejected.

Our War Cloud

Once more the Japanese question possesses the public mind to the exclusion of all others. With President Roosevelt sweating at Washington, Governor Gillett in nervous trepidation at Sacramento and the wires humming with messages of passionate expostulation we appear, at this writing, to be in the midst of a crisis that is throwing deep shadows of uncertainty over our immediate prospects. Meanwhile that illustrious propugnator of the people's cause, that militant reformer of the peaceful Sacramento Valley, the Hon. Grove L. Johnson, inspired with an evangelical enthusiasm, is rampant at the State Capitol, eager to assert the dignity and majesty of the proudest commonwealth of the Pacific. Mr. Johnson is conducting his crusade against the Oriental pest on a high moral plane. Conscious alike of the rectitude of his intentions and the welfare of his countrymen he recks not where his burning words fall so long as they are true and right. Out of this pregnant agitation who knows but that, in the event of the passage of the right kind of direct primary law, Mr. Johnson may derive sufficient glory to enable him to sweep the State in the role of candidate for the United States Senate.

Uncle Sam's Pusillanimous Attitude

The agitation of our statesmen at Washington caused by the agitation of the Japanese question at Sacramento, is, to say the least, somewhat humiliating to all of us. We are told that the honor of Japan is at stake and that consequently "we must go slow." Apparently it is taken for granted that the honor of California is not to be considered. It is the honor of Japan that must be the objective of all legislation at Sacramento relating to alien immigration to California and the age limit of pupils attending the public schools. Now as a matter of fact the honor of Japan is not at stake at all. If the United States were to violate a treaty with Japan that act would be dishonorable on our part and it would be just cause of indignation in Japan, but there is no prospect of the violation of a treaty. Our Legislature may enact legislation at variance with the terms of a treaty, but such legislation can have no effect. A State legislature cannot abrogate the law of the land. So far as curtailing the privileges of the Japanese is concerned it is within our power to do only those things which are not provided against by the terms of existing treaties, and in the exercise of that power we cannot wound the honor of Japan. Between honor and arrogance there is a vast distinction. If we conceive honor to be a sense of dignity rather than a moral conscience, which it really is, then we should deeply deplore the effect upon us of the protests that have come from Japan. We appear to be on the verge of panic. Our statesmen tell us that "we must go slow"; we must not even attempt to regulate our public schools without considering the feelings of a people irritably jealous of shadows that may blur the bright disk of their national honor. We are reminded that Japan did not hesitate to attack Russia when that people was supposed to be the strongest military nation in the world; that Japan fought and won the greatest naval battle in history, and also the greatest land battle in history. We are therefore to infer that if we do not go slow Japan will wallop the hide off us as she walloped the hide off Russia. If we were dealing out legislation against China or Korea or any other helpless nation we should hear none of this talk about the "honor" of nations that seek to impose themselves on us in spite of our protest. Perhaps China and Korea and those other weak and helpless nations are as "proud and sensitive" as Japan, but this pride and sensitiveness would cut no ice with us. Apparently we respect pride and sensitiveness only when they are embodied in big military establishments. We sincerely hope that the universal calm that laves as with the quiet undulations of placid lakes the teeming shores of our beloved country is not to be broken, and at the same time we lament that our spectacular President sent the battleship fleet round the world to accumulate barnacles and dyspepsia. Our nerves are beginning to betray the effect of constantly exhibiting a hungry attention to punctilios. It may be well for us to be mindful of the fact that a hostile spirit ever on the alert for pretexts can "find quarrel in a straw"; also that the spirit of aggression is nursed by submission.

The Unpatriotic Harriman

The most uprighteous of all secular journals, the Bulletin, has been preaching a characteristic sermon on the unrighteousness of that purple plutocrat and successful sinner, Mr. E. H. Harriman. The Bulletin's sermons are always edifying. Like Joseph Surface the proprietor of the Bulletin is a man of fine sentiments, and the Bulletin's sermons always breathe a lofty moral enthusiasm and intense hatred of wickedness. Knowing as we do that the Bulletin is enshrined in the popular heart and is ever deserving of the affectionate confidence of those for whom life has high meanings and lofty issues, we are ever reluctant to dissent from its solemn judgment upon men and women who have fallen from their integrity, and against whom the Bulletin alone is qualified in grace and sanctity to cast the first stone. However, respectfully and deferentially we shall venture in this instance to suggest that being immune from temptation the Bulletin does not always consider the circumstances that alter cases and weaken the power of resistance. Consider, for example, the case of Mr. Harriman, who according to the Bulletin is not patriotic inasmuch as he is responsible for a system from which springs a certain amount of the evil practices with which our politics is gangrened. Now as a matter of fact Mr. Harriman's wickedness may in a great measure be palliated upon a principle which in this day and generation is receiving universal endorsement in this enlightened land of liberty. We refer to the principle of the greater good justifying almost any expedient. This is Roosevelt dogma. It is the dogma that the Bulletin and its lessors have been endorsing in connection with the moral uplift of San Francisco, with reference to everything which they in their extraordinary wisdom and virtue have generously undertaken to regulate and reform. Why should not the benefit of this principle be extended to Mr. Harriman whose activities in the industrial world unquestionably are for the greater good of the country? His interests are the people's interests, but the machinery by which these interests are promoted is in constant danger of impairment from the misguided people themselves, and to safeguard the machinery Mr. Harriman is obliged to conduct a political bureau. Thus we see that his sins are the inevitable transgressions of a genius for empire building circumscribed by democracy.

The People's Lobby

It cannot be charged against Mr. Harriman that he invented the political bureau. He found it in operation when he entered upon his career as a railroad magnate. He soon realized that it was absolutely essential, that without it the property under his management would be destroyed at the instigation of the demagogues of journalism and the demagogues of politics. Unquestionably this bureau breeds corruption, but much of what apparently is wickedness is nothing more than an expression of the first law of nature. The principle of the Harriman bureau is not any worse than the principle of the bureau maintained at Washington by organized labor under the management of the Hon. Samuel Gompers, or the one maintained at Sacramento by the so-called People's Lobby. The Washington and Sacramento bureaus are conducted for the purpose of intimidation. One is in the interest of a class and the other is in the interest of a coterie who presume to determine what legislation should be enacted and what should be defeated. These bureaus are not in harmony with the spirit and principle of our government. The theory of our government is that our legislatures shall be composed of men better qualified than the multitude to make laws for the commonwealth, and that the legislators shall be permitted to do their own thinking. To coerce a legislature is as iniquitous as to bribe a legislature. The legislator who votes contrary to the dictates of his judgment to comply with the wishes of the self-constituted mouthpieces of the people is no less corrupt than the bribe-taker. In this connection it is worth while recalling that the beginning of the end in ancient Rome was marked by the triumph of the People's Lobby when at the instigation of Saturninus, the demagogue, the Senate was coerced into acquiescence in the proposition to divide large tracts of land in Gaul among the soldiers.

Coddling the Mob

We do not wish to be understood as approving the principle upon which Mr. Harriman's sins might be palliated. We merely wish to suggest that the worst of our political evils are the essential evils of a system of government which has been perverted by demagogues, and that the real enemies of the nation are not men of the Harriman type but unscrupulous journalists who are misleading public opinion for the enrichment of themselves through the favor of the multitude. The fundamental principle of our government is the fundamental principle of the jury system which was designed to solve the problem of how on the one hand to avoid putting a man's life and property in the hands of a single despot while on the other hand protecting him from the tumultuous judgment of a crowd. In other words there was instituted in this country a representative form of government, the scheme of which contemplated the transaction of public business by men chosen for their superior intelligence or other elements of fitness. The founders were sensible of the fact that the ripened temper of mind requisite for realizing the public good is never engendered by the impetuosity and turbulence of the masses, but now we find that the masses are being urged to exercise direct control of affairs, and we are plunging deeper and deeper into democracy and subordinating quality to quantity under the malign influence of mob-coddling journalists who have not even the decency to convert themselves to their own views. As a consequence we find that the evils of Mr. Harriman's system are in proportion to the unscrupulosity of the molders of public opinion. The more zealously the molders urge the puppets of the mob to vindicate their devotion to their constituents, the more desperately must Mr. Harriman's political agents strive to protect his interests.

The Passion for Mediocrity

An examination of school children's teeth in one of the eastern cities has resulted in a report that ninety per cent of the pupils are in immediate need of attention, and that the probabilities are that the parents are either too poor to pay dentists' bills or too indifferent to give the subject their attention. As usual, it is "women to the rescue." Dentistry being a profession in which skill rather than capital is demanded, it is proposed that philanthropic women shall be induced to establish scholarships and endow institutions wherein girls may be trained, to the end that children's teeth may be tinkered at betimes. As the present difficulty appears to be not the dearth of dentists but the lack of patients, it is by no means obvious how this remedy is to be made to work to anybody's advantage. The old adage about leading a horse to water and yet being unable to force him to drink falls short of describing the situation as set forth by the inquisitors, for the horse in this instance can be neither driven, coaxed nor bribed as far as the fountain. But this is a circumstance that does not concern the dear creatures who fancy that they have discovered a new field of endeavor for their sex. What strikes them more than anything else is the reputed "easiness" of dentistry. Any one can master it after a fashion with little application. How characteristic of the temperament of the day is this attitude toward one of the professions! Boys and girls, and especially girls, are brought up with the idea that some occupations are in themselves "genteel," and that fitness, preparation and natural capacity are insignificant matters. The natural result is that there are thousands occupying positions which they cannot fill. There are hoards of stenographers who cannot spell; bookkeepers who cannot add; "journalists" who cannot write; their very numbers lowering the average standard of efficiency. Business men are compelled to put up with them because they have no hope of improving the condition. The same is true of the professions. There was a time when a man who had not read history and philosophy to a sufficient extent to have improved his mind could not obtain admission to the bar. But nowadays there is a royal road to the bar, and the men that travel over it are the men of little learning who by reason of their opportunities and the false prestige which they enjoy are far more undesirable as citizens than the pro-

The Hub.
CHAS. KEILUS & CO
EXCLUSIVE
HIGH GRADE CLOTHIERS

No Branch Stores—No Agents.

WE ARE NOW READY TO SHOW OUR COSTUMES FOR SPRING. UNIFORMITY OF WORKMANSHIP PREDOMINATES IN THIS SHOP. ONE GARMENT HERE IS MADE EQUALLY AS GOOD AS THE OTHER. WE SUPERVISE PERSONALLY EVERY GARMENT WE DELIVER. WE CHOOSE THE BEST MAKERS AND DROP THE NEARLY-AS-GOOD.

Every Good Dresser The Hub Chas Keilus & Co. Knows This Label.
San Francisco.

This modern men's clothes shop of ours is considered one of the smartest anywhere. For this approaching spring season we shall make every legitimate effort to increase our volume of business and are going to give the best clothes made at the fairest and squarest prices ever quoted. We thoroughly understand clothes building, consequently, we have the best you can get for money. This is strictly an exclusive men's clothes shop.

JEWELERS' BUILDING
Post Street, Near Kearny, San Francisco.

fessional criminals that come to us from the slums of Europe. An example of their dangerous ignorance is to be found in the recommendations made by some of them to the Legislature. One of the reasons upon which they based certain recommendations was that the things which they recommended had never been "tried in an Anglo-Saxon country"; whereas they were the very things which had provoked the resentment out of which springs many of the fundamental principles of our government. If the club women who have evinced such concern over the decaying teeth of the infant population had supplemented their desire for improvement by a corresponding discrimination in the selection of those to be trained for the profession of dentistry, there would be only gain, but as it is, they see but one object to be fulfilled, namely, the chance to make a good income which would then be offered to a few hundreds or thousands of their own sex. Why children with poor teeth should be assumed to be benefited by the addition of poor dentistry is, as Dundreary says, "one of the things no fellow can find out."

Indiana's Great Author

"The publishers of Harold MacGrath's machine-made books announce that of his canned fiction 900,000 copies have been sold in Indiana alone. We did not know there were that many simpletons in the State which George Ade once declared he would never go back on—or to." So says the Musical Leader, but there is nothing to get indignant at. Harold MacGrath's stories are innocuous. There is now, and always has been, a large class of readers to whom just this grade of literature is acceptable. Cut off from their supply they would simply cease to read anything at all, and a goodly proportion of them would occupy their leisure in ways far more harmful than in reading clean, if not particularly powerful romance. There are plenty of stronger books for those who crave them.No one is under any compulsion to read MacGrath if he prefers Hewlett, and all the efforts yet made to herd the public in the other direction have thus far proved useless. It is one thing to raise water from a forty-foot well by the aid of a steam pump or a windmill; it is quite another matter to induce the water to lift itself when the pressure has been removed, simply by the power of momentum supposed to be imparted. Despite all the teaching of literaure in secondary schools and colleges, in primary and grammar classes, too, for that matter, the average of taste has not been perceptibly raised. Shakespeare still plays to empty seats and the best sellers are not even approximately the best literature. For all that, let us recall those other days when so many of the novels in general circulation were the pirated editions of uncopyrighted foreign works. We had Rhoda Broughton, "The Duchess," Mary Cecil Hay, Ethel Lynn Lynton, Hawley Smart, and perhaps a score more, and who dare say they were any better or even as good as the native products? What has become of the "Fireside Companion," "Saturday Night," "Family Story Paper," "Waverley," and their contemporaries, which enjoyed such a vast circulation? They have simply been crowded from the field, driven out by the Harold MacGraths. It will be an ideal state of affairs when everyone's musical taste has been elevated to the Wagnerian standard, but meanwhile there is a host of worthy folk who find pleasure in "tunes" and ragtime melodies. We may dream dreams of that bright future when only real artists will paint because only geniuses will find recognition, but until that halcyon period arrives it is absurd to complain that everybody doesn't appreciate good literature. The people of Indiana condemned as simpletons for buying 900,000 copies of the MacGrath books might have wasted their money in much worse ways. They might have made choice of some of the unspeakably vulgar novels which have had such a wide vogue in more enlightened centers, or they might have purchased 900,000 bottles of whisky and kept their town marsnals and constables busy rounding them up.

The Unpopular Bachelor

The old-age pension legislation is going to cost Great Britain a pretty penny, and already there are propositions on foot to raise the necessary funds by special legislation. As usual the bachelor is singled out for special attention, though it does not appear to have occurred to any one to note whether there is a disproportionately large number of the unmarried amongst the beneficiaries. Just why at this period of the world's history it should be deemed advisable to put a penalty on bachelorhood we have not been informed. In ancient Greece and Rome bachelors were regarded with disfavor because it was conceived to be the duty of the citizen not only to fight for his country but to keep up the supply of his country's fighting men; but nowadays it is generally admitted that we have too many warriors and that it would be better for the world if we had fewer standing armies. True, we are told that in some countries there is danger of race suicide, but this danger does not arise from dearth of marriages. What shall it avail a people, threatened with extinction, to encourage marriage if the married man and his wife remain unmindful of the importance of propagating the species? Let us not be too dogmatic in our views with reference to undesirability of celibates. Were it not for many a bachelor uncle many a child would go hungry. The man who looks ahead and compares his income with the certain expense of maintaining a family is a better citizen than the one who falls in love with the first pretty face he meets and depends on charity or family assistance to feed and clothe his innumerable brood. Bachelors who own property now contribute their quota to all the public needs. Public schools and orphan asylums can be of no advantage to them, present or future, nor public play grounds, juvenile courts and reformatories. If there were call for a special class tax in the United States, it could be placed to advantage on the divorced, who take up a disproportionately large part of the time of courts and legislative bodies, whose children form the greatest percentage of our delinquents, and whose affairs occupy the attention of our newspapers to the exclusion of better things. Moreover, they are so numerous that the per capita would be small and at the same time it would be so widely distributed as to almost cease to be a special class tax.

J. C. WILSON
BROKER
Private Wire Chicago and New York
Member New York Stock Exchange, Chicago Board of Trade and Stock and Bond Exchange, San Francisco
LOCAL AND EASTERN STOCKS AND BONDS
Main Office, Mills Bldg. Tel. Kearny 482.
Branch Office, Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles.

HOTEL VICTORIA
N. E. cor. Bush and Stockton
CENTRALLY LOCATED .·. A MODERN AND UP-TO-DATE FAMILY HOTEL
Sun in every room. Elaborate furnishings. Excellent cuisine.
Large lobby and reception room. Grill room. Dining room.
American and European Plan.

The Wáning Moon

(Translated from the Italian of Gabriele D'Annunzio)

O silver sickle of the waning moon,
  Bending above the wintry desert's woe,
How mighty is the harvest-home of dreams,
  Waving in silence for you here below!

The fluttering breath of sudden leaves, of flowers,
  Of forest streams, wafts softly out to sea;
No weeping and no laughter breaks the silence—
  The vasty silence of thine empery.

Oppressed with passion and oppressed with pleasure,
  The throbbing world sleeps, tossing to and fro;
O sickle, what a harvest-home of visions
  Lies dreaming, waiting for you here below!

Perspective Impressions

If Justice has her eyes bandaged, so often have those who would outrage her.

Those who are ignorant of the past are seldom learned as regards the present.

Some men never appear so disinterested as when they have done something from an interested motive.

According to the editor of the Chronicle the reform in criminal procedure recommended by the Commonwealth Club and Bar Association are the same as the reforms that have been recommended by the National Bar Association. It would be interesting to learn the source of the Chronicle's misinformation. Who told the editor of the Chronicle that the National Bar Association favors putting a man twice in jeopardy and doing away with the principle of immunity from self-accusation?

The cure for the evils of Democracy, we are told, is more Democracy. Quite right. This cure is based on the principle of setting fire to the house to rid it of the odor of onions.

"In no sense," says the New York World, "does the prejudice in California against the Japanese represent a national feeling." Neither does the prejudice against the negro in the South, or the prejudice against Mr. Pulitzer in the White House.

Said President Bourn of the Spring Valley Water Company to the Board of Supervisors: "I can go out and get a water system for the city while you are talking and wasting the city's money. The trouble is that the water question has been a political issue." He might truthfully have added that it is a private political issue agitated in the interest of a millionaire demagogue.

AND HE BOUGHT IT!

Detroit News.

SEEING THINGS AGAIN

Philadelphia North-American.

Japan's "Unmorality"

Setting Forth in Formal Phrase the Distinction and the Difference of a Racial Habit Which Would be Deemed Highly Immoral if it Were Not the Hereditary Trait of a Proud, Sensitive and Conspicuously Honorable People.

By Democritus

Objection has been urged to the Japanese on the ground of their immorality, and this objection has obtruded modestly and tentatively in some of our discussions concerning the desirability of permitting Japanese young men to learn their English in the primary mixed schools of this city where many of the pupils are white girls of tender age.

I suppose that it would be almost equivalent to a declaration of war to insist that the Japanese are an immoral people. Therefore I will accept the statement of some very nice observers to the purpose that the Japanese are not immoral—that they are only unmoral.

This unmorality of the Japanese has been excused by their friends upon the plea that it is only by comparison with western morality that they may be judged and that this comparison is unfair to the Japanese because they have always been unmoral. Their unmorality is hereditary and racial. The Japanese have never had opportunity to be otherwise. I am not aware, however, that this defense of Japanese morals, or unmorals, has ever been urged as sufficient reason why a Japanese "schoolboy" twenty years of age should be taught his English in the same class with white girls of ten and twelve years of age.

The unmorality of the Japanese not only appertains to their sexual relations which are as loose as any immorality practiced by the western nations, but extends to all their dealings with the foreigner and to some degree in their own business affairs. All the banks of Japan employ the notoriously honest Chinese to handle the money of the banks. Two reasons are assigned for this preference: In the first place the Chinese are adepts in the manipulation of coin either in the counting or in the detection of bad or short weight money. The other reason is because the Japanese are afraid to trust "scroffs" or money counters and bank tellers of their own race.

In their dealings with foreigners the Japanese tradesmen are absolutely unscrupulous and as dishonest as the profit of that sort of thing may demand. The godowns of Yokohama are, at this moment, crammed with foreign goods which the purchasers have refused on delivery because the price has receded since the contract for the consignment was signed. Any excuse for violation of contracts of this nature is sufficient. I know of one instance where a quantity of yarn was ordered by a firm of which the manager of the Yokohama Specie Bank was the director, and refused because the color did not suit the purchasers, but in fact because the price of "purple hokuroka" had fallen on the local market. The case was carried into the Japanese courts and a decision promptly rendered against the foreigner plaintiffs. Another instance of precisely similar character but involving all Japanese was decided in favor of the plaintiffs.

The Japanese may be a "proud, honorable and sensitive" people, but these virtues do not operate to compel honesty in commercial transactions between the Japanese and their foreign creditors or foreign customers. The foreigner who goes to Japan must expect to be skinned, bunkoed and robbed. He must expect to pay five times as much as would be charged to a Japanese for everything he eats, drinks or wears. Even the "tips" demanded in the hotels and restaurants are as ten to one of those given by a native. A jinricksha coolie will invariably charge a foreigner fifty cents American money for the service that would cost a Japanese about ten cents. I have appealed to the police of Japanese cities many times against this extortion, and my protest has resulted sometimes in reduction of the larceny from the grand to the petty variety—probably a little more than double the legal charge.

Japanese who do not happen to be "in trade" are free to admit the utter dishonesty of their fellow countrymen in commerce; but they aver that it is the consequence of contact with the trading foreigner who would cheat the Jap out of his back teeth if the Jap did not first apply the forceps. Perhaps that is true, but since the Japanese have learned the tricks of the game they are able to win against cards, spades and big casino. On the principle that "the first blow is half the battle," and acting on the golden rule of "doing others before they do you," the Japanese merchant and tradesman will stop at nothing to pick the pockets of all foreigners who may come within reach of his pilfering fingers.

Early marriages are the invariable rule in Japan. I have it upon the best authority that the effect on the men of Japan under this custom is to change the date of their wild-oats sowing, making it come after wedlock instead of before. Divorce is more common in Japan than in the United States or Europe. Such statistics as are available show that the general proportion of divorces to marriage has been nearly as 1 to 3, and in the most favorable years nearly as 1 to 4. These divorces are, for the most part, among the lower classes. The "honorable" upper class samurai rarely resort to divorce because the social ethics of Japan does not impose even the lightest moral obligation upon a husband who has tired of his wife—he may have as many mistresses as he is able to support, live with them openly and take them into a very good section of Japanese "society."

In Japan it is not necessary to call a secondary wife an "affinity." There is not the slightest pretense of apology for a husband's notorious infidelity. He is not immoral; he is only "unmoral." Temporary wives may be bought for more or less money from their parents in Japan; and these temporary marriages between Japanese girls and foreigners are duly recognized by Japanese law. I have personal knowledge of three men teachers in the public school department of the Philippines who went to Japan on their annual vacation and were immediately temporarily married to three pretty Japanese girls whose parents were paid the equivalent of fifteen American dollars for a three months' privilege. The girls only received their board, the ingredients of which they prepared for themselves and their "husbands," thus serving the double function of "wives" and servants. The central idea of the Luther Long drama "Madame Butterfly" is no fable; but the dramatic climax is wholly untrue. No Japanese "wife" would hari-kari herself for love of a foreign "husband." She would merely abide her chance of getting another. The denouement of Pierre Loti's story of Madame Chrysanthemum" is nearer the Japanese fact. Those who have read the Frenchman's book will remember that after he had paid Madame Chrysanthemum the final installment of her "dower" he went back to their abode to see what the little lady was doing; hoping to find her crying her brown eyes out with grief at parting with one whom she had a thousand times declared she loved above all the men to whom she had

(Continued on Page 29.)

IDEAL FARMS

"CERTIFIED MILK"

The most perfect product of the modern dairy

Certified to by the Medical Commission of the San Francisco County Medical Society

DISTRIBUTED BY

GUADALOUPE DAIRY CO. Phone Market 2590

STANDARD MILK CO. Phone Market 226

The Terrors of the "Third Degree"

Psychologists Discuss the Criminal Police Practice of Securing Untrue Confessions and a Playwright Illustrates With a Scene From Life.

By Robert F. Barton

Once more the expected has happened. Again we have witnessed the introduction of the adventitious aid to justice. A jury being in process of impanelment one of the unscrupulous Spreckels organs is employed to give circulation to the story of a convicted thief to the effect that one of the Claudianes brothers told him that he was employed by Tom Gibson, the United Railroad Company's detective to blow up Jim Gallagher's home. So absolutely underserving of credibility was the story which the mendacious Call published that even Detective Burns hastened to disavow responsibility therefor. The incident would not be worth discussion were it not that it recalls to mind the Claudianes case and that this moment learned scientists are devoting attention to the psychology of the "third degree." Claudianes, a half-witted individual, was put through the "third degree." A sack containing a thousand dollars was put on a table in front of him and he was told that he could earn the money by confessing that he dynamited the Gallagher home. He confessed. He is now in jail, but has not yet been tried. In his confession he implicated his brother who was told that although the prosecution had sufficient evidence to convict him, he would be granted immunity if he would confess and implicate somebody higher-up. So he too confessed, and he has been prosecuted and convicted, the principal evidence against him being his own confession. Now there are persons who doubt that either of the Claudianes brothers is guilty.

The Claudianes case is not unique. According to a writer in the New York World: "At intervals in the history of modern crime, after a man has paid the death penalty, convicted on his own confession, the 'murdered' man has turned up very much alive, or the real murderer driven to bay by conscience, has confessed. Then the casual reader has said: 'Why did that man ever confess?' And psychologists answer: 'Because he was put through the hypnotic third degree, and the confession was extorted by mental suggestion as surely as ever the rack and thumbscrew tore out untrue confessions in the days of the Inquisition.'"

The subject of untrue confessions secured through hypnotic suggestion has been treated in a book by Dr. Munsterberg, the noted psychologist, and so great is the interest now taken in the subject that Charles Klein, the playwright, author of "The Lion and the Mouse" has made it the theme of a play called "The Third Degree" which was produced last week at the Hudson Theatre in New York. In this play Howard Jeffries Jr., the extravagant and wilful son of a rich man, has married a girl of humble extraction and has been cast off by his family. He applies to an old college friend, Robert Underwood, for help, and happens to call when his friend is driven to the wall by creditors. He falls asleep in his friend's library. Underwood commits suicide in an adjoining room, and young Jeffries is found in the dead man's house by the police. The latter, acting on the theory that a motive has been established, proceed to extort a confession from Jeffries. At the end of a seven-hour cross-examination the false confession is secured. The following extract from the play shows exactly how this is done:

Capt. Clinton—There was a quarrel—and you shot him?—
Howard—No—no—there was no quarrel—no words—no. I swear there wasn't.
Capt. Clinton—He was found on the floor dead—in that room—you were trying to get out of the house—without being seen. You pretended you had been drinking—this door was locked. How do you account for that?
Howard (his eyes on pistol, repeats mechanically)—I shot that sofa. When I woke up—it was dark—I tried to get out—but the door was locked. I wanted to get home—I needed money—I wanted to tell my wife I couldn't get it—she was going out to work the first thing in the morning and I don't want her to. Won't you believe me? Won't you believe me? I am telling you God's truth—on my word of honor I am. (Sinks helplessly and hopelessly into chair, burying head in his arms.) They won't believe me—they won't believe me!—(momentary pause).
Capt. Clinton—Stand up! (Howard rises slowly.) The motive is clear. You came for money—was refused—there was a quarrel and you did the trick. Howard Jeffries, you shot Robert Underwood—and you shot him with this pistol. (With a quick movement he brings out pistol and places it for Howard to see, but close enough so that the rays of light fall upon the shining barrel of the revolver. The light shines on it so that it attracts the eye. Howard looks at it—his eyes are riveted on it until his face assumes a vacant stare. Scientifically this accomplishes the act of hypnotism and he comes under the influence of the will directing his will. He is now completely receptive.) You committed this crime, Howard Jeffries. (Howard gazes at pistol with fixed expression.) It's as clear as daylight—eh, Maloney? You did it, Jeffries—you know you did. Come, own up! Let's have the truth—you shot Robert Underwood—with this revolver. You did it, and you can't deny it, and you know you can't deny it. Speak!—go on—out with it! You shot Robert Underwood—(Momentary pause; Howard's eyes are on the pistol.)
Howard (his eyes on pistol, repeats mechanically)—I shoe Robert Underwood.
Capt. Clinton—You quarrelled—
Howard—We quarrelled.
Capt. Clinton—You came here for money—
Howard—I came here for money.
Capt. Clinton—He refused to give it to you?
Howard—He refused to give it to me.
Capt. Clinton—There was a quarrel?
Howard—There was a quarrel.
Capt. Clinton—You followed him into that room?
Howard—Followed him into that room.
Capt. Clinton—And shot him?
Howard—And shot him.
Capt. Clinton—Whew! That's all. (Howard sinks into seat, head resting on arms. Clinton pockets pistol.) Gee, he was a tough man! Get that all down?
Maloney—Yes, Captain.
Capt. Clinton (slapping Howard on shoulder)—Hey, Jeffries, come on—wake up! Come on—stand up! (Howard is handcuffed.) Here, Maloney, take him over to the station, write out that confession and get him to sign it before breakfast.

The average detective disclaims any knowledge of hypnotism, but I am told that Detective Burns is very proud of his eye, an organ which, in his opinion, is irresistible for some purposes. Whether the eye played any part in the Claudianes drama is something of which I am not informed. But it is my private, and therefore unimportant opinion, that the only things that are of any value to Burns when he is gumshoeing are his moustache and his conscience.

It may be that Burns never intentionally hypnotizes anybody, but the question of design is of no consequence. The experts say that a man may employ hypnotism without being conscious of the fact. Hence the danger of anything that savors of the "third degree," and hence too the importance of the principle of immunity from self-accusation, a principle which the legislature at Sacramento has been asked to ignore when reforming the penal code. Dr. Munsterberg says it was by the violation of this principle that persons accused of witchcraft in New England were induced to make "untrue confessions." He says: "Even a mere fatigue often brought to the Salem witches the loosening of the mental firmness and the intrusion of the suggestion of guilt. In tedious examinations the prisoners were urged to confess through many hours. The accused were wearied by being forced to stand so long or by want of sleep, and then gave consent to the accusation of having signed the devil's book."

Dr. John Duncan Quackenbos, author of "Hypnotic Thereapeutics" says that many untrue confessions are secured, and he mentions as a case in the point the one on which Mr. Klein has founded his play. It was the case of Richard Ivins of Chicago who was hanged in 1906 on his own confession though his friends proved an alibi which was above question.

The Meeting

By Louis Payen (From the French)

As she entered the room with a smile on her face one felt as though she brought with her a breath of springtime. She was exquisitely costumed. Her hat, her gown, her blond locks and her blue eyes all blended in one harmonious note of beauty and refinement.

Her head gracefully poised, her lips parted in a droll smile, she held her parasol under one arm, while buttoning her long gloves.

"Good-bye, sweethearts," she said, "I am going out."

The two looked up; Maurice, her son, nine years of age, who was busily engaged in coloring some of the engraving in his copy of Robinson Crusoe, dipping his brush now and then into his little box of paints, and her husband, much older than she, his hair graying at the temples, an expression of deep melancholy in his eyes.

"Oh, mamma, won't you take me out walking with you?" exclaimed Maurice.

"No, dear, not today. I have too much shopping to do. I must have a dress tried on, visit several stores, and pay two or three calls. It's reception day and the last tea given by Mme. Chautins. It is absolutely necessary that I should put in an appearance, as I have neglected her all winter and she is a woman who can be of some use to us.. I may be detained and return quite late, but you will not mind it, will you, dears?"

She spoke cheerfully and rapidly, like a woman who has something to say and wants to be done with it as quickly as possible; while speaking she looked at the child, but it seemed to Pierre Darcy, her husband, that the words were addressed to him, and that she was answering the mute reproach which she read in his eyes. She kissed the child, and then going over to the library table where her husband was at work, she extended her hand.

"Au revoir, Pierre," she said quietly.

He drew her to him and touched her blond hair with his lips. She drew away, and at the door turned and threw them both a kiss with the tips of her fingers, saying laughingly:

"Good-bye, sweethearts, be good, both of you, until mamma comes home."

The door closed, they could hear the frou-frou of her skirts as she went down the stairs. Silence fell upon the library. The boy continued to paint his picture, and the father to work at his books. Outside the sun was shining and all the flowers and trees were budding in the gay springtime. In the park the chestnut trees were uncurling their delicate leaves like bits of green silk.

A half hour passed in this way, and then Maurice broke the silence.

"Say, papa," he said, "why is mamma so pretty, why is she such a pretty woman?"

"That is because we both love her so much, my dear boy."

The child seemed to be reflecting, and Pierre Darcy too seemed to have become thoughtful. There are sometimes thoughts, latent within one, which rise suddenly to the threshold of consciousness because the hour has come; thoughts that have been creeping up, slowly, quietly, in the dark recesses of our souls. Somehow we know they are there, but fear to meet them. Lucienne, his little Lucy, she was so pretty when he married her ten years ago—but not so handsome as she was today. But did she still love him, had she ever loved him? At least she had been very sweet and very kind. If she had not known love, there had been sympathy and gratitude on her part toward him. Perhaps she thought for a moment the dream of her childhood days had been realized. But these are sentiments which are dulled by time and the monotonous march of the days. Now cracks begin to appear in the building of life, very small, and only perceptible to the eyes of love. Here and there comes a word that one cannot understand, a false note in the harmony of life that is breaking down, little by little. Pierre Darcy had noticed of late a new expression in her eyes, a difference in her gestures, thoughtful moods which seemed to be inexplicable; a thousand nothings, which when taken together seemed formidable.

The father dropped his book and glanced at his child, who in his interest in the picture had daubed his paints plentifully upon his face and hands. The child looked up at him, with that glance of infinite love and confidence which children have for the parents whom they know love them; but there was a look in his father's face which aroused his sympathy; he thought his father was suffering, for some reason he could not understand. Maurice ran toward him and threw himself in his arms, holding up his face for a kiss.

"If you like, Maurice, we will go out; no more work today. A little walk in the park will do us both good."

Out doors, the child felt the caress of the warm, spring air like a kiss upon his face. People were passing to and fro in the streets, running hither and thither to home or some amusement. Over all the sun rained down great golden rays that seemed to envelope everyone in happiness. The Seine gleamed under the light and the little ferry boats darted about as if very busy.

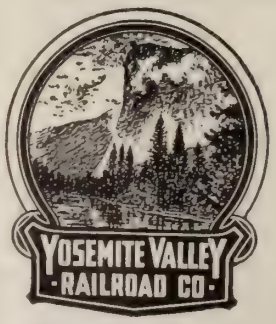
Then they came to the park, with its straight paths bordered by trees and flowers, and to the lake where children were sailing their boats, crying out when the breeze failed to bring the toy back to the point at which it was expected. There was an exchange of laughter, of glad cries. Mothers were seated upon the benches, watching the little ones tumble about; stout nurses, laughing and talking, were carrying babies in their arms.

Maurice had caught something of the joy that was all about him and forgot for the moment the thoughts which the expression upon the face of his father had aroused within him. He felt very happy, clinging to his father's hand, as they slowly wandered along the shaded path.

Suddenly, in a tone of surprise, that of a child who does not reflect, the boy pointed to a by-path and cried out:

"Why, there's mamma!"

"I do not see her," stammered M. Darcy.



But he had recognized her, as had his son. Well he knew that graceful form, walking slowly along, leaning upon the arm of an unrecognized man. Yes, they were walking slowly, these two, the woman bending over, pressing up to her companion as if unwilling to lose a word that he might be whispering to her, as if dreading the moment when she might have to leave him.

The couple walked on and turning into a by-path in the park were concealed from view by the trees.

M. Darcy did not say anything, but he shuddered from head to foot in his frightful agony, squeezing the hand of his son until he almost crushed the little fingers.

The child, astonished, looked up at him, and when he saw the pale face that seemed to have aged so suddenly, seamed by long lines of suffering, the eyes all blurred by tears, he spoke up in a voice in which there was a childish sob:

"Papa, I was mistaken. It wasn't mamma at all."

OPEN ALL YEAR
WINTER AND SUMMER

YOSEMITE VALLEY

NOW REACHED BY RAIL

Why not see Yosemite this Winter. It is a magnificent sight. First class hotel service at the Park Line and in the Valley. A delightful place to spend a few days or weeks. People returning pronounce it beyond description. For further particulars see agent of Southern Pacific or Santa Fe, or address O. W. LEHMER, Traffic Manager, Y. V. R. R., Merced, Cal.

Charity Rewarded

(From the French of Catulle Mendes, the poet, novelist and playwright, who was found dead last Monday in a railroad tunnel near Paris.)

A youthful mendicant in ragged clothes was appealing for alms on a Spanish highway along which tripped merry girls and dashing youths returning from a bull fight. The beggar vowed that no food had passed his lips for two whole days. From his half starved look and sunken cheeks it was apparent he was no impostor.

However, the poor boy attracted but little attention from the passing throng which was absorbed in its own gaiety. His voice was drowned by peals of laughter and by the plaudits won with Spanish love-songs.

Presently from out that throng stepped three young girls. They were sweet, innocent looking maidens. They bestowed on the boy looks of pity, and one of them, the eldest gave him a real.

"Thank you," he said, "God will reward you."

The next girl gave him a piecette, and he thanked her.

The third, the youngest, who was also the prettiest of the three, had neither real nor piecette. For a moment she stood undecided, then, standing on tiptoe she gave him a soft little kiss on his lips.

The poor, famished lad said nothing, but seeing a flower vendor near by, he gave to him all the money he had received for a bunch of tea-roses, and with tears in his eyes, silently handed them to the youngest girl.

The Spectator

Father Abraham

These days we be living mid the memories of greatness dead. Revolving this, among many things, I am minded that a country can have two fathers! By Father George, out of the Mercy of God, a land of the brave; of the same mother, by Father Abraham, a home of the free. Otherwise, the evolutions of countries and citizens are very much alike. At least, so it seems to me. On the subject of two fathers, Darwin is silent. I have gone down into the maelstrom of his Descent of Man, and live to tell the tale. Into the depths of another wise man have I dived, and come again to the surface of things, breathless, but within my grasp the pearl of the continuity of the germplasm of continents. Knowingly, I have been and done it, and am not yet gone. To be, to know, to do, and then go the way of all flesh! such is the fate of the triune man, the godlike amongst men. As a rule, the Englishman is ambitious of being somebody; the German, of knowing something; the American, of doing some thing, or—but that is a story for another day. Above all things, Darwin desired to add to knowledge, and lived not in vain. He gied us the gift of seeing ourselves as the gods see us, the man up a tree; thus freeing us from foolish notions not a few. Lincoln's was the threefold ambition, and so, ere he went, he came to be somebody, to know a thing or two, to do likewise. The fool that on this day of anti-slavery, February 12, 1909, saith in his heart that Father Abraham wasn't, didn't, let him be whatever is the American for anathema. What my muse has to say on the matter, I translate, not slavishly, but freely, as follows:

To Father Abraham

Master, of godlike virtues manifold,
Whose wreathed name Columbia's brow embraves!
There yet be black and white, and slaves and slaves;
Yet, public marts where men are bought and sold;
Yet, need of minds and martyrs, as of old!
While friends of Freedom slumber in their graves,
She's kissed and trafficked in by traitor knaves:
Bodies be bound of iron; hearts, of gold!

While one is bound, all draw enslaved breath:
Man disparate died centuries agone;
Now, Cain is Abel's keeper, him despite;
The "dawn of man" is more than dream of night;
The freedom that was Lincoln laughs at death,
The truth eternal that was Washington.

So say we both, prosaist and poet, and neither Lincoln nor Darwin turns in his grave to gainsay us.

Stanton's Dread Chimera

What is this dreadful State secret that Speaker Stanton is carrying around in the card-indexed confidential information files of his official inner consciousness? If Richard Hotaling were inclined to do irreverence to the Master in the manner of the soliloquizing crook-backed king of the same surname he might speak of the cryptic Stanton thus: "Now is the winter of our discontent made worse by this scared son of Los Angeles; for all the clouds that lowr'd upon our State are in the deep bosom of Stanton buried. Now are our brows bound with funereal wreaths; our noisy tongues tied up by Japan's threats; our false alarums changed to warlike greetings; our speeches to Roosevelt messages. Grim-visaged war hath shown his wrinkled front: And now, instead of cap'ring nimbly in the Assembly chamber to the pleasing squawk of a Caminetti lute, he now is mounting, night-hag like our backs, to fright the souls of fearful statesmen." But what is it that Speaker Stanton cannot reveal to his fellow citizens? Why does he refrain from telling us the very worst? A burden shared is a burden lightened. Why should Speaker Stanton bear all the burden? Why should his soul suffer all the harrowing consequences of a State secret whose lightest word would freeze our young bloods, make all our eyes pop from their sockets, and our knotted and combined locks to part, and each particular hair to stand on end, like quills upon the fretful porcupine?

Is the Lion Growling?

It may be that by the time these words reach the blazing eyes of my valorous countrymen, the Stanton, like the sea, will have given up his dead secret. I am almost convinced that he will be unable to pack that awful Thing around with him until this paper goes to press. I wish, therefore, that I could look down into the dark

REMOVAL NOTICE

OUR OFFICE after December 21, 1908, will be at 311 to 317 Crocker Building, corner of Post and Market streets.

OUR WAREHOUSE will remain at the Southwest corner of Eddy and Hyde Streets, until April 18, 1909, on that date we shall remove to our old location, 147-151 Minna Street and 144-148 Natoma Street.

GLADDING, McBEAN & CO.

BROKERS AND DEALERS
IN HIGH GRADE
INVESTMENT SECURITIES

SUTRO & COMPANY

412 MONTGOMERY ST., SAN FRANCISCO

Requests for Information Either by Personal Interview or Correspondence will be Gladly Received and Promptly Attended to.

unfathomable caves of the Stanton heart and see what is there lurking like a hideous minotaur eager to rush upon us with a roar to paralyze us with terror, beating time to the throbbing of his rage with hoofs that shake the earth from Sacramento to Folsom and back again, his devouring jaws white with the suds of his wrath, his blood-shot eyes aflame with the lust of his battle-craving soul. I wish I knew what Stanton knows so that I could warn the people in time—or convince them that Stanton is afraid of his own shadow which he has mistaken for the adumbration of the Great Stramash or the fearsome gargoyle of Tokio. Personally I do not think that Speaker Stanton is entirely competent to pass on the horrific character of the Thing that frightens him, the Thing that is pushing the soil from under him, the Thing that must compel us "for God's sake to be conservative and not attempt to force through anti-Japanese legislation at this time." In my opinion Speaker Stanton ought to let the rest of us pass on the fearsomeness of this awful spectre that haunts him, keeping him awake o' nights and casting a vast shadow over him by day. Perhaps it is not as bad as he pictures it. Perhaps it is not spelled with a capital "T." Perhaps it is only a scarecrow of the Stanton imagination. I know of nothing worse than a threat of war by Japan in this contingency; and as we are all agreed that Japan must fight Russia as well as America, I don't see how such a war would be so dreadful. With Russia hammering at the back door of Japan and America punching holes through the front windows, poor old Japan would be hard beset—unless, perchance, it has been intimated from the court of St. James that if we lay a hand on that gray-headed samurai the lion of St. George will be let loose upon us to harry us as of old when hired Hessians were targets for the muskets of Bunker Hill and Lexington, and "the whites of their eyes" were death marks for the rifles of New Orleans.

Perkins and Roosevelt

Of entrance to a quarrel no man is more wary than Senator George C. Perkins of California. He avoids disputes with discretion, but once in a scrap he follows the advice of Polonius. Senator Perkins's emotions are always well in hand, and with such a man it is always dangerous to pick a quarrel. When President Roosevelt grew querulous at Perkins's attitude on the Japanese question and took occasion to charge the senior Senator from California with having retarded the development of the navy it was probably because he was under the impression that the veteran statesman was too timid to resent the accusation. But he is now aware of the fact that the Senator is better than a raw hand at the reproof valiant, that he is skilled in the retort courteous and is not at all averse to the lie circumstantial. In assaulting Perkins the President committed one of his characteristic blunders. Instead of inflicting any injury on the Senator he made conspicuous that gentleman's loyalty to the interests of his State and his devotion to the interests of the navy. Mr. Roosevelt is credited with being the smartest politician in the country, but Senator Perkins was a successful politician before Teddy was dry behind the ears. He was Governor of this State when the Omniscient One was mewling and puking in his nurse's arms and though a candidate for many offices he has yet to suffer his first defeat.

Milo

Do you know what Quality means in a Turkish Cigarette? If not get a box of "MILO." Then, any other cigarette, and try same, side by side. You'll note the delicate, aromatic mildness of the "MILO." Mildness (yet with the richness in flavor) is what costs in Turkish Tobacco, and its just this that makes the Perfect Cigarette. You'll find it in No Other.

This perfection is obtained only by owning our own plantation in Turkey—the careful watchfulness from the seeding to the finished article.

Write to the Surbrug Company for samples and prices.

THE SURBRUG COMPANY, New York City

Bankers as Borrowers

Apparently my paragraph of two weeks ago in which I reported that Frank J. Sullivan had been ousted from the directory of the Mutual Savings Bank stimulated inquiry and occasioned revelations far from agreeable to the Hon. James D. Phelan and his associates. Mr. Sullivan has admitted that he was "fired" by his ungrateful brother-in-law, and he has gratuitously supplied the information that two of the directors of the Mutual Savings Bank, Mr. Phelan and Mr. Spreckels, are heavy borrowers from that Gibralter of finance, the Hibernia Bank. Now this is the kind of information that may be aptly described as letting the cat out of the bag. Fancy Mr. Phelan who conducts a savings bank and who is mortgaged up to the hilt to a New York insurance company, the same Mr. Phelan who seemed to be under obligations some time ago to one of the looters of the California Safe Deposit and Trust Company, being obliged to borrow from the Hibernia Bank, an institution which he has always regarded with envy! Perhaps the rapacity which Mr. Phelan has exhibited as a landlord since the earthquake is not without some tincture of justification.

How to Beat the Game

From the bavardes and chaperons of the daily press I learn that bridge is once more "in the ascendant"; that no afternoon reception or entertainment of the ultra or semi-ultra variety is complete without its "occasional stake"; and that "the popular game has come to stay." I hope that the "occasional stake" is a mistake. I hope that the bavardes and chaperons are faking. An "occasional stake" is a euphuism for gambling with money. I don't suppose our society women gamble at bridge or any other game. They can play bridge without staking the hard earned money of their husbands. Women don't need the excitement of a money stake to find intense interest in a game of bridge. Besides, how can women gossip and play for money at the same time? They would lose the run of the cards. And then there is the constant risk of resultant scandal. The stories that are invariably incited by gambling among women eventually find their way into the columns of the newspapers and create no end of trouble for the gamblers. I am sure that our society women who play bridge will not play for money, or if they do that they will not pay their losses. A women is always safe in refusing to pay her gambling debts. She can say that she didn't know they were playing for money. Her creditor will not dare to press her for the money because she will not wish to have it known that she is herself a gambler. The husbands of some women do not approve of gambling by their wives. And if the delinquent's "set" threatens to ostracise her if she does not pay her "debts of honor" she can retort with a threat to accuse them of "playing for high stakes." It is perfectly safe for any women in society to welch her bets at bridge.

Mrs. Dash—I don't understand, dear, why you can't get along with your husband! Perhaps you haven't been sufficiently—
Mrs. Rash—Yes, I have!

Seattle's Newest and Most Modern Hotel

"Twelve Stories of Solid Comfort"

Building, concrete, steel and marble.
Located, most fashionable shopping district.
210 rooms, 135 baths.
Library and bound magazines in reading rooms for guests.
Most refined hostelry in Seattle.
Absolutely fireproof.
English Grill.

Rates, $1.00 up

HOTEL SAVOY SEATTLE

More of Calhoun's Infamous Conduct

Some of the bondholders of the Stanislaus Power Company are reported to be very much displeased with the financial deal by which the United Railroads Company acquired an interest in that corporation. It is reported to be the intention of these disgruntled bondholders to make trouble for the financiers by whom this big deal was consummated. To render nugatory all that has been done they may apply to the courts. All of which has been veraciously set forth in that journalist puppet and mouthpiece of the illustrious Spreckels family, the parochial Call. And all of which fairly illustrates the disingenousness of a newspaper which never scruples at hoodwinking its readers. The deal made by the Stanislaus Power Company was very warmly approved by the principal bondholders and stockholders of that corporation. It is believed that if the deal had not been put through the corporation would have been thrown into bankruptcy. It is said that Patrick Calhoun saved the company from being wrecked, and that he did so not entirely from motives of self-interest, but, in a measure, out of solicitude for a great industrial California enterprise. According to a story in circulation in financial circles certain distinguished citizens of this city, conspicuous for their aggressive rectitude, were eager that the Stanislaus Power Company should be wrecked, believing as they did that it would fall into their hands. Patrick Calhoun preferred to avert what he conceived would be a calamity, as the effect would be another black eye for California. Incidentally, it is said, he saw an opportunity to thwart the conspirators who have been barking at his keels, and because he out manoeuvred them we have been entertained with portentous rumors of the deep designs of disgruntled bondholders, some of whom, I am told, as a mere record of coincidence, enjoy intimate relations with the First National Bank of which Mr. Rudolph Spreckels is president. Hence, perhaps, these horrendous howls.

What Wouldn't These Men Do

This little series of incidents supplies much food for reflection. Here is the self-righteous Call, so profoundly interested in the welfare of the city that it imprecates vociferously all opponents of the Hetch-Hetchy water project, while at the same time it is elated over opposition to a deal by which this city is to be supplied with adequate power. San Francisco is vastly more in need of power than of water. Our street railroad system has been in a crippled condition for want of power, and Patrick Calhoun has been censured for not improving the service, his critics knowing the while that it could not be improved without power. Finally he succeeded in perfecting arrangements by which sufficient power is to be acquired for his own purposes with a surplusage of 45,000 horsepower for general use, and immediately our civic patriots who are intent upon railroading him to the penitentiary, and who pretend to be free from sinister motives, applaud hostility to him, caring not what the effect may be upon the city so long as they may bring disaster to Patrick Calhoun. In this connection it may not be amiss to state merely out of a passion for recording coincidences that in the midst of Patrick Calhoun's struggle for electric power, Supervisor Dan Murphy, attorney for the Spreckels-Phelan Mutual Bank, introduced a resolution in the Board of Supervisors providing that the United Railroads Company shall be required to refund the fare to passengers whenever cars are stopped for more than five minutes. In all these circumstances who will say that the love of fair play and the square deal is waning in the glorious State of California?

"Oh, George, wouldn't it be lovely to make people think we are married already."

"All right, you carry the bag and umbrella."

History, in the Making

Some one has said that if history had been written on the principle of sticking to the truth it would be as dull as ditch water; that all history being built partly, and some of it altogether, upon ancedotage which is always fiction, must be a tissue of lies. By the same authority it is urged that historians should be viewed with admiration as patriotic citizens, willing to sacrifice their own character lest their countrymen should suffer from want of amusement. Accepting this view of the matter I hasten to acclaim one of the Globe's staff of entertaining writers a worthy disciple of Herodotus the Father of Liars. This patriotic citizen has contributed a very interesting chapter to the history of San Francisco, dealing with the "tragic romance of the City Hall statue." In this chapter we get a glimpse of history in the making; we see how anecdotage is transmuted for the instruction of posterity. According to the Globe's veracious historian, since the statute was mounted "everything connected with it has come to harm." We are told that the two most prominent figures in its career of blight are Marion Wells, the sculptor and Marian Nolan, the model, "both of whom went to unhonored graves"; also that Wells was a young artist "who lived a comparatively exemplary life prior to receiving the contract for the statue—his first important work"; that "years of persistent effort had brought him little reward and he was almost discouraged when he competed for the Goddess of Liberty and won the prize." The money that this work brought him, the vogue that was his as a result, the praise, etc., overbalanced a character never too robust. He struck the downward path and was arrested for burglary. The fate of Marian Nolan was similarly

J. M. Jacobi & Co.
S. W. Cor. Montgomery & Sutter Sts
Perfect Clothes for Men
Spring Opening, February 15th

California Limited
The only exclusively first-class train to the East via any line.
Dining-car service under Fred Harvey management—that's the best on earth.
On your way East you can stop and visit
YOSEMITE VALLEY
AND
GRAND CANYON
No other line puts you in reach of both of these places. Our folders tell.
F. W. Prince, C. T. A.
673 Market St.
Santa Fe

tragic. On the whole it was a very pretty story, deriving all its charm from a few unimportant inaccuracies. Without these inaccuracies the story wouldn't be worth while for historical purposes. If the author had stuck to the facts there would have been no material for a story. One of the facts is that Marian Nolan was not Marion Wells's model. Marian Nolan was the model of the California Venus which was exhibited at the Chicago World's Fair and which was not executed by Wells. She was chosen as the model in a contest conducted by the Examiner. The consequent notoriety turned her head and she ended her career in the tenderloin. Another of the facts with reference to the statue is that it was not Marion Wells's first achievement. And still another is that he was beyond the meridian of life when he captured the prize and for many years had lived the life of a reckless bohemian. Fully twenty years before capturing that prize Marion Wells was regarded as one of the great geniuses of the Bohemian Club. He had sculptured his way to local fame long before he captured the City Hall prize, and when that prize was awarded to him it only served to give him a brief new lease of life. Though pretty familiar with the career of Marion Wells down to the day of his death I never knew that he turned burglar until I was so informed by the Globe historian.

Dr. Rader's Aloofness

Dr. Rader, pastor of Calvary Presbyterian Church, says that the dispute between Dr. Hemphill, pastor emeritus and the trustees does not concern him. Apparently Dr. Rader desires to hold himself aloof from internal dissensions. He has no stomach for strife. He prefers to sit up aloft and serenely felicitate himself on having persudaded the trustees that as a preacher of the word of God and the sentiments of Spreckels he is worth more than $2,500 a year. Dr. Rader has no sentimental interest in this sordid church squabble. His interest is purely pecuniary. He takes no part in the dispute. He takes nothing but a large slice of Dr. Hemphill's salary. This he takes conscientiously for his service to God. He takes nothing for his service to Spreckels, for he is a disinterested civic patriot, and he has come to his reward without solicitation and solely as a result of the appreciation of those who admire his distinterestedness. Doubtless he is entitled to the money notwithstanding the fact that the congregation has not remained intact under his pious and inspiring ministration. Some of the old pew holders of the Calvary Presbyterian Church have withdrawn from the congregation since the drippings of the pulpit began to savor of the editorials in Dr. Rader's favorite journal, the one by which formerly he was employed and which still retains a hold on his disinterested affections. I am glad to see this noble civic patriot holding himself aloof from this quarrel. I am sure that he did not ask the trustees to reduce Dr. Hemphill's salary. Perhaps his powerful friends, the admirers of his all-round zeal exerted their influence in his behalf, but if they did so it was without his knowledge or consent. The aloofness of Dr. Rader is without a flaw.

The Coming of the Light

An Eastern journalist whose identity has not yet been revealed but with whom we are to be made acquainted later on has been watching the course of justice in Judge Lawlor's court and expressing in the Globe his amazement at the goings on in that unique tribunal. He finds it difficult to account for the principles upon which the jury in the Calhoun case is being impaneled. Apparently he can hardly realize that he is in an American court of justice. The bewilderment of this Eastern journalist is easy of explanation. He is a stranger in a strange corner of his country. He has not been in touch with

THE AMERICAN
GENTLEMAN'S WHISKEY

Is the title by which

HUNTER
BALTIMORE
RYE

IS MOST FAVORABLY KNOWN

HENRY CAMPE & CO., INC.,
Distributors for California and Nevada
San Francisco, Cal.

GIERSBERGER WINES
The wine of merit and quality all around the world. Compare it with the best wines and we are satisfied.
THEO. GIER WINE COMPANY
Phone Oakland 123 1225-1227 BROADWAY, OAKLAND

VALENTINES
Every kind at every price from a penny to several dollars .·. Comics till you'd die a-laughing .·. Love songs that make your heart ache .·. Novelties, old stand-bys, in fact, so many kinds that we can't even begin to describe them.
SMITH BROS. VALENTINE HEADQUARTERS OAKLAND
462-464 THIRTEENTH STREET, Between Broadway and Washington

the early stages of development and now that he is approaching the climax its full significance is beyond his comprehension. He is like a man who has wandered into a theatre in the midst of the third act just as the capital situation is unfolding. We have now reached a point where the conspirators are to achieve results. After a long series of stratagems to many of which they were impelled through the necessity of covering up their first iniquity they have now come to the crisis, and they are more desperate than ever. They are now in a mood to grasp at every expedient. Hence the fantastic character of the spectacle. I enjoy the amazement of the Eastern journalist who is evidently here for the purpose of exhibiting to the people of the East the other side of the shield. Heretofore they have been regaled with only one version of the story, with inspired narratives of the crimes committed by boodlers. Of the far more infamous crimes committed in the ostensible pursuit of boodlers they have not been informed. But they are hardly more ignorant of the things that have been done in San Francisco in this twentieth century than the people of San Francisco themselves. Doubtless the unweaving of the whole appalling story will take place in time. Indeed it cannot much longer be delayed. What a scattering of heroes there will be when the storm breaks!

A Rich Source of Supply

A gentleman by the name of Sewell was disqualified for jury service in Judge Lawlor's court the other day. He is the fourth distinguished representative of Rolla V. Watt's insurance office that has been summoned as a juror in the trolley cases. This is probably a matter of no significance and yet it is something of a coincidence that the net cast for these special venires should so often fall over the office of Rolla V. Watt, the distinguished patriot and leading member of the so-called League of Justice. Mr. Watt it should be stated incidentally is a disinterested patriot. He would be just as zealous even though he were not a director of Jimmy Phelan's bank, and even though he did not handle a great deal of Phelan's and Spreckels's insurance. But this is all disgression. What I wish to call attention to is that after Sewell had said he was a member of the League of Justice and believed Calhoun guilty Judge Lawlor took occasion to remark in what high esteem he held a man of Sewell's intelligence. I wish to call attention to this matter because not long ago I pointed out that there were many things which a judge might do to prejudice a jury against a defendant without committing reversible error. This I conceive to be an example of one of them. Why should Judge Lawlor take the pains to let the men in the box know what he thought of a member of the League of Justice? If we had a League of Upholders of the Constitution the object of which was to discourage an organization formed to intimidate juries, and one of that League appeared in Judge Lawlor's court would Judge Lawlor take occasion to laud his intelligence and character. I am not sure that he would not, but I am quite sure that as a judge sworn to uphold the Constitution, one that should have contempt for men engaged in invoking public clamor in courts of Justice, he might do so with much more credit to himself than he is deserving of for acclaiming the good Mr. Sewell.

Guns and Sons of Guns

A cursory survey of the line up of lawyers in the Calhoun case convinces me that Mr. Heney is going to have some verw hard sledding. It is all mettle for the defense and chiefly metal for the prosecution—most of it pot metal. Heney is the only real thing in the prosecution bunch. The others are the lighest of light weights—carronades and swivels of antique fashion fit only for close in-firing from a water-level gun deck; to oppose modern ordinance calibred in inches and breeched to carry the heaviest shot with a muzzle velocity of about a thousand feet a second. Heney will have to do all the fighting at tremendous odds unless he receives substantial support from Judge Lawlor.

Heney Against Heavy Odds

I watched Heney in his examination of talesmen the other day and I observed that he is more than a match for the untrained citizen in all the sophistries of a superficial logic. He had not the slightest difficulty in tangling the ordinary mentality by asking questions after the elementary Socratic method: "Do you know that the United Railroads was held up?" "How do you know that the Supervisors were granted immunity?" "Do you suppose the Supervisors would have confessed if they had not received the money?" "Where do you think Jim Gallagher got the money?" "Do you think Abe Ruef paid the money out of his own pocket?" "Why wouldn't you believe the Supervisors under oath?" "If you believe the Supervisors guilty why would you discredit them when they tell where they got the money?" These questions may serve to discomfit men whose habit it is to think straight and answer directly; but they are a kindergarten catechism for the man of experience with such burrowing barristers as Heney. I saw the veteran Moore smiling complacently as he listened to Heney in his effort to imply a depth of meaning that was in truth as shallow as a Potrero frog pond. Unless Heney im-

Largest Exclusive Office Furniture House on the Pacific Coast.

EVERY ARTICLE OF FURNITURE REQUIRED IN AN OFFICE

Exclusive representatives of the most important lines manufactured.

RUCKER-FULLER Desk Co.
737-741 MISSION ST.

TAFT & PENNOYER

Fresh Spring Stock Continues to Arrive, Making Each Department a Scene of Beauty and Activity

Spring Opening Fine Embroidered Robes

Only fine exclusive patterns. Hand loom embroidery, in blue, pink, Ecru and Copenhagen, on fine White Batiste. Prices from $21 to $42.

A Special in Spring Gloves

A new shipment of P. K. regular $1.25 Gloves. Special at $1.00.

One-clasp Mocha. Special at $1.00.

One-clasp Driving (Dent style), $1.00.

Oakland Agents for CENTEMERI GLOVES.

CLAY STREET, 14th to 15th
OAKLAND

proves his method when the trial is actually in progress I can see his finish. The men who are opposing him are neither afraid of his blustering manner nor abashed before his sardonic grin. I am particularly pleased with the way in which Earl Rogers handles this ogre of the bar, notwithstanding the somewhat theatrical mannerisms of the Los Angeles lawyer. He is cool, deliberate and incisive, and his rapier finds the vulnerable parts of Heney at every thrust. And smile for smile or sneer for sneer its a Democritus for a Heraclitus between Rogers and Heney. I'll pit the Rogers tongue against the Heney voice in any encounter. Then there is young Moore—a chip off the old block—if it is necessary to talk back to Heney in the language of Heney, young Moore will find the precise vernacular. As for the old chief himself—the claymore of them all—it's McGregor on his native heath. If there is anything that delights the soul of this warrior of a thousand heady fights, it is to go up embattled against a springald like Heney. It will be child's play for the elder Moore to sneer down the sneering Heney and to hew him down when the occasion demands. It is going to be a bonny fight; and my money is on the house of Calhoun.

Prospective Sword Play

I have said that Heney is the best that can be offered by the district attorney's office. This is true, for the district attorney, for some unaccountable reason has shifted his heaviest artillery into the Coffey case. Heney, therefore, is at great disadvantage in the combat. If he guards against the subtle thrust in tierce of Rogers he must expose himself to the ruder thrust of young Moore in quart; and if he parries these he is still at the mercy of the elder Moore's swinging broadsword stroke. Talk about Fitz James with his back to the wall and Roderick Dhu a foeman worthy of his steel! Well, it's a triple Roderick for Heney and no wall for the back of him.

One of the most satisfactory ways of spending a spare hour is in strolling about the downtown retail district and noting the number of buildings hastening to completion in order to house those merchants eager to establish themselves in permanent and convenient quarters. Already the first to make the movement are claiming the title of Pioneers, and amongst the earliest of these is the firm of J. M. Jacobi & Co. (Messrs. Henry M. Block and J. M. Jacobi), Tailors, Clothiers and Haberdashers, at the corner of Sutter and Montgomery streets. They wisely chose the center of the financial district where the most discerning buyers daily pass their doors, and already they have found it necessary to engage another store to enlarge their place. The unique architectural effects of the entrance of the premises is but earnest of the interior, where the same refined taste is displayed in the fixtures and color effects, while the devices by which their stock is protected from dust and handling, while insuring quick service, are a revelation. In the store, as well as the show windows, "shadow boxes" are arranged, a specialty originated by the firm, who are the only ones in the country to make use of it. By means of an ingenious scheme, a half-light is cast, and the effect is most striking and agreeable.

The latest development in the player line, and one which is of the highest interest, is the announcement from Sherman, Clay & Co. of the arrival of the first shipment of the Welte-Steinway-Mignon and the fact that they have taken the exclusive Coast agency for all Welte products in combination with the Steinway piano, comprising instruments both with and without the keyboard. They have also taken the agency for the Welte cabinet player. The Eilers Music Co. have had the Coast agency for the Welte-Mignon for about a year past, and will continue to handle that instrument in the future, Sherman, Clay & Co. getting only the Welte company's latest innovations. This new acquisition should place that house well in the lead in the player business of this territory, as they now control a number of fine and quite distinctive makes in this line, including the A. B. Chase Artistano, and the 88-note Angelus. The pre-eminence of the Steinway in this section, and the fact that it may be had in combination with such a magnificent player as the Welte, is expected to prove an irresistible attraction to buyers who can afford a player-piano of the highest class.

CENTRAL TRUST COMPANY
OF CALIFORNIA
Has removed to its new offices Corner Market, Sutter and Sansome Streets
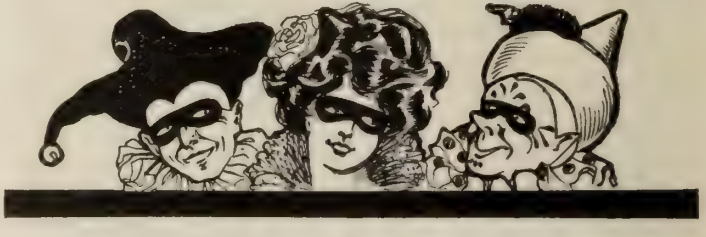
A General Banking Business Transacted
CHAS. F. LEEGE, President B. G. TOGNAZZI, Manager

The GOLD MEDAL for quality in the Franco-British Exhibition has been awarded to

To His Majesty the King
By royal appointment

WHITE HORSE WHISKY.

QUALITY THE SECRET OF SUCCESS



MACKIE & CO. DISTILLERS LTD.
LAGAVULIN DISTILLERY, ISLAY — Established 1742
MALT-MILL " "
CRAIGELLACHIE " GLENLIVET

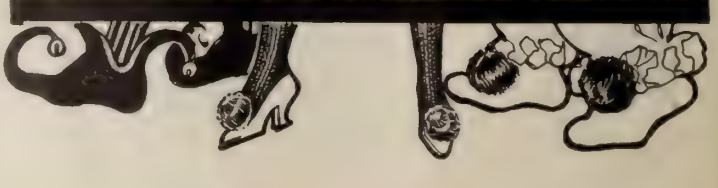
Note.—Any person proved guilty of re-filling our empty bottles with inferior whisky will be prosecuted.

You may be partial to some particular brand of wines or liquors. We carry in this department nearly every favorite kind of champagne, whiskey, cordial and liqueur. Quality is proved only by test, and we hope you will make it as critical as we do in our selections.

L. D. McLEAN CO.
IMPORTERS AND GROCERS
PHONE FRANKLIN 2810 1158-1168 Sutter St. San Francisco

MEET KING REX
and his throng of
MARDI GRAS
Merrymakers at New Orleans

Krewe of Nereus..Jan. 25	Knights of Momus Feb. 18
Falstaffians .....Feb. 5	Krewe of Proteus. Feb. 22
Elves of Oberon..Feb. 11	Rex' Arrival .....Feb. 23



Your Direct Way from San Francisco via Los Angeles and El Paso—along Pacific Shores—by the Old Missions—Southern California Orange Groves—The Salton Sea—Palisades of the Rio Grande—Rice and Cotton Fields of the South.

Drawing-room Sleepers; Berths; Sections; Drawing Rooms. Dining Service unequaled. Observation Car; Open-Air Rotunda; Ladies' Parlor; Gentlemen's Cafe; Library.

Personally Conducted Tourist Excursion Parties to Chicago, St. Louis, Cincinnati, New Orleans and Washington.

Write for "Wayside Notes Along the Sunset Route"—Tells in detail of the attractions of the Southern Route.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC
TICKET OFFICES
884 Market St. 14 Powell St. Market-St. Ferry Depot
Third and Townsend Sts. 13th and Franklin Sts., Oakland

The Financial Outlook

By R. E. Mulcahy

Transactions in Wall Street securities for the past seven days were of a very small volume especially in the hertofore leading issues such as the Harriman and Standard Oil list. The Hawley Group (Denver and Rio Grande, C. & O. and Iowa Central) were made very active, D. & R. G. leading. The advance in Denver started a smart inquiry for Western Pacific Common, which was quoted at 10 bid and 15 asked. The buying became so urgent and the supply of stock so limited the price was sent rapidly to 25. Before any stock could be found for sale quite a few transactions were made at 25. The supply, however, was not found equal to the demand, and another advance to $27 and $30 per share was seen. The advance in Western Pacific securities should not surprise those who have studied the conditions of this property. It is no wild venture to predict $50 for Western Pacific Common before the first through train passes over its road. It is not so long ago that Southern Pacific stock was kicked about at 35, and those who thought they knew said it wasn't worth waste paper. How different now! Within three years Western Pacific Common stock at the present price is purely an investment proposition. It is a purchase for a long pull and will pay a handsome profit to those who will buy it now and have the patience to wait for at least two years. The investment is small for the percentage of sure gain. The fact that Harriman is friendly to Western Pacific will in no wise injure the road's prospects, nor the country through which it passes. The great roar made recently on account of the advance in freight rates has died out somewhat, as has always been the case. It is a hard pill to swallow, but that rates had to be advanced or wages reduced was a foregone conclusion. In the long run all will be better off. The price of everything from a shoestring to the largest article manufactured has been advanced; it simply carries out general averages or readjustment of values. Wall Street was given a shock by our California legislators during the past week. The old saying, "Capital is timid," always holds good when a war cloud makes its appearance, as in the present case. The security market appears to be very sensitive just now watching the Japs on one side and Roosevelt on the other. Many are anxious for March 4th to arrive in order that they may see Roosevelt off on his hunting trip safely. The masters of finance do not appear to be much disturbed. Morgan is in Europe, Harriman is on his way to Mexico, Hawley is about to start for Florida, Frick and Schwab are in Europe. Several others of like importance are away from the firing line. To an outsider peace would seem to be at the wheel. Those best posted market-wise believe another bull wave will start shortly before Mr. Taft takes hold. Conditions are generally discounted, and a start on the up grade may be made around the middle of the present month. Stocks that will be given the best support will be the Harriman, Gould and Hill groups. They will prove the safest for the public to trade in. Equipment stocks will be put higher but fair profits should not be overlooked in this particular class of securities. The Metal stocks are in better demand notwithstanding copper metal has declined from 14½ to 13½. It is thought the decline will result in larger sales and shut out many small producers who cannot produce copper upon a 13½ per cent basis. The time is near at hand for copper consumption generally to increase. The present supply is rather above normal and will hold in check any material advance until this condition changes. The crop conditions throughout the Pacific Coast promise better than for many years past; almost every section has received bountiful rains, especially is this true of Southern California. Many Southern States are complaining of dry weather; the conditions in Texas in this respect are becoming quite acute. The preparing of the ground for cotton planting should be well under way ere this throughout the cotton States. The Middle West reports conditions about a general average. On the whole the outlook at this season of the year is if anything more favorable than usually. Money continues cheap in all financial centers for commercial purposes. The demands made by the Secretary of the Treasury upon Naitonal Banks had no appreciable effect. Business operations are showing an increasing tendency.

LIQUEUR

PÈRES CHARTREUX

GREEN AND YELLOW

GREEN AND YELLOW

The original and genuine Chartreuse has always been and still is made by the Carthusian Monks (Pères Chartreux), who, since their expulsion from France, have been located at Tarragona, Spain; and, although the old labels and insignia originated by the Monks have been adjudged by the Federal Courts of this country to be still the exclusive property of the Monks, their world-renowned product is nowadays known as "Liqueur Pères Chartreux."

At first-class Wine Merchants, Grocers, Hotels, Cafes,
Batjer & Co., 45 Broadway, New York, N. Y.,
Sole Agents for United States.

Telephone DOUGLAS 2487 R. E. MULCAHY, Manager

E. F. HUTTON & CO.

THE PIONEER HOUSE

BROKERS

Members
New York Stock Exchange
New York Cotton Exchange
New York Coffee Exchange
Chicago Board of Trade

490 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Branch, ST. FRANCIS HOTEL

Two Private Wires to Chicago and New York

Washington, D. C., 1301 F Street
Los Angeles, 112 W. Third Street
New York, 31-33-35 New Street

Social Prattle

By TANTALUS

To Africa or to Matrimony?

Young Templeton Crocker is about to start for the jungles of Africa on a tiger-killing expedition. Now the African jungles are scarcely to be considered as suitable for treacle moon purposes, and consequently the gossips have paused in their conjecturings with reference to the probabilities in the matter of young Crocker's sentimental affairs. To what extent sentiment has influenced the recent activities of this young millionaire nobody knows, but lack of knowledge is of no consequence among the gossips. They have sat up to take notice of the fact that he has been taking a great interest of late in Miss Virginia Joliffe, who is a frequent guest at "Uplands," a circumstance that may be accounted for on the score of the warm friendship existing between her and Miss Jennie Crocker. But the gossips prefer to account for Miss Joliffe's automobile and driving excursions with Mr. Crocker on some more agreeable hypothesis. The gossips are incorrigible. Not many months ago they were almost on the point of marrying Miss Joliffe and Mr. Thornwell Mullally. Later they were speculating on the likelihood of an engagement between Mr. Mullally and Miss Jennie Crocker, and now it is Mr. Crocker and Miss Joliffe who are stimulating their curiosity. Nevertheless Mr. Crocker has completed arrangements for his trip to Africa and he betrays no signs of being absorbed in the problem of the lady or the tiger.

Photo, Moore & Clark MRS. L. H. HAMMOND

One of the most active of the Kermess workers.

Ada Sullivan's Romance

The story cabled from Paris of a French Count's devotion to Miss Ada Sullivan, sister of Frank J. Sullivan, occasioned no surprise among her friends in this city, as they had long ago heard of the titled Frenchman's passion. Some years ago there were rumors of a strong sentimental attachment between Miss Sullivan, who was then a beautiful young girl, and Mr. James D. Phelan, the invulnerable bachelor. Those rumors persisted for quite awhile, but finally Miss Sullivan went abroad, and the charming young bachelor pursued the even tenor of his way, bestowing his attentions on worthy objects with never a sign of being in Cupid's thrall, but always appreciative of feminine charms. Match-making mammas have given Mr. Phelan up as hopeless, and even grass-widows, to whom he was once somewhat partial, have come to the conclusion that his attentions are merely complimentary.

Photo, Habernicht MISS HELEN WILSON

Whose engagement to Paymaster Geer has been announced. She is the daughter of the John Scott Wilsons. She is a beautiful blonde and a talented musician. Paymaster Geer is at present doing shore duty at Yerba Buena.

Cultured But—Oh My!

Society has been going culture-mad this winter, and all because of a new French Club conducted on an improved plan with guarantees of linguistic perfection at the end of a five weeks' course. Matrons, maids and

MISS ELSIE DE WOLFE
REPRESENTED BY
MRS. EDGAR DE WOLFE
INTERIOR DECORATION AND OBJECTS D' ART
TEMPORARY OFFICE, GRANADA HOTEL TELEPHONE FRANKLIN 422

MRS. OSCAR MANSFELDT
PIANIST
TELEPHONE WEST 314 1801 BUCHANAN STREET

debutantes have assiduously attended the classes, and apparently the only fire that burned was a fiery zeal for advancement in the Gallic tongue. On Saturday morning a new flame burst forth and for the time being threatened to consume the combatants and everything in their vicinity, for the grievance which was aired is one that had been long slumbering. That the parties to the dispute were entire strangers to each other apparently made not the remotest difference, and left-handed compliments in both French and English flew back and forth like bricks in a street melee. It seems that, notwithstanding the numerous placarded legends of "No reserved seats," there are two chairs in the very front row and next to the aisle which have been pre-empted in arbitrary style by two of the attendants. One of these dames makes it her business to arrive betimes every day and, taking possession of one of the seats, she mounts guard over the other until her friend appears to claim it, a neat little scheme by which these two distinguished members of society, acting in concert, have been able to hold the fort against all intruders. On the morning in question, just before the beginning of the lecture, another member of the class entered the hall, and, finding all the seats occupied except one in the front row, she was about to slip quietly into the place when the guardian interposed herself. "You cannot have that seat," she announced; "it is reserved for a friend." "But no reserved seats are permitted," responded the intruder, pointing to the announcement and endeavoring to pass. Then the one in possession rose in wrath and blocked the way, and the battle was on. The angry voices mounted loud and shrill and matters were rapidly approaching that climax when fists and finger nails might be resorted to and the fur literally fly, when the entrance of the professor gave them pause. The irate first-comer subsided with a very bad grace, while the intruder, as she sank exhausted into her hard-won place, turned to her opponent with the crushing comment uttered in a voice audible to the whole assemblage: "Madame, I do no know your name, but I know you are a club woman by your effrontery."

The Clan Cudahy

The Jack Casserlys's dance the other night, at their home in El Cerito was in honor of Mrs. Casserly's two older sisters and a younger brother, who are on a visit to her from Chicago. It was also something of a house warming, as it was the first entertainment of any kind given by the Casserlys since their purchase of the De Sabla house in San Mateo. The Cudahy family is well known here, as, before any of the girls were married, the family frequently came to the coast to pass a month or two at Del Monte. It was in Chicago, though, that Jack Casserly first met his wife, and there are those who say it was a church dignitary who made the match and arranged for the introduction of the young people, but, be that as it may, it has turned out to be a very happy marriage. Mrs. Casserly has a faculty of winning friends and she is one of the best liked matrons of San Mateo. She has evinced an enviable spirit of independence, which, doubtless, some of her neighbors will not be long in emulating. In her daily walks, which she takes rain or shine, she has defied wet and mud in this stormy winter by dressing in a suit of yellow oilskin such as sailors wear at sea, and her children are permitted to ride, walk and drive barefoot, and otherwise costumed in garments which permit the utmost freedom of movement and the full enjoyment of life outdoors. At the house-warming dance only the girls from San Mateo, with an equal number of young men and a few very intimate friends from town were invited, and the result was an enjoyable affair without the formality which it is impossible to avoid at a large function. Mr. Cudahy is a quiet young man who has proved quite an addition to the Burlingame set, where, in spite of club and sporting interests, bachelors are at a premium. A number of dinners have been planned for Mrs. Casserly's guests during the coming fortnight, and San Mateo seems likely to arouse itself from its lethargy at the fag end of the season.

Once the Pride of Blingum

The attitude of the average Englishman when his foot is on his native heath, in his manner toward his American cousin whose friendship and hospitality he has accepted when he has been on this side of the Atlantic in pursuit of pleasure or gain has been made the theme of a thousand paragraphs, and probably will continue to furnish food for comment as long as England is England. One of the latest experiences of this sort befell Robert Coleman, who, when he was in London, chanced to meet J. Talbot Clifton, once of San Francisco, where he tooled a coach from the Palace Hotel to Burlingame in all the splendor of regalia and pomp which the solemn function demands. But J. Talbot has come into a fortune since those days, and mayhap he thinks he can afford to forget. At all events, Mr. Coleman was glad to meet an old acquaintance, and grasping him cordially by both hands he exclaimed: "Delighted to see you. We're at the Cecil. Come and dine with us some night." "Oh—aw, sorry," drawled Clifton. "Got an engagement."

"Art and refinement are displayed by tasteful attire"

Vogel's

Makers of

LADIES' GOWNS and FANCY COSTUMES

Phone Franklin 2802 1321 SUTTER STREET, near Van Ness Ave.

Go to Whigham's when you want that baby's photograph taken

Permanent Location 739 MARKET ST., Opp. Grant Ave.

NORTH GERMAN LLOYD S. S. CO.

SHORT ROUTE TO EUROPE

From New York Every Tuesday by the Four Luxurious Flyers: "Kronprinzessin Cecile," "Kaiser Wilhelm II," "Kronprinz Wilhelm," "Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse."

From New York Every Thursday by the Twin-Screw Passenger Steamers: "George Washington" (new), Largest German Steamer, 722½ feet long—27,000 Tons Register, "Prinz Friedrich Wilhelm" (new).

To Mediterranean Ports, etc., etc., Every Saturday: S. S. "Berlin" (new), 19,200 Tons Register, Largest Passenger Steamer to the Mediterranean, "Prinzess Irene," "Koeniz Albert," etc.

TRAVELERS' CHECKS

ROBERT CAPELLE, General Pacific Coast Agent — 250 POWELL STREET, Near Geary St. and St. Francis Hotel

Luscious Old Red Wine

LA QUESTA

AGED IN THE WOOD AND MELLOWED IN THE BOTTLE

Pronounced by experts the best wine made in California

FOR SALE BY

L. D. McLEAN CO. McCAW BROS.

L. N. WALTER, Cor. Devisadero and California

JULIUS BERENDSEN, 762 Devisadero Street

Served at The St. Francis, The Fairmont, Hotel Rafael, Peninsula Hotel, Jules, Chantilly, Berges & Frank's Old Poodle Dog, Thompson's, New Frank's, Union League Club and Cosmos Club.

That Midnight Elopement

In spite of the fact that the traditional nine days have elapsed since the sensational midnight elopment of Edna Davis and Pierre Moore it continues to be the chief subject for discussion, even though runaway matches are almost the accepted order of the day. Not only was this marriage entered into hastily and on the spur of the moment, but the engagement itself was a hurry-up affair. The whole scheme, from inception to conclusion was compressed into the brief space of time between the hours of eight o'clock and one, a week ago Tuesday night. Edna had attended the Kirkpatrick card party in the afternoon, and with her sister, Sydney, after dinner, went to the Fairmont to take part in the rehearsal for the Indian dance in the coming Kermess. In the lobby of the hotel she met Pierre Moore, whom she had known for a year and a half in Santa Barbara, where his attentions had been more or less marked, though, according to her own statement, she had forbidden him to visit her since her return to San Francisco "because she was tired of having their names connected when there was absolutely nothing between them." They stopped to chat, and the casual tone of their conversation began to grow so earnest that some of the others, also waiting to be called to rehearsal, commented on it, one of them remarking that "It would be funny if they should end by marrying each other." In the practice of the dance the affair was forgotten and when later in the evening Edna complained to her sister of not feeling well, and expressed her intention of returning home in the auto, no one attached any significance to the move. She did return, and after a casual conversation with her mother, retired to her room, where she packed a few necessary belongings and hastily made her exit by the back door. Her efforts to induce two or three intimate friends to witness the marriage were fruitless. They objected to the lateness of the hour, and to the whole romantic project, from which they did their best to dissuade her without avail, so with the aid of a grocer's clerk, a chaffeur and a minister of the gospel aroused for the occasion, the knot was tied in the rain. There was no wedding ring until next day, for in the midst of the excitement the necessity for procuring one was forgotten. Next morning, bright and early, the bride and groom were down town, she to attend to some necessary shopping and he to purchase the wedding ring at Shreve's where he met Sydney Davis making arrangements for the announcement cards. Return we now to the Davis home. When Sydney came in from the rehearsal an hour later than her sister Edna, no comment was made, as the explanation of illness furnished by that young lady was all sufficient. With sisterly regard Sydney went to Edna's room to inquire after her welfare, and finding it unoccupied, she became alarmed and called her mother. Knowing that she had certainly returned and believing her to be ill, a distracted midnight search of the premises was instituted without result until a note left on the bureau in true romantic heroine style furnished the explanation. A little later a telegram confirmed the news. As there was absolutely no reason of any kind which stood in the way of the match the dramatic character of the affair makes it the topic of conversation. Pierre Moore was always a welcome guest at the Davis home and both mothers approved of the attachment from the first. No definite engagement or understanding had ever been entered into, however, and Edna's name has been coupled with that of more than one eligible since her return from Europe. It was only at the last Greenway that whispers of her engagement to the scion of a prominent Oakland family were passing around. Mrs. Moore is a radiant bride, however, even though sans trousseau, grand wedding and honeymoon trip. Their home in Belvedere is the gift of the groom's mother, and the first present received by the young couple is said to be a beautiful and cozy nest.

Madam Olga, the Paris Milliner, is now in New York selecting a stock of Eastern and European novelties in millinery to be displayed upon her early return at her new location, 237 Post Street.

THE POTTER

SANTA BARBARA

AMERICAN PLAN

Rooms Single	Has	Rates Double
$4.00	Its Own	$7.00
$5.00	Squab Ranch	$9.00
$6.00	Live Stock Farm	$11.00
$7.00	Poultry Ranches	$12.00
$8.00	Vegetable Gardens	$13.00

Private Country Club
Race Track and Polo Grounds
Private Livery Wireless Telegraph
Art Gallery and Picturesque Golf Links
Good Table Good Living Cheerful Service
Rates Graduated to All Reasonable Requirements
Accommodations for One Thousand Guests
Artesian Well and Refrigerating Plant
Conservatories and Green Houses
A Whole Mile of Geraniums

We	Open all the Year Round	No
Produce	30,000 Fine Rose Bushes	Better
All of Our	Children's Grove	Table on
Own Staple	Zoo 60,000	the Whole
Delicacies	Pigeons	Pacific Slope

and
Would Be Pleased to Send You Booklet

MILO M. POTTER, Manager

HOTEL DEL CORONADO

CORONADO, CAL.

Coronado is essentially an Hotel of quiet elegance. It has the most equable climate of which any knowledge exists. Hotel Del Coronado has unique facilities for out-of-door recreation. Polo, golf, tennis, boating, fishing and motoring on good roads. Rates $4 per day upward. For special information apply to MORGAN ROSS, Manager, Coronado, or H. F. NORCROSS, representative, 334 S. Spring St., Los Angeles.

HOTEL ARGONAUT

Society of California Pioneers Building

FOURTH STREET NEAR MARKET — San Francisco — CENTRE OF THE CITY

Catering to Family and Commercial Trade
400 Rooms $1.00 per day and up Dining room seats 500 guests
Special 50c Luncheon from 11:30 to 2 p. m.
Weekly and monthly rates on application. Free bus meets all trains and steamers.
Telephone Douglas 3393 EDWARD ROLKIN, Manager

Their Honeymoon

Vicomte and Vicomtesse de Dampierre enjoyed a somewhat belated honeymoon after all. After a few days passed quietly at the big Parrott ranch at St. Helena the bride and groom, en route for Southern California, slipped off the train at San Mateo to be the guests of Mrs. Abby M. Parrott at luncheon. The scheduled plan was that they would take up their interrupted journey on the same evening, but the unexpected storm set in and they were marooned for several days, with only the contents of one dress suit case between them, for their baggage had gone on ahead. They are now at Pasadena, but the interference of the Storm King has forced them to modify their plans, and instead of returning to San Mateo for the promised week, they will proceed at once to France. The friends of Marie Christine caught little more than a flying glimpse of her in her brief stay, for she devoted all her time to her grandmother, but M. de Dampierre has made many warm friends on the coast, and a warm welcome awaits them on their return in November.

Black Sheep Grayson

John Temple Grayson, cousin of Sir Frederick Temple, the Archbishop of Canterbury, and grandson of Francis Scott Key, author of the "Star Spangled Banner," who last week was ejected from two hotels, is another specimen of the genus black sheep. He is a nephew of the late Daniel Turner, so long connected with Wells Fargo & Co.'s Express, his mother having been Mr. Turner's sister, who after her divorce resumed her maiden name. The Turner family is closely connected with naval circles. Lieutenant Surgeon General Braun and the late Dr. Messersmith both married sisters of Daniel Turner. Mrs. Richard Cutts of Mare Island and Mrs. Janet Baldwin are also sisters, and Major John Meyers, U. S. N., married Miss Alice Cutts, a cousin of John Temple Grayson, who has been in and out of hot water continually, and caused the family no end of humilating annoyances. Mrs. Turner, his mother, is now a resident of Washington.

Significance of Strokes

A young girl who was manifesting great interest in Charles Rollo Peters's work, asked that artist if there was not meaning in every stroke done by a real artist.

"Indeed, yes," replied Peters, "they usually mean that the bill collector is knocking at the door."

The Foster-Van Bergen Dance

One of the most truly enjoyable dances of the season was the one given by Mrs. Charles Foster and Mrs. Edward Van Bergen at the California Club rooms on Saturday evening last. Miss Foster and Miss Van Bergen made charming hostesses and set an example which might be followed with profit by many of the older girls, who are often too intent on their own pleasure to give proper heed to that of their guests. These two maidens never danced until they had first assured themselves that every guest who wished was supplied with a partner, an exhibition of good taste and gentle breeding which it is rare to find in these days. The floral offerings presented to Miss Foster and Miss Van Bergen were numerous and beautiful. The Rye waltz and the barn dance were special features of the evening, and there were many beautiful and elaborate gowns displayed, that of Miss Edith Von Schroeder being noticeably exquisite.

The Essence of Legitimate Maternity

There is a sweet and attractive little matron of Oakland who was recently made the guest of honor at a tea in her home city. Judging her by appearances no one would credit her with a day over eighteen, and it

Dr. B. F. Stoll, Dentist, has moved his office to the Hastings Building, corner Post and Grant Avenue, opposite Shreve's. Rooms 309-310. Phone Douglas 4194.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT
HEAR OUR ARTISTS AND ORCHESTRA DURING DINNER AND AFTER THEATRE
MISS ANITA GILL, Mezzo Soprano
MISS NADYNE PARKER, Lyric Soprano
THOMPSON'S ANNEX
O'Farrell near Fillmore

THE COSMOS 658 Market Street Opposite Palace Hotel
Table d' Hote Lunch, 50c.
Salad
Shrimps String Beans Sliced Tomato
Soup
Cream of Onions Consomme
Entrees
Pompano Meuniere Tenderloin of Sole, Tartar Sauce
Pot Roast, German Style
Lamb Epigramme Jardiniere Brains, Brown Butter
Tagliarini and Cheese Boiled Beef and Cabbage Club Sausage and Rissoto Roast Beef Roast Lamb
An Extra Entree, 15 cents
Dessert
Apple Ice Cream Watermelon Pistache Cake
Strawberry and Cream Nutmeg Melon
Swiss Cheese Roquefort Cheese Brie Cheese
An Extra Dessert, 10 cents

JULES' RESTAURANT 328 BUSH STREET
Below Kearny
Phone Kearny 1812
MUSIC SUNDAYS
OPEN EVENINGS, INCLUDING SUNDAY
DINNER With Wine, 75c.
DINNER, SUNDAYS AND HOLIDAYS With Wine, $1.00.

You will find SWAIN'S
Bakery and Restaurant on the line at
1241 VAN NESS AVENUE, Near Sutter Street
AFTERNOON TEA for Shoppers with Music from 3 to 5 o'clock

HOTEL VON DORN
242 TURK STREET
New steel frame Class A Building. Furnishes all the accommodations of the most expensive hotels at half the cost. Rates, $1.00 per day and up.

LEVY'S CAFE
Third and Main Streets, Los Angeles, Cal.
Much the Best Place to Get Fine Things to Eat and Listen to Choice Music at Popular Prices.

Hotel Westminster
Los Angeles, Cal.
Fourth and Main Sts.
American Plan, Reopened
Rates per Day $2.50 Rooms without Bath
Rooms with Bath $3.00, $3.50 and $4.00
European Plan
$1.00 per day and up, with bath $1.50 and up
F. O. JOHNSON - - Proprietor

frequently happens that she finds herself taken under the wing of some elderly woman who is attracted by her manners and looks. On this occasion she found herself the especial protege of one of the other guests, a lady of years. At the close of the afternoon, when taking leave of her hostess, this elderly matron, standing near, overheard the youthful looking guest invite the hostess to "come soon and see my little boy." "You a mother?" exclaimed she. "This child a mother?" "This child! this child!" was the amused rejoinder of the supposed debutante. "Yes, and perfectly proper, too—I've been married two years."

Consigned to Guam

If you had a passion for the social whirl how would you like to be marooned on Guam for an indefinite period? Guam, you know, is one of our Colonial possessions, a fly-speck island in the midest of the ocean, garnished with a coral reef, and some degrees removed from the latitudes of steamer traffic. An ideal spot, this, for the rest cure, but it is not for that purpose that Lieutenant Freer and Mrs. Freer are to visit the island. Mrs. Freer was charming Engracia Cricher, who yielded to the blandishments of Cupid in her first season out. Lieutenant Freer has been ordered to Guam and Mrs. Freer's friends are wondering whether she will organize a cotillon club on the island.

In the Social Spotlight

Mr. and Mrs. Osgood Putnam were at Del Monte the latter part of the week.

The Misses Virginia and Frances Newhall entertained a jolly dinner party recently, preliminary to their attendance, with their guests, at the Preston hop.

The following San Franciscans were registered at Del Monte during the week: Mr. C. E. Spauldin, Mr. and Mrs. I. E. Felix, Mr. M. E. Pinckard, Mr. D. Boon, Jr., Miss M. S. Johnson, and Mrs. A. J. A. Rey.

J. T. Trowbridge, the veteran author, one of the last of the old time set, sailed for Southern Italy last December, and some solicitude was felt for his safety in the great disaster, but recent letters announce his safety. Mr. Trowbridge, who is now eighty-one years old, will publish a new book in April of this year.

A progressive bridge party at the Hotel Carlton last Saturday evening was enjoyed by the guests. The tables were arranged in the billiard room, and about thirty players took part in the game.

Mrs. Charles McIntosh Keeney and her popular debutante daughter, Miss Innes Keeney, spent Friday night at the Hotel Carlton, Miss Keeney having crossed the bay to attend the Sophomore hop.

Miss Anita Maillard was the hostess at an elaborate dinner given at her home on Gough street Monday evening last. As Miss Maillard will leave on Sunday next, with her aunt and uncle, Mr. and Mrs. Horace G. Hellmann, for a visit to Chili, where she will remain for several months, the dinner was in the nature of a farewell. She will be greatly missed during her absence, for she is a charming and attractive girl, the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Maillard. She is connected on her mother's side with the Pages, Arthur and George Page being her uncles, and all prominent in social circles.

Mrs. Lester Herrick was the hostess at a large bridge party at her home on Clay street February 10th. Handsome prizes and dainty refreshments brought an enjoyable close to a pleasant afternoon.

Mrs. Dulce Bolado Ashe, accompanied by Miss Cherry Bender, will soon leave for Honolulu on a visit.

Miss Marjorie Brown gave a delightful teat at her home on Green street on February 12th, the guest of honor being Miss Frances Martin, who has lately returned from an eastern trip.

Mrs. Norwood, accompanied by her niece, Miss Jeanette Hooper, is spending a few weeks at the Hotel Potter, in Santa Barbara.

Mrs. Joseph Manuel Masten gave her third card party of the series on February 11th at her home on Washington street. It was, as usual, an elaborate and artistic occasion.

Registered at the Hotel del Coronado for the week ending February 7th, from San Francisco and vicinity were Mr. Marion D. Cohn, Mr. George H. Crawford, Mr. Sydney L. Plant, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Derham, Miss Derham, Mr. W. B. Jameson, Mr. W. H. Darling, Mr. and Mrs. Mark L. McDonald of Santa Rosa, and Mr. and Mrs. Mollor and family of Oakland.

Mrs. Eleanor Martin entertained a company of friends at the St. Francis last week prior to the interpretative study of "Pelleas and Melisande" given by Miss Margaret Kemble in the Colonial ball room.

Dr. Matilda A. Feeley, removed to 1700 Sutter Street. Diseases of women and children.

A HEALTHY INCREASE IN WEIGHT

Follows the use of

BORDEN'S

EAGLE

BRAND

CONDENSED

MILK

as a

Food for Infants

BORDEN'S CONDENSED MILK CO.

"Leaders of Quality"

Established 1857 NEW YORK

You may have beautiful hair now, but we want to help you to retain it even through old age.

We should like to have every reader of this paper try

ED. PINAUD'S

(Eau de Quinine)

HAIR TONIC

for one month—we KNOW the results would warrant its constant use.

Nothing has ever been known to equal the wonderful efficiency of this delightful preparation. It preserves the youthful beauty of the hair, prevents dandruff and keeps the scalp hygienically clean.

Let us send you a sample bottle, or better still, buy this famous French hair tonic from your dealer to-day and test it for yourself.

Your name and address (with 10 cents for postage and packing) will bring a liberal sample by return mail.

WRITE TO-DAY.

PARFUMERIE ED. PINAUD

ED. PINAUD BUILDING, DEPT. S. F.

FIFTH AVENUE - - NEW YORK

UNION LUMBER COMPANY

Redwood and Pine Lumber

Railroad Ties, Telegraph Poles, Shingles, Split Shakes, Etc.

CROCKER BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Mr. and Msr. S. Dolliver, accompanied by their daughter, Miss Kathleen Booth, will leave on February 26th for Yokohama to be gone several months. The trip is for the benefit of Mrs. Dolliver's health.

Miss Avis Sherwood will soon leave for the East where she will meet her mother, who has been visiting abroad. They will return to California at once.

Mr. and Mrs. William Breeze were the hosts at an enjoyable dinner recently at their home on Green street.

Mrs. Oscar Mansfeldt has not gone to Europe as some of her friends have come to believe as a result of the confounding of names. Mrs. Mansfeldt has been asked by the St. Francis Musical Society to repeat the Sinding Quintette.

Miss Innes Keeney will be the hostess of a dinner party on Friday evening in her apartments at the Hillcrest, after which the guests will attend the Assembly. Amongst those who will enjoy the hospitality are Miss Claire Nichols, Miss Ethel McAllister, Miss Margaret Calhoun, Messrs. Irving Broughton, Paul Foster, Harold Bingham and Omal Veney. Owing to the Keeney family having been in mourning, Miss Inness has done very little entertaining.

Miss Lillie Little, who is soon to be heard in concert, comes of a musical ancestry. Her mother, who was Miss Sallie Watkins, was well known in early days in both social and musical circles, and her father, William Little, is a half-brother of Mrs. Pelham Ames, so Miss Little is cousin to both Worthy Ames and Miss Bessie Ames, the talented musician who is now studying abroad. The Little family have resided in Oakland for years, and are prominent on that side of the bay.

the prominent belles and beaux of the younger set will be in-

Mrs. Whitelaw Reid and Mr. D. O. Mills were among a number of guests who came up for the Scott dinner last week and remained at the St. Francis for a brief visit.

Society maids and matrons are keen in the pursuit of things intellectual if one may judge by the popularity of Miss Minnie Cooper's talks on "Russian Literature and History" that are given Wednesday mornings at the St. Francis, or if the attendance at Miss Margaret Kemble's interpretative study of "Pelleas and Melissande" correctly expresses the temperature of the intellectual thermometer. At the latter affair all the exclusive set were there in their handsomest gowns, and seemed to take the greatest pleasure in Miss Kemble's psychological analysis. The rendering of the theme of Acts 4 and 5 by the gifted 'cellist, Arthur Weiss, was most enjoyed by the audience.

The second of the artistic "Subscription Dances" given at the St. Francis last Saturday night was a worthy successor to the brilliant affair which ushered in this series of enjoyable functions. A number of unique effects were introduced, amongst them being a fancy minuet danced by sixteen young couples, while opalescent lights were played over the Colonial ball room.

The following San Franciscans are registered at the Hotel Green, Pasadena: Mrs. Philip C. Meeyr, Mr. Philip C. Meyer, Jr. and nurse, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Lapp, Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Brown, Mr. Earl J. Henderson, Charles F. Scott.

Arrivals from San Francisco at the Hotel del Coronado for the week ending February 1st are Mr. W. B. Jameson, Mr. J. L. Eastland, Mr. J. Goldberg, Mr. V. C. Goldberg, Miss Rena Goldberg, Mr. W. W. O'Connor, Mr. F. E. Upham, Mr. and Mrs. LeRoy Hough, Mr. J. S. French, Mr. and Mrs. L. L. Torrey, Mrs. C. H. Lindley, Mr. G. S. Barton, Mr. C. J. Wetmore, and also Mr. Arthur Inkersley, Oakland.

Mrs. Orrin Wolfe was the hostess at a luncheon, followed by a bridge party recently at her home in Sausalito. The guest of honor was Mrs. Howard Avery, formerly Miss Carrie Coit, who is here on a visit to her father-in-law, Mr. Francis Avery, and her sister-in-law, Mrs. H. C. Campbell of Sausalito.

Signor de Grassi and his bride, Winifred June Morgan, will shortly be the guests of Mrs. M. A. Huntington in this city.

Mrs. Clarence Carrigan, formerly Anna Sperry, has been visiting Captain and Mrs. Fenner, U. S. A., at Fort Baker during the absence of Mr. Carrigan in the East.

A. Dalton Harrison will soon be the host at an elaborate party given in honor of the Edgar Painter children. It will take place at the Claremont Club house in Oakland, and all vited. It has been the pleasant custom of Mr. Harrison to give the children of Mrs. Edgar Painter a party every year since they were little tots, but he realizes now that they are quite grown up, hence this elaborate dance in their honor at the club house. Mr. Harrison is a wealthy bachelor, the well known insurance man of this city.

Mrs. Alonzo A. Watkins has issued cards for a tea at her home in Sausalito on February 16th, in honor of her daughter, Mrs. Orrin Wolfe, who leaves soon for Fort Sherman, Alaska, where Captain Wolfe is now stationed.

A few of the recent arrivals at the Tavern of Tamalpais from San Francisco are Mrs. J. E. Brown, C. K. Bonestell, Mr. and Mrs. George E. Gallagher, Mrs. R. Heinam, Jr., Alexander R. Baum, Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. F. K. Pearson.

A NEAR APPROACH TO PARADISE

This is the season when the very thought of Southern California suggests days of sunshine and warmth, and those who can afford the luxury plan to spend the cold months at such a delightful place as Santa Barbara. Once there it is the Potter which, as a well managed hotel, offers all sorts of attractions. The hotel is kept on the American plan, and it is said that there is no better table on the whole Pacific Coast. All the poultry, including squabs, comes from its own stock farm, and there are ample facilities for all kinds of sports, including polo, golf and racing. Greenhouses are attached to the estate, and it is of interest to the lovers of nature to learn that there is a whole mile of geraniums and 30,000 fine rose bushes. In fact, the hotel property and its envrionment comes closely to being absolutely ideal. The manager is Milo M. Potter, who will be pleased to furnish all information upon application.

HOTEL TOURAINE

Delaware Avenue at Chippewa Street

BUFFALO, N. Y.

ABSOLUTELY FIRE-PROOF

250 Rooms with Bath and Long Distance Telephone

Excellent Music and Grill Room

European Plan, $1.50 per day up

With Bath Connection

Send for Booklet C. N. OWEN, Proprietor

ROBERTSON'S

A BOOK STORE

1539 VAN NESS AVENUE

CARD PLATES .·. MONOGRAMS

WEDDING INVITATIONS

A. M. ROBERTSON

RACING

NEW CALIFORNIA JOCKEY CLUB

OAKLAND RACE TRACK

Six races each week day, rain or shine. First Race at 1:40 p. m.

For special trains stopping at the track, take Southern Pacific Ferry, foot of Market street; leave at 12 M.; thereafter every twenty minutes until 1:40 P. M.

No smoking in the last two cars, which are reserved for ladies and their escorts.

PERCY W. TREAT, Sec'y. THOS. H. WILLIAMS, Pres.

ASK FOR

BLACK AND WHITE

SCOTCH WHISKEY

IT IS THE BEST

NONE BOTTLED IN AMERICA

Stage

Barrie, Pinero and Shaw

A writer, "in London Truth," reviewing the British drama of 1908, says: "The year 1908 has been in many ways a singularly interesting one, because without an exception all our foremost dramatists have come forth with new plays. With the doubtful exception of Mr. Barrie, though, I do not think one has added to his reputation. Some have merely marked time. Others have shown a distinctly retrogade tendency. No serious critic thinks that Mr. Pinero's 'Thunderbolt" is as good work as 'His House in Order' or 'Iris,' or that the 'Dolly Reforming Herself' of Mr. Jones reaches the level of 'The Liars.' As for Mr. Shaw's 'Getting Married,' it was more an impertinence than a play. Therefore 1909 opens with the drama in an interesting state. A host of dramatic societies are trying to bring forth new talent. There is no longer the old difficulty in the way of new writers getting productions of a sort, and the theatre-going public is ever on the increase. There is, accordingly, great opportunity for new blood, and I anticipate the new year with keen curiosity to see what it will bring forth. Of one thing I am sure, though, and that is that the public is getting a little weary of the anaemic school of Mr. Shaw and his imitators, who would eliminate passion altogether, and would like to see more in the way of full-blooded plays, while the recent change in the policy of music halls has opened a new and most important field to the talents of those who can write strong one-act plays."

An American Mrs. Warren

The most impressive work of any native dramatist this season is "The Easiest Way," which was produced in New York last week at the Stuyvesant Theatre which is said to be the nearest present approach to Daly's of fifteen or twenty years ago. Mr. Walter is the playwright who first attracted attention through his "Paid in Full." His new play deals with the fast life of the metropolis, his heroine being one of the gay women who toil not neither do they spin, but who live in luxury for a brief period and then disappear. One critic writes of her as follows: "Without clothing her in the mawkish sentimentality of a Camille or offering for her the insincere excuses of a Mrs. Warren, Mr. Walter in his play shows the conditions that breed and the fate that confronts one of the luxurious examples of New York restaurant life. Laura Murdock is a despicable, pitifully weak and constitutionally mendacious woman who drifts to perdition along the path of least resistance. She is not immoral; rather is she hopelessly unmoral. She is fibreless, a prey to the impulse of the moment and irresponsible to the uttermost degree. False to herself, to the conscienceless 'bounder' for whose favors she has paid the price of decency, and also faithless to the youth who trusts and is anxious to rescue her—and in the end too weak to live and too craven to die—she drifts to the perdition that is waiting for her kind. She is a slice cut with cruel precision from the gay life of Broadway, an object lesson of the dangerous extravagances and shallow pleasures that occupy a conspicuous and obnoxious place in the every day affairs of New York."

Musical Comedy at the Van Ness

"A Stubborn Cinderella" fresh from its New York and Chicago successes is enjoying a two-weeks' run at the Van Ness. It is a musical comedy with the usual attenuated plot, but with much more than the usual swing vigor and ginger. It has several capable principals and a chorus that for pulchritude, limberness and voice is far ahead of anything else of its kind. Homer B. Mason who takes the principal male part has more than his fair share of advantages. He is young, active, good looking, wears his clothes well, sings and looks his part. Jack Raffael, well remembered by old time frequenters of the Tivoli, has a good opportunity in Colonel Hunt. His voice is still with him,—in fact he is the best, musically speaking, of the men in the cast. Grace Edmond as Lady Leslie is a graceful young woman with a voice fully equal to the demands of her part, and a method better than that of the average musical comedy star. Her vocal quality is fresh and pleasing and she sings with ease. Ethel Dovey runs her a close second. She is petite and dainty and makes a charming Lois. The stage pictures throughout are beautiful and arranged with a good eye to color. It would be impossible to particularize where all is so good, but the pink arrangement in the first act and the orange ballet in the last must be mentioned. The tall graceful girls in their pink directoire costumes made the stage look like a peach orchard in blossom, and the orange ballet was both in general effect and in detail one of the most attractive I have ever seen. The music has a good swing, and the last waltz song, "When You First Kiss the Last Girl You Love" is particularly good of its kind. The voice of Miss Edmond was heard at its best in this number. As I have before remarked, the chorus is composed of good voices, a fact which is very evident in the ensemble numbers. The piece deserves to have a successful run.

The Gordon Concert

A full house and an enthusiastic audience greeted Mackenzie Gordon at Christian Science Hall last Tuesday evening. A varied program ranging from grand opera to ballad and folk-song was offered. Mr. Gordon is strongest on the interpretive side, and it is the feeling in his songs, particularly in ballad, which reaches the sensibilities of his hearers. From an artistic point of view, however, Mr. Gordon carries his efforts in this direction to excess, but he compensates for this by his spirited performances. Mr. Gordon's long program was added to by several encores, and every number received a warm reception. Mr. Frederick Maurer accompanied ably as usual. Mr. Eugene Blanchard, a young pianist, was a notable feature of the program. He plays in masterly style, with clean and brilliant execution, and is far ahead of the solo pianists usually brought out by visiting vocalists. He played a Chopin Nocturne and the Scherzo in B flat minor, and in response to an encore gave the Butterfly Etude. In the second part of the program a concert paraphrase of Tschaikowsky's "Eugen-Onegin" was greeted by an ovation. Mr. Gordon's next concert takes place on Sunday afternoon, when a most attractive program is offered.

HARRY BERESFORD
"The Odd Comedian," who will present "Who's Your Friend?" at the American Theatre.

New Musical Comedy Company

The Princess Theatre New Musical Comedy Company will make its first appearance Monday evening, March 1st, in Harry B. Smith and Ludwig B. Englander's celebrated musical comedy, "The Rounders," which ran for an entire year at the Casino Theatre, New York. The personnel of the new company is as follows: May Boley, principal comedienne; Frank Moulan, principal comedian; Helen Darling, prima donna; Ethel Du Fre, contralto; Zoe Barnett, soubrette; Fred Mason and Bud Ross, comedians; James Stevens, baritone; Oscar Walsh, tenor; Bert Phoenix, basso. The stage director will be the famous Edward B. Temple, who produced nearly all the most successful musicau plays of the Savage company.

The Constabulary Band

Owing to the delay in the arrival of the transport Buford, which is bringing the famous Philippine Constabulary Band, the series of concerts to be held in Dreamland Rink cannot begin until Monday night, the 15th. Much enthusiasm has been aroused over the coming of this famous organization and plans have been perfected for its reception. The California Promotion Club will meet the band at the dock, escorting it about the city in automobiles. The advance sales of seats have been heavy, the hundreds of San Francisco people who have heard the band in the Orient being anxious to repeat the pleasure.

"The County Chairman"

"The Prince Chap," Edward Peple's beautiful play, with Mace Greenleaf in the title role, little Bebe Daniels as the younger Claudia, Miss Blanche Stoddard as the artist's ward grown up and the other members of the Valencia Theatre company in congenial roles, will be played for the last times this Sunday afternoon and evening and on Monday night "The County Chairman," George Ade's highly amusing and at the same time grippingly interesting comedy-drama, will be produced for the first time in San Francisco by a stock company. The success of "The College Widow," by the same author which enjoyed such a prosperous run during the holidays, is still fresh in the minds of the playgoing public. The story of "The County Chairman" centres around Jim Hackler, a political power in an Indiana community, and through whose influence Tillford Wheeler, his junior partner, is nominated for the office of State Attorney against Judge Rigby. Years before Hackler was in love with the girl who eventually became Mrs. Rigby, whose hand was won by the successful suitor through intercepting letters between them. Young Wheeler is in love with Lucy Rigby, but when he is nominated to run against her father, that individual becomes infuriated and forbids his daughter speaking to him. Hackler, who for years has been waiting to revenge himself for the loss of his sweetheart of early days, discovers that Rigby has defrauded "Chick" Elgey, an orphan, out of $30,000. This fact, if published, would mean the political ruin of Rigby, but Wheeler is not willing to use the story against the father of the girl he loves. In a tremendous climax to the third act Hackler is persuaded not to use the evidence by Mrs. Rigby, and in the last act the young man, notwithstanding his opponent's strength, is elected and all ends happily. "The County Chairman" is full of those quaint character studies which George Ade draws so forcibly, and the members of the Valencia Stock Company will all have congenial roles.

"Who's Your Friend?"

The last performances of the beautiful love romance of early Rome, "The Light Eternal," will take place at the American Theatre this Saturday afternoon and evening, and at the Sunday matinee "that old comedian," Harry Beresford, whose past performances in "The Wrong Mr. Wright" and "The Woman Hater" have stamped him as a laugh-provoker of the highest order, will present for the first time in this city "Who's Your Friend?" with the same cast and the same elaborate production which was seen during the long New York run. The comedy is from the pens of Harry and Edward Paulton, the authors of Erminie, Niobe and other successes. The scene of the comedy is located in New England, where Daniel Hake had invented a peculiar dye that is much sought after by woolen manufacturers. Many strange schemes are resorted to to obtain the secret, but all are thwarted by the inborn shrewdness of the Yankee inventor. Fanatically absorbed in a number of experiments he becomes entangled in a multitude of business troubles, and is on the verge of having his home sold over his head by a loan shark buying up his notes in order to force an interest in the old man's inventions. The old inventor is saved in an unexpected manner from the intriguers through one of the spies falling in love with his daughter and all ends happily and hilariously.

MME. FRIEDA LANGENDORFF

Who will appear at Christian Science Hall next Thursday evening and Sunday afternoon.

Gordon's Next Concert

The second and last of the Mackenzie Gordon Concerts will be given at Christian Science Hall on Sunday afternoon, when one of the most interesting and attractive programs ever offered to a San Francisco audience will be rendered. The ballads and vocal selections from the French, English, German, Scotch and Irish cover a wide field, and as there are no less than fifteen separate selections there should be something to please every variation of taste.

Princess Theatre

The revival of "Lonesome Town" by Kolb and Dill at the Princess Theatre has resulted in even a greater triumph than it achieved on its original presentation. This witty and popular play of Judson C. Brusie's has been greatly improved in many respects which accounts for its run of more than a hundred consecutive nights in New York. The production is certainly most elaborate. It is the same that held New York theatregoers. The costumes are costly, beautiful and modish. Kolb and Dill, as Chico Charley and Bakersfield Bill cover themselves with glory. They are admirably supported by Adele Rafter as Mrs. A. Marvelous Wonder, a San Francisco widow and by the full strength of the Princess Theatre Company. Several catchy musical numbers, including The Yankee Soldier Boys and Big Chief Smoke have been written by J. A. Raynes, the musical director and are encored to a perfectly unreasonable extent. In consequence of the near approach of the close of Kolb and Dill's engagement, "Lonesome Town" will conclude its run with next week and for the last week of their season they will present "Playing the Ponies" by special request.

"The Red Mill" Coming

The final performance of "A Stubborn Cinderella" will be given Sunday night, February 21st. Charles Dillingham's elaborate production of "The Red Mill" will be the next production at the Van Ness Theatre. This is the Henry Blossom-Victor Herbert musical comedy which ran for over a year at the Knickerbocker Theatre, New York. A company of over three score appear in the piece.

A Singer From Beyreuth

Next Thursday night, February 18th, at Christian Science Hall, Manager Will Greenbaum will introduce to music lovers Mme. Frieda Langendorff, a favorite singer in Beyreuth, Prague and Breslau. This artist is said to possess a voice of such remarkable range that she can sing a contralto role like Ortrud in Lohengrin and a dramatic soprano in one such as Elizabeth in Tannhauser with equal ease. Although almost unknown in this country the artist has achieved remarkable success wherever she has appeared, and at the recent Mendelssohn Celebration Concert by the Volpe Symphony Or-

MACKENZIE GORDON

Assisted by EUGENE BLANCHARD, Pianist, and FRED. MAURER, Accompanist.

LAST CONCERT—THIS SUNDAY AFTERNOON at 2:30

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE HALL

Seats: $1.50, $1.00, 75c at Hall Sunday after 10 a. m.

EXTRA—MME. FRIEDA

LANGENDORFF

A Great Mezzo Soprano from Europe's Leading Opera Houses, Assisted by Mme. Flora Karp Heilbron—Piano Soloist.

Seats: $2.00, $1.50, $1.00 at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s Monday.

Concerts next Thursday Evening and Sunday Afternoon.

Oakland Concert next Friday Afternoon, February 15th at Ye Liberty.

Baldwin Piano Used.

THE BIGGEST BAND EVER HERE

THE PHILIPPINES

CONSTABULARY BAND

85 Splendid Musicians en route to Taft's Inaugural at Washington.

TWO CONCERTS AT DREAMLAND RINK

Monday and Tuesday Evenings, February 15th and 16th.

Seats $1.00, 75c, 50c, on sale at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s.

Tuesday Afternoon at 3:15 Concert in Oakland at Ye Liberty; Wednesday Night at 8:15 Clunie Theatre, Sacramento.

VAN NESS THEATRE

Cor. Van Ness and Grove
Gottlob, Marx & Co., Mgrs.
Phone Market 500

Second and Last Week Begins Monday February 15th,
Every Night, including Sunday Matinee Saturday.
Personal Direction of Mort L. Singer
The Quality Musical Play

A STUBBORN CINDERELLA

With HOMER B. MASON and a Splendid Company.

Prices: $1.50, $1.00, 75c, 50c.

February 22: "The Red Mill."

NEW ALCAZAR THEATRE

Cor. Sutter and Steiner
Class "A" Building
Phone West 6036

BELASCO & MAYER, Owners and Managers.

Monday Night, February 15th, and All Week,
Revival of the Great Alcazar Success,

THE ROSE OF THE RANCHO

By David Belasco and Richard Walton Tully.

Prices: Evenings, 25c to $1.00. Matinees, Saturday and Sunday, 25c to 50c.

PRINCESS THEATRE

PHONE WEST 663

S. LOVERICH, MANAGER

Ellis Street, near Fillmore
Absolutely Class "A" Building
Matinee, Saturday and Sunday

This nad Next Week Only

KOLB & DILL

In Judson C. Brusie's Merry Musical Farce

LONESOME TOWN

March 1st: Princess New Musical Comedy Co., including May Boley, Frank Monlan, Helen Darling, Fred Mace, Zoe Barnett and Ethel Du Fre.

Prices—Evenings 25c, 50c, 75c, $1.00. Matinees (Except Sundays and Holidays, 25c, 50c, 75c

ORPHEUM

Ellis Street, near Fillmore
Absolutely Class "A" Bldg
Phone West 6000

Week Beginning this Sunday Afternoon. Matinee Every Day.

ARTISTIC VAUDEVILLE.

"AT THE SOUND OF THE GONG," a Dramatic Episode of the Prize Ring with Tom (Soldier) Wilson and a cast of 25, introducing a realistic boxing exhibition; IMRO FOX; TONY WILSON and MLLE. HELOISE; AMOROS SISTERS; THE ASTAIRES; FARRELL-TAYLOR CO., LEON T. ROGEE; NEW ORPHEUM MOTION PICTURES. Last week HELEN GRANTLEY & CO., in ISRAEL ZANGWILL'S Thrilling Episode, "THE NEVER NEVER LAND."

Evening Prices: 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c. Box Seats, $1.00. Matinee Prices (Except Sundays and Holidays): 10c, 25c, 50c.

VALENCIA THEATRE

Valencia Street, between
Thirteenth and Fourteenth
Phone Market 17

The Only Steam Heated Theatre in the City.

Sunday Afternoon and Evening—Last Times of "The Prince Chap."

Commencing Monday Evening, February 15th,
For One Week Only—George Ade's Great Comedy-Drama,

THE COUNTY CHAIRMAN

Cast to the Full Strength of the Valencia Stock Company. 75 People on the Stage.

Regular Matinees, Wednesday and Sunday, Prices 25c to 50c.
Evenings, 25c to 75c. Box Seats, $1.00.

Monday Matinee, February 22—"Secret Service."

AMERICAN THEATRE

Market St., nr. Seventh
Phone Market 381

Saturday Afternoon and Evening—Last Times of "The Light Eternal."

Commencing Sunday Matinee, February 14th,
"That Odd Comedian" MR. HARRY BERESFORD
In the New York, Chicago and London Comedy Success,

WHO'S YOUR FRIEND

The Laughing Success of Two Continents.

Prices, Evenings, 25c, 50c, 75c and $1.00. No Higher. Matinees, 25c, 50c, 75c.

Next—"Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch."

YE LIBERTY PLAYHOUSE

Oakland, Cal.
Direction
H. W. Bishop

Commencing Monday Night and all next week, Matinees Saturday and Sunday

RICHARD M. HOTALING

And Bishop's Players in

THE FIRST VIOLIN

Mr. Hotaling in the title role

Prices, Evenings, 25c, 50c, 75c. Matinees, Saturday and Sunday, 25c and 50c.

chestra in New York she scored a genuine triumph. Both Mme. Gadski and Mr. La Forge assured Mr. Greenbaum that he had made no mistake in securing Mme. Langendorff. It is predicted that after her first appearance the name of Langendorff will be enrolled on the list of San Francisco's favorites. The assisting piano soloist will be Mme. Flora Karp Heilbron of Vienna, who is visiting relatives here, and Mr. Fred Maurer, the well known accompanist. The programe is a most interesting one, including the aria "Give Alms" from Meyerbeer's "Le Prophete," an aria from Rossi's opera, "Mitrane," "Thy Beaming Eye," MacDowell; "The Cry of Rachael," Turner Salter; and other selections from Wolf, Eckert, Tosti, Saint-Saens, Rubinstein, Beethoven and Hildach. Mme. Heilbron's piano numbers have been chosen from Schubert and Chopin for this occasion. An equally fine program has been made up for the Sunday matinee, which will include some of the Tschaikowsky operatic selections entirely new to local audiences. On Friday afternoon the first program will be repeated at Ye Liberty Playhouse, Oakland. The box office will be open at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s on Monday morning.

At the Orpheum

The program for the week beginning this Sunday matinee at the Orpheum will have for its chief attraction a dramatic episode of the prize ring, entitled "At the Sound of the Gong," which calls for a cast of twenty-five people and introduces a realistic boxing exhibition. The opening scene discloses the interior of Walter Jameson's training quarters and subsequently by means of a transparency the square ring is shown with a boxing bout in full action. The character of Jameson, Alias Terry McNutt, is played by Tom (Soldier) Wilson, who formerly acted as Bob Fitzsimmons's sparring partner. The other leading roles are interpreted by Ellsa Berrold, Arthur Sullivan and Bill Russell. Imro Fox, a celebrated European conjurer and a brilliant and witty entertainer will introduce a marvelous illusion called "The Box of Cagliostro" and numerous feats of legerdemain. Tony Wilson and Mlle. Heloise, gymnasts, will entertain on the horizontal bars. Mlle. Heloise will demonstrate her versatility by some clever dancing and comedy work. The beautiful Amoros Sisters, who were the idols of the Parisian Music Halls, will be seen for the first time in this city. Their accomplishments are many. They are singers, dancers, comedians, acrobats and trapeze performers. Frank and Adele Astaire, two very clever juvenile singers and dancers are also among the new comers. Next week will be the last of the Farrell-Taylor Company and Leon T. Rogee, the human orchestra. It will also finish the engagement of that talented young actress, Helen Grantley, and her very capable company who have scored a great artistic triumph in Israel Zangwill's thrilling episode, "The Never Never Land." A new series of Orpheum Motion Pictures will terminate the performance.

The "Rose" at the Alcazar

"The Rose of the Rancho," the Alcazar's great success of last season when it ran for three weeks will be the offering this week at the Sutter street playhouse, and the advance demand for seats promises another period of gratifying business. There will be no change of importance in the thirty-three speaking parts, and but few in the large crowd of supernumeraries. Bessie Barriscale will again play Juanita, Bertram Lytell will be the government agent, Will R. Walling the land-grabber, Howard Hickman the Spanish dandy, Burt Wesner the padre, Ernest Glendinning the officer of the militia, Herbert Farjeon the muleteer, Louise Brownell the coquettish senorita who captures the fleeting fancy of the military lotherio, Adle Belgarde the haughty Spanish mother, Annie Lockhardt the gentle grandmother, John B. Maher the old servant, Walter Belasco the vaquero, and Christie MasLean the duenna. The story is a drama of early

(Continued on Page 31.)

SCENE FROM GEORGE ADE'S, "THE COUNTY CHAIRMAN"

Which will be produced for the first time in stock in this city at the Valencia Theatre next week.

The Well-Dressed Man

What to Wear, When and Where

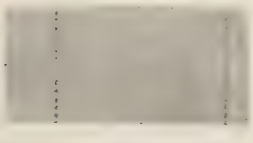
Written exclusively for Town Talk by J. M. JACOBI

For the benefit of those men who have neither the time nor inclination to study the art of Dressing correctly, we will publish a series of weekly Fashion Chats.

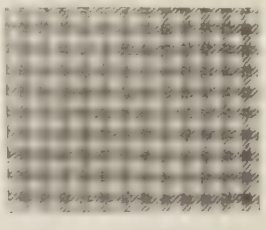
We will also start a query column, in which the reader may ask questions pertaining to dress. Such questions will be answered in the following issue.

ADVANCE STYLES

Early Spring Fashions 1909



Never before has Dame Fashion exerted herself so much and acquitted herself so creditably as this season. She has cast aside gloomy and tiresome shades and patterns, and in their place created new ones rich and harmonious, and it affords one pleasure to look over these new designs and fabrics, and the man who is looking for something new will be able to find it this season. For this reason men will be encouraged to increase their wardrobes from one or two, to several suits.



New Fabrics

Predominating the entire range of suitings for the coming Spring and Summer, will be found the iridescent green. This shade is really not a green, but a greenish tint glimmering through a blue brown, purple and various other shades and giving a beautiful phosphorescent effect.

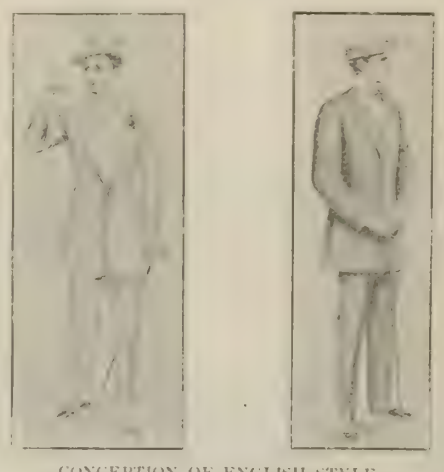
Grey, oxford blues and olives are coming back again in full force and bring with them a new brother shade called "Taupe" a combination of grey and brown, and an oxford purple, called "Catawba"—this last shade is not in the least loud, but on the contrary very attractive. Brown this coming season is not very fashionable nor is a decided green.

In regard to designs, the stripe also popular for several seasons, and the white stripes are still in vogue. One should not select a pattern with too decided a stripe; on the contrary no matter what the color may be, the perfectly plain design with no pattern at all or a small check or invisible plaid is preferable to decided stripes. Of course a neat stripe effect will always be right, for the figure of some men necessitates a stripe, but the stripes will be fainter and less conspicuous than last season. Small checks of black and white will play a part this season, and so will plain goods in different tones of grey and neat kindred colorings.

Advance Styles

The first and most important suit is the Sack or Lounge Suit, and as there is nothing more descriptive than an illustration, I shall give below a copy from a leading English Fashion Journal, as well as from a leading American Journal, and the reader can see for himself the vast difference between the English and the American cut of clothes. The selection from the English journal represents a conservative model and an extreme model. One can also readily see the different conception of style between this country and across the water, and this should be an argument against an American having clothes made abroad.

Then there is the two or three Button Double Breasted Sack, a garment which always looks well on a tall, slim man. Either two or three buttons are correct also; for the lighter shades a two button coat is preferred. Not less important is the Colonial Frock or English Walking suit, which our readers will find described in a previous issue of this paper. As stated before this suit promises to be popular this coming season particularly among professional men.



There is but little if any change in Dress or Dinner clothes. Trousers this season to be easy over hip and thigh, to fall fairly straight down with about 19½ knee and 16 bottom for average. Waistcoats to have either four or five buttons, and to be cut to show above lapel of coat or lower. The bottom to be slightly dipped and points cutaway.

The most popular overcoat for Spring is about 42 inches long made of Scotch tweed and full box.

There are a class of fashionable tailors who carry only English and Scotch woolens (we say English-Scotch for England yet has the precedent over any other country in the manufacture of woolens) and it is to this class of tailors it is safest to go as their prices and work are generally the most uniform and reliable, and their standard the highest. The most important factor in the production of custom clothes is that they should be cut by competent designers and their instructions in turn properly carried out by skilled journey-men tailors, who are necessarily high price operators, when it will therefore be found poor economy to go to any other than the best tailor for one's clothes and more pleasure and satisfaction will be derived, and more wear can be obtained by purchasing a year's outfit of two suits for $110 than to resort to cheaper establishments, which means cheaper materials, cheaper trimmings and cheaper workmanship for, perhaps, three suits for $105. The saving is only apparent and not real. In the language of the classics:

CONCEPTION OF AMERICAN STYLE.

CONCEPTION OF ENGLISH STYLE.

"To be well dressed will ofttimes supersede the rest."

HE WAS PATIENT

Bishop Ellison Capers, in an address at Columbus, S. C., praised the virtue of patience.

"We may have industry," he said, "sobriety, ambition—all the virtues that make for success; and yet without patience we will accomplish nothing.

"A young man was overheard on a street corner the other night reproaching a young girl. That young man was patient. He had so highly developed this excellent quality that I shall not be surprised some day to see him a millionaire, a college president, or even a bishop.

"The young man said, as the young girl drew near him, on the corner:

"'What a time you have kept me waiting.'

"The girl tossed her head.

"'It is only 7 o'clock,' she said, 'and I didn't promise to be here till a quarter of.'

"The young man smiled a calm and patient smile.

"'Ah, yes,' he said, 'but you have mistaken the day. I have been waiting for you since last evening.'"

Announcement

The Spring and Summer of 1909

The Return of General Prosperity

Makes it timely to announce the arrival of our importations of "Woolens" from the finest looms in the world, such as "Gagniers," "Coopers," "Lorna Doones," "McGregors," and the famous Saville-Cloth for Dress Clothes. The great and novel variety of fabrics for this season makes our collection unsurpassed.

Our organization and facilities enable us to cater to the wants of the elegant and refined dresser and produce garments for men on artistic and serviceable lines at moderate prices.

Suits to order for $50.00 and upwards.

Tailors J. M. JACOBI & CO. Haberdasher

45-47-49-51 MONTGOMERY STREET, CORNER SUTTER
LICK BUILDING

Our novelties in foreign shirtings ready

Japan's "Unmorality"

(Continued from Page 8.)

previously been "married." He found the musme biting the yen he had poured into the sleeve of her kimono, to be sure that they were all genuine!

Three times a year the courtesans of the yoshiwaras parade the streets of Kioto and the broad thoroughfares of the "Nightless City" of Tokio. The first of these "unmoral" spectacles is in the spring to celebrate the coming of the cherry-blossoms; in summer the women exhibit themselves in honor of the blooming of the purple iris; and again in autumn when the chrysanthemum is in its glory, they appear clad in their "yujo" silks and brocades aflame with scarlet and gold, wearing their "obis" tied in front, their coiffures a marvel of architectural grotesquerie, their faces white with powder, their eyelashes black, their lips vermilion and their toe-nails pink.

These exhibitions are witnessed by thousands of the "unmoral" citizens of the cities in which they are presented—open-mouthed with delight at the magnificence of the highly edifying spectacle. Ask your "schoolboy" servant about the yoshiwara of Japan and its peculiar customs—he will tell you all about it and never bat an eye. He sees nothing immoral in the Japanese method of promoting and encouraging the social evil; he regards it from his western point of view as only "unmoral" and greatly superior to the western method of repression and suppression. And after he has given you a minute description of the yoshiwara from personal observation and experience he will go to his class in the public school to learn his English at the same source from which little white girls are learning to read in their second readers. Of course there can be no harm from this contiguity, for, as I have repeatedly told you, the Japanese are not an immoral people—they are merely "unmoral"; they have never known the morals of the western world.

Yet, as we are informed by that eminent moralist and moralizer, Theodore Roosevelt, unless we receive these "unmoral" persons into our most intimate civic relationship, there is going to be trouble. We have no right under the treaty to keep these people out of our country on any pretext whatever. Well, since it has been so ordained by this high and mighty authority, let us submit. Let us not only submit, but let us also invite. Let us encourage this "unmoral" immigration to the utmost and when we have as many as we can accommodate in California let us send the surplus to the Eastern States. What we need in this country is a strong infusion of "unmoral" blood and I know of no more "unmoral" expedient for this transfusion than the one I have suggested. Anyway, according to the dark hints of Governor Gillett and Speaker Stanton we must accept the unmorality of the situation whether we want it or not; therefore let us accept it with such grace as we may. Perhaps it is better to obey the edict of the Mikado through the ukase of our own Mikado than to risk a general cutting of our throats by the Mikado's invincible army of veteran soldiers.

Auto Notes

One of the most strenuous automobile trips ever made in the history of Nevada was completed a few days ago by E. J. Williams of Lovelock, Nev., who traveled for five days over the Black Rock desert, two days of which the autoist and his machine, a Studebaker "forty," were exposed to a continual downpour. The driver was compelled to pick his way slowly as his journey took him over the roughest country in the sagebrush State, the greater portion of the trip being made over lands where no wagon had ever preceded him and the balance of the roads being in what he describes as a terrible state. According to Williams, a distance of forty miles was covered without once being out of the low gear. No trouble of any kind, he said, was experienced with his machine, the only incident which marred the run was finding his supply of gasoline entirely exhausted when within three miles of Winnemucca, but taking into consideration the fact that ranch houses are from 50 to 100 miles apart in the desert, Williams says it was only natural. Williams is the owner of nine automobiles and says that machines that are good in Nevada have qualified for services in any part of the world.

Of all the improvements claimed for the 1909 automobiles none are so pronounced or meet with more general favor by the motoring public than the long wheel base and the close coupled body, allowing the body to hang between the axles. At the recent New York show practically all of the high priced American cars followed that design, which has been acknowledged by the foreign makers for the past two seasons, as the pre-eminent quality for riding and appearance. This style of body while being prevalent in France for the past year, has only been taken up extensively this season by the representative American makers. The general appearance of the experts seems to be that the wheel base should run from 110 inches up, according to the number of cylinders, none of the representative makes being of less than this wheelbase. Besides the uniformity in the question of body design, the most radical change and improvement of the new cars, especially of the medium priced machines, is the casting of the cylinders en bloc, this design being on the same lines as the foreign makes. One of the very few high grade American cars to include both of these improvements is the Chalmers-Detroit. This car which is practically the only medium priced car on the market to include the latest foreign style and workmanship, attracted a great deal of attention in the Madison Square Garden, the general impression being that it was a foreign car. The fact that the Chalmers-Detroit in body and motor design is probably two years in advance of the other medium priced cars is the result of the extensive study and efforts of H. E. Coffin, chief engineer of the Chalmers-Detroit factor, who spends several months every year studying the latest designs of European cars.

During the last week carload shipments of the '09 Buick "White Streaks" have been received and unloaded by the Santa Rosa Garage of Santa Rosa, Waterman Bros. Co. of Fresno, Ed. R. Braley of Pasadena, and F. B. Naylor of San Diego. The demand for the Buick is very great throughout the State, and the Howard Automobile Company think they are extremely fortunate at present to get so many cars out, as up to the last three weeks their great trouble has been to get enough cars to satisfy the demands.

"More persons will buy automobiles in Northern California this year than the average dealer anticipates," said Peter Healey, the Studebaker agent at Eureka, Cal., who arrived here lately after a strenuous trip through mud and rain in his Studebaker "forty." "Of late the inquiries for machines have been increasing almost daily and I attribute it to the splendid showing that has been made by the automobile in that portion of the State during the past year. We have some very rough roads in Humbolt and the success in negotiating these with machines is beginning to bear fruit."

Early Tuesday evening a Packard "Thirty" car, which left Detroit Saturday, arrived in New York with S. D. Waldon, General Manager of the Packard Motor Car Co., at the wheel. The car was driven down through Ohio to Pittsburg, and thence to Philadelpia over the Allegheny Mountain route, which has been the scene of so many summer record-breaking trips by Mr. Waldon. All Glidden tourists know that the road over the Alleghenies is a particularly hard one during the warm months, and this rapid time made over it yesterday and today by Mr. Waldon is a remarkable performance for this time of year and on snow-covered roads. Winter testing forms a large and important part of the experimental work of the Packard Motor Car Co. The several experimental cars manufactured each season—a year or more in advance of the regular product—are driven many thousands of miles in hard overland trips by the executives of the company as well as by Chief Engineer Huff and others.

R. F. Prosser of the Pioneer Automobile Company was participant lately in both an unfortunate and a fortunate demonstration. Prosser who has recently joined the forces of the Thomas and Oldsmobile men in this city, took H. R. Schander for a demonstration in an Oldsmobile runabout. After a short tour of the city Prosser and his customer found themselves at the top of a steep hill near Buena Vista Height. After a stop of several minutes to view the city, Prosser started to crank the car and in stooping down his foot slipped and he fell against the corner of the radiator, suffering a bad cut on the forehead. After a slight treatment at the emergency hospital at the hands of Dr. Pinkham, Prosser took his customer to his office. Prosser reported that he was not sure whether the customer placed his order through sympathy or because he liked the car.

Mr. W. E. Porter, a prominent fruit grower of Visalia, purchased from the Howard Auto. Co. one of the new 40 horsepower Buick touring cars. Mr. Porter came to San Francisco to buy an automobile and after spending three days investigating the different machines decided on the Buick. He will receive his car next week.

It is now an established fact that for perfection of design appropriate to the load and conditions of employment, for excellence of material and sound, accurate workmanship, American-built automobiles cannot be beaten anywhere in the world. For efficiency and aggressiveness, American mechanics are the best. American machine-tools, it is generally acknowledged, lead the world. One of the French pioneer automobile makers said some years ago that if it had not been for the fact that American houses were in a position to supply certain types of lathes, drilling-machines, milling-machines, gear-cutting appliances, and other intricate pieces of mechanism, when the automobile movement began to expand, a popular vehicle could never have been considered by the makers, and all class of automobiles would necessarily have remained at extravagant prices. This condition of European automobile makers turning to America for modern appliances and new, ingenious machines, which make possible producing higher grade automobiles at less cost, remains today. The modern automobile represents one of the highest achievements of mechanical engineering. Nothing, except possibly electrical machinery, has contributed so much to the development and refinement of machine tools, new, quick, and accurate manufacturing methods, and of materials possessing enormous strength and properties undreamed of heretofore. Each and every part has been the constant subject of long and accurate tests and study, to bring about simplicity, strength, and lightness through proper distribution of material according to mechanical laws. This refinement is always going on, and no detail, however trifling, is overlooked in this steady march toward perfection.

TRY MURINE EYE REMEDY
For Red, Weak, Weary, Watery Eyes.
Murine Doesn't Smart—It Soothes Eye Pain.
Try Murine For Your Eyes.

The magnificent reliability and remarkable endurance of the Studebaker automobiles under the most trying conditions in which it is possible to test the qualities of a machine, were again demonstrated last Sunday in the midwinter 200-mile endurance run. All Studebaker entries finished with perfect scores and the run going and coming was made without the slightest mishap. The prize wining cars were selected at random from the stock and sent on the journey. Duplicates of these machines are constantly on display in our salesrooms. Demonstrations at your own convenience.

Fremont at Mission

Studebaker

Phone Douglas 3000

Golden State Limited

1908-09 Season Opened
December 15, 1908

No better or more direct service between San Francisco, Southern California and Chicago

Through the golden laden orange groves---by the wonderful Salton Sea---Mexican border scenes and the Rio Grande

Careful and attentive dining service Meals a la carte

Drawing-room Stateroom Sleeping Cars---staterooms, drawing-rooms, sections and berths. Observation, Parlor and Library Car equipped with latest literature and magazines. Gentlemen's Smoking Room. Ladies' Rest Room. Spacious Open-air Rotunda.

Southern Pacific--Rock Island Lines

Stage

(Continued from Page 27.)

California life written by two Californians, David Belasco and Richard R. Tully. The time is the early fifties, when American energy was supplanting the Spanish lassitude in California, and the place San Juan Bautista, near Monterey. The first act takes place in the Mission garden. Here we learn that Juanita, the Rose of the Rancho, is loved by Kearney, the government agent whose mission it is to see to the enforcement of the laws governing the acquisition of land. Here, too, are introduced the haughty mother, the gentle grandmother, the good padre, the bad Kinkaid, the intolerant Don Luis, and all the other types of the folk who lived in those turbulent times. Juanita here declines to wed Don Luis, avows her love for Kearney and antagonizes her relatives. The climax of the second act comes when, believing her gringo lover is insincere, she stormily denounces him until he silences her by holding his hand over her mouth while he explains the circumstances which have placed him in a dubious light. Everything considered, there is no cause for wonder that "The Rose of the Rancho" should have proved one of the Alcazar's most memorable successes. As to the caste, it is generally conceded to be the best stock company in America, while people who had the opportunity to compare the New York and San Francisco productions have unhesitatingly declared the latter to be in no way inferior.

In the Limelight

The well-known leading man, H. S. Northrup, is with the production of Clyde Fitch's comedy "Girls" to be seen at the Van Ness Theatre in the near future.

There was an interesting reunion at the Valencia Theatre this week when Blanche Stoddard, Mace Greenleaf and Thomas MacLarnie, all of whom were in the first production of "Parsifal" at the Castle Square Theatre, Boston, met to play in "The Prince Chap."

There are a number of delightful song hits in the performance of "A Stubborn Cinderella" and it must be said that every one of them receives perfect rendition at the hands of the splendid company now at the Van Ness.

Clara Thropp is one of the many San Francisco favorites who will be with "The Gingerbread Man" when that musical comedy comes to the American next month.

Charles Dow Clark, the popular comedian of the Valencia Stock Company, has just been re-engaged for a year. Mr. Clark has become a great favorite since his first appearance at this playhouse and can always be relied upon for a finished performance.

Mme. Langendorff has been engaged for the third concert of the St. Francis Musical Art Society next Wednesday night in the new Colonial ball room. On this occasion she will be assisted by the Lyric String Quartette.

Lillian Russell has started west with her newest comedy success, "Wildfire," and will be seen at the Van Ness Theatre next month for an engagement positively limited to one week.

Mace Greenleaf will play the Gillette role in "Secret Service," which will start a week's run at the Valencia Theatre on the afternoon of Washington's Birthday.

The next renowned piano virtuoso to appear is Josef Lhevinne, a Russian, whose playing is said to be like Rubinstein's. His opening concert will be given Sunday, March 7th. Following the Lhevinne concerts David Bispham will give a series of recitals.

Gus Pixley, the favorite comedian, brother of Annie Pixley and a San Franciscan by birth, will be with "The Babes in Toyland," which follows "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" at the American.

"The Fatal Card," the intensely interesting melodrama by G. Haddon Chambers and B. C. Stevens which has not been seen here for years, will follow "Secret Service" at the Valencia.

Mme. Therese Carreno is said to be the only woman who has published a string quartette. This work will be the novel feature of the next Greenbaum "Pop" Concert. A sonata for viola and piano by Rubinstein will also be a welcome novelty. Few people realize the beautiful tone quality of the viola in solo work.

The juvenile element in the story of "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," which will follow Harry Beresford at the American Theatre, is decidedly happy in its humorous appeal and plays an equally delightful part in the play based on the famous book. All the little Wigges with their frizzled locks, Asia, Australia, Europena—the "Jography" children—Chris with his wooden leg—the peg stick, which led to the benefit party—Pete, and the other sons and daughters of the patch, make the scenes bright and merry with the sunshine and play of childhood.

Rudolph Barth, watchmaker and jeweler, now permanently located at 36 Kearny street.

Arthur C. Aiston, the well-known manager and producer, is on his way to San Francisco to supervise the production of his play, "Pretty Peggy," at the Valencia Theatre shortly.

The Ideal Home

is where both husband and wife possess strong, healthy, well-balanced nervous systems. Weak nerves cause peevishness, irritability, temper, lack of energy, lassitude, are the cause of many quarrels, separations, divorces. Forestall these troubles. Build up your weak, unstrung nerves by using

Make-Man Tablets

the greatest remedy ever discovered for Nervous Prostration, Nervous Dyspepsia, Insomnia, Blues, Kidney Troubles, etc Make husband and wife strong, vigorous, healthy—one box will convince. For sale by leading druggists, 50c per box, 6 for $2.50, or by mail direct, in plain wrapper, on receipt of price. Results guaranteed. Write for free booklet. Address

Make-Man Tablet Co., Make-Man Bldg., Chicago

ANNOUNCEMENT

1909

OLDSMOBILE

We beg to announce arrival
1909 Oldsmobile, December 15th

The following complete line of 1909 models will be on exhibition on the above date. Every one of these cars is representative of the factory that makes it:

Model X Special Runabout	$2000
Model D Palace Touring Car	2750
Model D Toy Tonneau	2750
Model DR Flying Roadster	2750
Model DR Detachable Tonneau	2750
Model Z Touring Car, 6-Cylinder	4200
Model Z Runabout, 6-Cylinder	4200

Besides Limousine and Landaulet Bodies.

The 1909 Oldsmobile contains all that has made the car famous in the past, together with the improvements in keeping with the largest and most extensive factory in the country. Recognized the world over for durability. Investigate.

PIONEER AUTOMOBILE CO.

524 Twentieth St., Oakland 901 Golden Gate Ave., San Francisco

NEW YEAR GREETING

Start 1909 aright. Telephone us about wiring or repairing.

Telephone Douglas 1185 and 1186.

LEVY ELECTRIC CO.

HURRY UP ELECTRICIANS

LEVY ELECTRIC WIRING COMPANY

Electric Trains, Cars, Dynamos, Motors, Batteries, Machinery, Magic Lanterns Moving Pictures, Telegraph and Telephones, Wireless Outfits, X-rays, Etc.

648 Sacramento St. San Francisco 1205 Polk Street

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of HENRI HOURCADE, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Administratrix with the Will annexed of the estate of Henri Hourcade, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within four months after the first publication of this notice to the said Administratrix with the Will annexed, at the law office of A. Comte, Jr., No. 333 Kearny Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned selects as her place of business in all matters connected with said estate of Henri Hourcade, deceased.

PAULINE HOURCADE,
Administratrix with the Will annexed of the estate of Henri Hourcade, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, February 9th, 1909.

A. COMTE, Jr., Attorney for Administratrix with the Will annexed,
333 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. 2-13-5

Letters

Bryan Hooker's Novel

"The Right Man," of course, means the right man for each particular Her. Perhaps "the right combination" would come nearer to expressing the idea, for any man, who may be obviously the wrong one in one situation will be just as obviously the right one under other conditions. Mr. Bryan Hooker's object was to prove that Richard Gordon, musician, with all that it implies in temperament, heredity and education, was so preeminently the right man for Miss Audrey Dorne, making a trip to Europe under the chaperonage of her estimable spinster aunt, and accompanied by her fiance, John Hudson, a self-made millionaire, that the whirlwind courtship carried on during the few days of the voyage and the few minutes at their disposal for such occupation, must end in a marriage as enduringly happy as that which brought the conclusion of the ancient fairy tales. Perhaps it might have been so in another age, when the promise "for better, for worse—until death do us part" was accepted literally and lived up to to the best ability of human nature, bent on making the best of the irrevocable, but today, when divorce may be obtained because a cruel husband's eyes do not "go" with madame's favorite jewels, or fail to match her new gown or her pet dog, one cannot help wondering what the three days after the wedding will bring forth to men and women so inflammable and so ready to grasp at the next pretty thing. Decidedly the most interesting episode in the book is the discussion between Gordon and Hudson as to the comparative value of a college education to a man who has to make his unaided way in the world. Unlike the average non-collegian, Hudson maintains that for a man who is to go into business college is a waste of time. For a professional man, the friendships and all that count in, "but if a fellow's going into business it isn't worth while. It isn't reasonable that it should be. He forms a lot of footless habits and develops tastes that he can't afford time or money for, and learns a lot of things from books and book men that won't be any use to him. And then he has that handicap of four good years and more or less nonsense to unlearn. Why the average college man thinks it's no importance when he pays his bills." Apparently since Gordon walked off with the girl when the steamer landed them at Boulogne his contention that given time enough, the "man of breeding" and college training must win in every contest save one of brute strength, is upheld, but on the other hand, it was the girl who had the deciding vote and unless she had been held back by physical force there was nothing for Hudson to do but give up. Still that decides nothing, for the finest flowers of modern civilization have married coachmen, grooms and even prizefighters in the face of all opposition. But Mr. Hooker was really writing a story, not expounding a philosophy, and if he was satisfied that Gordon was the right man we must accept his dictum, though, from the view point of the future of the race, if such a point of view ever enters the head of a fictionist, Hudson, coming from nearer the soil, would have been the best dilutant of the over-refined, inbred and over-bred Dorne blood. Illustrations are in color-photogravure by Alonzo Kimball, and the volume, an attractive one in every aspect, from the Bobbs-Merrill Company.

By the Christmas Fire

There are Christmas books and Christmas books. Far too often those which are put forth under that label at the holiday season deserve to be catalogued amongst those volumes which Charles Lamb designated as "books that are no books." They are apt to be gaudy in appearance, empty and hollow of wit or sense, maudlin in sentiment and unsuitable to any age, class or condition of servitude. No one would think of looking at them except under the pressure of Christmas purchasing, when "somebody must have something," whether it be a trashy mechanical toy for the baby, a celuloid grimcrack for grandma or a book that will fill in the last crack and "do for most any one." Far away from this category shall we place Dr. Samuel McChord Crothers's' "By the Christmas Fire." It comprises a group of five essays, most of which will prove familiar to readers of the Atlantic Monthly, and be none the less welcome because they are old friends. Dr. Crothers has a delightfully whimsical style and an optimistic outlook. There is nothing forced about his cheerfulness. He does not see the world crumbling to destruction because "the poor" are no longer "grateful" after the long approved Bob Cratchit model, nor deplore the growth of a demand for rights instead of an humble acceptance of dole. The essay on "Being Grown Up" is especially to be recommended to the genius "educator," and some of the critical fraternity would profit by giving their minds to "On Being a Doctrinaire." Possibly the middle-aged and elderly will better appreciate "By the Christmas Fire" than will the youthful, but it is a book for all the year round, and one that will live and grow from year to year until it takes its place as a classic beside "The Other Wise Man" of Dr. Van Dyke as much a matter of course on every shopping list as the holly ribbon and tissue paper. Published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co.

The St. Raphael, 60 Seventh St., opp. main postoffice, San Francisco; apartments $20, single rooms $10, month

THROUGH TROPIC CLIMES

Atlantic Steamship Lines

New Orleans--New York Service

In connection with the Sunset Route between San Francisco, Los Angeles and New Orleans

Largest American coastwise steamers—elaborately furnished staterooms—electric lighted throughout. Perfect dining service.

First cabin, $35.00; round trip, $60.00
Second cabin, $27.50.
Includes berths and meals en route.

SEE AGENTS

SOUTHERN PACIFIC

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY REALTY SHOULD NOT BE LEASED

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 4714, N. S. Dept. 10.

In the Matter of the Estate of MICHAEL FLOOD, Deceased.

Upon reading and filing the petition of GEORGE W. LEE, the Administrator of the estate of MICHAEL FLOOD, deceased, praying that he, as such Administrator, be authorized, empowered and directed to lease a portion of that certain building belonging to said estate of MICHAEL FLOOD, deceased, which said premises thereby proposed to be leased are described as follows, to-wit: All of that certain Store, designated and known as No. 753 Polk Street, on the Southwest corner in that certain four story brick building erected and being on the following described property of said estate, which real property is situated, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows, to-wit:

Commencing at a point formed by the intersection of the Westerly line of Polk Street with the Southerly line of Ellis Street; thence running Westerly along the last named line Seventy-seven and Six-twelfths (77 6-12) feet; thence at right angles Southerly and parallel with Polk Street One Hundred and Twenty (120) feet; thence at rights angles Easterly and parallel with Ellis Street Seventy-seven and Six-twelfths (77 6-12) feet; thence at right angles Northerly One Hundred and Twenty (120) feet to the point of commencement.

It is ordered, that all persons interested in said estate appear before the above Court on Monday, the 8th day of February, A. D. 1909, at the hour of 10 o'clock a. m., at the Courtroom of said Court, situate in the Grant Building, S. E. corner of 7th and Market Streets, in said City and County, to show cause, if any they can or have, why said premises particularly above described, should not be leased for the purpose of securing for the same the total sum of Fifteen Hundred and Sixty ($1560.00) Dollars divided into monthly payments, for the term of two years.

For all further particulars reference is hereby made to the petition on file herein.

It is further ordered, that a copy of this Order be published for at least once a week for two successive weeks in Town Talk, a newspaper of general circulation published in said City and County.

Dated, this 21st day of January, A. D. 1909.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

Endorsed: Filed Jan. 22, 1909. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk. By H. G. BENEDICT, Deputy Clerk.

JEREMIAH V. COFFEY and EDWARD I. COFFEY,
Attorneys for Administrator, 557 Mills Bldg., San Francisco. 1-30-3

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 7042, New Series. Dept. Nine. Probate.

In the Matter of the Estate of GEORGE BASTIAN, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned William Bastian, Executor of the last will and testament of the above named George Bastian, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within four (4) months after the first publication of this notice, (which first publication occurs on the 6th day of February, 1909), to the said William Bastian, executor of the last will and testament of said George Bastian, deceased, at the office of his attorney, John J. Barrett, room 1255 Flood Building, Number 870 Market Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned selects as his place of business in all matters connected with said estate of said George Bastian, deceased.

WILLIAM BASTIAN,
Executor of the last will and testament of said George Bastian, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, California, February 6th, 1909.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Attorney for said Executor,
Rooms 1255-1257 Flood Building, San Francisco, Cal. 2-6-5

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY SALE OF REAL ESTATE SHOULD NOT BE MADE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 5103, N. S. Dept. 10, Probate.

In the matter of the Estate and Guardianship of JOHN M. COLE, Jr., an Incompetent Person.

CATHERINE COLE, guardian of the person and estate of JOHN M. COLE, Jr., an incompetent person, having presented her petition herein duly verified, praying for an order of the sale of the whole of the real estate of the said incompetent, for the reasons and purposes in said petition mentioned and set forth;

And such petition having been filed, it is now ordered by said Court that the next of kin of said incompetent person, and all persons interested in the estate of said incompetent person, be, and they are hereby directed to appear before said Court on Tuesday, the 2nd day of March, 1909, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the courtroom of Department 10 of said Superior Court, in the Grant Building, on the Southeast corner of Market and Seventh Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to show cause, if any they have, why an order should not be granted directing, empowering, and authorizing the said guardian to sell the whole or so much of the real estate of said incompetent person as may be necessary.

It is further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least once a week for three successive weeks in Town Talk, a newspaper of general circulation, printed and published in the said City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

Dated this 29th day of January, 1909.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

EDWARD J. LYNCH, Attorney for Guardian,
Mills Building, San Francisco, Cal.

Endorsed: Filed Jan. 29, 1909. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk. By H. G. BENEDICT, Deputy Clerk. 2-6-4

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY ORDER OF SALE OF REAL PROPERTY SHOULD NOT BE MADE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 2133. Dept. No. 10.

In the Matter of the Guardianship of the Estates of RANDOLPH WILSON SMITH, and ROBERTA GENEVIEVE SMITH, Minors.

EMILY MAY SMITH, guardian of the estate of the above named minors, having filed herein her verified petition praying for an order directing the sale of certain real property belonging to the estates of said minors, and more particularly described in said petition, and it appearing to the Court from said petition that it is necessary and will be beneficial to said minors, and each of them, and to their respective estates, that said real property should be sold, and good cause appearing:

It is hereby ordered that the next of kin of said minors and each of them, and all persons interested in their or either of their estates, appear before the above entitled court, Department No. 10 thereof, at its Courtroom in the Grant Building, situated on the corner of Seventh and Market Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, on the 2nd day of March, 1909, at the hour of 10 o'clock a. m. of said day, to show cause why an order should not be granted for the sale of said real property; and

It is hereby further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least once a week for three (3) successive weeks next preceding said day, in Town Talk, a newspaper printed and published in said City and County.

Dated, January 30th, 1909.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

W. H. ORRICK, Attorney for Guardian,
617 Balboa Building, San Francisco, Cal. 2-6-4

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 13833.

MARY HORGAN, a Widow, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Liens Upon the Real Property Herein Described or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in or lien upon the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, Greeting:

You are are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Mary Horgan, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the Court of the above entitled City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the northerly line of Fulton street, distant thereon one hundred and forty-six (146) feet ten and one-half inches (10½) inches westerly from the intersection of the westerly line of Baker street with the northerly line of Fulton street, and then running thence westerly along the said line of Fulton street twenty-five (25) feet, thence at right angle northerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet and six (6) inches, thence at a right angle easterly twenty-five (25) feet, and thence at a right angle southerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet and six (6) inches to the northerly line of Fulton street and point of commencement. Being Block No. 592, a portion of the Western Addition.

You are hereby notified that unless you appear and answer the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to wit: For a judgment of said Court as follows:

1st. Ascertaining and determining all estate, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said real property and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, or whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description.

2nd. Establishing the title of plaintiff to said real property and determining all adverse claims thereto, and adjudging that plaintiff is the owner in severalty and in fee simple absolute of said real property and every part thereof.

3rd. For such other and further relief as to the Court may seem proper and for costs of suit.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 14th day of January, A. D. 1909.

(Seal)

H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By T. C. RYAN, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 23d day of January, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon said real property adverse to plaintiff: The Hibernia Savings and Loan Society, whose address is on the Northwest corner of Jones and McAllister streets, San Francisco, California.

JOSEPH H. TAM, Attorney for Plaintiff,
511 Balboa Building, San Francisco, Cal. 1-23-10

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 13834.

DENNIS J. HORGAN, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Lien Upon the Real Property Herein Described or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in or lien upon the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, Greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Dennis J. Horgan, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Scott street, distant thereon northerly from the northerly line of Haight street one hundred and thirteen (113) feet and six (6) inches; thence running northerly along said easterly line of Scott street twenty-four (24) feet; thence at right angles easterly one hundred and ten (110) feet; thence at right angles southerly twenty-four (24) feet, and thence at right angles westerly one hundred and ten (110) feet to the easterly line of Scott street and the point of commencement. Being a part of the Western Addition Block number four hundred and thirty-nine (439), and also right of way over passage extending the length of the above described property and a width of those three (3) feet six (6) inches on the South of the same.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to wit: For a judgment of said Court as follows:

1st. Ascertaining and determining all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said real property and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, or whether the same consists of mortgages or liens of any description.

2nd. Establishing the title of plaintiff to said real property and determining all adverse claims thereto, and adjudging that plaintiff is the owner in severalty and in fee simple absolute of said real property and every part thereof.

3rd. For such other and further relief as to the Court may seem proper and for costs of suit.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 14th day of January, A. D. 1909.

(Seal)

H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By T. C. RYAN, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 23d day of January, 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in or lien upon said property adverse to plaintiff: The German Savings and Loan Society, whose address is No. 526 California street, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

JOSEPH H. TAM, Attorney for Plaintiff,
511 Balboa Building, San Francisco, Cal. 1-23-10

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 7058, New Series. Department Ten.

In the Matter of the Estate of JOSEPH CHAPMAN DYAS, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned EDWIN JOSEPH DYAS, Administrator of the estate of Joseph Chapman Dyas, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said Joseph Chapman Dyas, deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten (10) months after the first publication of this notice (which first publication occurs on the 6th day of February, 1909), to the said Edwin Joseph Dyas, administrator of the estate of said Joseph Chapman Dyas, deceased, at the office of his attorneys, John J. Barrett and Frank I. Barrett, room 1255 Flood Building, Number 870 Market Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned selects as his place of business in all matters connected with said estate of said Joseph Chapman Dyas, deceased.

EDWIN JOSEPH DYAS,
Administrator of the estate of said Joseph Chapman Dyas, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, California, February 6th, 1909.

JOHN J. BARRETT and FRANK I. BARRETT,
Attorneys for Administrator, Room 1255 Flood Bldg., S. F. 2-6-5

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY ORDER OF SALE OF REAL ESTATE SHOULD NOT BE MADE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 2490. Dept. No. 10.

In the Matter of the Estate of GEORGE G. RUNDLE, Deceased.

Hannah C. Rundle, administratrix of the estate of George G. Rundle, deceased, having filed her verified petition herein for an order of sale of the real property of said estate situated in the City and County of San Francisco, and in the County of San Bernardino, and it satisfactorily appearing to me from such petition that it is necessary, and it would be for the benefit, advantage and best interests of the estate of said deceased and those interested therein, to sell the whole, or some portion, of the said real estate to pay the debts outstanding against the decedent, and the debts, expenses and charges of administration of said estate, as in said petition set forth:

It is therefore ordered that said petition be set for hearing by said court on Monday, the 15th day of March, A. D. 1909, at the hour of ten o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the courtroom of said Superior Court, in Department Ten (10) thereof, in room number 603 of the Grant Building, situate at the southeast corner of Market and Seventh streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased appear before the above-named Superior Court at said time and place then and there to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said administratrix to sell said real property of said estate described in said petition, or as much thereof as may be necessary, for the purposes hereinbefore and in said petition stated.

And it is further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least once a week for four successive weeks before the said day of hearing in Town Talk, a newspaper printed and published weekly in said City and County of San Francisco.

Dated, February 6th, A. D. 1909.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

AITKEN & AITKEN, Attorneys for Administratrix,
Monadnock Building, Rooms 997-998-978-982, San Francisco. 2-13-5

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 20725.

ADELE RAYNAL, Plaintiff,

vs.

HENRI RAYNAL, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Henri Raynal, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's wilfull desertion; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 8th day of January, A. D. 1909.

(Seal)

H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By W. R. CASTAGNETTO, Deputy Clerk.

P. A. BERGEROT, Esq., 110 Sutter Street, San Francisco, Cal., Attorney for Plaintiff. 1-16-10

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Action No. 13512.

MARY A. DALY, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, Defendants, Greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of MARY A. DALY, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above-entitled Court and County, within three (3) months after the first publication of this SUMMONS, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situated, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

Parcel Number One. Commencing at a point on the Westerly line of Devisadero Street, distant thereon sixty-three (63) feet nine (9) inches Southerly from the Southerly line of Jackson Street; running thence Southerly along said Westerly line of Devisadero Street twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet six (6) inches; thence at right angles Northerly twenty-five feet (25) feet, and thence at right angles Easterly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet six (6) inches to the point of commencement. Being a portion of Western Addition Block Number 497.

Parcel Number Two. Commencing at a point on the Northerly line of Clay Street, distant thereon one hundred and ten (110) feet Easterly from the Easterly line of Devisadero Street, and running thence Easterly and along the said Northerly line of Clay Street twenty-eight (28) feet nine (9) inches; thence at right angles northerly one hundred and twenty-seven (127) feet eight and one-quarter (8¼) inches; thence at right angles Westerly twenty-eight (28) feet nine (9) inches; and thence at right angles Southerly one hundred and twenty-seven (127) feet eight and one-quarter (8¼) inches to the Northerly line of Clay Street and the point of commencement. Being a portion of Western Addition Block Number 463.

Parcel Number Three. Commencing at the Southeasterly corner of Bush and Powell Streets; running thence Easterly along the Southerly line of Bush Street forty-five (45) feet; thence at right angles Southerly sixty-seven (67) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Westerly forty-five (45) feet to the Easterly line of Powell Street; and thence Northerly along said Easterly line of Powell Street sixty-seven (67) feet and six (6) inches to the point of commencement. Being a portion of Fifty Vara Lot Number 314.

Parcel Number Four. Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Folsom Street, distant thereon one hundred and ninety (190) feet Southerly from the Southerly line of Precita Place; running thence Southerly and along said Easterly line of Folsom Street twenty-seven (27) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Easterly one hundred and ten (110) feet; thence at right angles Northerly twenty-seven (27) feet and six (6) inches; and thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and ten (110) feet to the Easterly line of Folsom Street, and the point of commencement. Being Lot Number 32, as per Kingston's Map of Lots Numbers 148 to 153, Precita Valley Lands, filed in the office of the County Recorder of the City and County of San Francisco, July 20, 1865, and recorded in Map-Book E and F of Maps, at page 29.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit:

That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute; that her title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 31st day of December, A. D. 1908.

(Seal)

H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this Summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 9th day of January, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiff: A. TURTURICI and E. TURTURICI, residing at _____, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, have and claim an interest in Parcel Number Four of the land in said Complaint and hereinabove described, under a certain Agreement of Sale.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Attorney for Plaintiff, Rooms 1255-1257 Flood Bldg.,
870 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal. 1-9-10

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Action No. 13477.

EDWARD FRANCIS McKITTRICK, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Lien Upon the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, Defendants, Greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Edward Francis McKittrick, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above-entitled Court and county, within three (3) months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Folsom Street, distant thereon one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet Northerly from the Northerly line of Twenty-second (22nd) Street and running thence Northerly along said line of Folsom Street twenty-four (24) feet; thence at a right angle Easterly one hundred and twenty-two (122) feet and six (6) inches; thence at a right angle Southerly twenty-four (24) feet and thence at a right angle Westerly one hundred and twenty-two (122) feet and six (6) inches to the said Easterly line of Folsom Street and point of commencement.

Being a portion of Mission Block Number 54.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit:

That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute; that his title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover his costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 29th day of December, A. D. 1908.

(Seal)

H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By M. P. BRUTEN, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 9th day of January, 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiff: None.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Attorney for Plaintiff, Rooms 1255-57 Flood Bldg.,
870 Market Street, San Francisco. 1-9-10

SUMMONS

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
In and for the City and County of San Francisco. Action No. 12782.

ERNESTINE KRELING and JAMES F. LEAHY, Plaintiffs,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Lien Upon the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants, Greetings.

You are hereby required to appear and answer the Complaint of Ernestine Kreling and James F. Leahy, Plaintiffs, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at the Southwesterly corner of Golden Gate Avenue and Steiner Street; running thence Westerly along the Southerly line of Golden Gate Avenue One Hundred and Thirty-seven (137) feet and Six (6) inches; thence at right angles Southerly One Hundred (100) feet; thence at right angles Easterly One Hundred and Thirty-seven (137) feet and Six (6) inches to the Westerly line of Steiner Street and thence at right angles Northerly along said line of Steiner Street One Hundred (100) feet to the point of commencement.

Being a portion of Western Addition Block Number Three Hundred and Eighty-one (381).

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiffs will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit, for a judgment of said Court as follows:

1st. Ascertaining and determining all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said real property and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, or whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description.

nd. Establishing the title of plaintiffs and of each of them to said real property and determining all adverse claims thereto, and adjudging that each of said plaintiffs is the owner in fee simple absolute of an undivided one-half of the said real property and every part thereof.

3rd. For such other and further relief as to the Court may seem proper, and for costs of suit.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 27th day of November, 1908.

(Seal)

H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By T. C. RYAN, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 12th day of December, A. D. 1908.

The following persons are said to claim some interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiffs, to-wit:

French Savings Bank, a corporation, whose address is No. 108 Sutter Street, San Francisco, California.

CAMPBELL, METSON, DREW, OATMAN & MACKENZIE,
Attyns. for Plaintiffs, Balboa Bldg., 595 Market St., S. F. 12-12-10

Louis Crepaux

(Member of Paris Grand Opera)

Has removed to his new studio,

Delbert Block, 943 Van Ness avenue, cor. O'Farrell.

Reception hours: 11:30 to 12, and 3 to 4, except Wednesdays. Wednesdays in Oakland, 1154 Brush street.

Emil Steinegger

PIANOFORTE PLAYING

924 Grove St (above Fillmore), San Francisco.

For appointments phone Merritt 2845

Thursdays, 2701 Regent St., Berkeley

Mackenzie Gordon

TENOR

TEACHER OF SINGING { in all its branches, from the rudiments of tone formation to the highest finish and Completion of Public Singing.

Oratorio, Opera and Concert

By appointment only Phone Franklin 3594

Studio: 1350 FRANKLIN ST.

Louis H. Eaton

Organist and Director of the Music Trinity Church

Teacher of

PIANO, ORGAN, SINGING

1678 Broadway Phone Franklin 2244

Donald Maclean

SINGING—Pupil Seagle and De Rezske

Henri Etlin

PIANO—First Prize Paris Conservatoire

STUDIO, 1613 GREEN ST. Phone, Franklin 3153

Mme. Ellen Roeckel-Davis

VOCAL STUDIO

The 18th-Street Car Passes the Door — 1143 Ashbury Street Near 17th St.

Samuel M. Shortridge

ATTORNEY AT LAW

CHRONICLE BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO

Tel. Douglas 2176

Robert B. McMillan

ATTORNEY AT LAW

Has removed his Law Offices to the

CHRONICLE BUILDING, Fifth Floor

Phone Kearny 5969 Rooms 517-518

Knight & Heggerty

ATTORNEYS AT LAW and

PROCTORS IN ADMIRALTY

MERCHANTS EXCHANGE BLDG., S. F.

Rooms 626 and 630

HENRY P. TRICOU

NOTARY PUBLIC

508 CALIFORNIA STREET Phone Kearny 711

Residence, 852 Grove St. Phone Page 55

Mrs. Helen Derber

Graduate Masseuse. Electric Treatment.

Phone West 8802 2024 SUTTER STREET

Electric Vibratory Massage

Professional Masseuse. Expert Treatment.

Room 316 943 VAN NESS AVENUE

LA GRANDE AND WHITES LAUNDRY CO.

Office and Works

234 TWELFTH STREET Bet. Mission and Howard

Phone Market 1690 SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Dept. 10—No. 20497.

ANNA D. ROLLER, Plaintiff,

vs.

ALVA AARON and M. CLIFFORD AARON, Defendants.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Alva Aaron and M. Clifford Aaron, Defendants.

You are hereby directed to appear and answer the complaint in an action entitled as above brought against you in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, within ten days after the service on you of this summons—if served within this City and County; or within thirty days if served elsewhere.

And you are hereby notified that unless you appear and answer as above required, the said plaintiff will take judgment for any money or damages demanded in the complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, this 23rd day of December, A. D. 1908.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

By L. J. WELCH, Deputy Clerk.

TOBIN & TOBIN, Attorneys for Plaintiff. 1-16-10

SUMMONS.

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

GUSTAVE WEDELSTAEDT, Plaintiff

vs.

ELIZABETH WEDELSTAEDT, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Elizabeth Wedelstaedt, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above name plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed herein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's desertion and extreme cruelty; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the Complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 12th day of November,. A. D. 1908.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

By MILTON M. DAVIS, Deputy Clerk.

C. F. ADAMS, Attorney for Plaintiff, 378 Monadnock Bldg., S. F. 12-12-10

DOWN TOWN NOW

CALIFORNIA OPTICAL CO. are now in their new store, 181 Post St., near Grant Ave. The Fillmore Street store is closed.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

No. 7022, Dept. 10.

Estate of ADOLPHE ROOS, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, executors of the last will and testament of Adolphe Roos, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said executors at Heller, Powers & Ehrman, 713 Union Trust Building, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, which said office the undersigned select as their place of business in all matters connected with said estate of Adolphe Roos, deceased.

GEORGE H. ROOS,
LEON L. ROOS,

Executors of the Last Will and Testament of Adolphe Roos, Deceased.

Dated: San Francisco, Cal., January 23, 1909.

HELLER, POWERS & EHRMAN,
Attorneys for Executors,
Union Trust Bldg., San Francisco. 1-23-5

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of MINNIE SINGER, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Administrators, with Will annexed, of the estate of MINNIE SINGER, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten (10) months after the first publication of this notice to the said Administrators, with Will annexed, at the law office of A. Comte, Jr., No. 333 Kearny Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned selects as their place of business in all matters connected with said estate of Minnie Singer, deceased.

CHARLES HUFSCHMIDT,
HENRY HUFSCHMIDT,
GEORGE F. HUFSCHMIDT,

Administrators with the Will annexed of the estate of Minnie Singer, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, January 16, 1909.

A. COMTE, Jr., 333 Kearny St., S. F.,
Atty. for Administrators with Will Annexed. 1-16-5

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., San Francisco. Cal.

Guaranteed Capital	$ 1,200,000.00
Capital actually paid up in cash	$ 1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds	$ 1,479,043.00
Deposits December 31, 1908	$35,079,498.53
Total Assets	$37,661,836.70

Remittance may be made by Draft, Post Office, or Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Money Orders, or coin by Express.

Office Hours: 10 o'clock a. m. to 3 o'clock p. m., except Saturdays to 12 o'clock m. and Saturday evenings from 7 o'clock p. m. to 8 o'clock p. m. for receipt of deposits only.

OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohte; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourny; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS—N. Ohlandt, Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohte; Ign. Steinhardt, I. N. Walter, J. W. Van Bergen, F. Tillmann, Jr., E. T. Kruse and W. S. Goodfellow.

MISSION BRANCH, 2572 Mission Street, between 21st and 22nd Street. For receipt and payment of Deposits only. C. W. Heyer, Manager.

MEN

Afflicted with any private ailment consult the United Physicians and Surgeons. Strictly reliable specialists in Genito-Urinary, Blood and Skin diseases, and all reflex ailments of men. Prompt, efficient services; fees moderate; consultation free and confidential. Write or call. Hours 9 a. m. to 9 p. m. Sundays, 9 to 2.

A word to the wise is sufficient.

United Physicians and Surgeons

517 Twenty-third St., Oakland
Near Telegraph Avenue.

10 Third Street, San Francisco
Next to Call Building

MAYERLE'S GERMAN EYE WATER
By Mail 65c

Mayerle's German Eyewater

Highly Recommended for

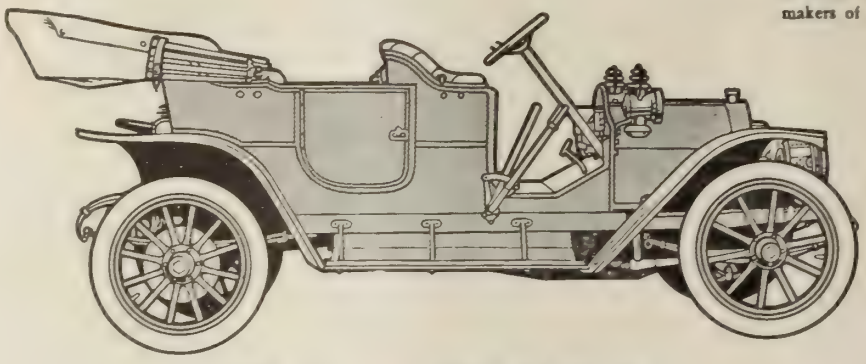
Painful, Sore, Red, Inflamed, Burning, Smarting, Itching, Scratching, Twitching, and Gluey Eyes, Heavy or Crusty Eyelids, Floating Spots, Cloudiness of Vision, Cross Eyes, Watery or Discharging Eyes, feeling like sand in the Eyes, Heavy and Crusty Eyelids.

NEGLECTED EYESIGHT AFFECTS THE BRAIN

Mayerle's Glasses rest and strengthen the eyes, relieves the strain, and preserve the sight.

GEORGE MAYERLE

Granduate German Expert Optician, charter member American Association of Opticians and Vice-President Optical Specialist Association of America, 1149 Golden Gate Ave., between Webster and Buchanan sts. Phone Park 3153, San Francisco.



1000 Cars Already Delivered

Touring Cars
Tourabouts
Roadsters

Chalmers-Detroit "30"

"It's a Good Car"

A high-grade 4-cylinder, 5-passenger, 24-30 horse-power car, made by the makers of the Thomas-Detroit Forty.

Price $1500

"The only man who doesn't praise the Chalmers "30" is the man who doesn't own one."

806 of our $1500 "30's" have been delivered up to this date (October 31st, 1908). Not last year's models, but all of them built this year.

806 people are actually running these cars.

806 people know they are the best $1500 cars made, because they have proved them out by use.

806 people will tell you so if you ask them. And after all, are they not the best judges? Some are nearby you—some are your neighbors, perhaps. Ask them what they think. We will gladly abide by their judgment.

If you doubt our word, get hold of a mechanical engineer—let him examine and test the other cars and then ours. Take his word—we will rest our claim on that.

Our car is built by engineers who have designed more successful medium-priced cars than anyone else; engineers who put their names in print and stand back of their designs and statements with their reputations.

Any competent engineer will tell you that these men have now made the best low-priced car on the market.

Remember, 806 of these cars have been delivered already. They are our salesmen. Salesmen of other companies won't tell you the good points of our cars. They are not paid to do that. Don't expect them to do it. Advertising writers are paid enormous salaries to make other cars look good in print. Our cars look good to engineers—look good on the road—look good to people who use them—will look good to you if you will look. The proof of the pudding is in the eating. 806 people "are eating theirs now."

These Facts are Important

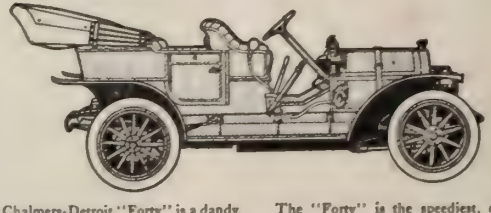
Our "30" car has the specifications known to belong to real touring cars. 110 inch wheel base, close coupled body, hung in the middle of the car, not away out over the rear axle to make room for a "big handsome hood" that don't make the car run, the hood isn't important—it's the engine under the hood. Ours is right, engineers will tell you so; multiple disc clutch, three speed transmission, floating rear axle; ¾ elliptic springs, quick detachable tires, etc.

One of our $1500 cars has been running 200 miles a day for 91 days. This run is from Detroit to Pontiac and back, and the car goes every day, rain or shine. 18,200 miles have been run so far without a miss, right on schedule, and it is still running. If you know anyone in Detroit, write to them to verify this statement. No other car at any price has ever done this before. That's the kind we sell. That's the kind 806 people are using now.

At the Sweepstake Races run over the Vanderbilt Cup course on Saturday, October 10th, our cars won first and second in their class, distancing everybody else, beating the next car 34 minutes, which means that our car was more than 25 miles ahead in a race of 150 miles. The "30" that won first averaged 48 miles per hour on this course, and the "30" that won second averaged 46 miles per hour.

The car that won the Vanderbilt Cup Race on Saturday, October 24th, averaged 64 miles per hour, which was record-breaking time. In comparison with this specially built racing car consider our "30", selling for $1500, averaging 48 miles per hour over this same course. We more than lapped every one of our competitors in the Sweepstake Race. Do you want any better evidence that our car is absolutely right; that our two-bearing crank shaft and our cylinders cast en bloc are the very best construction?

The consistent performance of the two cars shows it was not luck that won for us. One averaged 48 miles per hour, the other 46 miles. Further than that, the car that won second in this race was driven by a man who had never seen the car until an hour before he drove it in the race. We had to get a new driver because the driver we had was disqualified the day before the race because he hit a cow on the course. This car that hit the cow had only the radiator damaged and went into the race the next day and won second.



Our cars in this race were stock cars. There are 806 cars just like them running on the streets and roads of this country. We don't build special cars for racing purposes and build other cars to deliver to our customers. The cars we deliver to customers are the same cars that we enter in races.

In a Nutshell

We have sold 3047 cars to dealers, 806 of these have already been delivered. We are shipping from 15 to 18 cars a day.

The only man who doesn't praise the Chalmers "30" is the man who doesn't own one.

Chalmers-Detroit "Forty" Touring Car, $2750

The Chalmers-Detroit "Forty" is a dandy car, as a thousand users know. It is by all odds the best medium-priced car on the market.

The day of mere extravagance in automobile buying is over. People nowadays will not pay $4000 or $5000 merely for the purpose of saying that they spent that much for an automobile.

What more could you get for $4000 or $5000 than you can get in the Chalmers-Detroit "Forty" at $2750? More power, and more weight, perhaps. Why more power? The "Forty" will do anything that any other car will do. As far as more weight is concerned, it will merely add to the cost of upkeep.

The "Forty" is the speediest, quietest, most economical car of its class. It has won first place as a hill climber; it has won dozens of contests in speed and endurance.

So, far, we have delivered 178 of the 1909 "Forty." Our capacity for the year is only 500. Last year we ran about 200 short of the demand, and there is sure to be a shortage this year. So that if you want a "Forty" please place your order now, either for immediate delivery or for future delivery.

Made in two styles—touring car and roadster—$2750.

PIONEER AUTOMOBILE COMPANY

901 GOLDEN GATE AVE., SAN FRANCISCO

524 TWENTIETH ST., OAKLAND

Vol. XVII. No. 860. SAN FRANCISCO, FEBRUARY 20, 1909. PRICE, 10 CENTS

SAN FRANCISCO TOWN TALK

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

FORTY-FIRST ANNUAL STATEMENT

Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company

Of California

ASSETS

Loans on Real Estate, First Mortgage	$5,930,125.75
Loans to Policy-Holders, secured by Policies	2,316,126.54
Loans on Approved Collateral	329,210.43
Bonds and Stocks Owned, Market Value December 31, 1908	4,993,137.31
Real Estate Owned, including Company's Home Office Building	1,141,901.30
Interest and Rent, Due and Accrued	161,125.29
Outstanding and Deferred Premiums	730,238.25
Cash on Hand and in Banks	498,208.84
Total,	$16,100,073.71

LIABILITIES

Reserve on Policies, Legal Standard	$14,156,424.38
Claims in Process of Adjustment	114,702.50
Premiums and Interest Paid in Advance	66,929,55
Amount Set Aside for Taxes, 1909	51,284.09
Amount Set Aside for Future Dividends to Policy Holders	78,332.64
All Other Liabilities	99,756.36
Total,	$14,567,429.52

Surplus to Policy Holders December 31, 1908, $1,532,644.19

Increase in Assets for Year 1908	$ 1,948,304.00
Increase in Surplus for Year 1908	215,685.00
Increase in Amount Set Aside for Dividends to Policy Holders	78,333.00
Business in force December 3, 1908	$104,402,879.00

Detailed Statement Mailed on Application

KILGARIF & BEAVER, MANAGERS SHREVE BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO

Leading Hotels and Resorts

HOTEL ST. FRANCIS

THE FARTHEST ADVANCE OF SCIENCE IN HOTEL SERVICE

Quick room service is gained by maintaining pantries on every other floor.

Under the management of JAMES WOODS

FAIRMONT HOTEL

The Crowning Achievement in a City Itself One Vast Achievement

Rates, $2.50 per day and upward

Management of PALACE HOTEL COMPANY

HOTEL WASHINGTON

JOHN H. LANGTON, Manager

SEATTLE, WASH.

A magnificent modern structure involving over One Million and a Half Dollars. Conducted on Most liberal ideas of Experience. Its appointments and service cannot be excelled in the United States. The management cordially invites your patronage.

THE PERRY

Madison St. and Boren Ave.
SEATTLE, WASH.

EVERY MODERN CONVENIENCE

Absolutely fire proof, European plan, the highest grade. Under new management. Centrally located and commanding a view of the Olympics, Cascade Mountains, Mt. Rainier and Puget Sound. J. S. McTERNAN, Manager.

HOTEL WASHINGTON ANNEX

SEATTLE, WASH.

Best Rooms Best Service

Strictly First-Class

J. H. DAVIS - - - - - Proprietor

PLAY GOLF

AT

HOTEL DEL MONTE

On the finest 18-hole course in the country

Through parlor car leaves San Francisco daily 3 p. m. For literature, week-end rates and reservations address H. R. WARNER, Manager, or Peck-Judah Co., 769 Market St., S. F.

HOTEL SORRENTO

Corner
Madison St. and Terry Ave.
SEATTLE

European and American Plan

Roof Garden, Tea and Dining Rooms on Top Floor overlooking Sound, Lakes and Mountains.

Langford & Henderson, Proprietors
J. G. Wright, Manager

BYRON

HOT SPRINGS HOTEL

One of the world's most curative springs.

One of America's most comfortable and refined hostelries.

See Southern Pacific information bureau, James Flood Building, or any Southern Pacific agent or Peck-Judah Co., 789 Market street, or address Manager at hotel.

HOTEL CARLTON

Telegraph Avenue at Durant

BERKELEY

A FIRST-CLASS TRANSIENT AND FAMILY HOTEL

MRS. W. F. MORRIS, Proprietor
formerly of Hotel Cecil, 960 Bush Street, San Francisco

TOWN TALK

THE PACIFIC WEEKLY

Vol. XVII. San Francisco, February 20, 1909. No. 860

SOME OF THE KIRMESS DANCERS.

The upper picture shows Kathleen and Charles De Young in the "Merry Widow Waltz." Below are the participants in the Marsovian Dance. Reading from left to right they are: Miss Enid Gregg, Miss Doris Wilshire, Mr. Charles De Young, Miss Kathleen De Young, Miss Marian Marvin, Hillyer Deuprey and Loyd Havens.

TOWN TALK

Published Weekly by
TOWN TALK PUBLISHING COMPANY
Theodore F. Bonnet.....Editor
Ralph A. Grover.....Manager
88 First St., cor. Mission, San Francisco. Telephone Douglas 2612.

SUBSCRIPTION—One Year, in advance, $4.00; six months, $2.25; three months, $1.30; single copies, 10 cents. Foreign subscriptions (countries in Postal Union), $5.00 per year. For sale by all Newsdealers.
Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter.
The Trade in San Francisco supplied direct by us. Outside of San Francisco by the San Francisco News Co.
For foreign and local advertising rates address 88 First Street, San Francisco.
Los Angeles office, 734 Central Building.
Seattle office, 804 Third Avenue. Theo. S. Hanaford, Special Representative.
We decline to return or to enter into correspondence as to rejected communications; and to this rule we can make no exception. Manuscripts not acknowledged within four weeks are rejected.

The Degenerate Drama

Once more there is complaint of the degradation of the theatre. A playwright has had the indecency and the effrontery to present a drama of life and eternal humanity, and he has startled and scandalized many good people of the tribe of Levi or Tartuffe, in consequence of which we are being regaled with all the old familiar cant and rant about the degeneracy of the drama. The drama has been in a state of degeneracy from the standpoint of a certain brand of moralists for many generations. Critics that intoxicate themselves with virtue in the sexless orgies of morality are always intolerant of vice when it is presented without a mask on the stage. They insist that the drama should present life's realities in their most beautiful and idealized form, stripped of all their vulgar features. A play of severe ethical purpose such as Mrs. Warren's Profession shocks and disgusts them, but they see nothing offensive in Magda, Paula Tanqueray, Mrs. Ebbsmith or Zaza. Plays that confound love and lust, salacity and sentiment, are not condemned by the purists providing these plays purport to mirror the life of a gilded aristocracy. It does not matter if the life painted therein is corrupt and profligate, or if the playwright delineates scenes of temptation and sin and enlists the special interest of his audience on behalf of the splendid and voluptuous sinner. The purist can see nothing vulgar that does not bear the label. The dramatist is at liberty to pander to the lovers of salacity so long as he cleverly presents his dramatic pornography under the subterfuge of art and idealism. The play of the brothel is barred, but the play of the sumptuous drawing room thronged with lascivious men and faithless wives is always welcome. Now why should we object if playwrights seek to arouse a kindlier feeling in an uncharitable and bitter world toward women who have fallen and to show how they may be redeemed when treated with wisdom and gentleness? And why should we exclude from the theatre that which is paraded without objection through the columns of the vulgar press every day? Upon what theory is it conceived that themes which are not unfit for discussion in the daily papers are unfit for exploitation in the drama? These are questions which the purists may find some difficulty in answering. For the purists do not pretend to be concerned about art. They do not argue with Tolstoi that art should give expression only to the beautiful. It is entirely a question of morality with them. They are guardians of public morals not of public taste. Yet nobody ever hears of them in crusades against the press. A little while ago the newspapers told us of a Pittsburg millionaire who cruelly deserted his wife, his affections having been alienated by a woman of the stage to whom he has since been married. And now from time to time the newspapers inform us of the doings of this "affinity." They tell us of her social conquests and of her artistic triumphs, and they picture her as the queen of a quite decent realm. From all that we read of her she might well be pointed out as a model for aspiring young womanhood. Here is a drama in real life which unquestionably does not point a wholesome moral. But nobody has censured the press for forcing it upon public attention. If it were fashioned for the stage in all probabilities nobody would object to its production. Yet there is almost universal objection to so edifying and instructive a play as "Mrs. Warren's Profession."

Landlordism Here and There

The Bulletin is very much disgusted with its contemporaries for "gushing over a young English marquis of great wealth, who happens to be in the city." According to the Bulletin this young man is of no consequence. His income is derived from vast estates which he inherited. These estates "comprise great baronies which his ancestors acquired at the time of the Norman conquest," and " the tenants who contribute to the huge rent roll of the young marquis now in this city are still paying for the Norman conquest." All of which may be quite true and yet the marquis may be a very decent young fellow. It is not to his discredit that he permits himself to enjoy the advantages of existing conditions. The principle upon which he derives his income in nowise differs from the principle upon which Mr. James D. Phelan fattens himself on the sweat of his tenants. Mr. Phelan acquired his wealth by inheritance. His father came hither at the time of the Pioneer conquest and possessed himself of many choice acres, the unearned increment of which has enabled our illustrious young tribune to live like a fighting cock without sweating a hair or molting a whisker. But unlike the young marquis Mr. Phelan is not entirely satisfied with conditions as he has found them. In the epigrammatic language of Mr. Gavin McNab, this restless son of an acquisitive pioneer is the enemy of every dollar that isn't his own. With most of his wealth invested in land which pays him as high as ten per cent interest, he spends more than half his time trying to prevent stockholders in corporations from getting five per cent on their money. Identified with none of the big interests that have assisted in the development of this city and State, nothing would please him so much as to wreck them providing that from their ruins he might step into public office. The landlordism of which Phelan is an embodiment would be quite as bad as the landlordism of Great Britain even though it were not made to serve the demagogic purpose for which it is employed by this ambitious millionaire.

Senator Chamberlain's Dilemma

Speculation is abroad as to the kind of United States Senator Governor Chamberlain of Oregon will be when he arrives in Washington. Governor Chamberlain is a Democrat. He was elected to the United States Senate by a Republican Legislature pledged to vote for the "choice of the people" as expressed by the direct primary. The State of Oregon is Republican by a comfortable majority. Governor Chamberlain is, therefore, a representative of all the voters of Oregon irrespective of politics. As a United States Senator he can vote his own judgment on all questions affecting the interests of all the people. But when the issue is strictly partisan, as many issues in Congress are sure to be, what will be his position? Personally he is a Democrat, but he represents a Republican constituency and was elected (reluctantly it is true, but none the less effectually) by the legislative representatives of a Republican majority of the voters of Oregon. Can he honestly or consistently repudiate the source of his senatorial prerogative? There are some very fine distinctions in the problem that will confront Senator Chamberlain when he lines up with the exigencies of the situation after he takes his seat in the Senate. He may find himself in a class by himself—neither fish, flesh nor good red herring; neither Democrat, Republican nor anything but Senator Chamberlain. As a Senator without a party he will not be likely to exercise much influence in the council of the nation notwithstanding his dominating personality and his ability as a statesman. He will have to create a party of his own; and although he could do this in Oregon it does not follow that he can do it in the Senate.

The Precious Catholicon

Not to be in favor of the direct primary in this State at present is to be suspected of an unholy alliance with a corrupt political machine. The pee-pul have been told that the direct primary will put the political boss out of business and put them in control of the government. They have been told there is no other way out of their distress and misery. The direct primary is the catholicon the doctor ordered, the only sure cure for all the ills in the body politic. Therefore we must have the direct primary at all hazards. Its efficacy has been vindicated by the election to the Senate of such men as Bourne, Davis and La Follette, and it is bound to give the people such men as Bryan and Phelan, so let us have the direct primary as soon as possible; let us encourage the forces of social and economic discontent, envy and mutiny; let us stimulate the restless and reckless spirit of innovation; let us give the radicals their inning and squelch all opposition to newfangled schemes and popular short cuts to improvement. There are statesmen of the type of Elihu Root and doctrinaires of the type of President Jacob Gould Schurman of Cornell University, who assert that the direct primary will work as a menace rather than a benefit to the political interests of the people, but the judgment of these men is not to be relied upon when we find that it is at discord with the judgment of such eminent scholars as Benjamin Ide Wheeler and E. P. E. Troy.

Disastrous Experiments

Neither the direct primary nor the ultra-democratic principle involved in the direct primary was contemplated by the founders of the republic. It was recognized by the fathers that there must be two distinct branches of the national parliament, the one to act as a check on the other. The direct primary, as is demonstrated in the case of Senator Chamberlain. nullifies the purpose of the makers of the constitution. It amalgamates and assimilates the two houses of Congress. It reduces the Senate to a "popular" branch of the national Legislature, thereby eliminating what might be called the court of final resort in the lawmaking branch of our government. Thus we return to the elemental form of popular legislation out of which was evolved the more complicated but also more effective method of controlling the affairs of the nation. History teaches that the natural trend of all governmental science has been to complete division of the legislative function; and the example of history is invariably to the purpose that a pure democracy cannot survive—it either perishes in the strife of faction or it merges into a monarchical system. If the House of Representatives had been the sole lawmaking power of this nation there would have been at least three kingdoms on the American continent before the third generation of the American people had passed away—unless, warned by the fate of the "popular" form of government, the seceding sections had returned to the original design of the founders of the original republic. This fate cannot overtake this country, because the first experiments of the direct primary will indicate what the result will be. This is why the Oregon experiment will be watched with such intense interest by those citizens who know the history of such political empiricism.

The Maid of Domremy

Interest in Joan of Arc has been revived in consequence of her beatification by the Catholic Church. And the interest has developed into something more than mere curiosity with respect to the character and achievements of the Maid of Domremy. It has centred upon a conflict of minds in the literary world. Some time ago there emanated from the pen of Anatole France a Life of Joan of Arc in which she was depicted as a person far from deserving of canonization. This work excited the indignation of Andrew Lang, who accused France of having practiced the art of falsification, and who has since come to the defense of Joan in an exhaustive, sympathetic study of her career. Apropos this dispute in the literary world, we have been reminded by several commentators that it is not the first time that the Shepherd girl of Lorraine has been abused by one of her own countrymen and exalted by a foreigner. Voltaire drew a revolting picture of her and Mark Twain extolled her genius and virtue. Singularly enough we have seen no reference made to the most masterly of all eulogies of the saintly heroine of Orleans, though it is one that is peculiarly worth recalling at this time since it too was inspired by the rancorous animosity of a Frenchman. We refer to that noble remonstrance in behalf of truth from the trenchant pen of Thomas De Quincey, evoked by M. Michelet's History of France. Here is a work that has both historical and literary value, shrewdly analytical, and as resonant with genuine feeling and righteous indignation as Robert Louis Stevenson's immortal letter to Dr. Hyde in defense of Father Damien. "Pure, innocent, noble-hearted girl!" exclaimed De Quincey, "whom, from earliest youth, ever I believed in as full of truth and self-sacrifice, this was among the strongest pledges for thy truth, that never once—no, not for a moment of weakness—didst thou revel in the vision of coronets and honor from man." And again: "This poor creature—pure from every suspicion of even a visionary self-interest, even as she was pure in senses more obvious—never once did this holy child, as regarded herself, relax from her belief in the darkness that was travelling to meet her." The charge which Andrew Lang makes against Anatole France, of employing sophistry and perverting history to make out a case against La Pucelle, is also made by De Quincey against M.

The Hub
CHAS. KEILUS & CO
EXCLUSIVE
HIGH GRADE CLOTHIERS

No Branch Stores—No Agents.

OUR NEW SPRING AND SUMMER COSTUMES AND OVER GARMENTS HAVE EXCLUSIVE PATTERNS AND EXCLUSIVE FABRICS, MADE BY EXCLUSIVE MAKERS, THOSE WHO HAVE MASTERED FINE POINTS OF CLOTHES ART. YOU'LL PERCEIVE AT A GLANCE "MERIT." YOU'LL APPRECIATE GOOD IDEA TO SEE "OURS" FIRST.

Get Acquainted The Hub Chas Keilus & Co. With This Label.
San Francisco.

The new chin and cuff collar overcoat is at present the foremost fashion. We've been having a wonderful sale of them. The production of good ready-made clothes was never accomplished by "Price Wreckers," not commonplace clothiers. They handle clothes that are intended for "Rural Districts." The kind of clothes that we have in this shop are metropolitan clothes, made for city folks. Moss-covered styles are not offered here.

JEWELERS' BUILDING
Post Street, Near Kearny, San Francisco.

Michelet and several instances are cited by the great stylist. He dwells particularly on M. Michelet's assertion that Joan recanted on the scaffold. The Frenchman's words are that if she did not utter the word "recant" with her lips she uttered it with her heart. "Now I affirm," says De Quicey, "that she did not" and he bases this affirmation on the authenticated story of her deportment on the scaffold. When the torch was applied a Dominican monk was standing by her side. "Wrapped up in his sublime office," says De Quincey, "he saw not the danger, but still persisted in his prayers. Even then when the last enemy was racing up the fiery steps to seize her, even at that moment did this noblest of girls think only for him, the one friend that would not forsake her, and not for herself, bidding him with her last breath to care for his own preservation, but to leave her to God. That girl, whose latest breath ascended in this sublime expression of self-oblivion, did not utter the word recant either with her lips or in her heart. No; she did not, though one should rise from the dead to swear it." No reference to this beautiful tribute of De Quincey's, which is too rarely read nowadays, would convey anything like an adequate notion of his confidence in the saintly character of the Maid of Domremy were it not to include his closing paragraph descriptive of the final judgment. Here we have as the prisoner at the bar the Bishop of Beauvais, the man who presided at Joan's trial. "My lord," De Quincey inquiries, "have you no counsel?" Counsel I have none; in heaven above, or on earth beneath, counsellor there is none now that would take a brief from me: all are silent." Is it indeed come to this? Alas the time is short, the tumult is wondrous, the crowd stretches away into infinity, but yet I will search in it for somebody to take your brief: I know of somebody that will be your counsel. Who is this that cometh from Domremy? Who is she in bloody coronation robes from Rheims? Who is she that cometh with blackened flesh from walking the furnaces of Rouen? This is she, the shepherd girl, counsellor that had none for herself, whom I choose, bishop, for yours. She it is, I engage, that shall take my lord's brief. She it is, bishop, that would plead for you: yes, bishop she—when heaven and earth are silent."

Guardianship Should Begin at Home

One of the curious results of the exposure of the condition of affairs amongst the pupils of the Berkeley High School is the open assertion that greater care is bestowed upon the bringing up of girls than of boys. As a matter of fact there is no tangible ground on which to base such a supposition, and as a matter of statistics the number of delinquent girls is actually on the increase. The boys happen to be occupying the center of the stage for the minute, but the chances are that next week we shall have revelations which involve their sisters. Indeed it can hardly be forgotten that within the last year or so the fashionable private boarding academies whose patronage was made up from the daughters of the plutocracy had just such another epidemic of unlawful appropriation as the Berkeley school has uncovered, but owing to the prominence socially of the culprits they were exempted from the brand of criminal intent and pitied and commiserated as kleptomaniacs, though they were shrewd enough to have sold or pawned their loot and made use of the proceeds. Every now and then the public stands aghast at the commission of some crime of which a girl of tender years is the victim, and in each instance the investigation reveals the fact that the mother apparently knew less of the child's associates and habits than any one else. Not only this, but invariably there comes forward a host of respectable witnesses without any other interest in the case save that of justice and public decency, who describe children and relate incidents that have come under their observation which can lead to no other conclusion than that the unfortunate one was but a type of a large class and that if crimes are not more frequent it is not for lack of opportunity. Judge Lindsay, who is recognized as an authority even by the club women, says that the problem of the deliquent girl is a far more serious one than that of the boy, for while the boy comes before the court because of some misdemeanor growing out of pure juvenile mischievousness without other impulse than a misguided idea of fun, the girl culprit is almost invariably involved in some shocking scandal, and the girls who come before him are not all from the submerged tenth. He finds that the mothers are blissfully ignorant of what is going on, and inclined to deny that such things can be possible until convinced by the words of the children themselves. However, it does not improve the situation to be told that boys are neglected because girls are given special care. Why should either be abandoned? No doubt it is a work of charity and mercy to join Ethical Effort clubs and devote time and attention to the "uplift of the masses," but to what end if that portion of the community assumed to be beyond the necessity of uplifting is really sinking into the bog? Would it not be more to the purpose for each mother to apply a broom to her own door-step? When Nehemiah undertook the rebuilding of the walls of Jerusalem he commanded every man to repair that portion which confronted his own dwelling. The only way to train up children in the way they should go is for each household to give first attention to its own.

A College Oracle

William Cleaver Wilkinson, professor of poetry and criticism in the University of Chicago, is the author of a series of essays which he has put between book covers under the title "Some New Literary Valuations." These essays deal with Mr. Howells, Matthew Arnold, Tennyson, E. C. Stedman, John Morley and Tolstoy. Doubtless the book will have many readers, and doubtless upon his readers Professor Wilkinson's views will make a deep impression; for of course they will be accepted as the views of a man who knows what he is talking about. The circumstance that Professor Wilkinson is the representative of a college faculty argues in this enlightened day and generation that he is qualified for authoritative utterance on any subject which he would venture to discuss. The yellow journal and the muck-raking magazine do not do all the profound thinking that is done for the people nowadays. To the faculties of our universities we are indebted for a large measure of the ideas that enter and lodge in the public mind, and it is but just to Professor Wilkinson to say that in his book we meet with ideas that are in every sense characteristic of the college output. We learn from this book that Mr. Howells relates that one day as he came in upon Lowell he recited some lines from Dante, and that Lowell expressed all the adoration and despair excited by the matchless music by the one word "damn." Professor Wilkinson soberly informs us that this word does not

NORTH GERMAN LLOYD S. S. CO.

SHORT ROUTE TO EUROPE

From New York Every Tuesday by the Four Luxurious Flyers: "Kronprinzessin Cecile," "Kaiser Wilhelm II," "Kronprinz Wilhelm," "Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse."

From New York Every Thursday by the Twin-Screw Passenger Steamers: "George Washington" (new), Largest German Steamer, 722½ feet long—27,000 Tons Register, "Prinz Friedrich Wilhelm" (new).

To Mediterranean Ports, etc., etc., Every Saturday: S. S. "Berlin" (new), 19,200 Tons Register, Largest Passenger Steamer to the Mediterranean, "Prinzess Irene," "Koeniz Albert," etc.

TRAVELERS' CHECKS

ROBERT CAPELLE — General Pacific Coast Agent

250 POWELL STREET — Near Geary St. and St. Francis Hotel

felicitously express adoration and despair. He adds that Mr. Howells in this instance "seems to have suffered his fine hero worshipping instinct to put in abeyance for the moment his faculty, generally so alert and infallible, for judging justly what on the whole was decorous and fit." Again Mr. Howells at the close of a magazine article wrote not long ago: "I did not well know how to begin these wandering lucubrations—I believe I never used the word before, but it is not too late—and I do not know better how to end them." This sort of thing shocks the eminent Chicago critic. He wants to know the meaning of this parenthetical confidence, this literary negligee. He inquires with something of solicitude: "Does his parenthesis of confidence to the public betray some undue momentary relaxation of that ever present watchfulness of self which at length comes to preside over everything, even the slightest, permitted to flow from the practical writer's pen?" Professor Wilkinson trusts it indicates no final impatience "of the care and self-denial on the author's part which must to the very end continue to go into the production of high literature." Obviously Professor Wilkinson is a critic of fine literary instinct and a scholar of great mental breadth and acute sensibilities. When a literary critic devotes his time to inquiries of such prodigious moment as those which we have indicated, his valuations of literary men must be of the highest importance. It should therefore be positively startling to the literary world to learn that Professor Wilkinson of Chicago does not approve of Matthew Arnold either as a critic or as a poet.

Perspective Impressions

The despatches tell us that King Alfonso is to take a trip in Wright's aeroplane—a Spanish fly, as it were.

The conviction of Boodler Coffey proves that it was not necessary to give all the grafters immunity.

The woman who is in the habit of telling her troubles makes more calls than she receives.

There will be much jubilation over the inauguration of Mr. Taft coincident as it will be with the send-off to Mr. Roosevelt.

The Examiner is in favor of direct legislation as well as the direct primary because this should be "a government by the people." Mr. Herast cannot be President, but with all his newspapers and a thorough democracy, he will be far more powerful than the President. What Mr. Hearst really wants is a government by the press, and a dandy government it will be.

The efficacy of auto-suggestion is shown by the case of the Hon. Francis J. Heney, who has come to believe that Haas was employed by conspirators to commit murder and suicide.

I am talking to the people of the State of California.—Assemblyman Drew on the floor of the House. On behalf of the people of the State Assemblyman Drew is respectfully requested to hold his tongue in its native depths.

"As a matter of fact," says the Chronicle, "there is not on either side any effort to get an impartial jury." Is it possible that we number among our officials, a District Attorney, so infamous that he would prosecute a man before a jury that wouldn't give the man a fair trial? Surely the League of Justice wouldn't tolerate such a state of affairs.

When a man is able to rejoice at the misery of an enemy he is probably worse off than the object of his exultation.

PLENTY OF KNOTS FOR THE NEW MAN

Indianapolis News.

THE YELLOW PERIL

New York World.

Love on the Bench

Showing How the Grand Passion May Manifest Itself in Unexpected Places and in Circumstances that Might be Considered Incongruous if it Were Not for the Fact that Cupid is no Stickler for the Conventions.

By Democritus

I am somewhat puzzled over the ethics of the Harris-Slipp "matrimonial venture" as the cub bavardes would call it. The question at issue before the bar of my opinion is, "May the court marry the plaintiff in a divorce case, having granted the divorce?" That is what Judge Thomas W. Harris of an Alameda County Superior Court did. Mrs. Charles E. Slipp had sued her husband for divorce on the grounds of intemperance. The case came before Judge Harris. The court fell in love with the fair matron and subsequently granted an interlocutory decree. A week after the final decree the Judge married the divorcee.

Love, they say, is a democrat. He knows no distinction of race, color or previous condition of servitude. He has frequently lured a princess from a palace to a hovel; he has mated May and December; he has lifted a belted earl from the slough of abject poverty to the pinnacle of opulence; he has given a bauble dukedom to an American heiress; he has laughed at the locksmith who would keep a Morosini from her father's coachman; he has wedded Hyperion to Theia and lighted the torch of Hymen for Vertumnus and Pomona. It was love that set aflame the topless towers of Ilium. It was love that inspired the Divine Comedy and the immortal sonnets of Shakespeare. It was love that lost the fight at Actium and gave the world to Caesar. It is love that makes the world go round. Without love a best seller would be as a baccalaureate discourse at Stanford University. Nothing is impossible with love. Therefore it is not surprising that the court should have loved the plaintiff in a divorce case. It is not amazement that perplexes me; it is the peril that environs the male defendant in a divorce case before a bachelor court.

What chance has a man defendant in a divorce case that is set on the calendar of an unmarried court, if the court becomes enamored of the defendant's wife? Surely this is collusion—collusion between the Judge of the court and the god of love. "Grant the divorce and marry the lady," whispers Cupid. And the court forthwith grants the divorce—and marries the lady. There is no defense against the pleading of the love god. The story of King Cophetua and the beggar maid is hackneyed fable. The tale of Abelard and Heloise is outworn tradition. The dramatic legend of Romeo and Juliet is threadbare with over use as a gorgeous pall for unhappy nuptial couches. Love is no respecter of persons, rank or condition. It comes like a thief in the night or it marches boldly to the assault. It comes openly in all its nakedness or it arrays itself in brocades and precious fabrics. It matters not to Love if he wears rags or fine linen; whether he jingles pence or guineas—once he shoots his dart the wound is fatal.

Of course in this instance it may be argued with cogent force that Mrs. Slipp would have procured her divorce in any court, without the assistance of the love imp. Mr. Slipp made no contest. But suppose he had opposed the complaint of his spouse? Could he have won against the heart to heart plea of Love? I doubt it. Even judges are human, and the universal human emotion is love. Therefore I say it is dangerous to try divorce cases before an unmarried court, and especially perilous to try them before a court that is a widower, as was this court. Widowers are more susceptible to feminine charms than are any other human beings. They have had joyous experience in the married state. They know the delights of connubial companioship. They are more easily moved to love than other men. They are more prone to love at sight than other men. An unmarried court or a court that is a widower should be sufficient cause upon which to base a petition for change of venue in any divorce case, and it should be granted upon proof of the allegation.

I think this case is unique. I have heard of lawyers marrying their divorced clients, but I have never read even in the most impossible fiction where the Judge came down from the bench to stand at the altar with the woman whom he had just divorced. It is a new note in realism for subsequent idealization in romantic fiction. There are vast possibilities in the "situation." Imagine the rivalry of two young men for the hand of a maiden—the one destined for a business life and the other bent upon a professional career. The business man wins because he is better able to support a wife. The professional man rises to the salary of a Superior Judge. The wife of the business man sues him for divorce. The case comes before the court wherein presides the rejected one. Now comes the story. The Judge still loves the woman. She has ceased to love the other man. The transfer of her affections is easy. She will love the Judge if the divorce is granted. On the other hand if she does not love the Judge he can win her anyway by threatening to deny her plea for the divorce. The story may be a story of a good judge or a wicked Judge. It may even be a story in which the Judge effects a reconciliation between the husband and wife although the court is madly in love with the plaintiff. This phase may develop either a purpose novel or a psychological study. It may also end abruptly at a point where the Judge is balancing between love of the plaintiff and his sense of judicial duty, thereby inducing an interminable controversy such as ensued upon the publication of Stockton's "Lady or the Tiger."

It is a very pretty romance as it stands and one that would work up into a beautiful idyl in the deft hands of a Mary Wilkins or an Edith Wharton—I am not sure that it could be properly written by a man author, although Whittier managed very well with his "Maud Muller" and the widower Judge that came a-wooing. Whittier, however, had the poetic sense to make his heroine a young unmarried woman. There is a subtler essence in a poem or a story based on the love of a judicial widower and one whom he is about to divorce from her husband. The relation of such a story would, I think, require the intuition of a woman writer; for, in its last analysis, the problem is in the heart of the woman who seeks the divorce knowing or suspecting that the court before whom she stands is in love with her and has the power to loose or bind. Then there is the possibility of a Judge who grants a divorce to himself—but that is another story; or, more accurately, a comic opera.

REMOVAL NOTICE

OUR OFFICE after December 21, 1908, will be at 311 to 317 Crocker Building, corner of Post and Market streets.

OUR WAREHOUSE will remain at the Southwest corner of Eddy and Hyde Streets, until April 18, 1909, on that date we shall remove to our old location, 147-151 Minna Street and 144-148 Natoma Street.

GLADDING, McBEAN & CO.

HOTEL VICTORIA

N. E. cor. Bush and Stockton

CENTRALLY LOCATED .·. A MODERN AND UP-TO-DATE FAMILY HOTEL

Sun in every room. Elaborate furnishings. Excellent cuisine.
Large lobby and reception room. Grill room. Dining room.

American and European Plan.

Singed Wings

(From the French of Jean Reibach)

In dreamy meditation Blanche de Treles looked out of the window of the hotel. The waters of the harbor gleamed before her eyes. Out of this harbor in a few hours would steam the vessel which was destined to bear her and Leon Varde to America.

Her thoughts carried her back to her youth and on through the brief period of her married life. Doubtless M. de Treles would miss her. He would probably suffer, but as he was an intellectual man he would understand. Nobody, she reflected, was to blame; it was simply life. Her husband would soon forget her, absorbed as he would be in his scientific studies.

She heard the voice of Leon Varde, who stood beside her. "Are you very sure," he asked, "very sure you do not regret?"

Blanche looked up at him, smiling divinely. "What could I possibly regret when you are with me?"

The iris of her eyes, of which the blue seemed to be dotted by little points of gold, expressed profound love. In a voice that indicated her certainty of the future she added: "Let us forget everything! Let us think of nothing now but our happiness. Instead of the few hours, surreptitiously enjoyed here and there, we shall always be together hereafter!"

"Ye-e-s, that is so," and Leon Varde nodded.

Blanche drew back a step. "What a queer way you say that!" and then looking at him closely, she inquired: "What is the matter with you, are you worried?"

"Worried? No! I am only anxious to get on board and have the anchor weighed. You see, M. de Treles—"

"Well?"

"Might have found out, might have discovered our flight and could overtake us."

"Oh, how is that possible? He doesn't know you—doesn't even know that you exist. He is perfectly certain that I am in Touraine with my sister, who is ill."

"Of course, of course," agreed Leon Varde. "I was only joking."

He then recollected that he had certain purchases to make before his departure, and went out. The young woman finished her packing. She darted lightly hither and thither about the room, like a butterfly flitting from flower to flower. Now and then she would sing, a little nervously, as if trying to cover up, to smother some persistent memory. But at last she was quite happy. Happiness was her right, and she took it, openly, in the face of everyone. Like those glorious lovers told about in poetry and legends, she had broken through the iron circle of suffering which her family and social conventions had riveted about her. She was going toward liberty, toward life.

A bell-boy knocked at the door and presented a card. The young woman took it, looked at the name and trembled. "The Commissary of Police!"

With a great effort, she controlled herself. "Tell him to come in," she said to the boy.

The officer entered. "It is Mme. de Treles whom I have the honor to address?" he said.

"Excuse me, you have made a mistake," replied Blanche in a tremulous voice. "I am Mme. Varde."

The officer smiled, shrugged his shoulders: "I regret, madame, to be compelled to inform you that your husband, M. de Treles, has lodged a complaint against you, and it will be impossible for you to leave the country according to your intention."

Astounded, the young woman stammered: "M. Varde will be in soon. He will know how to answer you better than I can."

"There is no possible answer, madame, under the circumstances. The intervention of M. Varde would only place him in a very unfortunate position. My duty is to ask you to return to Paris and to your husband at once. Let me add, madame, that the person whose duty it will be to care for you will show you the greatest courtesy and consideration, and no one can possibly suspect that you are accompanied."

Mme. de Treles looked up at commissary. "And if I refuse, sir?"

"If you refuse, madame—I say it with the greatest regret—I shall be compelled to take strong measures. But I am quite certain that you will not expose yourself to such a useless scandal."

Mme. de Treles was very much confused. She feared the return of her lover at any moment, an outbreak of despair. And then a great indignation against her husband arose within her; this man had caused her to be spied upon, followed, arrested! Did he fancy for a moment that he was going to take her by force, to hold her against her will?

This last thought decided Mme. de Treles. Very well, she would go. She would hurl in the face of this man all her hatred, all her contempt for him. After that she would find out whether he could hold her by force. There was an advantage in a frank explanation of this kind; she would hereafter have no more worry, no more pity.

"It is well, sir," she said. "I am ready to start."

The commissary bowed. "An express leaves in an hour, madame."

"I will take it, sir."

Feverishly Blanche awaited the return to Leon Varde. He had not come back when they returned to inform her that a carriage was at the door ready to take her to the station. The young woman hastily wrote a few lines and addressed them to her lover. She told him not to worry too much, that it was only a question of delay. He would have to leave on that boat and she would join him on the next steamer.

Sustained by the same feelings of anger and indignation, Mme. de Treles made the trip, and entered the door of her husband's library, where he was awaiting her.

"Here, I am, sir! Brought back by the police!"

And then she continued in a voice that trembled with indigation. She was neither guilty, nor a victim; she was a judge. It was not only herself that she was defending and avenging, but all women, all women who are oppressed, all those who have hearts and are capable of appreciating and knowing the grandeur, the beauty, the holiness of love.

Then, extending her arms, she cried out: "Yes, I love him! Do you understand me? Are you capable of understanding the word love? Nothing, no one shall ever separate us! That is what I wanted to tell you! That is what I came back for! And now hold me, keep me, if you dare!"

His elbows on the table, slowly stroking his beard with his right hand, M. de Treles listened to her patiently and seriously. When she had concluded he looked up at her and said very quietly:

"I will give you back your liberty as soon as this interview is terminated." Then he added, after a moment's thought: "And the interview will be very short. I have only one question to ask you. Has it not occurred to you to ask how I was so well informed, how I knew the name of your lover, your plan of flight, the day of departure?"

"A detective agency," exclaimed the young woman contemptuously.

"No," said M. de Treles, "a letter."

"A letter? From where? From whom?"

"Anonymous! Here it is."

He held out a sheet and Blanche glanced at it. Then

J. C. WILSON
BROKER
Private Wire Chicago and New York
Member New York Stock Exchange, Chicago Board of Trade and Stock and Bond Exchange, San Francisco
LOCAL AND EASTERN STOCKS AND BONDS
Main Office, Mills Bldg. Tel. Kearny 482.
Branch Office, Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles.

suddenly she became pale as death; her hands trembled.

"It is impossible!" she exclaimed. "It is a falsehood! It is a forgery!"

Very calmly M. de Treles uttered a name: "It is M. Leon Varde, is it not?"

Blanche threw up her hands and fell back upon a divan. At last she understood. She recalled the peculiar manner of her lover that morning, his words, and finally his absence. He had only feigned his absence. He had only feigned this departure in the hope that she would refuse to follow him at the last moment. Then when he became aware that she had the courage and the devotion to sacrifice everything for him, the miserable, cowardly cur had denounced her, had betrayed her to her husband!

Suffering, shame and humiliation overwhelmed her. "It is horrible! It is too much! Kill me, kill me!"

M. de Treles remained very calm; there was upon his face an expression of serenity touched with sadness—the expression of a man who knows life. He watched his wife sobbing among the cushions of the divan, biting the silk covers and moaning like an animal that knows it is to be led out to slaughter. She seemed to him some butterfly that had burnt its wings at the flame and fluttered helpless to the ground. He tore the letter into very small pieces and tossed them away. Then he said to her, very softly:

"Blanche! Remember, you have just returned from your sister. Take your place again at the head of my household."

Broken Love

(This is one of the poems of William Blake, the mystic poet-painter, in whom interest has once more been revived in England. Blake was one of the strangest of mortals, a product of the eighteenth century. A man of amazing genius and noble performances in two arts, the intrinsic greatness of his work which is still to the multitude unknown, is admitted by the very highest authorities. Wordsworth pronounced his poems the works "of great but undoubtedly insane genius," and the question whether he was a madman is still debated. Of the following poem Dante G. Rossetti said that it expressed more powerfully than ever had been expressed before "the agony and perversity of sundered affection." Rossetti's explanation of the poem is that the speaker "is one whose soul has been intensified by pain to be his only world, among the scenes, figures and events of which he moves as in a new state of being. The emotions have been quickened and isolated by conflicting torment, till each is a separate companion. There is his "spectre," the jealous pride which scents in the snow the footsteps of the beloved rejected woman, but is a wild beast to guard his way from reaching her; his "emanation" which silently weeps for him for has he not also sinned? So they wander together in a fathomless and boundless deep the morn full of tempests and the night full of tears. He can count separately how many of his soul's affections the knife she stabbed it with has slain, how many yet mourn over the tombs which he has built for these." Mr. Swinburne has attributed a still more mystical meaning to the poem which has proved susceptible of an infinite variety of interpretations. Perhaps there are readers of Town Talk who may find it an incentive to speculation.—Editor Town Talk)

My Spectre around me night and day
Like a wild beast guards my way
My Emanation far within
Weeps incessantly for my sin.

A fathomless and boundless deep,
There we wander, there we weep;
On the hungry craving wind
My Spectre follows thee behind.

He scents thy footsteps in the snow,
Wheresoever thou dost go;
Through the wintry hail and rain
When wilt thou return again?

Poor pale pitiable form
That I follow in a storm,
From sin I never shall be free
Till thou forgive and come to me.

A deep winter dark and cold
Within my heart thou dost unfold;
Iron tears and groans of lead
Thou bind'st around my aching head.

Dost thou not in pride and scorn
Fill with tempests all my morn,
And with jealousies and fears?—
And fill my pleasant nights with tears?

O'er my sins thou dost sit and moan:
Hast thou no sins of thine own?
O'er my sins thou dost sit and weep,
And lull thine own sins fast asleep.

Thy weeping thou shalt ne'er give o'er;
I sin against thee more and more,
And never will from sin be free
Till thou forgive and come to me.

What transgressions I commit
Are for thy transgressions fit,—
They thy harlots, thou their slave;
And my bed becomes their grave.

Seven of my sweet loves thy knife
Hath bereaved of their life:
Their marble tombs I built with tears
And with cold and shadowy fears.

Seven more loves weep night and day
Round the tombs where my loves lay,
And seven more loves attend at night
Around my couch with torches bright.

And seven more loves in my bed
Crown with vine my mournful head;
Pitying and forgiving all
Thy transgressions, great and small.

When wilt thou return, and view
My loves, and them in life renew?
When wilt thou return and live?
When wilt thou pity as I forgive?

Throughout all eternity
I forgive you, you forgive me,
As our dear Redeemer said:
"This the wine, and this the bread."

ROBERTSON'S
A BOOK STORE
1539 VAN NESS AVENUE
CARD PLATES ∴ MONOGRAMS
WEDDING INVITATIONS
A. M. ROBERTSON

BROKERS AND DEALERS
IN HIGH GRADE
INVESTMENT SECURITIES
SUTRO & COMPANY
412 MONTGOMERY ST., SAN FRANCISCO
Requests for Information Either by Personal Interview or Correspondence will be Gladly Received and Promptly Attended to.

The Spectator

Writing Up to the Gallery

Of all the drool that has dripped from the fountain pens of our local newspaper literati or thumped itself in staccato measure out of a mechanical typewriter, the dopiest dope is that which these "fine writers" have driveled over Margaret Illington because she and Mr. Frohman, her husband, have decided to part amicably and for the best of reasons, and eventually divorce themselves from their marital ties. Most of this stuff I imagine is the product of the women of the press—it is so full of prattle, babble, fluffy fluff, goo-goo gush and mushy inconsequence. Read (if you can control an insurgent stomach) this limit paragraph from the Call's star gusher: "Margaret Illington wishes to exchange the thunderous applause of thousands of jeweled hands, rising from the darkened pit of a theatre, for the faint little clap of two tiny palms." I'll bet a woman wrote that guff, because a woman, according to the scientific opinion of Professor Lombardo doesn't mind saying the thing that is impossible. "Wishes to exchange!" A connoisseur of bric-a-brac wishes to exchange one antique brass bowl, in good repair, for a porcelain teapot, preferably of Satsuma ware or Hwuy-tzin dynasty; address Curio, this office. "Thunderous applause!" Dear old friend of my better days—none knew thee but to love thee; none named thee but to praise, and every cub reporter in America has used thee as a standard stock phrase. "Thousands of jeweled hands!" Lord o' massy! Jeweled hands! Get out! The hands that evoke "thunderous applause" do not wear jewels. They wear knobs and callouses and the grime of perpetual toil. You can't applaud "thunderously" with "jeweled hands" encased in kid gloves. "Rising from the darkened pit of a theatre!" Go to! The "pit" doesn't applaud. The true appreciation of an actor's effort comes from the gallery. Besides, we don't call it a "pit" any more. It is the orchestra and the dress circle. But those terms would not suit a gusher of the press who is trying to write dithyrambs in prose. And now comes the "touch of pathos," the one touch of nature that makes the whole world kin. "For the faint little clap of two tiny palms!" Gee, but that's busted English! And what does the lady-like reporter mean? Does she want us to imagine a baby in its mother's arms poking its fist into her eye? If so, why didn't the motherly interviewer put it that way? But they are all about the same; only the Call's daisy is a little the daisiest of the bunch. As I glance over this ineffable rot I am more than ever convinced that it is the work of women, for in every line is betrayed that lack of the human sense of humor which the philosophers have averred is conspicuously noticeable in the written and oral expression of woman. And I yearn to read once more the virile, masculine descriptive pen strokes of Alice Rix—as I read this blithering drivel I am almost persuade to forgive the excessive masculinity and feminine sneers of Gertrude Atherton.

Mrs. Frohman's Naivette

Mrs. Frohman, according to the daily newspapers, has agreed with her husband to end their matrimonial compact. With the utmost amiability on both sides bandaged Justice is to be pressed into service for a ceremony supplementary to one which was performed a few years ago by a clergyman, when the lady who was then Miss Illington was ambitious of the honors that are to be won in the service of art. Presumably the handsome and talented actress did not develop a passion for the fireside and the comforts of home until after her marriage, for when she married Frohman he must have understood that she loved the stage and intended to be true to her Muse. In the circumstances Mrs. Frohman's present attitude, is, to say the least, somewhat naive. It bespeaks a simplicity with respect to the law which is absolutely refreshing. The lady discusses the situation as though she conceived that marriage contracts for a term, or at the will of the high contracting parties, were recognized by the laws of the country. She is going to obtain a divorce on the ground of incompatibility, but the code does not declare this to be a sufficient cause of action. Nay, the law, though it is most kindly disposed to persons whose affections are ephemeral, and though it provides many loop-holes of escape for the unwary who have rashly enmeshed themselves, yet it actually frowns on collusion in divorce proceedings.

Incompatibility is Insufficient

Of course I do not believe there is collusion between the Frohmans. That there should apparently be collusion between them is probably the fault of the newspapers by which Margaret Illington has been interviewed. And by the way it is unfortunate that the charming actress permitted herself to be interviewed, for she has been represented as saying things which must have originated in the minds of reporters, and as a consequence her domestic drama, as it apparently argues the unimportance of the obligations created by the marriage ceremony, is far from edifying. Notwithstanding the sentiments which purport to have been uttered in newspaper interviews I am inclined to the opinion that Mrs. Frohman has good and sufficient cause of complaint. I do not believe that she has decided to divorce her husband merely because he wishes her to be an actress and she wishes to abandon the stage. There must be something more than mere difference of sentiment or opinion to justify divorce proceedings. What it is in this case I do not pretend to know; nor do I care. Unless Mr. Frohman has refused to support his wife, or actually inflicted suffering on her by cruel and inhuman treatment, or broken his marriage vows in some way, there is no ground for divorce, and it would be collusion and worse for them to set up a fictitious ground in order to render each other eligible to a second mating. This is a matter which I conceive should be made clear in the interest of public morals.

The Cruelty of Him

If for the reason stated the Frohmans are to be divorced in a court in which the law is respected it must be made to appear that the trust magnate actually forced his wife to act. It will not be necessary to prove that he is a man of the Bill Sykes type, but it will be necessary to prove something more than incompatibility of temperament. I am inclined to the opinion that Dan Froh-

CENTRAL TRUST COMPANY
OF CALIFORNIA
Has removed to its new offices Corner Market, Sutter and Sansome Streets
A General Banking Business Transacted
CHAS. F. LEEGE, President B. G. TOGNAZZI, Manager

IDEAL FARMS
"CERTIFIED MILK"
The most perfect product of the modern dairy
Certified to by the Medical Commission of the San Francisco County Medical Society
DISTRIBUTED BY
GUADALOUPE DAIRY CO. Phone Market 2590
STANDARD MILK CO. Phone Market 226

man has been guilty of monstrous cruelty. To this opinion I have come from reading between the lines. The actress tells us that she hated the stage; that she "rebelled," "collapsed" and "fainted" but without any perceptible effect on her husband actuated as he was by an unquenchable pride in her career. From this I infer that it is on the ground of realistic cruelty and not of incompatibility that Margaret Illington intends to sue for a divorce. Doubtless she wants "kiddies" as she is said to have said to an Examiner reporter, and doubtless she longs to perfect herself in the art of darning socks as the

MARGARET ILLINGTON.

The noted actress who is eager to divorce her husband and her art and Possess "Kiddies" and Darnable Socks.

veracious Call reporter tells us, and necessarily being imbued with these noble aspirations, she looks forward to the annexation of a new husband, one who will indulge her passion for "warm human ties." My sympathy goes out to Miss Illington, for apparently she has suffered much, as the victim of an abnormal husband who would rather see his wife famous as an actress than contented as a mother. However, it is but just to Mr. Frohban to report that in local theatrical circles he is not regarded as a monster of cruelty. His acquaintances picture him as a most magnanimous and indulgent husband, and they argue that his present amiable attitude vindicates his character. They are of the opinion that Margaret Illington must hitherto have expressed her aversion for the stage in a manner so imperfect that her husband misapprehended her feelings; either that or she let concealment, like a worm i' the bud feed on her damask cheek while she pined in thought like Patience on a monument smiling at grief.

Milo

Do you know what Quality means in a Turkish Cigarette? If not get a box of "MILO." Then, any other cigarette, and try same, side by side. You'll note the delicate, aromatic mildness of the "MILO." Mildness (yet with the richness in flavor) is what costs in Turkish Tobacco, and its just this that makes the Perfect Cigarette. You'll find it in No Other.

This perfection is obtained only by owning our own plantation in Turkey—the careful watchfulness from the seeding to the finished article.

Write to the Surbrug Company for samples and prices.

THE SURBRUG COMPANY, New York City

The Making of Her Name

The reporters have bewildered me somewhat by telling me in one line that Margaret Illington said she married Frohman because she loved him, and later on that she said in explanation of the rupture between them: "And then Mr. Frohman's much older than I am—thirty years older." The fact is that the present discrepancy in the ages of the Frohmans is not any greater than it was when they were married. Of course a woman ceases to grow older after she reaches a certain age, but Margaret Illington has not yet reached that certain age. The dailies say she is only twenty-seven and she surely doesn't look a day older, but she may seem older to playgoers because they may recall that she was playing the stellar role in Notre Dame at Daly's as early as 1902. But she is a very talented woman and she made rapid progress in her profession. It was at Daly's that she attracted Mr. Frohman's attention. And by the way it was Frohman who, according to the press agents, provided her with a stage name. Her real name is Maude Site. She came from Bloomington, Illinois, and it was out of these two names that Dan Frohman fashioned the name which he afterwards put into electric lights on Broadway.

The Man She Likes

Considerable interest attaches to the Frohman case in this city because of the connection therewith of that hustling young real estate speculator, Mr. E. J. Bowes, who has had something of a meteoric career. A few years before the fire he was employed by Shainwald, Buckbee & Co. He left that firm to engage in business on his own account, and his efforts were attended with brilliant success. He proved himself something of a wizard in the handling of real estate deals and other business ventures, and at the time of the fire he was coming to the front in financial circles with a rush. The fire played havoc with his affairs, but before it was extinguished he vindicated his foresight by getting hold of some profitable leases. As soon as the financial depression came on he went to Tacoma and now it is said that he is rated as a millionaire. Bowes is a man of fine instincts and a good deal of stability of character, and though very fond of artistic talent, as evidenced from the fact that he has always spent a great deal of his time in the society of stage favorites, he is not the man to be dazzled by the glitter of fame. Yet there may be foundation for the rumor that he is intent on marrying Margaret Illington, who, according to her own testimony is temperamentally more suited to a domestic than to a public career. This testimony is not hard to believe, though the reporters apparently think it incredible being unmindful of the fact that the world is full of wives who were glad to abandon the stage. Have we not the conspicuous cases of Mary Anderson, Julia Arthur and Edith Kingdon to remind us that even the most successful actresses were glad to curb their artistic temperament?

"I have just read a thrilling tale of rescuing a child in the Klondike from death by freezing."

"That is certainly a strange way of rescuing it."

Seattle's Newest and Most Modern Hotel

"Twelve Stories of Solid Comfort"

Building, concrete, steel and marble.

Located, most fashionable shopping district.

210 rooms, 135 baths.

Library and bound magazines in reading rooms for guests.

Most refined hostelry in Seattle.

Absolutely fireproof.

English Grill.

Rates, $1.00 up

HOTEL SAVOY SEATTLE

Did Wigmore Read It?

Professor Wigmore is not without friends in San Francisco, but I doubt that he will appreciate their amiable offices in his behalf. Professor Wigmore, it may be remembered, is the erudite person who recently overruled our Supreme Court in the Schmitz case much to the delight of those virtuous civic patriots who have proved how worthy they are of public confidence by their malignant misrepresentation of the members of that tribunal. Professor Wigmore's friends were evidently amazed at him for aiding and abetting the conspirators; for realizing as they do that he grievously blundered they now attempt to palliate his conduct by suggesting that he was misled. They are of the opinion that he never read the opinion of our Supreme Court. Their theory is that he was given a false synopsis of it and that he was the victim of a mean deception. This theory is quite plausible; at least it is fairly certain that Professor Wigmore never read the opinion from which he dissented. But if this be the fact to what extent does it exculpate Wigmore? If he was deceived then he practiced deception himself, for as a lawyer he must be presumed to have read a decision which he analyzed. We can only be certain, however, of one thing, and that is that Wigmore bases his whole argument on an error.

A Startling Misconception

In his analysis of the decision Professor Wigmore says: "The indictment alleges that the threats were made to use influence or power over the commissioners, and that their purpose was to obtain money by means of (i. e., through fear of) such threats." Now the fact is that the indictment did not allege that the threats were made to use influence or power over the commissioners. And likewise it is a fact that singularly enough the court held the indictment bad for no other reason than that it failed to make such an allegation. Now this of course is a most remarkable misconception, if that is what Professor Wigmore's friends wish to have it designated by way of euphemism. It is so remarkable as to be paradoxical and incredible. Here we have a college professor, one of the faculty of an institution consecrated to the moral as well as the intellectual training of youth, clearly and beyond question arguing from a premiss grounded in prevarication and for the purpose of injuring the reputation of men engaged in the administration of justice.

The Language of the Court

So that there shall be no shadow of doubt on a matter affecting the reputation of a college professor let us consult the opinion of the court and ascertain whether the indictment, as Professor Wigmore says, "alleged that the threats were made to use influence or power over the commissioners." This is the language of the court: "It is not stated how the defendant proposed to do this; whether by fair persuasion and lawful influence over the commissioners, or by duress, menace, fraud or undue influence exercised upon them." After showing that undue influence constituted unlawful means, the court said: "Nor can it be inferred or presumed, when it is not so charged that the defendant threatened to prevent the issuance of the license by unlawful means and not solely by lawful and innocent persuasion and argument." The fact from which there is no escape is that the indictment neither implicity nor explicity charges, as Professor Wigmore says, that there was any threat to use influence over the commissioners, either by the legitimate influence of fair argument or the undue influence of an intimation that their places would be vacant if the wishes of the defendants were not carried out or any sort of unlawful means whatever. And the fact is that the question of taking of judicial notice of who was the mayor is one of minor importance. If the indictment had alleged that Schmitz was mayor it would not be good unless it had further stated that he threatened to use his official influence to prevent the issuance of the license. Now it is quite likely as suggested by Professor Wigmore's friends that the learned gentleman never read the opinion of the court. If, however, he is not the victim of a cruel deception he is something else which I am reluctant to describe.

Husband—If you hadn't taken so much time we shouldn't have missed the train.

Wife—And if you hadn't made me run we wouldn't have to wait so long for the next train.

Preserving an Unprofitable Timber Ranch

Much glory is pre-empted by the California Club of this city for its success in securing congressional sanction for the purchase and reservation by the Federal Government of the Big Tree groves of Calaveras and Tuolumne. I don't think much of their "success." The acquisition is good enough as a picturesque addition to our national scenery, but as a matter of fact that is all it is good for. The trees have no commercial value whatever and the owner would lose money in the attempt to make lumber of them and put them on the market. The trees are so old that they are utterly worthless; the hearts of them are rotten to the core; the timber is pulpy, shredded and frazzled; and at this time they are inaccessible to railroad communication with any lumber yard. It is very probable that the shrewd speculator who got the option on the groves did so with the definite purpose of inciting this sentimental fervor that has achieved such successful results in Congress. Now he will get his

J. M. Jacobi & Co.
S. W. Cor. Montgomery & Sutter Sts
Perfect Clothes for Men
Spring Opening, February 15th

California Limited
The only exclusively first-class train to the East via any line.
Dining-car service under Fred Harvey management—that's the best on earth.
On your way East you can stop and visit
YOSEMITE VALLEY
AND
GRAND CANYON
No other line puts you in reach of both of these places. Our folders tell.
F. W. Prince, C. T. A.
673 Market St.
Santa Fe

price for his holdings. Perhaps if the Government did not take the trees off his hands he would have abandoned his option. The trees would have remained undisturbed for another millenium, or rotted slowly to their roots and crashed their huge length along the sward. "A few more victories like this one and I am undone," said a famous commander; a few more "successes" like the one that has been achieved by the California Club and Uncle Sam's treasury will go broke.

Newspaper Heroes

Nothing has so much pleased me of late as the knowledge that Mr. Dooley and myself agree on the status of newspaper heroes. In discourse with his friend Hennessy on the heroes of the steamship Republic Mr. Dooley gives all the credit due the heroic Jack Binns the wireless operator and then goes on to say "th' captain iv th' ship was a hero, too. He acted like th' captain iv th' ship. Th' cabin passengers were heroes; they behaved in all respects like cabin passengers. All honor, says I, to th' brave cabin passengers that gathered in their pyjamas on th' deck iv th' Republic an' didn't let on whether they were wondhrin' whether women hasn't advanced enough to take a chance gettin' into th' boats. Heroes all, says I." Of course they were heroes—and heroines. They were attending strictly to their business of being passengers on a sinking ship. It is quite true that they had nothing else to do at the time and couldn't have done anything else if they had wanted to; but this fortuitous emergency did not militate against their heroism while the emergency was upon them. The difference between the heroism of the passengers and that of the wireless operator or the captain of the ship was in degree—the operator and the captain were more conspicuous, that was all. The heroism of the passengers was collective; the heroism of the captain and the operator was distinctive. The spotlight is for the individual, not for the crowd. I have always contended that no man is a hero who performs his duty, or executes any difficult or dangerous task for which he is paid. The fireman that rushes into a burning building and drags out one of the inmates smothered by the smoke would be dismissed from the department for neglect of duty if it could be shown that he knew the person was in the burning building and refrained from an attempt at rescue. It is the duty of firemen to rescue persons from burning buildings. That is what they are paid to do. The captain of a ship is paid to navigate his ship and to use every effort to bring it safely to port. It is the duty of a wireless operator to send wireless messages. And while it was not, literally, the duty of the passengers to keep themselves from panic; still, it was the best thing they could do, and it is the veriest nonsense of newspaper panegyric to speak of them as heroes. A hero is one who performs a service unasked and entirely aside from any duty he may have in the premises. A hero risks his life, for example, in the effort to accomplish something that nobody else will undertake. Heroes are not the creatures of opportunity only; they must be the only persons who would seize the opportunity. If anybody would do the same thing in the same circumstance the act of the person that happens to do that thing is not heroic. I have been trying for many years to teach my newspaper contemporaries this plain, pertinent, self-evident truth; but they continue to call anything a hero that saves a life at the risk of its own. I have even read in these newspapers of Newfoundland dogs that were "heroes" because they answered the call of their instinct and leaped overboard to drag a drowning child out of the water. I think, however, that these newspaper rhaspodists draw the line at lifesaving; I don't think I have ever read of a dog hero that saved the life of a tom cat.

"So you want to break our engagement?"

"Oh, no; just lay it on the table for a few days; my husband is coming to spend Sunday."

The Wizard of the Stage

On his return to his old home after many years absence and after many notable triumphs "Dave" Belasco finds that he is a prophet not without honor in the city that knew him as a schoolboy. The great wizard of the stage has been made much of since his return but not half enough. I have heard of no public reception in his honor. Nothing has been done to celebrate the achievements of this distinguished Californian whose name is a household word throughout the length and breadth of the land and who is admired abroad for his services to theatrical art. There are some cities, which, if they could boast of a Belasco would give substantial testimony of their appreciation in the manner in which we applaud the most successful captains of industry. Dave Belasco is the most successful playwright in America. His plays do not evoke the commendation of the highbrows of literature, but they are literature nevertheless in the sense that they are the effective expressions of a form of the literary art. Belasco is above all things a stage manager and as such he is an artist of the very highest character endowed with the faculty of stirring our emotions through the subtle combination of an infinity of detail, not only of scenic contrivance but of episode and sentiment. Belasco, more than any living playwright, appeals to the sense of sight. He reaches our emotions through the eye more effectively than

Largest Exclusive Office Furniture House on the Pacific Coast.

EVERY ARTICLE OF FURNITURE REQUIRED IN AN OFFICE

Exclusive representatives of the most important lines manufactured.

RUCKER-FULLER Desk Co.

737-741 MISSION ST.

TAFT & PENNOYER

New Shipment of French Muslin Underwear

Corset Covers from $1.50 up to $9.00.
Gowns from $2.00, $2.25, $2.50 up.
Chemise from $1.00, $1.25, $1.50 upward.
Skirts from $3.75. $4.00 and up,
Drawers from $1,00 and $1.50 upward.
Combination Garments in many different styles and varied prices.

DOMESTIC MUSLIN UNDERWEAR.

Corset Covers, lace and emb. trimmed from 25c. up.
Chemise, plain lace and emb. trimmed from 75 c. up.
Drawers, plain hem from 50 CENTS UP.
Emb. and lace trimmed from 75 CENTS UP.
Gowns, high and low neck, long and short sleeve from $1.00 up.
Skirts, plain hem, from $1.35 up.
Emb. and lace trimmed from $1.75 up.
Combination Corset Cover and Short Skirt from $2.25 up.
Three-piece Combination Garments from $2.25 up.

CLAY STREET, 14th to 15th
OAKLAND

through the ear. This faculty he developed early in life. Years ago when he was stage manager at the old Baldwin Theatre he wrote a play in collaboration with Peter Robertson who was then dramatic critic of the Chronicle. It was called "The Curse of Cain." For realism it was in a class by itself. In the first act there was a farmyard scene full of life—the life of the farm. The stage was full of live-stock and the animals diverted attention from the plot. The audience followed the sheep instead of the story. The cows would not take their cues and the ducks made more noise than the mummers. This play is the only failure charged against Belasco.

"Mrs. Nagger is a most inconsistent woman."
"Is that so."
"Yes, she had the words 'Rest in Peace' carved on her husband's tombstone and yet she visits the grave every day."

A Grotesque Allegory

The Chief Justice of the Republic of the Malevolent Island, who had achieved infamous distinction in the service of his constituents, while engaged in impaneling a jury one day, was addressed by the Prisoner at the Bar.

"I have decided," said the Prisoner at the Bar, "to waive a jury trial."

The Chief Justice smiled like a gargoyle thus affecting a resemblance to the revered President of his country.

"Then," he said, "you have absolute confidence in the justice and impartiality of the court?"

"Not exactly," said the Prisoner at the Bar. "It occurs to me that with your assistance the prosecuting attorney is packing the jury. You appear to be saving him all his peremptory challenges and exhausting mine. Now I feel that it is bad enough to be convicted of a crime of which I am innocent, but a damned site worse to have it made appear that I was honestly convicted."

"I am sorry," said the Chief Justice, "that you have taken this view of the matter. In this tribunal of injustice no man is permitted to waive any of the sacred rights guaranteed by the Constitution."

Just at this moment a juror who was unknown to the prosecuting attorney and therefore persona non grata but who could not be disqualified because it happened that he had never heard of the case and had no opinion on any subject, uttered a feeble cough. The Chief Justice looked at him in alarm and ordered him out of the box saying, "I believe he has incipient consumption."

Thereupon the prosecuting attorney wreathed his face in smiles, and the Chief Justice resumed his conscience.

An American King

When James Oliver Curwood wrote his romance of the Mormon colony which was once established on Beaver Island in Lake Michigan he had no idea of doing more than furnishing a bit of interesting light reading. It appears, however, that so few had ever heard of King Strang's existence, and so little had survived in tradition and household tale that the whole story was almost a lost page of history. And now two different publishing houses have entered into negotiations with the author with a view to having him write a purely historical narrative. Strang controlled the political situation in Northern Michigan, and in addition to his elevation to the offices of "king, priest and prophet" of his own people, he was elected, through their suffrages to membership in the State legislature. Once each year he was crowned with a crown of solid gold and received the homage of his followers in formal fashion, high holiday being kept with savage pomp. Mr. Curwood says that if he had followed accurately and made use of all the material he unearthed while writing "The Courage of Captain Plum," his romance would have rivalled "The

THE PERFECTION OF WHISKEY QUALITY IS ALWAYS FOUND IN BALTIMORE

HUNTER

RYE

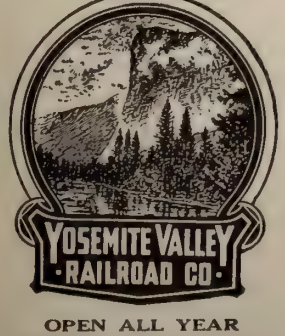
THE AMERICAN GENTLEMAN'S WHISKEY

GUARANTEED UNDER THE NATIONAL PURE FOOD LAW

HENRY CAMPE & CO., INC.,
Distributors for California and Nevada
San Francisco, Cal.

Luscious Old Red Wine

LA QUESTA



AGED IN THE WOOD AND MELLOWED IN THE BOTTLE

Pronounced by experts the best wine made in California

FOR SALE BY

L. D. McLEAN CO. McCAW BROS.
L. N. WALTER, Cor. Devisadero and California
JULIUS BERENDSEN, 762 Devisadero Street

Served at The St. Francis, The Fairmont, Hotel Rafael, Peninsula Hotel, Jules, Chantilly, Berges & Frank's Old Poodle Dog, Thompson's, New Frank's, Union League Club and Cosmos Club.

OPEN ALL YEAR
WINTER AND SUMMER

YOSEMITE VALLEY

NOW REACHED BY RAIL

Why not see Yosemite this Winter. It is a magnificent sight. First class hotel service at the Park Line and in the Valley. A delightful place to spend a few days or weeks. People returning pronounce it beyond description. For further particulars see agent of Southern Pacific or Santa Fe, or address O. W. LEHMER, Traffic Manager, Y. V. R. R., Merced, Cal.

Prisoner of Zenda" and all its innumerable followers cast in purely imaginary surroundings. Almost the only reference that has been made to the Strang stronghold within the memory of the present generation, until Mr. Curwood took it up, was a brief article entitled "An American King," published in Harper's Monthly all of a score of years ago.

"Old Parvenu is a wonder."

"What has he been doing?"

"He boasted at the club the other day that he uses only hand-sawed wood in his fire-places."

A Famous Author in Hard Luck

I have it upon the very good authority of Lloyd Osbourne, delivered under oath in a court of justice, that the lot of a "successful author" is not entirely a happy one maritally or financially. He says that he cannot pay his divorced wife $300 a month for her separate maintenance because he hasn't got it and hasn't had anything like it for a year, except as he might receive it in loans from his mother, who, of course, could not be expected to pay his alimony bills. Besides, adds Mr. Osbourne, the lady who was his wife is in receipt of a much larger income at the present time than he can squeeze out of his wrist labor for the literary market. Thus are our fondest delusions consigned to the limbo of vain things at the behest of stern reality. Lloyd Osborne may be a "successful author" but there's nothing in it. This proves that where there is so much genius there is not always much reward. An author's name may appear frequently in all the leading magazines and periodicals, but this constant apparition does not establish a logical sequence of substance for the shadow. It is not every "successful author" that can command the princely price of a dollar a word for the product of his pen. It is sometimes necessary that the author should first distinguish himself in some vocation other than that of authorship before publishers will pay more than the Grub street rate of a penny a line—and Author Osbourne says he has not been getting even that meager stipend during the year past. Author Roosevelt is to receive a dollar a word, but Author Roosevelt is something more than a mere author; he is the best advertised President that has ever occupied the White House. It is not for what Author Roosevelt writes that the publishers pay him a dollar a line; it is for what he has been. Author Kipling gets 25 cents a word for his stuff and Author Jack London says he gets 15 cents a word for some of his stuff; but these authors have also achieved notoriety from other sources than that of authorship. Author Kipling has been a newspaperman and Author London has been a sailor, a hobo and an anarchist. Author Osbourne has been only the stepson of Robert Louis Stevenson. He shines by a reflected glory. He must live it down. He must show the hard-headed, dollar-chasing publishers that he can be as popular as his stepfather, before they will pay him as much as they paid the author of "Kidnapped." It will not be necessary to show that he can write as well as Stevenson wrote.

"Did you deliver my message, Rosalie?

"Yes, Madame, I told Madame that you were ill and that as soon as you recovered you would call on her, and she said she was very sorry to hear it."

Keats's Great Grand-Nephew

John Gilmer Speed, whose death occurred last week was a great grand-nephew of the poet Keats whose brother George Keats emigrated to America and settled in Kentucky. Mr. Speed had in his possession letters and other original documents pertaining to his illustrious relative which it has always been assumed he would bequeath to the British Museum. He was interested in agriculture and horse breeding as well as in literature, and was at one time or another connected editorially with most of the important Eastern periodicals. He was the author of a number of books, differing as widely in character as "The Life, Letters and Poems of John Keats" and "The Horse in America," but he attracted more general attention to himself by one brief paper published many years ago in the Forum than by any thing else before or since. It was entitled "The Confessions of a Literary Hack" and was printed anonymously. Mr. Speed meant to draw attention to the piteous plight of the poor tenant of Grub street whose unrequited labors scarcely furnished a hand-to-mouth existence. The re-

MEET REX

and his throng of

MARDI GRAS

Merrymakers at New Orleans

Krewe of Nereus..Jan. 25	Knights of Momus Feb. 18
Falstaffians .....Feb. 5	Krewe of Proteus.Feb. 22
Elves of Oberon..Feb. 11	Rex' Arrival .....Feb. 23

Your Direct Way from San Francisco via Los Angeles and El Paso—along Pacific Shores—by the Old Missions—Southern California Orange Groves—The Salton Sea—Palisades of the Rio Grande—Rice and Cotton Fields of the South.

Drawing-room Sleepers; Berths; Sections; Drawing Rooms. Dining Service unequaled. Observation Car; Open-Air Rotunda; Ladies' Parlor; Gentlemen's Cafe; Library.

Personally Conducted Tourist Excursion Parties to Chicago, St. Louis, Cincinnati, New Orleans and Washington.

Write for "Wayside Notes Along the Sunset Route"—Tells in detail of the attractions of the Southern Route.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC

TICKET OFFICES

884 Market St. 14 Powell St. Market-St. Ferry Depot
Third and Townsend Sts. 13th and Franklin Sts., Oakland

SMITH BROS. STATIONERS OAKLAND

HIGH ART ENGRAVING, Wedding Invitations, Announcements, Calling Cards, Place Cards, etc.

SOCIAL STATIONERY, the newest creations, the latest forms, the finest grades.

ARTISTIC PICTURE FRAMING, exclusive art patterns, new finishes, shadings to match the fittings of your room—the best work money can buy.

462-464 THIRTEENTH STREET, Between Broadway and Washington

sult was just the opposite for the sum which he set forth as all too inadequate but the best he could secure was so much beyond the wildest dream of the average penny-a-liner that the common verdict was, "What is he grumbling about? If he thinks that's hard luck, let him have a try at something else." Literary men in both England and America took the subject up and disputed both as to the truth of the "Confessions" and the identity of the writer though Mr. Speed was under suspicion from the first. It was not until several years later that he acknowledged the authorship.

He—You are just as sweet as you can be.
She—I don't think that much of a compliment. You see, it all depends upon how sweet you suppose I am capable of being.

False Reports That Damage the State

There seems to be a mistaken impression that the Hotel Potter in Santa Barbara was badly damaged by the recent storm, but the fact is that the property has not suffered to the extent of five cents' worth. The high seas, some three weeks ago, washed away the sand about

AN AMERICAN "DREADNOUGHT."

This is the Battleship Delaware, which was launched February 6th. It will carry ten 12-inch guns and displace 20,000 tons.

the United States Signal Station, fully half a mile from the hotel, but that is something to be taken as a matter of course during winter and right on the sea coast. The time to express wonder would be when the miracle occurred and during an unprecedentedly heavy winter there were no washouts. There has not been over $5000 worth of damage done in Santa Barbara County since the rains set in, and most of that has been to mountain roads and bridges in remote sections never reached by tourists and travelers for pleasure. The Southern Pacific Coast line has suffered somewhat and will find it necessary to make large expenditures for rebuilding at certain points, but this would have had to be done sooner or later, and the solid stone and concrete work will be rather in the nature of a permanent investment since, once made, the repairs will last for all time. Nothing is gained by sending out these exaggerated and false reports concerning trivial mishaps. It takes very little to divert the stream of tourist travel. Eastern people, especially, do not realize the magnificent distances embraced within the State lines of California, and those short-sighted folk who are attempting to gain advantages for their own section by covertly insinuating the undesirableness of some other are apt to awake when it is too late, to the consciousness that the whole of Southern California has been victimized by their selfish misrepresentations. There is not the remotest danger, as far as human foresight can perceive, that the coast of Santa Barbara County, any more than the city of Los Angeles or the topmost peaks of the high Sierras is in danger of sinking into the sea.

There's many a man who, forsooth,
Will ne'er tell a wicked untrooth
Until in old age
With countenance sage
He talks of the deeds of his yooth.

Rudolph Barth, watchmaker and jeweler, now permanently located at 36 Kearny street.

Report of the Condition of

The

London Paris National Bank

Of San Francisco

At the Close of Business, Feb. 5, 1909

RESOURCES

Loans and Discounts	$7,184,886.08
U. S. Bonds	1,370,000.00
Premium on U. S. Bonds	21,961.25
Other Bonds	569,229.75
Customers' Liability on Letters of Credit	409,760.52
Cash and Sight Exchange	4,589,638.44
	$14,145,476.04

LIABILITIES

Capital Stock	$2,500,000.00
Surplus and Undivided Profits	852,056.20
Circulation	1,250,000.00
Letters of Credit, Domestic and Foreign	402,671.03
Deposits	9,140,748.81
	$14,145,476.04

Officers—Sig. Greenebaum, President, H. Fleishhacker, Vice-President and Manager, Alden Anderson, Vice-President, R. Altschul, Cashier, C. F. Hunt, Assistant Cashier, A. Hochstein, Assistant Cashier.

THROUGH TROPIC CLIMES

Atlantic Steamship Lines

New Orleans--New York Service

In connection with the Sunset Route between San Francisco, Los Angeles and New Orleans

Largest American coastwise steamers—elaborately furnished staterooms—electric lighted throughout. Perfect dining service.

First cabin, $35.00; round trip, $60.00
Second cabin, $27.50.
Includes berths and meals en route.

SEE AGENTS

SOUTHERN PACIFIC

TRUNKS AND SUIT CASES

KOESEL'S TRUNK FACTORY

41 ELLIS STREET, NEAR MARKET

GENERAL REPAIRING Phone Douglas 445

The Financial Outlook

By R. E. Mulcahy

As predicted in last week's letter, Wall Street has indicated Taft's welcome by starting a bull movement in securities. The impulse to this action came through the New York State Commission which granted authority to the Erie Ry. to issue 30,000,000 new bonds for the purpose of retiring maturing bonds and for general betterment of the property. The old saying used to be, "As goes Erie so goes the rest of the market," this does not hold good in these days of progress. Erie has been relegated to the rear. The action of the committee has relieved the market of a heavy load and will result in making Erie an attractive property in the course of a few years. Nothing startling in the way of history making has happened during the week. Though Wall Street reported Mr. Harriman a very sick man, he seemed well enough though to go on a fishing trip. Wall Street has a faculty of making a man sick or dead, and in the next breath causing the same person to be a prominent factor one way or the other marketwise. When Mr. Harriman started to the coast some months ago the group of stocks identified with his name began to soar and didn't stop until he again reached New York. When he started for Mexico recently it was thought he had staked down his securities and that no material advance or decline would take place during his absence. Hardly had he reached Waco, Texas, when Union Pacific and Southern Pacific began to show unrest as also did the shorts in these securities; before the anxiety of shorts could be satisfied Union Pacific had advanced from 176 to 181¼ and Southern Pacific from 116¾ to 120. It appears that when Harriman goes fishing he leaves a hook in Wall Street. Whatever he does to those who sell his securities short is one thing, but the public must take off their hats to him. He has shown he can develop more territory in five years than was ever developed by one man in this country. Some of his methods may be questioned by the "goodies," but it was a Godsend to the Pacific Coast when Harriman became dictator of the now known Harriman properties. Indications are plain to be seen that transcontinental roads with terminals at Seattle and Portland are planning to reach San Francisco. It means a great deal toward the development of new territory that of necessity will be tributary to San Francisco. The completion of the Panama Canal will be upon us before we realize it. Many argue that its completion will injure the properties of rail lines, all of which is most ridiculous. The rail lines will not only flourish, but will show greater expansion after the canal is in operation than before. It will be the signal of the greatest development period the Western country has ever known.

The Japanese school question has passed into the hereafter. Its effect was of some moment to the interest of Wall Street, where the financial pulse is always in evidence. Not alone the interests of this country but those of every country on earth where values are a consideration are similarly susceptible. Foreigners are the first to show alarm; their securities are cabled demanding sale at the market upon the first signs of trouble. Our own financiers are not slow in taking the cue and the result generally means a bad slump such as the security market would have experienced had the Jap measure passed at Sacramento. We are just recovering from one of the most severe financial panics the country has ever had to contend with. It is a time when the smallest scare might cause a panic. Capitalists have not as yet cleared their systems of the fright caused by the shrinkage in values during 1907 and 1908. Had not the resources of the country been as great as they were conditions would not have recovered so quickly. All conditions at the present time forecast better times and increasing values. The commercial interests of this country demand a greater field and this must be provided by the government at Washington. Japan and China want American cotton. It is a staple which the United States holds a monopoly over. These two countries as they advance in civilization and development will require more of our products. Our modern machinery will grow in demand. The requirements of Japan and China upon America for her products must and will show a large increase every year. All these conditions mean traffic for our railways. How insignificant is the present wealth of the cuontry when compared to what it shall be ten years hence.

The St. Raphael, 60 Seventh St., opp. main postoffice, San Francisco; apartments $20, single rooms $10, month.

WE HAVE MOVED OUR SAN FRANCISCO OFFICE TO THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK BUILDING, POST AND MONTGOMERY STREETS, AND HAVE OPENED AN OFFICE IN LOS ANGELES AT FIFTH AND SPRING STREETS IN THE SECURITY BUILDING.

E. H. ROLLINS & SONS

Members of the San Francisco Stock and Bond Exchange

BOSTON
CHICAGO
DENVER
SAN FRANCISCO

Municipal, Railroad and Corporation Bonds

February 15, 1909

Telephone DOUGLAS 2487

R. E. MULCAHY, Manager

E. F. HUTTON & CO.

THE PIONEER HOUSE

BROKERS

Members
New York Stock Exchange
New York Cotton Exchange
New York Coffee Exchange
Chicago Board of Trade

490 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Branch, ST. FRANCIS HOTEL

Two Private Wires to Chicago and NewYork

Washington, D. C., 1301 F Street
Los Angeles, 112 W. Third Street
New York, 31-33-35 New Street

Social Prattle

By TANTALUS

The Poet Put Them to Sleep

The lecture which was given last week by Mirza Ali, Kuli Kihan, scholar and poet of Teheran, Persia, received but a chilly reception, notwithstanding that it was under the patronage of Mrs. Frank Carloan, who was also the hostess of the evening. Mrs. Carolan met the poet during her recent trip abroad and became so interested in him that she induced him to come to this far western edge of the world in the interest of culture. Unfortunately, despite the spread of the Omar cult and the ostentatious display of the Rubaiyat in the place of honor once reserved for the family Bible, Persian poetry and philosophy proved too far above the interest, if not the comprehension of the audience which was gathered. Every man, with one exception, promptly fell asleep and the ladies had difficulty in not following their example. At the close of the address, Mirza Ali requested an introduction to the one wide awake gentleman, Knox Maddox, who happened to have occupied a seat in the front row, saying, "I would like to meet him, as he is the only intelligent man in the room." The drawback about these extremely high-cultured affairs is the effort to keep them exclusive. They are, and are meant to be, more social than intellectual, and the connection between dollars, social station and brains has never been any too close. The people who probably would appreciate the intellectual treat are effectively barred out on the other two counts. It is not every one who can afford to pay the fancy prices, and those who can are not always willing. It is current comment in the circles of the elect, with regard to this high flight of fancy that "Five dollars for stupid lectures is altogether too much to pay."

MISS ENID GREGG.

One of the prominent society girls in "The Kirmess Spectacle."

The Darling of the Beaux

By the death of her uncle, A. T. Spotts, that most vivacious and far and away the most attractive of the debutantes, Miss Innes Keeney, has had her season of gaity brought to a close. And what a mad, glad whirl it has been for this darling girl! With what enthusiasm she has crushed the lees of pleasure from the sanguine grapes of joy. No debutante in the history of San Francisco society ever made so distinct a hit as did Innes Keeney. She has been in the front from the going up of the barrier, and she has attended about twice as many teas, luncheons and dances as any other girl in her set. If something had not occurred to cause a halt she could hardly have gone the route at so mad a clip without impairing her health, but to the end the joy of her was infectious, and that impalpable quality called magnetism which she has in abundance never waned in the slightest degree. Innes Keeney will be missed. The beaux of the smart set are likely to find little to interest them in subsequent proceedings. As for the girls—well of course the girls will not go into mourning. On the contrary they will emerge from penumbra.

MISS GUSSIE FOUTE.

Daughter of the late Reverend Robert Foute, who contemplates a career in Literature.

A Prospective Match

Mr. Wm. H. Talbot is now at liberty to incur fresh matrimonial obligations. The ties that bind have been severed by the juridical blade and the statutory interdiction has been removed by Time's amiable hand. Mrs.

MISS ELSIE DE WOLFE
REPRESENTED BY
MRS. EDGAR DE WOLFE
INTERIOR DECORATION AND OBJECTS D' ART
TEMPORARY OFFICE, GRANADA HOTEL TELEPHONE FRANKLIN 422

MRS. OSCAR MANSFELDT
PIANIST
TELEPHONE WEST 314 1801 BUCHANAN STREET

Susie Paxton, grass-window in name only, is not at liberty because in her case leaden hoofed Time has only begun to plod his weary way. Consequently the newspapers that have been hunting down rumors must bide their time. The rumors impute to Mr. Talbot a deep sentimental interest in Mrs. Paxton, and it is believed to be quite probable that Dan Cupid may succeed in making a match between the lumberman and the stock-broker's ex-wife.

Greenway—His Success and His Troubles

The crowning event of the social season will take place at the Fairmont on Friday night, when the Bal Masque, the last dance of the Assembly, will be held in the white and gold ball room, and supper served in the beautiful Norman Hall. The Bal Masque will be of particular interest because it has been planned ever since last September, when the ladies of the charities first decided on the dates for the Kirmess. After a consultation with them Mr. Greenway agreed to make this, the last of the Assemblies, a Bal Masque, in order that those who participated in the Kirmess might come at once to the hotel without making any change in their costumes. A handsome notice has been sent to all the members of the Assembly, with special tickets for use on this night. As this is the first Bal Masque to be held in the Fairmont, and likewise the first since the last Madri Gras at the Hopkins Institute of Art, it is intended to make it the most elaborate and beautiful ever held in San Francisco. The present series of Assemblies will thus go down in social history as the most delightful dances ever given in San Francisco. There has been talk of a lack of dancing men at these affairs, but I am told that this criticism is without foundation. The fact is that Greenway has been so beset by "climbers" this season that he had to "turn down" more than the usual number of people and consequently there has been a very large anvil chorus chanting the dispraise of the "Czar." For twenty years Greenway has managed his affairs so well and given them so much tone that to gain membership in his organization has been the frantic desire of almost every representative of the new rich. This year he has made enemies not only by excluding "climbers," but also by refusing to bar out some of the elect who have been involved in the city's factional strife. I have been told that he received orders from some of our civic patriots to cut down his list and that for refusing to do so he has been maliciously lambasted.

Gymnatic French

Professor Nesbitt, the hypnotic French instructor, is reported to have received an offer of a princely salary from the managers of the Orpheum for a nightly stunt of fifteen minutes behind the footlights. He is said to have declined the proposition because he can get more money making society people make monkeys of themselves in his magic five-weeks' course of perfect French. And society certainly has gone mad over his antics and his kindergarten methods of imparting his native tongue —not all native, at that, for, while his mother was French, his father was a Scotchman, and his apparent "command of the language" owes as much to his theatrical cleverness as to his knowledge. The real French colony, I am told, smiles at the whole spectacular business, and, in the seclusion of their own firesides, its members wonder at the way their friends and neighbors have been swept off their feet and out into the storm on these wintry days. It is not only the women, but the men, likewise, who are in thrall. The wives and mothers prominent in social and club circles, who spend their mornings in paying tribute to the shrine drag no unwilling partners with them in the evenings. Professor Nesbitt has already reaped a small fortune, and there is no indication that the golden rain will cease. Five thousand dollars are the net proceeds of his course of lectures alone, and then, there is the little book—one dollar for the little book—which is a most important part of the equipment of the French scholar. Do not imagine for a moment that it is only a commonplace grammar, dictionary or reading book. On the contrary, it is as important as the magic wand of the necromancer. "Mettez le livre sur la plancher," says the professor, and one thou-

"Art and refinement are displayed by tasteful attire"

Vogel's

Makers of

LADIES' GOWNS and FANCY COSTUMES

Phone Franklin 2802 1321 SUTTER STREET, near Van Ness Ave.

TOWNSEND'S

CALIFORNIA GLACÈ FRUITS

27 Years in Palace Hotel Building

Our retail store on Van Ness Avenue has been discontinued pending our removal down town.

ORDERS FOR OUR

California Glace Fruits and Syrups

during the coming month will be given prompt attention at our factory

117 San Jose Ave., S. F., Phone Market 378

Also at news stands of the Fairmont or St. Francis Hotels

MAIL ORDERS We make a specialty of mail orders. We have many regular customers in the Eastern States, Europe, India, the Orient and elsewhere. Send us a dollar for a trial order.

TRADE MARK Quality McLean's Service 1158-1168 SUTTER ST. SAN FRANCISCO

CANNED FRUIT AND PRESERVES

The selection of canned fruits we have to offer can only be obtained in a first-class grocery. California produces the finest fruits to be had and our brands come from the best fruit belt in the State.

L. D. McLEAN CO.

IMPORTERS AND GROCERS

PHONE FRANKLIN 2810 1158-1168 Sutter St. San Francisco

THE MOST DELIGHTFUL TOILET WATER IS

ED. PINAUD'S LILAC VEGETAL

It is one of the finest productions of ED. PINAUD'S famous Paris laboratory. There is no perfume adaptable to so many uses. It is fine for handkerchief, atomizer and bath, and a great favorite with men after shaving.

ED. PINAUD'S LILAC VEGETAL

is delightfully fragrant, having the exquisite odor of a bouquet of freshly cut flowers.

We should like you to try a miniature bottle. Please write to-day, enclosing 10 cts. (to pay postage and packing) and we will send you a liberal sample at once.

PARFUMERIE ED. PINAUD, Dept. S.F.

ED. PINAUD Bldg. Fifth Ave., New York

sand apparently intelligent people lean over and deposit their little books on the floor, and obey similar commands in which "the little book" figures. "Imitez le chat," and one thousand adult voices miau in unison. Directions to pull noses, clap hands, pat their backs, are all brightly and intelligently comprehended and obeyed by society's elect, while the agile instructor gives demonstrations from the platform to assist in "suiting the action to the word," after the most approved dictum of the highest educational authorities. Society fads are always pursued at full speed while the sport endures, and this bright Scot, or half-Scot, is making a full harvest while the sun shines. He has purchased a home in the cultured center, Berkeley, and there is no doubt in the world that the shekels necessary for its maintenance will be forthcoming in sufficient quantities. The success of the San Francisco venture has been so encouraging that it has prompted an excursion to San Jose, where there seems to be another rich field ripe for the reaper, but, later on, there is promise of a more advanced course to be given in our city. Meanwhile, there are to be seen from twenty to two score autos drawn up at the curb in the vicinity of Lyric Hall on every lecture day, while everywhere that one goes, be it dinner, dance, tea or an informal call, French phrases fly through the air, and the professorial capers are cut with all the solemnity once reserved for religious rites.

Somewhat Embarrassing

A popular young society bachelor whose engagement has but recently been announced was the victim of an amusing but embarrassing blunder one day recently. He boarded a street car in which he found seated an old family friend who is, at times, extremely absent minded. The sight of the young man recalled to the elderly gentleman a vague memory that the youth was to be congratulated for something, and leaning forward he offered his hand, saying, "I congratulate you." Had it stopped there all would have been well, but imagine the consternation of the prospective bride groom when the old man went on to inquire: "Is it a boy or a girl?"

Will Resign to Marry

Paymaster Greer, whose engagement to Miss Helen Wilson has just been announced, will resign from the service before the marriage, this being the condition on which Mr. John Scott Wilson's consent was gained, coupled with a promise to reside with the parents of the bride. The Wilson's are of the old time pioneer society of San Francisco. Mr. Wilson is the eldest son of the late Samuel M. Wilson, one of the foremost lawyers of his day. Mrs. John Scott Wilson was Miss Mary Hutchinson, daughter of the late C. I. Hutchinson. Mr. Eli Hutchinson, a brother of Mrs. Wilson, married one of the daughters of Woodward, the proprietor of the famous gardens.

The Count in the Limelight

Count d'Abbans of the French consulate is surely getting more than his share of newspaperiety, and all because of the assumption on his part that the smart set of San Francisco is really as smart as it pretends to be. The Count is a typical Parisian beau, a jolly rogue, high spirited, and ultra-Frenchy in his tastes and his drolleries, and therefore he is decidedly of exotic flavor in any of our parochial drawing-rooms. Naturally the reporters do not understand Count d'Abbans, and being an irreverent lot they are not all impressed by his pedigree which is about as fine as anything that France has yet produced. Nay, to an American reporter aristocratic pedigree is like a red flag to a bull. If it does nothing else it raises the presumption of objectionable inherent qualities. Consequently Count d'Abbans has been under a handicap in the local limelight, and everything of

Dr. B. F. Stoll, Dentist, moved to Hastings Bldg., cor. Post and Grant Ave. Rms. 309-310. Phone Douglas 4194.

THE POTTER

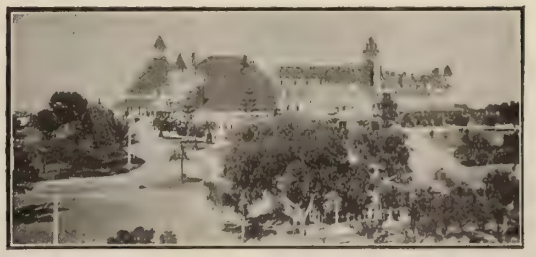
SANTA BARBARA

AMERICAN PLAN

WINTER RATES

Single	Double
4.00	7.00
4.50	7.50
5.00	8.00
5.50	8.50
6.00	9.00
7.00	10.00

Remember that our Single $5.00 and Double $8.00 Rates get you a room with Bath. For families or parties, the rate per person is as low as $3.00 per day.



These are the lowest first-class rates on the Coast, and we affirm that THE POTTER gives more for the money than any hotel on the Coast does for ANY money. This is made possible by the fact that we have our own Vegetable Farm, Beautiful Dairy Farm, Pig Ranch supplying SUCKLING PIGS and COUNTRY SAUSAGE, the SQUAB RANCH with 60,000 PIGEONS AND WE KNOW OUR BUSINESS.

Write for Booklet.

MILO M. POTTER, Manager

HOTEL DEL CORONADO

CORONADO, CAL.

Coronado is essentially an Hotel of quiet elegance. It has the most equable climate of which any knowledge exists. Hotel Del Coronado has unique facilities for out-of-door recreation. Polo, golf, tennis, boating, fishing and motoring on good roads. Rates $4 per day upward. For special information apply to MORGAN ROSS, Manager, Coronado, or H. F. NORCROSS, representative, 334 S. Spring St., Los Angeles.

HOTEL ARGONAUT

Society of California Pioneers Building

FOURTH STREET NEAR MARKET — San Francisco — CENTRE OF THE CITY

Catering to Family and Commercial Trade

400 Rooms $1.00 per day and up Dining room seats 500 guests

Special 50c Luncheon from 11:30 to 2 p. m.

Weekly and monthly rates on application. Free bus meets all trains and steamers.

Telephone Douglas 3393 EDWARD ROLKIN, Manager

an unconventional nature that he has done has been most severely reprehended by the decorous and discreet reporters whose duty it is, according to their conception of the matter, to see that no foreign nobleman sojourning in these parts shall ignore the puritanical amenities. Now Count d'Abbans, I am told, is really a fine gentleman. Whether he has really made an impression on Miss Eliza McMullin is another story. It can only be said that this very charming granddaughter of Mrs. John McMullin perceptibly stirred the Count's emotions, and that he has neglected no opportunity of pressing his attentions upon her. However agreeable his attentions may have been to Miss Eliza, the supposition is that Mrs. McMullin has not given her warm approval. Mrs. McMullin being of Southern extraction is probably not partial to titled foreigners. She by the way was Betty Hayes, daughter of Colonel Jack Hayes. Mrs. McMullin and her favorite granddaughter are soon to leave town for Santa Barbara.

Returned for Her Trousseau

The arrival of the Tenyo Maru has caused rejoicing amongst the friends of Claire Bowie, who will be enabled to catch glimpses of her during her brief visit of ten days to her aunt, Mrs. Jessie Bowie-Detrich. Miss Bowie has been in Japan for the past year, making her home with her uncle, Henry Bowie, and she has returned to purchase a trousseau. In August she is to become the wife of Mr. Jordan, a wealthy Englishman established in Tokio. Claire Bowie is the daughter of Dr. Robert Bowie, whose home is in the East, but she spent her girlhood here, and the family in all its branches is so well known that she really belongs to San Francisco. Coupled with the felicitations on her coming marriage is the regret that Japan must be her future home.

Ada Sullivan Not "Missing"

The usual mountain has sprung up out of a molehill. Ada Sullivan is neither immured behind convent walls nor is she fleeing from a French count. Having no family ties to bind her and no concerns of interest enough to hold her in Paris, she simply left that "Paradise of good Americans," with her maid, for a tour of Switzerland. The simple little oversight of neglecting to leave an address with her banker and the consequent accumulation of her mail was sufficient to set the gossips agog and the reports flying. Common sense would have dictated the wisdom of applying to her own relatives for information before giving the "news" to the daily papers, for the Sullivans have undergone no anxiety or alarm on behalf of the young lady, being well aware of her intentions and her whereabouts all the time. She will return to Paris in the course of a few days now, and be domiciled there again for the spring.

A Stanford Man's Sad Death

The funeral of Frank A. Coakley, the son of Mrs. R. E. Mulcahy, took place from St. Mary's Cathedral on Van Ness Avenue last Saturday morning and was largely attended. His death resulted from consumption, a disease which he contracted about three years ago. When first afflicted with the dread complaint he removed to Arizona, but though at first benefited by the change, his health soon began to decline rapidly and four months ago he returned home. The young man made a gallant fight for life, and it was not until the day before his death that he resigned hope. He was known amongst his large circle of friends for his gentle and sunny disposition, and he had the reputation of never having spoken an unkind word of any one. He was a Stanford man, a member of the Phi Kappa Psi fraternity, while his rich barotone voice and his fine training in music made him a prominent addition to the Glee Club. Mr. Coakley belonged to a family noted for their musical ability, and at the early age of eleven years he had

Dr. Matilda A. Feeley, removed to 1700 Sutter Street Diseases of women and children.

The GOLD MEDAL for quality in the Franco-British Exhibition has been awarded to

To His Majesty the King
By royal appointment

WHITE HORSE
WHISKY.

QUALITY THE SECRET OF SUCCESS

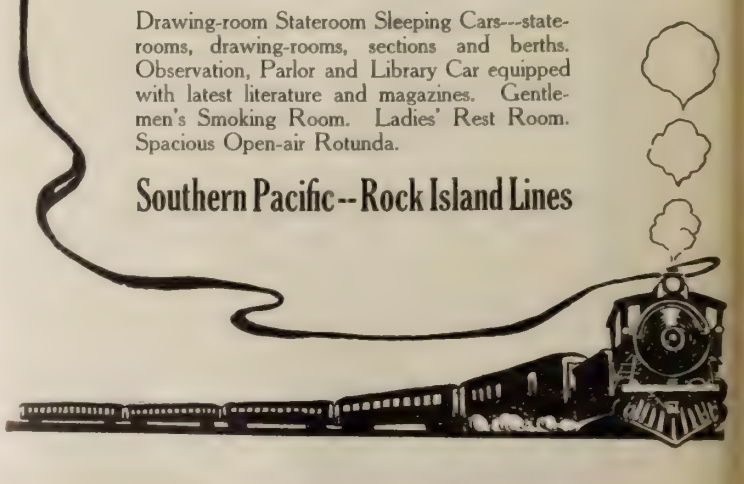
MACKIE & CO. DISTILLERS LTD.
LAGAVULIN DISTILLERY, ISLAY
MALT-MILL " "
CRAIGELLACHIE " GLENLIVET

Established 1742

Note.—Any person proved guilty of re-filling our empty bottles with inferior whisky will be prosecuted.

Golden State Limited

1908-09 Season Opened
December 15, 1908



No better or more direct service between San Francisco, Southern California and Chicago

Through the golden laden orange groves---by the wonderful Salton Sea---Mexican border scenes and the Rio Grande

Careful and attentive dining service Meals a la carte

Drawing-room Stateroom Sleeping Cars---staterooms, drawing-rooms, sections and berths. Observation, Parlor and Library Car equipped with latest literature and magazines. Gentlemen's Smoking Room. Ladies' Rest Room. Spacious Open-air Rotunda.

Southern Pacific--Rock Island Lines

earned the title of the Boy Tenor of Boston, in which city he was born, and where he took part in musical events with his aunt and uncle, the brother and sister of his mother. Almost the last conscious request of his life was for his mother to sing "Annie Laurie" to him. It was in his twenty-sixth year that his promising career was thus sadly cut short.

A Golden Luncheon

Golden Weddings are by no means rare, but a "golden luncheon" is an innovation. Even those to whom elaborate entertainments are commonplace were aroused to keenest admiration when they were ushered into the gray room of the Fairmont, the guests of Mrs. James Flood. Thirty were seated at an oval table which was decorated in a most elaborate manner. Everything was arranged to harmonize with the wonderful golden service which is kept in the strong box of the hostelry for use on occasions of especial pomp and ceremony. This is the first time that it has been displayed, but Mrs. Flood was convinced that nothing could be too elaborate for her guest of honor, Mrs. Whitelaw Reid, at whose own table the royalty of Europe has been entertained. The guests of the occasion included Mrs. Pboebe Hearst, Mrs. Patrick Calhoun, Mrs. Eleanor Martin, Victomtesse de Tristan, Mrs. Alfred Tubbs, Mrs. Osgood Hooker, Mrs. William Taylor, Mrs. George Boyd, Miss Jennie Flood, Mrs. William Tubbs, Mrs. Walter MacGavin, Mrs. Joseph Donahoe, Mrs. Beverly MasMonagle, Mrs. Horace Blanchard Chase, Miss Laura McKinstry, Mrs. John Boyd, Mrs. Charles Stetson Wheeler, Mrs. Frederick W. Sharon, Mrs. Willis Polk, Mrs. William Babcock, Mrs. William Mayo Newhall, Mrs. Hall McAllister, Mrs. George A. Pope, Mrs. Harry Mendell, Mrs. Carter Pomeroy.

A Studio Musicale

One of the most successful musicales of the season was given on Sunday a week ago by Mr. D. G. Maclean and Mr. Etlin, at their studio in Green street. The guests of the evening enjoyed a fine program. Mr. Etlin contributed, amongst other selections, the Liebeslied of Wagner which, in his hands, is absolutely satisfying, and the tremendously difficult Valse Etude of Saint-Saens, which was played with exceptional brilliance. An exquisite ballade of Chopin and a valse impromptu of Liszt were also included. Mr. Maclean's singing was equally fine, from the infectious gaiety of the "Non piu adieu" of Figaro to the dramatic intensity of the Aria from Thais. The selection from Schubert was wonderfully sung, with all the shading of which Mr. Maclean has such complete mastery. A novelty was Dupan's "Vague et Cloehe," which was a magnificent piece of work. In fact each song was a poem. Such versatility is seldom found combined with such perfect method. Mr. Etlin and Mr. Maclean recently presented a few of their most promising pupils at a matinee which proved far more interesting than the usual pupils's recital.

In the Social Spotlight

Mrs. Francis Carolan entertained at an elaborate luncheon in the grey room of the Fairmont on Monday.

A party consisting of Mr. C. T. Crocker, Miss Jennie Crocker, Mr. and Mrs. Laurence T. Scott, Mr. and Mrs. Walter S. Martin and D. Hopkins, accompanied by Prescott Scott of New York, returned to San Francisco last week in Mr. Crocker's private car, Mishawaka, after making a winter visit to Yosemite Valley. They were all enthusiastic, and declare the trip one worth traveling thousands of miles to enjoy. The snow and ice effects are particularly fine and the weather all that could be desired. The party spent several days in the valley and their verdict is that the Yosemite in winter more than vies with the same locality in summer as a point of beauty and interest.

Go to Whigham's when you want that baby's photograph taken

Permanent Location 739 MARKET ST., Opp. Grant Ave.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

HEAR OUR ARTISTS AND ORCHESTRA DURING DINNER AND AFTER THEATRE

MISS ANITA GILL, Mezzo Soprano
MISS NADYNE PARKER, Lyric Soprano

THOMPSON'S ANNEX

O'Farrell near Fillmore

JULES' RESTAURANT 328 BUSH STREET
Below Kearny
Phone Kearny 1812

Music Every Evening by Sancho's Parisian Quintette

DINNER With Wine, 75c.

DINNER, SUNDAYS AND HOLIDAYS With Wine, $1.00.

You will find SWAIN'S

Bakery and Restaurant on the line at

1241 VAN NESS AVENUE, Near Sutter Street

AFTERNOON TEA for Shoppers with Music from 3 to 5 o'clock

HOTEL VON DORN

242 TURK STREET

New steel frame Class A Building. Furnishes all the accommodations of the most expensive hotels at half the cost. Rates, $1.00 per day and up.

HOTEL WESTMINSTER

LOS ANGELES, CAL. Fourth and Main Sts.

AMERICAN PLAN, Reopened.
Rates per day, $2.50 Rooms without Bath
Rooms with Bath, $3.00, $3.50 and $4.00.

EUROPEAN PLAN.
$1.00 per day and up.
With bath, $1.50 and up

F. O. JOHNSON, Proprietor

HOTEL TOURAINE

Delaware Avenue at Chippewa Street

BUFFALO, N. Y.

ABSOLUTELY FIRE-PROOF

250 Rooms with Bath and Long Distance Telephone

Excellent Music and Grill Room

European Plan, $1.50 per day up

With Bath Connection

Send for Booklet C. N. OWEN, Proprietor

Mrs. David Brown of Denver, formerly Miss Ruth McNutt, arrived on Sunday evening on a visit to her parents, Dr. and Mrs. McNutt of Jackson street. She expects to remain in San Francisco for some weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. P. L. Wheeler and their young son, Kirkham Wheeler, left for the east during the week, for a protracted visit.

The Forum Club will give a masquerade jinks in their new club rooms on Post street on the evening of February 22. A prize will be given for the most comical costume, and dancing will be the chief feature of the occasion.

Mrs. Ashburn, the wife of Captain Ashburn, gave one of the most enjoyable dances of the season in her attractive quarters at the Presidio on Tuesday evening, the 16th. The guest of honor was Miss Floyd, of Kentucky. Previous to the dance, Miss Marcia Fee was the hostess at a dinner at her home on Buchanan street, her guests, later, proceeding to the dance.

Miss Marian Newhall has been obliged to cancel all her social engagements and is taking the rest cure under the care of a trained nurse. Miss Margaret Newhall is still at the Newhall ranch, with Miss Marjorie Josselyn as her guest.

Mrs. Cesar Bertheau, Miss Helen Bertheau, Mrs. Beaver and family, and the Pennóyers of Oakland make a congenial party which will leave during the week for a lengthy tour abroad. Sheldon Pennoyer will take apartments in Paris and begin his course at the Beaux Arts, while the others travel on the continent.

The coming election of the Francesca Club is causing some pleasant rivalry amongst the candidates and their friends, without the usual ill-feeling so apt to be engendered where partisanship is high. Mrs. W. Babcock, Mrs. Sydney Cushing and Miss Linda Cadwalader have been actively interested in selecting the ticket presented. The new club rooms in the Shreve building are nearing completion and promise to be very attrac tive.

Mrs. Edward Tracy Allen and her nieces, the Misses Kenyon, gave an enjoyable tea on Friday, February 19.

Mrs. Craig and Miss Olive Criag, have issued cards for a tea on February 23 at their home on Washington street.

E. O. McCormick, assistant traffic director of the Harriman lines, who arrived at the St. Francis a few days ago, will make his future headquarters in this city, if rumors from railroad circles are to be relied on. It is said that he will install himself in his residence in this city as soon as the present tenant is willing to relinquish it.

Dr. Gustav Boar and Miss Boar of Portland and Dr. and Mrs. F. B. Whiting of Seattle, are amongst the northern society people visiting at the St. Francis.

Hedley Chapman, F. R. M. S., of London, has arrived at the St. Francis on an important mission from a group of large English mining syndicates.

Mr. E. I. Alderman, imperial potentate of North America of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, and E. A. Osborn, chief rabban of El-Kahir Temple, who registered a few days ago at the Hotel St. Francis, have left for Los Angeles.

Mrs. F. B. Alexander gave a dinner Friday, February 19, in the Green room of the St. Francis.

St. Valentine's Day was the occasion of an elaborate dinner at the Hotel Carlton in Berkeley, the menu and the decorations being made in keeping with the holiday. Among the guests at the hotel during the week were: Mr. and Mrs. F. O. Vaille and their daughter, Miss Harriet Vaille, who, after a few days spent in the college town, departed for a visit to the Hawaiian Islands.

The following San Franciscons were registered at the Hotel Green, Pasadena, for the week ending February 13: Mrs. William L. Frank, Miss Hilda Steinhart, Mrs. James Armstrong, John Plover, L. W. Cowgill.

Mr. Howard Taylor Blethen and his bride were at Del Monte last week.

The tourists who have been stormbound in southern California are beginning to come north and Del Monte was made lively during the week with new comers. There was a large contingent from the Atlantic Coast and the Middle West.

Major and Mrs. Zenas Crane Rennie, who have been guests at the Hotel Carlton, left on Tuesday night for a short eastern trip.

Mr. and Mrs. P. E. Bowles and Mr. Robert Bowles of Oakland, with their friends, Mr. and Mrs. P. W. McNear of San Francisco, were at Del Monte for the week end, enjoying the sunny weather.

Mrs. J. B. Coryell and her two attractive boys will remain at Del Monte until their beautiful home at Menlo Park is opened for the summer.

Mrs. Carey Friedlander has gone to Southern California to be absent several weeks. On her return they will take apartments at the Peninsula Hotel for the entire summer.

Mr. and Mrs. B. M. Gunn gave an enjoyable week-end house party for their son, Dudley, at their residence in San Rafael last week. Amongst the guests were Miss Marie Louise Foster, Miss Mina Van Bergen and Evan Langstroth. As part of their entertainment, all attended the Hitchcock dance on Saturday evening.

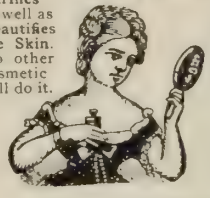
A Clear Brain

and strong, steady nerves are the foundation on which health, strength, vitality, happiness and success are built. To get the most out of life you must have a full supply of nervous energy. Diseases like Neurasthenia, Nervous Dyspepsia, Mental Depression, Loss of Ambition and other Nervous Troubles undermine brain and nerves. For a complete restoration of health, strength and vitality

Make-Man Tablets

have no equal. They put new life, new vim, new energy, into weak, nervous, run-down, unstrung men and women. They restore manhood and womanhood. A box will convince you. For sale by leading druggists, 50c per box, 6 for $2.50, or by mail direct, in plain wrapper on receipt of price. Satisfactory results guaranteed. Write for free booklet. Address;

Make-Man Tablet Co., Make-Man Bldg., Chicago



A SKIN OF BEAUTY IS A JOY FOREVER

DR. T. FELIX GOURAUD'S

ORIENTAL CREAM

OR MAGICAL BEAUTIFIER

Purifies as well as Beautifies the Skin. No other cosmetic will do it.

Removes Tan, Pimples, Freckles, Moth Patches, Rash and Skin Diseases, and every blemish on beauty, and defies detection. It has stood the test of 60 years; no other has, and it is so harmless we taste it to be sure it is properly made. Accept no counterfeit of similar name. The distinguished Dr. L. A. Sayre said to a lady of the haut-on (a patient): "As you ladies will use them, I recommend 'Gouraud's Cream' as the least harmful of all the skin preparations."

For sale by all Druggists and Fancy Goods Dealers.

GOURAUD'S ORIENTAL TOILET POWDER

For infants and adults. Exquisitely perfumed. Relieves Skin Irritation, cures Sunburn and renders an excellent complexion. Price 25 Cents, by Mail.

GOURAUD'S POUDRE SUBTILE

Removes Superfluous Hair. Price $1.00, by mail

FERD. T. HOPKINS, Prop'r, 37 Great Jones St., New York City.

Dr. Byron Haines, Dentist. Suite 507, 323 Geary St. Hours 9-12 and 2-4. Telephone Douglas 4300.

LEVY'S CAFE

Third and Main Streets, Los Angeles, Cal.

Much the Best Place to Get Fine Things to Eat and Listen to Choice Music at Popular Prices.

Stage

"The Rose of the Rancho"

There is no diversity of opinion as to the merits of "The Rose of the Rancho," which is announced for a second week, commencing Monday, at the Alcazar. Everyone who has witnessed the Belasco-Tully play pronounced it the most elaborate production ever given in a San Francisco stock theatre. The drama itself, the pictorial embellishments, the music, the dances and the wonderfully-clever acting of the people in the cast—all contribute to its remarkable success. Not since the David Warfield engagement has the Alcazar box office been so steadily besieged by ticket-buyers as during the last two weeks, and it would not be unreasonable to predict a continuance of the demand for seats until everyone who has not witnessed "The Rose" shall have experienced that pleasure. "The Rose" appeals specially to Californians, because it is a play of early California life written by two Californians, David Belasco and Richard Walton Tully, and is played by a crack California stock company. Those who are most lavish in extolment of its worth are folk who were in California during the period of which it treats, when the dominant "Gringo" supplanted the indolent Spaniard who for generations had held and neglected the fruitful soil. They will tell you that the "atmosphere" created by David Belasco is as realistic as art could make it. The setting of the first act, a mission garden, is still to be found in counterpart where the padres survive, and the patio of the ranch house is another beautiful picture that cannot soon be forgotten by anyone who has witnessed the stirring scenes enacted when it is in evidence. What was said by David Belasco of the Alcazar's production of "The Rose" has been chronicled by the daily press. No author ever paid higher tribute to the people entrusted with interpretation of his work. Mr. Belasco was especially enthusiastic in his praise of Mr. Fred Butler, the Alcazar's accomplished and resourceful stage manager.

Greenbaum's "Pop" Concerts

The next "Pop" Concert, the third of this series of interesting chamber concerts, will take place on Sunday afternoon, February 28, at Lyric Hall, by the Lyric String Quartette, with Nathan Firestone, viola, and Eugene Blanchard at the piano. The program will include two exceptional novelties, one of which will be a string quartette by Mme. Therese Carreno, the famous pianist, and the other a sonata for viola and piano by Anton Rubinstein. The viola as a solo instrument is rarely heard, and as Mr. Firestone is an exceptionally fine artist, this number, which he will play in conjunction with Mr. Blanchard as pianist, will be enjoyed by our true music lovers. The Rubinstein Trio in B Flat Minor will complete the program. Seats will be ready next Thursday at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s.

At the Van Ness

"The Red Mill," the new comic opera which is to be seen here for the first time at the Van Ness Theatre opening with a special matinee on Washington's Birthday, Monday, February 22, has been provided with all the essential elements of success. The music is by Victor Herbert, easily the best of the composers of light music in this country, and the book by Mr. Henry Blossom, who has written clever dialogue in the past. From all account the company engaged is an unusually good one, too. The scenes are laid in Holland, in one of the little Dutch villages and advantage has been taken of every possibility. The story is simple. Con Kidder and Kid Conner are two Americans stranded at a little inn. They have come to the end of their resources, and being in debt for a week's board and are about to make their escape from an upper window by means of a blanket rope when they are discovered by the Burgomaster and escape imprisonment only on their offer to work out the indebtedness. Kidder, who professes to be a linguist, is made interpreter at the inn, while Conner is installed as waiter. Kidder, who has but a scant knowledge of French, is confronted by an irate countess who does not understand English, his efforts to carry on a conversation are laughable. Grethen, the Burgomaster's daughter, is betrothed to the Governor of Zeeland, an old fop and roue, and to escape this marriage she plans an elopement with Doris Van Damm, a young sea captain. "The Red Mill" comes here after a season's run at the Knickerbocker Theatre in New York, with engagements of three months in Chicago and Boston, where it proved one of the greatest musical successes in many years.

Scene from "MRS. WIGGS OF THE CABBAGE PATCH."

The Delightful Comedy Which Will Begin a Week's Engagement at the American Sunday Afternoon.

The Cabbage Patch Comedy

Harry Beresford will present his laughing success, "Who's Your Friend?" for the last times at the American Theatre this Saturday afternoon and evening. As the Sunday matinee, with a special performance Monday afternoon, Washington's Birthday, Liebler and Company will present "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," with the same company that has just returned from a triumphant tour of Australia. This comedy has proved to be one of the best liked and most liberally patronized attractions in the history of the American stage. At every performance audiences laugh themselves into sideaches, applaud the quaint philosophy of the heroine of the Cabbage Patch, or silently express their appreciation of the pathetic touches. Mrs. Flexner's dramatization makes Mrs. Wiggs deliciously human. To her life's trivialities are nothing, misfortune might always be worse. Her doctrine is that of cheerfulness; her philosophy is of the sort that all might do well to absorb. Altogether the Mrs. Wiggs readers learned to love in the book is made a most lovable character on the stage. All of the characters of the Cabbage Patch, to the number of thirty, appear in the play and the stage setting is a photographic reproduction of the world-famous Louisville Cabbage Patch, where Mrs. Bass, the original Mrs. Wiggs, still lives. The present cast includes many of those in the first production and could not be improved upon. "Babes in Toyland," Victor Herbert's delightful musical comedy, will follow "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" at the American.

"Secret Service" at the Valencia

The last performances of George Ade's intensely amusing and interesting rural drama, "The County Chairman," will be given at the Valencia Theatre this Sunday afternoon and evening. At the special Washington's Birthday matinee, Monday, William Gillette's best of all war plays, "Secret Service," will be produced on an elaborate scale. "Secret Service" was the attraction at the Baldwin Theatre when the fire destroyed that famous playhouse and since then it has never been given an adequate presentation in this city. Mr. Gillette has not written anything better than "Secret Service." In its construction he dispensed with many of the conventional "war drama" features, substituting a strong and logical plot. This fact accounts for the success of the play in England and France, where its merits as drama, pure and simple, were instantly acknowledged. There is something besides mere clap-trap which appeals to American patriotism in the drama. The incidents of the play center in the efforts of Captain Thorne, a member of the United States secret service, to hoodwink the authorities of Richmond while that city is under siege. He is employed in the army telegraph service, and his endeavors to aid the besiegers by wiring false commands to the defending forces bring him under suspicion. He is subjected to various tests, but he successfully withstands them all, even to hiding the horror conveyed to him by a beloved brother shooting himself in his presence. The love interest is maintained through Thorne's affection for a typical Southern girl and her infatuation for him. The members of the Valencia Stock Company should give excellent accounts of themselves in "Secret Service" as a majority of them have made individual hits in the play. Mace Greenleaf counts Captain Thorne as one of his best characters and Blanche Stoddard has played Edith Varney, his Southern sweetheart, with great success. The great size of the Valencia stage will aid the production materially and the management will leave nothing undone to make the first performance a perfect one. For the convenience of down-town shoppers seats for all performances are on sale at the Emporium.

Hotaling's Last Week

Richard Hotaling's engagement at the Ye Liberty Theatre will close next week with an elaborate production of that most beautiful of all dramatic fantasies, "A Midsummer Night's Dream." Mr. Hotaling is surely justified in laughing at his critics. He is packing the Oakland playhouse at every performance. There never was a more notable season of repertoire in the history of that unfortified town. The cabal against Hotaling organized in resentment of his utterances with reference to certain actors who take themselves very seriously and who are similarly taken by an undiscriminating public, has, if it has done anything, served only to advertise the season at Ye Liberty.

"THE DUTCH KIDDIES"

With Charles Dillingham's production of "The Red Mill" to be seen at the Van Ness Theatre commencing Monday matinee, February 22d.

At the Orpheum

The program at the Orpheum for the week beginning this Sunday matinee is in every respect calculated to please for it is composed of acts of rare excellence and great novelty. Frank Nelson, one of the most distinguished character actors in this country will make his first vaudeville appearance and present a one act play by Sewell Collins, entitled "Thirty Dollars." Mr. Nelson will portray Philip, a wayward young man and a race track habitue. He will be supported by Dorothy de Schelle, a talented and attractive young actress and John C. King. Jwan Tschernoff's Unique Circus Troupe, which includes a number of beautiful ponies and prize dogs and a flock of pigeons, will be a most attractive feature of the coming bill. Tschernoff has a world wide reputation as an animal trainer and is the more admired from the fact that he treats his dumb animals with patience and kindness and disdains the use of the whip. A particularly interesting incident of this act is the almost human musical pony, Hans, who never fails to become popular with the children. The Knickerbocker Quartette of which San Francisco is so justly proud will make its first vaudeville appearance and contribute a delightful program of songs. Goldsmith and Hoppe, a very amusing and entertaining pair, who excel as singers, dancers and monologists, will show of what mettle they are made. Both are proficient on a variety of musical instruments. Next week will close the engagements of Imro Fox, the clever and amusing conjurer; Tony Wilson and Mlle. Heloise, the Amoros Sisters and of that thrilling episode of the prize ring, "At the Sound of the Gong," in which Tom (Soldier) Wilson has scored a great hit. A new series of Orpheum Motion Pictures will close the performance.

"Playing the Ponies"

Kolb and Dill will begin the seventeenth and last week of their successful engagement at the Princess next Monday matinee, Washington's Birthday. By special request they will present their great success "Playing the Ponies." They commenced their season in it and a better selection could not be made for their last week. Monday evening, March 1st, the Musical Comedy Season will begin with Harry B. Smith and Ludwig Englander's musical skit, "The Rounders." It will be produced under the personal direction of the famous stage director, Edward P. Temple, who has come from New York for that purpose. He has been identified with many of Savage's

A SCENE FROM "THE ROSE OF THE RANCHO."

BUY MOHAWK-TRIANGLE BUY MOHAWK-TRIANGLE

MOHAWK TRIANGLE MIN. & M. CO. OF ARIZONA

MINES IN GOLDFIELD NEVADA

OFFICERS & DIRECTORS
J. E. EWING PRES
H. C. DAVIS
P. De B. ROSS! VICE PRES.
Hon. JAMES T. BOYD.
GEORGE M. WILLCOX SEC & TREAS

A Practically Proven Mine of Great Value--- Enormous Profits and Early Dividends Assured

The Mohawk-Triangle Mining Company owns over sixty acres of wonderfully rich ore bodies in the famous Goldfield Mining District of Nevada, where never before in the mining history of the world has there been such an amazing tale of suddenly acquired riches as that which has been told during the past few years.

Its properties consist of a small fraction of a claim situated in the very heart of that fabulously rich mining camp and completely surrounded by rich properties. Within a Stone's Throw of our line are the shafts out of which the famous Hayes-Monnette lease, the Ish-Sheets lease, the Francis-Mohawk lease and the January-Jones lease have taken millions and made their stockholders independently wealthy, while adjoining us and in close proximity to us on the south, east and north are such well known properties as the Red Top, Jumbo, Mohawk, Combination, Florence and other famous mines. Our Engineers, Messrs. Thomas Price & Son, the well known Mining Engineers and Metallurgists of San Francisco and Goldfield, and others who have examined this Fraction for us say: "The same great vein undoubtedly underlies this portion of your property." We have sunk a shaft there, have cut through the drift, and struck solid formation at a depth of about forty feet.

In addition to this fraction, the company owns the Camp Bird Group of claims, consisting of sixty acres situated in the famous Golden Horseshoe Belt, on which are located all the proven mines of the Goldfield District. The properties immediately surrounding these claims are rich in high-grade ore and we have every reason to believe that these sixty acres will develop into a mine ranking in the Bonanza class. We are down one hundred and seventy feet in a shaft on one claim of this group. The shaft is being sunk midway between two well-defined dykes of rich, gold-bearing rock, both of which carry as far as composition, formation and appearance goes, the same kind of ore as that taken from the famous Mohawk mine, which has assayed as high as sixty thousand dollars to the ton. We already have assays running from ten dollars to three hundred dollars to the ton in our shaft but expect to reach the real high grades as soon as we have cut stations at the two hundred and three hundred foot levels and cross-cut to the ledges not more than twenty to thirty feet away.

The Managers and Directors of the Company are all well known men of standing in San Francisco and vicinity; they are developing the properties in a thorough business-like manner with the sole object of making the investment of their stockholders a highly profitable one through the actual, intrinsic, dividend paying value of their mines, rather than through any temporary, fictitious fluctuation in the price of its stock.

For the purpose of continuing the work more vigorously, of sinking the shafts lower, cutting stations, cross-cutting, and for the further purpose of installing a better equipment to enable us to work more rapidly and more economically, we are desirous of raising a little more money, not much for we do not need much more to put us on a paying or dividend paying basis, and for that reason are offering a small block of only 25,000 shares of treasury stock or any part of it at 25 cents a share.

We are offering you the biggest bargain on the American stock market today and urge you to join us, but you must act at once, buy it now. Take it all or as much as you can.

IT MEANS A FORTUNE FOR YOU.

THE MOHAWK-TRIANGLE MINING CO.

SAN FRANCISCO OFFICE - - - - - ROOM 623, CHRONICLE BUILDING

The Well-Dressed Man

What to Wear, When and Where

Written exclusively for Town Talk by J. M. JACOBI

For the benefit of those men who have neither the time nor inclination to study the art of Dressing correctly, we will publish a series of weekly Fashion Chats.

We will also start a query column, in which the reader may ask questions pertaining to dress. Such questions will be answered in the following issue.

ACCESSORIES AND DETAILS OF DRESS

Shirts

There is nothing quite so rich or elegant as a white pleated shirt particularly when worn with a "Tuxedo." The pleats run from 1-32 of an inch to a broad knife pleat, although the narrower pleats look neater under the "Tuxedo." The pleated shirt is worn almost exclusively but is quite out of the question for ceremonious dress.

A new feature in the evening dress shirt has just been introduced abroad and in New York. It will no doubt be welcomed by men who attend receptions where there is dancing, and at formal balls. This shirt has a linen bosom, body and cuffs, of course always attached, and silk sleeves. This makes the garment slip on easily and is cool and comfortable for dancing. As yet this innovation is only to be found in shirts to order. The silk used for the sleeves is a Jap silk adapted for washing. However, the white linen shirt with plain or pique bosom looks very well. Embroidered bosoms, folded back cuffs and the like are fads, not fashions and not to be commended. Glossy linen is always in bad taste and therefore the shirt should be ironed with a lusterless finish. The studs used in a Dress Shirt should always match the links. For Negligee shirts of the fancy variety the materials used consist of "Percale," "Madras," "Batiste," and other varieties. Then there is a pretty new fabric this season for "Negligee" shirts called silk "Zephyr." Colorings are various and the selection depends on individual taste, as one can find almost any color. Stripes predominate.

Neckwear

The variety in neckwear offered this season is very great. Four-in-hand still is the tie for general use from 1½ inch width to 2¼ inches; with the lock collar, the narrower width is the desirable style. Four-in-hand well folded called "Imperial" shape is the most popular for day dress and being well folded in, can be tied as a "Onecover." As to shadings of the ties a leading authority writes: "As to hues, who can determine what is right and what is wrong?" Almost every variety of the rainbow is shown, and it is difficult to condemn one in favor of the other. There is little doubt about the fact, however, that the season is "gray," to some extent more patterns being shown in this variety than any other. Purple and the new colors in pink, somewhat on the order of the old crushed strawberry effect are also very popular and blues are worn to a great extent. Wash neckwear will be most popular this spring and stocks for golf. The Bat and Bow ties promise to be very popular this coming spring and the one particular new thing is the pointed ends on these ties. Knitted ties of fine French silk will play a prominent part for this spring.

Hose

The most important thing in hosiery for men is that it matches the tie. Occasionally you will find white silk hose either plain or with black clocks at side, worn with Evening Dress.

Underwear

Owing to the difference in the condition of physical health or constitution the variety is large, some feel better in cotton loose or fitting, others necessarily must have wool. However, since short sleeves in underwear have become so popular with the younger men, it is a certain sign that it is the healthiest garment if one's condition permits it.

Collars

Very little is to be said about collars. The "Poke" for dress, the "Wing" for dinner or day dress, and the "Lapover" for dinner or business wear.

Gloves

The dress glove is white kid; pearl gray for evening wear is also proper. For afternoon wear, gray suede. With the fashionable dresser, for street wear the yellow chamois promises to become fashionable but the most popular yet is the tan cape, or commonly called "Kid" glove.

Walking Sticks

No one should walk at leisure moments without a stick for it serves two purposes, an occupation for one's hands as well as a protection in coming home late at night. Sticks generally worn are "Bamboo' natural crook handle, and the straight stick with gold or silver knob. Not to forget the "Big stick" which is a loaded affair called after the individual style of our President.

MENNEN'S
BORATED TALCUM
TOILET POWDER

"Baby's Best Friend"

and Mamma's greatest comfort. Mennen's relieves and prevents Chapped Hands and Chafing.

For your protection the genuine is put up in non-refillable boxes—the "Box that Lox," with Mennen's face on top. Sold everywhere or by mail 25 cents—Sample free.

Try Mennen's Violet (Borated) Talcum Toilet Powder. It has the scent of Freshest Parma Violets. Sample free.

GERHARD MENNEN CO., Newark, N. J.

Mennen's Sen Yang Toilet Powder, Oriental Odor } No
Mennen's Borated Skin Soap (blue wrapper) } Samples
Specially prepared for the nursery. Sold only at Stores.

GIERSBERGER WINES

The wine of merit and quality all around the world. Compare it with the best wines and we are satisfied.

THEO. GIER WINE COMPANY

Phone Oakland 123 1225-1227 BROADWAY, OAKLAND

We have the wall paper in stock that made this room. We made this Let us make your home beautiful with our Wall Papers, Curtains and so on.

TAYLOR & SINCLAIR CO.

INTERIOR DECORATORS BUSH AT VAN NESS

greatest triumphs in the East. The cast will include May Boley, Frank Moulan, Helen Darling, Zoe Barnett, Lillie Du Fre Hoerston, Fred Mace, James F. Stevens, Bud Ross and Bert Phoenix. "The Rounders" will be under the musical direction of Selli Simonson.

Emma Goldman on The Drama

Emma Goldman, the anarchist, does not spend all her time preaching political revolution. She devotes much of her time to the study of literature and is recognized as an authority on the drama. She has had the advantage of personal acquaintance with some of the most successful dramatists of Europe and her lectures on the drama are said to be most entertaining and instructive. On Sunday afternoon she will lecture at Lyric Hall on "The Drama, the Greatest Disseminator of Radical Thought."

In the Limelight

The attraction to follow "The Red Mill" at the Van Ness Theatre is Clyde Fitch's latest comedy success, "Girls," which played for one year at Daly's Theatre, New York. "Girls" is a dainty exploitation of feminine foibles, reflecting an amusing phase of life which is keenly appreciated even by the members of the sex so artistically caricatured. H. S. Northrup plays one of the leading roles.

"The Fatal Card," the intensely interesting comedy-melodrama by G. Haddon Chambers and B. C. Stevens, which will follow "Secret Service" at the Valencia Theatre, has not been seen in this city for several years, but has always been a favorite play among threatregoers of this city.

Owing to the great number of attractions booked for the Van Ness Theatre in the near future some of the most important offerings will be able to stay for one week only. Among them are "Girls," "The Right of Way," with Theodore Roberts, Guy Standing and May Buckley; Lillian Russell in "Wildfire."

The final performance of "A Stubborn Cinderella" will be given at the Van Ness Theatre on Sunday night. The musical attraction is one of the most pleasing entertainments seen her in a number of seasons and consequently has been doing a big business.

"Liberty Hall," R. C. Carton's charming comedy which had such a run at the Empire Theatre, New York, is promised an early production at the Valencia Theatre.

The engagement of Blanche Stoddard as leading lady of the Valencia Stock Company is drawing to a close. She will make her farewell appearance here in "Sunday," March 7th. Her successor will be another great San Francisco favorite whose name will be announced soon.

Richard Carle in his latest production called "Mary's Lamb" will be seen herein the near future.

There are fully a dozen song hits of exceptional merit in "The Red Mill." An orchestra of twenty will be heard in the rendition of the superb music from the pen of Victor Herbert.

All of the animals used in the original production of "Peter Pan," including the crocodile, lions, tigers and, in fact, the whole menagerie, have been secured for the forthcoming production of Barrie's delightful fantasy at the Valencia Theatre.

Manager Will L. Greenbaum announces the engagement for three concerts in this city of Josef Lhevinne, a famous Russian pianist, who is said to play more like the great Rubinstein than any virtuoso that has appeared before the public since that

Mme. LANGENDORFF

Mezzo-Contralto from Dresden, Bayreuth, etc., and Mme. Flora Karp Heilbron, Pianist
CHRISTIAN SCIENCE HALL
This Sunday at 2:30.
Seats $2.00, $1.50, $1.00. General Admission, $1.00.
OAKLAND CONCERT [illegible]
YE LIBERTY PLAYHOUSE
Baldwin Piano Used.

EXTRA—SUNDAY AFTERNOON February 28th at 2:30

Third Lyric Hall "POP" Concert

String Quartette by Therese Carveno, Sonata for Viola and Piano, a Trio in B flat by Rubinstein.
Assisting Artists [illegible]
Seats 50 cents and $1.00, ready Thursday.
COMING MARCH [illegible]

Emma Goldman's Last Lecture

AT LYRIC HALL, On Larkin Street, between Eddy and Turk.
SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 21st, 3 P. M.
The Drama, the Greatest Disseminator of Radical Thought
ADMISSION 25 CENTS.
DEBATE: On Sunday Afternoon and Evening, February 28th, Miss Goldman, Anarchist, will debate with WALTER THOMAS MILLS, Socialist, in Auditorium Pavilion, Page and Fillmore Streets. Subjects for debate: 3 p. m., "Anarchism vs. Socialism," 8 p. m., "Direct Action vs. Political Action."

VAN NESS THEATRE

Cor. Van Ness and Grove
Gottlobb, Marx & Co., Mgrs
Phone Market 500

Two Weeks Commencing Monday Matinee, Feb. 22d, Washington's Birthday).
Charles Dillingham's Complete Production,
THE RED MILL
By Henry Blossom and Victor Herbert, authors of Mlle. Modiste
Supporting Company of Sixty, Orchestra of Twenty, and the Famous Sextette of Dutch Kiddies.
One Year at the Knickerbocker Theatre, N. Y.
COMING—"GIRLS", by Clyde Fitch.

NEW ALCAZAR THEATRE

Cor. Sutter and Steiner
Class 'A' Building
Phone West 6036

BELASCO & MAYER, Owners and Managers.
Monday Night, February 2nd, Starts The Second Week of
THE ROSE OF THE RANCHO
By David Belasco and Richard Walton Tully.
Prices: Evenings, 25c to $1.00. Matinees, Saturday and Sunday, 25c to 50c.
Extra Matinee Washington's Birthday.

PRINCESS THEATRE

PHONE WEST 663
S. LOVERICH, MANAGER

Ellis Street, near Fillmore
Absolutely Class 'A' Building
Matinee, Saturday and Sunday

Last two Nights of "Lonesome Town"
BEGINNING HOLIDAY MATINEE NEXT MONDAY.
Last Week KOLB & DILL (By Special Request)
PLAYING THE PONIES
Monday, March 1st, Opening of the Musical Comedy Season. May Boley, Frank Moulan, Helen Darling, Zoe Barnett, Lillie Du Fre Hoerston, Fred Mace, James F. Stevens, etc.
Prices—Evenings 25c, 50c, 75c, $1.00. Matinees (Except Sundays and Holidays, 25c, 50c, 75c.

ORPHEUM

Ellis Street, near Fillmore
Absolutely Class 'A' Bldg
Phone West 6000

Week Beginning this Sunday Afternoon. Matinee Every Day.
ARTISTIC VAUDEVILLE.
FRANK NELSON & CO., Presenting Sewell Collins' Character Study, THIRTY DOLLARS; IWAN TSCHERNOFF'S UNIQUE CIRCUS TROUPE; First Vaudeville Appearance of KNICKERBOCKER QUARTETTE; GOLDSMITH & HOPPE, in Their Musical Comedy Act; IMRO FOX; TONY WILSON AND MLLE. HELOISE; AMOROS SISTERS; NEW ORPHEUM MOTION PICTURES. Last Week of "AT THE SOUND OF THE GONG," A Dramatic Episode of the Prize Ring, with Tom (Soldier) Wilson & Co.
Evening Prices: 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c. Box Seats, $1.00. Matinee Prices (Except Sundays and Holidays): 10c, 25c, 50c.

VALENCIA THEATRE

Valencia Street, between Thirteenth and Fourteenth
Phone Market 17

The Only Steam Heated Theatre in the City.
Sunday Afternoon and Evening—Last Times of "The County Chairman."
Commencing Monday Matinee, Feb. 22d, Washington's Birthday, Elaborate Production of
SECRET SERVICE
William Gillette's Great War Play.
Cast to the Full Strength of the Valencia Stock Company.
Regular Matinees, Wednesday and Sunday, Prices 25c to 50c.
Evenings, 25c to 75c. Box Seats, $1.00.
Seats on Sale for All Performances at the Emporium.
Monday, March 1st—"The Fatal Card."

AMERICAN THEATRE

Market St., nr. Seventh
Phone Market 381

Saturday Afternoon and Evening—Last Times of Harry Beresford, in "WHO'S YOUR FRIEND."
Commencing Sunday Afternoon, February 21st, Special Matinee Monday, Washington's Birthday, Liebler & Co. Present
MRS. WIGGS OF THE CABBAGE PATCH
The Success of Three Continents.
Superb Cast. Artistic and Perfect Production.
Prices for This Attraction—Orchestra, First ten rows, $1.50; Balance of Orchestra, $1.00, 75c and 50c. Balcony, 75c and 50c. Gallery, 25c. Matinees—25c., 50c. and 75c.
NEXT—"Babes in Toyland."

YE LIBERTY PLAYHOUSE

Oakland, Cal.
Direction
H. W. Bishop

Commencing Monday Night and all next week, Matinees Saturday and Sunday
RICHARD M. HOTALING
And Bishop's Players in
A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM
Last Week of Mr. Hotaling.
Prices, Evenings, 25c, 50c, 75c. Matinees, Saturday and Sunday, 25c and 50c.

great artist's time. Three magnificent programs will be given at Christian Science Hall, the dates being Sunday afternoons, March 7th and 14th, and Thursday night, March 11th. On Friday afternoon, March 12th, the concert will be given in Oakland at Ye Liberty Playhouse.

Madame Frieda Langendorff, the splendid contralto, will give her last concert at Christian Science Hall this Sunday afternoon, when that interesting pianiste, Mme. Flora Karp Heilbron, will again assist. The program is one of the most varied, novel and interesting ever offered music lovers, many of the works being heard here for the first time. The box office will be open at the hall after ten on the morning of the concert. On Tuesday afternoon the same artistes will give a special program in Oakland at Ye Liberty Playhouse.

There are more "whistling numbers" in the score of Victor Herbert's "Babes in Toyland," which comes to the American Theatre after the run of "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" than in any other work of that famous composer. There are twenty-two musical numbers in the musical comedy and a host of pretty girls wearing the most beautiful gowns. The entire production that scored such a hit for over a year and a half in New York and one year in Chicago will be brought here intact.

Gus Pixley, the brother of Annie Pixley and well known in this city which he claims as his birthplace, will play his original part in the "Babes in Toyland" when that beautiful extravaganza comes to the American Theatre.

"The Gingerbread Man," with its wealth of catchy music, pretty girls, quaint comedians and beautiful costumes, is headed this way and will be seen at the American Theatre next month. The box office is already beseiged with applications for reservations.

Odd Things in the World

A shipyard at Ominato, Japan, still in operation, was established over 1900 years ago.

At Munich there is a hospital the sole support of which is derived from the sale of old steel pen nibs collected from all parts of Germany. They are converted into watch springs and knife and razor blades.

In France a man under twenty-five years of age, whose parents are dead and whose grandmother or grandfather is alive, cannot marry without the written authority of both or either of them.

The black silk handkerchief worn by the enlisted men of the English navy is in token of perpetual mourning for Admiral Nelson. The three narrow white stripes bordering the collar commemorate his three great victories: The Nile, 1798; Copenhagen, 1901; Trafalgar, 1805.

Though it is common custom to sleep with head to the north, many people asserting that they cannot rest in any other position, Hindus and Japanese object to lying with their heads toward the pole. The Hindus assert that it shortens life. The Japanese bury their dead in that position; in some portions of Russia the same antipathy exists, based on a theory that all evil emanates from the north.

The French nobility is exactly twice as numerous now as it was before the great Revolution which was aimed at the aristocracy and by which all titles were abolished. Previous to that time there were 238 French princes and dukes. Today there are upwards of 460. At the beginning of the nineteenth century there were 38,000 titled persons in France of whom less than 20,000 had a legal right to a coat of arms. There are now more than 200,000 individuals duly possessed of patents of nobility. When the nobility was all powerful their aggregate wealth was only one-tenth of what they possess today.

Running A Car By Ear

The trained ear of the experienced automobilist instantly detects the superiority of ZEROLENE Auto Lubricating Oil in the even, contented "pur-r" of the engine that tells the story of perfect lubrication. No matter what the type of gasoline engine or season of the year, ZEROLENE invariably gives perfect lubrication under all conditions.

ZEROLENE

Auto Lubricating Oil

is produced in only one place in the world. It is non-carbonizing, and keeps cylinders and spark plugs in perfect condition. It is practically friction, carbon and trouble proof.

Absolutely free from all trace of acid.

ZEROLENE is put up in sealed cans with patent spout that cannot be refilled. Also put up in barrels for the garage trade. Sold by dealers everywhere.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY
(Incorporated)

SUBURBAN

Equipped as Touring Car

For business or pleasure the STUDEBAKER SUBURBAN is the most serviceable automobile on the market today. When you buy a STUDEBAKER SUBURBAN you practically become the possessor of three cars. With the double seat in the rear you have a stylish, four-passenger touring car; with the single seat in the rear, a smart runabout or roadster; with the seats removed a combination baggage and passenger car. Changes are simple and may be made quickly. Demonstrations at your own convenience.

Fremont at Mission

Studebaker

Phone Douglas 3000

UNION LUMBER COMPANY

Redwood and Pine Lumber

Railroad Ties, Telegraph Poles, Shingles, Split Shakes, Etc.

CROCKER BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Mrs. Warfield

PIANO SCHOOL FOR CHILDREN AND BEGINNERS

Telephone Piedmont 3414 6409 Regent Street, Berkeley

Tuesday and Friday, Ebell Club, Oakland

ASK FOR

BLACK AND WHITE SCOTCH WHISKEY

IT IS THE BEST NONE BOTTLED IN AMERICA

Auto Notes

The new twenty-two horsepower baby Oldsmobile, which arrived this week at the Pioneer Automobile Company, has created a great deal of interest among the automobile enthusiasts along motor row. With 91 inch wheel base, four cylinders cast in pairs, nickel heated steel frame, and weighing close to 1400 pounds, the new addition to the Oldsmobile family represents the latest in the light touring car, or the business man's runabout. Equipped with magneto and selling for $1350 in San Francisco, the Olds "20" is expected to prove popular among doctors and professional men. "That little rabbit can go easily 45 miles an hour," said Charles Allen of the Pioneer Company, after returning from a strenuous test of the new machine. "It has all the power necessary, and as for riding qualities, I have never ridden in a machine with more spring and comfort than this one has. I was surprised with the ease and speed with which the car took the hills. With five people I went over the worst sort of grades at twenty miles an hour. So great has been the interest in the new machine, that it has not yet been on the floor of the salesroom on account of the constant demand for demonstrations."

Three new Studebaker touring cars arrived recently at the Studebaker Bros.' Company of California, and are on display in the sales rooms. Two of the machines are of the "30" type and the third is of the "40" horsepower type. The cars are painted a pearl gray and are the most handsome appearing that have been received by the local Studebaker branch since the first of the new year. All three cars have been sold and will be delivered to the buyers in a few days.

S. M. Phillips of Sacramento has just secured the agency for that territory for the Buick line of automobiles. Mr. Phillips took delivery yesterday of an '09 Buick "White Streak," and also placed an order for a carload of these machines to be shipped from the factory at the earliest possible moment. Mr. Phillips says that the demand for the Buick is going to be very great in Sacramento this season, and expects to do a great business in this line of machines.

According to reports from Los Angeles, another attempt is to be made to establish a transcontinental record. R. A. Brassy, Southern California representative of the Thomas car, is the prospective record breaker, and the car he will use is the seventy horsepower 6-cylinder Thomas Flyabout, the first model of which has just reached Los Angeles. Brassy proposes to make the start from the Southern Metropolis, May 15th at midnight, and cross the continent to New York in thirteen days, cutting several days from L. L. Witman's recent record. The course, as planned, will follow the old Santa Fe track through Mojave Desert and Death Valley, through Goldfield and Daggett, taking nearly the course of the New York to Paris race at Mojave. Besides this proposed record-breaking trip, Brassy is at present considering setting a new mark for the San Francisco to Los Angeles record, and as soon as the roads will permit, the big long seventy horsepower Thomas Flyabout is expected to be sent over the 600 mile course made famous by Fernando Nelson and other automobile racing drivers.

Yesterday it looked as though a procession of '09 Buick "White Streaks" was starting from the headquarters of the Howard Automobile Company on Golden Gate Avenue, as the following list of customers were all taking delivery at the same time of the '09 "White Streaks"—W. F. Hunt of San Jose, S. M. Phillips of Sacramento, Stanford Auto. Company of Palo Alto, Wm. G. VanZee of Woodland, Carl Christenson of Oakland, and J. H. Covell of Watsonville.

"It seems certain that the motor car is not destined to lose its popular favor as did the bicycle," says Chester N. Weaver, manager of the Studebaker Brothers Company, who returned a few days ago from the New York shows. "There is a wide difference between the bicycle propelled by human power and an automobile propelled by a powerful gasoline motor. The bicycle carried one and requires great muscular exertion, while the motor car take the entire family out with much greater speed than can be attained by any other means of private conveyance. It gives the luxurious ease which is so desired by all classes, especially when they are tired from the present day strenuous life. Everyone who had the good fortune to visit the great shows in New York City this year went away with the one big central idea—that the automobile had become a permanent adjunct to every comfortable home of those who can afford it. The house and its equipment furnish the interior comfort and luxury of the family, while the automobile furnishes the outdoor enjoyment which is so beneficial to health and strength."

The Howard Automobile Company has just received an order from the Santa Rosa Garage of Santa Rosa, Buick agents in that territory, for a carload of the new 40 horsepower Buicks and a carload of the Buick "White Streaks." The Santa Rosa Garage unloaded a carload of the Buick "White Streaks" the other day and the cars went so fast that they immediately placed their second carload order for these models. The demand for the Buick throughout the State is very encouraging to the Howard Automobile Company—especially considering weather conditions for the past month or so, and this concern expects to at least doubt their '09 business.

Considerable attention was attracted at the recent automobile show in New York city by the Studebaker limousine, and

RACING

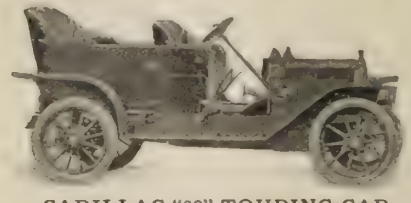
NEW CALIFORNIA JOCKEY CLUB

OAKLAND RACE TRACK

Six races each week day, rain or shine. First Race at 1:40 p. m.

For special [illegible] take Southern Pacific [illegible] ket street; leave at 12 M.; thereafter every twenty minutes until 1:40 P. M.

No smoking in the last two cars, which are reserved for ladies and their escorts.



PERCY W. TREAT, Sec'y. THOS. H. WILLIAMS, Pres.

Packard — Cadillac

All That is Best in Motor Car Construction

PACKARD '09 TOURING CAR

CADILLAC "30" TOURING CAR

30 horsepower, four cylinder, 5 passenger, $1550.00

Cuyler Lee

453 GOLDEN GATE AVENUE SAN FRANCISCO

1909

THOMAS FLYER

6-40. Price, $3,180 San Francisco.

The new 6-cylinder, 40 H. P. Thomas Car has proved equal to the most difficult road and track tests. The finest riding qualities of any car on the market. Other models include the famous New York to Paris type and new demountable limousine body.

Also full line of 1909, 4-cylinder Chalmers-Detroit, 30 H. P. Price, $1,650 San Francisco.

DELIVERY NOW

PIONEER AUTOMOBILE CO.

524 Twentieth St., Oakland 901 Golden Gate Ave., San Francisco

the New York Sun; in speaking of that car, said: No cars in the Garden have been more commented upon than the luxurious limousine exhibited by the Studebaker firm. This car is painted in a striking combination of green and black, and the upholstering is in Nile green and Parisian brocade. Every accessory which is known to the automobile industry tending toward luxury and comfort has been installed in this limousine, which is priced at $12,000."

Mr. Mahoney of the Olson-Mahoney Lumber Company of this city placed an order yesterday with the Howard Automobile Company for an '09 40 horsepower Buick to be delivered within the next thirty days.

Within a short time the famous Studebaker "army dispatch car," which made a phenomenal run last year from New York City to Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, carrying a message from General Frederick D. Grant to Colonel Loughborough, will be started on a run to the Pacific Coast and back. En route west the car will pass through Denver, Salt Lake City, Phoenix, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland and Seattle. The return trip will be made via the northwest. Ever since the "army dispatch car" made its celebrated run, the Studebaker people have kept it in commission for all kinds of hard work, and it is the intention of the company to continue to use it in a similar manner until 250,000 miles have been covered. This is being done for the purpose of demonstrating that a light weight car of good construction will stand greater wear and tear than a car of any other type.

WHAT WINGFIELD THINKS OF GOLDFIELD

George Wingfield, vice-president of the Goldfield Consolidated Mines Company, whose sudden rise from comparative poverty to the affluence of a multi-millionaire when the Mohawk mine made its sensational strike a few years ago and the stock of the company rose quickly from twenty-five cents to twenty dollars a share, is quoted in the Goldfield News of December 12, 1908, as saying: "The Mohawk has made a magnificent record, as everybody knows, but there are other Mohawks in the Goldfield district." The Mohawk-Triangle Mining Company is practically a close corporation, very little of its stock having been permitted to its treasury but all who are interested in the company or who are in close touch with its management thoroughly agree with Mr. Wingfield. Before the present managers of the company secured these claims they spent days and weeks thoroughly examining and pricing every available claim in the Goldfield district, and judging then from the excellent surface showings, from the fact that the claims were traversed by two of the strongest quartz, outcroppings to be found in the State, from the values placed on and found in the adjoining properties and the prices at which claims in the immediate vicinity were selling, they believed they had secured a bargain, while now, having practically proved their value by the development work already done, they are convinced of it, and honestly and sincerely believe their property to be worth over a million dollars and that they will take many millions out of it before the end of next year. Over sixty-seven thousand dollars, it is said, was taken out of the Ish-Sheets shaft, within a few feet of the Mohawk-Triangle sideline during the last three days of the Ish-Sheets lease. Mr. S. Thorton Langley, a Goldfield pioneer and one of the best informed and most successful mining operators in the district, writes as follows: "In my opinion, the combination of your Camp Bird Group with your Mohawk-Triangle Claim, presents the strongest combination of any group of mines in Goldfield today." From all reports it certainly looks as though this was one of the coming mines of the Goldfield district.

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY ORDER OF SALE OF REAL ESTATE SHOULD NOT BE MADE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 2490. Dept. No. 10.

In the Matter of the Estate of GEORGE G. RUNDLE, Deceased.

Hannah C. Rundle, administratrix of the estate of George G. Rundle, deceased, having filed her verified petition herein for an order of sale of the real property of said estate situated in the City and County of San Francisco, and in the County of San Bernardino, and it satisfactorily appearing to me from such petition that it is necessary, and it would be for the benefit, advantage and best interests of the estate of said deceased and those interested therein, to sell the whole, or some portion, of the said real estate to pay the debts outstanding against the decedent, and the debts, expenses and charges of administration of said estate, as in said petition set forth:

It is therefore ordered that said petition be set for hearing by said court on Monday, the 15th day of March, A. D. 1909, at the hour of ten o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the courtroom of said Superior Court, in Department Ten (10) thereof, in room number 603 of the Grant Building, situate at the southeast corner of Market and Seventh streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased appear before the above-named Superior Court at said time and place then and there to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said administratrix to sell said real property of said estate described in said petition, or as much thereof as may be necessary, for the purposes hereinbefore and in said petition stated.

And it is further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least once a week for four successive weeks before the said day of hearing in Town Talk, a newspaper printed and published weekly in said City and County of San Francisco.

Dated, February 6th, A. D. 1909.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

AITKEN & AITKEN, Attorneys for Administratrix,
Monadnock Building, Rooms 997-998-978-982, San Francisco. 2-13-5

TRY MURINE EYE REMEDY

For Red, Weak, Weary, Watery Eyes.
Murine Doesn't Smart—It Soothes Eye Pain.
Try Murine For Your Eyes.

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 13834.

DENNIS J. HORGAN, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Lien Upon the Real Property Herein Described or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in or lien upon the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, Greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Dennis J. Horgan, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Scott street, distant thereon northerly from the northerly line of Haight street one hundred and thirteen (113) feet and six (6) inches; thence running northerly along said easterly line of Scott street twenty-four (24) feet; thence at right angles easterly one hundred and ten (110) feet; thence at right angles southerly twenty-four (24) feet, and thence at right angles westerly one hundred and ten (110) feet to the easterly line of Scott street and the point of commencement. Being a part of the Western Addition Block number four hundred and thirty-nine (439), and also right of way over passage extending the length of the above described property and a width of those three (3) feet six (6) inches on the South of the same.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to wit: For a judgment of said Court as follows:

1st. Ascertaining and determining all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said real property and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, or whether the same consists of mortgages or liens of any description.

2nd. Establishing the title of plaintiff to said real property and determining all adverse claims thereto, and adjudging that plaintiff is the owner in severalty and in fee simple absolute of said real property and every part thereof.

3rd. For such other and further relief as to the Court may seem proper and for costs of suit.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 14th day of January, A. D. 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By T. C. RYAN, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 23d day of January, 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in or lien upon said property adverse to plaintiff: The German Savings and Loan Society, whose address is No. 526 California street, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

JOSEPH H. TAM, Attorney for Plaintiff,
511 Balboa Building, San Francisco, Cal. 1-23-10

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Action No. 13477.

EDWARD FRANCIS McKITTRICK, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Lien Upon the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, Defendants, Greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Edward Francis McKittrick, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above-entitled Court and county, within three (3) months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Folsom Street, distant thereon one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet Northerly from the Northerly line of Twenty-second (22nd) Street and running thence Northerly along said line of Folsom Street twenty-four (24) feet; thence at a right angle Easterly one hundred and twenty-two (122) feet and six (6) inches; thence at a right angle Southerly twenty-four (24) feet and thence at a right angle Westerly one hundred and twenty-two (122) feet and six (6) inches to the said Easterly line of Folsom Street and point of commencement.

Being a portion of Mission Block Number 54.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit:

That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute; that his title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover his costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 29th day of December, A. D. 1908.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By M. P. BRUTEN, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 9th day of January, 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiff: None.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Attorney for Plaintiff, Rooms 1255-57 Flood Bldg., 870 Market Street, San Francisco. 1-9-10

NEW YEAR GREETING

Start 1909 aright. Telephone us about wiring or repairing.

Telephone Douglas 1185 and 1186.

LEVY ELECTRIC CO.

LEVY ELECTRIC WIRING COMPANY

HURRY UP ELECTRICIANS

Electric Trains, Cars, Dynamos, Motors, Batteries, Machinery, Magic Lanterns
Moving Pictures, Telegraph and Telephones, Wireless Outfits, X-rays, Etc.

648 Sacramento St. San Francisco 1205 Polk Street

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY ORDER OF SALE OF REAL PROPERTY SHOULD NOT BE MADE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 2133. Dept. No. 10.

In the Matter of the Guardianship of the Estates of RANDOLPH WILSON SMITH, and ROBERTA GENEVIEVE SMITH, Minors.

EMILY MAY SMITH, guardian of the estate of the above named minors, having filed herein her verified petition praying for an order directing the sale of certain real property belonging to the estates of said minors, and more particularly described in said petition, and it appearing to the Court from said petition that it is necessary and will be beneficial to said minors, and each of them, and to their respective estates, that said real property should be sold, and good cause appearing;

It is hereby ordered that the next of kin of said minors and each of them, and all persons interested in their or either of their estates, appear before the above entitled court, Department No. 10 thereof, at its Courtroom in the Grant Building, situated on the corner of Seventh and Market Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, on the 2nd day of March, 1909, at the hour of 10 o'clock a. m. of said day, to show cause why an order should not be granted for the sale of said real property; and

It is hereby further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least once a week for three (3) successive weeks next preceding said day, in Town Talk, a newspaper printed and published in said City and County.

Dated, January 30th, 1909.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

W. H. ORRICK, Attorney for Guardian,
617 Balboa Building, San Francisco, Cal. 2-6-4

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Action No. 13512.

MARY A. DALY, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, Defendants, Greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of MARY A. DALY, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above-entitled Court and County, within three (3) months after the first publication of this SUMMONS, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situated, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

Parcel Number One. Commencing at a point on the Westerly line of Devisadero Street, distant thereon sixty-three (63) feet nine (9) inches Southerly from the Southerly line of Jackson Street; running thence Southerly along said Westerly line of Devisadero Street twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet six (6) inches; thence at right angles Northerly twenty-five feet (25) feet, and thence at right angles Easterly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet six (6) inches to the point of commencement. Being a portion of Western Addition Block Number 497.

Parcel Number Two. Commencing at a point on the Northerly line of Clay Street, distant thereon one hundred and ten (110) feet Easterly from the Easterly line of Devisadero Street, and running thence Easterly and along the said Northerly line of Clay Street twenty-eight (28) feet nine (9) inches; thence at right angles northerly one hundred and twenty-seven (127) feet eight and one-quarter (8¼) inches; thence at right angles Westerly twenty-eight (28) feet nine (9) inches; and thence at right angles Southerly one hundred and twenty-seven (127) feet eight and one-quarter (8¼) inches to the Northerly line of Clay Street and the point of commencement. Being a portion of Western Addition Block Number 463.

Parcel Number Three. Commencing at the Southeasterly corner of Bush and Powell Streets; running thence Easterly along the Southerly line of Bush Street forty-five (45) feet; thence at right angles Southerly sixty-seven (67) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Westerly forty-five (45) feet to the Easterly line of Powell Street; and thence Northerly along said Easterly line of Powell Street sixty-seven (67) feet and six (6) inches to the point of commencement. Being a portion of Fifty Vara Lot Number 314.

Parcel Number Four. Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Folsom Street, distant thereon one hundred and ninety (190) feet Southerly from the Southerly line of Precita Place; running thence Southerly and along said Easterly line of Folsom Street twenty-seven (27) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Easterly one hundred and ten (110) feet; thence at right angles Northerly twenty-seven (27) feet and six (6) inches; and thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and ten (110) feet to the Easterly line of Folsom Street, and the point of commencement. Being Lot Number 32, as per Kingston's Map of Lots Numbers 148 to 153, Precita Valley Lands, filed in the office of the County Recorder of the City and County of San Francisco, July 20, 1865, and recorded in Map-Book E and F of Maps, at page 29.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit:

That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute; that her title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 31st day of December, A. D. 1908.

(Seal)

H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this Summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 9th day of January, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiff: A. TURTURICI and E. TURTURICI, residing at _____, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, have and claim an interest in Parcel Number Four of the land in said Complaint and hereinabove described, under a certain Agreement of Sale.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Attorney for Plaintiff, Rooms 1255-1257 Flood Bldg., 870 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal. 1-9-10

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of HENRI HOURCADE, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Administratrix with the Will annexed of the estate of Henri Hourcade, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within four months after the first publication of this notice to the said Administratrix with the Will annexed, at the law office of A. Comte, Jr., No. 333 Kearny Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned selects as her place of business in all matters connected with said estate of Henri Hourcade, deceased.

PAULINE HOURCADE,
Administratrix with the Will annexed of the estate of Henri Hourcade, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, February 9th, 1909.

A. COMTE, Jr., Attorney for Administratrix with the Will annexed,
333 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. 2-13-5

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 13833.

MARY HORGAN, a Widow, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Liens Upon the Real Property Herein Described or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in or lien upon the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, Greeting:

You are are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Mary Horgan, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the Court of the above entitled City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the northerly line of Fulton street, distant thereon one hundred and forty-six (146) feet ten and one-half inches (10½) inches westerly from the intersection of the westerly line of Baker street with the northerly line of Fulton street, and then running thence westerly along the said line of Fulton street twenty-five (25) feet, thence at right angle northerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet and six (6) inches, thence at a right angle easterly twenty-five (25) feet, and thence at a right angle southerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet and six (6) inches to the northerly line of Fulton street and point of commencement. Being Block No. 592, a portion of the Western Addition.

You are hereby notified that unless you appear and answer the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to wit: For a judgment of said Court as follows:

1st. Ascertaining and determining all estate, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said real property and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, or whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description.

2nd. Establishing the title of plaintiff to said real property and determining all adverse claims thereto, and adjudging that plaintiff is the owner in severalty and in fee simple absolute of said real property and every part thereof.

3rd. For such other and further relief as to the Court may seem proper and for costs of suit.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 14th day of January, A. D. 1909.

(Seal)

H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By T. C. RYAN, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 23d day of January, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon said real property adverse to plaintiff: The Hibernia Savings and Loan Society, whose address is on the Northwest corner of Jones and McAllister streets, San Francisco, California.

JOSEPH H. TAM, Attorney for Plaintiff,
511 Balboa Building, San Francisco, Cal. 1-23-10

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 7042, New Series. Dept. Nine. Probate.

In the Matter of the Estate of GEORGE BASTIAN, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned William Bastian, Executor of the last will and testament of the above named George Bastian, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within four (4) months after the first publication of this notice, (which first publication occurs on the 6th day of February, 1909), to the said William Bastian, executor of the last will and testament of said George Bastian, deceased, at the office of his attorney, John J. Barrett, room 1255 Flood Building, Number 870 Market Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned selects as his place of business in all matters connected with said estate of said George Bastian, deceased.

WILLIAM BASTIAN,
Executor of the last will and testament of said George Bastian, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, California, February 6th, 1909.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Attorney for said Executor,
Rooms 1255-1257 Flood Building, San Francisco, Cal. 2-6-5

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY SALE OF REAL ESTATE SHOULD NOT BE MADE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 5103, N. S. Dept. 10, Probate.

In the matter of the Estate and Guardianship of JOHN M. COLE, Jr., an Incompetent Person.

CATHERINE COLE, guardian of the person and estate of JOHN M. COLE, Jr., an incompetent person, having presented her petition herein duly verified, praying for an order of the sale of the whole of the real estate of the said incompetent, for the reasons and purposes in said petition mentioned and set forth;

And such petition having been filed, it is now ordered by said Court that the next of kin of said incompetent person, and all persons interested in the estate of said incompetent person, be, and they are hereby directed to appear before said Court on Tuesday, the 2nd day of March, 1909, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the courtroom of Department 10 of said Superior Court, in the Grant Building, on the Southeast corner of Market and Seventh Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to show cause, if any they have, why an order should not be granted directing, empowering, and authorizing the said guardian to sell the whole or so much of the real estate of said incompetent person as may be necessary.

It is further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least once a week for three successive weeks in Town Talk, a newspaper of general circulation, printed and published in the said City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

Dated this 29th day of January, 1909.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

EDWARD J. LYNCH, Attorney for Guardian,
Mills Building, San Francisco, Cal.

Endorsed: Filed Jan. 29, 1909. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk. By H. G. BENEDICT, Deputy Clerk 2-6-4

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 7058, New Series. Department Ten.

In the Matter of the Estate of JOSEPH CHAPMAN DYAS, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned EDWIN JOSEPH DYAS, Administrator of the estate of Joseph Chapman Dyas, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said Joseph Chapman Dyas, deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten (10) months after the first publication of this notice (which first publication occurs on the 6th day of February, 1909), to the said Edwin Joseph Dyas, administrator of the estate of said Joseph Chapman Dyas, deceased, at the office of of his attorneys, John J. Barrett and Frank I. Barrett, room 1255 Flood Building, Number 870 Market Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned selects as his place of business in all matters connected with said estate of said Joseph Chapman Dyas, deceased.

EDWIN JOSEPH DYAS,
Administrator of the estate of said Joseph Chapman Dyas, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, California, February 6th, 1909.

JOHN J. BARRRETT and FRANK I. BARRETT,
Attorneys for Administrator, Room 1255 Flood Bldg., S. F. 2-6-5

Louis Crepaux

(Member of Paris Grand Opera)

Has removed to his new studio,

Delbert Block, 943 Van Ness avenue, cor. O'Farrell.

Reception hours: 11:30 to 12, and 3 to 4, exeept Wednesdays. Wednesdays in Oakland, 1154 Brush street.

Emil Steinegger

PIANOFORTE PLAYING

924 Grove St (above Fillmore), San Francisco.

For appointments phone Merritt 2845

Thursdays, 2701 Regent St., Berkeley

Mackenzie Gordon

TENOR

TEACHER OF SINGING { in all its branches, from the rudiments of tone formation to the highest finish and Completion of Public Singing.

Oratorio, Opera and Concert

By appointment only Phone Franklin 3594

Studio: 1350 FRANKLIN ST.

Louis H. Eaton

Organist and Director of the Music Trinity Church

Teacher of

PIANO, ORGAN, SINGING

1678 Broadway Phone Franklin 2244

Donald Maclean

SINGING—Pupil Seagle and De Rezske

Henri Etlin

PIANO—First Prize Paris Conservatoire

STUDIO, 1613 GREEN ST. Phone, Franklin 3153

Mme. Ellen Roeckel-Davis

VOCAL STUDIO

The 18th-Street Car Passes the Door — 1143 Ashbury Street Near 17th St.

Samuel M. Shortridge

ATTORNEY AT LAW

CHRONICLE BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO

Tel. Douglas 2176

Robert B. McMillan

ATTORNEY AT LAW

Has removed his Law Offices to the

CHRONICLE BUILDING, Fifth Floor

Phone Kearny 5969 Rooms 517-518

Knight & Heggerty

ATTORNEYS AT LAW and

PROCTORS IN ADMIRALTY

MERCHANTS EXCHANGE BLDG., S. F.

Rooms 626 and 630

LA GRANDE AND WHITES LAUNDRY CO.

Office and Works

234 TWELFTH STREET Bet. Mission and Howard

Phone Market 1690 SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Dept. 10—No. 20497.

ANNA D. ROLLER, Plaintiff,

vs.

ALVA AARON and M. CLIFFORD AARON, Defendants.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Alva Aaron and M. Clifford Aaron, Defendants.

You are hereby directed to appear and answer the complaint in an action entitled as above brought against you in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, within ten days after the service on you of this summons—if served within this City and County; or within thirty days if served elsewhere.

And you are hereby notified that unless you appear and answer as above required, the said plaintiff will take judgment for any money or damages demanded in the complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, this 23rd day of December, A. D. 1908.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

By L. J. WELCH, Deputy Clerk.

TOBIN & TOBIN, Attorneys for Plaintiff. 1-16-10

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, No. 20725.

ADELE RAYNAL, Plaintiff,

vs.

HENRI RAYNAL, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Henri Raynal, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's wilfull desertion; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 8th day of January, A. D. 1209.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

By W. R. CASTAGNETTO, Deputy Clerk.

P. A. BERGEROT, Attorney for Plaintiff, 110 Sutter Street, San Francisco, Cal. 1-16-10

Mrs. Helen Derber

Graduate Masseuse. Electric Treatment.

Phone West 8802 2024 SUTTER STREET

Electric Vibratory Massage

Professional Masseuse. Expert Treatment.

Room 316 943 VAN NESS AVENUE

UNION LUMBER CO.

Redwood and Pine Lumber

Railroad Ties, Telegraph Poles, Shingles, Split Shakes, Etc.

CROCKER BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

No. 7022, Dept. 10.

Estate of ADOLPHE ROOS, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, executors of the last will and testament of Adolphe Roos, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said executors at Heller, Powers & Ehrman, 713 Union Trust Building, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, which said office the undersigned select as their place of business in all matters connected with said estate of Adolphe Roos, deceased.

GEORGE H. ROOS,
LEON L. ROOS,
Executors of the Last Will and Testament of Adolphe Roos, Deceased.

Dated: San Francisco, Cal., January 23, 1909.

HELLER, POWERS & EHRMAN,
Attorneys for Executors,
Union Trust Bldg., San Francisco. 1-23-5

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., San Francisco, Cal.

Guaranteed Capital	$ 1,200,000.00
Capital actually paid up in cash	$ 1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds	$ 1,479,043.00
Deposits December 31, 1908	$35,079,498.53
Total Assets	$37,661,836.70

Remittance may be made by Draft, Post Office, or Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Money Orders, or coin by Express.

Office Hours: 10 o'clock a. m. to 3 o'clock p. m., except Saturdays to 12 o'clock m. and Saturday evenings from 7 o'clock p. m. to 8 o'clock p. m. for receipt of deposits only.

OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohte; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourny; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS—N. Ohlandt, Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohte; Ign. Steinhardt, I. N. Walter, J. W. Van Bergen, F. Tillmann, Jr., E. T. Kruse and W. S. Goodfellow.

MISSION BRANCH, 2572 Mission Street, between 21st and 22nd Street. For receipt and payment of Deposits only. C. W. Heyer, Manager.

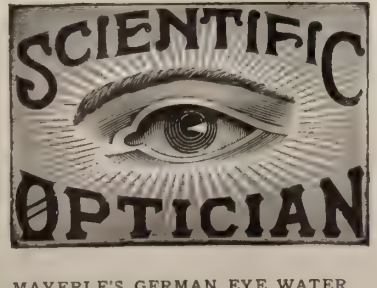
DOWN TOWN NOW

CALIFORNIA OPTICAL CO. are now in their new store, 181 Post St., near Grant Ave. The Fillmore Street store is closed.

MEN

Afflicted with any private ailment consult the United Physicians and Surgeons. Strictly reliable specialists in Genito-Urinary, Blood and Skin diseases, and all reflex ailments of men. Prompt, efficient services; fees moderate; consultation free and confidential. Write or call. Hours 9 a. m. to 9 p. m. Sundays, 9 to 2.

A word to the wise is sufficient.



United Physicians and Surgeons

517 Twenty-third St., Oakland

Near Telegraph Avenue.

10 Third Street, San Francisco

Next to Call Building

MAYERLE'S GERMAN EYE WATER

By Mail 65c

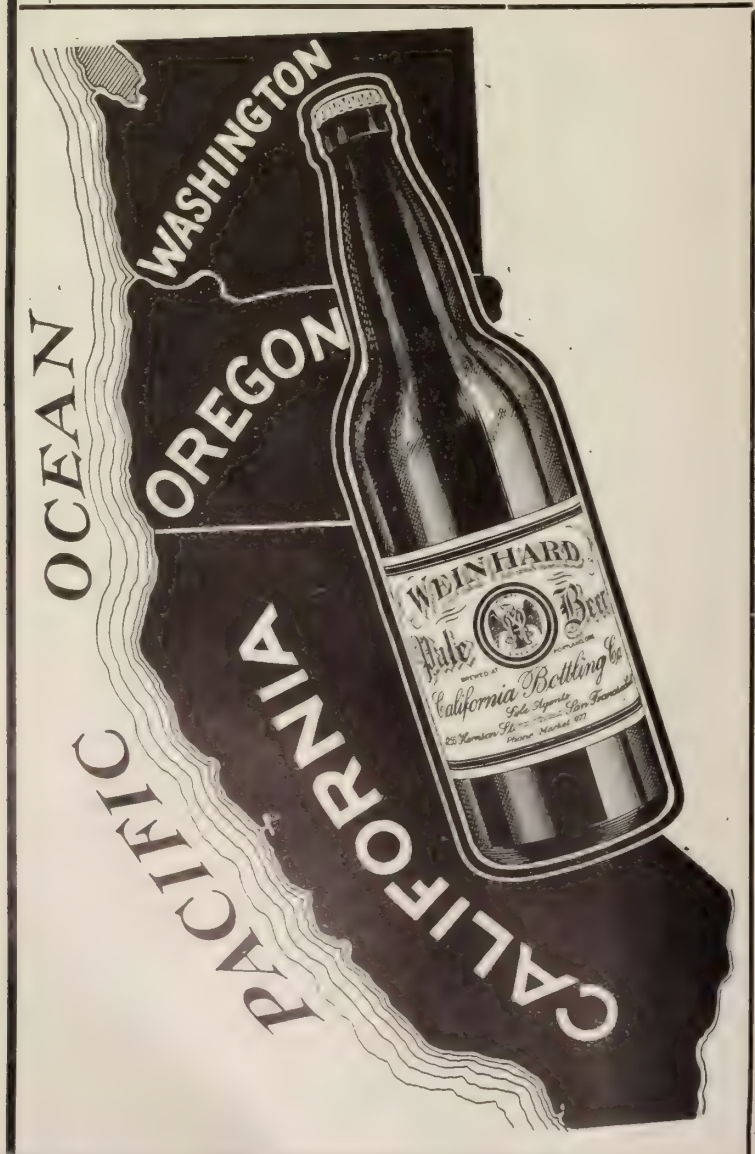
Mayerle's German Eyewater

Highly Recommended for

Painful, Sore, Red, Inflamed, Burning, Smarting, Itching Scratching, Twitching, and Gluey Eyes, Heavy or Crusty Eyelids, Floating Spots, Cloudiness of Vision, Cross Eyes, Watery or Discharging Eyes, feeling like sand in the Eyes, Heavy and Crusty Eyelids.

NEGLECTED EYESIGHT AFFECTS THE BRAIN

Mayerle's Glasses rest and strengthen the eyes, relieves the strain, and preserve the sight.



GEORGE MAYERLE

Graduate German Expert Optician, charter member American Association of Opticians and Vice-President Optical Specialist Association of America, 1149 Golden Gate Ave., between Webster and Buchanan sts. Phone Park 3153, San Francisco.

THE BOAST OF THE WESTERN COAST

WEINHARD

PORTLAND BEER

"Pale Beer"

"Kaiserblume"

PORTER AND MALT EXTRACT

Weinhard Bottling Co.

BOTTLING AGENTS

1255 HARRISON ST., SAN FRANCISCO

Telephone Market 977

Vol. XVII. No. 861. SAN FRANCISCO, FEBRUARY 27, 1909. PRICE, 10 CENTS

SAN FRANCISCO TOWN TALK

BOOTH'S CRESCENT BRAND

The Most Delicious Fish Put in Tins

CALIFORNIA

BROILED MACKEREL

(SARDINIA CAERULEUS)

Packed in SPICE, MUSTARD or TOMATO SAUCE as you prefer

20c Everywhere

MONTEREY PACKING COMPANY, Monterey, Cal.

F. E. BOOTH, Sole Agent, Sacramento and Drumm Sts., San Francisco

Leading Hotels and Resorts

HOTEL ST. FRANCIS

THE FARTHEST ADVANCE OF SCIENCE IN HOTEL SERVICE

Quick room service is gained by maintaining pantries on every other floor.

Under the management of JAMES WOODS

FAIRMONT HOTEL

THE HOTEL THAT SATISFIES
the traveler, the business man, the epicure, the society woman, the entertainer and the entertained

Management of PALACE HOTEL COMPANY

HOTEL WASHINGTON

JOHN H. LANGTON, Manager
SEATTLE, WASH.

A magnificent modern structure involving over One Million and a Half Dollars. Conducted on Most liberal ideas of Experience. Its appointments and service cannot be excelled in the United States. The management cordially invites your patronage.

THE PERRY

Madison St. and Boren Ave.
SEATTLE, WASH.

EVERY MODERN CONVENIENCE

Absolutely fire proof, European plan, the highest grade. Under new management. Centrally located and commanding a view of the Olympics, Cascade Mountains, Mt. Rainier and Puget Sound. J. S. McTERNAN, Manager.

HOTEL WASHINGTON ANNEX

SEATTLE, WASH.

Best Rooms Best Service
Strictly First-Class

J. H. DAVIS - - - - - Proprietor

PLAY GOLF
AT
HOTEL DEL MONTE

On the finest 18-hole course in the country

Through parlor car leaves San Francisco daily 3 p. m. For literature, week-end rates and reservations address H. R. WARNER, Manager, or Peck-Judah Co., 789 Market St., S. F.

HOTEL SORRENTO

Corner
Madison St. and Terry Ave.
SEATTLE

European and American Plan

Roof Garden, Tea and Dining Rooms on Top Floor overlooking Sound, Lakes and Mountains.

Langford & Henderson, Proprietors
J. G. Wright, Manager

BYRON
HOT SPRINGS

GO NOW

It is Spring, the most beautiful season; forget your troubles for a time; get a rest and new lease of life. The waters will cure your ills and even if you have none will make you feel better. Ideal Hotel accommodations. 2½ hours from San Francisco.

Descriptive matter on application to S. P. Co. Information Bureau, Peck-Judah Co., or Manager Byron Hot Springs, Cal.

HOTEL CARLTON

Telegraph Avenue at Durant
BERKELEY

A FIRST-CLASS TRANSIENT AND FAMILY HOTEL

MRS. W. F. MORRIS, Proprietor
formerly of Hotel Cecil, 960 Bush Street, San Francisco

TOWN TALK

Vol. XVII. San Francisco, February 27, 1909. No. 861

WASHINGTON ANNEX HOTEL AND PARLOR, SEATTLE.

TOWN TALK

Published Weekly by
TOWN TALK PUBLISHING COMPANY
Theodore F. Bonnet.....Editor
Ralph A. Grover.....Manager
88 First St., cor. Mission, San Francisco. Telephone Douglas 2612.

SUBSCRIPTION—One Year, in advance, $4.00; six months, $2.25; three months, $1.30; single copies, 10 cents. Foreign subscriptions (countries in Postal Union), $5.00 per year. For sale by all Newsdealers.
Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter.
The Trade in San Francisco supplied direct by us. Outside of San Francisco by the San Francisco News Co.
For foreign and local advertising rates address 88 First Street, San Francisco.
Los Angeles office, 734 Central Building.
Seattle office, 804 Third Avenue. Theo. S. Hanaford, Special Representative.
We decline to return or to enter into correspondence as to rejected communications; and to this rule we can make no exception. Manuscripts not acknowledged within four weeks are rejected.

Our Great State

Californians are justly proud of the fame that has come to the State through its wonderful record as a producer of everything that is good in the agricultural, horticultural and mineral lines, but while we are contemplating the vast array of the State's soil products we should not forget the importance of California's manufacturing interests. No region is better endowed by nature for a great manufacturing center. With an inexhaustible supply of raw products, potential water power in the Sierras sufficient to run the engines of all the world's commerce, cheap fuel in the form of petroleum, and innumerable points where ship and freight car can come together, California's future as a manufacturing State is assured. It is beyond question that these resources will be developed to the full in the near future. Eminent authorities agree that the Pacific is to be the arena of the world's commerce during the twentieth century, the opening of the Panama Canal will mean much to the entire Pacific Coast, and San Francisco, as the chief port of Western America, will benefit relatively more than any other harbor. According to the estimates made by the California Promotion Committee the value of California's manufacturing products in 1907 was $400,000,000. When it is considered that the total value of the agricultural products for that year amounted to $213,000,000, not much more than one-half that of the manufactures, while mineral productions aggregated $44,000,000, and the lumber output $17,000,000, the big share that manufactures contribute towards the wealth of the State may be readily appreciated.

The Hetch-Hetchy Question

William L. Jepson of Berkeley has written to the New York Post in explanation of the organized opposition to the Hetch-Hetchy water project which has been conducted by John Muir and thousands of lovers of the scenic wonders of the Yosemite Valley. Mr. Jepson says that if San Francisco could obtain no other source of supply than that of Hetch-Hetchy then John Muir and his friends would be most unreasonable to oppose the grant, but such is not the case. There are other sources accessible, but for any of these, Mr. Jepson explains, San Francisco will have to pay. As San Francisco "is a city of vast and growing wealth, it can well afford to purchase outright what it needs." Mr. Jepson thinks it is more important to preserve a park, "unparalleled in its attractiveness" than to save a rich city the cost of a water supply. Considered even as a commercial proposition, he argues, as a tourist pleasure ground it will yield a financial return to California "vastly greater than the money value of the proposed reservoir could possibly be to San Francisco." Mr. Jepson evidently has been very much pained by the treatment which he and his friends have received at the hands of the advocates of the Hetch-Hetchy project. He says that there are some high-minded men among them but there are others who will in no case "play fair" and that these "through the press are beclouding issues." He characterizes the attempt to connect Muir and himself and others with the private interests of the Spring Valley Water Company as "mere trickery." This is a very mild characterization, but the mildness of it may be accounted for by the circumstance that Mr. Jepson is of Berkeley, a community dominated morally and intellectually by men who are the intimate associates of the very persons to whom Mr. Jepson refers as incapable of "playing fair." Mr. Phelan and the editors of the Call and the Bulletin are the leading exponents of the principle of questioning the motive of your opponent in controversy. This is a principle which animates the arguments of university professors officially identified with Berkeley.

A Femine Controversy

Woman's "inferiority to man" is again a subject of controversy among women, incited by the affirmative premiss presented by Lady Paget, an American woman who wears an English title by marriage. American women have taken issue with Lady Paget, but English women are generally agreed with her because English women are mostly content to be ruled by their husbands to whom they "look up," and under whose rod, which old English law prescribes shall be "no thicker than a man's thumb" they are willing to pass in all subjection as ordained in the prescription of St. Paul. We do not know whether woman is "inferior to man" or not. Woman has never had a fair opportunity to show herself intellectually the equal of man. She has always been his "chattel" to use the term applied by that eminent authority, Upton Sinclair. The mass of women has always been "in subjection" to man until very recently in this country and among a limited suffragette constituency of England. To demonstrate the intellectual equality of woman with man would require at least a millennium of equal opportunity. Thus far, however, and under prevailing conditions, woman is unquestionably "the inferior of man" in everything requiring mental effort. We observe that the women who oppose Lady Paget's pronouncement are unanimous in their opinion that woman has already proved herself the equal of man "in business." Granting that this is so it does not even in the slightest degree prove that woman is the equal of man intellectually. Any one with ordinary sense can succeed in "business." Women should succeed in business because they are natural hagglers for "bargains." Intellect is not essential to success in all kinds of business. Cunning and unscrupulosity are qualities that have produced the riches of most of our successful captains of industry, and these are characteristics of the beasts of the field. Men of great intellectual worth are seldom successful in business because of their fine sense of rectitude. Even the exceptional men of genius in whom this sense was dormant were not successful in the conduct of their pecuniary affairs. A notable example is that of Lord Bacon. There were no great business men among the giant intellects of the world. The greatest intellects have been notoriously very poor business men. When women shall begin to equal the achievements of men in art, literature, science and politics, we shall know whether their capacity is up to the masculine standard and most certainly not before.

Wanted—A Partner for Lincoln

What will the Lincoln-Roosevelt League substitute for the tail-end of their hyphenated designation after March 4, 1909? The Roosevelt section of their name will be virtually useless after that auspicious date. A Roosevelt shorn of his officialism is as a lamb similarly naked to the cruel blasts of the untempered wind. There need be none so poor to do him reverence. Even Chester H. Rowell may forswear his allegiance. There has been no intimation that the League intends to retire from the political arena with their living leader, and it would be absurd to hyphenate Lincoln while waiting for a worthy successor to the dear departed. Yet they cannot drop the hyphen, for a mere Lincoln League would not convey the whole meaning of the organization. Lincoln was good enough to use as an auxiliary to Roosevelt, but as a matter of fact Roosevelt was pretty nigh all that comprised the purpose of the League. The Lincoln adjunct was merely a sort of halo, while the body, soul and essence of the outfit was Roosevelt. There is hope that the League may be able to couple up Taft with Lincoln, but at present Taft is an unknown quantity and the organization cannot afford to take any chances with a substitute who, in three months after inauguration may betray the sacred cause by upsetting all the policies of his predecessor and formulating some of his own. Now, the Lincoln-Roosevelt League has become so inured to the Roosevelt idea that it will be extremely difficult for them to hitch up with another leader or wheel-horse, however much they may desire to curry favor with the new occupant of the White House. If Mr. Taft would come out with an unmistakable pronouncement in support of the Roosevelt policies it would be plain sailing for the League; but it is feared that the new President has a mind of his own and is as set in that mind as was his distinguished and now extinguished forerunner and sometime sponsor. It may develop that those who are malefactors of great wealth or undesirable citizens under the Roosevelt dynasty may be honest captains of industry and men of integrity under the Taft regime. That would put the Lincoln-Roosevelt League in a pretty bad hole if they should adopt Taft as their acting standard-bearer and the living embodiment of the principles which they think they are promulgating. It would never do to put another dead statesman in their name to carry that hyphen. It would not do to call themselves the Lincoln-Jefferson League or the Lincoln-Conkling Mugwump League, or the Lincoln-McKinley League. None of these fit the requirements of the organization or express the inside dope of their purposes. No doubt the League will cling to Roosevelt as long as there is a chance that he may be once more a candidate for the presidency; but although that possibility is not absolutely absurd, still there is so much to be accomplished by the organization in the meantime that the League would flounder like a rudderless ship in the trough of a tempestuous sea if they had no name to fit on to that hyphen. Like a kite without a tail the League would pitch and toss in every gust of the political typhoons that sweep over the country. It is imperative that the members shall decide as soon as possible who shall take the place of their beloved Roosevelt as the other half of their name. That hyphen must not be allowed to stick out from the name of Lincoln like the rigid arm of a semaphore or the connecting rod of a signpost from which half of the sign has been blown away by the rude and boisterous wind.

The Lessons of Experience

The Bulletin having turned democratic in pursuance of its mob-coddling policy, recently attempted to refute a writer in Scribners, who argues in favor of government by men qualified to govern. "Experience," says the Bulletin, "has taught the people in both England and America that government by the ablest and most fit is usually government for the special benefit of the ablest and most fit." This is a bit of characteristic dogmatic assertion awkwardly designed to annihilate the magazine writer, but it is not any more effective in argument than any other piece of transparent balderdash or pellucid buncombe. Experience has not taught the people in England and America that government by the ablest and most fit is usually government for the special benefit of the ablest and most fit. We need not inquire about government in England, which apparently is giving pretty good satisfaction, though of course, having the shortcomings of a human institution, it has failed to make all the people, the fit as well as the unfit, entirely satisfied with their lot. As for government in this country experience has taught us nothing on the point under discussion for the reason that since the days of the Founders we have never had a government by the ablest and most fit. In the management of our affairs the friends of the dear pee-pul have always played a leading part, those vociferous statesmen who are chosen not because they are supposed to be wiser than their constituents, but because they are supposed to be capable of understanding the wishes of their constituents and willing to give those wishes force and effect. In other words, the weakness of our government is in proportion to the prevalence of the democratic principle, which is to exert even greater influence through the medium of the direct primary and the other popular short-cuts to divine perfection. And, yet, notwithstanding the fact that we have not been governed by our ablest men, we have prospered as a nation, and as a people we have enjoyed to the full the blessings of civilization. If we are not happy now it is because the demogogues have persuaded us that there is much for us to grumble at. As to the exact nature of our troubles we are not agreed. The demagogues tell us that we are in great distress because under our system of government men may become enormously wealthy. There is a small voice that tells some of us that our only unhappiness is caused by the pestiferous demagogues. The only thing of which we can be certain is that we have got along pretty well to date and that we are greatly indebted to the statesmen who supplied us with a constitution designed to circumvent demagogues and to compel the people to do a lot of thinking before resolving to abandon the automatic machinery of government in favor of human nature with all its perversities and its congenital susceptibility to passion and prejudice.

The Hub.
CHAS. KEILUS & CO
EXCLUSIVE
HIGH GRADE CLOTHIERS

No Branch Stores—No Agents.

THE DISTINGUISHED MAKERS WHO ORGANIZED OUR STOCK FOR THIS SPRING AND SUMMER HAVE WON FOR US THE "MARATHON" AS RECOGNIZED AUTHORITY ON FASHIONS ONLY FOR MEN. IT'S AN UNDISPUTED TRUTH WE HAVE THE BEST CLOTHES. "OURS" ARE HONESTLY PRICED. NO "BLINDFOLDED" VALUES.

Smart Dressers The Hub Chas Keilus & Co. San Francisco. Indorse This Label

In this daylight modern shop of ours all our clothes and prices are in the open, conversation is cheap, but "we" always deliver, we give you more style and fabric selection than one thousand tailors could collect, then again, you take "no fit" chances here because we do all our experimenting before we introduce our shapes but "the tailor" Mercy! he experiments on you, no reason for being made a target of nowadays

JEWELERS' BUILDING
Post Street, Near Kearny, San Francisco.

The Poor, Misguided Founders.

There was a time when it was believed that the Founders had realized the dreams of ages; that in a new era and on a new continent they had established the reign of heavenly justice which ancient philosophers had faintly foreshadowed, which patriots had long struggled and sighed for in vain, and which in beatific vision had soothed the last moments of political martyrs. But we in this advanced age are not much impressed with the achievement of our first statesmen. Some of us think there was too much Hamilton; others, that there was too much Jefferson, in the councils of the infant nation. Whatever be the fact it is certain that not even Jefferson, if he were alive today, would endorse the current vagaries of the wild-eyed Populists who call themselves Democrats. Even the Bulletin, which is more democratic than sincere is candid enough to admit that we are drifting toward a democracy which none of the Founders would have endorsed. "The men who wrote the Constitution," says the Bulletin, "would not have supported such intensely democratic measures as the referendum and the recall. They would not have approved the idea of the electorate instructing legislators how to vote. They would have called any public officer a demagogue that deferred to the popular will against his own judgment. They believed not in government by the people, but in government for the people by officers selected for ability and fitness." This is a quite accurate exposition of the philosophy and sentiments of the Founders. The fallacy by which the unsophisticated Founders were misled, according to the Bulletin, was grounded in the ridiculous theory that good government is the sole object of government. Accepting that theory, the Bulletin admits, the democratic form is not the best, because it is conducive to the exaltation of mediocrity and leads to vacillation in policies and waste of effort. But since good government is not the sole object of government "democracy with all its faults is the safest and best form of government for the most people." These are the utterances of a great moralist and reformer, whose obliquity of mental perception ought to be of some interest to pathologists. With more than our usual earnestness we commend this grave and symptomatic Bulletin editorial to the consideration of the erudite gentlemen of the League of Justice who believe that justice, the greatest of virtues, is the sole object of government. The Bulletin being one of the official organs of the League of Justice should be looked after. The League of Justice professes to have as the sole object of its existence the punishment of men who have sinned against the government. Its members feel that good government is the sole object of government; else they would not be justified in their attitude of hostility toward grafters. The members of the League of Justice cannot afford to countenance the heterodoxy of the Tartuffe of journalism, for though some of them may be in favor of a broader democracy they will not assert that their belief in democracy is based on a preference for bad government. This we infer, is the basis of the Bulletin's faith in democracy, for it asserts that it is because government does not aim at a beneficent end..and for no other reason, that democracy is desirable. What the Bulletin conceives the end of government to be is information which it does not vouchsafe. We are only permitted to know that in the Bulletin's philosophy the end of government is not the public good. Those who conjecture that the purpose of government is to secure equitable social relations, to enact and enforce the simple principles of equity which are the basis of the right conduct of citizens to one another, will have to guess again. The Bulletin's argument, it must be confessed, is somewhat vague. For while it is denied that government is established for a worthy purpose and admits that the democratic method of counting noses "is not the most rational method of determining state politics," it professes to be in favor of democracy "because it is the safest and best form of government for the most people." Why should we desire to give the most people the safest and best form of government if the safest and best form is not the object of government? We suspect that the Bulletin is really in favor of anarchy, but lacks the courage to advise the people that anarchy is the object of government. As a matter of fact there is no form of government that so quickly leads to anarchy as democracy and for the reason that democracy as correctly stated by the Bulletin "raises up mediocrity and leads to vacillation in policies and waste of effort." In other words democracy, as the Bulletin knows, leads to injustice, which is the antithesis of the object of government. Democracy, as the Bulletin also knows, is not the best form of government for the most people because it must inevitably plunge all the people into a political convulsion. Of all the things taught by experience there is nothing clearer than this, —that democracy is a delusion and a snare. The democratic form of government purports to be a government by the people, whereas it is never anything but a government by demagogues and charlatans.

The Spirit of Democracy

In the history of nations as in the life of Christ there is a time when the Devil from a mountain top offers them the impossible if they will but worship him. We have arrived at that time in our national career. The spirit or evil in the form of democracy is pointing out to us the realms of eternal happiness and prosperity and promising that all shall be ours if we will but pay homage to him and ignore that other spirit which urges us to prefer justice to force, the constitution of our country to the mad caprice of the multitude. The spirit of evil is meeting with much encouragement. By his extravagant promises he is seducing the unsophisticated, and they are carrying out his designs with enthusiasm. Many States are plunging headlong into democracy and slowly but surely the character of our national government is undergoing transformation. The democratic propaganda is gaining new strongholds every day, and nowhere is there anything but feeble opposition. Most of the opposition is from designing politicians whose self-interest is obvious and whose expostulations are not heeded. Apparently the intellectual men of the country are taking no interest in the trend of affairs. At any rate the growth of democracy as indicated by the adoption of the direct primary, and the agitation in favor of the recall and the referendum and direct legislation, is causing no alarm among the enlightened men who are sensible of the inevitable fatal consequences of the universal acceptance of populistic principles of government. Perhaps they feel assured that sporadic experiment will prove a sure cure for the vagaries of the hour, and are convinced that the deluded will hasten back to constitutional principles as soon as they have been educated by experience.

HOTEL VICTORIA

N. E. cor. Bush and Stockton

CENTRALLY LOCATED .·. A MODERN AND UP-TO-DATE FAMILY HOTEL

Sun in every room. Elaborate furnishings. Excellent cuisine.
Large lobby and reception room. Grill room. Dining room.

American and European Plan.

The Voice of the Ancient Bard

William Blake

Youth of delight! come hither
And see the opening morn,
Image of Truth new-born.
Doubt is fled, and clouds of reason,
Dark disputes and artful teazing.
Folly is an endless maze;
Tangled roots perplex her ways;
How many have fallen there!
They stumble all night over bones of the dead;
And feel—they know not what but care;
And wish to lead others, when they should be led.

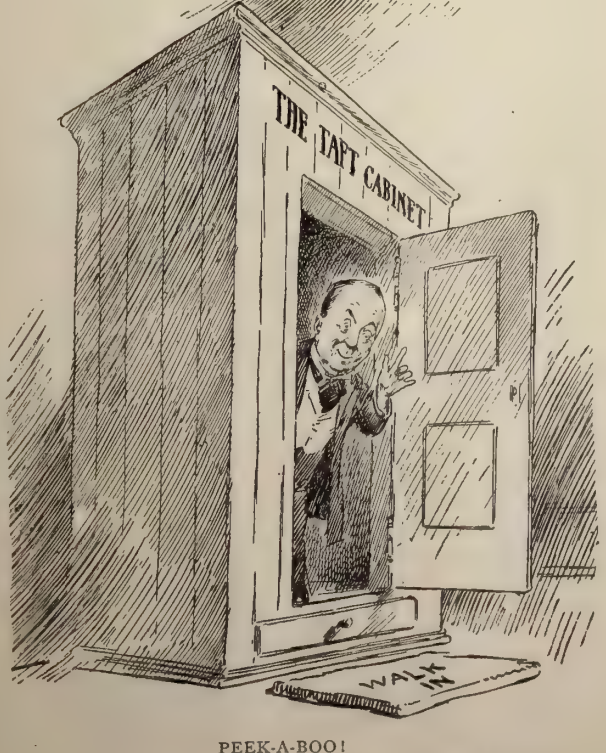
Perspective Impressions

The White House will present a moving picture next week.

Life is interesting to us in proportion to our interest in ourselves.

The probabilities are that sanity will soon be residing again in Washington, D. C.

The chieftans of the California Democracy are still talking of starting a daily paper. The talkfest with reference to a daily is much cheaper than the daily.



"The people demand the power to manage their own affairs," says the Examiner, which thus reminds us of the shrinking modesty of the violet. What the people really demand is that their affairs be managed by the giant intellects of journalism and to that end that the obnoxious checks and balances of government be abandoned. Listen to Mr. Hearst making a noise like the pee-pul.

"All practical men of affairs are fond of strong perfumes," says Mme. Marie Rique, high priestess of the Odorological Cult. There are some in San Francisco of whom strong perfume is a by-product.

The drug stores of Kansas are no longer to be permitted to sell whisky even on a doctor's prescription. All lovers of good whisky will approve this discrimination against the drug store brand.

"The members of the Senator have heard the call of the people for a direct primary," says Mr. Frederick Myrtle in the Examiner. There's nothing like a good ear for the voice of the people.

A contemporary wishes to know why Rear-Admiral Evans should be made a vice-admiral and thus ranked with Porter, Rowan and Farragut. We do not know but we suppose it is because he has proved a great strategist on the high political seas.

PEEK-A-BOO!

—New York World.

NO OBJECTION TO THIS, ANYWAY

—Philadelphia North American.

In the Comparative Degree

Intended to Show by Familiar Example that the Relative Unimportance of Things May be Grossly Exaggerated by the Egotism of the Thing and that Great Men are Only Great in Their Own Appreciation.

By Democritus

I suppose a great many persons are surprised in contemplation of the strutting arrogance of some of our "most prominent citizens." However, if we analyze the underlying motive of this arrogance; if we prick the bubble of this self importance, we find nothing to excite surprise. On the contrary we are provoked to loud and continuous laughter at the absurdity of the assumption. It is mere egotism that puffs these persons—a foolish vanity that like the gas in a balloon inflates these little men. The fable of the toad that tried to blow itself up to the size of the ox will recur to every really wise man that may chance to read this essay.

All things are big or little in the comparative degree. Greatness and smallness are relative. Jim Jeffries, for example, is a great man in his class if compared with Willie Britt, as Willie Britt is a great man compared with a dime museum midget. But James Jeffries is a puny, helpless thing in the whirl of a cyclone or in the throes of an earthquake—Willie Britt and the midget would drown about the same time in a tidal wave forty feet high.

Caesar bestrode the earth like a colossus, but Casca's dagger made him lifeless clay fit only to stop a hole to keep the wind away. Alexander was "great" enough to conquer the world from the Danube to the Indus but he wasn't great enough to conquer King Booze. Napoleon overshadowed the earth for a time to be utterly overwhelmed at last by a little man whose only other bid for immortality is in the name that he gave to a certain style of "boots" that are now never worn.

These men were great because their egotism impelled them to attempt great things—and at last their bursting vanity destroyed them as superheated vapor rends the frail fabric of metal that seeks to confine it.

James D. Phelan is, in his own estimation and in the estimation of those who associate with him, a great man. He is not a big man in physical stature; as a matter of fact, he is somewhat undersized; but mentally and morally he is regarded by the editorial staff of the Bulletin, the members of the League of Justice, the attorneys of the graft prosecution, and President Roosevelt, as one of the greatest men in California. The reason that he is not in this estimation the greatest man in the world is because his sphere of activity is limited to San Francisco. Yet James D. Phelan is a very small person if we compare him with Professor Howison's conception of the deity or even with Judge Lawlor's conception of his own personality.

Then there is Rudolph Spreckels—the biggest man in San Francisco if we look at him through the magnifying spectacles of Professor Boke. But match this Spreckels even with the self estimate of this Boke as regards mental equipment, and you will have to search for the Spreckels with a microscope.

And Professor Boke himself—in the estimaton of Professor Boke and his fellow members of the League of Justice this Rhadamanthus of the graft prosecution is a bigger thing than old Lycurgus; he knows more law and can interpret it more wisely than all the appellate or supreme courts in Christendom. That's Boke in the perspective of the graft prosecution; but you ought to hear the other professors over in Berkeley talk about Boke in their sleep. To his face these Berkeley people tell him that he is the only great lawyer in California; but in their dreams which are the true mirrors of their minds, they see Boke as a flyspeck on the tower of Eiffel.

It will be hard to convince some men that Heney is so small that the inhabitants of Mars are as yet oblivious to his existence. Relatively, Heney is a prodigious quantity; compared with District Attorney Langdon he is as Tamalpais to Goat Island; but when he cavorts in his highest pride the crust of the earth maintains its rigidity although the crust of the earth compared with the bulk of all the earth is as the rind of a navel orange to the whole orange. The crust of the earth ought to tremble like a scared jury man every time Heney walks across the street; but as a matter of fact Heney can walk across the street without fear that the street will cave in and hurl him into the sewer beneath. Heney may, in his hours of self contemplation, imagine himself a lawyer as great as Webster or Clay or Edmund Burke; but Heney is the only one that thinks so. Even Professor Boke is not of that opinion, although he may intimate with subtle flattery that he regards Mr. Heney as the equal of William Hoff Cook.

Coming from the sublime to the ridiculous we have now to make comparison of William J. Burns with the other great sleuths of history and fable. If there is anything in San Francisco that struts with more self importance, professionally, than this great detective it must be Old Cap Collier disguised as A. Mutt. And if we compare Burns with other detectives in town he does loom large; but outside of San Francisco he isn't in the detective class at all. Burns, however, doesn't realize how small he is in comparison with the ordinary Pinkerton man, and of course the Pinkerton men are too polite to tell him how small they think he is. Vidocq, Jonathan Wild, Blueskin, LeCoq, Vautrin, Bucket, Inspector Byrnes, Javert, Old Sleuth, Monsieur Dupin, Captain Lees, Allan Pinkerton, Sherlock Holmes were all great detectives. How does Detective Burns stack up with these great men? Ask any member of the San Francisco police department. But you couldn't make Burns believe that he isn't greater than any I have named. That is proof conclusive of the inordinate vanity of the man. I don't believe he could really detect anything in the act. A detective that has to use an immunity contract to catch a thief isn't a detective. If I were asked to choose a more suitable vocation for a detective of that calibre I would suggest that he turn tailor and sew on buttons for ladies' suits or hemstitch the ruffles for a rich dude's pajamas.

Compared with each other all these people are great. Severally they are great in their specialties—like a bunch of vaudevillians on the Orpheum circuit. Rudolph Spreckels is a great reformer and has the money to pay the others for assisting him to reform things. Professor Boke is a great law giver and draws a salary from the State for giving law to the League of Justice. Heney is a great advocate and the way he makes poor old Justice blink in Judge Lawlor's court is a caution. District Attorney Langdon is a great District Attorney but he doesn't work at it much. William J. Burns is a great detective, although as a tailor he would probably achieve even greater celebrity than as a detective. And finally, James D. Phelan is a great landlord; he can't be beat at landlording.

It is only when these great men get outside of their environment that they dwindle to their relative proportions. Put Rudolph Spreckels up against J. Pierpont Morgan in the financial class and he would look like a two-spot. Turn Professor Boke loose in the law library at Washington, D. C., and he wouldn't know how to use the accumulated wisdom of the ages then almost within his grasp. Francis J. Heney would not have the courage to bluster before the Supreme Court of the United States,

J. C. WILSON
BROKER
Private Wire Chicago and New York
Member New York Stock Exchange, Chicago Board of Trade and Stock and Bond Exchange, San Francisco
LOCAL AND EASTERN STOCKS AND BONDS
Main Office, Mills Bldg. Tel. Kearny 482.
Branch Office, Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles.

nor would he dare to take his guard of gun fighters before that august tribunal however scared he might be that an assassin lurked behind every post. District Attorney Langdon would not be permitted to "attorn" anywhere east of the Mississippi, but he could probably get a job schoolmastering in the tenement district of New York. If William J. Burns should apply for a place as a detective on the Scotland Yard force he would learn, in all probability, that he was about the size of a Cheapside "bobbie." And if James D. Phelan should go landlording in Connaught of Cork he would probably "get his" from behind a hedge in less than a week after the first eviction under his landlordism.

So there you are in the positive, comparative and superlative degrees. There is a fair and candid estimate of the relative importance of the chief protagonists in this ridiculous graft prosecution. If anybody, even the protagonists themselves can make a better comparison, let them try it. I am not afraid of the competition, nor will I be jealous of any successful competitor.

Bourn's Publicity Project

A Few Feeble Hints to a Financier Who Fondly Hopes to Take the Frigid and Fickle Public Into His Warm Confidence.

President Bourn of the Spring Valley Water Company informed the Supervisors the other day that he proposed organizing a publicity bureau in connection with the corporation which for some years has been the demagogue's favorite object of execration. He explained that he deemed it advisable to counteract the influence of the Cleons of politics and journalism, and that he believed it possible to do so by letting the public known that there are two sides to the case of the demagogues against the Spring Valley Water Company and incidentally presenting the side which hitherto has been kept in cold storage. From this declaration of intention I infer that Mr. Bourn has had an awakening. It has probably dawned on Mr. Bourn that in these piping times of socialistic democracy, with demagogues rampant in the land and the pee-pul eager to be hoodwinked, to manage successfully a public service corporation a man must do something more than master the financial details of the business. It will now be interesting to watch developments, to see Mr. Bourn flirting on the porches of the public ear and using the arts of persuasion to win the confidence of the multitude. I fear that Mr. Bourn, who is above all things a financier, and who has long been isolated from the currents of public thought, will prove somewhat awkward in the new role. We were given an inkling to Mr. Bourn's ability as a promoter of publicity just before the last election when he sought to woo the people by a raise in water rates which apparently was made for the purpose of defraying the cost of a lot of dry-as-dust advertisements in the daily papers designed to compel the love and affection of the rate-payers.

However, it is never too late to learn and as Mr. Bourn is reported to be a man of a good deal of native talent, he may succeed in perfecting himself in the art of commanding the attention of the people. Unquestionably he has a great deal of data with which to interest them. The only thing for him to learn is how to get their attention. I should advise him to be on the qui vive for the psychological moment when the people are in a receptive mood, and above all things not to wait until the Spring Valley Water Company is again interested in a bond issue or in an election of city officers. The people are always skeptical of appeals that are made at the eleventh hour, or that apparently are entirely inspired with self-interest. The Spring Valley Water Company never had a better opportunity to engage public interest than immediately after the earthquake when it was being charged with responsibility for the conflagration that destroyed the city. Now as a matter of fact our illustrious demagogues were entirely responsible for that destructive fire. This is an assertion which can so easily be proved to the satisfaction of everybody, (excepting, perhaps, Mr. James D. Phelan, the Prince of Demagogues and his journalistic Hessians), that it is positively amazing that no Spring Valley magnate ever thought it worth while to make it the topic of controversy. This oversight is especially amazing inasmuch as the simple explanation of the matter is conducive to apprehension of the whole issue between the corporation and the municipality. And nothing would have been easier than to command public attention on the subject at a time when the people were raging over their losses and curious to know what precautions might have been taken against the disaster that had overwhelmed them. The fact is that Herman Schussler, the engineer who built the Spring Valley Water System, had long been fearful of just such a catastrophe. He knew of the unreliability of the pipe lines in the marshes where they were wrecked and of the danger of earthquake, and had repeatedly urged that provision be made for the very emergency which the system failed to meet. There is of record a report made by him to the Board of Supervisors January 28, 1904, in which he begged those officials "not to reduce and cripple the necessary revenues of the company," as certain extensions were "absolutely essential," and declared that they would be "solely responsible if the final result of their short-sighted policy should be to decrease the efficiency of the water works for fire as well as domestic purposes." In February, 1901, he reported to the Supervisors that if they prevented the company from developing its works along certain lines their short-sighted policy would be "almost suicidal." He argued that until such time as the city had acquired its own water works, the policy of the city authorities should be to co-operate with the company so that by fair and impartial treatment it would be able properly to develop the works. But all in vain. Mr. Phelan had political capital to make. So, to hell with the water company.

As early as 1901, the records show, (and they are accessible to everybody), Mr. Schussler was planning a "54-inch safety pipe line" into this city; also, to supplement this line with a large receiving reservoir with a capacity of four hundred million gallons at an elevation of three hundred feet on a plateau west of the branch county jail. From this reservoir a conduit consisting of a series of large concrete-lined tunnels was to be constructed to the head of Market street, where, from a gate-house at an elevation of two hundred and sixty-five feet a system of large distributing mains would radiate in all directions. The company was prevented from carrying out this project by the Supervisors, presumably at the instigation of Mr. Phelan.

Schussler also projected a 16,000,000 gallon reservoir on a Market street block near Buchanan at one hundred and fifty feet elevation. This reservoir would be supplied from the University Mound Reservoir and also from the projected reservoir near the Branch County Jail. It would have a large independent pipe line down Market street, studded with hydrants, and was intended to give this thoroughfare an independent system of fire protection. But the Supervisors destroyed the reservoir site by cutting streets through the hill. Schussler begged them to preserve the hill. He told them that it was the

CENTRAL TRUST COMPANY
OF CALIFORNIA
Has removed to its new offices Corner Market, Sutter and Sansome Streets
A General Banking Business Transacted
CHAS. F. LEEGE, President B. G. TOGNAZZI, Manager

most important reservoir site on the peninsula, but his arguments and warning were in vain. The virtuous Supervisors would not lose so fine an opportunity to swat the despised corporation, especially as at the same time they were able to win the favor of some real estate speculators. And thus the company has been balked through the years. Always to the accompaniment of applause from the gallery.

Doubtless the foregoing facts which I have presented, and which I happened upon in the obscurity of a prodigious volume of printed matter which few sane men could be induced to plod through, might have served the interests of the stockholders of the Spring Valley Water Company if they had been given publicity at any one of several psychological moments that have passed. They are worth while now only because they are suggestive of available material to Mr. Bourn who has been threatening to come down out of the Pacific Union Club and cultivate the acquaintance of the dear people. I believe the people like fair play and I believe they would enjoy the spectacle of our public service magnates fighting back in the open. At them Mr. Bourn and more power to you! I can hear them retorting that the city has been sufficiently generous to Spring Valley and that the stockholders should have given Schussler the money to build the emergency reservoir and safety pipe lines which would have enabled our fire department to save the city. Let us then be told how the stockholders have fared in a pecuniary sense in comparison with landlords of the Phelan type and sugar merchants of the Spreckels type. Let us find out when Mr. Phelan sold his stock in public service corporations and why. This is another story that in itself might throw light on motives and conduct. Incidentally, while the controversy is raging, Mr. Bourn will be able to address the people with a certainty of a hearing on the general subject of the injustice that the corporation has suffered at the hands of the politicians and thrifty newspapers. In its time Spring Valley has been a great sinner. It has sinned against the people, but the people are not without sin in their relations with the company. Perhaps Mr. Bourn will be able to persuade the people of their injustice.

Off Guard

(From the French of Camille Mauclair)

It has been a short struggle. Julian Naviere had been caught off his guard and Victor Deleutre hurled him from the bridge into the dark, swiftly flowing waters of the Seine.

There was deathlike stillness all around. The scene was illuminated faintly by the moon, but apparently there had been no witness to the deed. The violent throbbing of Deleutre's heart soon ceased while he leaned for support against the stone parapet, and gathering himself together he walked boldly from the bridge.

Deleutre was a business man of a cool calculating disposition. He had attended a commercial banquet, that had lasted well into the night. As he was leaving, Julian Naviere, his competitor in business, offered his company and not being able to get a cab proposed a walk in the cold crisp October air. Deleutre accepted, although he could not bear the man. More than once of late he had been severely hit financially by Naviere's foresight and cunning and even now, under the influence of the banquet the man made bold to speak quite freely of still greater plans, which revealed to Deleutre's view an endless store of future troubles. But he showed nothing of impatience in his manner. Indeed, he listened attentively, though with a growing inward irritation. Then of a sudden, as they neared the bridge, an irresistible impulse arose within him, to rid himself of his dangerous rival. A terrible determination and a peculiar indifference to consequences had taken possession of him. The possibility of committing a crime blazed upon his feverish imagination simultaneously with a lightning consideration of the means by which to execute it. He, Deleutre, otherwise deliberate and self-possessed, felt himself unexpectedly under the spell of a strange and horrible impulse, which seemed to cause his hands, as it were, to move in reflex action, as they clutched his companion's throat and shoulder and hurled him to his watery grave.

He made his way home unmolested, went to bed, and fell into a deep slumber untroubled by neither dreams nor morbid fancies. When he at length awoke it was broad day. He arose, dressed himself with care and attented to his regular duties with customary punctiliousness. Absolute calm seemed to reside within him; nor did his thoughts cling to the recollection of the preceding night's drama; only from time to time would they revert to it. Not until he had arrived at his office and there disposed of his mail did he reflect upon his deed. With the methodical precision of the trained professional he passed in review in logical sequence the separate circumstances that had led up to the murder. He was sensible of a certain callous apathy towards the moral phase of his act. He felt neither contented nor distressed at the death of Naviere; yet he was alive to the fact of having committed a crime. But what seemed to appeal to him more forcibly was the circumstances that his friend's death would result in pecuniary profit to himself; and he began to ponder the manner and means by which he might with prudence repair his recent losses with his most dangerous competitor removed. Fear of discovery seemed absent. Indeed, he was quite astonished at his calmness and at a strange feeling of superiority and self-reliance, which appeared to raise him above all considerations of moral guilt or thoughts of personal peril.

He ate a hearty lunch and smoked his cigar with an apparent relish. After returning to the seclusion of his office he again fell to musing, when he was abruptly arrested by an extraordinary impulse. On his desk before him lay his opened letter copy book. With an air of complete abstraction he drew from his pocket a pencil and in a bold hand on the blank page of the copy book he wrote:

"In reply to your favor of the ..... inst. we hasten to inform you that on the night of ..... inst. Mr. Victor Deleutre threw Mr. Julian Naviere into the Seine river from the Grenelle bridge."

He paused. He felt a chill creep down his back, a momentary faintness overcame him, and with a swift and furtive glance around his office to assure himself that he was unobserved, he tore the leaf from the book and flung it into the grate, where it soon was burnt to ashes. The temporary gloom which had oppressed him, lifted. For an instant only had he labored under its gruesome pall, and then with so indistinct a perception of its significance, that he dismissed the incident with a contemptuous smile while he watched the incriminating message curl up in smoke. "Bosh," he mumbled to himself, "if I told the story it would be out—but as I won't ever be again so foolish as to set it down in black and white—" He stopped, drew himself up sharply, startled at the sound of his own voice.

The disappearance of Mr. Naviere occasioned a considerable stir throughout Paris. His body was taken two days later from the Seine near St. Cloud. There

(Continued on Page 29.)

REMOVAL NOTICE

OUR OFFICE after December 21, 1908, will be at 311 to 317 Crocker Building, corner of Post and Market streets.

OUR WAREHOUSE will remain at the Southwest corner of Eddy and Hyde Streets, until April 18, 1909, on that date we shall remove to our old location, 147-151 Minna Street and 144-148 Natoma Street.

GLADDING, McBEAN & CO.

The Spectator

A Fine Thing for the Press

"The direct primary is the finest thing that ever happened—for the newspapers," said a veteran Oregon statesman who came to town the other day. "I can readily understand," he added, "the enthusiam of the press for the direct primary. It greatly enhances the value of every newspaper in the State, for there is nothing that succeeds like publicity in politics, and with the machine organizations practically one of business the candidate for office must get himself before the people through the medium of the press. Under the direct primary the poor candidate for United States Senator, or even the man with less than a hundred thousand to distribute in the grand and glorious cause, doesn't stand any more chance than the proverbial clawless feline in hell. Several rich men have already been elected to the Senate under the direct primary, and in more than one instance there has been a great scandal over the debauching of the electorate. But of course there isn't likely to be any prolonged outcry. The palladium of our liberties may be depended upon to take a philosophic view of such matters."

A Cultured Persian

Mrs. Francis Carolan, of Burlingame and Chicago, has kindly permitted us to taste the quality of her Persian protege. The name of this person is Mirza Ali- Kuli Khan, and he is announced to the "cultured set" as "the noted poet and scholar of Teheran, Persia, and imperial consul at Washington." It is quite evident that we don't know everything down in Judee, for although Mrs. Carolan's poet and scholar" is "noted" we have never heard of him before. This lack of knowledge concerning this prodigious personage inevitably argues ourselves unknown, of course, and we are duly humble in the presence of one who enjoys a fame that reaches from Dam to Beersheba, from Bagdad to Damascus. The star stunt of this Persian poet and pundit is refutation of the literal interpretation by Edward Fitzgerald of the Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam. Why dear old Ned should be refuted at this time is not clear, unless it is to put a few extra sequins in the pocket of the imperial consul's burnoose. (It may be stated for the information of the less literate of the "cultured set" that ordinarily the cloak called a "burnoose" is as pocketless as a Moslem's shroud; but that when the wearer of a burnoose goes foraging for sequins in America he sews a small sack to the inner lining of the garment.) It is needless to say that since the arrival of Mrs. Carolan's Persian poet and scholar the cultured set of Burlingame and San Francisco have learned a lot about Omar Khayyam that they didn't dream of in their previous philosophy. Heretofore, deceived by that unblushing scoundrel Edward Fitzgerald, the cultured set in our cultured midst has taken it for granted that when Omar wrote "wine" he meant real wine; that when he wrote "woman" he meant the thing that all men love more or less; and that when he wrote of "jugs" and jags he had in mind the genesis of the dark brown taste that embitters the meditations of the morning after. But upon the authority of Mrs. Carolan's Persian, whose Iranic origin is confirmed by the shape of his finely moulded Sassannian nose, the grandson of the tentmaker of Nashapur didn't mean anything of the sort. When he said "wine" he meant "spirit;" when he spoke of "woman" he meant "soul;" and when he sang of jags and jugs he meant "the essence of things." The cultured set ought to be very grateful to Mrs. Carolan for "patronizing" this wise person and placing him within the reach of the poorest purse in the set by fixing the tariff at $5 "for the course" or $1.50 per "lecture."

Generous Uncle—I will make you a monthly allowance, but understand me, I will pay no debts.

Nephew—All right, uncle. Neither will I.

Stanford's Brandy Endowment

I have previously called attention to the strangely inconsistent attitude of President Jordan of Stanford university in the matter of beer guzzling and rum drinking at Palo Alto. He has induced Senator Black to introduce a bill in the Legislature prohibiting the sale of liquor within a mile-and-a-half of the university, and he is not ashamed to admit that this bill is intended to prevent as far as it may the habit of drunkenness among the students at Stanford. The liquor men throughout the State are opposing the measure in a very peculiar way. They are calling attention to the fact that Stanford university is largely dependent for its support and existence upon the income derived from the sale of brandy from the Stanford Vina Rancho. It is proposed, therefore, that the liquor dealers shall refuse to purchase any more of this brandy, merely, of course, to hear what Dr. Jordan will say when the brandy fund of the university is empty and the brandy stills of Vina dry. I can tell these devotees at the shrine of the Demon Rum what Dr. Jordan will say. He will tell the liquor men that rum is a mocker and that brandy is raging, but that as the rum traffic and the brandy business are lawful revenue-producers for the federal government they cannot be unlawful sources of income for a university. Therefore it is proper that the students of Stanford university should be educated from the profits of the rum traffic and the brandy business, and that the rum sellers and brandy vendors will commit an unlawful act if they boycott the brandy of the Vina Rancho. It is possible that Dr. Jordan may even seek an injunction from the federal courts to prohibit the Rum Demons from cutting off this source of Stanford's money supply, out of which, of course, Dr. Jordan himself receives a very munificent salary. Two young men from each of the metropolitan dailies ought to interview Dr. Jordan on this matter, so that the parents of the students at Stanford may know just how this eminent moralist and professional reformer reconciles his morality with his official position and the salary thereto appertaining. I recommend that two reporters from each paper be sent upon this assignment so that any denial by Dr. Jordan of the accuracy of the interview may be offset by the testimony of a corroborative witness and his usual complaint that he has been "misrepresented" may be nullified by the statements of two reporters as against the doctor's mere word.

S. P. of Arizona 1909s

MATURE MARCH 1st

Our advice is to reinvest at once and so receive an income without interruption.

Our assistance in the Exchange will prove advantageous to you.

SUTRO & COMPANY

412 MONTGOMERY ST., SAN FRANCISCO

J. M. Jacobi & Co.

S. W. COR. MONTGOMERY & SUTTER STS

The marked advancement in this year's styles is worthy of your attention

SPRING AND SUMMER CLOTHES AND CLOTH READY FOR INSPECTION

Mr. Spreckels's Bad Streets

The newspapers have generally conceded the ownership of the Board of Works to Mr. Rudolph Spreckels. Some of the newspapers have even gone so far as to say, in effect, that Mr. Spreckels owns the municipal administration including our worthy, poetical, double-salaried Mayor; but perhaps this count in the indictment is not wholly true; we are at liberty to disbelieve about half of the things we read in the newspapers. So I will confine myself to that portion of the opinion that credits Mr. Spreckels with the ownership of the Board of Works. If this is true then Mr. Spreckels is responsible for the awful condition of our streets. These thoroughfares are worse than they were immediately after the fire. They are getting worse every day and there seems to be no very strenuous effort to improve their condition. In truth Mr. Spreckels cares so little about his streets that he recently discharged more than a hundred men whose labor it is to keep the streets in good repair. Mr. Spreckels is not doing the right thing by the peasantry compelled to live on his plantation. It is not a square deal. The boss of the town should not devote all his time to its moral uplift; he should take a little heed of its physical and material needs. I would suggest that he take a few days off and devote them to looking over the pavement requirements of his bailiwick. Professor Boke can attend to the moral uplift while the owner of the town hustles around finding something for his Board of Works to do. I don't believe the libelous rumor that Mr. Spreckels is reducing the present force under the Board of Works with the intention of eventually filling the vacancies with men of his own choosing to be used as the crew of a political steam roller in the next municipal campaign. I don't believe a high moral person like Mr. Spreckels would resort to such immoral means to gain his moral ends. Besides, there is no necessity for this kind of politics. In truth there is no necessity for any politics. All that Mr. Spreckels need do is to say what he wants and the peasantry will give it to him with a subservient "Certainly, your honor; with pleasure most worshipful sir." There may be a few insurgents on the plantation, but they are a negligible quantity, wholly incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial. Professor Boke and his Ladies' League of Justice can take care of them. But in the meantime Mr. Spreckels should put his streets in order.

Wife—My dear, you've forgotten that this is my birthday.
Husband—Listen, dearie—I know I forgot it—but there isn't a thing about you to remind me that you are a day older than you were a year ago.

A Leper Expert

Dr. William J. Goodhue who, according to the despatches, has been chosen to represent the United States at the World's Leprosy Congress which meets in Christiania, Norway, in 1909, is the resident physican at the Leper Settlement of Molokai. Dr. Goodhue is an enthusiast who has done much creditable work at Molokai. There can be no doubt that by his application of modern, palliative and surgical methods he has reduced the suffering from the disease at the settlement to a lower ebb than ever before. Dr. Goodhue has done what was never done before at the settlement. He has carefully tried all remedial and therapeutic agencies that have come to him with any recommendation, carefully noting and recording results, and has thereby made substantial contributions to medical knowledge. As the result of long continued experiments and observation he has concluded that in eucalyptus has been found a remedy that continues to affect manifestations of leprosy, and while not yet demonstrated as a cure, he believes that if it could be applied in the incipient stages of leprosy (in which stage no case of leprosy has ever reached the settlement, so far as known) it would prove a cure. On another phase of the treatment of the disease Dr. Goodhue's views are thus expressed by himself: "Leprosy is a surgical disease. That is to say the various surgical procedures adapted to the relief and cure of pathological lesions constantly and necessarily associated with leprosy are of infinitely more service to the leper in the relief of pain and discomfort, prevention of wasting fevers, restoration of active use of the hands, and especially of the feet, and prolongation of life, than all the therapeutic measures of our present day leprosy therapeusis."

Little Boy—Oh! Mr. Policeman, won't you please come quick! some boys over there have tied a can to a dog's tail.
Policeman—Is it your dog?
Little Boy—No, its my can.

Not Hard to Answer

Addressing its diminishing readers that incorrigible pervert of journalism, the Boughten Bulletin, asks: "If Calhoun is indeed the innocent martyr that the Argonaut, Town Talk and the other papers in his service portray why does he not submit the case to the first twelve men seated in the box?" Almost anybody who has read the transcript of the daily record of proceedings in Judge Lawlor's court ought to be able to answer this question. The readers of the Bulletin may not be able to answer it because the Bulletin has not dared to give publicity to the record conclusive as it is of an indisposition to give the defendant a fair trial. I have never portrayed Calhoun as an innocent martyr. I have never pretended to be informed respecting the facts which he is prepared to present in his own defense. I have only maintained that the crime with which he is charged is a venial offense in comparison with the monstrous deeds of his infamous persecutors, and if what I hear is true Mr. Calhoun in the event of his acquittal will go before the public with proofs of crimes committed by the men who are masquerading as civic patriots that will stir the indignation of this community as the indignation of no community was ever stirred.

Scenes That Appal

Since the work of impaneling a jury began there has been formed in my mind the strong conviction that the men behind the graft prosecution have not a scintilla of evidence upon which to justify Calhoun's indictment. This conviction is entirely attributable to the character of the scenes that have been enacted in Judge Lawlor's court

IDEAL FARMS

"CERTIFIED MILK"

The most perfect product of the modern dairy

Certified to by the Medical Commission of the San Francisco County Medical Society

DISTRIBUTED BY

GUADALOUPE DAIRY CO. Phone Market 2590

STANDARD MILK CO. Phone Market 226

Seattle's Newest and Most Modern Hotel

"Twelve Stories of Solid Comfort"

Building, concrete, steel and marble.
Located, most fashionable shopping district.
210 rooms, 135 baths.
Library and bound magazines in reading rooms for guests.
Most refined hostelry in Seattle.
Absolutely fireproof.
English Grill.

Rates, $1.00 up

HOTEL SAVOY SEATTLE

during the impanelment of the jury. Nothing approximating those scenes was ever before witnessed in an American tribunal of justice. The mockery that is there being made of justice transcends in its repugnant aspects some of the toughest episodes in the history of juridical despotism. So brutal has been the conduct of the prosecution that it has provoked George A. Knight to indignant, public protest, and I should be amazed that the bar of San Francisco had not taken cognizance of so wanton a disregard of the principles of American justice were I not mindful of the cowardly supineness of its members during the malignant assaults that have been made on our Supreme Court in furtherance of a vicious conspirary. The venal Bulletin is not unconscious of the shameful character of the proceedings in Judge Lawlor's court. The best evidence of this fact is its suppression of the news. To earn the coin for which it prostitutes what is left of its conscience that debased journal, the name of which cannot be mentioned by honest men without an expression of disgust, will go to the most ridiculous lengths in gratifying the malice of its lessor. Tainted with the scrofula of infamous practices, armed with the rare advantage of being absolutely without shame or scruple, the Bulletin exhibits prodigious fertility of invention in the service of malevolence, but it is constantly betraying its hypocrisy and insincerity. Thus we find it asking Calhoun why he doesn't accept the first twelve men in the box, though it is but a few months since the editor of the Bulletin showed no inclination to accept the first twelve men drawn for his trial on a charge of libel, and yet that trial was a hippodrome arranged by the editor and pulled off before a friendly judge imported for the occasion.

Who is the Dean of the Corps?

The luncheon given last week by the California Promotion Committee in honor of the members of the Consular corps resident in this city was the first occasion when the consuls have been brought together in San Francisco. It promises to be the forerunner of many such meetings, for the consuls expressed themselves as in favor of co-operation amongst themselves and with the commercial interests. The most cordial relations exist between the government and the representatives of foreign nations, as was indicated by the address of Frederick S. Stratton, collector of the port, who paid a tribute to them for the intelligent policy adhered to by them in the discharge of their duties. An interesting dilemma, growing out of the fact of the consular body not having been brought together before arose at this meeting—the question of who should hold the place of honor as dean of the corps. The custom house officials could throw no light upon the subject, and each of the various consuls hazarded a different opinion. It was brought out that during the festivities incident on the reception of the fleet Dr. P. Ornelas, consul general of Mexico, had acted as dean at the request of Felipe Galicia, consul general of Guatemala, who claimed the rank but declined the honor, owing to ill health. At that time there were rival claimants, amongst them the consul general of Salvador. In appeared, however, that though the Salvadorean official had occupied his post for twelve years, as against the ten years of local service by the Guatemalan, he had attained to the title of consul general, a necessary qualification for the ranking position, but a few years previous, and later than the date upon which the Guatemalan consul had received his rank. Correspondence with the Department of State at Washington has been begun, with a view of settling the point and establishing the status of the claimants. Thirty-six nations are represented by consuls at this port. Twenty-two out of a total of thirty-two consular officials, representing twenty-four governments, were present on this occasion, as was also Imperial Consul General of Persia, Mirza Ali Kuli Kahn of Washington.

Milo

Do you know what Quality means in a Turkish Cigarette? If not get a box of "MILO." Then, any other cigarette, and try same, side by side. You'll note the delicate, aromatic mildness of the "MILO." Mildness (yet with the richness in flavor) is what costs in Turkish Tobacco, and its just this that makes the Perfect Cigarette. You'll find it in No Other.

This perfection is obtained only by owning our own plantation in Turkey—the careful watchfulness from the seeding to the finished article.

Write to the Surbrug Company for samples and prices.

THE SURBRUG COMPANY, New York City

Attorney and Novelist

Frederick J. Stimson, the Boston and New York lawyer who is making his first visit to this coast, has won distinction as an attorney and a writer on economic and legal problems, but he is equally well known to quite another set of readers as a novelist of distinction—J. S. of Dale, author of "King Noanett," "Guerndale" and "In Cure of Her Soul." which brought about so much discussion when published a few years ago, the astute critics being unaware of the meaning of the word "cure" and of the sense in which the author made use of it, took issue with him on the discrepancy between the title and the outcome of the story. Writing novels is a matter of secondary consideration with Mr. Stimson, but the excellence of his work and the attention which he gives to the details place him well forward in the ranks.

Guest—Waiter, this bill of fare is ten days old!
Waiter—Don't mind that, sir. We have that stuff yet.

A Revolt Fund in Escrow.

American missionaries in Korea are appealing for money to be used for propagating the Presbyterian faith in the Land of the Morning Calm. They have already collected $200,000, but they want $45,000 more. They expect to get this money from the Presbyterian Christians of California. The Presbyterian mission in Korea has always been one of the most profitable in the Far East. The missionaries are well-fed, well-served, well-

NATHAN-DOHRMANN CO.

Announces an IMPORTANT SALE

To Prepare for REMOVAL

A genuine reduction of high-grade, dependable merchandise at prices that will interest you. It gives you an opportunity to purchase the best goods at the lowest possible prices, at discounts ranging

From 10% to 1/2 off

White Dinner Ware	Marble Figures
Cut Glass	Bronzes
Plain Glassware	Clocks
Decorated Dinner Ware	Kitchen Utensils
Silverware	Hanging Electroliers
Electric Lamps	Marble Figures

NATHAN-DOHRMANN CO.

1520-1550 VAN NESS AVENUE

clothed and well-housed. They lack for nothing that money can buy, and it is said that their bank accounts are as fat as the calf that was killed for the prodigal. I don't believe that any of this money has gone directly into any of the revolutionary funds of the Koreans, notwithstanding the circumstantial accusations of the Japanese to that effect, and the probable profit that the missionaries would derive from such investment in a Korean revolt against the Japanese usurper—in the auditing of missionary claims for indemnity upon property destroyed—as in the Boxer affair at Peking. But I do believe that the money contributed by susceptible Presbyterians to the Korean missionary cause has aided indirectly in keeping alive the discontent and disorder prevailing among the Koreans. My opinion is confirmed by the Rev. R. O. Avison, one of the missionaries now here and loudly urging the opulent Presbyterians to "give liberally for the native church in the Hermit kingdom." Dr. Avison denies that this money is to be used as a fund for the revolutionary section of the Korean people; but he admits that "the trouble in Korea is largely due to the enlightenment of Christian teaching and example in that country." If that isn't aiding and abetting a revolution I would like to be informed what it is. Suppose the Japanese missionaries should come to this country to propagate Shintoism; and suppose we should become so "enlightened" by that teaching that we should organize a revolt against the government; and suppose this propaganda was financed with money from the Shintoists of Japan; would we not be justified in believing that the Shinto cult of Japan was trying to subvert our government and that Shinto money was responsible for "the trouble" in America? And suppose such a condition possible, what do you think would speedily happen to those Shinto missionaries? It's a poor golden rule indeed that won't work both ends against the middle.

MRS. PATRICK CAMPBELL.

As she appears in Rudolf Bessier's New Play in a scene with Miss Dagmar Wiehe.

GIERSBERGER WINES

The wine of merit and quality all around the world. Compare it with the best wines and we are satisfied.

THEO. GIER WINE COMPANY

Phone Oakland 123 1225-1227 BROADWAY, OAKLAND

A Poet's Tragic Fate

Did ever poet give utterance to the anguish of his soul in more impassioned words than these?—

Now if this ink were blood, this pen a quill
Torn from some fierce and flesh-fed vulture's wing,
This sheet a shroud, and mine such matchless skill
As his who o'er the deathless damned did fling
A glory that the ages cannot pale,—
Yea, were these mine, it might not then be vain
To prison on this page an anguished wail
Or torture-telling threnody of pain.
But my sore, songless heart doth only groan
Low grief-ground curses through my gnashing teeth.
Familiar fiend of hell! wherein have I
Sinned more than others, that thou dost bequeath
To me an agony that could atone
For half a world and its salvation buy?

Eloquent lines these that throb with pain, wrung from the heart of a tortured mortal, one who lives the life of a hermit, bedridden in a small scantily furnished room, almost entirely lost sight of by his friends, the gloom of his lonely existence deepened by the dimness of eyes that deny him the dearest of all his companionships. Years have gone by since this same stricken poet, brooding over his sufferings lamented thus his miserable plight:

My world has shrunk at last to this small room,
Where like a prisoner I must now remain;
I'd rather be a captive in the gloom
Of some damp dungeon, tearing at my chain,
For then, perchance, my freedom I might gain.
Ah God! to think that I must languish here,
Fettered by sickness and subdued by pain,
To die a living death from year to year,
Joy banished from my breast and sorrow brooding there.

Doubtless many who are familiar with these lines from Louis A. Roberston's poem entitled "Ataxia," and who remember him as the author of that beautiful poem "The Dead Calypso," have been under the delusion that he was no longer in the land of the living. For the invalid

TAFT & PENNOYER

These Linen Prices Should Effect The Clearance We Desire

DOYLIES formerly sold at $5 the dozen are now $3.75. CENTER PIECES formerly 75c, 85c, $1, $1.35 and $2 are now 50c, 65c, 75c, $1 and $1.50. SCARFS formerly $1.25, $1.35, $1.75, $2, to $8 are now 75c, 85c, $1, $1.25 to $5. TRAY CLOTHS formerly $1.25 to $3.50 are now 75c to $2.25. MADIERA EMBROIDERED DOYLIES and CENTERS formerly $1 to $8.50 are now 50c to $5.

SILK DEPARTMENT NOTE—We desire to announce the arrival of a complete line of early SPRING FOULARDS. We can safely say that we have never had such exquisite patterns in our stock. Only the best manufacturers are represented, the goods coming in the satin finish and twilled effects. All of them are 24 inches wide and may be had at $1.00 and $1.25 the yard.

CLAY STREET, 14th to 15th
OAKLAND

poet has been very much neglected of late. But he has a few friends who have been pretty constant in their attendance. He is now in a hospital. The dimensions of his hermit cell have grown smaller, the few luxuries that he knew in the first years of his imprisonment are no longer accessible, his physical powers have been steadily reduced, but his spirit survives, his mental faculties are alert, and though he cannot write, his wonderful power of versification remains unimpaired. Some day the

MISS MARY GARDEN IN "THAIS."

This is the role over which there was a dispute between Miss Garden an. Lina Cavalieri, the beautiful soprano with whom William K. Vanderbilt is said to be in love.

poignantly pathetic story of the life of this master of metre will be read by lovers of his poetry and they will be indignant at the neglect which he suffered in this city. Perhaps some satirist mindful of that immortal couplet,

> Seven cities claimed the mighty Homer dead
> Through which the living Homer begged his bread—will discuss in similar vein the experience of Louis Robertson. And perhaps some other poet will sing the praises of Herman Scheffauer, George Sterling, Will Greenbaum, Haig Patigian, Charley Field, Joaquin Miller, Mackenzie Gordon and Wharton James, bohemians all, who have heard the cry of distress. These gentlemen will give a benefit performance for the stricken poet next Thursday at California Club Hall. Tickets are one dollar and they are for sale at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s, A. M. Robertson, and Paul Elder's. Who is there that won't buy a ticket?

The Gonzales Case

The first wife of Dr. M. Gonzales, whose will is being contested by his widow, was Miss Susie Crooks, daughter of the late Matthew Crooks. After her divorce from Dr. Gonzales, she married Philip Smith, a millionaire of Paris, where they now reside. Mr. and Mrs. Smith spent several seasons in Santa Cruz, where they entertained lavishly, but they finally returned to Paris, where, I am told, they have a palatial house and live in royal style. Mrs. California Newton and Mrs. Thomas Morffew are sisters of Mrs. Smith, most estimable and well-known ladies here and prominent in club and social circles. Mr. J. J. Crooks of San Rafael is a brother. Dr. Gonzales was a Spaniard endowed with a full share of his national peculiarity—jealousy—and it is said that his first wife was more sinned against than sinning. Matthew Crooks left a very large estate, and when divided amongst his children it made them all wealthy.

Mrs. Naggers—Have you forgotten that this is our tenth anniversary?

Mr. Naggers—No. I have not forgotten, but I have forgiven.

A Painter Losing His Sight

It is reported that Paul de Longpre, the artist, and the only painter who has devoted himself entirely to the presentation of flowers, is in danger of losing his sight. Though a native of France he is an American citizen, having emigrated about twenty years ago. For about one-half the period of his residence in this country he has made his home in a suburb of Los Angeles, and his garden is one of the show places of the southern city. He has made a specialty of roses, and his rosarie contains more than eight hundred bushes. Poppies are also favorites, and in the land of sunshine and flowers there has never been a lack of material to occupy the attention of the "King of flowers."

Largest Exclusive Office Furniture House on the Pacific Coast.

EVERY ARTICLE OF FURNITURE REQUIRED IN AN OFFICE

Exclusive representatives of the most important lines manufactured.

RUCKER-FULLER Desk Co.
737-739-741 MISSION ST.

California Limited

The only exclusively first-class train to the East via any line.
Dining-car service under Fred Harvey management—that's the best on earth.
On your way East you can stop and visit

YOSEMITE VALLEY
AND
GRAND CANYON

No other line puts you in reach of both of these places. Our folders tell.

F. W. Prince, C. T. A.
673 Market St.

Santa Fe

Deserting the Cause

The Chronicle started this "imbroglio" with the Japs. It was the Chronicle that sounded the first "note of warning." And if my memory serves, I think the Chronicle waged its war on the Japs with all the vigor that invective and statistics can furnish to the strong right arm of an editorial warrior. There was nothing that the people could do which would have displeased the Chronicle if it resulted in the utter exportation of the Japanese from our State. I remember that while reading the Chronicle in that time of single-handed strife against this "yellow peril," I was impressed with the idea that the newspaper was going too far in its denunciation of the "peril"; that it was using language calculated to stir a mutiny in the hearts of the "toiling masses" and bloody riot in our streets. Latterly, however, since we have been hearing the stentorian voice of Big Teddy and while we have been getting ready to dodge the felling stroke of his big stick, I have noticed that the Chronicle has climbed up out of the dusty arena to perch immune on the topmost height of the gallery rail, bestriding the fence with legs impartial and heels close-clutched to the board-sides. In the old days the Chronicle defied the Mikado to do his damnedest worst; recently the Chronicle has been advising us not to provoke a war with this "proud and sensitive" people. The Roosevelt-Gillett policy has been approved in all its essential aspects; and such legislation as might have proved effective in discouraging the immigration of the Japanese to California has been disapproved as "hasty" and "untimely." Yet it was to the legislature that the Chronicle looked for immediate relief from the "increasing influx of the yellow horde." What has come over the spirit of the Chronicle's dream of invasion and ultimate disaster to the proud and sensitive Caucasian? Why has the editorial warrior called a halt upon his anti-Japanese army? Here was an opportunity to drive the invaders into the seat or into the United States Supreme Court, yet the Chronicle forsakes the cause of its own making at its most critical juncture, when the strong right arm of the chief was most needed, when the slogan "the Japs must go" should have been shouted loudest. Why were we left naked to the enemy by those who had marched us to the forefront of battle—like Captain Uriah at the command of David who coveted the captain's wife because she was buxom, winsome and fair to look upon? I pause for a reply. I will not condemn my militant and esteemed contemporary unheard. I will not say in so many words that the Chronicle warrior was afraid of the Mikado or that he was intimidated by Big Teddy. I will not even think it.

Sally Gay—Oh, Uncle, that pair of silk stockings you gave me are positively out of sight.

Uncle Rocks—Keep 'em there!

Queen Lil's New Argument

"Hawaii is very much interested in Queen Liliuokalani's efforts to get a quarter of a million dollars from Congress," writes my Hawaiian correspondent. "It is not a specially enthusiastic interest, though it is cordial enough. Everybody hopes she will get the money, for even if she doesn't really need it she will spend it, and good spenders are cherished. At the same time there is some curiosity here as to the means by which she will get it, if she does. Everybody wants to know what arguments are being put up in her behalf, what she has to say in support of her claim, and especially what reading or rendering she gives to the history of her overthrow. The legal argument that she had a life interest in the Crown lands is a new one. It has never been put forward before, so that it has the merit and the attractiveness of novelty. There has been much said about the landing of the American marines from the Boston. The assertion that they overthrew the monarchy in Hawaii was an after-thought. It was put forward by that astute lawyer, Paul Neumann, and served several purposes. It served as a very plausible explanation as to

Dr. Byron Haines, Dentist. Suite 507, 323 Geary St. Hours 9-12 and 2-4. Telephone Douglas 4300.

ROBERTSON'S
A BOOK STORE
1539 VAN NESS AVENUE
CARD PLATES ∴ MONOGRAMS
WEDDING INVITATIONS
A. M. ROBERTSON

SUNSET ROUTE
Between San Francisco and New Orleans

Through the orange groves of Southern California—the cotton and rice fields of the balmy South.

Drawing-room sleepers—berths—services drawing-rooms. Dining service unequalled—Observation Car—open air rotunda—Ladies' parlor—Gentlemen's cafe Library.

Personally conducted Tourist excursion parties to Chicago, St. Louis, Cincinnati, New Orleans and Washington every week.

Write for "Wayside Notes Along the Sunset Route"—Tells in detail of the attractions of the Southern Route.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC

SMITH BROS. STATIONERS OAKLAND

HIGH ART ENGRAVING, Wedding Invitations. Announcements, Calling Cards, Place Cards, etc.
SOCIAL STATIONERY, the newest creations, the latest forms, the finest grades.
ARTISTIC PICTURE FRAMING, exclusive art patterns, new finishes, shadings to match the fittings of your room—the best work money can buy.

462-464 THIRTEENTH STREET, Between Broadway and Washington

why the Queen and her partisans did not make a more vigorous resistance to the revolutionists, though it was not the reason. It gave a dignity to acquiescence in rebellion which otherwise might look like sheer weakness. It also served the purpose of a basis for a demand for restoration by the United States; and now it serves as an argument for compensation for the Crown lands. But the claim has no basis in fact. The archives of the State Department and of Congress itself, for that matter, will show that. The Senate Committe which came here after Blount and made a thorough investigation cleared that matter up. Senator Morgan was at the head of that committee. There is no single instance where the men who were landed from the Boston to protect American property, threatened anybody, arrested anybody, or interfered with anybody. The Royalist daily, the Bulletin, which was not suppressed by the Provisional Government, thus expressed itself: 'Our friends are needlessly alarmed; the American forces are not interfering in any way.' This was before the claim that the Queen was overthrown by American bayonets had been put forward, or the value of the claim had been recognized. This statement has been regretted a thousand times since and its author has been reproached times without number. But it was undoubtedly true. We are far enough away from the overthrow now so that some of the humors of its incidents and situation are being recognized—and enjoyed. When the Pacific Fleet was here last fall, Alexander Young gave a banquet to the Admirals and some of the senior officers, among whom were a number who were here on the Boston at the time of the Overthrow. Most of the other guests had taken some part in the Overthrow. The table talk and the after dinner speeches turned largely on that subject, and more material for the history of the Overthrow and the events that immediately followed, was supplied than had ever been told before. The circumstances of the gathering, the occasion, the years that had elapsed since the Overthrow, and the manifest unalterableness of the results, made possible the freest expression of recollection and reminiscence; and the sense of humor so long restrained by the political necessities of the earlier situation was given a chance, for almost the first time in all the years, to express itself. In the light of these revelations—for much that was said at that banquet was almost in the nature of a revelation—the history of the Overthrow of the Hawaiian Monarchy should be re-written. The idea that the Monarchy was overthrown by the landing of marines and sailors from the Boston was, if possible more thoroughly dispelled than ever. But it is because the sense of humor is at last free to appreciate the incidents of the Overthrow that there is neither resentment nor contradiction when the legend of the triumph of American bayonets, and other royalist versions of the events of January 17, 1893, are put before Congress to influence it to vote a quarter of a million to the only real American ex-Queen."

There was a young druggist named Abel,
Who forgot to stick on the label;
It was poison within,
But was taken for gin,
He died at the end of a cable.

ASK FOR
BLACK AND WHITE
SCOTCH WHISKEY
IT IS THE BEST
NONE BOTTLED IN AMERICA

MISCELLANEOUS THOUGHTS

Of a Poet Who Lived Three Hundred Years Ago and Whose Thoughts Were not Inspired by a Vision of Happenings in San Francisco in the Twentieth Century. The Poet Was Samuel Butler.

All men's intrigues and projects tend,
By sev'ral courses to one end;
To compass, by the prop'rest shows,
Whatever their designs propose;
And that which owns the fair'st pretext
Is often found the indirect'st.
Hence 'tis that hypocrites still paint
Much fairer than the real saint,
And knaves appear more just and true
Than honest men that make less show:
The dullest idiots in disguise
Appear more knowing than the wise;
Illiterate dunces, undiscerned,
Pass on the rabble for the learn'd;
And cowards that can fawn and rant,
Pass muster for the valiant:
For he that has but impudence,
To all things has a just pretence;
And, put among his wants but shame,
To all the world may lay his claim.

All acts of grace, and pardon and oblivion
Are meant of services that are forgiven,
And not of crimes delinquents have committed,
And rather been rewarded than acquitted.

The man, that for his profit's brought t' obey,
Is only hired, on liking to betray;
And, when he's bid a liberaller price,
Will not be sluggish in the work, nor nice.

The interesting announcement for the coming week is the reopening by Shreve & Company of their magnificent salesrooms in the "Shreve Building", Post Street and Grant Avenue, on Monday. The display on the second floor will include a notable exhibition of bronzes, the productions of American artists, which, with the many unusual features introduced in the stock and decorations of the rooms, will offer our people a spectacle surpassing anything ever presented by even Shreve & Company.

BORDEN'S
PIONEER
BRAND
EVAPORATED
MILK
Stands Supreme for PURITY and QUALITY

Correct knowledge of the manufacture of this most delicate article of food is only acquired by many successive years of experience. Our experience covers a period of over fifty years.

CAN YOU AFFORD TO TAKE CHANCES WITH UNKNOWN BRANDS?

See that the label bears the name of
BORDEN'S CONDENSED MILK CO.
Originators of Condensed Milk Leaders of Quality

The Financial Outlook

By R. E. Mulcahy

Coming from a clear sky a cloud broke over Wall Street on Friday last causing unrest and general alarm throughout the sphere of finance. For some time there have been rumors of price cutting in the Steel trade by the independent manufacturers. No particular attention was paid to the reduction by the Steel Trust until its business was threatened. The independent producers were notified to maintain prices or the Trust would inaugurate a severe cut in prices which the independent concerns could not meet. This threat had no effect until the Trust made public a wholesale reduction, and immediately throughout this country and Europe a general selling movement of steel securities was started. Selling orders came from all quarters. Foreigners unloaded their holdings as fast as the market would take them causing a decline of $12 per share in the common and $8 per share in the preferred stock of the Trust. The common stock shows a net decline of $18 per share from its recent high point. It was but a very short time ago that the Trust sold to its employees the common stock at $50 per share, guaranteeing to accept it again at that price. This was accepted by the public as meaning that the Steel Corporation would support the common stock at $50. No doubt their intentions were well meant, but the Steel magnates overlooked the fact that Congress would not allow the Tennessee Coal and Iron Merger to go unchallenged. If the Steel Trust should have to give back to the former owners its Tennessee Coal and Iron property it will prove a very disastrous affair. It was accepted with some assurance that the Steel Company has taken an opportune time to cause alarm in order to forestall any radical tariff reduction. No matter what the real cause may be the result shown in the stock market is anything but pleasant to holders of securities. Some time ago when Steel Common was selling around 55 E. F. Hutton advised holders of the stock to sell out, that inside conditions were too uncertain for the safety of holders. After this advice was given the market price held for some time between 52 and 55. A few ridiculed the idea that there was any possibility of the Steel shares carrying out Hutton's predictions. The action of the market speaks for itself. Not alone have the Trust Securities declined but every Steel product company's shares have followed in the downward trend. The general effect will mean disaster to many of the independent concerns, who will no doubt find it profitable to sell their properties to the Trust. The present reduction in Steel products, using last year's production as a basis, would mean a saving to consumers of $35,000,000 per year to make this up. The Trust will have to reduce its cost of production. Just how this can be accomplished is hard to be seen, except a general reduction in wages take place.

The Railway and Equipment securities were affected by the weakness in Steel shares. Why this should be no one seems to know. General conditions are slowly improving. Money continues easy. Spring traffic appears very promising. Farm products are higher than they were a month ago. It is reasonable to expect a larger merchandise traffic this spring than usual. Notwithstanding these facts there has appeared an undercurrent of unrest recently. It may not continue long. It is to be hoped it will not. Many anticipate improved conditions as soon as Mr. Taft takes his seat. It is quite evident President Roosevelt will not go out of office with any great amount of glory if the powers that be can prevent it. Meanwhile no one can tell what may come into the stock market to cause a further decline. It seems the break is about over and a generally rally to prices recently seen is not far in the future. Values are simply taking a fresh start on the upward grade. Those who can take advantage of the present slump will be well paid for their patience.

The GOLD MEDAL for quality in the Franco-British Exhibition has been awarded to

To His Majesty the King
By royal appointment

WHITE HORSE WHISKY.

QUALITY THE SECRET OF SUCCESS

MACKIE & CO. DISTILLERS LTD.
LAGAVULIN DISTILLERY, ISLAY — Established 1742
MALT-MILL " "
CRAIGELLACHIE " GLENLIVET

Note.—Any person proved guilty of re-filling our empty bottles with inferior whisky will be prosecuted.

Luscious Old Red Wine

LA QUESTA

AGED IN THE WOOD AND
MELLOWED IN THE BOTTLE

Pronounced by experts the best wine made in California

FOR SALE BY

L. D. McLEAN CO. McCAW BROS.
L. N. WALTER, Cor. Devisadero and California
JULIUS BERENDSEN, 762 Devisadero Street

Served at The St. Francis, The Fairmont, Hotel Rafael, Peninsula Hotel, Jules, Chantilly, Berges & Frank's Old Poodle Dog, Thompson's, New Frank's, Union League Club and Cosmos Club.

Telephone DOUGLAS 2487 — R. E. MULCAHY, Manager

E. F. HUTTON & CO.

THE PIONEER HOUSE

BROKERS

Members
New York Stock Exchange
New York Cotton Exchange
New York Coffee Exchange
Chicago Board of Trade

490 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Branch, ST. FRANCIS HOTEL

Two Private Wires to Chicago and NewYork
Washington, D. C., 1301 F Street
Los Angeles, 112 W. Third Street
New York, 31-33-35 New Street

Social Prattle

By TANTALUS

Rough House in Society

Whether or not an intention of renouncing liquor as a lenten penance and the consequent inclination to make the most of present opportunities are responsible for the superabundance of "good spirits" in evidence at the late

MISS LORETTO O'BRIEN

Whose engagement to Hartley Peart was announced this week.

social affairs, the fact remains that the tendency to liberal potations has been the rule, rather than the exception. Not only have the private balls broken all records in this respect, but at the last Gaiety, the exclusive Gaiety, scenes were enacted which for hilarity, would have beggared a harvest dinner. Most of the men were feeling elevated before the evening fairly began, and the "rough house" which ensued in consequence was hardly to be looked for from Pacific Avenue aristocracy. One popular young couple, in their enjoyment of a dance, failed to notice that the floor was practically deserted. They were keeping time to the swinging measure of the barn dance, when they were greeted by a burst of hilarious applause from a group of idle lookers-on. As the absorbed dancers came within reach of this group of spectators, one of the men, in pursuance of a wager, put out his foot and tripped them, and there was a wild tangle of feet and skirts, and both dancers landed with a crash on the floor. Instead of feeling any compunction for the disaster and coming to the rescue, these chivalrous modern knights joined hands, and, forming a ring about their prostrate friends, capered and pranced, in "ring around a-rosy" nursery fashion, to the accompaniment of their own raucous merriment. When, at last, the unfortunate victims were assisted to their feet, there was mild surprise at the lady's display of "temper" and her determination to withdraw from the ball room. One or two have since been heard to wonder why they have been excluded from her visiting list.

MISS LORITA ROUSE

One of the youngest social set of Los Angeles, visiting friends in Berkeley.

Lavish and the Reason Why

The dance given by Mr. and Mrs. George Newhall last week in honor of their nieces, Virginia and Francis Newhall, was by far the most elaborate ball given this season, and has been made the talk of the town in more senses

Edward N. Short, D.D.S., now located permanently at Phelan Building. Phone Kearny 2150.

MISS ELSIE DE WOLFE
REPRESENTED BY
MRS. EDGAR DE WOLFE
INTERIOR DECORATION AND OBJECTS D' ART
TEMPORARY OFFICE, GRANADA HOTEL TELEPHONE FRANKLIN 422

than one. Everything, from decorations to menu, was in bewildering profusion. It is reported that when Mrs. Newhall gave her order to the caterer he stood aghast. When she mentioned to him the number of expected guests and asked how many waiters they would require, he answered, out of his experience, about seventeen. Mrs. Newhall promptly told him to send thirty-five. When he specified the quantity of refreshments, she responded by doubling his estimate, and the consequence was that some of the guests, who had previously been dined sumptuously by Mr. and Mrs. George Pope, were sailing the high seas very early in the evening. The day after the dance some intimate friends took the liberty of speaking to Mrs. Newhall about the general lavishness and wild extravagance and the supper in particular, whereupon she confided to them that not many moons ago she attended a dinner at the home of one of our wealthiest families which excited much adverse criticism. It was remarked that the refreshments were inadequate and they gave out early in the evening. One glass of champagne was the allowance for each guest, and the service was inadequate, the decorations skimped, and the penny-saving conspicuous at every point. She then and there determined that no such criticisms and comments as she heard on every side should be launched against her ball. Rumor has it that there is an engagement, or at least an understanding between the daughter of this economical household and one of the wealthiest bachelors in the United States, and that it will be announced in the near future. One kind friend, on receiving a hint of the situation, remarked immediately that there was at least one bond of sympathy between them, that of economy.

Hilarity at Top Notch

The Mardi Gras Assembly at the Fairmont will take its place in history as one of the liveliest balls ever held in San Francisco. While there were plenty of men during the first part of the evening, there was a certain amount of constraint, which, however, completely disappeared after supper and the liberal flow of champagne. The Kirmess dancers in full force attended in costume, and while many of the men went unmasked and the ladies contented themselves with elaborate ball gowns, the general effect was that of a real fancy dress affair. Almer Newhall, gloriously gotten up as a negro, with an electric flash light as a boutonniere, which he turned on each time that he solicited a dance, was the center of an admiring throng, and was the most original of the men. Among the girls, while Jennie Crocker's somewhat abbreviated costume was the most beautiful, Eliza McMullin was awarded the palm as the cutest and most fascinating. She was dressed as a French doll, with long hanging ringlets, and with her Tige dog on her arm, she made the hit of the evening and enjoyed every moment of it. A number of the younger girls were conspicuously absent, and it was explained that elder brothers who have been in the midst of things this winter and noted the trend of custom, asserted their authority fearing that the ball would be "too hot stuff," but it turned out to be just the "proper caper." The married set predominated and they livened things up in ways that would have astonished the debutante band, as may be gathered from the brief description of one of the girls: "It was terribly hilarious, the best fun I've ever been to, because nobody got too intoxicated—they all could keep their feet," a comment which may serve, at some date far in the future, to throw a flood of illumination on the social manners of the Americans. Most of the members of the Bohemian Club attended together by special invitation, and all the regular Greenway men were present, so, with the decorations in keeping with the occasion, and the sympathies of those present united, the Mardi Gras of 1909 may be regarded as the Greenway triumph, the best he has yet done for our exclusive six hundred and eighty.

Ned Was Emotional

The stately ball room of the Fairmont laid aside its chaste dress of white and gold for the Greenway, and under the hands of skilled decorators and designers, donned true harlequin motley, in keeping with the spirit of the occasion. Radiating from the immense center piece which hung from the ceiling were brilliant streamers which extended back to the walls, forming a canopy of color overheard. Pierrots sat on the edges of the boxes and gazed at the dancers, harlequins peeped from behind the pillars in the corners, and fantastic masques grinned from the walls. No such bold scheme has ever before been attempted in San Francisco and nowhere else could it have been so successfully carried out. The color scheme extended to the main dining salon in which supper was served, where the walls were hung with wreaths, masques and ribbons. While the supper was in progress, Mr. Greenway, who, as usual, saw that the last guest was in place before he took his own seat, appeared in the doorway. Instantly a shout rang out, and from every table glasses were raised to him amidst a chorus of hand clapping. Taken completely by surprise he beat a hasty retreat, but at each subsequent effort to slip quietly in, the same scene was enacted, with calls for a speech. Finally, he raised his hand, and in a voice filled with emotion, thanked them for their kind reception. Even this was not enough, for, as he made his way round the room he was stopped at every table with a demand that he listen to a speech or make one. In self defense, he usually made one. Everyone who attended the affair entered into the spirit of the occasion, even many of the spectators coming in elaborate fancy costumes. It should be a matter of great pride to Mr. Greenway that this, the last ball of the season, should be such an unqualified success. Some of the pillars of society, who have been participants or lookerons at every affair of consequence since San Francisco became conscious that she had a society, were enthusiastic in their commendations.

Mrs. Carolan's Poet

The Persian Poet, Mirza Ali Khan, lectured on Friday afternoon at the St. Francis on the subject of the Persian poets, but the attendance was so small that there is little wonder that he did not warm up to his subject until, as he gallantly explained, he caught sight of a well-known society lady in his audience, who inspired him with new enthusiasm. This lady, I am informed, was not Mrs. Carolan but a grass-widow. Mrs. Carolan, however, was the most conspicuous of the patronesses present, attired in the very latest of sheath gowns, en train, but so scant that she was just able to step in it, and a huge hat with a sweeping feather. After the address, when a favored few had shaken hands with her protege, she whisked him away in her automobile. I am told that Mrs. Carolan guaranteed her poet a hundred dollars for every lecture, and as there was not more than twenty-five in the hall on this occasion, her feelings may be imagined. At the Greenway ball the Persian was again Mrs. Carolan's guest, though, of course, she confidently looked to her friends for assistance in entertaining him, but, alas! there were none with the courage or the taste to experiment with anything so exotic, and

MRS. OSCAR MANSFELDT
PIANIST
TELEPHONE WEST 314 1801 BUCHANAN STREET

"Art and refinement are displayed by tasteful attire"
Vogel's
Makers of
LADIES' GOWNS and FANCY COSTUMES
Phone Franklin 2802 1321 SUTTER STREET, near Van Ness Ave.

they contented themselves with graciously bowing and passing on, so she had him on her hands all the evening, without the relief of a single dance. It is one thing to figure as a patroness of poetry but quite another to become the chaperon of a poet, and Mrs. Carolan scarcely succeeded in concealing the fact that she was extremely nettled at the time. It is whispered that next day she let her friends know in no unmistakable terms just what she thought of their desertion. Prefatory to his remarks on Friday last, Mirza Ali Kuli Khan called attention to a misstatement made in the Call, to the effect that that would be the last occasion on which he would speak in public. There is still another lecture to be given at the university.

The Colonial's Wind-Up

For genuine enjoyment and abandon, not one of the bal masques which closed the winter season of gaieties exceeded that of the Colonials. It was lively and informal from the first moment, with all the blare of trumpets and the showers of confetti that could be desired. The ball room was decorated so as to produce a wonderful sky effect of network in which were caught roses, masques and butterflies, from behind which glowed the electric lights. A different color was cast on every dance, and each barn dance, of which there were enough to satisfy the most importunate, was danced in half light, with bright flashes of green at the "Glow, little glow worm, glimmer." There were often six couples in a row, and as everyone was bent on having as much fun as possible before the penitential season was upon them, the effect was that of a wild frolic. In the middle of the evening a new impetus was given by the advent of a crowd of pink dominoes, who swept into the room blowing trumpets and raising Cain. There were tumbles innumerable, and other mild mishaps, but everyone was in good humor and they only added to the sport. At the supper, after unmasking, hundreds of little rolls of paper of every shade and color were tossed across the room from table to table, giving the effect of a rainbow web of intricate design. Dawn was breaking when the last of the revellers left the St. Francis ball room. Some of the girls, when asked if they had enjoyed themselves, answered with a broad smile, "Yes, indeed—we made such fools of ourselves," showing that they had a true appreciation of the carnival spirit. There will be dismay and vigorous protest, should any consideration be brought forward to prevent the perpetuation of the Colonials next season. The organization was brought together out of special consideration for the debutantes and the girls who have not yet joined the ranks of young matrons, and they will be loth to contemplate another winter with no Colonial.

The O'Brien-Peart Engagement

One of the most notable engagement announcements of the season is that of Miss Loretto O'Brien and Hartley Peart. This was a piece of news that excited widespread interest, and incidentally as a result of this announcement Dan Cupid was credited with having been more than usually felicitous in forming an amiable design. Miss O'Brien is one of the most interesting girls in society and Mr. Peart is one of the ablest of the younger representatives of the bar. Miss O'Brien is the daughter of that popular clubman, James H. O'Brien, no less famous as a wit than as a captain of industry, the most notable of his achievements being the picturesque Yosemite Valley Railroad which was built under his supervision. Miss O'Brien is a vivacious brunette, of the Spanish type, a girl of many graces of mind and person. It is customary nowadays to refer to young lawyers as "promising young lawyers." This would not be an accurate description of Hartley Peart. He has made good. He is an exceptional young lawyer in this generation, in this,—that he is grounded in the traditions as well as in the principles of the law, and he is therefore in every sense a creditable representative of his profession.

Presents Galore

Few women in society have a larger collection of diamonds than Miss Alyce Sullivan. Her uncle, James D. Phelan, sent her a magnificent diamond heart pendant on a diamond chain as an engagement present, and as she was the recipient of a similar gift from her aunt,

Go to Whigham's when you want that baby's photograph taken

Permanent Location 739 MARKET ST., Opp. Grant Ave.

HOTEL DEL CORONADO

CORONADO, CAL.

Coronado is essentially an Hotel of quiet elegance. It has the most equable climate of which any knowledge exists. Hotel Del Coronado has unique facilities for out-of-door recreation. Polo, golf, tennis, boating, fishing and motoring on good roads. Rates $4 per day upward. For special information apply to MORGAN ROSS, Manager, Coronado, or H. F. NORCROSS, representative, 334 S. Spring St., Los Angeles.

THE POTTER

SANTA BARBARA

Begs to suggest to the people of Greater San Francisco that the discriminating in society are choosing THE POTTER as their Lenten Rendezvous this year. THE POTTER'S ascendary is largely due to its increasing excellence but there has been added the most elaborate and beautiful Country Club proposition in America. The formal opening occurs shortly, and with Golf and Polo Tournaments now being dated, ideal out-door interest and entertainment will centre around the new Potter Country Club. Very shortly the exquisite new Potter Country Club booklet will reach all San Franciscans, and will tell a story in pictures.

Write for Country Club Booklet.

THE POTTER

MILO M. POTTER

Miss Phelan, and from other members of the family before the engagement was made public, she may be considered more than fortunate. One of the guests at her announcement luncheon dolefully remarked that at the rate she is receiving gifts now, there will be nothing left to the imagination when the wedding day comes. Alyce Sullivan is the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Sullivan. Her younger sister, Ada, is a nun of the Carmelite order, and a third sister, Gladys, will make her debut this winter. Miss Sullivan's fiance, Frederic Murphy, is a son of the late Eugene Murphy and a nephew of "Dan" Murphy. As the young couple have known each other since childhood, both families are pleased with the match, and as everything was arranged very quitely the news came as a surprise to many who regarded themselves as intimate friends. The announcement was very prettily and originally made. A little page, in pink satin and powdered wig, entered the room towards the end of the luncheon, and from a basket borne on his arm he distributed to the guests heart-shaped sachets with little cards attached bearing the names. The wedding, which will take place after lent, is to be a large church affair, and they will make their home in this city, where the groom's business interests lie. The wedding of Ashleigh Turner, a cousin of Miss Sullivan's, will also be an event of the late spring, and there are several others soon to follow. One attractive girl whose engagement is not yet announced has been threatening to take matters into her own hands and elope, after the manner of Emily Bowie, Emily Wilson and Edna Davis, if the family consent is too long withheld, so her friends are holding themselves in readiness to hear at any moment of either her engagement or her unconventional wedding.

Kirmess Aftermath

In the aftermath of the Kirmess there is much praise for those young maids who represented Midnight in the Dance of the Hours. Their handsome costumes of black net spangled with gold were universally admired, yet few suspected that each and every spangle was sewed in its place by the fingers of the fair wearers. As it took a pound and a half of the little glittering discs for each costume the labor accomplished can be imagined. The names of these industrious virgins may be mentioned with pride. They were Miss Helen Leavitt, Miss Marie Louise Foster, Miss Mina Van Bergen, Miss Emilie Du Bois, Miss Dorothy Baker and Miss Elva De Pue. By the way, I am told, and it is not in the least surprising, that any number of the young girls have become stage struck as a result of their experience, and long for a career behind the footlights. The voting contest at the Kirmess was as exciting as any one could desire, and eight thousand dollars were realized through this pleasant rivalry. The Gallois sent up three thousand votes in one block, whereupon Mrs. De Young immediately sent up the same number—which represented three hundred dollars. Mrs. De Young was overheard to say that at any cost the Marsoviens must win, and when they were announced the victors, some one else was heard to question how the White House could expect to win against the Chronicle. The De Youngs, Mr. and Mrs. Gallois and Raphael Weill worked hard and spent most generously all in a good cause. Miss Stewart, to whom honor and credit are due for the success of the Kirmess, received a thousand dollars, with all her expenses of travel, hotel bills and other expenditures during the time of her engagement, the heavy fixed fee being only a fair compensation for the long journey and the loss of time it would entail, for Miss Stewart is engaged eight years ahead, to superintend similar entertainments, one Kirmess each year in eight different cities. It is due to Mrs. Harry Grey that the entertainment on behalf of the Children's Hospital took the form of the Kirmess, she having witnessed a similar entertainment in Denver, and described it so vividly that the ladies interested became enthusiastic enough to take up the idea. The new hospital is to cost three hundred thousand dollars. There is now a hundred and twenty-five thousand in the bank, and the plan is to proceed with the work as soon as there is two hundred thousand dollars more in sight, giving a mortgage which will then be paid off as rapidly as possible. What with the proceeds of tag day, the Christmas Red Cross Stamps and the returns from the Kirmess, it will not be long before work is commenced.

Dr. Matilda A. Feeley, removed to 1700 Sutter Street. Diseases of women and children.

Descendants of Standish and Reynolds United

The marriage of Mrs. Ida May Reynolds Kyle, widow of the late Thomas Kyle, and Dr. Charles Mann, which took place at the First Congregational Church in this city on January 26th, Rev. George C. Adams officiating, was a very quiet affair. Both bride and groom are opposed to ostentation and display, and only relatives and a few very intimate friends were invited to witness the ceremony. The honeymoon was to have been spent in Southern California, but the washouts consequent on the storms so disorganized railroad travel that a halt was made at Del Monte. The southern trip, which was only interrupted, not abandoned, will be made by steamer at the end of the month, and in August they will go abroad for some months, returning by way of Japan and the Orient. The bride was beautifully and appropriately gowned in a traveling gown of Taupe gray, with a large gray plumed hat trimmed with pastel roses. Both of the young people are well known and highly connected. Dr. Mann, who is a practicing physician, is the eldest son of Samuel S. Mann, a California Pioneer, and a direct descendant of John Audlen and Miles Standish. The bride is the daughter of the late Wells Reynolds, and a niece of Joshua Reynolds, the celebrated English painter. Her sister, Mrs. George Hopper, is promient in local society.

TO LEASE

Elegantly Furnished House

2604 JACKSON STREET

Twelve rooms completely and elegantly furnished to lease for term of two years

Rent reasonable

Apply SALOMON & ESTES, Inc., 219 Montgomery St.

TOWNSEND'S

CALIFORNIA GLACÈ FRUITS

27 Years in Palace Hotel Building

Our retail store on Van Ness Avenue has been discontinued pending our removal down town.

ORDERS FOR OUR

California Glace Fruits and Syrups

during the coming month will be given prompt attention at our factory

117 San Jose Ave., S. F., Phone Market 378

Also at news stands of the Fairmont or St. Francis Hotels

MAIL ORDERS—We make a specialty of mail orders. We have many regular customers in the Eastern States, Europe, India, the Orient and elsewhere. Send us a dollar for a trial order.

NORTH GERMAN LLOYD S. S. CO.

SHORT ROUTE TO EUROPE

From New York Every Tuesday by the Four Luxurious Flyers: "Kronprinzessin Cecile," "Kaiser Wilhelm II," "Kronprinz Wilhelm," "Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse."

From New York Every Thursday by the Twin-Screw Passenger Steamers: "George Washington" (new), Largest German Steamer, 722½ feet long—27,000 Tons Register, "Prinz Friedrich Wilhelm" (new).

To Mediterranean Ports, etc., etc., Every Saturday: S. S. "Berlin" (new), 19,200 Tons Register, Largest Passenger Steamer to the Mediterranean, "Prinzess Irene," "Koeniz Albert," etc.

TRAVELERS' CHECKS

ROBERT CAPELLE — General Pacific Coast Agent

250 POWELL STREET — Near Geary St. and St. Francis Hotel

The Toy-Lucas Wedding

Although the final details for the wedding of Miss Mabel Toy and Francis Wayland Lucas have not been perfected yet, the date of the affair is set for Wednesday evening, March 3, at nine o'clock, at the residence of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Toy, 37 Presidio avenue. The dainty little bride has some surprises in the way of decoration and color schemes which even the most intimate friends have failed to induce her to divulge. Mrs. Harvey Toy will be the matron of honor at the wedding, while Miss Helen Dean and Miss Laura Taylor will attend as bridesmaids. Mr. Philip Paschel will be best man. It was originally intended to take a honeymoon trip to Japan but plans have been modified at the eleventh hour. Miss Toy is descended on both sides from Pioneer stock. Her mother is the daughter of the late William H. Bovee, a '49er, who came here from New York and established himself in the real estate business with Daniel Toy, also a '49er, as his partner. They formed the well-known real estate firm of Bovee and Toy, which, today, is carried on by George Toy and his son, the father and brother of the bride. Mrs. Harry Wilkins, formerly Miss Bertha Savage, whose marriage took place in San Rafael last week, is a cousin of Miss Toy. There are few young girls in society who have been as universally popular, and entertainments in her honor, since the announcement of her engagement, have been continuous. Mr. Lucas, who has come in for a full share of the feteing, is also connected with real estate affairs, being a partner in the firm of Behlow and Lucas. The young couple will continue to reside in this city.

The St. Francis Concert

The third concert of the St. Francis Musical Art Society, on the seventeenth, was exceptionally good. Unfortunately, it fell on the same evening as the first performance of the Kirmess, and, as social functions, the two affairs conflicted, but the arrangements were such that postponement was impracticable. As most of the patronesses of the Musical Art Society were also acting patronesses of the Kirmess, they were hampered by a divided duty, and, as a choice was imperative, but few were present in the Colonial ball room on Wednesday evening. It is safe to say that the audience, if not large, was composed entirely of music lovers, and their appreciation was sincere and enthusiastic. Madame Langendorff, whose European successes are conspicuous, was at her best, and graciously responded to every encore. Those who chose the concert in preference to the initial performance at the Kirmess have no reason to regret their decision, for they enjoyed a treat not often given to music lovers of San Francisco. The display of pretty gowns and jewels if less in quantity, was quite as fine in quality, as on other occasions.

The Cigarette in Society

There is no room for further doubt whether Madame Nicotine is in favor with femininity or not. Every day one hears of new votaries, and probably fully one-half of society's maids and matrons indulge themselves. It is no longer considered necessary to confine the practice to the private boudoir or even to the home premises. There are still a few timid souls who have not the full courage of their convictions and dread the gossiping tongues of the public, but every day they grow fewer. One of the latest devotees to the cigarette is the daughter of a naval officer who makes her home at Burlingame. It is said that she carries her case and match box everywhere, so that she may improve any favorable opportunity, and she is seldom to be seen without a cigarette between her lips, puffing with all the ease and aplomb of a veteran.

JULES' RESTAURANT 328 BUSH STREET
Below Kearny
Phone Kearny 1812

Music Every Evening by Sancho's Parisian Quintette

DINNER With Wine, 75c.

DINNER, SUNDAYS AND HOLIDAYS With Wine, $1.00.

You will find SWAIN'S

Bakery and Restaurant on the line at

1241 VAN NESS AVENUE, Near Sutter Street

AFTERNOON TEA for Shoppers with Music from 3 to 5 o'clock

HOTEL VON DORN

242 TURK STREET

New steel frame Class A Building. Furnishes all the accommodations of the most expensive hotels at half the cost. Rates, $1.00 per day and up.

HOTEL ARGONAUT

Society of California Pioneers Building

FOURTH STREET NEAR MARKET — San Francisco — CENTRE OF THE CITY

Catering to Family and Commercial Trade

400 Rooms $1.00 per day and up Dining room seats 500 guests

Special 50c Luncheon from 11:30 to 2 p. m.

Weekly and monthly rates on application. Free bus meets all trains and steamers.

Telephone Douglas 3393 EDWARD ROLKIN, Manager

YOSEMITE VALLEY

NOW REACHED BY RAIL

Why not see Yosemite this Winter. It is a magnificent sight. First class hotel service at the Park Line and in the Valley. A delightful place to spend a few days or weeks. People returning pronounce it beyond description. For further particulars see agent of Southern Pacific or Santa Fe, or address O. W. LEHMER, Traffic Manager, Y. V. R. R., Merced, Cal.

OPEN ALL YEAR—WINTER AND SUMMER.

HOTEL TOURAINE

Delaware Avenue at Chippewa Street

BUFFALO, N. Y.

ABSOLUTELY FIRE-PROOF

250 Rooms with Bath and Long Distance Telephone

Excellent Music and Grill Room

European Plan, $1.50 per day up

With Bath Connection

Send for Booklet C. N. OWEN, Proprietor

In the Social Spotlight

Mrs. Frank Lusk of Missoula, wife of a prominent mining man, arrived during the week on a visit to her mother, Mrs. Thomas Findley of Sausalito. She will be the guest of honor at many entertainments during her stay.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Findley of Sausalito will leave for Boston about the first of April to be gone for several months.

Miss Edith Von Schroeder entertained a house party at the Hotel Rafael over Washington's birthday, it also being the birthday of the charming young hostess. Amongst the guests were Miss Lee Girvin, Miss Mina Von Bergen, and Miss Marie

The trip to Yosemite contemplated by Miss Elizabeth Newhall in company with a lively young party chaperoned by Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Welch has been postponed.

Colonel John Kirkpatrick, manager of the Palace Hotel Company, which operates the Fairmont and the New Palace rapidly rebuilding on the site of the famous old Palace Hotel, will leave in a short time for Europe to complete the selection of bric a brac for the Palace, which, it is expected, will be opened in November of this year.

Mrs. Charles Woods was hostess at a tea given at her home in Sausalito in honor of Mrs. Georgie Lacey Spaulding, who is here on a visit from Santa Barbara.

Mrs. Kenneth Macdonald gave a luncheon on Tuesday, February 23, in honor of Miss Mabel Toy. Mrs. John Chase also entertained Miss Toy at a luncheon during the week.

Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Hoag, of Burlingame, will be at Del Monte for some time.

Mrs. David Brown, who was Miss Ruth McNutt, was the guest of honor at a bridge party recently given by Mrs. Gerald Rathbone at her home on Broadway. It is regretted that Mrs. Brown's visit is to be so short. Mr. Brown arrived during the week, and they will return to Denver within a few days.

Among those who entertained at dinner in the St. Francis prior to the Langendorff concert last Wednesday, were Mrs. Horace Davis Pillsbury and Templeton Crocker. Mrs. James Coffin, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Martin and Miss Jennie Crocker entertained supper parties on the same evening, after the Kermess.

Mrs. P. B. Anderson entertained at a luncheon in the Blue room of the St. Francis on February 22, her guests being: Miss Mary Keeney, Miss Lydia Hopkins, Miss Janet Miller, Miss Edith Page, Miss Newhall, Miss Julia Langhorne, Miss Florence Hopkins, Miss Irwin, Miss Alice Oge and Miss Jeanne Gallois.

Mr. and Mrs. A. P. Stanley Macquisten, expect to be at Del Monte for some weeks, enjoying the fine conditions for out door recreation at this time of year.

Miss Margaret Newhall and Miss Marjorie Josselyn returned last week from the Newhall ranch, where they have been spending some time taking a rest cure. Miss Margaret Newhall and Mr. Athol McBean were recently the guests of friends at Burlingame, and immediately the busy tongue of Madame Grundy began to revive rumors. Miss Elizabeth Newhall's name is coupled, they say, with that of a prominent young bachelor whose father's handsome auto, being at the disposal of the attractive young girl, is seen frequently in front of the Newhall home.

Colonel S. S. McClure, editor of McClure's Magazine, who is making one of his periodic tours of the country, is at the Fairmont.

C. F. Phillips of St. Paul, J. W. T. Johnson of Vancouver and C. F. Barnes of Portland, prominent bankers in their respective cities, are at the Fairmont.

The service set has had its ranks increased by the addition of two admirals and several officers of both branches. Admiral and Mrs. Henry Ware Lyons are en route for Honolulu, while Admiral and Mrs. Stevens will probably remain for some time in San Francisco. Captain and Mrs. Lucien Young, U. S. N., General O. L. Long and Mrs. Long, U. S. A., W T. Lightile, U. S. A., Commander C. A. Carr and Mrs. Carr, U. S. N., H. Jones, F. Ramilfour and Mrs. Ramilfour, U. S. N., are also at the Fairmont.

For the week ending February 21, there were registered at the Hotel del Coronado from San Francisco Mrs. Jane Plover, Miss Plover, Miss K. S. Plover, Mr. and Mrs. H. N. Butterfield, John W. Buchanan, Mr. H. E. Mescoe, Mr. H. H Scott, Mr. A. J. Maher; Miss Hazel Hotchkiss, Mrs. N. P. Cole, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Woolsey, Miss F. Woolsey, Berkeley.

Amongst the week's arrivals at Byron Hot Springs are the following: Miss Simpson, Al. R. Scott, Mrs. Virgil Nahl and son, from San Francisco; Mrs. M. Welcker and Miss Anderson from Berkeley; Mrs. Fred N. Delanoy from Alameda; I. Hill Mayfield, U. S. N., Mare Island.

Dr. B. F. Stoll, Dentist, moved to Hastings Bldg., cor. Post and Grant Ave. Rms. 309-310. Phone Douglas 4194.

CANNED FRUIT AND PRESERVES

The selection of canned fruits we have to offer can only be obtained in a first-class grocery. California produces the finest fruits to be had and our brands come from the best fruit belt in the State.

L. D. McLEAN CO.

IMPORTERS AND GROCERS

PHONE FRANKLIN 2810 1158-1168 Sutter St. San Francisco

THROUGH TROPIC CLIMES

Atlantic Steamship Lines

New Orleans--New York Service

In connection with the Sunset Route between San Francisco, Los Angeles and New Orleans

Largest American coastwise steamers—elaborately furnished staterooms—electric lighted throughout. Perfect dining service.

First cabin, $35.00; round trip, $60.00

Second cabin, $27.50.

Includes berths and meals en route.

SEE AGENTS

SOUTHERN PACIFIC

DO YOU have any difficulty in arranging your hair? Is it contrary and hard to manage? If so, it lacks the qualities that should accompany perfect hair-health. To overcome the difficulty use

ED. PINAUD'S

(Eau de Quinine)

HAIR TONIC

which makes the hair silky and fluffy—qualities that add greatly to its attractiveness.

Try a sample bottle. Note how elastic and springy it makes the hair — how quickly it frees the scalp from dandruff, which is the cause of nearly all hair and scalp trouble.

After a fair trial of ED. PINAUD'S HAIR TONIC you will easily understand why it is infinitely superior to all other hair preparations.

Let us send you a trial bottle of ED. PINAUD'S HAIR TONIC. Simply send us 10 cents. (to pay for postage and packing) and we will forward it at once.

PARFUMERIE ED. PINAUD, DEPT. S. F.

ED. PINAUD Bldg. Fifth Ave., New York

Stage

"The Goddess of Reason"

The French Revolution supplies the background of a poetic drama in which Miss Julia Marlowe opened her New York season last week. It is called "The Goddess of Reason." It is the work of Miss Mary Johnston. The play deals with the events of the French Revolution between the years 1791 and 1794. It is written in five acts and six scenes, and is composed in blank verse throughout, varied by the introduction of occasional lyric passages. The six scenes show the Chateau of Morbec in Brittany, the garden of the Convent of the Visitation at Nantes, a square in Nantes, the interior of a church in Nantes used as a prison, a judgment hall in Nantes and the banks of the River Loire. Miss Marlowe plays the title role of Yvette, a Breton girl, who becomes identified with the revolutionary movement and is crowned by the people of Nantes as "The Goddess of Reason." Yvette is the natural child of the old Baron of Morbes, in Brittany, and a peasant mother, but has been reared among the peasants, with whom she sympathizes. The opening act of the drama shows the Chateau of Morbec one summer morning in 1791, the day following an unsuccessful night attack made by the peasantry on this aristocratic stronghold. The mob has been repelled by Rene de Vardes, the young baron, who has only just come into possession of the estate. The various leaders in the assault, including Yvette, are arrested, but instead of being hanged are released by Baron Rene after their cause has been stated by Yvette with pathetic and compelling eloquence. The Baron, to the disgust of the older royalties present, even promises the peasants amelioration of their hardships. Baron Rene recognizes in Yvette the woman of his dreams, but the latter is also loved by Remond Lalain, one of the revolutionary deputies, whose jealousy finds expression in bitter taunts, chiding her for her interest in an aristocrat. In the second act, a year later, Yvette, under the patronage of Baron Rene, is shown as a pupil in the Convent of the Visitation at Nantes, sheltered from all the revolutionary excitement. Jealous of what she believes to be the Baron's love for the Marquise De Blancheforet, she is persuaded to leave the convent and join the red-capped throng. In the third act Yvette is revealed crowned as "The Goddess of Reason," first protecting the Baron Rene from the fury of the mob and then delivering him to its vengeance, inspired to this revulsion of feeling by the discovery that he had endeavored to save the Marquise. The fourth act shows the aristocrats in prison and prepared to die. In the last act Yvette, overcome with horror, denounces the revolutionary chiefs, and is herself condemned.

At the Van Ness

"The Red Mill" is a decidedly popular success at the Van Ness Theatre where it is to remain the compelling attraction for a second and last week commencing with Sunday night's performance. So pronounced a success has the Victor Herbert-Henry Blossom musical play made that an extra matinee is announced for Inauguration Day, Thursday, March 4th. This will be given in addition to the regular Saturday matinees. "The Red Mill" is given in a most complete manner, with picturesque scenery, quaint costumes, the "Mill" thrill, also the sextette of little Dutch Kiddies and the exceptionally clever cast headed by Wills and McNeill in the roles of the two Americans who get mixed up in the love affairs and troubles of the residents of a Dutch village. There are many elements which tend to make this production a success. The music is the best Victor Herbert has yet turned out and it is superbly played by a large orchestra. There is no end of good comedy which is well handled by the principal people of the cast. The next attraction at the Van Ness Theatre will be the latest comedy triumph from the pen of Clyde Fitch. It is called "Girls" and comes here from a run of one year at Daly's Theatre, New York. It is said to be a side-splitting comedy and has proven everywhere that theatre-goers are ever ready to laugh at clean fun. The original and satirical treatment of the eternal feminine and her relations to man has probably caused more laughter and sympathetic attention than any play staged in years. H. S. Northrup appears in one of the leading roles.

Mitchell Comes With "The Babes"

"Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" will say good-bye to San Francisco at the American Theatre this Saturday afternoon and evening and at the Sunday matinee Victor Herbert and Glen McDonough's "Babes in Toyland," one of the wittiest and most entertaining musical successes of the past decade, will begin an engagement limited to one week. This tuneful light operatic offering is said to be far and away the most pleasing light musical offering on tour this season. It was making a tremendous success in this city at the Columbia Theatre three years ago when the fire closed that and every other place of amusement in San Francisco. The entire New York production and a company comprising a carefully selected cast of twenty principals, headed by Eddie Redway and Gene Ormond and a capable chorus of twenty people, comes here under the personal direction of Julian Mitchell, America's foremost producer of unique stage effects. In the staging of "Toyland" Mr. Mitchell has even surpassed his previous great successes. Where many producers are content to be sensational, Mr. Mit-

HELEN M. LEOD.

One of the clever principals in "Babes in Toyland" at the American.

EDMACE DE BEAUX.
In Charles Dillingham's production of "The Red Mill" at the Van Ness.

chell insists upon being artistic. "Marrying Mary," Edwin Milton Royle's clever musical play, with Florence Gear in the titular role, will follow "Babes in Toyland" at the American.

The Third Greenbaum "Pop" Concert

This Sunday afternoon at Lyric Hall the Third Lyric "Pop" Concert will be given. The late arrival of the parts of the Carreno quartette preventing adequate rehearsal the Quartte Op. 13 by Mendelssohn will be substituted in honor of the centennary anniversary of the composer's birth. The rarely heard "Sonata for viola and piano" by Rubinstein will be played by Nathan Firestone and Eugene Blanchard, and the latter will also play the difficult piano part in the Rubinstein "Trio" in B flat minor. Seats may be obtained at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s and on Sunday the box office will be at the hall after 10 a. m. The last concert of this brilliantly successful season will be given March 28th, and the quartette will be assisted by Mrs. Celia Decker Cox, contralto, and Miss Therese Ehrmann, pianist, in "An Afternoon with Schubert."

Third Week for "The Rose"

With drawing power undiminished "The Rose of the Rancho" will be started on its third consecutive week next Monday evening at the Alcazar. It promises to break the long-run record of the Sutter street playhouse, for the demand for seats is hardly less pressing today than it was a fortnight ago. Many of the orders come from out of town. A delegation of fifty-three came down from Sacramento to witness the performance last Thursday evening, and seats, single and en bloc, have been reserved for folk residing as far distant as Nevada. The fact that "The Rose" will never be seen elsewhere in Northern California than at the Alcazar may have something to do with our country cousins flocking to town to see it. David Belasco has imparted to Stage Director Butler many little bits of "business," seemingly unimportant when considered singly, but mighty effective in rounding out the interest of the play and contributing to the wonderfully-realistic atmosphere.

"Secret Service"

Although William Gillette's always interesting war drama, "Secret Service," could easily run for another week at the Valencia Theatre, the last performances will be given this Sunday afternoon and evening and on Monday night the celebrated comedy-melodrama, "The Fatal Card," by Haddon Chambers and B. C. Stephenson and which created a great sensation when first presented in this city, will be revived on an elaborate scale. The scenes are laid in western America and England and in the prologue Gerald Austen, a young Englishman who is traveling in Colorado, is thrown in contact with George Forrester, a desperado and adventurer, whom he saves from being lynched by a mob of infuriated men who hold him accused of nearly every crime on the calendar. Forrester, in lieu of a personal card, tears a Jack of clubs, which he finds in his pocket, in half, presenting one portion to his rescuer and retaining the other himself. The action then changes to England, where Forrester, under the name of Marrable, is living with his daughter, Margaret, whom Austen loves. Marrable is at the head of a gang of crooks who murder Austen's father and for a while the son is suspected of the crime. In the last act the members of the gang have young Austen in their power and are about to blow him up by aid of an infernal device prepared by Marrable and his associates, but Austen, who is now clean shaven and who at their first meeting wore a beard, reveals his identity by giving his half of the card to the villian, who, true to his pledge, releases him and meets death in his place. There is much comedy relief to lighten up the more sombre scenes of the play, supplied by Harry Burgess, a young London cockney, and his sweetheart. Mace Greenleaf, as Gerald Austen, will make an ideal hero, and Darrell Standing, who has been devoting his entire time of late to staging the Valencia productions, will reappear as Marrable, and Thomas Lowell will play Jim Dixon, his confederate.

JOSEF LHEVINNE
The Russian pianist who will appear at Christian Science Hall, Sunday afternoons, March 7th and 14th.

MACE GREENLEAF.

The graceful actor who is winning laurels at the head of the Valencia Stock Company.

"The Rounders"

The musical comedy season at the Princess Theatre will open Monday night with a beautiful and elaborate production of Ludwig Englander's musical skit, "The Rounders," which created a furore at the Casino Theatre, New York, where it ran for many months to packed houses. "The Rounders" possesses a clever, interesting and original story which is told in witty and amusing language and is frequently interspersed with tuneful and catchy melodies. Its action affords plenty of opportunity for beautiful scenery and costume. The following cast speaks eloquently for itself: His Excellency Maginnis Pasha, Frank Moulan; The Duke de Paty du Clam, Fred Mace; The Marquis de Bacarrat, James Stevens; Siegfried Gotterdammerung, Bud Ross; Joseph (a waiter), Bert Phoenix; Call Boy, D. S. McFadden; Old First Nighter, Arthur Messner; Footman, H. J. Capion; Thea, principal actress at Theatre des Varieties, Paris, May Boley; Priscilla, Marquise de Baccarat, Helen Darling; Stella Giltedge (an American heiress), Zoe Barnett; Madame Seraphine (Thea's mother), Ethel Du Fre Houston. Kolb and Dill will conclude their engagement this Sunday night with "Playing the Ponies."

The Lhevinne Concerts

Manager Greenbaum's next great star will be Josef Lhevinne, a Russian pianist who is hailed as Rubinstein II. According to the critic of the New York Evening Post, "he possesses the great Anton's technique, his dash, his brilliancy, his bravura and considerable of his leonine power, and he can make the piano sing, too." And strange enough all the other critics agree. His concerts will be given at Christian Science Hall on Sunday afternoons, March 7th and 14th and Thursday night, the 11th. Complete programs are to be had at Sherman, Clay and Co.'s where the sale of seats opens next Thursday morning. Lhevinne plays in Oakland Friday afternoon, March 12th at Ye Liberty Playhouse, presenting a special program made up from the three to be given in this city. While Lhevinne is almost unknown here as was Mme. Langendorff it is time our people learn to know that if Will Greenbaum presents an artist it must be one well worth while. He has never fooled his patrons thus far.

Farce Comedy at Ye Liberty

The special season of Richard M. Hotaling at Ye Liberty Playhouse, Oakland, will be brought to a close with the performance of "A Midsummer Night's Dream" to be given this Sunday afternoon and evening. This production of Shakespeare's comedy has proved to be the the most noteworthy of any of the productions made by Manager Bishop with the popular clubman as the star, and the result is that it has been generously encouraged by playgoers across the bay. For the week commencing next Monday evening, Manager Bishop will present his company, minus the services of Hotaling, in one of the best known farces of the English language, "The Prince of Liars." It was adapted from the German by Sydney Grundy. It had a long run at the old Globe Theatre in London, with William Hawtrey in the star part. It is written purely for laughing purposes, and interpreted by the splendid cast that has been selected for it, should provide an excellent week's diversion for Oakland theatregoers. Miss Helene Lackaye, a sister of Wilton Lackaye, seen here recently with one of our stock companies, makes her first Oakland appearance in "The Prince of Liars." Others prominent in the cast are Isabelle Fletcher, Lillian Elliott, George Friend, E. L. Bennison, George Webster and Walter Catlett. "The Walls of Jericho" is announced to follow, after which comes George Ade's masterpiece, "The College Widow."

The Orpheum Bill

Harry Foy and Florence Clark will head the Orpheum bill for the week beginning this Sunday matinee. These favorite comedians have always been very popular in this city and their reappearance will be cordially welcomed. They will present a new comic skit, entitled "The Spring of Youth," which is said to be a worthy

(Continued on Page 30.)

AGNESS MAHR.

The American Tommy Atkins.

The Well-Dressed Man

What to Wear, When and Where

Written exclusively for Town Talk by J. M. JACOBI

It is interesting to observe that while we derive many of our fashions from abroad the Europeans are not averse to borrowing ideas from us. My readers will doubtless find much to interest them in the following excerpts which I have taken from advance sheets of "Mayfair Fashions":

"The silk hat, mark of dignity, although much abused, still stands alone, top of all for popularity. For a frock, or a morning coat it is absolutely indispensable, the one demands the other. The sides are now straight, and the brim has only a slight curve. It is yet to be seen if this model will have much of a run. A jacket suit whether plain or fancy requires a bowler. This latter also, changing with fashion is now highly crowned with straight sides and flat brim. The soft felt in green usually associated with the Tyrol, is now quite expelled from town, and is only worn for sporting or the country.

He who would not be careless of personal appearance must pay attention to his hair. Even in following all details and changes of mode of simple arrangement of one's capillary covering is the best taste. The hair is brushed nearly flat not unlike those who do not boast of much, but not so much as to give the wearer a "Soft" appearance. On the other hand, a high combing or undulating waving must be avoided.

The collar and tie play a very important part in a man's dress. Unlike a woman, a man must wear a collar, but anything will not do. A high collar round a short neck putting the wearer's head, as it were in a vice is as bad as a swan like neck with a collar like a tape. A collar a shade shorter than the neck is a happy fit and gives a well dressed appearance. With evening dress a straight collar is most comfortable; it must have round corners and the "V" opening very narrow. The winged collar is also a great favourite. For sporting purposes a low double collar with very round corners, is easiest, comfortable and good looking.

A man's taste is judged by his tie, this should be of subdued shades toning nicely with that of the garment being worn. With a frock or morning coat, a black tie with a simple design in a quiet color is the best, and a white slip or demi-vest is unnecessary. A mixture of colors is not good taste, but self shades interwoven into designs are neat and gentlemanly, any shades do providing they are quiet and modest. The favorite regatta tie is still the same shape, but if the vest openings continue to get bigger we shall have to fall back on the Ascot, and finally (this we sincerely hope not) the breastplate.

A plain light colored waistcoat, always looks well with any suit, I say plain because so many inharmonious colors are woven into the vestings of to-day, these highly colored vests give a man a vulgar appearance, like that given to a self-made man who wears a big heavy gold Albert right across his waistcoat. The opening of a light vest should be high enough to show just 3-4 to 1 inch above the opening of the coat, but if the same material it should be just as low, as it becomes ugly and reasonless. A small thin watch chain from pocket to pocket via a button-hole is neat and looks best.

Light colored striped trousers suit any coat and are better looking than dark. But care must be used in the choice of trousers, many cloths for this garment do not carry their value visibly, but hide it in the weaving, and these are the kind to choose, and may I take the liberty to advise my readers not to buy colored striped trousers, or those with a high design? A quiet design is certainly preferable, to a loud one, whether produced by the weaving or the coloring. What looks nicer than a dark coat, light vest, and not too dark trousers, and the tight fitting long lapelled coats lend charm to the whole thing?

Big square toed, heavy soled boots, known as "Americans" are clumsy, and not suited for dressy suits. How often does one see an otherwise elegant well dressed man spoiled by those atrocities. For a country walk they are all very well, but to finish off the man as I have depicted him, the boots must be well shaped, to harmonize with what they carry.

Finish off a smart suit with a pair of delicate boots, and leave the others to policemen."

¶ ¶ ¶

Mr. C. C. F. H.

In answer to your query as to whether it is proper to wear a black bow tie with Full Evening Dress. A decided "no." A white pique or lawn tie is the only proper thing.

LARGEST COLLECTION ON THE COAST

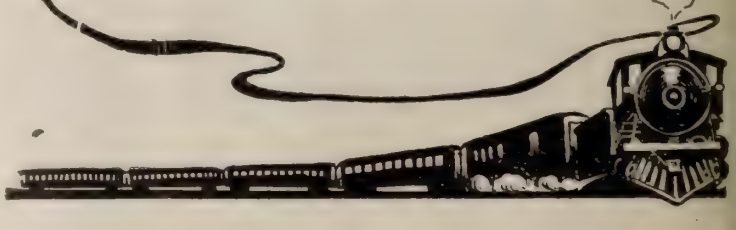
DIAMONDS AND GEMS

BALDWIN JEWELRY CO.

1261 VAN NESS AVENUE AT SUTTER

Golden State Limited

1908-09 Season Opened
December 15, 1908



No better or more direct service between San Francisco, Southern California and Chicago

Through the golden laden orange groves---by the wonderful Salton Sea---Mexican border scenes and the Rio Grande

Careful and attentive dining service Meals a la carte

Drawing-room Stateroom Sleeping Cars---staterooms, drawing-rooms, sections and berths. Observation, Parlor and Library Car equipped with latest literature and magazines. Gentlemen's Smoking Room. Ladies' Rest Room. Spacious Open-air Rotunda.

Southern Pacific--Rock Island Lines

Off Guard

(Continued from Page 10.)

were no visible marks of physical violence, and neither money nor valuables were missing. His circumstances in life had been such as to preclude supposition of suicide. Indications pointed rather to an unfortunate accident or a murder through some other motive than that of robbery.

Mr. Deleutre was asked to appear before the prefect of police. Being a man of good standing in the community he was treated with consideration. In response to question by the prefect, he related without the slightest show of embarrassment how he had accompanied Mr. Naviere from the banquet hall to the bridge and how, after offering to escort him home and having been refused, he left him there and returned to his own residence. He remained silent as to what Naviere had told him of his various business plans, but indulged in warm words of praise concerning the character and habits of the deceased, deploring at the same time the horrible fate that had befallen him. When he had concluded the prefect thanked him and he was allowed to leave.

The following day he attended the funeral obsequies of his friend. He was disturbed neither by a sense of fear nor lulled into an incautious repose. Moreover he felt no necessity for the exercise of any great amount of self-control. The part he played came to him quite naturally, as if he were carrying out a preconceived plan, carefully rehearsed in every detail. But he did it all in a rather perfunctory, mechanical sort of way, much as one reads a newspaper without stopping to spell the words or analyze the sentences.

A week passed and he gradually lapsed into his former staid and exemplary mode of life, apparently oblivious to the excitement he had caused or the possibility of further developments. Then there arrived another summons from the prefect. The officer of the law was as courteous and affable as at their first meeting and explained that the matter had practically been disposed of, that all the evidence tended toward the confirmation of the accident theory, and that Mr. Deleutre's presence had only been requested for the purpose of obtaining from him some light on the man's business prospects and plans, which perchance he may have revealed to so close a friend. Deleutre again appeared perfectly at ease and in a voice devoid of any trace of emotion or suppressed excitement, proceeded to tell at some length all Naviere had confided to him. The prefect listened attentively and, as Deleutre progressed, began to manifect an obsequiousness of conduct bordering on friendly interest. When Deleutre had concluded he assured him that this was the last time he would be importuned and, handing him a pen, bade him affix his signature to the transcript of the statements he had just made. Deleutre mechanically took the pen and wrote:

"In reply to your favor of the.....inst. we hasten to inform you that on the night of the.....inst. Mr. Victor Deleutre threw Mr. Julian Naviere into the Seine river from the Grenelle bridge."

He had written very rapidly, not so rapidly, however, that his action escaped the notice of the watchful official, who said:

"What are you doing, Mr. Deleutre? I asked you only for your signature."

Deleutre looked blankly at the official. "I am through," he mumbled, "all you need now is the date—" He started. The veil of oblivion lifting as suddenly as it had enshrouded his mind, exposed to him with awful vividness the harrowing consequences that would follow in the train of this fatal lapse. An ashy pallor spread over his features. In speechless terror and with trembling knees he tottered forward and reached for the document—too late.

The latest, and undoubtedly the most novel stunt in a demonstrating line, is that of having to pull a prospective customer out of your car. This happened to Calvin C. Eib of the Pioneer Automobile Company yesterday. Upon being asked by a supposed casual visitor and prospective buyer for a look at the new 20 horsepower Oldsmobile, the hustling sales manager of the Thomas, Chalmers-Detroit and Oldsmobile cars volunteered to show the man. "I did not notice anything unusual about the man," said Eib. "We started and the fellow talked a great deal about the speed of the car and I thought I had a live prospect, but on the return to the salesroom the prospective purchaser became quiet and when I stopped in front of the office he did not show any inclination of getting out of the car. It was only then I realized he was intoxicated. I asked him if he did not want to come inside and he replied that he liked to sit in the car and thought he would stay there for a while. He weighed fully 200 pounds and I tried to pull him out of the seat, but could not move him. He was not angry, he simply laughed and told me to let him alone, as he liked the car and would stay in it for a while. After ten minutes of useless persuasion and effort to remove him, two of the salesmen came to my assistance and we finally pulled him out of his comfortable seat in the tonneau, repeating that he liked the car better than any he had ever seen and would call again.

DIVINE
NECTAREOUS JUICE

Most Fitting
Finale to the Festive Feast

LIQUEUR

PÈRES CHARTREUX

GREEN AND YELLOW

At first-class Wine Merchants, Grocers, Hotels, Cafes,
Batjer & Co., 45 Broadway, New York, N. Y.,
Sole Agents for United States.

HOTEL WESTMINSTER

LOS ANGELES, CAL. Fourth and Main Sts.

AMERICAN PLAN, Reopened.
Rates per day, $2.50 Rooms without Bath
Rooms with Bath, $3.00, $3.50 and $4.00.

EUROPEAN PLAN.
$1.00 per day and up.
With bath, $1.50 and up

F. O. JOHNSON, Proprietor

We have the wall paper in stock that made this room. We made this mantel; we furnished the rugs, floorings, electric fixtures.
Can we make you one?

TAYLOR & SINCLAIR CO.

INTERIOR DECORATORS BUSH AT VAN NESS

TRY MURINE EYE REMEDY
For Red, Weak, Weary, Watery Eyes.
Murine Doesn't Smart—It Soothes Eye Pain.
Try Murine For Your Eyes.

Stage

(Continued from Page 27.)

successor to their "Under the Sea," in which they made such a tremendous hit. Mr. Foy will always be remembered as the "man who ate the goldfish." Many of the comedy effects he has introduced in vaudeville have been widely copied. For "The Spring of Youth" they carry a special set of apparatus for it is the most pretentious production they have yet attempted. Bowers, Walter and Crooker, "The Three Rubes," will introduce an entirely novel act. Agnes Mahr, the well known dancer, will present her creation, "The American Tommy Atkins" which is vivacious, fascinating and clever. Miss Mahr has an international reputation. She has appeared in every capital of Europe, Australia and the Orient. The daintiness of her art and the excellent taste displayed in her costumes appeal strongly and make her offering most welcome. Jack Connelly and Margaret Webb will present what they term a cyclone of comedy, melody and action. Mr. Connelly is a sprightly acrobatic pianist and Miss Webb a very pleasing vocalist. A special feature of this week's program will be the appearance of the celebrated traveler and lecturer, Lloyd Scott, who will deliver a brief travel talk on Egypt, beautifully illustrated by views, moving pictures and panoramas showing the Nile, the Pyramids and other historic places. Dick Crolius, who recently scored an immense hit in the brief race track incident, "Shorty," will return for next week only which will conclude the engagements of Frank Nelson & Co.; Goldsmith and Hoppe, and Jwan Tschernoff's wonderfully trained horses and dogs.

In the Limelight

The great Russian actress Madame Alla Nazimova is announced for early appearance at the Van Ness Theatre with her entire New York company with whom appears the celebrated actor Brandon Tynan. Twenty-five people are in the organization carried by the star for the Pacific Coast tour. Although the casts of some of her plays is short, twenty acting people are carried, special players being engaged for individual roles.

It is said that no more catchy and tuneful music has been written for an American song play than that furnished by Silvio Hein for Edwin Milton Royle's play, "Marrying Mary," which will follow "Babes in Toyland" at the American Theatre with Florence Gear and a large singing company. From the opening waltz, a waltz, by the way, as popular and full of rhythm as the famous "Merry Widow" waltz, to the final measures when Marrying Mary Montgomery is whirled into the arms of her true love, the songs, duos, sextettes and choruses were written for the purpose of entertainment. Full of simple gallantry, they may well be likened to the graceful and charming melodic romances of the best of the modern school. They are sprightly, graceful and gay.

Bright and pretty Beatrice Nichols, who scored such successes as "Puckers," in "The Prince Chap," "Lorena Watkins" in "The County Chairman" and "Caroline Mitford" in "Secret Service," has renewed her contract for one year at the Valencia Theatre. She is young, talented and a hard student and already numbers her admirers in San Francisco by the thousands.

Otis Skinner is to come to San Francisco with his production of "The Honor of the Family," the four act play adapted by Paul M. Potter from Emile Fabre's work after Balzac. Skinner triumphed most signally in "The Duel" and theatregoers here will be pleased to hear that he is to bring his latest success.

Easter Monday, April 12, has been determined upon as the date for producing "Peter Pan" at the Valencia Theatre. Barrie's delightful fantasy will be staged upon the sumptuous scale for which the Valencia is noted and the cast will be made up of the best artists obtainable.

"The Master Power," which was awarded the prize of one thousand dollars offered by New York Town Topics for the best play submitted within a certain period, will be the attraction to follow "Marrying Mary" at the American Theatre.

Manager Will Greenbaum announces that he has arranged with Rear Admiral Robley D. Evans (Fighting Bob) for two lectures in this city, the subjects to be "From Hampton Roads to San Francisco with the fleet" and "Our War with Spain." Evans is said to be a fine orator and a witty raconteur and he will receive a warm welcome here, for every American will want to hear Fighting Bob's stories.

GREENBAUM'S THIRD "POP" CONCERT

This Sunday Afternoon at Lyric Hall. Seats 50 Cents and $1.00 at Hall.

JOSEF LHEVINNE

The Russian Pianist

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE HALL

Sunday Afternoons March 7th and 14th,
Thursday Evening, March 11th.

Seats $1.00, $1.50, $2.00 next Thursday at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s where complete programs may be obtained.

OAKLAND CONCERT—Friday Afternoon, March 12th,
YE LIBERTY PLAYHOUSE.
Steinway Piano Used.

Coming—DAVID BISPHAM.

VAN NESS THEATRE

Cor. Van Ness and Grove
Gotlobb, Marx & Co., Mgrs
Phone Market 500

Tonight, Sunday Night and for a Second and Last Week,
Beginning Monday, March 1st, Charles Dillingham's Complete Production of Victor Herbert and Henry Blossom's Musical Comedy Success,

THE RED MILL

Big Cast of Principals, Splendid Chorus and The Famous Dutch Kiddies
Big Cast of Principals, Splendid Chorus and The Famous Dutch Kiddies.
March 8th—Clyde Fitch's Comedy "GIRLS."

NEW ALCAZAR THEATRE

Cor. Sutter and Steiner
Class "A" Building
Phone West 6036

BELASCO & MAYER, Owners and Managers.
Monday Night, March 1st, Starts the Third Week of

THE ROSE OF THE RANCHO

By David Belasco and Richard Walton Tully.
Prices: Evenings, 25c to $1.00. Matinees, Saturday and Sunday, 25c to 50c.
Extra Matinee Washington's Birthday.

PRINCESS THEATRE
PHONE WEST 663
S. LOVERICH, MANAGER

Ellis Street, near Fillmore
Absolutely Class "A" Building
Matinee, Saturday and Sunday

BEGINNING NEXT MONDAY NIGHT
OPENING OF MUSICAL COMEDY SEASON
The New York Casino Success,

THE ROUNDERS

Book by Harry B. Smith. Music by Ludwig Englander.
May Boley, Frank Moulan, Helen Darling, Zoe Barnett, Ethel Du Fre Houston, Fred Mace, James F. Stevens, Dudd Ross, Bert Phoenix and a great cast.
CHORUS OF FORTY.
Prices—Evenings 25c, 50c, 75c, $1.00. Matinees (Except Sundays and Holidays, 25c, 50c, 75c

ORPHEUM

Ellis Street, near Fillmore
Absolutely Class "A" Bldg
Phone West 6000

Week Beginning this Sunday Afternoon. Matinee Every Day.
ARTISTIC VAUDEVILLE.
FOY & CLARK, in "The Spring of Youth;" BOWERS WALTER AND CROOKER, "The Three Rubes;" AGNES MAHR, The American Tommy Atkins; CONNELLY & WEBB; DICK CROLIUS & CO.; LLOYD SCOTT'S ILLUSTRATED TRAVEL TALK ON EGYPT; FRANK NELSON & CO.; GOLDSMITH & HOPPE. Last Week JWAN TSCHERNOFF'S UNIQUE CIRCUS TROUPE.
Evening Prices: 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c. Box Seats, $1.00. Matinee Prices (Except Sundays and Holidays): 10c, 25c, 50c.

VALENCIA THEATRE

Valencia Street, between
Thirteenth and Fourteenth
Phone Market 17

The Only Steam Heated Theatre in the City.
Sunday Afternoon and Evening—Last Times of "Secret Service."
Commencing Monday Evening, March 1st, Elaborate Production of

THE FATAL CARD

A Comedy-Melodrama by Haddon Chambers and B. C. Stephenson.
Cast to the Full Strength of the Valencia Stock Company.
Regular Matinees, Wednesday and Sunday, Prices 25c to 50c.
Evenings, 25c to 75c. Box Seats, $1.00.

AMERICAN THEATRE

Market St., nr. Seventh
Phone Market 381

One Week, Commencing Sunday Matinee, February 28th,
The Gorgeous Musical Extravaganza,

BABES IN TOYLAND

Music by Victor Herbert. Book and Lyrics by Glen MacDonough.
Staged by Julian Mitchell.
Prices: Evenings, 25c, 50c, 75c $1.00. Matinees, 25c, 50c, 75c. No Higher.
Next—"Marrying Mary."

YE LIBERTY PLAYHOUSE

Oakland, Cal.
Direction
H. W. Bishop

Week of Monday, March 1st. Every Evening, Matinees Saturday & Sunday.
BISHOP'S PLAYERS.
Offering the famous farce-comedy success,

THE PRINCE OF LIARS

Prices, Evenings, 25c, 50c, 75c. Matinees, Saturday and Sunday, 25c and 50c.
Next—"The Walls of Jericho." Soon—"The College Widow."

Auto Notes

"My speedometer shows over 4,800 miles, and I have not had to touch my car during the six months I have owned it," said R. L. Huffman, a well known motorist of this city, who was one of the first purchasers of Chalmers-Detroit cars. "I have toured all over the southern part of the State, including a trip to Yosemite, and have never encountered the word 'trouble.' I think a great deal of the troubles of motorists are due to the owners themselves. An automobile has to be taken care of the same as an animal, only it is not as expensive. With the minimum amount of precaution and care, an automobile, such as mine for instance, will not cause a motorist any trouble or expense year in or year out. The average owner of an automobile is better off without any tools to work with. Then he cannot monkey around the car, taking it apart and never putting it back properly. That is the main cause of my success. I simply give my car plenty of oil and let her go."

Record breaking deliveries of Studebaker E-M-F "30," cars are being made by the Studebaker Bros.' Company of California. Yesterday J. F. Chadbourne of Irvington, Cal., took delivery of his car and being an expert driver himself took the machine for a spin around this city and was so pleased with the splendid behavior of the new Studebaker that he drove from here down to his home town from which point he phoned the Studebaker people a few hours later, saying he had arrived safely and that the car was already attracting the populace. Other cars delivered yesterday by the Studebaker company were: San Jose Implement Company of San Jose, Rosenthal-Kutner Company of Madera, W. H. Ward of Fort Bragg, C. A. Yordi of Cloverdale and Francis Underhill of Santa Barbara.

Going over a steep hill at the rate of twenty-five miles an hour, suddenly going into a mud hole over the front wheels, was the experience of Jean Bemb, the expert from the Chalmers-Detroit factory, who made a trip last week with a party of friends over the road in Marin County. "With J. L. Ray and three others we started out for a tour of the country," said Bemb. "I was driving Ray's Chalmers-Detroit car, and was hitting up a clip of about twenty-five miles an hour over one of the grades, when on crossing the summit, I saw a hole across the road and although I threw on the brakes and shut off the power, we were so close to the hole our car plunged to the top of the wheels in about two seconds. After an hour's strenuous work by all of the party, we again got the car on the dry ground. Of all the roads in the country, those in Marin County are certainly the worst I have encountered. I would advise all motorists to drive over them with care."

Through snow and mud, over ice and rough roads, Harry Hall White of the Studebaker E-M-F "30" factory at Detroit, Mich., has just established a new record in motordom in Utah by crossing the State in the dead of winter in one of the new Studebaker E-M-F "30" cars. The route which White and his two companions followed took them through some treacherous canyons and in some instances he was compelled to drive for miles over the ties of the railroad tracks. Despite the heavy obstacles against which the car was pitted it came out almost "without a scratch," so to speak, as there was never a moment's time lost on the run with engine trouble or with tire trouble. Besides the run was made in the shortest time that an automobile ever crossed the Mormon State.

The Howard Auto. Company delivered last Saturday to Mr. W. N. McCaw of the White House one of their '09 40 horsepower touring cars. This machine is equipped with a delivery body, and is to be used by the White House for making quick deliveries. This is probably the finest and most expensive delivery car in the city.

Mr. C. E. Mathewson is just in receipt of advice that the Diamond Tires lead in the Chicago show as they did in the combined shows of New York. In the Chicago the Diamonds equipped 24 7-10 per cent of all the cars with pneumatic tires, which was 20 per cent more than the second highest make; in other words, there were 79½ sets of Diamond Tires on 321 cars. Fourteen other makes of tires divided the remainder. Diamond Tire popularity was also shown in the Philadephia show where they equipped 36 cars out of 152, fourteen makes dividing the remainder. In the Cincinnati show 22 of the 63 cars were equipped with Diamonds, eleven cars being equipped with the nearest competing makes. Nine other makes divided the remainder.

Three Golden Gate avenue hills on the high speed with five people in the cars is the unusual stunt of the 20 horsepower baby Oldsmobile. This feat, which only the best of the higher powered cars do, is considered remarkable by the local motorists and chauffeurs. The fact that the car is light and compact is one of the advantages necessary for such unusual hill climbing ability. "I did not think the car would do it," said C. R. Parmenter, demonstrator for the Pioneer Automobile Company, in speaking of the stunt. "I had to slow down before hitting the first hill at Steiner street, but she went up and gaining momentum on the level block between Pierce and Scott streets, we shot up to and over Devisadero street and on up to Broderick without having to touch the throttle. It is certainly a remarkable climb for a low power car."

Rudolph Barth, watchmaker and jeweler, now permanently located at 36 Kearny street.

¶ When a business concern has operated successfully for more than half a century its claim to recognition may be considered firmly established.

¶ The Studebaker firm has done this and today its products stand for the highest quality of mechanical and engineering skill.

¶ Nothing on the market today in the shape of a vehicle surpasses the Studebaker-Garford automobile. It is representative of the most perfected American design—a combination of sturdiness, speed, safety and style.

¶ Our line of cars is the most comprehensive on the coast. We invite inspection and court comparison.

Fremont at Mission Studebaker Phone Douglas 3000

1909

THOMAS FLYER

6-40. Price, $3,180 San Francisco.

The new 6-cylinder, 40 H. P. Thomas Car has proved equal to the most difficult road and track tests. The finest riding qualities of any car on the market. Other models include the famous New York to Paris type and new demountable limousine body.

Also full line of 1909, 4-cylinder Chalmers-Detroit, 30 H. P. Price, $1,650 San Francisco.

DELIVERY NOW

PIONEER AUTOMOBILE CO.

524 Twentieth St., Oakland 901 Golden Gate Ave., San Francisco

Mrs. Warfield

PIANO SCHOOL FOR CHILDREN AND BEGINNERS

Telephone Piedmont 3414 6409 Regent Street, Berkeley

Tuesday and Friday, Ebell Club, Oakland

LEVY'S CAFE

Third and Main Streets, Los Angeles, Cal.

Much the Best Place to Get Fine Things to Eat and Listen to Choice Music at Popular Prices.

Letters

A Volume of Quotations

Volumes made up of quotations selected with reference to their application seem to grow in popularity, and the established habit of careful readers—that of transcribing the thoughts and ideas which make a special appeal to them, is so well known that the compilers of these various collections are but supplying a staple demand. They are always appropriate and never untimely and one has but to decide on the virtue or grace desired and then make choice. Mary Aylette Ayer, who is already well known as the editor of a number of these favorite compilations, offers now "Keep up Your Courage," the selections having in mind the inspiration of persistence and will to accomplish all things. An appropriate gift book, especially for the young, published by Lothrop, Lee and Shepard.

The Philosophy of Love

"One Immortality," H. Fielding Hall's new novel is quite as much a philosophy as it is a romance. The whole action, if we may use the term where the field was so restricted as to make any action next to impossible, took place on board a steamer making a slow passage from Venice to India. "There are three loves that make and keep the world—the love that binds man and woman into one flesh and soul, the love that draws families into nations, the love that holds the world to God. Each love is justified in its own immortality," and though this story concerns itself with the first love, it is not confined entirely to that one view of the great passion. Amongst the passengers and in their relation to each other and to the world there is exemplified in some degree every phase of love and love making. There are the Holmans, man and wife, an ideally happy couple with two young children. Holman is a soldier. His wife has the art and wisdom to keep her hand off his purely masculine and official affairs, and he likewise recognizes his limitations and allows her supremacy in her own field. In direct contrast to them are the Grahams. Mrs. Graham, worth money of her own, dominating and masterful prevailed upon her husband to resign his commission. He was a soldier, happy in his profession, good for nothing outside of it and dissatisfied with himself for having given in to Mrs. Graham's dictation, while she was equally discontented because he did not accomplish the impossible and make fame and fortune in some other profession. The result was discord and discomfort, for the women sympathized with the wife while the men saw the other side of the shield. The inevitable and only end came when Graham, worn out by the constant nagging and the discomforts of the voyage, deserted at Aden and cast in his lot with an old German professor on his way to East Africa in search of botanical specimens—in some sort—a return to the life of adventure which was the only life. Holt and Warden were two unmarried men potential suitors for the hand of Miss Ormond, a cousin of Mrs. Holman's. Warden soon concluded that his regiment was his only love and stepped aside for his friend Holt, who really did not want to fall in love, but found resistance vain. Miss Ormond was a very modern type of girlhood. She had been brought up in the belief that marriage was the true and only aim of women and she resented it. She was in the transition stage when she might have become an obstreperous suffragette if a sense of public decency would not have restained her. She was more or less imbued with the ideas of independence, careers, and all the modern notions. In contrast to her was an Indian girl who had spent three years in Europe and now was returning to her native land. She, too, was a singular mixture of the occidental and oriental, the east overlaid with a veneer of west, and it is an interesting study to watch how the west was laid aside as she neared her east. The "Princess," too, had two potential lovers—a Dane and an Italian—rechristened Hamlet and Othello by their fellow voyagers. They were each infatuated by the romance and mystery of the girl, and thought themselves in love even, to such a pitch of jealousy as to fight a duel only then to discover that neither of them cared as much for her as for each other. Besides these there was a group of German girls on their way to the far east to be married to missionaries whom they had never seen, in order to enter the missionary field as their assistants, and another group of Catholic sisters vowed to celebacy in the pursuit of their religious calling. Miss Ormond and Mr. Holt are the characters who occupy the main foreground. Neither is desirous to be won, but both are in the grasp of the inevitable. She occupies a middle place, between the Indian girl, who upholds her country's system of infant marriages, and the nuns who discourage her in her tentative suggestions that she shall join their order and so escape what she has taught herself to rebel against—submission to a man in a world ordered for and by men. Apart from all these an interested and often an amused on-looker is the old German professor who whiles away his time by writing a review of a book on primitive marriages—and making his comments from his observations on the various dramas played out under his vision by his fellow voyagers. "One Immortality" is not to be confused with the innumerable romances of steamer flirtations, usually the frothiest of light reading. There is much more between its covers than a relation of the vicissities of courtship of a pair of foreordained lovers. Some of the purely descriptive passages could stand alone without their context and the moral, for in spite of the disinclination for the old-fashioned term, books still have morals of some sort, is the wholesome one that marriage is not a state to be suddenly entered into as one steps from one room to the next and closes a door between, but a growth and an evolution, and that this is neither a man's world nor a woman's, but the world of both in which they should strive not each to overstep and surpass the other, but to work in harmony, each in his own part of the field, looking not to the blended result. Published by the Macmillan Co.

The St. Raphael, 60 Seventh St., opp. main postoffice, San Francisco; apartments $20, single rooms $10, month.

RESPONSIBLE POSITIONS

demand men and women possessing strong, healthy, nervous systems. Employes are frequently "let out" or fail to advance because they lack energy, will power, force, ambition; are trembly, weak, unsteady, unreliable. Such persons suffer from Nervous Disorders, Neurasthenia, Nervous Dyspepsia, Melancholia, Insomnia, Nerve Weakness, etc. They should take and have their nervous systems restored strengthened and re-energized. These tablets build up the entire system—restore manhood and womanhood. Contain no harmful drugs, opiates or narcotics. This is an excellent time to start. For sale by leading druggists, 50c per box, 6 for $2.50, or by mail direct, in plain wrapper, on receipt of price. Money refunded if not satisfied. Booklet Free.

Make-Man Tablets

Make-Man Tablet Co., Make-Man Bldg. Chicago.

NEW YEAR GREETING

Start 1909 aright. Telephone us about wiring or repairing.

Telephone Douglas 1185 and 1186.

LEVY ELECTRIC CO.

HURRY UP ELECTRICIANS

LEVY ELECTRIC WIRING COMPANY

Electric Trains, Cars, Dynamos, Motors, Batteries, Machinery, Magic Lanterns Moving Pictures, Telegraph and Telephones, Wireless Outfits, X-rays, Etc.

648 Sacramento St. San Francisco 1205 Polk Street

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Action No. 13477.

EDWARD FRANCIS McKITTRICK, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Lien Upon the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, Defendants, Greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Edward Francis McKittrick, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above-entitled Court and county, within three (3) months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Folsom Street, distant thereon one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet Northerly from the Northerly line of Twenty-second (22nd) Street and running thence Northerly along said line of Folsom Street twenty-four (24) feet; thence at a right angle Easterly one hundred and twenty-two (122) feet and six (6) inches; thence at a right angle Southerly twenty-four (24) feet and thence at a right angle Westerly one hundred and twenty-two (122) feet and six (6) inches to the said Easterly line of Folsom Street and point of commencement.

Being a portion of Mission Block Number 54.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit:

That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute; that his title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover his costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 29th day of December, A. D. 1908.

(Seal)

H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By M. P. BRUTEN, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 9th day of January, 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiff: None.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Attorney for Plaintiff, Rooms 1255-57 Flood Bldg., 870 Market Street, San Francisco. 1-9-10

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of SHANNON DOUGLAS NOE, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Administrator of the estate of SHANNON DOUGLAS NOE, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within four months after the first publication of this notice to the said administrator at the office of G. Clark, Room 317, New Post Office Building, corner Seventh and Mission Streets, San Francisco, Cal., which said office the undersigned selectes as the place of business in all matters connected with said estate of SHANNON DOUGLAS NOE, deceased.

J. H. MITCHELL,
Administrator of the estate of Shannon Douglas Noe, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, February 27, 1909.

G. CLARK, Attorney for Administrator,
New Post Office Building. 7th and Mission Streets. San Francisco. 2-27-5

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE ON SALE OF REAL ESTATE AND PERSONAL PROPERTY

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 4065 N. S. Dept. No. 10.

In the Matter of the Estate and Guardianship of DENNIS McCARTHY, Jr., an insane Person.

Central Trust Company of California, a corporation, guardian of the estate of DENNIS McCARTHY, Jr., an insane person, having presented to the Court its verified petition for an order of sale of certain real and personal property belonging to said insane person, setting forth the condition of the estate of said insane person, and the facts and circumstances on which the petition is founded, tending to show the necessity and expediency of such sale, and it appearing to the Court from the said petition that it is necessary and would be beneficial to the said insane person that all of the real estate of said insane person, to wit, the real property hereinbelow described, and certain parts of the personal estate of said insane person, should be sold, and said petition having been by the Court ordered to be filed, and having been filed herein,

Now, therefore, it is ordered that the next of kin of said insane person, and all persons interested in the said estate, be, and they are hereby directed to appear before the Court, at the Courtroom of Department 10 thereof, in the Grant Building, southeast corner of Seventh and Market Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, on Thursday, the 25th day of March, 1909, at ten o'clock a. m., then and there to show cause, if any they have, why an order should not be granted for the sale of said real and personal estate;

And it is further ordered that a copy of this order be published once a week for three (3) successive weeks in Town Talk, a newspaper printed in the said City and County of San Francisco.

The following is a description of the real estate hereinabove referred to and of which a sale has been petitioned for as aforesaid:

All those certain pieces, parcels and lots of land situate, lying and being in the City of Vallejo, County of Solano, State of California, and more particularly bounded and described as follows, to wit:

Lots No. fourteen (14), fifteen (15) and sixteen (16) in Block No. four hundred and forty-four (444) of said City of Vallejo, forming one tract of land lying on the southwest corner of Alabama Street and Sutter Street, fronting about 150 feet on Alabama Street and 130 feet on Sutter Street.

Dated, February 19, 1909.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

BISHOP & HOEFLER, Attorneys for Guardian,
363 Russ Building, San Francisco, Cal. 2-27-4

RACING

NEW CALIFORNIA JOCKEY CLUB

OAKLAND RACE TRACK

Six races each week day, rain or shine.
First Race at 1:40 p. m.

For special trains stopping at the track, take Southern Pacific Ferry, foot of Market street; leave at 12 M.; thereafter every twenty minutes until 1:40 P. M.

No smoking in the last two cars, which are reserved for ladies and their escorts.

PERCY W. TREAT, Sec'y. THOS. H. WILLIAMS, Pres.

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 13834.

DENNIS J. HORGAN, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Lien Upon the Real Property Herein Described or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in or lien upon the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, Greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Dennis J. Horgan, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Scott street, distant thereon northerly from the northerly line of Haight street one hundred and thirteen (113) feet and six (6) inches; thence running northerly along said easterly line of Scott street twenty-four (24) feet; thence at right angles easterly one hundred and ten (110) feet; thence at right angles southerly twenty-four (24) feet, and thence at right angles westerly one hundred and ten (110) feet to the easterly line of Scott street and the point of commencement. Being a part of the Western Addition Block number four hundred and thirty-nine (439), and also right of way over passage extending the length of the above described property and a width of those three (3) feet six (6) inches on the South of the same.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to wit: For a judgment of said Court as follows:

1st. Ascertaining and determining all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said real property and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, or whether the same consists of mortgages or liens of any description.

2nd. Establishing the title of plaintiff to said real property and determining all adverse claims thereto, and adjudging that plaintiff is the owner in severalty and in fee simple absolute of said real property and every part thereof.

3rd. For such other and further relief as to the Court may seem proper and for costs of suit.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 14th day of January, A. D. 1909.

(Seal)

H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By T. C. RYAN, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 23d day of January, 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in or lien upon said property adverse to plaintiff: The German Savings and Loan Society, whose address is No. 526 California street, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

JOSEPH H. TAM, Attorney for Plaintiff,
511 Balboa Building, San Francisco, Cal. 1-23-10

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY ORDER OF SALE OF REAL ESTATE SHOULD NOT BE MADE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 2490. Dept. No. 10.

In the Matter of the Estate of GEORGE G. RUNDLE, Deceased.

Hannah C. Rundle, administratrix of the estate of George G. Rundle, deceased, having filed her verified petition herein for an order of sale of the real property of said estate situated in the City and County of San Francisco, and in the County of San Bernardino, and it satisfactorily appearing to me from such petition that it is necessary, and it would be for the benefit, advantage and best interests of the estate of said deceased and those interested therein, to sell the whole, or some portion, of the said real estate to pay the debts outstanding against the decedent, and the debts, expenses and charges of administration of said estate, as in said petition set forth:

It is therefore ordered that said petition be set for hearing by said court on Monday, the 15th day of March, A. D. 1909, at the hour of ten o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the courtroom of said Superior Court, in Department Ten (10) thereof, in room number 603 of the Grant Building, situate at the southeast corner of Market and Seventh streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased appear before the above-named Superior Court at said time and place then and there to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said administratrix to sell said real property of said estate described in said petition, or as much thereof as may be necessary, for the purposes hereinbefore and in said petition stated.

And it is further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least once a week for four successive weeks before the said day of hearing in Town Talk, a newspaper printed and published weekly in said City and County of San Francisco.

Dated, February 6th, A. D. 1909.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

AITKEN & AITKEN, Attorneys for Administratrix,
Monadnock Building, Rooms 997-998-978-982, San Francisco. 2-13-5

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of MARIA NICOLAS, formerly known as MARIA GONSOLIN, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Charles Carpy, Administrator, with the Will annexed, of the estate of MARIA NICOLAS, formerly known as MARIA GONSOLIN, deceased to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within four (4) months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at the office of P. A. Bergerot, Esq., Room 505, No. 110 Sutter Street, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, which said office the undersigned selects as his place of business in all matters connected with the estate of said MARIA NICOLAS, formerly known as MARIA GONSOLIN, deceased.

CHARLES CARPY,
Administrator, with the Will annexed, of the Estate of Maria Nicolas, formerly known as Maria Gonsolin, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, February 27, 1909.

P. A. BERGEROT, Attorney for Administrator, with the Will annexed,
Room 505, No. 110 Sutter Street, San Francisco, Cal. 2-27-5

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of JEAN MARIE BOYER, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Joseph Palacin, Executor of the Last Will and Testament of JEAN MARIE BOYER, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four (4) months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Executor at the office of P. A. Bergerot, Esq., Room 505, No. 110 Sutter Street, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, which said office the undersigned selects as his place of business in all matters connected with the estate of said JEAN MARIE BOYER, deceased.

JOSEPH PALACIN,
Executor of the Last Will of Jean Marie Boyer, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, February 27, 1909.

P. A. BERGEROT, Attorney for Executor,
Room 505, No. 110 Sutter Street, San Francisco, Cal. 2-27-5

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY ORDER OF SALE OF REAL PROPERTY SHOULD NOT BE MADE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 2133. Dept. No. 10.

In the Matter of the Guardianship of the Estates of RANDOLPH WILSON SMITH, and ROBERTA GENEVIEVE SMITH, Minors.

EMILY MAY SMITH, guardian of the estate of the above named minors, having filed herein her verified petition praying for an order directing the sale of certain real property belonging to the estates of said minors, and more particularly described in said petition, and it appearing to the Court from said petition that it is necessary and will be beneficial to said minors, and each of them, and to their respective estates, that said real property should be sold, and good cause appearing:

It is hereby ordered that the next of kin of said minors and each of them, and all persons interested in their or either of their estates, appear before the above entitled court, Department No. 10 thereof, at its Courtroom in the Grant Building, situated on the corner of Seventh and Market Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, on the 2nd day of March, 1909, at the hour of 10 o'clock a. m. of said day, to show cause why an order should not be granted for the sale of said real property; and

It is hereby further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least once a week for three (3) successive weeks next preceding said day, in Town Talk, a newspaper printed and published in said City and County.

Dated, January 30th, 1909.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

W. H. ORRICK, Attorney for Guardian,
617 Balboa Building, San Francisco, Cal. 2-6-4

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Action No. 13512.

MARY A. DALY, Plaintiff,
vs.
All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, Defendants, Greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of MARY A. DALY, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above-entitled Court and County, within three (3) months after the first publication of this SUMMONS, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situated, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

Parcel Number One. Commencing at a point on the Westerly line of Devisadero Street, distant thereon sixty-three (63) feet nine (9) inches Southerly from the Southerly line of Jackson Street; running thence Southerly along said Westerly line of Devisadero Street twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet six (6) inches; thence at right angles Northerly twenty-five feet (25) feet, and thence at right angles Easterly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet six (6) inches to the point of commencement. Being a portion of Western Addition Block Number 497.

Parcel Number Two. Commencing at a point on the Northerly line of Clay Street, distant thereon one hundred and ten (110) feet Easterly from the Easterly line of Devisadero Street, and running thence Easterly and along the said Northerly line of Clay Street twenty-eight (28) feet nine (9) inches; thence at right angles northerly one hundred and twenty-seven (127) feet eight and one-quarter (8¼) inches; thence at right angles Westerly twenty-eight (28) feet nine (9) inches; and thence at right angles Southerly one hundred and twenty-seven (127) feet eight and one-quarter (8¼) inches to the Northerly line of Clay Street and the point of commencement. Being a portion of Western Addition Block Number 463.

Parcel Number Three. Commencing at the Southeasterly corner of Bush and Powell Streets; running thence Easterly along the Southerly line of Bush Street forty-five (45) feet; thence at right angles Southerly sixty-seven (67) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Westerly forty-five (45) feet to the Easterly line of Powell Street; and thence Northerly along said Easterly line of Powell Street sixty-seven (67) feet and six (6) inches to the point of commencement. Being a portion of Fifty Vara Lot Number 314.

Parcel Number Four. Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Folsom Street, distant thereon one hundred and ninety (190) feet Southerly from the Southerly line of Precita Place; running thence Southerly and along said Easterly line of Folsom Street twenty-seven (27) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Easterly one hundred and ten (110) feet; thence at right angles Northerly twenty-seven (27) feet and six (6) inches; and thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and ten (110) feet to the Easterly line of Folsom Street, and the point of commencement. Being Lot Number 32, as per Kingston's Map of Lots Numbers 148 to 153, Precita Valley Lands, filed in the office of the County Recorder of the City and County of San Francisco, July 20, 1865, and recorded in Map-Book E and F of Maps, at page 29.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit:

That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute; that her title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 31st day of December, A. D. 1908.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this Summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 9th day of January, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiff: A. TURTURICI and E. TURTURICI, residing at ————, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, have and claim an interest in Parcel Number Four of the land in said Complaint and hereinabove described, under a certain Agreement of Sale.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Attorney for Plaintiff, Rooms 1255-1257 Flood Bldg., 870 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal. 1-9-10

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of HENRI HOURCADE, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Administratrix with the Will annexed of the estate of Henri Hourcade, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within four months after the first publication of this notice to the said Administratrix with the Will annexed, at the law office of A. Comte, Jr., No. 333 Kearny Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned selects as place of business in all matters connected with said estate of [illegible]

PAULINE HOURCADE,
Administratrix with the Will annexed of the estate of Henri Hourcade, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, February 9th, 1909.

A. COMTE, Jr., Attorney for Administratrix with the Will annexed,
333 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. 2-13-5

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 13833.

MARY HORGAN, a Widow, Plaintiff,
vs.
All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Liens Upon the Real Property Herein Described or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in or lien upon the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, Greeting:

You are are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Mary Horgan, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the Court of the above entitled City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the northerly line of Fulton street, distant thereon one hundred and forty-six (146) feet ten and one-half inches (10½) inches westerly from the intersection of the westerly line of Baker street with the northerly line of Fulton street, and then running thence westerly along the said line of Fulton street twenty-five (25) feet, thence at right angle northerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet and six (6) inches, thence at a right angle easterly twenty-five (25) feet, and thence at a right angle southerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet and six (6) inches to the northerly line of Fulton street and point of commencement. Being Block No. 592, a portion of the Western Addition.

You are hereby notified that unless you appear and answer the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to wit: For a judgment of said Court as follows:

1st. Ascertaining and determining all estate, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said real property and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, or whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description.

2nd. Establishing the title of plaintiff to said real property and determining all adverse claims thereto, and adjudging that plaintiff is the owner in severalty and in fee simple absolute of said real property and every part thereof.

3rd. For such other and further relief as to the Court may seem proper and for costs of suit.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 14th day of January, A. D. 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By T. C. RYAN, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 23d day of January. A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon said real property adverse to plaintiff: The Hibernia Savings and Loan Society, whose address is on the Northwest corner of Jones and McAllister streets, San Francisco, California.

JOSEPH H. TAM, Attorney for Plaintiff,
511 Balboa Building, San Francisco, Cal. 1-23-10

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 7042, New Series. Dept. Nine. Probate.

In the Matter of the Estate of GEORGE BASTIAN, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned William Bastian, Executor of the last will and testament of the above named George Bastian, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within four (4) months after the first publication of this notice, (which first publication occurs on the 6th day of February, 1909), to the said William Bastian, executor of the last will and testament of said George Bastian, deceased, at the office of his attorney, John J. Barrett, room 1255 Flood Building, Number 870 Market Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned selects as his place of business in all matters connected with said estate of said George Bastian, deceased.

WILLIAM BASTIAN,
Executor of the last will and testament of said George Bastian, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, California, February 6th, 1909.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Attorney for said Executor,
Rooms 1255-1257 Flood Building, San Francisco, Cal. 2-6-5

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY SALE OF REAL ESTATE SHOULD NOT BE MADE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 5103, N. S. Dept. 10, Probate.

In the matter of the Estate and Guardianship of JOHN M. COLE, Jr., an Incompetent Person.

CATHERINE COLE, guardian of the person and estate of JOHN M. COLE, Jr., an incompetent person, having presented her petition herein duly verified, praying for an order of the sale of the whole of the real estate of the said incompetent, for the reasons and purposes in said petition mentioned and set forth;

And such petition having been filed, it is now ordered by said Court that the next of kin of said incompetent person, and all persons interested in the estate of said incompetent person, be, and they are hereby directed to appear before said Court on Tuesday, the 2nd day of March, 1909, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the courtroom of Department 10 of said Superior Court, in the Grant Building, on the Southeast corner of Market and Seventh Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to show cause, if any they have, why an order should not be granted directing, empowering, and authorizing the said guardian to sell the whole or so much of the real estate of said incompetent person as may be necessary.

It is further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least once a week for three successive weeks in Town Talk, a newspaper of general circulation, printed and published in the said City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

Dated this 29th day of January, 1909.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

EDWARD J. LYNCH, Attorney for Guardian,
Mills Building, San Francisco, Cal.

Endorsed: Filed Jan. 29, 1909. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk. By H. G. BENEDICT, Deputy Clerk 2-6-4

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 7058, New Series. Department Ten.

In the Matter of the Estate of JOSEPH CHAPMAN DYAS, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned EDWIN JOSEPH DYAS, Administrator of the estate of Joseph Chapman Dyas, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said Joseph Chapman Dyas, deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten (10) months after the first publication of this notice (which first publication occurs on the 6th day of February, 1909), to the said Edwin Joseph Dyas, administrator of the estate of said Joseph Chapman Dyas, deceased, at the office of of his attorneys, John J. Barrett and Frank I. Barrett, room 1255 Flood Building, Number 870 Market Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned selects as his place of business in all matters connected with said estate of said Joseph Chapman Dyas, deceased.

EDWIN JOSEPH DYAS,
Administrator of the estate of said Joseph Chapman Dyas, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, California, February 6th, 1909.

JOHN J. BARRRETT and FRANK I. BARRETT,
Attorneys for Administrator, Room 1255 Flood Bldg., S. F. 2-6-5

Louis Crepaux

(Member of Paris Grand Opera)

Has removed to his new studio,

Delbert Block, 943 Van Ness avenue, cor. O'Farrell.

Reception hours: 11:30 to 12, and 3 to 4, except Wednesdays. Wednesdays in Oakland, 1154 Brush street.

Emil Steinegger

PIANOFORTE PLAYING

924 Grove St (above Fillmore), San Francisco.

For appointments phone Merritt 2845

Thursdays, 2701 Regent St., Berkeley

Mackenzie Gordon

TENOR

TEACHER OF SINGING { in all its branches, from the rudiments of tone formation to the highest finish and Completion of Public Singing.

Oratorio, Opera and Concert

By appointment only Phone Franklin 3594

Studio: 1350 FRANKLIN ST.

Donald Maclean

SINGING—Pupil Seagle and De Rezske

Henri Etlin

PIANO—First Prize Paris Conservatoire

STUDIO, 1613 GREEN ST. Phone, Franklin 3153

Mme. Ellen Roeckel-Davis

VOCAL STUDIO

The 18th-Street Car Passes the Door — 1143 Ashbury Street Near 17th St.

Samuel M. Shortridge

ATTORNEY AT LAW

CHRONICLE BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO

Tel. Douglas 2176

Robert B. McMillan

ATTORNEY AT LAW

Has removed his Law Offices to the

CHRONICLE BUILDING, Fifth Floor

Phone Kearny 5969 Rooms 517-518

Knight & Heggerty

ATTORNEYS AT LAW and

PROCTORS IN ADMIRALTY

MERCHANTS EXCHANGE BLDG., S. F.

Rooms 626 and 630

L. G. KRAKER, D. V. S.

Official Veterinarian to the Ladies Kennel Association of California and Santa Cruz Kennel Club

HOSPITAL FOR DOGS, CATS AND HORSES

Phone Market 997 152 VALENCIA STREET

HENRY P. TRICOU

NOTARY PUBLIC

508 CALIFORNIA STREET Phone Kearny 711

Residence, 852 Grove St. Phone Page 55

LA GRANDE AND WHITES LAUNDRY CO.

Office and Works

234 TWELFTH STREET Bet. Mission and Howard

Phone Market 1690 SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

PATRICK & CO.

RUBBER STAMPS

STENCILS, SEALS, SIGNS & ETC.

126 BUSH ST. SAN FRANCISCO

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Dept. 10—No. 20497.

ANNA D. ROLLER, Plaintiff,

vs.

ALVA AARON and M. CLIFFORD AARON, Defendants.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Alva Aaron and M. Clifford Aaron, Defendants.

You are hereby directed to appear and answer the complaint in an action entitled as above brought against you in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, within ten days after the service on you of this summons—if served within this City and County; or within thirty days if served elsewhere.

And you are hereby notified that unless you appear and answer as above required, the said plaintiff will take judgment for any money or damages demanded in the complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, this 23rd day of December, A. D. 1908.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

By L. J. WELCH, Deputy Clerk.

TOBIN & TOBIN, Attorneys for Plaintiff. 1-16-10

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, No. 20725.

ADELE RAYNAL, Plaintiff,

vs.

HENRI RAYNAL, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Henri Raynal, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's wilfull desertion; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 8th day of January, A. D. 1209.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

By W. R. CASTAGNETTO, Deputy Clerk.

P. A. BERGEROT, Attorney for Plaintiff, 110 Sutter Street, San Francisco, Cal. 1-16-10

Mrs. Helen Derber

Graduate Masseuse. Electric Treatment.

Phone West 8802 2024 SUTTER STREET

Electric Vibratory Massage

Professional Masseuse. Expert Treatment.

Room 316 943 VAN NESS AVENUE

UNION LUMBER CO.

Redwood and Pine Lumber

Railroad Ties, Telegraph Poles, Shingles, Split Shakes, Etc.

CROCKER BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO

SCIENTIFIC OPTICIAN

MAYERLE'S GERMAN EYE WATER

By Mail 65c

Mayerle's German Eyewater

Highly Recommended for

Painful, Sore, Red, Inflamed, Burning, Smarting, Itching, Scratching, Twitching, and Gluey Eyes, Heavy or Crusty Eyelids, Floating Spots, Cloudiness of Vision, Cross Eyes, Watery or Discharging Eyes, feeling like sand in the Eyes, Heavy and Crusty Eyelids.

NEGLECTED EYESIGHT AFFECTS THE BRAIN

Mayerle's Glasses rest and strengthen the eyes, relieves the strain, and preserve the sight.

GEORGE MAYERLE

Granduate German Expert Optician, charter member American Association of Opticians and Vice-President Optical Specialist Association of America, 1149 Golden Gate Ave., between Webster and Buchanan sts. Phone Park 3153, San Francisco.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of THERESA FRAPOLLI, Deceased

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Executor and Executrix of the last Will and Testament of THERESA FRAPOLLI, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten (10) months after the first publication of this notice to the said Executor and Executrix at the law office of A. Comte, Jr., No. 333 Kearny Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned select as their place of business in all matters connected with said estate of THERESA FRAPOLLI, deceased

FRANK FRAPOLLI,

MADELAINE FRAPOLLI,

Executor and Executrix of the last Will and Testament of Theresa Frapolli, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, February 27, 1909.

A. COMTE, Jr., Attorney for Executors, 333 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. 2-27-5

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., San Francisco, Cal.

Guaranteed Capital	$ 1,200,000.00
Capital actually paid up in cash	$ 1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds	$ 1,479,043.00
Deposits December 31, 1908	$35,079,498.53
Total Assets	$37,661,836.70

Remittance may be made by Draft, Post Office, or Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Money Orders, or coin by Express.

Office Hours: 10 o'clock a. m. to 3 o'clock p. m., except Saturdays to 12 o'clock m. and Saturday evenings from 7 o'clock p. m. to 8 o'clock p. m. for receipt of deposits only.

OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohte; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourny; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS—N. Ohlandt, Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohte; Ign. Steinhardt, I. N. Walter, J. W. Van Bergen, F. Tillmann, Jr., E. T. Kruse and W. S. Goodfellow.

MISSION BRANCH, 2572 Mission Street, between 21st and 22nd Street. For receipt and payment of Deposits only. C. W. Heyer, Manager.

California Optical Co.

Makers of Good Glasses

DOWN TOWN NOW

CALIFORNIA OPTICAL CO. are now in their new store, 181 Post St., near Grant Ave. The Fillmore Street store is closed.

MEN

Afflicted with any private ailment consult the United Physicians and Surgeons. Strictly reliable specialists in Genito-Urinary, Blood and Skin diseases, and all reflex ailments of men. Prompt, efficient services; fees moderate; consultation free and confidential. Write or call. Hours 9 a. m. to 9 p. m. Sundays, 9 to 2.

A word to the wise is sufficient.

United Physicians and Surgeons

517 Twenty-third St., Oakland

Near Telegraph Avenue.

10 Third Street, San Francisco

Next to Call Building

SHREVE & COMPANY

Will reopen in the

SHREVE BUILDING

POST STREET AND GRANT AVENUE

On Monday, March 1st

